FOREWORD

I feel flattered and consider it to be great privilege to have been asked by Shri Vettam Mani to contribute a foreword to his Purāṇic Encyclopaedia, a really magnificent literary production, massive in size and rich and invaluable in contents. This is the first attempt in Malayalam and for the matter of that in any Indian or foreign language, so far as I know, to produce a comprehensive and well-nigh exhaustive book of study and reference with regard to episodes, incidents, characters etc. occurring in the many Purāṇas and such other works in Sanskrit. In the field of mythology, with regard to variety and contents as also sheer bulk, Greece stands first. Egypt comes only next. But Indian mythology—the epics and the purāṇas—far exceeds and excels both Greek and Egyptian mythologies put together in merit and size. Even the preparation of a complete list of characters mentioned in our epics, purāṇas etc. will be a stupendous and well-nigh impossible task calling for the combined efforts of a number of scholars. But, fortunately for us, each and every such name, one need not necessarily know or be acquainted with. At the same time there are great names which compel attention and should not escape a proper study. And, such names are legion, and Shri Mani has not omitted mention of even one such name in his great work. I looked up the encyclopaedia for a few such random names, and was really surprised to find detailed treatment of the same in the book. Moreover, with reference to really important names, incidents and episodes connected with them and the whole genealogy are given. Everything is fully documented and quite authoritative. And, deep, extensive and exhaustive study, patient and untiring research and above all absolute dedication to the cause are so very patent on every page of the book. Literally and in effect Shri Mani's is a unique contribution, the first and foremost book, in the magnificent spheres of religion, culture, scholarship and history all put together. As the pioneer in the field he can justly feel happy and proud about his rare achievement, and he deserves in ample measure the unstinted praise and appreciation of all lovers of learning and culture.

Shri Mani has already earned well-deserved reputation as a teacher, especially in Malayalam, and also as a diligent student of literature and author of talent. He evidently possesses a flair for research. All such distinguished talents and attainments of his have been fully and quite successfully commissioned in the preparation of this marvellous encyclopaedia. He has put every lover of learning and knowledge everywhere, under an eternal debt of gratitude by the publication of this noble work.

PREFACE

It is a matter of profound pleasure and pride for me that the internationally famous publishers in the field of Indology, M/s Motilal Banarsidass of Delhi are publishing the English translation of my Purāṇic Encyclopaedia, which was originally published in Malayalam, and which has already run into four editions.

The Purāṇas along with the Great Epics—the Rāmāyaṇa and the Mahābhārata, have for centuries, profoundly influenced Indian life and Culture. The well-known definition of a Purāṇa as a work having five characteristic features—purāṇam pañcalakṣaṇam—namely, primary creation, secondary creation, the genealogies, the ages of Manu, and the dynastic account hardly does justice to the full significance of these works. They are much more than that. While their genealogies and the dynastic account form the bed-rock of the political history of ancient India, they throw a flood of light on all aspects of Indian Culture—its religion, social practices, art, literature and sciences. They serve as the key to the proper understanding of the various aspects of Hinduism—its beliefs, its modes of worship, its mythology, its festivals, feasts, and fasts, its sacred shrines and places of pilgrimage, its philosophy and ethics and its theogony. Truly it has been said that a Brahmin was not really wise if he did not know the Purāṇas. The study of ancient Indian history, and culture—particularly religion—is impossible without a proper knowledge of the Purāṇas. As a matter of fact, it is virtually impossible to understand not only ancient Indian culture and life, but also the literature in modern Indian languages, as it largely draws upon the ideas and ideologies as embodied in the contents of the Purāṇas and the epics.

The literary writings in all Indian languages are indebted to the Epics and the Purāṇas in more than one way—their form, content, ideas and ideologies are all influenced to a greater or lesser extent by these ancient works. Direct and indirect allusions to Purāṇic episodes, characters, events, are frequently to be met with in the literary writings of all Indian languages. Teachers engaged in imparting instruction in the literature in modern Indian languages must therefore be conversant with the contents of the Purāṇas and Epics in order to be able to explain these allusions wherever they occur in the writings in modern Indian languages. However, it is well nigh impossible for an average teacher to go through the whole of this vast literature. Thus the need for a handy work of reference like the present Encyclopaedia is apparent.

The desire to compile a Purāṇic Dictionary that should solve many of the day to day problems of the Indian language teacher, took root in me, several years ago, but I could not arrogate to myself the capacity to fulfill this urgent need. I waited for many years, for more competent and better equipped scholars to come forward and produce a work of my dreams. But since no one appeared to quench this thirst, I plunged myself into this vast ocean of Sanskrit literature, and for thirteen years I dived deep into it, studying not only the original texts but also modern works in English, Sanskrit, Malayalam and Hindi. This took me five years, and I spent about twenty thousand rupees on books and travelling for this project. I started the compilation on 1st of January, 1955, and it took me seven years to start preparing the Press copy of my work. The first volume of my 'Purāṇic Nighaṇṭu' was released in February 1964 and the remaining four were published after an interval of six months in each case. The second edition of all the five volumes was brought out in May 1967, still under the original title 'Purāṇic Nighaṇṭu'. However, in the third revised and enlarged edition in one volume published in October, 1971, the name was changed to 'Purāṇic Encyclopaedia'.

In an endeavour like this imperfections and drawbacks are only inevitable, and I am fully conscious of the same. But as a pioneer effort, and as a much needed aid to the teaching and study of Malayalam language and literature, it will, I hope, be found useful. Scholars and general readers in Malayalam have been generous in welcoming the encyclopaedia. That four editions of the work had to be brought out within a period of seven years from 1967 to 1974 speaks eloquently for the merit, and utility of the work and I feel my labour and expense amply rewarded. I felt still more flattered when the celebrated firm of M/s Motilal Banarsidass of Delhi, who have already laid the world of Indology under a deep debt of obligation by their monumental publications in all fields of Indian Culture and history, mooted a proposal for publishing an English translation of the Malayalam original. I am deeply indebted to them for bringing my work before a much wider circle of readers. The onerous task of translating the work into English was entrusted to a committee of five scholars : 1. Mr. P. Rajaram

Menon, Professor of English, Basel mission College, Kottayam; 2. Mr. K. R. Atchutan Nayar, retired Professor of English, C.M.S. College, Kottayam; 3. R. K. Kartha, ex-Chief Editor, Deshbandhu, Kottayam; 4. P. I. John, Retired Headmaster, Kurichi ; and 5. Mr. P. N. Menon, Ollur. I need hardly point out that these members of the editorial committee are highly qualified for this work and I must gladly acknowledge the fact that they have more than amply justified the trust placed in them.

Finally, I cannot adequately express my feelings of deep gratitude to Shri Puthezathu Rama Menon, the doyen of Malayalam literature, for writing an excellent introduction to the original Malayalam edition of the work. I am also beholden to many scholars and the reading public who have been pleased to extend a most generous welcome to the Encyclopaedia.

VETTAM MANI

Vettam Mani

Puranic Encyclopaedia

A

A (अ). The first letter (Vowel) of all Indian languages. According to the Nānārtharatnamālā this letter has the following meanings:—Brahmā, Viṣṇu, Śiva, tortoise, courtyard, battle, harem, jewellery, sea, Pārvatī and bow-string.

ABALA is one of the fifteen devas who were the sons of Pāñcajanya. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 22, Verse 11).

ABHAYA was one of the sons of Dhṛtarāṣṭra. He was killed by Bhīmasena. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 67, Verse 104; Droṇa Parva, Chapter 127, Verse 62).

ABHAYAM. King Idhmajihva divided his kingdom Plakṣadvīpa into seven parts and gave them to his seven sons. Abhayam is one of the parts. The other six parts are:—Śivaṁ, Yamasaṁ, Subhadraṁ, Śāntaṁ, Kṣemaṁ and Amṛtaṁ. See "Idhmajihva". (Bhāgavata, 5th Skandha, Chapter 20, Verse 2). It is seen (from M.B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 30, Verse 9) that the territory known as Abhayam was conquered by Bhīmasena. (See Foot-note)

ABHIBHU. He was a King, the son of the King of Kāśī and a relative of the Pāṇḍavas. He was killed by the son of King Vasudāna. He had a most wonderful horse. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 151, Verse 63; Karṇa Parva, Chapter 6, Verses 23-24; Droṇa Parva, Verses 26-27).

ABHIMANYU I. He was the heroic son of Arjuna the central figure of the Mahābhārata, by his wife Subhadrā.

1) Genealogy. He was descended from Viṣṇu in this order: Brahmā-Atri-Candra-Budha-Purūravas - Āyus - Nahuṣa-Yayāti-Pūru-Janamejaya- Prācinvā - Pravīra - Namasyu-Vītabhaya-Śuṇḍu-Bahuvidha-Saṁyāti-Rahovādi - Raudrāśvā-Matināra-Santurodha-Duṣyanta - Bharata - Bṛhatkṣatra-Hasti - Ajamīḍha-Ṛkṣa-Saṁvaraṇa - Kuru-Jahnu-Suratha - Vidūratha-Sārvabhauma - Jayatsena - Ravīya - Bhāvuka-Cakroddhata-Devātithi - Ṛkṣa-Bhīma - Pratīya-Śantanu-Vyāsa-Pāṇḍu-Arjuna-Abhimanyu.

2) Pūrvajanma (Previous Birth). There is a story about Abhimanyu's Pūrvajanma in the Mahābhārata. It was Varcas, son of Candra, who incarnated as Abhimanyu, son of Arjuna. A conference took place between the Devas and Candra about the incarnation of the Devas in the world for the destruction of the wicked people. Candra told the Devas: "I do not like to send Varcas, whom I love more than my life, to the earth. Still, I think it is not right to stand in the way of the plans of the gods. You must agree to one condition if I am to send my son. Let him be born as the son of Arjuna. I am unable to be separated from him for more than sixteen years. My son will enter into the Cakra Vyūha of the enemies to be killed by them and return to me in the sixteenth year." The devas (gods) accepted this condition. That is why Abhimanyu was killed in his sixteenth year. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 67).

3) Military Training and War. Abhimanyu received his training in arms from his father Arjuna. Later, he went with his mother Subhadrā to Dvārakā and lived for some time with his uncle Śrī Kṛṣṇa. There he is said to have received training in arms from Pradyumna, son of Śrī Kṛṣṇa. After the incognito life of the Pāṇḍavas, Abhimanyu married Uttarā, daughter of the King of Virāṭa. War broke out between Kauravas and Pāṇḍavas. On the first day itself Abhimanyu entered into a duel with Bṛhatbala, King of Kosala. In the terrible conflict with Bhīṣma, Abhimanyu broke Bhīṣma's flagstaff. After that he assisted his father Arjuna to fight against Bhīṣma. Verses 8-13 of Chapter 55 of Bhīṣma Parva of the Mahābhārata describe Abhimanyu's fight with Lakṣmaṇa in the second day's battle. Then he took his place in the Ardha Candra Vyūha (semi-circular phalanx) formed by Arjuna. He fought fiercely with the Gandhāras. He attacked Śalya and killed Jayatsena, King of Magadha, along with his elephant. We find Abhimanyu assisting Bhīmasena in M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapters 63, 64, 69 and 94. After that Abhimanyu defeated Lakṣmaṇa in battle. Then he defeated Vikarṇa, Citrasena and others also. Later he took his position in the Śṛṅgāṭaka Vyūha created by Dhṛṣṭadyumna. He started fighting with Bhagadatta. He defeated Aṁbaṣṭha and Alaṁbuṣa. Next he fought a duel with Sudīṣṇa. After that he encountered Duryodhana, Bṛhatbala and others. M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 10, Verses 47-52 are a description of Abhimanyu's heroism by Dhṛtarāṣṭra. He snatched Paurava's weapon and threw it on the ground. Next he fought with Jayadratha and Śalya. Then he was caught in the Cakra Vyūha (circular phalanx) of the enemies. There he inflicted great losses upon the enemy forces. Śalya was stunned and his brother was killed by Abhimanyu. M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 38, Verses 23 and 24 describe the flight of the Kauravas in fear. At this stage, even Droṇācārya praised Abhimanyu's valour. Duśśāsana fainted during his fight with Abhimanyu. Karṇa was defeated. Vṛṣasena, Satyaśravas and Śalya's son, Rugmaratha were slain. Duryodhana fled. Lakṣmaṇa was killed. Vṛndāraka, Aśvatthāmā, Karṇa and others were amazed by this terrible valour of Abhimanyu. Six ministers of Karṇa were slain. Next, Aśvaketu, son of the King of Magadha was killed. King Bhoja was also killed. Śalya was again defeated. Śatruñjaya, Candraketu, Meghavega, Suvarcas, Sūryabhāsa—who were all kings—were beheaded by Abhimanyu. Śakuni was wounded by Abhimanyu's arrow. Kālakeya, son of Subala was slain. M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 40, Verses 13 and 14 say that at this stage, Prince Duśśāsana beat Abhimanyu to death with his mace.

4) After Death. M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 71, Verses 12-16 say that after death Abhimanyu attained the immortal world of the Munis (Saints). King Parīkṣit was the son of Abhimanyu. In M.B. Svargārohaṇa Parva, Chapter 5, Verses 18-20, we find that after his death, Abhimanyu entered the moon in his former form of Varcas.

5) Other names of Abhimanyu. In the Mahābhārata Abhimanyu has been referred to by several other names, such as ĀRJUNI, Saubhadra, Kārṣṇī, Arjunātmaja, Śukrātmajātmaja, Arjunāpara and Phālguni.

6) Other details. King Parīkṣit was the son of Abhimanyu. Janamejaya was born as his son. It was Janame-

There seems to be some difference of opinion regarding the number of parts into which King Idhmajihva divided Plakṣadvīpa. In the Bhāgavata the number mentioned is seven; but in the Malayalam version of the Bhāgavata (By Ramanujan Eluttacchan) the number is eight. The original Bhāgavata says: "Śivaṁ Yamasaṁ, Subhadraṁ, Śāntaṁ, Kṣemaṁ, Amṛtaṁ Abhayam iti Varṣāni teṣu girayo nadyaśca saptaivabhijñātāḥ". In the Malayalam Bhāgavata an eighth division called Śivadaṁ is seen.

jaya who performed Sarpasatra. (A yāga) Śatānīka was the son of Janamejaya. Śatānīka had a son named Sahasrānīka. King Udayana, the jewel of the Candra Vaṁśa (Lunar dynasty) was born to Sahasrānīka by the goddess Mṛgāvatī (See 'Udayana', stories about this Udayana are very famous. Kālidāsa has mentioned in his "Meghadūta" about the old rustics who thronged the country-sides to tell and listen to Udayana stories). (Kathāsaritsāgara, Madana Kañcukalambaka, 4th Taraṅga).

ABHIMANYU II. One of the sons of Manu. The ten sons born to Manu by Nadvalā were: Kuru, Puru, Śatadyumna, Tapasvī, Satyavān, Śuci, Agniṣṭoma, Adhirātra, Sudyumna and Abhimanyu. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Section 1, Chapter 13).

ABHIMANYU VADHA PARVA. A part (branch) of Droṇa Parva. (See "Mahābhārata").

ABHINAYA. In Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 342, Abhinaya has been defined as follows: Abhinaya is the art of presenting before the people the ideas that are to be communicated to them. There are four divisions of this art known as Sāttvika, Vācika, Āṅgika and Āhārya depending on Sattva, Vāk, Aṅga and Āhārya. Besides these, another division known as Abhimānika (Abhimānottha) may also be mentioned. This signifies the expression of rasas like Śṛṅgāra. There are two kinds of Śṛṅgāra known as Sambhoga and Vipralambha. Four varieties of Vipralambha called Pūrvānurāga Vipralambha, Māna Vipralambha, Pravāsa Vipralambha and Karuṇa Vipralambha are mentioned. The union after Vipralambha is Sambhoga-Śṛṅgāra. All Sāttvika bhāvas are included in Śṛṅgāra. All these have to be expressed through Abhinaya.

ABHĪRU. A Rājarṣi who was born of the sixth Kālakeya. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 67, Verse 53).

ABHĪṢĀKAM. A Janapada (Village) of ancient India. The warriors of this Janapada were called Abhīṣākas. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 18, Verse 12; Chapter 93, Verse 2).

ABHISĀRAM. A Janapada of ancient India. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 9, Verse 94).

ABHISĀRĪ. Arjuna conquered this city, which was one of the ancient cities of India, in the course of his Digvijaya (conquest of the world).

ABHIṢYANTA. A son born to Mahārāja Kuru by Vāhinī. He had three brothers named Caitraratha, Muni and Janamejaya. Abhiṣyanta was the younger brother of Aśvavān and elder brother of Caitraratha. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 94, Verses 50-51).

ACALA I. 1) General. Acala was the son of Subala, a King of Gāndhāra. He was Śakuni's brother and a heroic Charioteer on the side of the Kauravas. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 168, Verse 1).

2) Acala had also taken part in Yudhiṣṭhira's Rājasūya. (A very expensive sacrifice—yāga—performed by an emperor.)(M.B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 34, Verse 7).

3) Acala had a brother named Vṛṣaka. In the battle between the Kauravas and Pāṇḍavas, Arjuna killed Acala and Vṛṣaka. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 30, Verse 11).

4) One night Vyāsa summoned the departed holy souls and Acala also was among them. (M.B. Āśvamedhika Parva, Chapter 32, Verse 12).

ACALA II. Name of a bull. Among the pārṣadas of Skanda we see the bull named Acala. (M.B. Śalya Parva, Chapter 85, Verse 74).

ACALA III. An epithet of Mahāviṣṇu. Among the thousand names of Mahāviṣṇu we see the name Acala also. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 149, Verse 92).

ACALĀ. Subrahmaṇya, who was born from Śiva's semen which fell into the fire, was made Commander-in-Chief (Generalissimo) by the gods to kill Tārakāsura. A large number of warriors and mothers were assigned to assist him. A woman named Acalā was included among those mothers. (M.B. Śalya Parva, Chapter 40, Verse 14).

ACCHODĀ. A spiritual daughter of the Pitṛs. (For further details see "Amāvasu").

ACCHODASARAS. A river, who was the daughter of the Pitṛs called Agniṣvāttas. (Hari Vaṁśa, Chapter 18, Verse 26).

ACYUTA. (See Viṣṇu).

ACYUTĀYU. He was a heroic warrior on the Kaurava side. Śrutāyu was the brother of Acyutāyu. Both of them were killed by Arjuna in the Kaurava-Pāṇḍava battle. These heroes attacked Arjuna and Śrī Kṛṣṇa furiously with their arrows and Arjuna had some difficulty in killing them. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 93, Verses 7-42).

ACYUTA STHALA. This is an ancient village in India. In ancient times Śūdras of mixed castes inhabited this region. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 129, Verse 9).

ADHARMA. A description of the lineage of Adharma is found in Agni Purāṇa. Hiṁsā (violence) is the consort of Adharma. The couple procreated two children, Anṛta and Nikṛti, and from them sprang up Bhaya (fear), Naraka (Hell), Māyā (illusion), Vedanā (pain) etc. And, out of them Māyā brought forth Death, the destroyer of (all) objects. Vedanā, in its turn produced Sorrow and Grief out of Raurava. From Death were born Disease, Senility, Sorrow, Intense desire and Anger. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 20).

ADHARMA. Adharma is a person who is an embodiment of Adharmas. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 66, Verse 53). Adharma's wife Nirṛti delivered 3 children; Bhaya, Mahābhaya and Mṛtyu. Adharma had another son, Darpa (conceit) born of Wealth. (M.B. Śānti Parva, Chapter 90, Verse 27).

ADHAŚŚIRAS I was a great sage. Śrī Kṛṣṇa is said to have met the sage on his way to Hastināpura. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 33, Verse 64).

ADHAŚŚIRAS II. There is a reference in Viṣṇu Purāṇa to a hell called Adhaśśiras. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Part 2, Chapter 6).

ADHĪRA. A King; also a great devotee of Lord Śiva. Once he decreed death penalty on an innocent woman. He also destroyed with his own hands a temple of Śiva. As a consequence of those two sinful deeds he became a devil after death. Ultimately by the grace of Śiva he cast off the devil's form and became an attendant of Śiva. (Padma Purāṇa, Pātāla Khaṇḍa, Chapter 111).

ADHIRĀJYA. A Kingdom in ancient India, described in Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 9, Verse 44. Today this place is known as Rewa.

ADHIRATHA. Foster father of Karṇa.

1) Lineage. Descended from Viṣṇu thus : Brahmā-Atri-Candra-Purūravas-Āyus - Nahuṣa - Yayāti - Anudruhyu-

Sadānara-Kālanara-Sṛñjaya-Titikṣa-Kṛśadratha-Homa-Sutapas - Bali - Aṅga - Dadhivāhana - Dravaratha-Dharmaratha - Citraratha - Satyaratha - Romapāda-Caturaṅga-Pṛthu - Camba - Haryaṁga - Bhadraratha-Bṛhadratha-Bṛhanmanas-Jayadratha - Dhṛtavṛta - Satya-karmā-Adhiratha-Karṇa (foster son).

2) Foster father of Karṇa. Sage Durvāsas had taught Kuntī some mantras to get children, and Kuntī, then unmarried, tested the first mantra with the Sun-god as her object. The Sun-god appeared before Kuntī and from his power she conceived and duly delivered a child, Karṇa. Fearing obloquy Kuntī concealed the child in a box and floated it on the river, Ganges. At the time Adhiratha, a great comrade of Dhṛtarāṣṭra came to the river for a bath. His wife was one grieving over not having a child of her own. So, when Adhiratha found a child in the floating box, he took it home, and himself and his wife Rādhā brought up the child with pleasure. The child was named Vasusena, and the child grew up to become the famous Karṇa and favourite friend of Duryodhana. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapters 67 and 130; Vana Parva, Chapter 309; Devībhāgavata, Skandha 2).

3) Some particulars. Adhiratha was King of Aṅga. He was a Sūta (charioteer) and Karṇa grew up as his son. Karṇa was sent to Hastināpura to be trained in the use of weapons, and it was here that Duryodhana and Karṇa developed their friendship and alliance. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 147, Verse 3). Śrī Mahādevībhāgavata, in Chapter 3 relates the following incident : "Thus lamenting Kuntī sent the box concealing Karṇa, by the nurse, to be floated in the river, and after bath, food etc. she spent the hours in the normal way within the inner apartment. Rājā Adhiratha bathing in the river saw the box floating in the river". These facts prove that Adhiratha was not only the King of Aṅga but a good charioteer as well, and further a very good friend of Dhṛtarāṣṭra.

4) We come across Adhiratha on the occasion of the trial of skill in the use of arms between the Kauravas and the Pāṇḍavas. When Karṇa entered the lists the Pāṇḍavas questioned his nobility of birth. Seeing Karṇa's great humiliation and discomfiture Duryodhana enthroned him immediately as King of Aṅga. Vyāsa, who witnessed the scene has given a picturesque description of it.

ADHOKṢAJA. A synonym of Mahā Viṣṇu. (Kaṁsāri-radhokṣajaḥ—Amarakośa).

ADHRIGU. A great sage (Maharṣi) who lived during the Ṛgvedic period. (Ṛgveda, Maṇḍala 1, Anuvāka 16, Sūkta 112).

ADHṚṢYĀ. A river. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 9, Verse 24).

ADHYAPĀYANA. A disciple of the great preceptor of Atharvaveda, Sumantu. He divided Atharvaveda into two parts and gave one to Utatthya and the other to Vedadarśana. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 12).

ADITI. 1) Genealogy. Kaśyapa, grandson of Brahmā and son of Marīci married Aditi, daughter of Dakṣaprajāpati. Aditi had twelve sisters: Diti, Kālā, Danāyus, Danu, Siṁhikā, Krodhā, Pṛthā, Viśvā, Vinatā, Kapilā, Muni and Kadrū. (Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 65, Verse 12). Devas are sons born to Kaśyapa by Aditi and hence they are known as Ādityas also. Kaśyapa married all the thirteen sisters including Aditi, and all living beings owe their origin to them. (See Kaśyapa).

2) Descendants. 33 sons were born to Aditi. 12 of them are called Dvādaśādityas, viz. Dhātā, Aryamā, Mitra, Śakra, Varuṇa, Aṁśa, Bhaga, Vivasvān, Pūṣā, Savitā, Tvaṣṭā and Viṣṇu. Amongst the other 21 sons are the 11 Rudras and 8 Vasus. (See M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 65, Verse 15).

3) Main incidents. 1. How Mahāviṣṇu was born as the son of Aditi. The Mahābhārata and the Rāmāyaṇa refer to a story about the birth of Mahāviṣṇu as the son of Aditi. Viṣṇu entered the womb of Aditi as Vāmana (Dwarf). This story was related by the sage Viśvāmitra to the boys Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa while they were accompanying the sage in the forest. When they entered Siddhāśrama Viśvāmitra pointed to the latter that the Āśrama was sacred, because Mahāviṣṇu had stayed there for long as Vāmana. The Devas induced Mahāviṣṇu to obstruct the sacrifice (yāga) being performed by Emperor Mahābali, son of Virocana. At that time Aditi, the wife of Kaśyapa was doing penance so that Mahāviṣṇu might be born as her son, and accordingly he entered her womb. 1000 years later she gave birth to Viṣṇu, and that child was known as Vāmana. (See Vāmana; also M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 272, Verse 62, Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 83, Verses 25 and 26, as also Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa, Canto 29).

2. Rebirth of Aditi. Once Kaśyapa made all arrangements to perform a sacrifice (yāga). Having failed to get the suitable cow for it, he stole Varuṇa's cow and conducted the yāga. Not only that, Kaśyapa refused to return the cow even after the yāga was over. Varuṇa in hot anger rushed to Kaśyapa's hermitage. Kaśyapa was absent, and his wives, Aditi and Surasā did not treat Varuṇa with due respect. The enraged Varuṇa cursed them to be born in Gokula. He also complained about the matter to Brahmā. Brahmā told Kaśyapa : "Since you, a learned person, have stolen the cow, may you along with your wives be born in Gokula and tend cows". Accordingly Kaśyapa and his wives, Aditi and Surasā, were born respectively as Vasudeva, Devakī and Rohiṇī in Gokula in the 28th Dvāpara yuga. (This story has been told by Vyāsa to Rājā Janamejaya). (Devībhāgavata, Skandha 4).

3. Aditi in prison. Devakī is Aditi reborn. There was reason for Devakī being imprisoned on the orders of Kaṁsa. When Kaśyapa was living in an Āśrama with Aditi and Diti he was so much pleased with the services of Aditi that he asked her to beg for any boon she wished. Accordingly she prayed for an ideal son. The boon was readily granted, and Indra was the son thus born to her. The birth of Indra engendered jealousy in Diti towards Aditi, and she also demanded a son equal to Indra. Kaśyapa obliged Diti also. As Diti advanced in pregnancy and her beauty also increased Aditi got jealous of the former and she called her son Indra and told him that unless something was done in time, Diti would deliver a child equal to him (Indra) thus relegating him probably to the place of second Deva. Thus admonished by his mother the artful Indra approached Diti and told her: "Mother, I have come to serve you". Diti was greatly pleased. Indra's services drove Diti to sleep very quickly, and Indra used the opportunity to enter the womb of Diti and cut into 49 pieces the child with his weapon, the Vajra. The child in the womb began crying on receiving cuts with Vajra when Indra asked it not to cry. (Mā ruda, don't cry) and so the child got out of Diti's womb as 49 Mārutas (winds). Then did Diti wake up and cursed Aditi as follows : "Your son did treacherously kill my offspring in the womb itself. So he will forfeit the three worlds. You were responsible for the murder of my child. You will, therefore, have to spend days in prison grieving over your children. Your children also will be annihilated". Because of this curse of Diti, Indra once lost Devaloka and had to live elsewhere, and Nahuṣa functioned, for a time as Indra. (See Nahuṣa). In the 28th Dvāpara yuga Aditi transformed as Devakī had to be a captive of Kaṁsa, and Kaṁsa killed her children by dashing them on the ground. (Devībhāgavata, Skandha 4).

4. Narakāsura stole the earrings of Aditi. Narakāsura, who turned out to be a curse and menace to the three worlds consequent on the boon he got from Viṣṇu, attacked Devaloka once, and carried off Indra's royal umbrella and Aditi's earrings. Mahāviṣṇu incarnated himself as Śrī Kṛṣṇa, killed Narakāsura in battle and got back the earrings etc. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 48, Verse 80; Sabhā Parva, Chapter 38, Verse 29; Bhāgavata Daśama Skandha).
5. Mahāviṣṇu became seven times son to Aditi. Once, desirous of having children Aditi cooked food (rice) sitting herself in the entrails of Mount Mynaka (M.B. Āraṇya Parva, Chapter 135, Verse 3). Dharmaputra, in the course of singing the glories of Lord Kṛṣṇa after the great war refers to Viṣṇu having taken birth seven times in the womb of Aditi. (M.B. Śānti Parva, Chapter 43, Verse 6).
6. Budha cursed Aditi. A story in the Mahābhārata refers to Budha's once cursing Aditi. The ever increasing power of Asuras made the Devas anxious. Aditi, the mother of the Devas decided to send them all to annihilate the Asuras. She had finished cooking food for her sons, and lo ! there appeared before her Budha and asked for food. Aditi asked him to wait pending her sons taking their food hoping that there would be some food left after that. This caused Budha to lose his temper and he cursed her that (Aditi) she would become the mother of Vivasvān in his second birth as Aṇḍa, when she would suffer pain in her abdomen. (M.B. Śānti Parva, Chapter 34, Verses 96-98).
7. Former birth of Aditi. During the former years (period) of Svāyambhuva Manu the Prajāpati called Sutapas, along with his wife Pṛśni did Tapas for 12000 years. Then Mahāviṣṇu appeared before them, and Pṛśni prayed for a son like Viṣṇu himself, and Mahāviṣṇu was born as her son named Pṛśnigarbha. This story is related by Śrī Kṛṣṇa to his mother on his birth as the son of Vasudeva. (Bhāgavata, Daśama Skandha, Chapter 3).

She, who became the wife of Prajāpati as Pṛśni before Svāyambhuva Manu, and was born again as Devakī, the wife of Vasudeva is one and the same person.

ADRA. A King of the Solar dynasty. (See Sūrya Vaṁśa).

ADRI was a King, the son of Viṣvagaśvā and father of Yuvanāśvā. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 202, Verse 3).

ADRIKĀ. A nymph (devastrī). There is a story in Devībhāgavata about her being cursed by a Brahmin and turned into a fish.

ADṚṢṬABHAYA is the curse put on King Janamejaya by Saramā, the dog of the Devas. While Janamejaya, son of Parīkṣit was conducting, along with his brothers, a yāga of long duration at Kurukṣetra the son of Saramā went to the place and was thrashed by the brothers of Janamejaya. Seeing her weeping child Saramā naturally got angry. She cursed the king thus : "My son did not commit any offence; he did not even look at the havis (oblations), nor did he lick it. For having thrashed the innocent child you will experience Adṛṣṭabhaya. When the yāga was over Janamejaya got rid of the curse by getting sage Somaśravas do certain proper rites.

ADṚŚYANTĪ, wife of sage Śakti, the son of Vasiṣṭha and mother of sage Parāśara.

Kalmāṣapāda, a king of the Ikṣvāku dynasty reached the hermitage of Vasiṣṭha during a hunting expedition when Śakti, eldest of the hundred sons of Vasiṣṭha came walking towards him. False pride prevented either of them from giving way to the other. The King got angry and whipped Śakti. Śakti cursed the king and he was converted into a demon. This happened at a period when sages Vasiṣṭha and Viśvāmitra were at logger-heads. Viśvāmitra got admitted into the body of King Kalmāṣapāda a demon called Kiṁkara, and the king set out to take revenge upon Śakti, the son of Vasiṣṭha. The King was further promised all support by Viśvāmitra. Kalmāṣapāda ate up all the hundred sons of Vasiṣṭha. Overcome with grief Vasiṣṭha attempted suicide many a time. But the spirit (Ātman) did not quit the body. Thus sunken in grief Vasiṣṭha lived in his hermitage with Adṛśyantī, wife of Śakti. One day Vasiṣṭha heard distinct sounds of the chanting of the Vedas and Adṛśyantī told him that a child of his son, Śakti, was developing in her womb and that the vedic sounds heard were sounds produced by that son chanting the vedic hymns. Vasiṣṭha thus was happy to hear that the dynasty will not become extinct and, so, gave up all ideas of suicide. Another day Kalmāṣapāda in the guise of the demon hurriedly came to devour Adṛśyantī and Vasiṣṭha gave him redemption from the curse. He was restored to his old state and form. Adṛśyantī duly gave birth to a son, and the child grew up to become Parāśara, father of Vyāsa.

While the Pāṇḍavas, in the course of their forest life, were passing the banks of river Gaṅgā at midnight, a Gandharva named Aṁgāraparṇa enjoying in the river-water clashed with Arjuna, and he was defeated. The story of Adṛśyantī is one of the many stories told by Aṁgāraparṇa to the Pāṇḍavas. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapters 175-178).

AGASTYA.

1) Genealogy. Descended from Viṣṇu in this order Brahmā-Marīci-Kaśyapa-Sūrya-Agastya.

2) Birth. A story occurs in Uttara-Rāma-Carita about the birth of Agastya. Nimi was the son of Ikṣvāku of the Sūrya dynasty. When he ascended the throne he decided to celebrate a sacrifice of long duration. He invited Vasiṣṭha to perform the sacrifice. But Vasiṣṭha, who had to participate in the sacrifice of Indra, could not accept the invitation and Nimi had to return disappointed. At this he got angry, sought the help of Śatānanda, the son of the great hermit Gautama and the sacrifice was begun. Vasiṣṭha did not like this. He cursed Nimi that life might be separated from his body. Nimi retorted with the same curse. Vasiṣṭha's spirit separated itself from his body and began to roam about in the sky. At last he requested Brahmā to provide him with a body. Brahmā granted his wish and said that he would be born again from Mitra and Varuṇa.

When the spirit of Vasiṣṭha returned to the earth it was Mitra and Varuṇa moving about, having only one body for both. Vasiṣṭha's spirit entered into that body. One day Mitra-Varuṇa happened to see the celestial beauty, Urvaśī on the seashore. They embraced Urvaśī and immediately the spirit of Vasiṣṭha entered the body of Urvaśī.

After this Mitra and Varuṇa separated themselves from one another and assumed two different bodies. Varuṇa approached Urvaśī with lustful desire, but rejecting him Urvaśī accepted Mitra. Varuṇa had seminal flow and this semen was taken and kept in a pot. At the sight of this, remorse and passion arose in Urvaśī and the semen of Mitra already received in her womb oozed out and fell on the ground. This also was collected and kept in the same pot along with that of Varuṇa. After a few days the pot broke open by itself and two babies came out. One was Agastya and the other Vasiṣṭha. As these two were born of the semen of Mitra and Varuṇa, they came to be known as Maitrāvaruṇis later. This story partly occurs in Śānti Parva of Mahābhārata, Verse 343 of Chapter 88.

3) Education. Very little is mentioned in the Purāṇas about the education of Agastya. Still there are ample proofs that he was well-versed in the Vedas and sciences and well skilled in the uses of diverse weapons. In Verse 9, Chapter 139 of Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Droṇa says to Arjuna as follows:

"Agniveśa, my teacher was the disciple of Agastya, in the art of using bows and arrows and I am his disciple".

When it is said that even Agniveśa the teacher of Droṇa was a disciple of Agastya, his proficiency in the art of using weapons could easily be discerned.

4) Marriage. There is an interesting story behind the marriage of such an austere man as Agastya, who had brought all the passions under control. As the hermit Agastya was walking along the forest, he saw his ancestors (Pitṛs) hanging head downwards in a canyon. He wanted to know the reason and they replied: "Child; we would be allowed to enter heaven only if sons are born to you. So get married as soon as possible". The necessity of marriage occurred to him only then. But will there be any woman who could be patient enough to become the wife of this bearded dwarfish hermit? Agastya did not lose heart. At that time the King of Vidarbha was doing penance to obtain a son. Agastya collected the quintessence of all living beings, with which he created an extremely beautiful lady and named her Lopāmudrā. Agastya gave Lopāmudrā as daughter to the King of Vidarbha. The King who was delighted at getting such a daughter, employed hundreds of maids to look after the child, who soon grew up to be a young lady. Agastya once approached the King of Vidarbha and expressed his wish to have Lopāmudrā as his wife. The King was in a dilemma. On the one hand he did not like his beautiful daughter having the brightness of fire, to be given as wife to the hermit, clad in the bark of trees and wearing tufts of matted hair. On the other hand he was afraid of the curse of the hermit Agastya. As the King was trying hard to find a solution, Lopāmudrā herself came to the King and said "Father, I am happy to say that I shall willingly become the wife of the hermit Agastya." At last her father consented and discarding royal garments and ornaments, Lopāmudrā accompanied Agastya. It is mentioned in Vana Parva, Chapter 130, Verse 5, that they were married at Mahāsindhutīrtha. After their marriage they went to Gaṅgādvāra. (Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 96).

5) The story of how Agastya ate Vātāpi. While Agastya was doing severe penance, Lopāmudrā attained puberty and had menstruation. Longing for a child, she went and stood beside Agastya. She expressed her wish to lead a family life. Her demands did not stop there. During conjugation, Agastya should wear flower garlands and ornaments, and she must be provided with divine ornaments. Agastya was surprised at the enormity of her demands. Poor, penniless Agastya! Leaving Lopāmudrā in the hermitage he went in search of money. He at first approached King Śrutarvā, who produced accounts of his income and expenditure and convinced Agastya that he was having no balance at all. Agastya, accompanied by Śrutarvā, then proceeded to King Bradhnāśva. He also produced accounts and refused to help Agastya, who then followed by Śrutarvā and Bradhnāśva went on to the wealthy King Trasadasyu, who also producing his accounts refused to render any help to Agastya. Finally Agastya accompanied by the three Kings, went to the house of Ilvala, a noble asura of immense wealth.

This asura Ilvala lived in Manimatpattana with his younger brother Vātāpi. Once Ilvala approached a hermit Brahmin and requested that his wish for a son, having the power and status of Indra, be granted. The Brahmin refused to grant such a boon. Since then Ilvala and Vātāpi considered Brahmins as their enemies. The elder brother converted the younger one (Vātāpi) into a goat and whenever a Brahmin visited his house, he would kill the goat, prepare mutton dishes and set them before his guest. When he had finished eating, Ilvala would call aloud. "Vātāpi, come out". Breaking the stomach of the guest open, Vātāpi would come out. In this way Ilvala had killed a good number of Brāhmins. It was at this juncture that Agastya and the Kings came to beg money of him.

Ilvala welcomed the guests with hospitality and as usual killed the goat, prepared food with it and served the food before Agastya. When Agastya had finished eating, Ilvala called Vātāpi loudly. But Agastya slowly said, "Vātāpi, jīrṇo bhava" (Let Vātāpi be digested) and immediately Vātāpi was digested in the stomach of Agastya. The awe-stricken asura Ilvala gave each Brahmin ten thousand cows and as much gold and to Agastya he doubled the quantity of alms. Over and above this, he presented Agastya with a chariot hitched with two fine horses called Virāvān and Surāvān. Agastya returned to his hermitage and adorned himself as Lopāmudrā had demanded. (Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 99).

6) Birth of a son. Lopāmudrā became pregnant. Agastya told her, "A thousand ordinary sons, or hundred sons, each having the strength of ten ordinary sons, or ten sons, each having the strength of hundred ordinary sons, or a son, greater and nobler than one thousand sons—which of these do you prefer ?" Lopāmudrā preferred one son. When she was with child Agastya again went to the forest to do penance. After seven years of pregnancy Lopāmudrā gave birth to a lustrous son. The hermit Dṛḍhasyu, who is also called Idhmavāha, is this son. This child is said to have chanted the Vedas (Holy Scriptures) immediately on his birth. He used to gather twigs for kindling the sacrificial fire of his father, and hence he got the name Idhmavāha.*

7) How he stamped the Vindhya mountain down. Once the talebearer Nārada happened to come to the Vindhya Mountain, who gladly welcomed Nārada, gave him a seat, showed hospitality and asked for news. Nārada said "May you be blessed. Just now I am coming from the Mahameru. Indra, Agni (fire) and other gods live there. Kailāsa, Niṣadha, Nīla, Gandhamādana etc. are mountains far nobler than this Meru. But they are not so haughty as him. That the Sun and the Moon and such others revolve round him, is the reason for his arrogance". On hearing these tales, Vindhya thought that Meru should be taught a lesson. Once Vindhya made his peaks grow higher and higher till they touched the sky. The Sun, the Moon and others found it very difficult to pass over the high peaks in their usual journeys to the West, and so they had to roam about in the sky. When the journeys of the Sun and the Moon were hindered, everything in the world fell into chaos. The gods came to Vindhya in groups and tried to pacify him. But their attempts were futile. So they approached Agastya and made their petition to him. He agreed to pacify Vindhya somehow or other. Agastya and his wife came to Vindhya from Kāśinagara. When Vindhya saw Agastya he began to shiver with fear. Contracting all his high peaks, he bowed before Agastya, who said to Vindhya thus "Vindhya, I am going to South Bhārata. Let your heads be low till I come back". Vindhya agreed. Agastya passed on to the South and built a hermitage in the Malayācala and lived there. Since then Agastya had never gone to the North and Vindhya had never risen up. As he had made the mountain (Aga) bow its head he got the name Agastya. (Tenth Skandha of Devībhāgavata).

8) Nahuṣa transformed to a huge serpent by Agastya. Devendra killed Vṛttrāsura, an enemy of the gods. As Devendra had resorted to treachery for killing the enemy (see the word Vṛttrāsura) he incurred the sin of 'Brahmahatyā'. Once Indra went to the Mānasasaras, without the knowledge of anybody and hid himself in the petal of a lotus flower. The gods and especially Śacīdevī were much alarmed at the disappearance of Devendra. Heaven was without a King. Bad omens began to appear. Indra, who had hidden in the lotus stalk in the shape of a water-snake, was not at all visible as the petals had closed over him. It was at this critical moment that King Nahuṣa had completed hundred horse-sacrifices and became eligible for the throne of Devendra. At a great gathering of the Gods Nahuṣa was elected as Devendra. Though Nahuṣa got all the celestial maids at his disposal in the Nandanodyāna (Nandana Garden) his passion for women was not satiated. So he began to have an eye on Indrāṇī. She was in sorrow and misery at the disappearance of her husband Indra, and did not at all look with favour on this new move on the part of the new Indra. She sought the help of Bṛhaspati, who agreed to protect her from Nahuṣa. The newly-elected Indra could not tolerate this disloyalty on the part of Indrāṇī. He became furious and threatened Bṛhaspati with death, if Indrāṇī was not sent to him forthwith. All hermits gathered round Nahuṣa and tried with their advice to dissuade him from this attempt, but he would not be dissuaded. Nahuṣa belittled Bṛhaspati and all the hermits and was rude to them. Finally the hermits, being afraid of Nahuṣa, went to Bṛhaspati to persuade him to send Indrāṇī to Nahuṣa. Bṛhaspati suggested to Indrāṇī a way of safety. Accordingly she came to Nahuṣa and said to him "Lord, to become your wife, is a matter of great pleasure to me. But before that I must make sure if my husband is living anywhere. So allow me to make a search". Nahuṣa agreed to this and by the blessings of Devī, Indrāṇī found out her husband. But Indra would not return to the court, with Indrāṇī, who then complained about Nahuṣa's outrageous behaviour. Indra advised her a new way to protect herself from Nahuṣa's onslaught.

Indrāṇī returned to Nahuṣa and told him "Lord, women generally love pomp and glory. I have a mania for vehicles. You should make a palanquin. Let the palanquin bearers be hermits. You must come to my house in that palanquin with hermits as your palanquin bearers and then I will accept you as my husband." Nahuṣa agreed. He employed Agastya and such other hermits to bear his palanquin. He got into his palanquin and started for Indrāṇī's house. His desire to reach Indrāṇī was such that he thought the hermits to be very slow. To make them quick enough he ordered "Sarpa, Sarpa" (walk quick, walk quick). The hermits began to run. Still Nahuṣa was not satisfied. He kicked at the heads of the hermits and whipped the dwarfish Agastya.

Agastya got angry and cursed Nahuṣa thus: "Since you have whipped me saying 'Sarpa Sarpa', may you be transformed into a mahāsarpa (huge serpent) and fall into the great forest."

The horror-stricken Nahuṣa pleased Agastya by praise. Agastya said that Nahuṣa would be freed from the curse and attain heaven when he happened to meet Dharmaputra. Nahuṣa instantly changed into a serpent of immense size and slided into a great forest in the Himālayās. (Devībhāgavata, 8th Sarga).

During their sojourn in the forest, the Pāṇḍavas visited many holy places and reached the Yāmuna mountain in the Himālayās. When Bhīma was passing by the mouth of a cave he was attacked by a huge serpent. In spite of his immense strength Bhīma could not extricate himself from the hold of the snake, who eventually informed Bhīma of its previous history. When Bhīma understood that the serpent was none other than Nahuṣa, a King of the Sūrya dynasty (Solar), he felt sorry for him. Dharmaputra, who came there in search of Bhīma, talked with Nahuṣa, who immediately regained his original form and went to heaven. (Mahābhārata, Chapter 17 of Udyoga Parva; Chapter 179 of Vana Parva; Chapter 342 of Śānti Parva).

*Idhma—twigs of firewood. (Idhma=twigs of firewood) (vāha=carrier).

It is mentioned in the Mahābhārata, Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 100, that the person who cursed Nahuṣa and turned him into a huge serpent, was the hermit Bhṛgu, who had been hiding in the hair of Agastya.

9) How Agastya drank up the ocean. Indra ruthlessly killed Vṛttrāsura, who had been harassing the Gods, with the help of the Kālakeyas. The frightened Kālakeyas got into the ocean and hid themselves at the bottom. From that hideout they decided to destroy the three worlds. At night they came out on the earth and ate a good deal of Brahmins, and caused much damage to the hermitages of Vasiṣṭha and Cyavana. All the Brahmins on the earth were terribly afraid of the Kālakeyas. The gods went to Viṣṇu and prayed for protection. Viṣṇu informed them that the Kālakeyas could not be caught unless the ocean was dried up, and this task could be performed only by Agastya. So the Gods approached Agastya and told him what Viṣṇu had informed them. With pleasure Agastya accepted the job. Accompanied by the Gods and hermits he neared the swaying and surging ocean. While all were watching unwinkingly Agastya brought the great ocean into his palm and drank it up very easily and subsequently the Kālakeyas were killed. Now the Gods again approached Viṣṇu and made representation about the loss of the ocean. Viṣṇu told them that by the penance of Bhagīratha the divine Gaṅgā would fall into the earth and then the ocean will be filled. In this way the earth regained its lost ocean. (Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapters 101 to 105).

10) Agastya cursing Kubera and his companion. In the course of their sojourn in forest, the Pāṇḍavas visited several holy places and reached the proximity of the Himālayas. Leaving his brothers behind, Arjuna went up the Mahāmeru to worship Śiva. Years passed by. At last his brothers also started for the Mahāmeru in search of Arjuna and with the help of the hermits Vṛṣaparvā and Ārṣṭiṣeṇa, they reached Kuberapurī (the capital of Kubera). There Bhīma destroyed the army of Kubera and killed Maṇimān, his friend and favourite. Dharmaputra, repenting of his younger brother's iniquity bowed before Kubera and asked him with politeness, why the power of Gods gave way to the power of man. Kubera replied that it was due to the curse of Agastya and began to depict the event thus : Once my friend Maṇimān and myself were going, in a chariot, to be present at the singing and chanting just begun at Kuśavatī. At that time Agastya was standing in his hermitage on the bank of Kālindī, performing Sun worship. When Maṇimān saw this from the sky, he spat on the head of Agastya, who instantly getting wild cursed me. "Lo, Kubera, your friend Maṇimān spat on my head in your sight. So this Maṇimān and your army will meet with death at a man's hand. When they die you should not feel sorry for them. If it becomes possible for you to meet the man who killed Maṇimān you will be liberated from the curse." It is this curse that brought about the death of Maṇimān and the army. When Kubera saw Bhīma face to face his curse was revoked. (Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 160).

11) Agastya cursing Mārīca and Tāḍakā. The boys Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa went to the forest with Viśvāmitra for protecting sacrifice. When they entered the Tāḍakā forest Viśvāmitra told them the story of Tāḍakā thus:—

Tāḍakā is the daughter of Suketu, a semi god of the tribe Yakṣa. Being childless for a long time Suketu was miserable and began to do penance before Brahmā, who blessed him and granted his wish and a daughter was born to him. This daughter was named Tāḍakā. Brahmā blessed her, giving her the strength of one thousand elephants. Tāḍakā grew up and became a young woman. Suketu gave her in marriage to Sunda, son of Iharjha. Tāḍakā gave birth to a son called Mārīca. When Sunda was killed, Tāḍakā got wild and ran into the hermitage of Agastya causing much havoc there. At this Agastya got angry and cursed her to become a Rākṣasī (giantess) and instantly the bodies of Tāḍakā and Mārīca were deformed. Tāḍakā could not control her anger and she demolished the hermitage of Agastya. (Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa, Bālakāṇḍa).

12) The story of the theft of lotus. Once Bhṛgu, Vasiṣṭha and other hermits went on a pilgrimage, with Indra as their leader. On the way they reached Brahmasaras, in the holy place of Kauṣikī. Agastya had grown some lotus flowers there. The pilgrims plucked stealthily all the lotus flowers nurtured by Agastya and ate them. The furious Agastya got into the midst of the hermits in search of the culprit. None admitted the theft. Finally he caught hold of Indra, as the thief. Indra said "O, Lord, had it not been for my eagerness to hear discourses on duty from your face, I would not have stolen your lotus flowers." Saying thus Indra returned the lotus flowers. Agastya was pleased and let Indra and the hermits depart in peace. (Mahābhārata, Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 94).

13) How Agastya burned the Asuras (demons). (This story occurs in the Mahābhārata as, having been told by the God Vāyu to Bhīṣma as a discourse on the greatness of Agastya, and Bhīṣma reiterating it to Arjuna).

Once the Gods had to accept defeat at the hands of the Asuras (Demons) and they approached Agastya and said thus : Oh, hermit, since we have been defeated by the Asuras, our prosperity is at an end. There is none to help us but you." Hearing this Agastya became angry and began to burn the Asuras to death, by the merits of his penance. Many of them fell down on the earth and some fell into Pātāla (the nether world). The asuras who thus fell were not killed by Agastya. Thus the menace of the Asuras in heaven was warded off, and the Gods lived in peace and prosperity. (Mahābhārata, Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 155, Verses 1 to 13).

14) Indra's conflict with Agastya. Once Agastya commenced a sacrifice of twelve years' duration. Many hermits participated in this sacrifice. No sooner had the hermit begun the sacrifice, than Indra, (the God of Thunder and Rain) stopped rain in the world. Crops could not be raised. But Agastya provided everybody who took part in the sacrifice, with sumptuous meals. The hermits wondered how Agastya could do this. Some of the hermits feared that the sacrifice would have to be stopped before the stipulated time, if the drought continued. Agastya told them not to fear, and that if Indra refused to send rain, he himself would become Indra and protect the subjects. Indra was horrified, when he heard this and he began to send rain regularly. (Mahābhārata, Āśvamedhika Parva, Chapter 92).

15) Story of Gajendramokṣa (The redemption of an elephant). In the Bhārata a story occurs, as to how Agastya cursed King Indradyumna, and turned him to an elephant. While Indradyumna, the King of Pāṇḍya was absorbed in deep meditation on Viṣṇu, Agastya reached the palace. Being immersed in meditation the King failed to notice the arrival of the great hermit, who getting angry with the King, cursed him to become an elephant, for one thousand years. Instantly the King was deformed into a big tusker and quitting the palace it went to a big forest and lived there happily with the she-elephants there. At that time a hermit named Devala was doing penance in that forest. One day Hūhu, a gandharva (a class of semi-gods) enjoying the company of some celestial maids came to the place where Devala had put up his hermitage. The hermit saw the Gandharva and the maids playing and bathing in the pond in front of his hermitage in complete nudity. Getting angry Devala cursed Hūhu and he was deformed into a crocodile. This pond which was in the Trikūṭa Mountain was thus under the suzerainty of the crocodile. The tusker (Indradyumna) entered the pond to drink water. The crocodile caught hold of the leg of the elephant. Each tried to pull the other with equal force. This fight is said to have lasted for a thousand years. When both were tired, godly feelings began to dawn in their minds. Then, riding on an eagle Mahāviṣṇu appeared before them, cut them asunder with his Cakrāyudha (the wheel-weapon) and both were given deliverance. (Bhāgavata, 8th Skandha, Chapter 2).

16) Agastya teaching Śrī Rāma the Āditya-hṛdaya Mantra (A hymn in praise of the Sun). When Śrī Rāma was fighting with Rāvaṇa in Laṅkā, dejection befell him, his heart being weighed down with faintness, for a little while. Rāvaṇa made the best use of this opportunity and began to advance. The gods had gathered in the sky above to witness the fight. Agastya, at that particular moment, taught Śrī Rāma the Āditya-hṛdaya Mantra, a hymn in praise of the Sun-god and when Śrī Rāma chanted that mantra, he resumed fight with Vigour and Rāvaṇa was defeated and slain. (Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa, Yuddha Kāṇḍa, Sarga 107).

17) How the slant of the earth was rectified by seating Agastya. The matrimonial ceremony of Śrī Parameśvara and Pārvatī was held in the Himālayas. On that auspicious occasion all the living beings of the world were present, and as a result the Himālayan region sank down and the earth slanted to that side. To keep the equilibrium of the earth, Śiva sent Agastya to the south. Accordingly Agastya reached Kuttālam, where there was a temple dedicated to the worship of Viṣṇu. Agastya had besmeared his forehead with ashes and so admission to the temple was denied to him, by the devotees there who were Vaiṣṇavites. By his own power Agastya turned himself into a vaiṣṇavite and got into the temple, and immediately the image of Viṣṇu in the temple changed by itself into a Śivaliṅga (idol representing Śiva). Since then the temple at Kuttālam has remained a temple of Śiva. Agastya proceeded to the southernmost point of the earth and sat there and because of his weight the earth regained its normal position. (Skanda Purāṇa).

18) Agastya and the Krauñca Mountain. When Agastya passed the Vindhya mountain and proceeded to the South a Rākṣasa (giant) called Krauñca hindered his way. By his power the Rākṣasa caused to fall everywhere a very heavy rain. Agastya sprinkled a few drops of water from his waterpot on Krauñca, who instantly became a mountain. Telling him that he would get deliverance from the curse when the weapon of Subrahmaṇya struck him, Agastya continued his journey to the South. (Skanda Purāṇa.).

19) Agastya and the River Kāverī. Once Sūrapadmā, an Asura (demon) drove the Gods out from heaven. Indra came to Śiyāli a place in the district of Tanjāvūr (Tanjore) and began to do penance to please Śiva. Rain was completely stopped. Agastya had compressed the river Kāverī and held the water in his waterpot. Gaṇapati having come to know of this, came in the form of a crow and toppled the waterpot. Agastya got angry and ran after the crow, which immediately assumed the form of a boy. Agastya caught hold of him. The boy instantly revealed himself as Subrahmaṇya and granted Agastya a boon. "Your waterpot will always be full". Since then there had never been shortage of water in the Kāverī. (Skanda Purāṇa).

20) Agastya in the palace of Bhadrāśva. Once Agastya lived in the palace of Bhadrāśva as his guest for seven days. Agastya praised Kāntimatī the queen on several occasions. The King wanted to know the reason. Agastya said : During her previous birth Kāntimatī was the handmaid of a rich man. On one occasion of dvādaśī (twelfth night after full moon) in the month of Tulā (second half of October and first half of November) the rich man had asked his handmaid to see that the lights in a certain temple did not go out and she did so, in consequence of which, during her current birth she has become your queen, bearing the name Kāntimatī. The King and the queen were much pleased at this explanation of Agastya and thenceforward they began to observe dvādaśī as a day of fasting. (Vāyu Purāṇa).

21) Agastya cursing Urvaśī, Jayanta and Nārada. Once Agastya went to the realm of the Gods, as a guest of Indra. On that day a performance of dance by Urvaśī was held in honour of Agastya. In the midst of the dance Urvaśī's eyes fell on Jayanta and she fell in love with him; her steps went out of beat. Nārada also went wrong slightly in playing on his famous lute called Mahatī. Agastya got angry and cursed Urvaśī, Jayanta and Nārada. According to the curse Jayanta became a bud. Urvaśī was born in the earth as a woman called Mādhavī and 'Mahatī' the lute of Nārada became the lute of the people of the earth.

22) Agastya cursing Duṣpanya. Duṣpanya was the last son of the King of Pāṭaliputra. The wicked Duṣpanya had slain a large number of babies, and the King therefore expelled him from the palace. Duṣpanya went into the forest, where he caught hold of the child of Ugraravas and killed it by putting it under water. Ugraravas cursed him and accordingly he fell into water and died and his spirit became a ghost and wandered about tormented with pain and anguish. At last the spirit approached Agastya, who called his disciple Sutīṣṇa and asked him to go and bathe in the Agnitīrtha (a bath) in the Gandhamādana mountain and bring some water from the tīrtha and sprinkle it on the spirit of Duṣpanya. Sutīṣṇa acted accordingly and immediately the spirit of Duṣpanya received divine figure and entered heaven. (Setu Māhātmya).

23) How Agastya got golden Bangle. Once Agastya entered a forest of about a hundred yojanas wide. The forest was devoid of life. When he had walked a few more steps some Gandharvas (semi-gods) and celestial maids came there singing and dancing. From among them a noble male being came forward to the bank of a lake in the forest and ate without any hesitation, the corpse of a man that was lying there. After that he walked round Agastya and made obeisance to him. Agastya asked him why he had eaten the corpse of a man. The noble man told Agastya thus: "In tretā yuga (the third age) there lived a King named Vidarbha. I am his son and my name is Śveta. After having ruled. over my kingdom for a long time, I came to the bank of this lake and began to do penance. After that discarding my body I entered heaven. Though I attained heaven my hunger was not appeased. I asked Brahmā how, I, a dweller of heaven, got this hunger. Brahmā said that when I was King I had given nothing to anybody and so I got this hunger even after entering heaven. As a remedy Brahmā suggested that I should come here everyday and eat corpse and when I had completed ten thousand days the hermit Agastya would come here and that when I offered him a golden bangle my sin would be washed away." Saying thus Śveta offered to Agastya the golden bangle given by Brahmā and then he vanished and the corpse also disappeared. Śveta went to heaven. (Uttara Rāmāyaṇa).

24) Other informations concerning Agastya.

(1) Agastya had a brother called Sutīṣṇa. (Agnipurāṇa, Chapter 7).

(2) Sutīṣṇa was Agastya's disciple too. (Setu Māhātmya).

(3) Ilvala and Vātāpi were the sons of the giantess Ajamukhī. In the valley of a mountain Ajamukhī prayed to Durvāsas for love and thus Ilvala and Vātāpi were born from Durvāsas. These two sons demanded that Durvāsas should impart to them all his merits of penance. Getting angry Durvāsas cursed them that they would meet with death at the hands of Agastya. (Skandapurāṇa, Āsura Kāṇḍa).

(4) Agastya had been the priest of the King Khela. (Ṛgveda, 112th Sūkta).

(5) When Śrī Rāma returned to Ayodhyā, with Sītā from Laṅkā, hermits from various parts visited him, among whom, Dattātreya, Namuci, Pramuci, Śrī Vālmīki, Soma, Kaṇḍu, Agastya and their disciples were from the South. (Uttara Rāmāyaṇa).

(6) Agastya gave Śrī Rāma an arrow, which, when shot at an asura (demon) would pierce his heart, pass on to the other side, fly to the sea and bathe in the sea-water and return to the quiver, it is said. (Uttara Rāmāyaṇa).

(7) Once Agastya visited the hermitage of Āpastamba. He asked Agastya, who, of Brahmā, Viṣṇu and Śiva, was the Supreme deity. Agastya replied: "These three are only three different manifestations of the one supreme Being". (Brahmapurāṇa).

(8) For the story of how Agastya cursed the sons of Maṇibhadra and transformed them to seven palms, see the word 'Saptasāla'.

(9) There was a hermit called Sutīṣṇa, to whom Śrī Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa paid a visit when they were wandering in the forest. This Sutīṣṇa is the younger brother of Agastya. (See the word Sutīṣṇa).

(10) Agastya cursed Śuka and deformed him into a Rākṣasa. (See the word Śuka ii.).

25) Conclusion. It is believed that the great hermit Agastya, who had performed such wonderful deeds by the merits of his penance, is still doing penance in the Agastya Kūṭa hills. Agastya who had travelled throughout the length and breadth of Bhārata had several hermitages. In the Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa, Āraṇyakāṇḍa, Sarga 11, a description is given, of a beautiful hermitage of Agastya, and the peaceful atmosphere that prevailed in and around it. Agastya had presented to Śrī Rāma a bow got from Viṣṇu, when the brothers visited his hermitage. Agastya had accompanied Śrī Rāma and his followers on his return journey to Ayodhyā from Laṅkā, with Sītā after killing Rāvaṇa. There is a legend in the Tamilnād that Agastya was a member of the first two 'Saṅghas' (groups) of the "three Saṅghas", mentioned in Tamil literature. As Agastya was dwarfish he is mentioned as Kurumuni, (short hermit) in Tamil works. He has written a Tamil grammar on music, literature and drama. But this work is not available now. The Tamil Grammar 'Tolkāpyam', which is considered to be the oldest grammar, was written by Tolkāpyār, one of the twelve disciples of Agastya. Even today in certain temples in the Tamilnād, Agastya-worship is carried on. Kambar, has mentioned about Agastya in his Rāmāyaṇa. A great Tamil author Villiputturan says that the Tamil language is the beautiful maiden presented by Agastya.

It is believed that the following works have been composed by Agastya:

1) Agastya Gītā ; in the Varāhapurāṇa, Paśupālopākhyāna.
2) Agastya Saṁhitā; in Pañcarātra.
3) Agastya Saṁhitā, in the Skandapurāṇa.
4) Śiva Saṁhitā, in Bhāskara Saṁhitā.
5) Dvaidha-nirṇaya Tantra.

AGASTYA KŪṬA. This is the sacred mount where the sage, Agastya, sat and did penance during his sojourn in the southern parts of India. In the Kiṣkindhā Kāṇḍa of Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa we find King Sugrīva commanding that all his soldiers going in search of Sītā should pay homage to the sage Agastya.

AGASTYA PARVATA. This is a mountain in South India believed to belong to the Kālañjara mountain range. Agastya Kūṭa is in this mountain.

AGASTYA SARAS. This is another name for Agastya tīrtha.

AGASTYA-ĀŚRAMA. The Purāṇas make mention of several āśramas connected with sage Agastya. The Pāṇḍavas during their exile visited an āśrama of this name. This is situated near Pañcavaṭī twentyfour miles to the south-east of Nāsik. It is known as Agastya-giri now. (Śloka 20, Chapter 80; and Śloka 1, Chapter 96 of Vana Parva, M.B.).

The Mahābhārata mentions another Agastya-Āśrama near Prayāga. Dharmaputra along with Saint Lomaśa stayed here for some time. Vālmīki describes an āśrama of this name which Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa visited during their exile in the forests. (Chapter 11, Āraṇya Kāṇḍa of the Rāmāyaṇa).

AGASTYA TĪRTHA. This is one of the five tīrthas or sacred places of worship lying scattered in the southern ocean. The other four are the following: (1) The Saubhadra tīrtha (2) The Pauloma tīrtha (3) The Kārandhama tīrtha and (4) the Atipāvana tīrtha. These five were known as Pañca tīrthas and many saints used to live there. There lived in each of these tīrthas one huge and fierce crocodile and all the saints living there, afraid of these crocodiles, deserted their places one by one. (Ref : Śloka 3, Chapter 220 of Ādi Parva, M.B. For more details see under Pañca tīrtha).

AGASTYA VAṬA. This is a sacred shrine in the neighbourhood of the Himālayas. Arjuna paid a visit to this place while he was living with his brothers in the forests during their period of exile. (Śloka 2, Chapter 214 of Ādi Parva, M.B.).

AGATI. A city. Two sons Takṣaka and Chattraketu were born to Lakṣmaṇa (the brother of Śrī Rāma) by his wife Urmilā. The court of the eldest prince Takṣaka was situated in the city of Agati. Formerly this place was known as Kanakhala and was occupied by forest tribes. Exterminating these forest tribes, Lakṣmaṇa built a city there and apportioned it to his eldest son Takṣaka. (Uttara Rāmāyaṇa).

AGHA. The name of an asura. This asura was one of the followers of Kaṁsa. According to the instructions of Kaṁsa, Agha once set out to Gokula to kill Śrī Kṛṣṇa. At that time Śrī Kṛṣṇa was playing on the banks of the river Kālindī with other cowherds. Aghāsura watched the games of the children from the sky above. Then he transformed himself into a colossal serpent and lay with his mouth wide open; his open mouth looked like an immense cave. The foul smell coming from his mouth soon spread over the whole place. Śrī Kṛṣṇa and the other children did not know anything about this. In the course of their games they walked into the cave-like mouth of Agha and were soon trapped in his belly. Agha then closed his mouth and all the boys including Śrī Kṛṣṇa were now imprisoned inside his body. Some of the boys died. Realizing the situation Śrī Kṛṣṇa now enlarged his body. His body grew larger and larger until at last it burst open the body of the serpent (Agha). Thus Agha was killed. Śrī Kṛṣṇa then restored the dead boys to life by his divine looks (Kaṭākṣa). This Aghāsura was the brother of Bakāsura and Pūtanā. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 10, Chapter 12).

AGHAMARṢAṆA. He was a great hermit of austerity, who had observed the duties pertaining to Vānaprastha (the third of the four stages of life—forest hermit). (M.B., Śānti Parva, Chapter 244, Stanza 16).

AGHAMARṢAṆA SŪKTA. This is a hymn in the Ṛgveda. It is said that all sins will be eliminated, if this hymn is recited three times, standing in water.

AGHĀRDDANAVAMI. (See the word NAVAMĪ VRATA).

AGHĀŚVA. A King hermit (Rājarṣi) named Pedu. (Ṛgveda, Maṇḍala 1, Anuvāka 17, Sūkta 116).

AGNI.

1) Genealogy. Agni was descended from Viṣṇu in this order : Viṣṇu-Brahmā-Aṅgiras-Bṛhaspati-Agni.

2) Birth. We come across several contradictory statements in the Purāṇas regarding the birth of Agni. There is some real difficulty, therefore, in tracing correctly the true genealogy of Agni. The one given above is based on statements in Bhāgavata and Mahābhārata. Aṅgiras is one of the six mind-born sons of Brahmā.* Aṅgiras married Śraddhā and got four daughters and two sons. Bṛhaspati was one of the sons and Utatthya was the other. The daughters were Sinīvālī, Kuhū, Rākā and Anumati. (There is a mention of a third son named Saṁvarta in the Bhāgavata by Eluthassan though the original quoted below does not say so)

Śraddhā tu aṅgirasaḥ patnī
Catasro ' sutakanyakāḥ
Sinīvālī Kuhū Rākā
Caturthya ' anumatistathā
Tatputrāvaparāvāstām
Khyātau svārocise'ntare
Utatthyo bhagavān sākṣāt
Brahmiṣṭhaśca Bṛhaspatiḥ.

Bṛhaspati married Cāndramasī and got six divine sons. Of these Saṁyu, the eldest, married Satyā and Agni was born to Saṁyu of Satyā. (Ślokas 1 to 4, Chapter 219, Āraṇya Kāṇḍa of Malayālam Mahābhārata).

3) Agni—One of the Aṣṭa-dik-pālakas. (Aṣṭa=eight, dik=zone, pālaka=guardian). The Devī Bhāgavata states in its eighth chapter that Agni is one of the eight guards posted at the eight different zones to protect the universe. Indra guards the east; Agni, the south-east; Yama the south; Nirṛti, the south-west; Varuṇa, the west; Vāyu, the north-west; Kubera, the North and Śiva, the north-east. The place where Agni sits on guard is known as tejovatī.

4) Agni—One of the five elements. The universe is believed to be composed of five elements of which Agni is one. The other four are Water, Earth, Ether and Air.

5) The story of how Agni gave a Māyā Sītā (Phantom Sītā) to Śrī Rāma. During their exile in the forests Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa were for some time living in an āśrama built on the shores of the ocean. One day Agni disguised as a Brāhmin approached them and said "O, Śrī Rāma, thou art born to kill the demon Rāvaṇa and save the world from his atrocities. Sītā is going to be a cause for that. Time is not far for you to finish this duty of yours. Rāvaṇa is soon to come and kidnap your wife, Sītā. You must, therefore, allow me to play a trick on Rāvaṇa. Entrust Sītā with me and I shall keep her safe. In her place here you can keep a Māyā Sītā (Phantom Sītā) which will be a live replica of your real wife. In the end when you take back Sītā after killing Rāvaṇa you will be compelled to throw your wife into the fire to test her chastity. At that time I will take back the replica and give you back your real wife". Śrī Rāma was very much pleased to hear this. Agni then, by his yogic powers created a Phantom Sītā and gave her to him. Rāma kept this as a secret even from Lakṣmaṇa. In the great Rāma-Rāvaṇa battle Rāvaṇa was killed and Śrī Rāma took back Sītā to his kingdom. Then respecting public opinion and wishing to establish in public the purity of his queen King Śrī Rāma put her into the fire. At that moment Agni took back the replica and gave back the real Sītā to Śrī Rāma. Sītā thus came out from the fire unscathed. Later, on the advice of Rāma and Agni, the Phantom Sītā went to the sacred place Puṣkara and started doing tapas (penance) there. After doing tapas for a long period of three lakhs of divine years this Phantom Sītā became known as Svargalakṣmī. It was this Svargalakṣmī that later on in the Dvāpara yuga came out from the yajña kuṇḍa of King Pāñcāla as Pāñcālī and became the consort of the Pāṇḍavas. Vedavatī, daughter of Kuśadhvaja in Kṛtayuga, Sītā, daughter of Janaka in the Treta yuga, and Pāñcālī, daughter of Drupada in Dvāpara yuga are one and the same person. On account of this she is known as trihāyanī also. (Chapter 9 of Devī Bhāgavata).

6) The story of how Agni got indigestion. In olden times there was a bold and mighty King called Śvetaki. He conducted several different types of yajña. Afflicted by the unending dense smoke in the yajña hall all the ascetics left the place and went their way. Undaunted by this, Śvetaki started another twelve-year sacrifice in which not a single sage took part. The sages rebuked him and said if he wanted to conduct a sacrifice again he could invite śūdras to help him. (Śūdras belong to the lowest caste among Hindus and are not allowed to participate in sacrifices generally.) Enraged by this insult Śvetaki went to Kailāsa and did fierce penance. Lord Śiva appeared before him and gave him Durvāsas as a priest for his yajña. For twelve years sage Durvāsas performed the yajña pouring into the mouth of Agni through the sacrificial pit unlimited materials of food. Agni was overfed and he got indigestion. He lost all appetite for food, became weak and the brilliance of his face faded. (Chapter 235, Ādi Parva, M.B.).

7) The story of how Agni burnt the big forest, Khāṇḍava. When the indigestion continued without abate for some time Agni approached Brahmā and asked for a cure. Brahmā declared that his indigestion would be cured if Agni could burn the huge forest, Khāṇḍava, the abode of the enemies of the Devas. Agni immediately started consuming the forest. But the inhabitants of the forest soon quenched the fire. Disappointed Agni went to Brahmā again and the latter advised him to wait for some time till the advent of Nara-Nārāyaṇas to that forest. They would then help Agni to burn the forest. Agni waited for the time to come. At that time the Pāṇḍavas were living in Indraprastha with Śrī Kṛṣṇa. When the heat became unbearable there Arjuna and Kṛṣṇa came to the banks of river Yamunā. Hearing about the arrival of Kṛṣṇa and Arjuna who were none but the incarnations of Nārāyaṇa and Nara, Agni disguised as a brahmin approached them and requested them to help him to burn the Khāṇḍava forest. Agni added that any attempt of his to burn the forest was always foiled by Indra who would send a heavy downpour of rain to quench the fire because Takṣaka, an intimate friend of Indra, was living there.

To gain his end Agni gave Arjuna an arrow-case which would never be empty, a chariot bearing a monkey flag, four white horses adorned with gold chains and also the famous Gāṇḍīva bow. To Śrī Kṛṣṇa he gave the cakrāyudha or the divine wheel-weapon. (All these military equipments were once given to Agni by Varuṇa.) When all these were given to them Kṛṣṇa and Arjuna got ready to help Agni to burn the forest. Agni started burning the forest, Indra at once sent a heavy downpour of rain and Arjuna created a canopy of arrows above the forest preventing the rains from falling on the forest. Agni carried on his work undisturbed, the forest was burnt and Agni was cured of his indigestion. (Ślokas 233 to 239, Ādi Parva, M.B.).

8) Agni falls in love. As an inaugural procedure to the great Rājasūya which Dharmaputra performed at Indraprastha his four brothers Bhīma, Arjuna, Nakula and Sahadeva conducted a victory march to the four different sides of the kingdom. Sahadeva who turned south conquered many kings including Dantavaktra and Bhīṣmaka and reached a country called Māhiṣmatīpura. There he had to encounter a powerful king called Nīla. Before long there broke a fire in his camp. Disheartened, Sahadeva prayed to the God, Agni, for help. It was then that Sahadeva came to know about the ties between Agni and Nīla.

King Nīla had a beautiful daughter named Sudarśanā. Once when she was talking to her father after having entered the Agni-hotra Agni fell in love with her. From that day onwards Agni became dreamy about the beautiful lips of Sudarśanā. It reached a stage when Agni would burn only if it was blown by the lips of Sudarśanā. This ended in Agni marrying Sudarśanā. After the marriage Agni lived in the palace of his father-in-law, King Nīla, as a useful ally. It was at this time that Sahadeva came to conquer Nīla. But Agni knew that for the proper conduct of the Rājasūya of Dharmaputra his father-in-law had to surrender to Sahadeva and so advised his father-in-law to do so. What appeared to be a difficult problem was thus easily solved. (Chapter 31, Sabhā Parva, M.B.).

9) How Emperor Śibi was tested by Agni. Once Agni and Indra thought of testing how strong and deep was the sense of charity in Emperor Śibi. Indra took the shape of a hawk and Agni that of a dove and the dove flew and dropped down into the lap of the Emperor who was at that time doing a yāga. The hungry hawk came chasing its prey and finding the dove in the lap of the Emperor said : "O King, is it proper on your part to withhold my food from me, and keep it in your lap?" Hearing this Śibi replied: "This dove has sought refuge in me. It is my duty to give it protection. If it is only food you want I shall give you food." Śibi then offered many things including his kingdom to the hawk in return for the dove. But the hawk refused them all and finally agreed to accept an equal weight of flesh from the body of the Emperor. Śibi without any hesitation cut a portion of his thigh and weighed it against the dove in a scale. The dove weighed more and the Emperor started putting more and more flesh from his body to make the weight equal. But the dove always weighed more and at last the Emperor said he would weigh himself against the dove. As the weak and fleshless Emperor was about to get into the pan of the scale Agni and Indra emerged from the bodies of the dove and hawk and appeared before the Emperor. They blessed him and immediately took him to heaven. (Chapter 131, Vana Parva, M.B.).

10) Agni and the testicles of a goat. The occasion is when sage Viśvāmitra is taking Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa to the forests to give protection to the sages against the demons. They reached the place where Ahalyā lay as a stone cursed by Gautama. Viśvāmitra told them the story: "It was here that the great sage, Gautama, lived with his beautiful consort, Ahalyā. Once Indra had an intercourse with her privately and Gautama coming to know of the misdeed cursed her and turned her into stone. By the curse of the same sage Indra lost his testicles. Greatly aggrieved by this loss Indra prayed to god Agni for help and on the advice of Agni the devas removed the deformity by placing a goat's testicles instead." (Ślokas 48 & 49, Bāla Kāṇḍa, Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa).

11) How sage Bhṛgu cursed Agni. Sage Bhṛgu was living with his wife Pulomā in his āśrama. Pulomā became pregnant. One day when Bhṛgu wanted to go out for a bath in the river he asked Agni to keep a watch over his pregnant wife. There was a demon by name Puloma who was once in love with Pulomā. On this particular day Puloma entered the āśrama to see his former love. When he entered the āśrama Puloma saw Agni there burning with a brilliant flame in the fire-pit. Puloma said : "O God of fire, if I ask you a question you must give me an impartial reply. I was in love with this Pulomā and I had accepted her as my wife spiritually. But, then, her father gave her to Bhṛgu. Who, then, is the true owner of Pulomā ?" Agni was afraid of Bhṛgu. Yet he explained the position honestly. "It is true that Pulomā has married Bhṛgu. But he has not married her according to Hindu rites." Hearing this the demon changed himself into the shape of a swine and carried away Pulomā. On the way Pulomā delivered a male babe and it fell on the ground. The boy was named Cyavana. It was this boy that became later on the famous Cyavana Maharṣi. Even at birth the boy was brilliant as the Sun to look at and Puloma, the demon, noticing the unusual brilliance of the child left the mother and child on the way and fled frightened. Pulomā returned to the āśrama carrying the child weeping profusely all the way and creating a lanchrymal river called Vadhūsaras. As soon as she entered the āśrama the angry sage asked "Who told Puloma that you are my wife ?" Pulomā then told her husband all that happened there and Bhṛgu called Agni and cursed him thus : "May you be a consumer of all things on this Earth". Greatly aggrieved Agni went away and hid himself. The absence of Agni created chaos in all the three worlds; Heaven, Earth and the Nether-world. A deputation of all the afflicted people waited upon Brahmā and Brahmā modified the curse and declared that all that Agni touched would become pure. Agni was consoled and he started his work as usual.

12) How Agni cursed frogs, birds and elephants. Many important events took place while Agni was underground cursed by Bhṛgu. It was during that time that Pārvatī cursed all the Devas and the Devas were defeated by the asuras (demons). The necessity of a warrior capable of defeating the asuras arose then. The idea of creating Lord Subrahmaṇya came up and Brahmā said that only Agni could help them in this matter since Agni was the only one who escaped from the curse of Pārvatī, being underground at the time of the curse. The Devas started a vigilant search but Agni was not to be found. Agni was then hiding inside the ocean. The ocean was getting hot and the animals living there found their life unbearable. Frogs went to the devas and told them where Agni was hiding. Enraged at this Agni cursed the frogs saying that they would never be able to find the taste of anything. Frogs went weeping to the devas who in turn blessed the frogs saying that they would acquire the ability to move about easily in any darkness. Agni changed his place of hiding and went and hid in a big banyan tree. An elephant going by that way found him out and informed the devas; knowing this Agni cursed the elephants saying that its tongue would go deep inside. But the devas blessed the elephants saying that the position of the tongue would never be a hindrance to free eating and that elephants would be able to eat anything and everything. Agni left the banyan tree and hid himself in the hollow of a Śamī tree. A little bird living in that tree gave information to the devas and the devas found him out before he got time to leave the place. Agni cursed the bird saying that its tongue would always be curved inside and the devas blessed it saying that the curvature would help it to sing beautiful songs. Since Agni was found out from Śamī tree this tree became sacred. Since this finding out of Agni after a long absence is like a re-birth of Agni the Purāṇas mention that Agni was born from the Śamī tree. The Devas then requested Agni to help them to create a son capable of conquering the demons.* (Chapter 85, Anuśāsana Parva, M.B.).

13) Birth of Subrahmaṇya. At that time Varuṇa performed a yāga. All the dikpālakas (zone guardians of the universe) including Śiva participated in the yāga. Seeing the beautiful wives of the sages Śiva had emission. Taking the semen in his hand he put it into the fire. Agni carried it to Gaṅgā and requested her to take it for conception. Though she at first refused she took it, became pregnant and finally delivered a male child whom she threw into the forest Śaravaṇa. It was this child who became known as Kārttikeya or Subrahmaṇya later on. (Chapter 85, Anuśāsana Parva, M.B.).

14) How Agni blessed Nala. While Nala was going to the wedding of Damayantī Indra, Agni, Varuṇa and Kāla accosted him on his way and asked him to go as a messenger of theirs and advise Damayantī to marry one of them. Nala did so but Damayantī was adamant and said she would marry none other than Nala. So all the four gods appeared as Nala in the wedding hall. Damayantī who was confused prayed that she should be shown the real Nala. The gods then changed into their original forms and blessed Nala. Agni said he would come and help him the moment he wanted him. Thus Nala became a good cook and Nala Pācakaṁ (Pācakaṁ = cooking) became famous. Even now it is a synonym for good cooking. (Chapter 57, Vana Parva, M.B)

*Kathāsaritsāgara gives another version of why Agni went and hid himself under the ocean. When Kāma, the God of Love, was burnt to death by Śiva, Pārvatī, Śivā's wife, did not find a way to get a child for her from her husband. At last Brahmā approached Śiva and told him that the absence of Kāma was making creation difficult. Śiva then declared that thereafter Kāma would find a place in the minds of all living beings including himself. Pārvatī and Śiva immediately commenced a sexual life which went on incessantly for a hundred years without reaching the climax. The world was agitated and the universe stood on the verge of ruin. The Devas decided to send Agni to intervene But Agni was afraid of Śiva and so went and hid himself under the ocean. (Chapter 6, Lāvāṇakalambaka of Kathāsaritsāgara).

15) Agni and Raṁbhā. There was once a dānava called Danu. He had two sons named Raṁbha and Karaṁbha. They had no children and tormented by this they went to Pañcanada and started doing penance. Raṁbha sat in the centre of Pañcāgni (five fires) and Karaṁbha in water to do penance. Indra afraid of the severe and powerful tapas of the two took the form of a crocodile and killed Karaṁbha who was doing penance in water by dragging him down to the water. Bereaved Raṁbha started to commit suicide by jumping into the fire. God Agni appeared before him then and asked him what he wanted. Raṁbha then said that he should get a son who would be famous as a warrior in all the three worlds. Agni agreed. Raṁbha on his way back saw a voluptuous she-buffalo and married her at yakṣa kavāṭa. They lived a happy married life and one day a he-buffalo envious of their life attacked Raṁbha and killed him. Grief-stricken Raṁbha's wife jumped into the funeral pyre and committed suicide. Then from the fire arose a demon named Mahiṣāsura (Mahiṣa = Buffalo. Asura = Demon). This buffalo-demon became a terror to all in the three worlds later on. (Chapter 5, Devī Bhāgavata).

16) Difference of opinion between Agni and Aṅgiras. Bhagavān Aṅgiras did penance in his own āśrama and became more brilliant than Agni. The whole world was submerged in his brilliance. Agni felt a bit depressed at this. Agni argued that it was not proper on the part of Brahmā to give anybody else more brilliance than himself. So as a protest against this Agni disappeared from the world. Even Aṅgiras was annoyed at Agni's disappearance and so he went and consoled Agni and took him to Brahmā. Brahmā declared that henceforth the world would recognize Agni as the father and Aṅgiras as his son. Thus Agni got the first place in effulgence. This is a story told by sage Mārkaṇḍeya to Dharmaputra. (Chapter 217, Vana Parva, M.B.).

17) Agni and Mahābali. On their way to the forest sage Viśvāmitra took Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa to Siddhāśrama. The sage explained to the princes the importance of that āśrama. He said: "Mahāviṣṇu lived in this āśrama for a number of years. It was at that time that the Emperor of the asuras (demons), Mahabali, son of Virocana, was ruling the world conquering even the devas. After having conquered all the three worlds Mahābali decided to conduct a yāga. A deputation of the Devas headed by Agni then waited upon Mahāviṣṇu and Agni said: "O Lord, Mahābali has commenced a yāga and before it is finished you should go to him and do something for the benefit of the devas". It was at this request of Agni that Mahāviṣṇu took the form of Vāmana and sent Mahābali to the nether-world. (Chapter 29, Bālakāṇḍa, Vālmiki Rāmāyaṇa).

18) Agni and Nahuṣa. Repenting for his act of killing Vṛtra Indra unknown to anybody went and hid in a lotus in the Mānasa Saras (Lake Mānasa). Perplexed by the disappearance of their leader the devas brought Nahuṣa from the Earth and made him their leader. Nahuṣa became very proud and arrogant of his new position and tried to make Indrāṇī his wife. Indrāṇī went to Bṛhaspati for help. Bṛhaspati commanded Agni to go and find out Indra. Agni searched for him in forests, rivers and oceans. At last he went to Mānasa Saras and searched among the lotuses. There he found Indra hiding in a lotus and Bṛhaspati was duly informed. Then Bṛhaspati gave Indrāṇī some clever directions to kill Nahuṣa and Nahuṣa was killed. (See Agastya). There is a story in Śānti Parva, Chapter 28, of how Agni took for himself a quarter of the sin which Indra acquired because of his killing Vṛtra, a brahmin by birth. (Chapter 14, Udyoga Parva, M.B.).

19) Agni Deva and Kārttavīryārjuna. After the great Kurukṣetra battle the Pāṇḍavas went again to Kurukṣetra along with Śrī Kṛṣṇa. On their way Kṛṣṇa showed them the Paraśurāmahradas and narrated to them several stories of Rāma. Reference to Agni comes when Kṛṣṇa explains the reason why Paraśurāma cut off the thousand hands of Kārttavīryārjuna. It was at the time when Kārttavīryārjuna was ruling the three worlds by his might that Agni went and asked for alms from him. Kārttavīrya gave Agni mountains and forests for his food which Agni burnt and ate. In one of the forests was the āśrama of sage Āpava and that also was burnt. Enraged at this the sage cursed Kārttavīrya saying that his thousand hands would be cut off by Paraśurāma. Though the curse was not seriously minded by the King then, it so happened that before long Kārttavīrya had to encounter Paraśurāma in a battle when the children of the King stole a sacrificial cow belonging to Jamadagni, father of Paraśurāma. In the battle all the thousand hands of Kārttavīryārjuna were cut off by Paraśurāma. (Chapter 43, Śānti Parva, M.B.).

20) How Agni was duped. Once the wives of the Saptaṛṣis (seven Saints) attended a yāga where Agni was also present. Agni fell in love with them but knowing it to be futile to make any attempt to fulfil his desire he went to the forests dejected. Svāhādevī, daughter of Dakṣa was for a long time craving to marry Agni and she decided to take advantage of the opportunity thus offered. Disguising herself as the wife of Aṅgiras, one of the seven saints, she approached Agni and said : "O Lord, I am Śivā, wife of Aṅgiras. We were all excited when you darted cupids' arrows against us and they have now selected me to come to you for fulfilling your desire". Agni believed her and took her as his consort. (Chapters 223 to 227 of Vana Parva, M.B.).

21) How Agni became a doctor. There was once a sage called Dattātreya who had a son called Nimi. Nimi had a son and he died after thousand years. The bereaved sage performed a Śrāddha which was attended by all devas. The feast was so sumptuous that the devas got indigestion after that. Consulting Brahmā Agni prescribed a remedy for their indigestion. He said: "whenever you take any food make me also a participant in that. If you do so you will never get indigestion". That is why a very small portion of any cooked food is first thrown into the fire before given for eating. This story is part of Bhīṣma's oration to Dharmaputra on the origin of Śrāddha (The ceremony conducted on the anniversary of the death of a person by his son). (Chapter 92, Anuśāsana Parva, M.B.).

22) How Agni became a horse. There was once a preceptor named Āveda. He got a disciple named Uttaṅga. One day Āveda left his āśrama for a distant place leaving his disciple in charge of the management of the āśrama. The preceptor was absent for a long time and his wife started making love to Uttaṅga. The dutiful disciple strongly objected to this. When Uttaṅga completed his course of study under Āveda he enquired what he should give to his preceptor. The preceptor directed him to his wife. The wife who bore a grudge against Uttaṅga resolved to tease him and said that he should go to King Pauṣya and beg of him the earrings worn by his wife. Uttaṅga started immediately and getting the earrings was coming back when on the way Takṣaka wrested the ornament from him and went and hid in the nether-world. Uttaṅga followed Takṣaka and there Agni in the form of a horse appeared before him and asked Uttaṅga what he wanted. He replied that he wanted to subdue all the serpents in the nether-world. Agni then advised him to blow thro' the nostrils of the horse. As he did so flames burst forth from all the openings of the horse making the nether-world hot and smoky. Takṣaka was frightened and he at once gave back the earrings to Uttaṅga. Uttaṅga was again worried for he had very little time to carry the earrings to the preceptor in time. Here again Agni helped him by carrying him swiftly on his back to the āśrama. When the preceptor and his wife found that Uttaṅga had carried out their wish they blessed him. (Chapter 3, Ādi Parva, M.B.).

23) Agni becomes a messenger. Once there arose a misunderstanding between Bṛhaspati and Saṁvarttaka, sons of Aṅgiras. Bṛhaspati went to devaloka as priest while the other remained in the world as a mad saint. At that time a King called Marutta invited Bṛhaspati to officiate as priest for a yajña of his. But Bṛhaspati refused to accept it. Nārada saw Marutta in despair and told him thus: "You go to Kāśī (Benares) and there at Puradvāra place a dead body and wait there. Saṁvarttaka, Bṛhaspati's brother will come and reprimand you. Without minding his scoldings follow him and request him to become the chief priest for your yāga. He will then ask you who advised you to do like this. Tell him that Nārada did so and if he asks where he could find Nārada do tell him that Nārada is hiding inside Agni". Hearing this Marutta went to Kāśī and did all as directed. Saṁvartta agreed to become the priest but wanted Marutta to bring some gold from Kailāsa before that. Marutta brought that also and the yajña started. Bṛhaspati when he came to know of all these developments became sorry for his refusal first and decided to become the priest of Marutta for his yāga. It was Agni who carried this message of consent to King Marutta. Thus Marutta's yajña was performed in a grand way. (Chapter 9, Aśvamedha Parva, M.B.).

24) Agni takes back the Gāṇḍīva. At the time of Khāṇḍava dahana (burning of Khāṇḍava forest) Agni gave Arjuna the famous Gāṇḍīva bow which Varuṇa had given him. After the great Mahābhārata battle Agni took back this bow from Arjuna. The Pāṇḍavas at the fag end of their life started on a pilgrimage to the south with their consort Pāñcālī. Marching along slowly they reached the shores of Aruṇa Samudra (Aruṇa Ocean). Arjuna had with him then the Gāṇḍīva and also the arrow-case which never becomes empty. When they reached the shores of the ocean Agni blocked their way standing before them in the form of a huge mountain and said, "O Arjuna I am god Agni. It was I who gave this famous Gāṇḍīva bow to you. The bow belongs to Varuṇa. So please throw it into the ocean and proceed on your way". On hearing this Arjuna threw both the bow and the arrow-case into the ocean and continued the march. (Ślokas 33 to 43, Chapter 1, Mahāprasthānika Parva, M.B.).

25) Additional information about Agni, the God of fire.

1) Svāhādevī, wife of Agni, gave birth to three sons, named Dākṣiṇaṁ, Gārhapatyam and Āhavanīyam. (Chapter 9, Devī Bhāgavata).

2) Agni, the God of fire, got three sons by his wife Svāhādevī named Pāvaka, Pavamāna and Śuci. These three sons had all together fortyfive sons. These fortyfive grandsons, three sons and Agni himself constitute the fortynine Fires mentioned in the purāṇas (Aṅgirasaṁ).

3) Nīla, the monkey, is born of Agni. (Sarga 41, Chapter Kiṣkindhā, Rāmāyaṇa).

4) Dhṛṣṭadyumna, the great archer, was born of Agni. (Śloka 126, Chapter 67, Ādi Parva, M.B.).

5) Subrahmaṇya was born as the son of Agni. (Chapter 225, Vana Parva, M.B.).

6) Agni, the God of fire, loved all prajāpatis like his sons. (Chapter 85, Anuśāsana Parva, M.B.).

7) The sage, Bhṛgu, was born from Agni. (Śloka 8, Chapter 5, Ādi Parva, M.B.).

8) All Devatās are Agni himself. (Śloka 109, Chapter 85, Anuśāsana Parva, M.B.).

9) God Agni loved God Skanda more than anybody else. (Chapter 226, Vana Parva, M.B.).

10) At the time when Śrī Rāma after killing Rāvaṇa was putting Sītā to a purity test by throwing her into the fire, Agni witnessed that Sītā had done no wrong and was pure and chaste as before. (Śloka 28, Chapter 201, Vana Parva, M.B.).

11) In the beginning Brahmā created the universe. There was no death then and the Earth became overcrowded. Brahmā got worried and he sent fire from his body to burn all beings. The world was on the verge of extinction when Lord Śiva intervened and requested Brahmā to withdraw Agni and create the god of Death. (Chapter 52, Droṇa Parva. M.B.).

12) Agni is one of the Aṣṭa Vasūs which are eight in number. The others are : Āpa, Dhruva, Soma, Dharma, Anila, Pratyuṣa and Prabhāsa. (Chapter 15, Viṣṇu Purāṇa).

13) Śuci, son of Agni, born of Svāhādevī is Baḍavāgni himself. (Chapter 20, Agni Purāṇa).

14) The God, Agni, uses a spear as his weapon and the vehicle he uses is a goat. (Chapter 51, Agni Purāṇa).

15) The sage, Agastya, converted the Viṣṇu idol at the Kuttālam temple into one of Śiva and when people around started an agitation Agastya sent forth flames of fire through his eyes. (Asura Kāṇḍa of Skānda Purāṇa).

16) Agni was born to Purūravas as a son named Jātavedas. (Chapter 14, Navama Skandha of Bhāgavata).

17) The Devas wanted help to clean their hands when oblated materials stuck to their hands and Agni created from water three sons named Ekata, Dvita and Trita for this purpose. Of these Trita fell into a well while drawing water. Seeing him fall the demons closed the well but Trita broke the top and came out. (Sūkta 52, Anuvāka 10, Maṇḍala 1 of Ṛgveda).
18) Once the earth looked like heaven because of the innumerable celestial beings who came to earth in search of Agni. (Sūkta 65, Anuvāka 12, Maṇḍala 1 of Ṛgveda).
19) The Sun hands over his effulgence to Agni in the evening and takes it back from him in the morning. (A fact from Śruti—Sūkta 71, Anuvāka 12, Maṇḍala 1 of Ṛgveda).
20) For making fire for the sacrificial ceremony the sages use two Araṇi sticks (These are two pieces of wood, one upper and another lower, and fire is produced by attrition). It is believed that the sages get the strength to produce fire from it through Vyāna, one of the forms of Vāyu (air). So Ṛgveda describes Agni as the son of Vāyu. (Sūkta 112, Anuvāka 16, Maṇḍala 1).
21) In the times of the Ṛgveda Agni was worshipped as a God. (Sūkta 1, Anuvāka 1, Maṇḍala 1, Ṛgveda).
22) Lord Śiva entered into an elaborate and long conjugal play for creating Subrahmaṇya. Hundred years went by and still the preliminaries never ended. The universe was on the verge of a collapse and so the devas decided to send Agni to put a stop to this libidinal play of Śiva. But Agni was afraid of Śiva and therefore absconded and hid himself in the ocean. The ocean became hot and the water-animals unable to bear the increasing heat went and informed the devas of Agni's hiding place. Agni cursed them all saying that all of them would go dumb. He then went to the Mandara mountain in the shape of an owl and hid there. But the devas went there also and picked him up. Agni then by his terrible heat stimulated Śiva into action. Śiva threw his semen into Agni and Agni poured it into Gaṅgā and Gaṅgā delivered a child which later on became Subrahmaṇya. (Taraṅga 6, Lāvāṇakalambaka of Kathāsaritsāgara).
26) Conclusion. Agni stands next to Indra in importance in the Vedas. Because Agni was indispensable for yāgas the care of Agni became very important. According to the Ṛgveda the birth of Agni is different. Born of the clouds Agni reaches the earth as lightning. Then Agni forsakes its form and becomes invisible. It was Mātariśvā who gave form to Agni and gave him to the Bhṛgu family. From that day onwards it became possible to produce fire and the Ṛgveda describes how Agni is produced by sages by the use of Araṇi sticks. The main job of Agni is to receive the oblations from devas when they conduct yāgas.

AGNIBĀHU. A son of the first Manu.

AGNIDATTA. See under the word Devadatta.

AGNIDATTA. (See under GUṆAŚARMĀ).

AGNIDHĀRA TIRTHA. This is the name of a sacred place near Gautamavana. (See Śloka 146, Chapter 84, Vana Parva, M.B.).

AGNĪDHRA (AGNĪDDHRA).
1. Genealogy. Descended from Viṣṇu thus : Viṣṇu-Brahmā-Marīci-Kaśyapa - Vivasvān - Vaivasvatamanu-Priyavrata-Agnīdhra.
2. Birth. Priyavrata, son of Vaivasvatamanu, married Barhiṣmatī, daughter of Viśvakarmā. Agnīdhra was one of their ten sons. The other nine sons were : Idhmajihvā, Yajñabāhu, Mahāvīra, Hiraṇyaretas, Ghṛtapṛṣṭha, Sava, Medhātithi, Vītihotra and Kavi. A daughter also was born to Priyavrata and Barhiṣmatī named Ūrjjasvatī. Śukra married her and Devayānī was their daughter.
3) Married life. Agnīdhra married a nymph named Pūrvacitti. They had nine children : Nābhi, Kiṁpurusa, Hari, Ilāvrata, Ramyaka, Hirañcaya, Kuru, Bhadrāśva, and Ketumāla. It was from this Kuru that the Kuru Vaṁśa began.
4) Other incidents. (1) Agnīdhra ruled over Jambudvīpa for a long time. (Devī Bhāgavata, Skandha 8).
(2) While he was the ruler of Jambudvīpa Agnīdhra once went into a cave and did hard tapas there without eating any food. Brahmā then sent a beautiful nymph (Apsarā maiden) to him to tempt him and thwart his tapas. Agnīdhra fell a victim to the temptation. His penance was shaken by that nymph named Vipracitti. He married her. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 5, Chapter 2).

AGNIHOTRA (M). This is a sacrifice offered to Agnideva. This has two parts, nitya and Kāmya.

AGNIKETU. A demon (Rākṣasa) who was a close friend and supporter of Rāvaṇa. Rāma killed him in the course of his battle with Rāvaṇa.

AGNIKUMĀRA. An epithet of Lord Subrahmaṇya.

AGNILOKA. One of the devalokas situated on the summit of Mount Mahāmeru. There are a few other devalokas on the same mountain. They are: Indraloka, Yamaloka, Śivaloka or Kailāsa, Satyaloka and Vaikuṇṭha. (Devī Bhāgavata).

AGNIMĀN. Name of one Agni.

AGNIMITRA. The hero of Kālidāsa's play, Mālavikāgnimitra. He was a King of the Śuṅga dynasty and the son of Puṣyamitra. Kālidāsa's play deals with the marriage of Mālavikā and Agnimitra.

AGNIMUKHA. An Asura.

1. Genealogy. He was descended from Viṣṇu in this order: Viṣṇu - Brahmā - Marīci - Kaśyapa - Sūrapadma - Agnimukha.

2. Birth. Sūrapadma married Maya's daughter and Agnimukha was born as their son. In the battle between the devas and asuras, the latter were defeated and one of them sought shelter in Pātāla (the lower world). Kaśyapa married his daughter, Surasā. They had six children; they were: Śūrapadma, Siṁhika, Siṁhavaktra, Tārakāsura, Gomukha, and Ajāmukhī. Sūrapadma married Maya's daughter. Agnimukha was one of their four sons, the other three being Bhānugopa, Vajrabāhu and Hiraṇya. (Skanda Purāṇa, Āsurakāṇḍa). In the Skanda Purāṇa there is a vivid description of the valiant way in which Agnimukha fought in the battle between the devas and asuras.

AGNIPA. Son of a Brahmin named Vedanidhi. Once five gandharva maidens named Pramodinī, Suśīlā, Susvarā, Sutārā and Candrikā fell in love with him and requested him to marry them. Being a strict Brahmacārin Agnipa was offended by this request and so he cursed them and turned them into fiends. Vedanidhi pitied them and sought the advice of sage Lomaśa as to how those unfortunate maidens could be redeemed from the curse. According to Lomaśa's advice the five maidens bathed in the holy lake of Prayāgatīrtha and regained their original forms. Then obeying the instructions of sage Lomaśa Agnipa married all these five gandharva maidens. (Chapters 128 and 129, Uttarakhaṇḍa, Padma Purāṇa).

AGNIPRAVEŚA(M). Entering fire. In the Yuddha-Kāṇḍa of the Rāmāyaṇa, Vālmīki has described Sītā's entering and standing in fire (Agnipraveśam) as a test of her purity. Though Rāma recovered Sītā from Rāvaṇa, he wanted to accept her as his wife only after her purity had been tested and proved. So he decided to test her by fire (Agniparīkṣaṇa). Sītā shed tears at the thought that her husband doubted her chastity. Lakṣmaṇa, at Rāma's bidding, made a pyre. Sītā jumped into it after praying to the gods. She remained unscorched by the fire and Rāma gladly received her once more as his wife.

AGNIPURA(M). A sacred place (Puṇya tīrtha) in Indore on the banks of the river Narmadā. Many scholars identify this with the place Maheśvaram. (Śloka 43, Chapter 15, Anuśāsana Parva, M.B.).

AGNIPURĀṆA(M).

1) General information. This is one of the eighteen Purāṇas ascribed to Vyāsa. It is believed that this Purāṇa was originally given orally (as advice) by Agnideva to many sages, devas and Sage Vasiṣṭha. It is a vast comprehensive work dealing with every subject of importance. To give a copy of this book to a good Brahmin on the Full Moon day in the month of Mārga Śīrṣa is supposed to be a highly virtuous and meritorious deed.

2) Contents. This large Purāṇa consists of about 420 chapters. It deals in detail with the following subjects: The Daśāvatāras of Mahāviṣṇu; Rāmāyaṇa; Mahābhārata; rules and injunctions relating to the worship of various gods (devapūjāvidhis); installation of idols in temples (devatāpratiṣṭhā); Svapnamantras; astrology; architecture and sculpture; Āyurveda; Viṣavaidya (treatment of poisons from Snakebite etc.); the principles of the drama (Nāṭaka) and other allied arts; figures of speech and all alaṅkāras in general; and physiology of the human body. All these subjects are treated in a detailed and scientific manner.

AGNIPŪRṆA. A King of the Solar dynasty (Sūryavaṁśa).

1) Genealogy. Agnipūrṇa was descended from Viṣṇu in the following order: Brahmā - Marīci - Kaśyapa-Vivasvān - Vaivasvatamanu - Ikṣvāku-Vikukṣi - Śaśāda-Purañjaya-Kakutstha-Anenas - Pṛthulāśvan-Prasenajit-Yuvanāśvan - Māndhātā - Purukutsa - Trasadasyu-Anaraṇya - Aryaśvā-Vasumanas-Sutanvā-Traiyyāruṇa-Satyavrata - Triśaṅku-Hariścandra - Rohitāśva-Harita-Cuñcu - Sudeva-Bharuka-Bāhuka - Sagara - Asamañjas-Aṁśumān-Dilīpa - Bhagīratha-Śrutanāda-Sindhudvīpa-Ayutāyus-Ṛtuparṇa - Sarvakāma - Sudāsana - Mitrasakha-Kalmāṣapāda - Aśmaka - Mūlaka-Khaṭvāṅga-Dīrghabāhu-Raghu-Aja - Daśaratha - Śrī Rāma-Kuśa-Aditi-Niṣadha-Nabhas-Puṇḍarīka-Kṣemadhanvā -Devānīka - Ṛkṣa - Pāriyātra - Bala-Vindorala - Vajranābha-Khagaṇa - Vidhṛti - Hiraṇyanābha - Puṣya- Dhruva - Sudarśana - Agnipūrṇa. Agnipūrṇa had two descendants—Sīghra and Maru and with them the Sūryavaṁśa came to an end.

AGNISAMBHAVA. A King of the Solar dynasty.

Genealogy. Viṣṇu-Brahmā-Marīci-Kaśyapa-Vivasvān - Vaivasvatamanu - Ikṣvāku - Nimi-Janaka - Nandivārdhana-Suketu-Devarāta-Bṛhaddhṛta - Mahāvīra-Dhṛti-Ketu-Haryaśvā-Maru-Pratisvaka - Kraturatha - Devamīḍha-Vidhṛta-Mahādhṛti-Kṛtirāta-Mahāromā-Svarṇaromaprastharoma - Sīradhvaja - Kurudhvaja - Dharmadhvaja - Kṛtadhvaja - Bhānumān - Śakradyumna-Śuci-Vanadhvaja - Ūrjjaketu - Aja - Kurujit - Ariṣṭanemi-Kṛtāyus-Supārśvaka-Citraratha-Kṣemāpi - Homaratha-Satyaratha-Gurunandana-Upagupta-Agnisaṁbhava.

There are no other references to this King of the Solar dynasty in the Purāṇas.

AGNIŚARMĀ. (See the word VIDYUDDYOTA).

AGNIŚIKHA. Father of Vararuci. He is also known by the name Somadatta. (Kathāsaritsāgara-Kathāpīṭhalambaka-Taraṅga 1. See also the word GUṆAVARA).

AGNIŚIRATĪRTHA. A holy place on the plains of the river, Yamunā. Arjuna's brother, Sahadeva, performed a yāga at this place. (M.B., Vana Parva, Chapter 90).

AGNIṢOMA. A deity born of the union of two devas, Agnideva and Somadeva. He is one of the devas who receive the havis (oblations) poured into the sacrificial fire in a homa.

AGNIṢOMA(S). Agni and Soma. Agni had two sons by his third wife Bhānu (also called Niśā). They were Agni and Soma. These two sons were collectively called Agnisomas.

AGNIŚAUCA(M). A cloak with magical properties given to Nala by the serpent, Kārkoṭaka. After separating himself from Damayantī, Nala was wandering in the forest. Then he was bitten by the poisonous serpent, Kārkoṭaka. This deformed Nala beyond recognition. Then the serpent gave him this shawl (Agniśauca). Anybody who wore that cloak would regain his original form and colour. (Kathāsaritsāgara-Alaṅkāravatī-lambaka-Taraṅga 6).

AGNISTHALĪ. (See the word PURŪRAVAS).

AGNISTHAMBHA(M) A mantra that will reduce the burning power of Agni.

AGNIṢṬOMA. (See AGNIṢṬU).

AGNIṢṬU. (AGNIṢṬOMA).

1) Genealogy. Descended from Viṣṇu in this order:—Viṣṇu-Svāyambhuvamanu - Uttānapāda-Dhruva-Sṛṣṭi-Ripu-Cākṣuṣamanu-Agniṣṭu.

2) Birth. Ten good sons were born to Manu by his wife, Nadvalā and Agniṣṭu was one of them. The other nine sons were: Ūru, Pūru, Śatadyumna, Tapasvī, Satyavāk, Kavi, Atirātra, Sudyumna and Atimanyu. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 18).

AGNIṢVĀTTA. One of the seven Pitṛs. The other six Pitṛs are : Vairāja, Gārhapatya, Somapa, Ekaśṛṅga, Caturveda and Kāla. (M.B., Sabhā Parva, Chapter 11, Verses 44, 45 and 46).

AGNIVEŚA. A Sage. He was the preceptor of Droṇa and Drupada. It is believed that he learned archery and the military arts from Sage Agastya. Droṇa had the greatest respect for this guru, Agniveśa. He was a master in the use of all weapons. There are references to this in Chapter 139, Ādi Parva of the Mahābhārata.

AGRAHA. The name of an Agni, a son of the Agni named Bhānu. Bhānu married Suprajā, daughter of the sun and Agraha was one of the six children born to them. In the Cāturmāsikayajña Agraha receives eight kinds of havis (Oblations). (M.B., Vana Parva, Chapter 221).

AGRAṆI. The name of an Agni. He was the fifth son of the Agni named Bhānu and his wife, Niśādevī. (M.B., Vana Parva, Chapter 221, Ślokas 15 to 22).

AGRASANDHANĪ. The name of the book which Yama (the God of Death—Kāla) keeps in which all the virtuous and sinful actions of men are recorded.

AGRAYAṆĪ. One of the hundred sons of Dhṛtarāṣṭra. He is also known by the name, Anuyāyī. (M.B., Ādi Parva, Chapter 116, Verse 11).

AHA I. One of the aṣṭavasus. His father was Dharma and mother, Ratidevī. (M.B., Ādi Parva, Ślokas 17 to 20, Chapter 66).

AHA II (AHAH). A sacred pond. If one bathes in it he will go to the land of the Sun. (M.B., Vana Parva, Śloka 100, Chapter 83).

AHA III. One born of the dynasty of demons (asuravaṁśa). (See under Heti, the genealogy chart of the demon dynasty).

AHARA. A son born of Danu to Kaśyapa. (M.B., Ādi Parva, Śloka 25, Chapter 65).

AHALYĀ. Turned into stone by the curse of her husband, Gautama. Ahalyā was a princess of the Pūru dynasty.

1) Genealogy. Descended in order from Viṣṇu as follows: Brahmā-Atri-Candra-Budha - Purūravas-Āyus-Nahuṣa-Yayāti-Pūru-Janamejaya - Prācinvā - Pravīra-Namasyu-Vītabhaya - Śuṇḍu - Bahuvidha - Saṁyāti - Rahovādi-Raudrāśva-Matināra-Santurodha - Duṣyanta - Bharata-Bṛhatkṣetra-Hasti-Ajamīḍha-Nīla-Śānti-Suśānti-Puruja-Arka-Bharmyaśva-Pāñcāla-Mudgala-Ahalyā.

2) How Ahalyā got a curse and became a stone. The story of how Ahalyā was cursed by her husband, Gautama, and was turned into a stone is told in different versions in different purāṇas. The following is the version in the Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa. When Viśvāmitra was taking back Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa from the forest to the palace of Janaka they came across an āśrama on their way. Giving details about that āśrama Viśvāmitra told the princes thus : "This is the āśrama where the sage, Gautama, was living with his wife, Ahalyā. Indra fell in love with the beautiful Ahalyā and while the sage was out for bathing Indra entered the āśrama in the disguise of the sage himself and took bed with her. But before Indra could get out Gautama himself came to the āśrama and enraged at what he saw, cursed them both. Indra was to lose his testicles and Ahalyā was to turn into a stone. But taking pity on her the sage declared that she would take her original form the moment Rāma of tretā yuga came to that place and touched the stone by his foot. Testicleless Indra went to devaloka and there his friends feeling sorry for him, substituted a goat's testicle and got him to normal." While Viśvāmitra was talking to the princes, Śrī Rāma's foot touched the stone and Ahalyā stood up in all beauty. Ahalyā and Gautama lived in the same āśrama again for another long period.

In Kathāsaritsāgara this story is told in a slightly different yet more interesting way. As soon as Gautama entered the āśrama Indra turned himself into a cat. Angrily the sage questioned Ahalyā, "who was standing here when I came in ?" Ahalyā replied, "Eso thiyo khu majjara" (Eṣaḥ sthitaḥ khalu mārjjāraḥ). It was a cat which was standing there. Here Ahalyā used a pun on the word 'majjara' and tried to be honest. 'Majjara' is the Prakrit form of the word 'mārjjāraḥ' which means cat. But 'majjara' has another meaning also. (ma = mine jāra = lover i.e. majjāra = my lover). So Ahalyā did not lie to her husband. (Kathāsaritsāgara, Lāvāṇakalambaka).

3) How Ahalyā happened to bring up the mighty monkeys, Bāli and Sugrīva. Once Aruṇa, the charioteer of Sūrya (the Sun) went to devaloka to see the dance of the celestial maidens there. Since there was no admission to the dance for men Aruṇa disguised himself as Āruṇidevī and sought admission; seeing the beautiful form of Āruṇidevī Indra fell in love with her and that night a child was born to Indra by her. On the advice of Indra Āruṇidevī took the child to Ahalyā before daybreak and left it there to be looked after by her. It was this child which later on became the famous Bāli.

Aruṇa went a bit late that morning to his master, the Sun. The latter wanted an explanation and Aruṇa told him what had happened. The Sun then asked Aruṇa to become Āruṇidevī again and seeing the enchanting figure the Sun also got a child of her. This child also was taken to Ahalyā and it was this child that later on became the famous Sugrīva.

AHALYĀHRADA(M). A sacred pond in the tapovana

(precincts of an āśrama) of Gautama Ṛṣi. It is believed that one would go to heaven if one bathes in it.

AHARA. A son born of Danu to Kaśyapa. (M.B., Ādi Parva, Śloka 25, Chapter 65).

AHICCHATRA. This was the capital of the state Ahicchatra which Droṇa got from Drupada, the King of Pāñcāla.

AHICCHATRA (M). A state under the sovereignty of King Pāñcāla. On the completion of his studies under Droṇa Arjuna brought before his preceptor King Drupada as a captive in discharge of the duty he owed to him as his master. Drupada then gave the state of Ahicchatra to Droṇa and got his release. (M.B., Ādi Parva, Ślokas 73 to 76, Chapter 137).

AHIMSĀ. Non-injury. There are opinions both in favour of and against Ahiṁsā in the purāṇas. Śukrācārya extols the importance of Ahiṁsā to the asuras (demons) thus :

Bho ! Devaripavaḥ satyaṁ
Bravīmi bhavatāṁ hitam
Ahiṁsā paramo dharmo
Hantavyā hyātatāyinaḥ
Dvijairbhogaratairvede
Darśitaṁ hiṁsanam paśoḥ
Jihvāsvādaparaiḥ Kāma—
Mahiṁsaiva parā matā.

"Oh, foes of the devas, I shall tell you the truth which is good for you. Non-injury to any living being is the most righteous thing. Do not molest even those who come to kill you. Even that act would be 'hiṁsā' (injury). It was those brahmins who were attached to worldly pleasures and addicted to overeating that enjoined in the Vedas that hiṁsā is permissible for yāgas." (Devī Bhāgavata, Skanda 4). Mārkaṇḍeya Muni (sage) says thus : "Why should I mind the innumerable killings going on unnoticed in this world full of life. People of old speak very sacredly about Ahiṁsā. But O best of brahmins, who can live in this world without injury to another life ?" (M.B., Araṇya Parva, Ślokas 32 & 33, Chapter 208).

AHIRATHA. A King of the Pūru dynasty. (See under Pūru vaṁśa).

AHIRBUDHNYA. One of the sons of Viśvakarmā. Five sons and one daughter were born to Viśvakarmā of his wife Surabhī. They were Ajaikapāt, Ahirbudhnya, Tvaṣṭā, Rudra, Barhiṣmatī and Saṁjñā. (See under genealogy of Viśvakarmā).

AHITĀ. A river of ancient Bhārata. (M.B., Bhīṣma Parva, Śloka 21, Chapter 9).

AHORĀTRA (M). (See under Kālamāna).

AHOVĪRA. A sage who adhered strictly to the injunctions associated with the Vānaprastha stage of life. (M.B., Śānti Parva, Śloka 17, Chapter 144).

AI (ऎ). This diphthong means a female sage (yoginī) according to the Agni Purāṇa (Chapter 348 of Agni Purāṇa).

AIKṢVĀKI. Wife of Suhotra who was a son of Emperor, Bhumanyu. Suhotra had three sons by Aikṣvāki. They were Ajamīḍha, Sumīḍha and Purumīḍha. (See Chapter 94 of Ādi Parva of the M.B.).

AILA I. Son of Ilā; Purūravas. (See under Ilā).

AILA II. A member of the court of Yamarāja. (See Śloka 16, Chapter 8, Sabhā Parva, M.B.). In Śloka 65, Chapter 115 of Anuśāsana Parva, it is said that he never ate non-vegetarian food in his life.

AINDAVA. (See paragraph 13 under the word BRAHMĀ).

AIRĀVATA I. A large elephant, son of Irāvatī.

1) Genealogy. Descended from Viṣṇu in this order :— Viṣṇu - Brahmā - Kaśyapa - Bhadramatā-Irāvatī-Airāvata. Kaśyapa married Dakṣa's daughter, Krodhavaśā who bore him ten daughters. They were : Mṛgī, Mṛgamandā, Harī, Bhadramatā, Mātaṅgī, Śārdūlī, Svetā, Surabhī, Sarasā and Kadru. Of these Bhadramatā had a daughter named Irāvatī and Airāvata was her son. Airāvata was not human in shape; he was a large elephant. (See Sarga 14, Araṇyakāṇḍa, Rāmāyaṇa).

2) Indra's Vāhana. Indra made Airāvata his conveyance (vāhana). Indra was Kaśyapa's son by Aditi. Airāvata also was descended from Kaśyapa. So Indra took Airāvata as his vāhana.

3) Airāvata caused the churning of the ocean of Milk. There is a story of how Airāvata was responsible for the churning of the milk-ocean (Kṣirābdhi-mathanam). Once some maidens of devaloka presented a garland of flowers to sage Durvāsas. When Durvāsas visited Indra's court he gave that garland to Indra. Indra put it on the tusks of his vāhana, Airāvata. The fragrance of the flowers attracted a swarm of bees which became an intolerable nuisance to Airāvata. So Airāvata tore the garland off his tusks and hurled it away. When Durvāsas heard this, he took it as an insult. In his anger he cursed all the gods—the curse was that all gods should become subject to old age and the decrepitude and infirmities of old age. But though Durvāsas cursed the gods, he also prescribed a remedy. The gods could redeem themselves from the curse by drinking Amṛtam obtained from the ocean of Milk (Mahāviṣṇu lies on the serpent, Śeṣa on this ocean). The curse began to operate and the gods lost their perennial youth. The gods then befriended the Asuras and with their help they churned the ocean of Milk. They got the nectar (Amṛtam), drank it and regained their youth. (See under the word AMṚTAM).

4) There is another story about Airāvata—A story of how he also rose out of the ocean of Milk. It is said that when the devas and asuras churned the ocean of Milk, Airāvata also came up along with the other good things. This story is narrated in the 18th Chapter of Ādi Parva of the Mahābhārata. The explanation given is that when Durvāsas cursed the gods, Airāvata was oppressed with a sense of guilt because he was responsible for the curse. So he took refuge in the ocean of Milk and there started propitiating Mahāviṣṇu. There is however no warrant for such an explanation in the purāṇas. But the explanation sounds plausible because it explains the absence of Airāvata during the interval between Durvāsas's curse and the churning of the sea. Airāvata is represented as a white elephant. It is probable that he became white after his long residence in the ocean of Milk. This lends some additional plausibility to the above explanation.

5) Airāvata, the Lord of the elephant. In the Viṣṇu Purāṇa we are told how Airāvata was made the chief of all elephants. When the Maharṣis had crowned Pṛthu as the sovereign King, Brahmā gave new posts of honour to many of the devas. He made SOMA (Moon) the lord of the Stars and Planets, of Brahmins, Yajñas and herbs. Kubera was made the overlord of all Kings; Varuṇa was made the master of the seas and all water; Viṣṇu, the lord of the Ādityas and Pāvaka (Fire) the lord of the Vasus. Along with these Brahmā made Airāvata the lord of all elephants. (Chapter 22, Viṣṇu Purāṇa).

6) The breaking of Airāvata's tusks. There is a story of how the tusks of Airāvata were broken narrated in the Āsurakāṇḍa of Skanda Purāṇa. Once an asura (demon) named Śūrapadma attacked devaloka. A fierce battle ensued between the gods and asuras. In the course of this battle, Jayanta, Indra's son, was hit by an arrow and at once he fell dead. Enraged by this Airāvata rushed at Śūrapadma's chariot and shattered it to pieces. Airāvata then attacked Śūrapadma who broke his tusks and hurled him down to the earth. Airāvata lay paralysed for a long time; then he got up, retired to a forest and prayed to Lord Śiva. With the grace of Śiva Airāvata regained his lost tusks and was able to return to devaloka.

7) Other details about Airāvata. (1) There is a belief that Airāvata is one of the eight elephants guarding the eight zones of the universe. These eight elephants are called the Aṣṭadiggajas. Airāvata is supposed to guard the eastern zone. (Chapter 66, Ādi Parva, Mahābhārata).

(2) Airāvata and three other diggajas are supposed to reside in Puṣkara Island. (Chapter 12, Bhīṣma Parva, M.B.).

AIRĀVATA II. Name of a serpent born to Kaśyapa and his wife Kadru. This is mentioned in Śloka 5, Chapter 35, Ādi Parva of the Mahābhārata. Arjuna's father-in-law and Ulūpi's father, Kauravya belonged to the family of this serpent. (See Śloka 18, Chapter 213, Ādi Parva).

AIRĀVATA. An asura who was killed by Śrī Kṛṣṇa. (See Chapter 38, Sabhā Parva, Mahābhārata).

AIRĀVATAGHAṬṬA. Name of a place near the sea-shore, lying to the north of the mountain, Śṛṅgavān. (See Śloka 37, Chapter 6, Bhīṣma Parva).

AIṢĪKAM. Name of a small division of a parva of the Mahābhārata. (See under Mahābhārata).

AITAREYA I. A great scholar with profound knowledge of the Vedas. Being a non-brahmin he was not able to learn the Vedas from a guru. In spite of this handicap he acquired considerable scholarship and wrote a learned commentary on the Ṛgveda. This commentary ranks high among the various commentaries on the Vedas.

AITAREYA II. Son of Sage, Māṇḍuki by his first wife, Itarā. Being the son of Itarā he came to be called Aitareya. As a boy he was very pious and used to chant the mantra "Namo Bhagavate Vāsudevāya" frequently. But he was a shy and silent boy and his father mistook his silence to be a sign of stupidity. Dissatisfied with him and being desirous of having learned sons, Māṇḍuki married another woman named Piṅgā and had four sons by her who all became very learned. Once Itarā called her son and told him that his father regarded him as an unworthy son and was often twitting her using insulting words for having given birth to so unworthy a son. She then told him of her resolve to sacrifice her life. Aitareya then made an enlightening discourse to her and dissuaded her from her determination to commit suicide. Some time later Lord Viṣṇu appeared before them and blessed the mother and son. On the advice of Viṣṇu Aitareya participated in the yajña conducted by Harimedhya at Koṭitīrtha and there he made a learned speech on the Vedas. Harimedhya was so pleased with him that he gave his daughter in marriage to him. (See Skanda Purāṇa, Chapters 1, 2 and 42).

AJA I. A king of the Solar dynasty.

1) Genealogy. From Viṣṇu were descended in order: Brahmā, Marīci-Kaśyapa-Vivasvān - Vaivasvata - Ikṣvāku-Vikukṣi - Saśāda - Purañjaya - Kukutstha -Anenas-Pṛthulāśvā - Prasenajit - Yuvanāśva - Mandhātā - Purukutsa-Trasadasyu - Anaraṇya - Aryaśva - Vasumanas-Sudhanvā - Traiyāruṇa - Satyavrata - Triśaṅku - Hariścandra - Rohitāśva - Harita - Cuñcu - Sudeva - Bharuka-Bāhuka - Sagara - Asamañjas - Aṁśumān - Dilīpa - Bhagīratha - Śrutanābha - Sindhudvīpa - Ayutāyus - Ṛtuparṇa - Sarvakāma - Sudāsana - Mitrasakha - Kalmāṣapāda - Aśmaka - Mūlaka - Dilīpa - Dīrghabāhu - Raghu - Aja - Aja's son Daśaratha-Daśaratha's son, Śrī Rāma.

M.B., Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 115, Verse 75 says that Aja never used to take meat.

AJA II. Among the different kinds of Ṛṣis mentioned by Yudhiṣṭhira, we find a class of Ṛṣis called Ajas. (M.B., Śānti Parva, Chapter 26). These Ajas had attained Heaven by Svādhyāya (self discipline) alone.

AJA III. King Jahnu had a son named Aja. Uśika was the son of this Aja. King Uśika prayed to Indra for a son. Indra himself was born as the son of Uśika assuming the name Gādhi. Satyavatī was born as the daughter of Gādhi. She was married to Ṛcīka. Paraśurāma's father, Jamadagni was the son of Ṛcīka. (M.B., Śānti Parva, Chapter 49).

AJA IV. By the grace of Śiva Surabhī was able to purify herself by penance. She then gave birth to Aja, Ekapāt, Ahirbudhnya, Tvaṣṭā and Rudra. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 18).

AJA V. In the first Manvantara* Svāyambhuva, in the second Manvantara Svārociṣa and in the third Manvantara Uttama, were Manus. To the third Manu, Uttama, were born as sons Aja, Paraśu, Dīpta and others. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Part 3, Chapter 1).

Besides the above, the term Aja has been used to mean Sūrya, Śiva, Brahmā, Viṣṇu, Śrī Kṛṣṇa and Bīja (seed).

AJAGAVA. Ajagava is a bow made of the horns of a goat and a cow. Brahmins tormented the right hand of the King Vena. From it the brilliant Pṛthu who shone brightly like the God Agni, appeared as the son of Vena. At that time the very first Ajagava bow, divine arrows and armours dropped from the sky. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Part I, Chapter 13).

AJAIKAPĀT I. He was one of the eleven Rudras, who were born to Sthāṇudeva, the son of Brahmā. The eleven Rudras are:—

1. Mṛgavyādha	7. Dahana
2. Nirṛti	8. Īśvara
3. Ahirbudhnya	9. Kapāli
4. Pināki	10. Bharga
5. Sarpa	11. Sthāṇu.
6. Ajaikapāt

(M.B., Ādi Parva, Chapter 66, Verse 2).

AJAIKAPĀT II. Among the sons of Viśvakarmā, we find one Ajaikapāt. Brahmā created Viśvakarmā. Viśvakarmā had four sons—Ajaikapāt, Ahirbudhnya,

* One Manvantara is a period equal to 4,320,000 human years or equal to 1/4th day of Brahmā.

 The names of the Eleven Rudras given in the Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Part I, Chapter 5 are: Hara, Bahurūpa, Tryambaka, Aparājita, Vṛṣākapi, Śambhu, Kapardi, Raivata, Mṛgavyādha, Śarva, Kapāli. A total number of 100 Rudras are mentioned in the Purāṇas.

Tvaṣṭā and Rudra. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Part I, Chapter 15). This Ajaikapāt is one of those who are in-charge of preserving all the gold in this world. (M.B., Udyoga Parva, Chapter 114, Verse 4).

AJAKA. An Asura.

Birth. Kaśyapa was born the son of Marīci, son of Brahmā. Kaśyapa married Danu, one of the daughters of Dakṣa and had two sons by her. They were Ajaka and Vṛṣaparvā. (M.B., Ādi Parva, Chapter 65, Verse 24; Chapter 67, Verse 16).

AJAKĀŚVA. A king of the Pūru Vaṁśa. The mighty Jahnu was born to Ajamīḍha by his wife Keśinī. Two sons, Ajakāśva and Balakāśva were born to Jahnu. Kuśika is the son of Balakāśva. Kuśika is the grandfather of Viśvāmitra. For genealogy see Pūru Vaṁśa. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 278).

AJAMĪḌHA I. A famous king of the Pūru Vaṁśa.

1) Genealogy. Descended from Viṣṇu in this order:—Brahmā - Atri - Candra - Budha - Purūravas - Āyus - Nahuṣa - Yayāti - Pūru - Janamejaya - Prācinvā-Manasyu - Vītabhaya - Śuṇḍu - Bahuvidha - Saṁyāti - Rahovādi - Bhadrāśva - Matināra - Santurodha - Duṣyanta - Bharata-Bṛhatkṣetra-Hasti-Ajamīḍha.

2) Birth. Several dynasties like Yadu Vaṁśa, Pūru Vaṁśa etc. take their origin from Yayāti. Duṣyanta belongs to that dynasty. King Bharata was born as Duṣyanta's son by Śakuntalā. Suhotra - Suhota - Gaya - Gardda-Suketu and Bṛhatkṣetra were Bharata's sons. Bṛhatkṣetra had four children, who were : Nara, Mahāvīra, Garga and Hasti. Of them Hasti had three sons: Purumīḍha, Ajamīḍha and Dvimīḍha.

3) Other details. Ajamīḍha had three queens—Dhūminī, Nīlī and Keśinī. Of them, Dhūminī had a son, Ṛkṣa and Nīlī's son was Duṣyanta (This was not Śakuntalā's husband, Duṣyanta) and Keśinī's sons were Jahnu, Praja and Rūpiṇa. Parameṣṭī was another name of Keśinī. (M.B., Ādi Parva, Chapter 94, Verses 30-32; Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 4, Verse 2).

AJAMĪḌHA II. We come across another Ajamīḍha also in the Lunar Dynasty. He married Sudevā, daughter of Vikaṇṭha a King of the Lunar Dynasty. This Ajamīḍha had 2400 children by his four wives, Kaikeyī, Gāndhārī, Viśālā and Ṛkṣā. Of them Saṁvaraṇa married Tapatī, the daughter of Vivasvān. See Tapatī Saṁvaraṇa. (M.B., Ādi Parva, Chapter 95, Verses 35-37).

AJĀMILA. Ajāmila's story is given in the Bhāgavata as an example to illustrate that even the most wicked person can attain Viṣṇupāda (Salvation).

Ajāmila was a Brahmin who was once sent by his father to the jungle to fetch samit (leaves and twigs to make the sacrificial fire). Ajāmila met there a beautiful Śūdra woman. Forgetting everything, the Brahmin made her his wife and children were born to them. When that Brahmin, who was the very embodiment of all vices, reached the age of eightyseven, the time came for him to die. Yamadūtas (Agents of Yama—the god of death) had arrived. The frightened Ajāmila shouted loudly the name of his eldest son, 'Nārāyaṇa'. Hearing the repeated call of his name 'Nārāyaṇa', Mahāviṣṇu appeared there and dismissed the agents of Yama. From that day Ajāmila became a devotee of Viṣṇu and did penance on the bank of the Ganges and after some years attained salvation. (Bhāgavata, Aṣṭama Skandha, Chapter 1).

AJAMUKHA (AJAVAKTRA). He was one of the soldiers in Skanda's army. (M.B., Śalya Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 75). In the battle between Skanda and the Asuras, Ajamukha killed the Asura, Madhu. (Skanda Purāṇa, Yuddha Kāṇḍa).

AJAMUKHĪ (AJĀMUKHĪ).

1. Genealogy. Descended from Viṣṇu thus : Brahmā-Marīci-Kaśyapa-Ajāmukhī.

2) Birth Long ago in the battle between Devas and Asuras one of the routed Asuras had fled to Pātāla (Hell). Surasā was his daughter. Brahmā's grandson, Kaśyapa married Surasā. She gave birth to six children—Śūrapadmā, Siṁhikā, Siṁhavaktra, Tārakāsura, Ajāmukhī and Gomukha. The Asura woman Ajāmukhī is one of them.

3) Chief events. (1) Marriage with Durvāsas. Once Śūrapadmā called his two brothers, Siṁhavaktra and Tārakāsura and ordered them to set up two cities, one to the north and the other to the south, of Mahāmeru. In obedience to his elder brother, Tārakāsura started with one half of the army and set up a city to the south of Mahāmeru. That city was named Māyāpura. Siṁhavaktra lived in the city on the northern side of Mahāmeru. Their sister Ajāmukhī went about enticing men to satisfy her lustful passion. Once, in the course of her wanderings, she met Durvāsas in the Himālayan valley. They fell in love and even married. The two Asuras, Ilvala and Vātāpi were born from their union. They insisted on sharing their father's achievements between them. Durvāsas cursed them that they would die at the hands of Agastya. (Skanda Purāṇa, Asura Kāṇḍa).

(2) The cutting off of Ajāmukhī's hands. While wandering with her lustful passion, Ajāmukhī once went to the Śiva temple at Kāśi. There she happened to meet Indra's wife, Śacīdevī. In order to give her to her brother, Śūrapadmā, Ajāmukhī caught hold of Śacīdevī. Śacīdevī screamed aloud. Suddenly Śiva appeared there with His sword. Even then Ajāmukhī refused to release Śacīdevī. Śiva rescued Indrāṇī (Śacīdevī) by cutting off Ajāmukhī's hands. Hearing this, Śūrapadmā sent his army and imprisoned the Devas. The imprisoend Brahmā at the instance of Śūrapadmā, restored Ajāmukhī's hands. Śūrapadmā's son, Bhānugopa fought against the remaining Devas and defeated them. (Skanda Purāṇa, Asura Kāṇḍa).

AJĀMUKHĪ. See AJAMUKHĪ.

AJANĀBHA. A mountain. A reference to this is seen in the M.B., Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 165, Verse 32. Another name, Ajanābha Varṣa for the territory ruled over by Ajanābha, is also found in Bhāgavata, Fifth Skandha, Chapter 1.

AJARA. Tapantaka, the minister of King Vatsa, told him the story of a man named Ajara to illustrate the law that all people will have to suffer the consequences of their actions in a previous birth. The story is given below:—

Once upon a time, there lived a King named Vinayaśīla in Vilāsapura, in the city of Śrīkaṇṭhanagarī. After some years, the King was affected by wrinkles of old age. A physician named Taruṇacandra came to the palace to cure the King of his wrinkles. "The King should remain alone in the interior of the earth for full eight months. He has to use a medicine while remaining there. It should not even be seen by anyone else. I myself am to administer the medicine"—This was the physician's prescription. The King agreed. Accordingly the King and the physician spent six months in the interior of the earth. After that the physician, after a search, found a man who exactly resembled the King and brought him to the interior of the earth. After two more months, the physician murdered the King and came out with the new man. The people welcomed him with honour as the King who was cured of his wrinkles. This man was Ajara. After some time, the physician approached Ajara for his reward. Ajara said: "It is by my Karmaphala (consequence of my actions in my previous birth) that I have become King. In my previous birth I renounced my body after doing penance. According to the boon which God gave me on that occasion, I have become King in my present birth". The physician returned empty-handed. (Kathāsaritsāgara, Ratnaprabhālaṁbaka, 6th Taraṅga).

AJAVINDU. He was a King, born in the dynasty of the Suvīras. (M.B., Udyoga Parva, Chapter 74, Verse 14).

AJEYA. He was a King in ancient Bhārata. Ajeya's name is found among the names of the Kings mentioned by Sañjaya to Dhṛtarāṣṭra. All these Kings were mighty and generous rulers who were the recipients of divine arrows. (M.B., Ādi Parva, Chapter 1, Verse 234).

AJĪGARTA (ṚCĪKA). He was a greedy Brahmin. (See ṚCĪKA I

King Hariścandra who was distressed by having no children, propitiated god Varuṇa. Varuṇa blessed him saying that a son would be born to him. But the condition was that the child should be sacrificed to Varuṇa. When the child was born, Hariścandra did not like to sacrifice the boy. The sage Viśvāmitra suggested that instead of sacrificing his own son it would be enough if he bought another boy and sacrificed him. Accordingly, Hariścandra sent his minister to find out and purchase a Brahmin boy for the sacrifice. At that time there lived in Ayodhyā a greedy Brahmin named Ajīgarta. He had three sons. In the course of his search, the minister came across this needy Brahmin and asked him whether he was willing to sell one of his three sons. He continued: "Why should you be in this wretched state of poverty and misery? Sell one of your sons and you will get 100 cows as the price". The minister's words and the price offered for the son made a deep impression on the Brahmin's mind. He thought: "It is impossible for me to earn 100 cows. Even if it were possible how long would it take? If I sell him I shall get hundred cows at once. What a lucky chance! The loss of a son is nothing." So thinking, he sold his son Śunaśśepha. (For the rest of the story, see the word "Śunaśśepha". Devī Bhāgavata, Skandhas 7, 8).

AJINA. 1) Genealogy From Viṣṇu, Brahmā, Marīci, Kaśyapa, Vaivasvata, Uttānapāda, Dhruva, Śṛṣṭi, Ripu, Cākṣuṣa, Manu, Uru, Aṁga, Vena, Pṛthu, Antardhāna, Havirdhāna and Ajina.

2) Birth. Pṛthu had two sons, Antardhāna and Vādi. Antardhāna had a son, Havirdhāna, by Śikhaṇḍinī. Dhiṣaṇā, who was born in the Agnikula became Havirdhāna's wife. Six sons were born to them, Prācīnabarhis, Śukra, Gaya, Kṛṣṇa, Vraja and Ajina. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Part I, Chapter 14).

AJIŚAKA. (See the word (ŚAKAVARṢA).

AJODARA. There was an individual called Ajodara in Skanda's army. (M.B., Śalya Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 60).

AKAMPANA. (A mighty warrior among the demons).

1) Genealogy. Descended from Viṣṇu in the following order: Viṣṇu - Brahmā - Heti - Vidyukeśa - Sukeśa Sumāli-Akampana.

2) Other details. Sumāli married Ketumatī and got fourteen children. They were 1) Prahasta 2) Akampana 3) Vikaṭa 4) Kālakāmukha 5) Dhūmrākṣa 6) Daṇḍa 7) Supārśvā 8) Sāṁhrāda 9) Prākvāta 10) Bhāsakarṇa 11) Vekā 12) Puṣpotkaṭā 13) Kaikasī and 14) Kumbhīnadī. Of these the last four are daughters. Prahasta was one of the ministers of Rāvaṇa. The thirteenth child Kaikasī was married to Viśravas, son of Pulastya. Viśravas got three sons and a daughter. They were Rāvaṇa, Kumbhakarṇa and Vibhīṣaṇa and Śūrpaṇakhā. It was Akampana who informed Rāvaṇa that Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa had killed his three allies, Khara, Dūṣaṇa and Triśiras (Araṇya Kāṇḍa, Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa).

3) Death. Akampana fought a fierce battle with Hanūmān and in the end Hanūmān plucked a big tree and hit Akampana on the head with it and killed him. (Sarga 56, Yuddha Kāṇḍa of Rāmāyaṇa)

AKAMPANA II. He was a king who lived in the Kṛtayuga. He had a son named Hari who was a fierce fighter. He was killed in a battle and the King became much depressed. Nārada consoled him with other stories and Vyāsa told this story to Dharmaputra when he found the latter greatly dejected and gloomy after the great battle was over. (Chapter 52, Droṇa Parva of M.B. also makes mention of Akampana).

AKARKKARA. A serpent, son of Kadru.

1) Genealogy. Descended from Viṣṇu in this order : Brahmā-Marīci-Kaśyapa-Akarkkara.

2) Birth. Kaśyapa married the eight daughters of Dakṣa named Aditi, Diti, Danu, Kālikā, Tāmrā, Krodhavaśā, Manu and Analā. Krodhavaśā got ten sons. One of them is Kadru. Ananta and Akarkkara were born of Kadru. (Śloka 16, Chapter 35, Ādi Parva, M.B.).

AKRODHA. A King of the Pūru dynasty. He was born to King 'Ayutanāyi' and his Queen, Kāmā. Kāmā, mother of Akrodha, was the daughter of Pṛthuśravā. (Śloka 21, Chapter 95, Ādi Parva, M.B.).

AKṚTAŚRAMA. He is one of the few sannyāsins who have gone to heaven after completing the fourth āśrama of life namely, Sannyāsa. The Kaurava-Pāṇḍava battle was over. As the eldest, Dharmaputra performed obsequies to all those of his kith and kin dead in the war. He was then met by many sages including Vyāsa and Nārada who comforted him in his bereavement. When Dharmaputra later met Bhīṣma the latter among many other stories told him the story of Akṛtaśrama also. (Śloka 17, Chapter 244, Śānti Parva, M.B.).

AKṚTAVRAṆA.

1) General information. Akṛtavraṇa was a great sage of erudition and was a disciple of Paraśurāma. He is extolled in the Purāṇas and it is said that Sūta who recited first the story of Mahābhārata to an assembly of sages in the forest of Naimiśa was a disciple of Akṛtavraṇa. (Skandha 12 of Bhāgavata).

2) How he became a disciple of Paraśurāma. Paraśurāma was returning after obtaining arrows from Lord Śiva after pleasing him by fierce penance. He was walking briskly through the dense forests anxious to be at the side of his preceptors to get their blessings. As he passed a great cave he heard a moan and on getting to the site of the sound found a brahmin boy being attacked by a tiger. The tiger immediately fell dead by an arrow from Paraśurāma. Lo ! the tiger turned into a gandharva freed now from a curse because of which he was for years living as a tiger. The gandharva bowed down respectfully and thanked the sage for giving him relief and left the place. The brahmin boy fell down at the feet of Paraśurāma and said, "Great Lord, because of you I have now become Akṛtavraṇa meaning one who has not received any wound. (Akṛta = not having secured. Vraṇa = wound). I shall, therefore, be your disciple forever hereafter". From that day onwards he never left Paraśurāma but followed him as his disciple.

3) Other details. (1) In the story of Mahābhārata we find Akṛtavraṇa in several different contexts appearing on behalf of Paraśurāma. It was Akṛtavraṇa who told Dharmaputra the life and exploits of Paraśurāma during the exile of the Pāṇḍavas in the forests. (Chapters 115 to 117, Vana Parva, M.B.).

(2) In Chapter 83 of Udyoga Parva we read about Akṛtavraṇa meeting Śrī Kṛṣṇa while the latter was going to Hastināpura.

(3) In Chapter 173 of Udyoga Parva we read about Akṛtavraṇa detailing the history of the Kaurava dynasty to Duryodhana.

(4) Akṛtavraṇa has played a very important role in the story of Ambā, daughter of the King of Kāśī. Ambā along with her two sisters, Ambikā and Ambālikā, were brought down to Hastināpura by Bhīṣma for his brother Vicitravīrya to marry. But on knowing that Ambā had mentally chosen Sālva as her husband, Bhīṣma allowed her to go back to Sālva. But on her return to Sālva he refused to accept her and she came back to Hastināpura. Bhīṣma then requested Vicitravīrya to accept her as his wife which, unfortunately, Vicitravīrya also refused to do. Ambā then turned to Bhīṣma and besought him to marry her which, much to his regret, he could not do because of his vow of celibacy. Thus forsaken by all, all her sweetness turned into bitter hatred towards Bhīṣma and she remained alive thereafter only to kill Bhīṣma. But even the foremost of warriors were not willing to antagonise Bhīṣma and so her appeal to help was not heeded by any. It was then that Hotravāha her grandfather on the maternal side met her and directed her to Paraśurāma. When she went to Paraśurāma it was Akṛtavraṇa who received her and on hearing her sorrowful tale encouraged her to seek vengeance on Bhīṣma. Again it was he who persuaded Paraśurāma to champion her cause and go for a fight against Bhīṣma. During the fight Akṛtavraṇa acted as charioteer to Paraśurāma. (Śloka 9, Chapter 179, Udyoga Parva, M.B.).

(5) Akṛtavraṇa was one of the many sages who were lying on a bed of arrows during the great Kurukṣetra battle. (Śloka 8, Chapter 26, Anuśāsana Parva, M.B.).

AKRŪRA.

1) Genealogy. Descended from Viṣṇu in the following order : Brahmā-Atri-Candra-Budha - Purūravas - Āyus-Nahuṣa-Yayāti-Yadu (Chapter XII of Agni Purāṇa). Descending from Yadu in order were Sahasrajit-Śatajit-Hehaya-Dharma-Kunti-Bhadrasena-Dhanaka-Kṛtavīrya Kārttavīryārjuna - Madhu - Vṛṣṇi (Chapter XXIII of Navama Skandha, Bhāgavata). The Vṛṣṇi dynasty begins and from Vṛṣṇi in order descended Yudhājit-Śini-Satyaka-Sātyaki-Jaya-Kuṇi-Anamitra-Pṛśni-Śvaphalka - Akrūra. (Chapter XXIV of Navama Skandha, Bhāgavata).

2) Birth. Śvaphalka of the Vṛṣṇi dynasty married Nandinī, daughter of the King of Kāśī and Akrūra was born to them. Akrūra was an uncle of Śrī Kṛṣṇa but is respected more as a worshipper of Kṛṣṇa.

3) Other details. (1) He became famous as a commander of the Yādava army. (Chapter 220 of Ādi Parva, M.B.).

(2) Akrūra was also present for the Svayaṁvara (wedding) of Pāñcālī. (Śloka 18, Chapter 185 of Ādi Parva, M.B.).

(3) At the time of Arjuna's eloping with Subhadrā, a grand festival was going on in the Raivata mountain and Akrūra was partaking in the same. (Śloka 10, Chapter 218, Ādi Parva, M.B.).

(4) Akrūra accompanied Kṛṣṇa with the dowry intended for Subhadrā. (Śloka 29, Chapter 220, Ādi Parva, M.B.).

(5) Akrūra came to the country called Upaplavya for attending the marriage of Abhimanyu. (Śloka 22, Chapter 72, Virāṭa Parva, M.B.).

(6) Akrūra and Āhuka always quarrelled with each other both alleging that the other sided with the opposite camp of Kṛṣṇa. (Ślokas 9 to 11, Chapter 81, Śānti Parva, M.B.).

(7) Kaṁsa planning to kill Balabhadrarāma and Śrī Kṛṣṇa conducted a festival called Cāpapūjā (worship of the bow). It was Akrūra whom Kaṁsa sent to bring Balabhadra and Kṛṣṇa for the festival. Akrūra understood the plot, informed Kṛṣṇa about it and also advised Kṛṣṇa to kill Kaṁsa. (Daśama Skandha, Bhāgavata).

(8) Akrūra fought against Jarāsandha on the side of Kṛṣṇa. (Daśama Skandha).

(9) On another occasion Kṛṣṇa, Balabhadra and Uddhava sent Akrūra to Hastināpura to get tidings about Kuntī and the Pāṇḍavas. Akrūra met his sister Kuntī and talked to her for a long time and also met Dhṛtarāṣṭra and talked to him after which he returned to Dvārakā. (Daśama Skandha).

(10) Akrūra went to Hastināpura as a messenger from Śrī Kṛṣṇa. (Refer sub-para 3 of para 13 under Kṛṣṇa).

4) Domestic life. Akrūra married Sutanū, daughter of Āhuka and got two sons named Devaka and Upadevaka. (Navama Skandha).

5) Syamantaka and Akrūra. Refer para 2 under the word Kṛtavarmā.

AKṢA I. (Akṣakumāra).

1) Genealogy. Descended in order from Viṣṇu as follows: Brahmā - Pulastya - Viśravas - Rāvaṇa - Akṣa. (Uttararāmāyaṇa).

2) Birth. Three sons were born to Rāvaṇa, King of the demons, by his wife Mandodarī. They were Meghanāda, Atikāya and Akṣakumāra. Akṣakumāra was a redoubtable hero and a fierce fighter but was killed by Hanūmān in Laṅkā. (Sarga 47, Sundara Kāṇḍa, Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa).

AKṢA II. We find another warrior of this name among the soldiers who came to help Skanda in the Kaurava-Pāṇḍava battle. (Śloka 58, Chapter 45, Śalya Parva, M.B.).

AKṢAHṚDAYA. A sacred chant or mantra. When Nala was roaming about in the forests after his separation from Damayantī he happened to save the cobra, Kārkoṭaka, from a wild fire. But in return the snake bit him and made him as black as clouds. He then advised Nala to go to the palace of King Ṛtuparṇa where the cobra said, Nala would be taught the secret mantra of Akṣahṛdaya by the King.

One who knows this sacred chant can find out all secrets of a game of dice and can count within no time the number of leaves, fruits and flowers on a tree. Nala went to Ṛtuparṇa and stayed with him. While living there a brahmin named Sudeva came to Ṛtuparṇa and informed him that Damayantī was going to marry again. Ṛtuparṇa immediately started for Vidarbha taking Nala as his charioteer. The chariot driven by Nala flew like a wind and on the way when Ṛtuparṇa's handkerchief fell down and he requested Nala to stop the chariot. Nala informed him that by the time the request was made they had travelled already one yojana. As they proceeded they saw a huge tree full of leaves and fruits. Ṛtuparṇa at a glance told Nala that the tree contained five crores of leaves and two thousand nine hundred and five fruits. Nala was surprised. Then they understood that Nala was able to drive the chariot so quickly because of his knowledge of the sacred chant Aśvahṛdaya and that Ṛtuparṇa was able to count the leaves and fruits because of his knowledge of the chant Akṣahṛdaya. They taught each other the sacred mantras. Because of this Akṣahṛdaya Nala was able to win the game of dice the second time and regain his kingdom. (Chapter 72, Vana Parva).

AKṢAMĀLĀ (ARUNDHATĪ). See under Arundhatī.

AKṢAPRAPATANA. A particular place in the country of Ānartta. At this place Śrī Kṛṣṇa killed two demons named Gopati and Tālaketu. (Śloka 29, Chapter 38, Sabhā Parva, M.B.).

AKṢARAPURUṢA. When all was set for the Kurukṣetra battle Arjuna showed signs of weakness and hesitated to proceed for a fight. Śrī Kṛṣṇa then through the famous Gītā enunciated a philosophy of life during the course of which he speaks about the two puruṣas, Kṣara and Aksara. All that we see in this world and enjoy are Kṣara and the power behind all of them is Akṣara. God is one who transcends the aspects Kṣara and Akṣara and stands as the root cause of all life. (Ślokas 16 to 19, Chapter 39, Bhīṣma Parva, M.B.)

AKṢASŪTRĀ. She was the wife of the sage Āpastamba. She was a very chaste woman. (See under Āpastamba).

AKṢAUHIṆĪ. A big division of an army. It is described in the Verses 19 to 26 in the 2nd Chapter of Ādi Parva of the Malayalam Mahābhārata. It says thus: One chariot, one elephant, three horses and five soldiers constitute what is termed a Patti. Three such pattis make one Senāmukha and three such senāmukhas make one Gulma. Three gulmas make one Gaṇa and three such gaṇas make one Vāhinī. Three such vāhinīs make one Pṛtanā. An Akṣauhiṇī contains 21870 chariots, an equal number of elephants, 65160 horses and 109350 soldiers.

AKṢAYAPĀTRA. This is a copper vessel given to Dharmaputra by Sūrya (Sun). To destroy the Pāṇḍavas, Duryodhana kept them in a palace made of lac. They escaped from there and passing through dense forests crossed the river Ganges and reached the Kingdom of Pāñcāla where they married the King's daughter, Kṛṣṇā (Pāñcālī). On their way they killed two demons called Hidimba and Baka. When they were living happily at Indraprastha the jealous Duryodhana defeated them in a game of dice by foul play and sent them for a period of twelve years to the forests. The Pāṇḍavas found it impossible to feed the innumerable subjects who faithfully followed them to the forest. Dharmaputra then prayed to the God, Sūrya and he appeared before him and gave him this Akṣaya Pātra (Akṣaya = never getting empty, Pātra = pot). Everyday this pot never got empty till the meals of Pāñcālī were over. (Chapter 3, Vana Parva, M.B.). See also under Duryodhana, Para 12.

AKṢAYAVAṬA. A sacred lake. When the Pāṇḍavas during their exile went to Pulastyāśrama sage Pulastya gave a description of all the sacred lakes in India. He says, "After reaching Mārkaṇḍeya lake you should visit the meeting place of the rivers Gaṅgā and Gomatī. Then when you reach Gayā you will find there a lake called Akṣayavaṭa. If you bathe in that lake you will get salvation". In the Navama Skandha of Devī Bhāgavata you find the following about Akṣayavaṭa: "Puṣpabhadrā is one of the famous sacred rivers in India. This river starts from the Himālayas with the name Śarāvatī and flowing for 500 yojanas (One yojanam is equal to about 8 miles) on the left side of river Gomatī reaches the western ocean. There is an āśrama called Akṣayavaṭa on the shores of this beautiful river which always carries crystal clear water. The āśrama got that name because of a big banyan tree standing near it. Kapila, the great sage, did penance sitting here for a long time. Lord Śiva, Bhadrakālī and Skanda used to come and sit underneath this banyan tree.

AKṢĪṆA. He was the son of Viśvāmitra. (Śloka 50, Chapter 14, Anuśāsana Parva. For more details see under Viśvāmitra).

AKŪPĀRA.

1) General information. There is a lake in the Himālayas called Indradyumna. Akūpāra is a tortoise living in it. There is also a statement that this is the Ādi-Kūrma (second of the ten incarnations of God). A description of Akūpāra is found in Chapter 199 of Vana Parva in Mahābhārata.

2) Cirañjīvī (One who has no death). When the Pāṇḍavas were in exile in the forests sage Mārkaṇḍeya tells many stories to Dharmaputra to console him in his sad plight. The Pāṇḍavas asked Mārkaṇḍeya whether he knew of anybody living before him. Then the sage said, "In times of old Indradyumna an ascetic King (Rājarṣi) fell down from heaven when he fell short of his accumulated 'Puṇya'. Sorrowfully he came to me and asked me whether I knew him. I replied in the negative adding that perhaps Prāvīrakarṇa an owl living on the top of the Himālayas might know him since he was older than me. At once Indradyumna became a horse and taking me on its back approached the owl living in the Himālayas. The owl also could not remember Indradyumna but directed him to a stork named Nāḍījaṁgha who was older than the owl. The Ascetic king took me then to the Indradyumna lake where the stork lived. The stork also could not find the identity of Indradyumna. Perhaps he said that a tortoise of name Akūpāra living in that same lake might know him. We then approached the tortoise and enquired whether he knew Indradyumna. The tortoise sat in meditation for some time and then weeping profusely and shaking like a leaf stood bowing respectfully and said, "How can I remain without knowing him? There are several monuments of the useful work done by him here. This very lake is of his making. This came into existence by the march of the cows he gave away to the people". The moment the tortoise finished speaking a chariot appeared from heaven to take the King away. The King after leaving me and the owl in their proper places ascended to heaven in the chariot.

ALAGHU. A son born to Vasiṣṭha by Ūrjjā. Rāja (Rajas) Gātra, Urdhvabāhu, Savana, Śukra and Sutapas, who were great hermits, were brothers of Alaghu, who has another name 'Alagha'. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 20).

ALAKĀ. The city of Kubera.

ALAKANANDĀ. River Gaṅgā of devaloka. The river gaṅgā of the earth when it flows through devaloka is called Alakanandā and is called Vaitaraṇī when it flows through Pitṛloka (nether world). Kṛṣṇadvaipāyana (Vyāsa) declares that Deva Gaṅgā with crystal pure water flowing in devaloka under the name Alakanandā and Vaitaraṇī of the nether world, a terror to sinners, are the same as the Gaṅgā of the earth. (Ślokas 21 and 22, Chapter 170, Bhāṣā Bhārata, A.P.).

Starting from Viṣṇupāda Alakanandā flows through Devayāna which blazes with the splendour of a crore of beautiful many-storeyed buildings. Flowing from there to Candramaṇḍala (moon) and flooding it completely flows down to Brahmaloka. From there it divides into four rivulets and flows to the four different sides with the names Sītā, Cakṣus, Alakanandā and Bhadrā. Of these Sītā falls on the thickly wooded mountain tops of Mahāmeru and flowing from there through Gandhamādana by the side of Bhadrāśvavarṣa falls down in the eastern ocean. Cakṣus falls on the top of Mālyavān mountain and flowing through Ketumāla falls down in the western ocean. The most sacred of the group, Alakanandā, falls on the mountain of Hemakūṭa and from there flows through Bhāratavarṣa and falls down in the southern ocean. The fourth, Bhadrā, falling on the top of the Mountain, Sṛṅgavān flows to the northern ocean. Of these the most sacred is Alakanandā which flows through Bhāratavarṣa and it is believed that even those who think of taking a bath in that will acquire the benefit of performing yāgas like Aśvamedha and Rājasūya. (Eighth Skandha of Śrī Mahādevībhāgavata).

ALAMBALA. A giant who used to eat human flesh. This cannibal was the son of Jaṭāsura. This asura (Alambala) fought on the side of the Kauravas in the Kurukṣetra battle because Bhīmasena had killed his father, Jaṭāsura. In the battle, Ghaṭotkaca cut off the head of this mighty warrior and magician and threw his head into the war-chariot of Duryodhana. (M.B., Droṇa Parva, Chapter 149).

ALAMBATĪRTHA. A holy place where there was a sacred bath. Garuḍa, when he went to devaloka (the realm of the gods) to bring Amṛtam (ambrosia) took rest in this holy place. (See under the word Garuḍa. Also M.B., Ādi Parva, Chapter 39, Stanza 39).

ALAMBUṢA I. Son of the giant Ṛṣyaśṛṅga. He had fought on the side of the Kauravas. (M.B., Udyoga Parva, Chapter 167, Stanza 33). There was a combat between Alambuṣa and Ghaṭotkaca, on the first day of the battle of Kurukṣetra.

"Alambuṣa shot ninety sharpened pointed arrows at the son of Bhīmasena (Ghaṭotkaca), cut his body in several places. Though he was full of wounds, he fought all the more fiercely". (Bhāṣā Bhārata, Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 45, Stanzas 43, 44).

Alambuṣa had engaged Abhimanyu, Sātyaki, Ghaṭotkaca, Kuntibhoja and Bhīmasena all mighty men of arms, in single combat, in the Kaurava battle. It is seen that he has got another name, Sālakaṭaṁka. He was killed by Ghaṭotkaca in the battle. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 109, Stanzas 22 to 33).

ALAMBUṢA II. Another king on the side of the Kauravas. Sātyaki killed this king. (Mahābhārata, Droṇa Parva, Chapter 140, Stanza 13).

ALAMBUṢA III. A king of the Rākṣasas. It is seen that this Alambuṣa was defeated and driven away from the battle-field by Arjuna. (Droṇa Parva, Chapter 167, Stanzas 37 to 47).

ALAMBUṢA IV. A giant, the son of Jaṭāsura. Ghaṭotkaca killed this giant in the battle.

ALAMBUṢĀ. A celestial woman born to Kaśyapa by his wife Pradhā.

1) Genealogy. Begins from Viṣṇu in the following order: Brahmā-Kaśyapa-Alambuṣā.

2) How she enticed the hermit Dadhīca. In days of yore there was an ascetic named Dadhīca. He began doing tapas on the bank of the river Sarasvatī. Indra was in consternation. Indra sent this celestial maid Alambuṣā to entice the hermit. When the ascetic got down to the river, Alambuṣā approached him with enticing actions and expressions. When the hermit saw her he became passionate and he had seminal flow. The sperm fell into the river. The river became pregnant and delivered a child in due course. He was called Sārasvata.

Alambuṣā brought the child before Dadhīca, who blessed the child and said that there would be a drought in the country continuously for twelve years and that at that juncture Sārasvata would recite passages from the Scripture to the Brahmins who had forgotten them. The much pleased Sarasvatī and Sārasvata went back.

At that time Indra lost his Vajrāyudha (weapon of thunderbolt) somewhere. The Asuras (enemies of Gods) made an onslaught on the gods and their realm. Indra knew that with a weapon made by the bone of Dadhīca the Asuras could be destroyed. Indra asked the Gods to bring the bone. They came down to the earth and requested Dadhīca to give them a bone. Dadhīca giving his bone died and attained heaven. With his bones Indra made a good deal of weapons such as the Vajrāyudha, wheel weapons, maces and sticks and with them Indra slew all the Daityas (Asuras).

After this there was a great famine in the country. As there was no rain, crops failed and lands became dry and the Brahmins left the country. Sārasvata alone remained with his mother. After twelve years the famine and starvation came to an end. By then the Brahmins had forgotten the hymns and mantras of the Vedas. They approached the boy Sārasvata and renewed their memory. (Mahābhārata, Śalya Parva, Chapter 51).

3) Punarjanma (Rebirth). Long ago Indra went to Brahmā. There was one Vasu called Vidhūma also with Indra. When these two were standing near Brahmā, Alambuṣā also came there to pay homage to Brahmā. The garments she had on were displaced by wind. Vidhūma saw the dazzling beauty of her body and was overpowered by libido. Alambuṣā who understood this, was filled with passion for him. Brahmā who saw the changes in them looked at Indra with displeasure. Indra knowing the mind of Brahmā cursed them: "Both of you who have lost meekness shall become human beings and then your desire will be fulfilled". Owing to the curse Vidhūma was born as Sahasrānīka, the illustrious King of Candra vaṁśa (Lunar dynasty) and Alambuṣā took birth as Mṛgāvatī, the daughter of King Kṛtavarmā and his wife Kalāvatī. (Kathāsaritsāgara, Kathāmukhalambaka, Taraṅga 1).

4) The curse of Tilottamā. Sahasrānīka the incarnation of Vidhūma and Mṛgāvatī the incarnation of Alambuṣā fell in love with each other on the earth also. Before the wedding took place Devendra once invited Sahasrānīka to heaven. He lived there for a time as the guest of the Gods. After having defeated the Asuras it was time for him to return. Indra sent Tilottamā to keep company. The charioteer was driving. Sahasrānīka immersed in the thought of Mṛgāvatī was sitting silent. Tilottamā said something which the King did not hear. Tilottamā cursed him that he would be separated for fourteen years from the object about which he was thinking. He was not even aware of the curse.

5) The period of separation. The King returned to Kauśāmbi his capital city. Without much delay the wedding ceremony also was conducted. She became pregnant. One day she told her lover-husband that she had a desire to dip in a blood pond. The King made a pond and filled it with a solution of Lākṣā (wax, when dissolved in water, the water will look like blood) and such other substances. Mṛgāvatī was dipping and splashing in it when an eagle taking her to be a piece of flesh took her away. At the loss of his wife Sahasrānīka lost his senses and fell down unconscious. Immediately Mātali, Indra's charioteer, came down from the realm of Gods and brought the King back to consciousness, and then informing him of the curse of Tilottamā he returned. Without paying any heed to the consolatory words of his ministers or other inmates of the palace the King went on lamenting and moaning, "ha, my love Mṛgāvatī ! Where are you now ?" and waited for the end of the period of the curse, execrating Tilottamā. Casting Mṛgāvatī on the Mountain of the Rising Sun the great bird flew away. The horror-stricken queen, thinking of her present condition cried aloud. A very large mountain snake began to draw near to swallow her. A divine person saved her from that situation and vanished. The unprotected Mṛgāvatī decided to commit suicide. It was a forest which abounded in lions, tigers, bears and such other ferocious animals. But none of them came near her; over and above the exertion of carrying, she had to bear the difficulties of her forlorn condition, and she grew weary and worn and became unconscious. Then a hermit boy came there and questioned her who was now lean and ill-dressed, about her condition and consoling her guided her to the hermitage of the great hermit Jamadagni. When she saw the hermit who was as radiant as the Sun, she bowed low before him. "My daughter ! Don't fear. You will get a heroic son here who will continue your family. You will be reunited to your husband." Said the great and noble hermit, who could foresee the future. Somewhat pacified Mṛgāvatī lived in that hermitage waiting for reunion with her husband. After some days she gave birth to a son who had all the symptoms of greatness. At the birth of the child Mṛgāvatī heard an unknown voice saying, "This boy would become the great and renowned King Udayana. His son would get the leadership of the Vidyādharas (the musicians of the Gods)". At this the queen was immensely pleased. The boy Udayana grew up in the hermitage, an incarnation of all good qualities. The hermit to whom the past, the present and the future were not obscure, performed the necessary rites and rituals becoming a Kṣatriya boy (Ruling caste) and taught him everything including the Dhanurveda (the Science of Archery). As a token of her intense love for the son, she put a bangle with the name of Sahasrānīka inscribed on the arm of Udayana. One day when Udayana was tramping the forest, he saw a snake-charmer catching a snake. Seeing the beauty of the snake he asked the snake-charmer to let the snake free. But the snake-charmer replied, " Oh Prince, this is my daily bread. I earn my livelihood by exhibiting snakes. My previous snake was dead and it was with the help of a good deal of herbs and spells and incantations that I caught this one".

When he heard this Udayana felt pity for him and gave the bangle to the snake-charmer and let the snake free. When the snake-charmer had gone with the bangle, the snake beaming with joy said to Udayana: "I am Vasunemi, the elder brother of Vāsuki. I am grateful to you for giving me freedom. I give you this lute producing exquisite notes of music, betels and some tricks to prepare never fading garlands and paste to make marks on the forehead. Receive them as my presents". Udayana accepted the presents with gladness and returned more luminous than before to the hermitage of Jamadagni. The snake-charmer took the bangle, given by Udayana to the bazar for sale. The police caught him and took him before the King, because they saw the name of the King inscribed on the bangle. The King asked him how he got the bangle and the snake-charmer told the King the story from the catching of the snake till he got the bangle. "This is the bangle that I put on the arm of my wife. The boy who gave this bangle to this snake-charmer must be my son." The King was thinking with sadness, when the King heard a voice from above say, "O King ! the period of the curse is over. Your wife and son are in the Mountain of the Rising Sun". At these words the King felt extreme joy. Somehow or other he spent the rest of the day. Early the next morning the King followed by his army, went to the Mountain of the Rising Sun to bring back his wife and son. They took the snake-charmer to show them the way.

In due course the King and his train reached the holy hermitage of the eminent hermit Jamadagni. The place was always vibrant with sounds of the repeating and recitation of the Holy scriptures and covered with smoke mingled with the fragrance of burning herbs and other oblations burned in the sacrificial fire. The various wild animals which are born enemies of each other got on amicably there. The hermit who was an incarnation of the higher aspirations greeted the King who was the protector of the ascetics, with the hospitality becoming his status. The King who saw Mṛgāvatī with their son was overcome with gladness. Their reunion caused a shower of Ambrosia (Amṛta). The King stood before the hermit with folded arms and bowed head for permission to depart. To the King the hermit Jamadagni said : "Oh, King, you are welcome to this hermitage. To those such as you who are of the 'Rajoguṇapradhāna' caste (Ruling race) the peaceful atmosphere of our hermitage may not be appealing to the heart. But a holy hermitage is more respectable than the palace of an Emperor. There is no place for unhappiness here. You might have known that the reason for your separation is a curse. When you were returning from heaven with Tilottamā, you were so much engrossed in the thought of Mṛgāvatī that you did not pay any heed to the conversation of Tilottamā. She was displeased with your behaviour and cursed you. In future, if ever you happen to get into a position which will cause you mental trouble you can be assured of the presence of this Jamadagni." The King said, "I am extremely grateful to your Eminence for this great boon. I am fully aware of the fact that the presence of the holy hermits who have under their control the eightfold prosperities, is always a harbinger of peace and prosperity. I am very sorry to say that the exigency of my presence at the capital due to the pressure of work in connection with the ruling of the country compels me to cut short my visit to this holy hermitage. I shall be looking forward with pleasure to occasions which will enable me to pay visits to this Holy abode."

Much pleased at the speech of the King the hermit said to Mṛgāvatī: "My daughter ! Not only myself, but all the inmates of this hermitage are highly pleased at having got you in our midst for so long. We are sorry to part from you. Now look ! the animals of the hermitage are standing round you and shedding tears. Still we are consoled at your reunion with your husband. Naturally you are of a very good character and your life in this hermitage has given you a nice training and so there is no need for any more advice from me at this time."

Saying this he drew Udayana to his side, kissed him on his head and said to the King again: "This son is a decoration to your dynasty. This handsome boy has been taught everything becoming a royal prince. Let him be a costly gem to you".

Thus blessing the boy the hermit led him to the King. The joy at her reunion with husband, her shyness at being near him, her sorrow at having to depart from the hermitage and the surging feeling in her mind—all these made her dumb and so being unable to say anything she expressed her love and regard for the hermit whom she loved as her father, by some motions of her body and took leave of him with her son. The blessed King and his train, looking at the men, beasts and birds which accompanied them for a while, took leave of them and proceeded to the capital city. On reaching there the King anointed his son Udayana as King. Sahasrānīka then went to the Himālayas to practise ascesis with his wife. (Kathāsaritsāgara, Kathāmukhalambaka, Taraṅga 2).

(b) Enticing Tṛṇabindu. A story is seen in the Bhāgavata of how Alambuṣā enticed the King Tṛṇabindu. He married Alambuṣā and a daughter named Iḍaviḍā (Ilabilā) was born to them. This Ilabilā was married to Viśravas, to whom a son named Kubera (the Lord of wealth) was born By Alambuṣā Tṛṇabindu had three sons called Viśāla, Śūnyabandhu and Dhūmraketu.

"Tam bhejelambuṣā devī

"He who is the seat of all laudable qualities (Tṛṇabindu) was honoured by Alambuṣā (as husband). Iḍaviḍā their daughter was given in marriage to Visravas and to them was born Dhanada (Kubera). His father who was a great hermit taught him everything required. Three sons Viśāla, Śunyabandhu and Dhūmraketu, were born to them. Viśāla who was the founder of the Dynasty, built a city called Vaiśāli." (Bhāgavatam, Navama Skandham, Chapter 2, Stanzas 31-33).

Alambuṣā took part in the birthday celebration of Arjuna.*

(Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 65, Stanza 49) (See Footnote)

ALAṄKĀRAVATĪ. Wife of King Naravāhanadatta. It is seen in the Kathāsaritsāgara where a Vidyādhara woman tells the story of Alaṅkāravatī to the King.

Once a vidyādhara named Alaṅkāraśīla ruled over a city called Śrī Sundarapura in the Himālayas. His wife was called Kāñcanaprabhā. A son was born to them. They named him Dharmaśīla because Devī Kātyāyanī told them in a dream that the son would become Dharmapara (who performs duties well). To the prince, knowledge in every branch of studies was imparted and then he was anointed heir to the throne. He executed regal functions to perfection and ruled his subjects better than his father. Kāñcanaprabhā, wife of Alaṅkāraśīla, gave birth to a daughter. At the time of her birth a heavenly voice said that she would become the wife of Naravāhanadatta the emperor of the Vidyādharas. They named her Alaṅkāravatī. She grew into a very beautiful maiden. She learned arts and sciences from her father. She went on a pilgrimage to the Śiva temples far and wide. One day she heard a celestial voice: "Go to the Svayambhu temple in Kaśmīra and worship there and you will get as your husband Naravāhanadatta." Finally Naravāhanadatta the emperor of Vidyādharas married her. (Kathāsaritsāgara, Lambaka 9, Taraṅga 1).

ALOLUPA. A son of Dhṛtarāṣṭra.

ALPAKĀLA (M). A short time. (Alpa=short and Kāla =time). In the Bhāgavata the following definition is given of alpakāla : "Take two tender leaves of a lotus and place one on the other. Let a strong man take a sharp needle and thrust it hard at the leaves. The time taken for the needle to pierce one leaf and reach the other is alpakāla". [Bhāgavata (Malayalam version), Skandha 3].

ALARKA (M) I. The name of an insect. It was in the form of this insect that Indra went and bore a hole on the leg of Karṇa while Paraśurāma was sleeping on his lap. The blood that flowed from Karṇa's foot wetted the body of the preceptor.

ALARKA II. A king of the states of Kāśī and Karūṣa. He was a very honest man. Forsaking all riches and his kingdom he accepted Dharmamārga. (Śloka 64, Chapter 115, Anuśāsana Parva, M.B.). He was a member of the council of yama. He attained salvation by yoga and meditation. (18th Śloka, Chapter 8, Sabhā Parva, M.B.). Once Alarka decided to overcome the five senses. To control them he sent arrows at the mind, nose, tongue, ear, eye, skin and intelligence. But the senses never surrendered to them. Then Alarka by sheer dhyāna and yoga brought them under control. (M.B., Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 30).

Alarka once told a blind brahmin boy to ask for any boon from him. The boy demanded the eyes of Alarka. To keep his promise Alarka scooped out his eyes and gave them to the blind boy. (Rāmāyaṇa, Ayodhyā Kāṇḍa, Sarga 12, Śloka 43).

ALĀTĀKṢĪ. A woman in the service of Skanda. (M.B., Śalya Parva, Chapter 43, Stanza 8).

ALĀYUDHA. A giant. He was the brother of Bakāsura. He fought on the side of the Kauravas. (M.B., Droṇa Parva, Chapter 95, Stanza 46 and Chapter 176, Stanza 6). Alāyudha combated with Bhīmasena and Ghaṭotkaca and was killed by Ghaṭotkaca.

AMADHYA. A synonym of Śrī Kṛṣṇa. (M.B., Śānti Parva, Chapter 342, Verse 90).

AMĀHAṬHA. A serpent. It was burnt up in the fire at the Sarpa satra of Janamejaya. (M.B., Ādi Parva, Chapter 57, Verse 16).

AMANTHU. A king of the family of Priyavrata.

Genealogy. From Viṣṇu descended in this order: Brahmā-Svāyambhuva Manu - Priyavrata - Agīndhra-Nābhi-Ṛṣabha - Bharata - Sumati - Devatājit - Devadyumna - Parameṣṭi - Pratiha - Pratihartā - Bhūmā - Sīta - Prastoka - Vibhu - Pṛthuṣeṇa - Nakta - Gaya - Citraratha - Samrāṭ - Marīci - Vindumān - Madhu - Vīravrata - Amanthu. Vīravrata had two sons, Manthu and Amanthu.

AMARACANDRA. A Sanskrit poet. It is believed that he lived in the 13th Cent. A.D. Bāla Bhārata was his work. Amaracandra was a Jaina priest. It is said that he was a courtier of Vīsaladeva, the son of King Vīradhavala who ruled over Gujarat from 1243 to 1262.

AMARAGUPTA. He was the minister of King Vikramasiṁha who ruled over Avanti in olden times. (Kathāsaritsāgara, Madana Mañcuka lambaka, First Taraṅga).

AMARAHRADA. A place of holy bath. One who takes his bath here will attain Svarga. (M.B., Vana Parva, Chapter 83, Verse 106).

AMARAKAṆṬAKA. A mountain. It was on this mountain that some parts of Tripura, which was burnt by Śiva fell. From that time it became a holy place. In Padma Purāṇa, Ādi Khaṇḍa, Chapter 15, we see the following passage about the benefits obtained by visiting this holy place. "One who goes to Amarakaṇṭaka mountain will enjoy the fourteen worlds for thirtyseven thousand crores of years. Afterwards he will be born on earth as King and reign as supreme emperor. A visit to Amarakaṇṭaka has ten times the value of an Aśvamedha. If one has Śiva's darśana there, one will attain Svarga. At the time of eclipse, all kinds of holy things converge towards Amarakaṇṭaka. Those who take their bath in Jvāleśvara in Amarakaṇṭaka will enter Svarga. The dead will have no rebirth. Those who renounce their lives at Jvāleśvara will live in Rudraloka till the time of great Deluge. In the valley of Amarakaṇṭaka and in the Tīrtha live Devas known as Amaras and numerous Ṛṣis. Amarakaṇṭaka Kṣetra has a circumference of one yojana. (about eight miles).

AMARAPARVATA. An ancient place in Bhārata. Nakula had conquered this place. (M.B., Sabhā Parva, Chapter 32, Verse 11).

AMARĀVATĪ. It is the city of Indra, the King of the Devas. Its location is described in Devī Bhāgavata as follows: "Brahmā's world extends over 10,000 yojanas on the Mahāmeru mountain. There are eight cities—each 2,500 square yojanas in extent—of the Aṣṭadikpālakas in eight parts of this Brahmapurī. Thus there are nine cities on the top of the Mahā Meru. They are the following:—

1. In the centre is Brahmā's city, Manovatī.
2. To the east of Manovatī, Indra's city, Amarāvatī.
3. In the south-east corner, Agni's city, Tejovatī.
4. On the southern side, Yama's city, Saṁyamanī.
5. In the south-west corner, Nirṛti's city, Kṛṣṇāñjanā.
6. In the west, Varuṇa's city, Śraddhāvatī.
7. In the north-west corner, Vāyu's city, Gandhavatī.
8. In the north, Kubera's city Mahodaya.
9. In the north-east corner, Śiva's city, Yaśovatī.

(Devī Bhāgavata, Aṣṭama Skandha).

AMARDANA. See the word "PAÑCATANTRA".

AMĀVĀSĪ. In Amarakośa we read about Amāvāsī: "Amāvāsyā tvamāvasyā darśaḥ sūryendusaṁgamaḥ". Amāvāsī means New Moon. "Amā" means "Saha". So Amāvāsī is the Union of Sun and Moon in the same rāśi.

Once Bhṛgu Maharṣi cursed Agni. At that time Agni explained the importance of Amāvāsī. The oblations which are offered as homa into the fire become the food of the Devas and Pitṛs. Substances offered as homa on Purṇamāsī become food of the Devas and those offered on Amāvāsī become food of the Pitṛs. (M.B., Ādi Parva, Chapter 7).

AMĀVASU I. Son of Purūravas by Urvaśī. (M.B., Ādi Parva, Chapter 75, Verse 24).

Genealogy. From Viṣṇu, Brahmā-Atri-Candra-Budha-Purūravas-Amāvasu.

AMĀVASU II. One of the Pitṛs. Once Acchodā was fascinated by the physical charm of this Amāvasu and made advances of love to him. Amāvasu repelled her advances. On account of this impropriety of Acchodā, who was a spiritual daughter of the Pitṛs, she was degraded and in her next birth was born as Kālī or Satyavatī. (Padma Purāṇa, Sṛṣṭi Khaṇḍa).

AMBĀ. Daughter of a King of Kāśī.

1) Ambā and Vicitravīrya. Ambā is an ill-starred character in the story of the Mahābhārata. She had two younger sisters named Ambikā and Ambālikā. Bhīṣma, who had taken a vow to remain a bachelor for life, had once taken Ambā, Ambikā and Ambālikā, the three daughters of the King of Kāśī, to Hastināpura. The circumstances in which this happened, are described in Devī Bhāgavata, Prathama Skandha as follows: Śantanu, a King of the Candra Vaṁśa, had two wives, Gaṅgā and Satyavatī. Bhīṣma was the son of Gaṅgā and Citrāṅgada and Vicitravīrya were the sons of Satyavatī. Soon after Bhīṣma's birth, Gaṅgā vanished. After a long period of reign, Śantanu also died. Satyavatī and the three sons were left behind in the palace. According to a vow he had taken long ago, Bhīṣma, instead of succeeding to his father's throne, left it to his brother Citrāṅgada. Once Citrāṅgada went for hunting in the forest. There he came across a Gandharva named Citrāṅgada. The Gandharva did not like another man with his own name to be living in this world. So he killed the king. After that Vicitravīrya became king. Bhīṣma had to take up the task of arranging a suitable marriage for Vicitravīrya.

2) The Svayaṁvara. It was at this time that Bhīṣma came to know that the King of Kāśī was arranging the Svayaṁvara of his three daughters, Ambā, Ambikā and Ambālikā. Bhīṣma went there and in the presence of all the kings who had assembled there, took the three princesses with him to Hastināpura. There he made all preparations for the marriage. But as the time for the ceremony approached, the eldest and most beautiful of the princesses, Ambā went to Bhīṣma and said : "I had already made up my mind long ago to marry Sālva, the King. Besides, we are deeply in love with each other. Therefore, please consider whether it is proper on the part of a great man like you to force me into another marriage."

On hearing this, Bhīṣma allowed her to do as she liked. Ambā then went to King Sālva and made an appeal to him to accept her as his wife since they were mutually in love.

3) Sālva's rejection. To her words Sālva replied: "What you have said about our mutual love is true. But it is not right for a man to accept a woman who has been accepted by another. I saw Bhīṣma taking you by hand and helping you into his chariot. Therefore go at once to Bhīṣma himself and ask him to accept you." Stunned by his words, she turned away, to go to the forest to do penance.

4) Revenge on Bhīṣma. In the Mahābhārata, Udyoga Parva, Chapter 17, we find that Ambā had cherished a secret desire to wreak vengeance on Bhīṣma. She went to the Āśrama of Śaikhāvatya Muni in the forest and stayed there for the night. Her wish to do penance was approved by the Muni. On the next day, Ambā's maternal grandfather, Hotravāhana (Sṛñjaya) came that way. Hotravāhana came to know of all her misfortunes. He advised her to inform Paraśurāma of all her grievances. Just at that moment Akṛtavraṇa, a follower of Paraśurāma happened to come there. Hotravāhana introduced Ambā to Akṛtavraṇa. Both Akṛtavraṇa and Sṛñjaya explained all her affairs to Paraśurāma. Paraśurāma undertook to persuade Bhīṣma to accept Ambā (as his wife). But Paraśurāma's proposal was turned down by Bhīṣma. A terrible duel took place between them at Kurukṣetra. When the fight reached a critical stage, Nārada and the gods induced Paraśurāma to withdraw from the duel. Thus the fight ended with equal victory to both. Finding that it was not possible to achieve her object through Paraśurāma's mediation, Ambā renounced food, sleep etc. and went to the Yamunā valley to do penance for six years. (M.B., Udyoga Parva, Chapter 188). After that for one year she went on a fast, lying under the water in the river Yamunā. Again for another year she did penance, standing on the tip of the toes and eating only dry leaves. Next, she reduced the sky and earth to flames by doing penance. The goddess Gaṅgā appeared to her and when she understood her plight, she told Ambā that it was not possible to kill Bhīṣma. In her agony and despair, without even drinking water, she wandered about here and there. The goddess Gaṅgā cursed her to become a river in the Vatsa country. As a result of the curse, a part of her was turned into the river known as Ambā.

5) Śiva's Boon. The remaining part of her engaged itself in penance. Śiva appeared to her and told her that in the next birth she would attain masculinity. He added that she would be born in the Drupada dynasty as a great archer under the name of Citrayodhi and kill Bhīṣma. Pleased with this prophecy, she took a vow that she would kill Bhīṣma and making a pyre, burnt herself to death.

6) Rebirth. King Drupada's queen had been in great distress for a long time because she had no children. Drupada propitiated Śiva by worshipping him for an issue. Śiva blessed him and said that a girl would be born to him, but she would be transformed into a boy. In due course, the queen gave birth to a girl, but it was announced that it was a boy. Therefore the child had to be brought up, dressed like a boy. The child became famous under the name of Śikhaṇḍī. When Śikhaṇḍī attained youth, Drupada decided to look for a wife for him (her ?). Still he was greatly perplexed as to how to find a wife for Śikhaṇḍī who was already a youthful virgin ! But his wife assured Drupada that Sikhaṇḍī would become a man, according to Śiva's blessing. So, Drupada made a proposal for Śikhaṇḍī's marriage with the daughter of the King of Daśārṇa.

7) Śikhaṇḍī's Marriage. Hiraṇyavarṇa, the King of Daśārṇa, gave his daughter in marriage to Śikhaṇḍī. The couple arrived at Kāmbalyapura. By this time the wife came to know that the "husband" was a woman. She disclosed the secret to her Ladies-in-waiting. They in turn communicated it to the king. Enraged at this, Hiraṇyavarṇa sent a messenger to King Drupada to ascertain the truth of the matter. He even began to make preparations for waging a war against Drupada, King of Pañcāla. Drupada and his queen were in a fix. At this stage the distressed Śikhaṇḍī proceeded to the forest, determined to commit suicide. People were afraid of entering that forest because a Yakṣa named Sthūṇakarṇa lived there. Śikhaṇḍī went to the premises of the Yakṣa and performed certain rites for a number of days. The Yakṣa appeared to her. Śikhaṇḍī explained the whole matter to him. They entered into a contract. According to it, they exchanged their sexes—Śikhaṇḍī receiving the male sex of the Yakṣa and the Yakṣa receiving the female sex of Śikhaṇḍī. Śikhaṇḍī returned home as a man. Drupada repeated with greater force his old plea that his child was a man. Hiraṇyavarṇa made a thorough examination of Śikhaṇḍī and convinced himself of the truth. Many years after, Hiraṇyavarṇa died.

8) Kubera's Arrival. At that time, in the course of his world tour Kubera arrived at the residence of Sthūṇakarṇa. The Yakṣa who was in female form, did not come out to receive Kubera. In his anger, Kubera pronounced a curse that the female sex of Sthūṇakarṇa and the male sex of Śikhaṇḍī would continue for ever. The Yakṣa prayed for the lifting of the curse. Kubera released him from the curse by saying that after the death of Śikhaṇḍī, the Yakṣa would be restored to his own male sex.

According to the previous agreement, Śikhaṇḍī went to Sthūṇakarṇa's place after the death of Hiraṇyavarṇa. But coming to know of all that had happened, he returned home. Thus Śikhaṇḍī became a man permanently. Śikhaṇḍī had received his training in arms under Droṇācārya. In the great Kaurava-Pāṇḍava battle, he became a charioteer.

9) Śikhaṇḍī's Revenge. The Mahābhārata, Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 108, describes Bhīṣma's encounter with Śikhaṇḍī during the Kaurava-Pāṇḍava battle. The Pāṇḍavas started the day's battle by keeping Śikhaṇḍī in the vanguard. Bhīma, Arjuna, Abhimanyu and other warriors were giving him support. It was Bhīṣma who led the Kaurava forces. Arrows began to fly from both sides. It was the tenth day of the battle and Śikhaṇḍī shot three arrows aimed at Bhīṣma's breast. Bhīṣma with a smile of contempt said to Śikhaṇḍī, "Śikhaṇḍī ! Brahmā created you as a woman. You may do as you like". Hearing this taunt, Śikhaṇḍī became more infuriated. Arjuna inspired him with greater courage. After that, keeping Śikhaṇḍī in front, Arjuna began to fight with Bhīṣma. Śikhaṇḍī also showered his arrows on him. Ten of these arrows of Śikhaṇḍī hit Bhīṣma's breast. Bhīṣma disregarded even those arrows. At last he said: "I cannot kill the Pāṇḍavas because they are invulnerable (avadhyāḥ). I cannot kill Śikhaṇḍī because he is really a woman and not man. Though I am also invulnerable and cannot be killed in battle, yet today I have to die; the time has come for me to die." Meanwhile Śikhaṇḍī and Arjuna were discharging a continuous and heavy shower of arrows at Bhīṣma. At last Bhīṣma fell down. (M.B., Udyoga Parva, Chapter 173).

AMBĀJANMA. It is a place of sacred bath where the sage Nārada usually resides. Those who die here will attain salvation (Mokṣa) by Nārada's blessing, according to M.B., Vana Parva, Chapter 83, Verse 81.

AMBĀLIKĀ. (1) The youngest of the three daughters of the King of Kāśī—Ambā, Ambikā and Ambālikā. Vicitravīrya, son of Śantanu married Ambikā and Ambālikā. The mother of this princess was Kausalyā.

2) Pāṇḍu's Mother. Vicitravīrya died before children were born to his wives. To avoid the extinction of the family, Satyavatī, mother of Vicitravīrya summoned Vyāsa, her other son and asked him to beget a son for Ambikā. Vyāsa obeyed his mother half-heartedly. Ambikā did not like the dark-complexioned, crudely attired Vyāsa. Still owing to the Mother's pressure, she passively submitted to the act. As a result of their union was born Dhṛtarāṣṭra, who was blind from his birth. The grief-stricken mother called Vyāsa again and asked him to have union with Ambālikā this time. As Ambālikā's face was pale at the time of their union, a child with pale complexion was born to her. He was named Pāṇḍu. Having thus failed in both attempts, Satyavatī asked Ambikā to go to Vyāsa again. At night Ambikā secretly disguised her waiting-maid and sent her in her own place, to Vyāsa. The waiting-maid experienced exquisite pleasure in Vyāsa's company and as a result a most intelligent son was born to her. It was he who became the renowned Vidura. (M.B., Ādi Parva, Chapter 106).

AMBARĪṢA I. A King of the Ikṣvāku dynasty.

1) Genealogy and Birth. From Viṣṇu was born in the following order : Brahmā-Marīci-Kaśyapa. - Vivasvān-Vaivasvatamanu-Ikṣvāku-Vikukṣi - Śaśāda - Purañjaya-Kukutstha-Anenas-Pṛthulāśva-Prasenajit - Yuvanāśva-Māndhātā-Ambarīṣa. Māndhātā had three sons: Ambarīṣa, Mucukunda and Purukutsa and fifty daughters. The Muni (Sage) Saubhari married the daughters.

2) Ambarīṣa's Yāga (sacrifice). In Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa there is a story of Devendra's theft of the sacrificial cow from Ambarīṣa's yāgaśālā. Devendra could not bear the thought of King Ambarīṣa winning world-renown and glory by performing yāgas. Therefore Indra stole the sacrificial cow and took it away. The Upādhyāya (Chief Priest) was alarmed at the disappearance of the cow and expressed his opinion to the King that it would be enough to sacrifice a human being instead of the cow. The King searched for the cow in all countries, cities and forests. At last he reached the peak of Bhṛgutuṅga where the sage Ṛcīka lived with his wife and children. The King explained to the sage the whole story. He requested him to sell one of his sons in exchange for 100,000 cows. Ṛcīka had three sons. The eldest was his father's favourite and the youngest was the mother's pet. In the end, Ṛcīka sold the second son, Śunaśśepha in return for 100,000 cows.

On his return journey with Śunaśśepha the king rested for a while at Puṣkara Tīrtha. There Śunaśśepha happened to meet his uncle Viśvāmitra and complained to him about his sad plight. Śunaśśepha's wish was that the king's yāga should be performed and at the same time his own life-span should be extended. Viśvāmitra promised to save Śunaśśepha. He called Madhucchandas and his other sons and said to them: "One of you must take the place of Ambarīṣa's sacrificial cow and save the life of Śunaśśepha. God will bless you." But none of the sons of Viśvāmitra was prepared to become the sacrificial cow. Viśvāmitra uttered a curse on his sons that they would have to spend a thousand years on earth, eating dog-flesh. Then he turned to Śunaśśepha and told him that if he prayed to the gods at the time of Ambarīṣa's yajña, they would save him. So Śunaśśepha went to Ambarīṣa's yāgaśālā. As ordered by the assembled guests, Ambarīṣa bound Śunaśśepha and had him dressed in blood-red robes, ready for the sacrifice. Śunaśśepha began to praise and pray to the gods. Soon Indra appeared and blessed him with longevity. He also rewarded Ambarīṣa for his yāga. Thus Śunaśśepha was saved.* (Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa Bāla Kāṇḍa, Sarga 61).

3) Ambarīṣa and Durvāsas. In Bhāgavata we see a story which describes how the Sudarśana Cakra which emerged from Ambarīṣa's forehead chased Durvāsas in all the three worlds. Ambarīṣa was a devout worshipper of Viṣṇu. From the very beginning of his reign, peace and prosperity spread all over the country. Mahāviṣṇu who was pleased with the deep piety and devotion of Ambarīṣa appeared to him and bestowed on him the control of his (Viṣṇu's) Sudarśana Cakra. After that Ambarīṣa started the observance of Ekādaśī vrata. The rigour of the observance alarmed even Indra. He decided to obstruct the observance somehow or other. At that time, Durvāsas arrived in devaloka. Indra instigated Durvāsas to spoil the Ekādaśī observance of Ambarīṣa.

Durvāsas went to Ambarīṣa's palace. There the King received him with due respect and sent him to the river Kālindī for his bath and morning rites. Durvāsas went

* The story of Śunaśśepha may be seen with slight variations in the Devī Bhāgavata and other Purāṇas. In those versions, Śunaśśepha has been described as the sacrificial cow at Hariścandra's yāga, and moreover, Ajīgarta is referred to as the father of Śunaśśepha. (Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa, Chapter 58 gives the same story as in Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa).

for his bath and deliberately stayed away till the conclusion of Ambarīṣa's Ekādaśī observance. At the end of the observance, after feeding the gods with his offerings, Ambarīṣa kept the remaining portion for Durvāsas. After his bath etc., Durvāsas returned, but he was furious when he was offered the leavings of the food of the gods and refused to take any food. In his anger he advanced towards Ambarīṣa. A terrible monster Kṛtyā emanated from the Maharṣi and was about to destroy Ambarīṣa. Ambarīṣa at once called upon Sudarśana Cakra, which appeared instantly and after cutting the throat of Kṛtyā, turned against Durvāsas. Terrified by it, Durvāsas began to flee for life. The Cakra pursued him at his heels. Durvāsas went to Indra and sought refuge with him. But the Cakra followed him there. Indra pleaded helplessness. Then the Maharṣi went to Brahmā and sued for his help. There also the Cakra pursued him. Brahmā sent him to Śiva. Śiva was also unable to give him shelter. Sudarśana continued to chase him. Durvāsas then sought shelter with Mahāviṣṇu. Viṣṇu told him plainly that there was no alternative but to go and sue for mercy to Ambarīṣa himself and advised him to do so. At last Durvāsas returned to Ambarīṣa and begged his pardon. Ambarīṣa saved him from Sudarśana Cakra and described to him the glory resulting from the observance of Ekādaśī vrata. (Bhāgavata, Navama Skandha).

4) Other Details (1) Ambarīṣa performed a yāga in the Yamunā valley. (M.B.,Ādi Parva, Chapter 1, Verse 277; Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 9, Verse 6; Vana Parva, Chapter 129, Verse 2).

(2) Maharṣi Durvāsas recalled Ambarīṣa's power. (M.B., Vana Parva, Chapter 263, Verse 33).

(3) The Sage Vyāsa once told Dharmaputra that Ambarīṣa was one of the 16 great kings who lived in ancient times. The 16 reputed Kings were : Marutta, Suhotra, Paurava, Śibi, Śrī Rāma, Bhagīratha, Dilīpa, Māndhātā, Yayāti, Ambarīṣa, Śaśabindu, Gaya, Rantideva, Bharata, Pṛthu and Paraśurāma. (M.B., Droṇa Parva, Chapter 64).

(4) Ambarīṣa fought single-handed against thousands of Kings. (M.B., Droṇa Parva, Chapter 64).

(5) He performed one hundred yāgas. (M.B., Droṇa Parva, Chapter 64).

(6) Ambarīṣa once questioned Indra about his (Ambarīṣa's) army Chief Sudeva becoming more mighty than himself. (M.B., Śānti Parva, Chapter 98, Verses 6-11).

(7) Ambarīṣa gave 110 crores of cows to the Brahmins. (M.B., Śānti Parva, Chapter 234, Verse 23).

(8) Ambarīṣa was also among the Munis who committed theft of Agastya's lotuses. (M.B., Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 94, Verse 24).

(9) Besides giving cows to Brahmins, Ambarīṣa gave them the country also. (M.B., Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 137, Verse 8).

AMBARĪṢA II. When Balabhadrarāma entered the lower world (Pātāla) after death, among the Nāgas who welcomed him, there was one called "Ambarīṣa". (M.B., Mausala Parva, Chapter 4, Verse 16).

AMBAṢṬHA I. King Śrutāyu, who belonged to the party of the Kauravas was the ruler of Ambaṣṭha land and so he was called Ambaṣṭha. (M.B., Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 96, Verses 39-40). He was killed in the fight with Arjuna. (M.B., Droṇa Parva, Chapter 93, Verses 60-69).

AMBAṢṬHA II. There was a hero called Ambaṣṭha among the warriors on the side of the Pāṇḍavas. (M.B., Droṇa Parva, Chapter 25, Verse 50). He fought against King Cedi who was on the side of the Kauravas and in the fight King Cedi fell.

AMBAṢṬHA III. See the word "VARṆA".

AMBAṢṬHAM. A region in ancient India. It is believed that it was to the north of Sindha (M.B., Sabhā Parva, Chapter 37, Verse 7).

AMBHORUHA. A son of Sage Viśvāmitra. (M.B., Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 4, Verse 59).

AMBIKĀ I. Elder sister of Ambālikā. (See AMBĀLIKĀ).

AMBIKĀ II. Another name of Pārvatī. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 12).

AMBUMATĪ. A river. (M.B., Vana Parva, Chapter 83, Verse 56).

AMBUVĀHINĪ. A river. (M.B., Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 9, Verse 27). Praising this river at dawn and dusk will bring divine grace. (M.B., Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 165, Verse 20).

AMBUVĪCA. One of the Kings of Magadha. He had a minister named Mahākarṇi. (M.B., Ādi Parva, Chapter 203, Verses 17-19).

AṀHU. An Asura in the period of the Ṛgveda. This Asura had been doing much harm to the hermits. Purukutsa was the hermit whom he tormented most. Indra vanquished this Asura and destroyed seven of his cities. (Ṛgveda, Maṇḍala 1, Anuvāka 11, Sūkta 63, Khaṇḍa 7).

AMITADHVAJA. A Rākṣasa. (M.B., Śānti Parva, Chapter 227, Verse 50).

AMITAUJĀ. A mighty Kṣatriya King of the Pāñcāla kingdom. He was born from the element of a Rākṣasa named Ketumān. Before the Pāṇḍavas went to war, they had sent an invitation to him. He was one of the distinguished royal allies of the Pāṇḍavas. (M.B., Ādi Parva, Chapter 67, Verse 12; Udyoga Parva, Chapter 4, Verse 12; Udyoga Parva, Chapter 71, Verse 11).

AMITRAJIT. A King. In his country there were innumerable Śiva temples. Nārada Muni who was delighted by this sight, went to the Palace and said to Amitrajit: "In the city of Campakāvatī there is a Gandharva virgin named Malayagandhinī. She has been abducted by Kaṅkālaketu, a Rākṣasa. She has promised to marry the person who will rescue her from him. Therefore please save her from the Rākṣasa." As suggested by Nārada Amitrajit killed Kaṅkālaketu in battle and recovered Malayagandhinī and married her. Vīra was their son. (Skanda Purāṇa).

AMOGHA I. A Yakṣa who accompanied Śiva when the latter once went on a journey to Bhadravaṭa. (M.B., Vana Parva, Chapter 231, Verse 35).

AMOGHA II. This name has been used as a synonym of Skanda. (M.B., Vana Parva, Chapter 232, Verse 5).

AMOGHA III. A synonym of Śiva. (M.B., Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 17, Verse 114).

AMOGHA IV. A synonym of Viṣṇu. (M.B., Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 149, Verse 25).

AMOGHA(M). An Agni which originated from Bṛhaspati's family. (M.B., Vana Parva, Chapter 222, Verse 24).

AMOGHĀ. Śantanu Maharṣi's wife. Once Brahmā visited Śantanu Maharṣi's Āśrama. As the Maharṣi was not at home, it was Amoghā who received the guest with due reverence. Fascinated by the irresistible charm of Amoghā, Brahmā had an involuntary emission of seminal fluid. He felt ashamed of his own weakness and left the Āśrama immediately. The Maharṣi who returned to the Āśrama soon after, came to know from his wife whose semen it was. He asked Amoghā to accept Brahma Deva's precious semen and not to let it be wasted. Being a devoted wife, she accepted it, but unable to bear the divine pregnancy, she deposited it in the water lying in the valley of the Yugandhara mountain. From that time, it became a place of holy bath, known as Lohita. It was by bathing in this holy water that Paraśurāma washed away his sin of annihilating the Kṣatriyas. (Padma Purāṇa, Sṛṣṭi Khaṇḍa, 55).

AMPIṬṬA. A name for barbers. 'Ampiṭṭa' is derived from the Sanskrit word "Ambiṣṭhaḥ". The word Ambiṣṭhaḥ means Physician. In olden days barbers were physicians also. Going about from house to house, they could easily practise both these professions. Since barbers practised physic also they were called Ambiṣṭhas. Ampiṭṭa is a corrupted form of Ambiṣṭha. (Dravidian Philology).

Barbers sometimes style themselves as "Pandits". It is on the basis of this that we have today, "All Kerala Pandit Sabha" and other similar names. There is a legend on the basis of which this community has assumed the title of "Pandit".

Long ago when Śrī Buddha was about to go to the forest for performing Tapas, thousands of people flocked together to have his darśana. Buddha wished to continue his journey after shaving his head. Buddha asked loudly whether anyone in the crowd was prepared to shave his head. Only a single man came forward cheerfully to do that work. Buddha turned to him and said: "My dear friend, you are the only Pandit in this crowd. You have the wisdom to understand that there is nothing disgraceful in shaving one's head."

He shaved Buddha's head. From that day his descendants came to be known as "Pandits".

AMṚTĀ. Daughter of a King of Magadha. She was the wife of Anaśva and mother of Parīkṣit. (M.B., Ādi Parva, Chapter 95, Verse 41).

AMṚTAM. (See PRĀMṚTAM).

AMṚTAM. A delicious and precious food obtained from the ocean of Milk when the Devas and Asuras churned it. In Chapter 152 of Agni Purāṇa, the word "Mṛtam" is defined as wealth received by begging and "Amṛtam" as wealth received without begging, and "Prāmṛtam" as another kind of wealth obtained without begging.

1) Cause of Kṣīrābdhi-mathanam. (Churning of the Sea of Milk)—Once when Maharṣi Durvāsas was travelling through a forest, he met the Apsarā woman, Menakā, with a garland of Kalpaka flowers in her hand. The fragrance of the flowers filled the whole forest. Durvāsas approached Menakā and requested her to give the garland to him. The Vidyādharī (Apsarā woman) prostrated before the Maharṣi with reverence and presented the garland to him. Wearing that garland on his hair, Durvāsas went to devaloka.

There he saw Indra riding on his elephant, Airāvata, accompanied by his retinue of Devas. The Maharṣi took the rare garland from his head and presented it to Indra, the King of Devas. Indra received the garland and placed it on Airāvata's head. The elephant was attracted by the fragrance of the garland and took it in its trunk, examined it by smelling it and then threw it on the ground.

Durvāsas, who became angry at the way in which his garland was slighted by Indra said to him: "Since you have treated my garland with disrespect, the glory and prosperity of devaloka will perish!" On hearing the curse, Indra alighted from the elephant, frightened. He begged pardon of the Maharṣi. The furious Muni continued: "I am not soft-hearted; nor am I of a forgiving nature. Other Munis may forgive. Remember, I am Durvāsas. You have become so haughty because other Munis like Vasiṣṭha and Gautama have been flattering you too much." Having said this Durvāsas went his way. Indra returned to Amarāvatī.

From that day the glory of devaloka began to decline. The three worlds became dull. Even the plants and shrubs began to wither. The performance of yāgas came to an end. The Devas began to be affected by the infirmities of old age. Taking advantage of this situation, the Asuras started preparations for opposing the Devas. Under the oppression of the Asuras, the Devas groaned in distress. Led by Agni Deva they sought refuge under Brahmā. Brahmā led them to Mahāviṣṇu. They all joined in praising Viṣṇu who appeared and told them like this: "O Gods! I shall enhance your glory. Do as I tell you. Along with the Asuras bring all kinds of medicinal herbs and deposit them in the ocean of Milk. Obtain Amṛtam from it by churning it with Mahāmeru as the churning staff and Vāsuki as the rope. The Amṛtam (Amṛta) which will be produced by churning the Milk sea, will make you strong and deathless. I shall see that the Asuras will share in your troubles but not in enjoying Amṛtam."

2) Churning of the Milk Sea. After Viṣṇu had vanished, the Devas made a treaty with the Asuras and began to work for getting Amṛtam. All of them joined together in bringing various kinds of medicinal herbs and after putting them in the Milk sea which was as clear as the cloudless sky, began to churn it, using Manthara Mountain as the churning staff and snake Vāsuki as the rope. The party of Devas was posted at the tail-end of Vāsuki while the Asuras took their stand at the head. The Asuras became enervated by the fiery breath coming out of Vāsuki's mouth. The clouds which were blown by that breath invigorated the Devas.

Mahāviṣṇu transformed himself into a tortoise, and sitting in the middle of the Milk Sea served as the foundation for the Manthara Mountain, the churning staff. Assuming another form, invisible both to Devas and Asuras, Mahāviṣṇu pressed down the Manthara Mountain from above.

While churning the Milk Sea like this, the first object that rose to the surface was Kāmadhenu. Both Devas and Asuras were strongly attracted towards Kāmadhenu While all were standing spellbound, Vāruṇīdevī with her enchanting dreamy eyes next appeared on the surface. Pārijātam was the third to appear. Fourth, a group of Apsarā women of marvellous beauty floated up. The Moon appeared as the fifth. Śiva received the Moon. The venom which came out of the Milk Sea as the sixth item, was absorbed by Nāgas. After that arose Bhagavān Dhanvantari, dressed in pure white robes and carrying a Kamaṇḍalu in his hand filled with Amṛtam. All were delighted at this sight. Next Mahālakṣmī made her appearance in all her glory with a lotus in her hand and seated in an open lotus flower. Gandharvas sang celestial songs in her presence; Apsarā women danced. For her bath, the Gaṅgā river arrived there with her tributaries. The Milk Sea itself took on physical form and offered her a garland of ever-fresh lotus flowers. Brahmā bedecked her with ornaments. After that Lakṣmīdevī, fully adorned in all her magnificent jewels, in the presence of all Devas, joined the bosom of Mahāviṣṇu. The Asuras were displeased at it. They snatched the pot of Amṛtam from Dhanvantari and fled away.

3) How Amṛtam was recovered. With the loss of Amṛtam, the Devas were in a fix. They began to consider how the pot of Amṛtam could be recovered. Accordingly Mahāviṣṇu transformed himself into a celestial virgin, Mohinī, of extraordinary beauty. She approached the Asuras as a shy girl. The Asuras were enchanted by her surpassing beauty. They asked her, "Who are you?" Looking down on the ground, Mohinī replied: "I am the little sister of Dhanvantari. By the time I came out of the Milk Sea, the Devas and Asuras had already gone. Being lonely I am going about in search of a suitable mate."

On hearing her words, the Asuras began to make friends with her one by one, determined not to waste this opportunity. They told her that she should distribute Amṛtam to all of them and in the end she should marry one of them. Mohinī agreed, but added: "All of you should close your eyes. I shall serve Amṛtam to all. He who opens his eyes last, must serve Amṛtam to me and he will marry me".

All of them accepted this condition. They sat in front of Mohinī with closed eyes. In a moment Mohinī left the place with the pot of Amṛtam and went to devaloka.

4) Rāhu's neck is cut. When the Asuras opened their eyes, Mohinī was not to be seen. Finding that they were betrayed, they were in great perplexity. All of them pursued Mohinī to devaloka. Devas had put the Sun and Moon gods on guard duty at the gates of devaloka. At the instance of the Asuras, Rāhu in disguise entered the divine assembly chamber. The Sun and Moon gods detected him and Viṣṇu with his weapon, Sudarśana Cakra cut open his neck. Swearing that he would wreak vengeance on the Sun and Moon Rāhu returned. In the 8th Skandha of Bhāgavata it is said that even now from time to time Rāhu swallows the Sun and Moon, but they escape through the open gash in his neck and this is known as solar eclipse and lunar eclipse.

5) Defeat of the Asuras. Indra and all other gods took Amṛtam. The enraged Asuras attacked the gods, who had gained strength and vigour by taking Amṛtam. The Asuras were driven away in all directions. All the three worlds began to enjoy glory and prosperity again.

6) Kalakūṭa. The story of how the deadly poison, Kālakūṭa arose at the churning of the ocean of Milk, is given in M.B., Ādi Parva, Chapter 18, Verses 42-45, as follows: After many precious things had come up Kālakūṭa poison with fumes and flames, appeared on the surface of the ocean. Its strong smell caused a stupor in all the three worlds. Fearing that the world will perish, Brahmā requested Śiva to swallow that poison. Śiva gulped it down, but stopped it in his throat. From that day he became "Nīlakaṇṭha".

7) The story of Airāvata. Indra's tusker Airāvata was responsible for the churning of the ocean of Milk. But in the Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 18, Verse 42 it is said that a white elephant with four tusks arose during the churning of the ocean of Milk and that Devendra caught and tamed it. This is an obvious contradiction. Besides, in Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa, Araṇyakāṇḍa, 14th Sarga, the wounded Jaṭāyu describing his family history to Śrī Rāma, gives the following account about the origin of Airāvata:

Kaśyapa, one of the Prajāpatis, married the eight daughters of Dakṣa. One of them named Krodhavaśā had ten daughters by Kaśyapa. They were: Mṛgī, Mṛgamadā, Hari, Bhadramadā, Mātaṅgī, Śārdūlī, Śvetā, Surabhi, Surasā and Kadru. Of them Bhadramadā gave birth to a daughter, Irāvati. The tusker Airāvata is Irāvatī's son.

An explanation for this discrepancy may be seen in Viṣṇu Purāṇa, 3rd Section, Chapter 1. Now six Manvantaras have passed (See 'MANVANTARA'). This is the seventh Manvantara. Each Manvantara has a new Indra. According to this, different Indras have their own Airāvatas. This is the only explanation for this apparent contradiction.

8) Amṛtam and Garuḍa. There is another story about Amṛtam which says that Garuḍa once went to devaloka and brought Amṛtam from there to be given to the Nāgas, but Devendra came down and took it back. This story is given in Mahābhārata from Chapter 27 onwards. Vinatā, a wife of Kaśyapa gave birth to Garuḍa and Kadru and her sister gave birth to the Nāgas. Once there was a dispute between Vinatā and Kadru. Vinatā said that the hairs on the tail of Uccaiśravas, Devendra's horse, were white but Kadru asserted that they were black. To settle the dispute they made a bet. The condition was that the loser must become the servant maid of the winner. As instructed by Kadru, some of the Nāgas went in advance and hung down from the tail of Uccaiśśravas, thus giving the false appearance of a tail with black hairs. By this trick Vinatā lost the bet and had to become Kadru's servant maid. As a result of it, the task of looking after Kadru's children became Garuḍa's duty. Kadru told him that if he fetched Amṛtam from devaloka and gave it to the Nāgas, she was prepared to release him from the bondage. So Garuḍa flew up to devaloka, fought with the gods and defeated them. He returned with the pot of Amṛtam and gave it to the Nāgas. The Nāgas went to take their bath after placing the pot on darbha grass spread on the floor. Just then Devendra swooped down and carried away the pot of Amṛtam to devaloka. When the Nāgas returned after their purifying bath, the pot was not to be seen. In their greed they began to lick the darbha grass on which the pot was placed. The sharp edge of the grass cut their tongues into two. This is why the Nāgas (snakes) came to have forked tongues.

Amṛtam which has been thus recovered after many such adventures, is still preserved carefully in devaloka. [(1) M.B., Ādi Parva, Chapter 17. (2) M.B., Ādi Parva, Chapter 27, verse 16. (3) M.B. AṀŚA. A sage of the family of Marīci.

1) Genealogy. He was descended from Viṣṇu through Brahmā, Marīci and Kaśyapa.

2) Birth. Marīci was one of the six sons, all ṛṣis, of Brahmā. These six sons, born parthogenetically of Brahmā, were : Marīci, Aṅgiras, Atri, Pulastya, Pulaha and Kratu. Marīci had a son named Kaśyapa. Kaśyapa married the thirteen daughters of Dakṣa. The eldest of them, Aditi, gave birth to twelve sons Dhātā, Aryaman, Mitra, Śakra, Varuṇa, Aṁśa, Bhaga, Vivasvān, Pūṣan, Savitā, Tvaṣṭā and Viṣṇu. Aṁśa is one of these twelve sons who have been called the twelve Ādityas. (See Chapter 65 of Ādi Parva of the Mahābhārata).

3) Events. The Mahābhārata says (Śloka 66, Chapter 123) that Aṁśa was present at the time of Arjuna's birth when several devas had come there to see the infant. In Śloka 34, Chapter 45 of Śalya Parva it is said that Aṁśa was present on the occasion of the Abhiṣeka of Skandadeva. Aṁśa is said to have presented to Skandadeva five good warriors : Parigha, Vaṭa, Bhīma, Dahana and Dahati.

AṀŚAPĀYA. Name of a priest (Ṛtvik) qualified to officiate at a sacrifice. This priest officiated at the sacrifice (yajña) performed by Brahmā at Puṣkarakṣetra. (See Chapter 34 of Padma Purāṇa).

AṀŚĀVATĀRA. The incarnation of God on earth is called avatāra. When the incarnation is only partial, that is, when only some of the divine elements incarnate, it is called aṁśāvatāra (Aṁśa=part). Chapters 54 to 64 of Ādi Parva of the Mahābhārata give us a list of the gods who have incarnated partially. The following list of devas and their aṁśāvatāras is based upon the account given in the fourth Skandha of Śrī Mahādevī Bhāgavata.

	Name of the god	Name of the aṁśāvatāra
1.	Kaśyapa	Vasudeva
2.	Ādiśeṣa	Balabhadra
3.	Nārāyaṇarṣi	Śrī Kṛṣṇa
4.	Yamadharma	Yudhiṣṭhira
5.	Aśvinīdevas	Nakula and Sahadeva
6.	Dharma	Vidura
7.	Śiva	Aśvatthāmā
8.	Gandharvarāja	Devaka
9.	Aṣṭavasu	Bhīṣma
10.	Marudgaṇa	Kṛpa ; Kṛtavarmā
11.	Aditi	Devakī
12.	Nararṣi	Arjuna
13.	Vāyu	Bhīmasena
14.	Sūrya	Karṇa
15.	Bṛhaspati	Droṇa
16.	Varuṇa	Śantanu
17.	Marut	Virāṭa
18.	Haṁsa	Dhṛtarāṣṭra
19.	Dvāpara	Śakuni
20.	Pāvaka	Dhṛṣṭadyumna
21.	Kali	Duryodhana
22.	Rākṣasa	Śikhaṇḍī
23.	Varuṇa	Drupada

AṀŚUDHANAPATTANA. Name of an ancient town in North India. Bharata passed through this town while going to Ayodhyā from Kekaya after Daśaratha's death. Vālmīki has described this town in the Rāmāyaṇa in this context.

AṀŚUMĀN. Name of a King belonging to the Solar dynasty (Sūrya Vaṁśa).

1) Genealogy. Aṁśumān was descended from Viṣṇu through Brahmā-Marīci-Kaśyapa-Vivasvān-Vaivasvatamanu-Ikṣvāku-Vikukṣi-Śaśāda-Purañjaya - Kakutstha - Anenas-Pṛthulāśva-Prasenajit - Yuvanāśva - Māndhātā-Purukutsa-Trasadasyu-Anaraṇya - Aryaśvan - Vasumanas-Sudhanvā-Traiyyāruṇa-Satyavrata-Triśaṅku-Hariścandra-Rohitāśva - Harita - Cuñcu - Sudeva - Bharuka-Bāhuka-Sagara-Asamañjas-Aṁśumān.

2) Birth. Sagara, a king of the Sūrya vaṁśa, (mentioned above) had two wives, Sumati (Vaidarbhī) and Keśinī (Saibā) by name. Keśinī gave birth to a son named Asamañjas. Aṁśumān was the son of Asamañjas and the father of the famous Bhagīratha. (See under the title, BHAGĪRATHA).

3) Some other details. Aṁśumān was one of the Kings who attended the Svayaṁvara of Pāñcālī. (Vide Śloka 11, Chapter 185 of Ādi Parva of the Mahābhārata).

AṀŚUMĀN II. There is a reference to one Aṁśumān in the course of the description of the Viśvedevas.

AṀŚUMĀN III. King of Bhoja who was killed by Droṇa in the war at Kurukṣetra (Vide Śloka 14, Chapter 6 of Karṇa Parva).

AṀŚUMATĪ. The daughter of the Gandharva King named Dramila. Her story is narrated in the Śiva Purāṇa to illustrate the benefits of performing the Pradoṣa-Vrata. Sūta expatiates on the importance and advantages of Pradoṣa-Vrata to a number of sages in Naimiśāraṇya. King Satyaratha was a scrupulous observer of Pradoṣa-Vrata. Unfortunately he defaulted in his observance of the Vrata owing to unavoidable circumstances and, after his death, was born again as the King of Vidarbha. He was killed in a battle by the King of Sālva and his wife, pregnant at that time, fled to a forest. She gave birth to a son on the bank of a river. Then, when she stepped into the river to drink some water, she was carried away by a crocodile. Presently a Brahmin woman named Uṣā happened to pass that way with her son named Śucivrata. Seeing a newborn infant there, that Brahmin woman took him, gave him the name, Dharmagupta and brought him up as her own son. According to the advice of a pious Brahmin named Śāṇḍilya, both Śucivrata and Dharmagupta started performing Pradoṣa-Vrata. Lord Śiva was pleased with them and gave them much wealth. Dharmagupta happened to meet Aṁśumatī, daughter of the Gandharva King, Dramila, one day in a forest and they fell in love with each other. Dramila came to know of their love and so gave his daughter in marriage to Dharmagupta. As a result of the wealth and power which he had acquired by observing strictly Pradoṣa-Vrata Dharmagupta was able to return to Vidarbha, defeat King S lva and regain his kingdom from him.

AMŪRTARAYAS. He was a renowned King of ancient Bhārata and the father of King Gaya. Amūrtarayas received a sword from Pūru. (M.B., Śānti Parva, Chapter 166, Verse 75).

ANĀDĪPAKA. (See Pañcatantra).

ANĀDHṚṢṬI I. A King of the Pūru dynasty.

1) Genealogy. Descended from Viṣṇu thus : Viṣṇu-Brahmā-Atri-Candra-Budha-Purūravas-Āyus - Nahuṣa - Yayāti-Pūru-Janamejaya - Prācinvan - Namasyu - Vītabhaya-Śuṇḍu-Bahuvidha-Saṁyāti-Rahovādī - Raudrāśvan-Anādhṛṣṭi.

Anādhṛṣṭi is a son born to Raudrāśva by Miśrakeśī, an Apsar woman. (M.B., Ādi Parva, Chapter 94, Verses 8-12). Anādhṛṣṭi has two synonyms, Ṛceyu and Anvagbhānu.

ANĀDHṚṢṬI II. Verse 58, Chapter 14 of Sabhā Parva mentions seven great Yādavas. One Anādhṛṣṭi is named amongst the seven. This Anādhṛṣṭi was present at the marriage of Abhimanyu at Ipaplavanagara. (M.B., Virāṭa Parva, Chapter 72, Verse 22). There was one Anādhṛṣṭi also amongst the warriors who encompassed Arjuna and Kṛṣṇa at the battle-field of Kurukṣetra. (M.B., Udyoga Parva, Chapter 151, Verse 67). He was the son of King Vṛddhakṣema. Hence he was called Vārddhakṣemi also.

ANĀDHṚṢYA. One of the Kauravas. (M.B., Ādi Parva, Chapter 67, Verse 105).

ANĀGATA. (See PAÑCATANTRA).

ANAGHA I. Son of Vasiṣṭha. He had seven sons, by his wife Ūrjā. They were: Rajas, Gotra, Ūrdhvabāhu, Savana, Anagha, Sutapas and Śukra. Holy characters, they became the saptarṣis of the age of the third Manu. (Manvantara).

ANAGHA II. was a Gandharva. He participated in the birthday celebrations of Arjuna. (M.B., Ādi Parva, Chapter 122, Verse 55).

ANAGHA III. A king called Anagha is referred to in Verse 22, Chapter 8 of M.B.

ANAGHA IV. Skanda has a synonym, Anagha as well. (M.B., Vana Parva, Chapter 232, Verse 5).

ANAGHA V. A bird named Anagha is mentioned among the children of Garuḍa. (M.B., Udyoga Parva, Chapter 101, Verse 12).

ANAGHA VI. Used as a synonym of Śiva. (M.B., Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 17, Verse 38).

ANAGHA VII. A synonym of Viṣṇu. (M.B., Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 149, Verse 29).

ANAGHAM. A place in ancient India. (M.B., Sabhā Parva, Chapter 30, Verse 9).

ANAGNI (S). They are Pitṛs. Pitṛs like Agniṣvāttas, Barhiṣads, Anagnis, Sāgnis were offsprings of Brahmā. Two damsels, Menā and Dhāriṇī were born to them of Svadhā. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 20).

ANALĀ I. A daughter of Dakṣa. Some of the other daughters are Aditi, Diti, Danu, Kālikā, Tāmrā, Krodhavaśā, Manu and Analā. These daughters were married to Kaśyapa, son of Marīci. Trees, creepers etc. owe their origin to Analā. (Vālmiki Rāmāyaṇa, Araṇya kāṇḍa, Canto 14).

ANALĀ II. Another Analā is referred to in Verse 71, Chapter 66 of Ādi Parva, in M.B. This Analā was the wife of Kaśyapa and a great granddaughter of Krodhavaśā, the daughter of Dakṣa. Krodhavaśā begot Śvetā, and she Surabhī ; Rohiṇī was the daughter of Surabhī and Analā was Rohiṇī's daughter.

ANALĀ III. Daughter of Mālyavān born of Sundarī. She was married to Viśvāvasu. Kumbhīnasī was her daughter. (Vālmiki Rāmāyaṇa, Uttarakāṇḍa).

ANĀLAMBA. A sacred pool. A bath in the pool is as efficacious as the Puruṣamedha yajña. (M.B., Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 25, Verse 32).

ANAMITRA I. A king of the Solar dynasty. The Ātmapurāṇa refers to him as the son of Nighna.

ANAMITRA II. Anamitra, son of Dhṛṣṭa is referred to as a king of the Yādavas in Ātmapurāṇa.

ANAMITRA III. One Anamitra, son of Vṛṣṇi is referred to in Matsyapurāṇa. He was the father of Śini.

ANAMITRA IV. A son born to King Kroṣṭā and his wife Mādrī.

ANAMITRA. Father of Cākṣuṣa, the Manu of the 6th Manvantara and son of sage Anamitra. (See Ānanda).

ANĀNATA. A sage. (Ṛgveda, Maṇḍala 4, Sūkta 175).

ANAṄGA I. Son of Kardamaprajāpati, and a king reputed for his love of the people and unparallelled integrity. He had a son called Atibala. (M.B., Śānti Parva, Chapter 59, Verse 91).

ANAṄGA II. (See Kāmadeva).

ANAṄGA. A river in ancient India. (M.B., Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 9, Verse 35).

ANANTA I. (ĀDIŚEṢA).

1) Genealogy. Mahāviṣṇu begot Brahmā and he the Prajāpatis and Ananta (Ādiśeṣa) is one of the Prajāpatis. (Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa, Araṇyakāṇḍa, Canto 14, Verse 7). Ananta is also referred to as the son of Kaśyapa, one of the Prajāpatis born of Kadrū. (M.B., Ādi Parva, Chapter 105, Verse 41). Also Balabhadrarāma, elder brother of Śrī Kṛṣṇa was a partial incarnation of Ananta.

2) Differences with mother. Vinatā and Kadrū were two wives of Kaśyapa prajāpati. Garuḍa was born as Vinatā's son and numerous serpents like Ananta, Vāsuki, Takṣaka, Kārkkoṭaka were sons of Kadrū. Once a controversy developed between Vinatā and Kadrū, the latter saying that there were a few black hairs on the tail of Airāvata and the former denying it. It was agreed that she who proved wrong in the argument would become the slave of the other. To prove herself to be right Kadrū, the same night, asked her sons to go and stay suspended in the hairs of Airāvata's tail. Some of the sons agreed to do so, while her other (prominent) sons like Ananta expressed their disincli nation to do such an unethical act. Kadrū cursed these disobedient children of hers to die at the serpent yajña of Janamejaya, whereupon Ananta and his supporters departed in sorrow. (M.B., Ādi Parva, Chapter 65).

3) Ananta's new engagement. Departing thus from his mother Ananta visited sacred centres like Gandhamādana, Badarī and practised austerities. And, Brahma appeared before Ananta and asked him not to worry, but to go to the nether world and support the world on his hoods. Brahmā also told him that Garuḍa would render him all help in the new task. Blessed thus by Brahmā, Ananta gladly took up the new job. (M.B., Ādi Parva, Chapter 36, Verse 24).

4) Ananta has another abode in the palace of Varuṇa in the west. (M.B., Udyoga Parva, Chapter 110, Verse 18).

5) Ananta's prowess. About Ananta's prowess Viṣṇu Purāṇa has the following to say : At the bottom of Pātāla there is a base (Tāmasic) form of Viṣṇu called Ādiśeṣa. Even the Dānavas and the Daityas are not able to describe the attributes of that form. The Siddhas call this Ādiśeṣa Ananta who is worshipped by Devas and ṛṣis. Ananta has 1000 heads and the Svastika mark which is clearly visible is his ornament. The 1000 gems in his head illuminate all regions, and he renders the Asuras powerless for the good of all the worlds. Ādiśeṣa whose eyes ever rotate due to the overflow of his prowess, and who wears blue apparel and garlands of white gems shines forth like another Mount Kailāsa beautified with garlands of clouds and by the flow of the Gaṅgā. Śrī Devī and Vāruṇī Devī serve Ananta who holds in one hand a lāṁgala and in the other a mace (mūsala). As the deluge (end of a yuga Kalpānta) approaches Rudra emanates from the faces of Ananta and consumes the three worlds. Ādiśeṣa dwells in the nether world wearing the whole earth as a crown. Even the Devas cannot gauge his nature, shape, prowess etc. When he yawns the earth and waters shake and shiver. The Gandharvas, Nāgas, Cāraṇas etc. fail to understand the real extent of his attributes, and that is why this strange being is called Ananta (endless). It was by worshipping Ananta and by his grace that sage Garga was able to master the sciences of astronomy and causation (nimitta). (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Part 2, Chapter 5).

6) The land of Ananta. Pātāla is Ananta's world, and at its bottom there is a spot called Ananta. That spot is 30000 yojanas in extent, and here lives Ananta. He is known as Saṁkarṣaṇa also. He bears the whole nether world as though it were a mustard seed. And, when he thinks of destroying the entire world the Rudra called Saṅkarṣaṇa will appear with other Rudras and weapons like tridents (Triśūla). Other serpents bow at the feet of Ananta, who is supremely beautiful with divine lustre. (Devī Bhāgavata, Skandha 8).

ANANTA II. A synonym of the Sun God. (M.B., Vana Parva, Chapter 3, Verse 24).

ANANTA III. A synonym of Śrī Kṛṣṇa. (M.B., Udyoga Parva, Chapter 70, Verse 14).

ANANTA IV. One of the military captains of Skanda. (M.B., Śalya Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 57).

ANANTA V. A synonym of Viṣṇu. (M.B., Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 149, Verse 83).

ANANTA VI. A synonym of Śiva. (M.B., Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 17, Verse 135).

ANANTĀ. Wife of Janamejaya, son of King Pūru.

ANANTA. The abode of Ananta in the nether regions. (Devī Bhāgavata, Canto 8). (There are certain indications that Ananta refers to Trivandrum, Capital city of the Kerala State. Explanations of words like Svarga, Bhūmi, Pātāla, Ananta, Deva, Asura, throw much light on this inference).

ANANTAVIJAYAM. The conch of Dharmaputra. It was blown during the great war. (M.B., Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 25, Verse 15).

ANAPĀYACOLA. A King of the Cola country, 1063-1112. The Tamil poet Sekhilar who composed the twelfth song of the great Śaiva religious book called Tirumurayil was a minister of this King.

ANARAKATĪRTHA. A sacred pool. Brahmā, along with Viṣṇu and others bathe daily in this sacred pool. Therefore, it is said that the sins of all those who bathe in the pool will be washed off.

ANARAṆYA (ANĀRAṆYA). A King of the Ikṣvāku dynasty. (M.B., Ādi Parva, Chapter 1, Verse 236). For genealogy, see IKṢVĀKU. Anaraṇya was a vegetarian. (M.B., Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 115, Verse 59). Rāvaṇa once attacked his country whom he challenged to a duel. In the duel Anaraṇya died. Before dying he cursed Rāvaṇa that he would be killed by Rāma, son of King Daśaratha. (Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa, Chapter 45).

ANĀRAṆYA. (See ANARAṆYA).

ANARKA(M). A king born in King Kaipla's dynasty. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 278).

ANASA (ASAṀGA). A brother of Akrūra. (Bhāgavata, Daśama Skandha).

ANASŪYĀ. Wife of Sage Atri, son of Brahmā. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Part 1, Chapter 10).

1) Genealogy. From Mahāviṣṇu were born in order Brahmā, Svāyambhuva Manu, Devahūti, Anasūyā. To Svāyambhuva, son of Brahmā, was born by his wife Śatarūpā five children : Uttānapāda, Priyavrata, Āhuti. Devahūti and Prasūti and Devahūti was married to Kardama, son of Brahmā. They begot two daughters, Kalā and Anasūyā. Marīci married Kalā and Atri married Anasūyā. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 1, Chapter 4).

2) The Tapaśśakti of Anasūyā. Once upon a time, rains having failed for ten years the whole world sweated in agony and river Gaṅgā got dried up. Famine stalked the world. In this dire contingency it was the tapaśśakti of Anasūyā that made trees bear fruits and Gaṅgā to flow again. Also, she converted ten days into nights on the request of the Devas.

During their forest life Rāma and Sītā reached the hermitage of sage Atri, and the sage and Anasūyā treated the guests sumptuously. The above story about the tapaśśakti of Anasūyā was told then by Atri. The story helped to increase Rāma's respect for Anasūyā. Anasūyā gave Sītā all proper advice. She taught Sītā that absolute service to husband is the greatest tapas ordained to women. Anasūyā gave to Sītā a very sacred garland and a sublime gem. And, after that Rāma and Sītā left the hermitage. (Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa, Ayodhyākāṇḍa, Cantos 117 and 118.).

3) Sons of Anasūyā. She had three sons: Dattātreya, Durvāsas and Candra. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Part 1, Chapter 10). (The reason for Mahāviṣṇu being born as Dattātreya, Śiva as Durvāsas and Brahmā as Candra to Anasūyā is given under Atri).

ANAUPAMYĀ. Wife of Bāṇāsura. Once she developed an amorous interest in Nārada, which led to some domestic quarrels. (Padma Purāṇa, Ādikāṇḍa, Chapter 14).

ANAVADYĀ. Wife of Kaśyapa, this Apsarā woman participated in the birthday celebrations of Arjuna. (M.B., Ādi Parva, Chapter 122, Verse 62).

ANḌA.* Sūta, the disciple of Vyāsa said to the Munis at the Naimiśāraṇya about the creation of the Universe: In the beginning in the heavy universal darkness, the first seed of life (aṇḍa) appeared. (M.B., Ādi Parva, Chapter 1, Verse 28).

ANḌA. The primal seed (Aṇḍa=egg or seed) from which everything was born.

AṆḌAKAṬĀHA. The entire universe consisting of the fourteen worlds, which are: Bhūloka, Bhuvarloka, Svarloka, Maharloka, Janarloka, Tapoloka, Satyaloka, Pātāla, Rasātala, Mahātala, Talātala, Sutala, Vitala, Atala.

ANDHA I. An offspring of Kaśyapa by his wife Kadrū. (M.B., Udyoga Parva, Chapter 103, Verse 16).

ANDHA II. There is a story in M.B., about a huntsman, Vaṭaka killing one Andha, an evil being. Andha whose form and shape were that of an animal, by doing tapas, became recipient of a boon for destroying everything. Brahmā rendered him blind lest the world perish, and that animal began to be known as Andha. When Andha began his programme of complete destruction many people rushed up to Viśvāmitra in his abode in the forest. Andha followed them. But, Viśvāmitra, in the interests of self-protection pointed out the refugees to Andha. As punishment for this sin Viśvāmitra had once to go to hell. This story was related by Kṛṣṇa to Arjuna during the great war at Kurukṣetra, and the reason for telling the story was this: During the fight Arjuna hesitated to aim arrows against Karṇa. Enraged by this attitude of Arjuna Dharmaputra asked him to hand over his famous bow, Gāṇḍīva to Śrī Kṛṣṇa. Feeling insulted at this demand Arjuna, all on a sudden, drew his sword to do away with Dharmaputra. Śrī Kṛṣṇa, prevented Arjuna from attacking his noble brother, and in this context related the above story to prove the truth that sins committed even unwittingly will lead one, as in the case of Viśvāmitra to hell. (M.B., Karṇa Parva, Chapter 69).

ANDHA III. Upamanyu, the excellent disciple of Dhaumya, consumed the leaves of a tree which made him blind. (See Ayodhadhaumya) (M.B., Ādi Parva, Chapter 3).

ANDHAKA I. There was a very renowned king called Andhaka in the Yadu dynasty. All kings belonging to this dynasty used to be called Andhakas.

ANDHAKA II. Verse 12, Chapter 4 of M.B., Udyoga Parva refers to another King called Andhaka. The Pāṇḍavas had sent to him a messenger soliciting military help.

ANDHAKA III. An Asura.

1) Birth. This Asura was the foster son of Hiraṇyākṣa. Śiva was really his father. While once Śiva was immersed in yoga his daughter closed his eyes playfully with her hands, and lo! a darkness rose and enveloped the whole place. From that darkness, with a sound as that of thunderbolt, appeared a Rākṣasa. He got the name Andhaka as he was born from darkness. At that time Hiraṇyākṣa was doing tapas for a son. Śiva appeared before him and bestowing on him Andhaka as a foster son said as follows: "If he (Andhaka) earns the hatred of the world or desires even the mother of the three worlds or kills brahmins I will myself burn him to ashes". After saying this Śiva disappeared. (Vāmana Purāṇa, Chapter 63).

2) Andhaka desires Pārvatī with lust. One day overcome by erotic passion Andhaka said to his henchmen as follows: "He is my true friend who brings Śiva's consort, Pārvatī to me. Yes, he is my brother, nay, father even." Hearing these ravings of Andhaka, Prahlāda went to him and convinced him that Pārvatī, in fact was his mother. But Andhaka was not quietened. Then Prahlāda explained to him the gravity of the sin of desiring other people's wives. Even this had no effect on Andhaka. He sent Śambarāsura to Śiva to ask for and bring Pārvatī to him. Śiva sent word to Andhaka that if the latter would defeat him in the game of dice Pārvatī would be sent to him. Andhaka got enraged and rushed to mount Mandara and began a fight with Śiva.

3) Death. Defeated in the encounter, Andhaka craved for Śiva's pardon. He admitted that Pārvatī was his mother. He also prayed for Śiva's blessings for removal of his Asurahood. Śiva granted him the prayers. The sins and Asurahood of Andhaka were thus ended. Śiva made him the head of the Asuras, named Bhṛṅgi. (Vāmana Purāṇa, Chapter 63 etc.).

ANDHAKA (M). A sacred pool. A dip in this pool will bring all the benefits of a Puruṣamedha yajña. (M.B., Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 25, Verses 32, 33).

ANDHAKĀRAKA (M). A place in the island of Krauñca. (M.B., Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 12, Verse 18).

ANDHAKARAM. A mountain in the island of Krauñca. (M.B., Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 12, Verse 22).

ANDHAKŪPA (M). In the Devī Bhāgavata Mahāviṣṇu describes 28 hells to Nārada, and Andhakūpam is one of them. (see Naraka). Andhakūpa is reserved for those who kill either Brahmins or devotees of God or Sannyāsins (holy people). This hell abounds in cruel beasts like the bear and leopard, evil birds like the eagle, reptiles like the snake and scorpion and dirty insects like bugs and mosquitos. The sinner will have to put up with all these sufferings in hell till the period of his punishment expires. (Devī Bhāgavata, Aṣṭama Skandha).

ANDHATĀMISRA. One of the 28 hells. (See Naraka). This hell is destined for wives who cheat their husbands and consume food and for husbands who cheat their wives and eat food. Agents of Yama get hold of such sinners and push them into the Andhatāmisra. As the cords of the agents with which they bind the sinners get tighter around their bodies they faint and fall down owing to unbearable pain. When they regain consciousness and try to run away and escape, the Agents of Yama again bind them with the cord. (Devī Bhāgavata, Aṣṭama Skandha).

ANDHRA (ĀNDHRA). This is the Andhra Pradesh in modern India. It has to be surmised that this place was very famous during the period of the composition of the Mahābhārata. (M.B., Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 9, Verse 49).

ANDHRA. Warriors from Andhra were called Andhras. (M.B., Droṇa Parva, Chapter 4, Verse 8).

ANDHRAKA I. Verse 24, Chapter 4 of Sabhā Parva, describes this king of Andhra Deśa as having sat in the assembly hall of the palace constructed by Maya at Indraprastha for the Pāṇḍavas. He was also present at the Rājasūya Yajña performed by Yudhiṣṭhira. (M.B., Sabhā Parva, Chapter 34, Verse 11).

ANDHRAKA II. The warriors of Andhra Deśa were called Andhrakas also. (M.B., Karṇa Parva, Chapter 20, Verses 10 and 11). In the Bhārata war the King of Pāṇḍya defeated those warriors. Kṛṣṇa incited Arjuna to kill the Andhras and the Pulindas. (M.B., Karṇa Parva, Chapter 73, Verses 19 to 21).

ANDHRAKA III. Andhrakas are classed with Mlecchas (lowest caste of people) in Verse 42, Chapter 207 of Śānti Parva.

ANENAS I. A king of the Lunar dynasty (Candra Vaṁśa).

1) Genealogy. Descended from Viṣṇu in the following order: Brahmā - Atri - Candra - Budha - Purūravas-Āyus-Anenas.

2) Birth. Purūravas had by his wife Urvaśī six sons named Āyus, Śrutāyus, Satyāyus, Raya, Vijaya and Jaya. Of them, Āyus, the eldest, had five sons named Nahuṣa, Kṣatravṛddha, Rāji, Rambha and Anenas. Nahuṣa had a son named Yayāti to whom were born the sons Pūru, Yadu and others. The two dynasties of Yadu and Pūru (Yaduvaṁśa and Pūruvaṁśa) originate from them. To Anenas, brother of Nahuṣa, a son named Śuddha was born. Śuddha begot Śuci who begot Trikakup and a son named Śāntarayas was born to Trikakup.

ANENAS II. A Mahārāja of the Ikṣvāku dynasty.

Genealogy. From Viṣṇu descended thus: Kaśyapa-Vaivasvata Manu - Ikṣvāku-Śaśāda-Kakutstha-Anenas.

AṄGA. A King belonging to the Candra vaṁśa. (Lunar dynasty).

1) Genealogy. Descended from Viṣṇu in the following order: Brahmā - Atri - Candra-Budha-Purūravas-Āyus-Nahuṣa - Yayāti - Anudruhyu - Sabhānara - Kālanara-Sṛñjaya-Titikṣa-Kuśadhṛta-Homa-Sutapas-Bali-Aṅga.

2) Birth. Aṅga, Kaliṅga, Suhma, Kaṇḍra, Vaṅga, Adrupa and Anaśābhu are the seven sons born to Bali, the son of Sutapas, by his wife Suteṣṇā, and the King Aṅga is one of them. There is a story about the birth of these sons.

Once there lived a hermit named Utatthya. He was the elder brother of Bṛhaspati. One day when Mamatā, Utatthya's wife, was pregnant, Bṛhaspati approached her with carnal desires. In spite of her efforts to dissuade her brother-in-law from his attempts she could not prevail upon him. He forced her and satisfied his desire. The child in her womb protested and kicked the sperm of Bṛhaspati out into the floor. Bṛhaspati got angry and cursed the child in the womb: "May you fall in perpetual darkness". So the child was born blind and remained blind throughout his life. Hence he got the name 'Dīrghatamas'. Dīrghatamas married Pradveṣi. A son named Gautama was born to them. The duty of supporting Dīrghatamas fell upon the wife and the son, who put him on a raft and pushed him astray into the River Ganges. King Bali, who was bathing in the river saw this. He rescued the hermit and took him to the palace and pleasing him by hospitality, requested him to beget children in his wife Suteṣṇā, who detesting the idea sent a Śūdrā woman Dhātreyī in her stead and eleven children were born to them. By and by Dīrghatamas came to know of the deceit played by Suteṣṇā on him and he became very angry. But the King pacified him and pleased him again and Dīrghatamas begot five sons by Suteṣṇā. They were Aṅga, Vaṅga, Kaliṅga, Pauṇḍra and Suhma. Dīrghatamas blessed them that they would become very famous. Aṅga, Vaṅga, Kaliṅga, Pauṇḍra and Suhma were the five kingdoms ruled by Aṅga, Vaṅga, Kaliṅga, Pauṇḍra and Suhma respectively. These five are the famous Kings of the Bāli family. (Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 104).

3) How Aṅga got children. Once Aṅga performed a horse sacrifice. But the gods did not appear to receive oblations. Holy seers said that the Gods refused to accept the oblations offered by the King because he was childless. So he performed the sacrifice called Putrakāmeṣṭi (Sacrifice to get a son) and from the sacrificial fire arose a divine person with a golden flask of pudding, which he offered to the King and his queen. The King and the queen Sunīthā ate the pudding, as a result of which a son was born to them. He was named Vena. This son was wicked. Because of his wickedness the King became so miserable that he left his kingdom and went on a pilgrimage. Since there was no other means the people enthroned Vena, who tortured his subjects beyond limit. (Bhāgavata, 4th Skandha, Chapters Band 14).

AṄGADA I. A son of Bāli.

1) Genealogy. Descended from Viṣṇu in the following order : Brahmā-Kaśyapa-Indra-Bāli-Aṅgada.

2) Birth. Aṅgada was the son of Bāli (the son of Indra) born of his wife Tārā. (Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 82, Stanza 28).

a) Aṅgada was a member of the group of monkeys sent by Sugrīva to find out Sītā. (Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa, Araṇyakāṇḍa).

b) He was the foremost among the group of monkeys who entered Madhuvana and ate the berries in the garden, on their return after the search for Sītā.

c) Aṅgada was sent to the court of Rāvaṇa as a messenger by Śrī Rāma. (Rāmāyaṇa, Yuddhakāṇḍa).

d) In the battle between Rāma and Rāvaṇa Aṅgada combated with Indrajit. (Rāmāyaṇa, Yuddhakāṇḍa).

e) After his combat with Indrajit, Aṅgada and his followers led an attack on the army of Rāvaṇa. (Rāmāyaṇa, Yuddhakāṇḍa).

f) After the battle, Śrī Rāma anointed Aṅgada as the heir-apparent to the Kingdom of Kiṣkindhā. The necklace which Bāli had given on his death to Sugrīva, was returned to Aṅgada. (Uttara Rāmāyaṇa).

g) Śrī Rāma returned to Ayodhyā after his forest life and celebrated a horse sacrifice. The sacrificial horse was caught and detained by King Suratha. Coming to know of this Śatrughna sent Aṅgada to deal with Suratha, who said that the horse was detained with the intention of meeting with Śrī Rāma personally. Aṅgada returned and told Śatrughna what Suratha had said to him. (Padma Purāṇa, Pātāla Khaṇḍa).

AṄGADA II. There was a prince called Aṅgada among the mighty men-of-arms on the side of the Kauravas. He got into action on the battle-field on the twelfth day of the battle. (M.B., Droṇa Parva, Chapter 25, Stanza 38).

AṄGADA III. Śrutakīrti the wedded wife of Śatrughna, brother of Śrī Rāma, had two sons called Aṅgada and Chandraketu. (Uttara Rāmāyaṇa).

AṄGADA IV. In the Bhāgavata we see another Aṅgada who was the son of Gada, the brother of Kṛṣṇa by his wife, Bṛhatī.

AṄGAKARMA. Actions on the stage are of two kinds. One is to express by the major organs of the body. The other is to express by the minor organs of the body. Head etc. are major organs and eyebrow etc. are minor organs. Actions expressed by major organs are called Aṅgakarma and those by minor organs are called Pratyaṅga Karma. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 341).

AṄGĀLAMMA. She is the wife of Vīrabhadra, a servant of Śiva. She has a rope in her left hand, with which she hauls up the spirits of the dead.

AṄGA (M). The kingdom ruled by King Aṅga. Other details:

1) The Dynasty. The first King of the Aṅga dynasty was Aṅga the son of Bali. Anagābhu, Draviratha, Dharmaratha, Romapāda (Lomapāda), Caturaṅga, Pṛthulākṣa, Bṛhadratha, Bṛhanmanas, Jayadratha, Vijaya, Dṛḍhavrata, Satyakarmā, Atiratha, Karṇa, Vṛṣasena and others were kings of this dynasty. Karṇa was the adopted son of Atiratha. During the period of the Mahābhārata, Kings of the Atiratha family were under the sway of the Candra vaṁśa (Lunar dynasty) kings such as Dhṛtarāṣṭra and Pāṇḍu. (For further informations see the word Atiratha).

2) How Karṇa became the king of Aṅga. A contest in archery and the wielding of other weapons was going on in Hastināpura, the competitors being the Kauravas and the Pāṇḍavas. The status of Karṇa, who appeared on the side of the Kauravas, was questioned by the Pāṇḍavas on the occasion and Duryodhana, who always stood on his dignity, anointed Karṇa as the King of Aṅga, on the spot. (M.B., Ādi Parva, Chapter 136).

3) Drought in the kingdom of Aṅga. Lomapāda (Romapāda) the king of Aṅga once deceived a hermit Brahmin. So all the Brahmins quitted the country and thereafter there was no rainfall in the country for several years. The sages of the country began to think on the means of bringing about rain. One day they approached the King and told him that the only way to get rain was to bring the great hermit Ṛṣyaśṛṅga to the country.

Once Kaśyapa happened to see Urvaśī and he had seminal flow. The sperm fell in a river. A deer swallowed it along with the water it drank. It gave birth to a human child with horns on the head. This child was called Ṛṣyaśṛṅga. It was brought up by a hermit called Vibhāṇḍaka in his hut. Ṛṣyaśṛṅga had never seen women and by virtue of this, there occurred rainfall wherever he went. The King Lomapāda sent some courtesans to the forest to attract Ṛṣyaśṛṅga, who following them arrived at the court of Lomapāda the King of Aṅga and the King gave Ṛṣyaśṛṅga, as a gift, his daughter Śāntā. Thus the country got rain. This Lomapāda was a friend of Daśaratha. (Mahābhārata, Araṇya Parva, Chapters 110 to 113).

4) How the Kingdom got the name Aṅga. One opinion is that the Kingdom got its name from the King Aṅga who ruled over it. Another opinion is that the king got his name from the country he ruled. However there is a story revealing how the country came to be called Aṅga.

In the realm of God, preliminary steps were being taken for making Śrī Parameśvara wed Pārvatī. According to the instructions of Devendra, Kāmadeva (the Lord of Love—Cupid) was trying to break the meditation of Śiva and when Śiva opened his third eye, fire emitted from it and Anaṅga (Kāmadeva) was burned to ashes. It was in the country of Aṅga that the ashes of the 'aṅga' (Body) of Kāmadeva fell and from that day onwards the country came to be called Aṅga and Kāmadeva, 'Anaṅga' (without body). (Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa, Bālakāṇḍa, Sarga 26).

5) Other informations.

(1) It is mentioned in the Hindi Dictionary, 'Śabda Sāgara' that the kingdom of Aṅga embracing Bhagatpur and Muṁger in Bihar had its capital at Campāpurī and that the country had often stretched from Vaidyanāthanāma to Bhuvaneśvar.

(2) Arjuna had visited the Kingdom of Aṅga also during his pilgrimage. (M.B., Ādi Parva, Chapter 219, Stanza 9).

(3) The King of Aṅga was present at the sacrifice of Rājasūya (Royal consecration) celebrated by Dharmaputra, when the Pāṇḍavas were living at Indraprastha. (M.B., Sabhā Parva, Chapter 52, Stanza 16).

(4) On one occasion Śrī Kṛṣṇa defeated the Aṅgas in a battle. (M.B., Droṇa Parva, Chapter 11, Stanza 15).

(5) Paraśurāma had defeated the Aṅgas once. (M.B., Droṇa Parva, Chapter 7, Stanza 12).

(6) In the battle of Kurukṣetra between the Pāṇḍavas and the Kauravas, on the sixteenth day of the battle, the heroes of Aṅga made an onslaught on Arjuna. (M.B., Karṇa Parva, Chapter 17, Stanza 12).

(7) The Aṅgas attacked the armies of Dhṛṣṭadyumna and the King of Pāñcāla. (M.B., Karṇa Parva, Chapter 22, Stanza 2).

(8) A low caste man from Aṅga attacked Bhīma, who killed the man and his elephant. (Mahābhārata, Droṇa Parva, Chapter 26, Stanzas 14 to 17).

AṄGAMALAJA (M) (MALADA—KARŪṢA).

General Information. (1) This was a country in ancient Bhārata. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 9, Stanza 50).

(2) Viśvāmitra had taken to the forest from Ayodhyā Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa to protect the hermits and their yāgas. On the way they entered the Tāṭaka forest. Viśvāmitra told the boys in answer to their questions thus : "In olden days this place was a countryside known as Aṅgamalaja or Malada or Karūṣa. There is a reason for calling the country by that name. Indra killed Vṛtra and thereby incurred the sin of Brahmahatyā and so he came away to this country and lived here for a while. The Gods found him out here. They poured water on the head of the unclean Indra and the dirt, hunger, excreta and Karūṣa having been separated from his body fell on the soil of this place and was mingled with it. Indra's body became pure. As excreta, Karūṣa etc. were mingled with the soil of this country, it came to be called Aṅgamalaja, Malada or Karūṣa from that day onwards. One part of the country was called Malada and the other part Karūṣa. Indra, having been purified by washing in water returned to heaven with the gods. After that this country became uninhabited for a long time. The horrible Tāṭaka lives in this forest now". (Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa, Bālakāṇḍa, Sarga 24).

AṄGAPRADAKṢIṆĀ. Rolling behind a chariot round the temple as a vow.

AṄGĀRA. A king of ancient India. He was defeated by Māndhātā in a battle. (Mahābhārata, Śānti Parva, Chapter 29, Stanza 88).

AṄGARĀJAVAṀŚA. (THE DYNASTY OF AṄGA KINGS). Descended from Viṣṇu in the following order: Brahmā - Atri-Candra-Budha-Purūravas-Āyus - Nahuṣa-Yayāti. Yadu, Turvasu, Druhyu and Anudruhyu were the four sons of Yayāti. The Aṅga dynasty starts from Turvasu, one of the four. The following are the descendants of Turvasu. Varga was the son of Turvasu, Gobhānu, the son of Varga, Traiśāni the son of Gobhānu, Karandhama, the son of Traiśāni, Marutta, the son of Karandhama, Duṣyanta, the son of Marutta, Varūtha, the son of Duṣyanta, Gāṇḍira the son of Varūtha, and Gāndāra the son of Gāṇḍira. The five powerful peoples, the Gāndhāras, the Colas, the Keralas, the Pāṇḍyas and the Kolas have descended from Gāndhāra.

Two sons, Druhyu and Babhrusetu were born to Gāndhāra. Babhrusetu begot Purovasu; Purovasu begot Gāndhārī. From Gāndhārī Gharma was born, from Gharma Ghṛta was born, from Ghṛta Viduṣa was born, and from Viduṣa Pracetas was born. Pracetas got a hundred children of whom the prominent were Anidra, Sabhānara, Cākṣuṣa and Parameṣu. To Sabhānara was born Kālānala and Sṛñjaya to Kālānala, Purañjaya to Sṛñjaya and Janamejaya to Purañjaya. Mahāsāla was the son of Janamejaya; Mahāmanas the son of Mahāsāla, and Uśinara the son of Mahāmanas. To Uśīnara were born Nṛga, Nara, Kṛmi, Suvrata and Śibi by his wives Nṛgā, Narā, Kṛmi, Daśā and Dṛṣadvatī respectively. To Śibi were born four sons called Pṛthudarbha, Vīraka, Kaikaya and Bhadraka. Four separate kingdoms arose in the names of them. Uśīnara had another son called Titikṣu. From Titikṣu was born Ruṣadratha; from Ruṣadratha was born Paila, from Paila was born Sutapas and from Sutapas was born the great hermit Bāli. From Bāli, Aṅga, Vaṅga, Kaliṅga, Puṇḍra, Bāleya and Bālayogi were born. To Aṅga was born Dadhivāhana. The King Draviratha was the son of Dadhivāhana, Dharmaratha the son of Draviratha, Citraratha the son of Dharmaratha, and Satyaratha was the son of Citraratha. To Satyaratha was born Lomapāda; to Lomapāda was born Caturaṅga; to Caturaṅga was born Pṛthulākṣa, to Pṛthulākṣa was born Campa; to Campa was born Haryaṅga, to Haryaṅga was born Bhadraratha, to Bhadraratha was born Bṛhatkarmā, to Bṛhatkarmā was born Bṛhadbhānu, to Bṛhadbhānu was born Bṛhadātmā, to Bṛhadātmā was born Jayadratha, to Jayadratha was born Bṛhadratha and to Bṛhadratha was born Viśvajit. After that Karṇa became the King of Aṅga. The son of Karṇa was Vṛṣasena and the son of Vṛṣasena was Pṛthusena. These are the kings of the Aṅga dynasty. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 277.)

AṄGĀRAKA I. An Asura who took the form of a pig. The story of how this Asura was killed by his daughter Aṅgāravatī, is given below.
Long ago there was an emperor named Mahendravarmā in Ujjayinī. His son Mahāsena did penance for a long time to get a wife and a sword. At last Devī appeared and granted the boon: "My son! take this extraordinary sword. So long as you have this sword, your enemies will not prevail against you. Aṅgāravatī, the renowned beauty of the three worlds, who is the daughter of the Asura Aṅgāraka, will become your wife in due course. As you do horrible deeds, you will be called Caṇḍamahāsena". He was given the sword and a tusker called Naḍāgiri. One day Mahāsena went to the forest for hunting. He saw a very large pig. The King used his arrows. But they did little harm to the pig. Moreover it turned the chariot of the King over to one side and ran to a cave. The King followed it with fury. On the way he sat on the bank of a lake with wonder, for a lady of exquisite beauty was walking along the mossy turf in the midst of some maids. Slowly she approached the King and talked with him. The young lady had entirely captured the heart of the King, who told her everything. She began to weep. "Who are you? Why do you weep?" The King asked her. She replied with a deep sigh. "The pig you saw, is my father Aṅgārakāsura. His body is as hard as diamond and not vulnerable to any sort of weapon. These maids have been caught by him from various royal houses and brought here for my help. My name is Aṅgāravatī. My father was changed to a giant by a curse. Now he is asleep discarding the form of pig. When he wakes up, filled with hunger and thirst, he will do you harm. My tears flowed out in the form of heated life-breaths, when I thought of these things."
The King said, "Go and sit by him and cry when he wakes up. He will ask the reason. Then tell him that you had been crying, when you thought how forlorn you would be without a mate, in case your father was killed by somebody". Aṅgāravatī did as she was told. Hearing her words Aṅgāraka said, "My daughter! No body can kill me. My body is made of diamond. There is only one vulnerable point in my body which is on my left forearm and it is always covered with my bow."
The king hid himself closely and heard everything. He fought with the Asura and hitting at the vulnerable point killed him. The king married Aṅgāravatī and took her to his palace. Two sons were born to him. They were called Gopālaka and Pālaka. By the grace of Indra a daughter also was born to him by her and she was Vāsavadattā, the wife of the famous Udayana. (Kathāsaritsāgara, Kathāmukhalambaka, Taraṅga 3).

AṄGĀRAKA II. A prince named Aṅgāraka is seen to have been the descendant of Jayadratha, the King of Sauvīra. (Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 265, Stanza 10).

AṄGĀRAKA III. A planet named Maṅgala which is a satellite of Brahmā is seen to have been called by the name Aṅgāraka also. (Mahābhārata, Sabhā Parva, Chapter 11, Stanza 29).

AṄGĀRAKA IV. We see one Aṅgāraka among the one hundred and eight sons of the Sun. (Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 3, Stanza 10).

AṄGĀRAKĀ. (SIṀHIKĀ).
1) Genealogy. Descended in the following order from Viṣṇu. Brahmā-Marīci-Kaśyapa-Aṅgārakā.
2) Birth. In the battle between the Gods and the Asuras, most of the Asuras were killed and one Asura fled from the clutches of death to Pātāla (the nether world). Surasā was the daughter of that Asura. Kaśyapa married Surasā. To them were born the two daughters, Aṅgārakā (Siṁhikā) and Ajāmukhī, and four sons, called Śūrapadma, Siṁhavaktra, Tārakāsura and Gomukha. Thus Siṁhikā is the sister of Tārakāsura. (Skanda Purāṇa, Asura Kāṇḍa).
Other details. This giantess Aṅgārakā had a clash once, with Hanūmān. Sugrīva had sent a large number of monkeys under the leadership of Hanumān to search for Sītā. He gave Hanūmān certain instructions regarding the route he had to follow. Sugrīva said, "There is a giantess in the middle of that Southern Sea. Her name is Aṅgāra. She pulls the shadow towards her and feeds on the object of the shadow."
From this it is clear that she was a giantess who lived in the sea between Laṅkā and South India. She knew the art of bringing to her side, anybody who passed over the sea, by pulling at his shadow. When Hanūmān jumped to Laṅkā from the mountain of Mahendra the giantess attacked Hanūmān. It is seen that the name

Siṁhikā also is used for Aṅgārakā. Hanūmān who was subjected to the excessive attraction of Siṁhikā, felt a great storm raging round him. Finally he found her out, a monster with such an uncouth face and a mouth as wide as the hole of Pātāla (the nether world). There was a terrible fight between Hanūmān and the monster, in which Siṁhikā, fell on the ground beaten. After the fight Hanūmān resumed his journey. (Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa, Sundarakāṇḍa, Sarga 1, Stanzas 178 to 186).

AṄGĀRA (M). A countryside in ancient India. (Mahābhārata, Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 9, Stanza 60).

AṄGĀRAPARṆA. (Citraratha) See the word CITRARATHA I.

AṄGĀRAVATĪ. (See AṄGĀRAKĀ).

AṄGAVĀHA. A king of immense fame, belonging to the dynasty of Vṛṣṇi. Aṅgavāha attended, with Balabhadrarāma, the sacrifice of Rājasūya (Royal consecration) celebrated by Yudhiṣṭhira. (Mahābhārata, Sabhā Parva, Chapter 34, Stanza 16).

AṄGIRAS I.

1) Birth. He is a hermit born from the mind of Brahmā. Six mind-born sons (Mānasa-Putras) were born to Brahmā, known as Marīci, Aṅgiras, Atri, Pulastya, Pulaha, and Kratu. All the six of them became great hermits. (Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 65, Stanza 10) *.

2) Important events.

(1) The failure of Aṅgiras. There was a King named Citraketu in the kingdom of Śūrasena. Once Aṅgiras reached his palace when the King was in a miserable state as he was childless. The King informed Aṅgiras of his sorrow. He pacified the King and said that a son would be born to him. He and his wife Kṛtadyutī were filled with joy. The other wives of the King did not like this. They feared that when a son was born to Kṛtadyutī the King might overlook them. To the king a son was born of Kṛtadyutī and the other wives poisoned the child and killed him. While the parents were weeping over the dead child Aṅgiras and Nārada arrived there and wiped their tears. Aṅgiras agreed to bring the child back to life. He instantly called the spirit of the dead child to him and asked it to become the son of Citraketu. The spirit replied that it had a large number of parents in several previous births and that it was not possible for it to become the son of Citraketu, and then it vanished. Aṅgiras and Nārada went on their way. Citraketu became a devotee of Viṣṇu and by the curse of Pārvatī, was born again as Vṛtrāsura. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 6, Chapter 14).

(2) How Aṅgiras cursed Sudarśana and transmuted him to a serpent. While Sudarśana, a vidyādhara (a class of semi-gods) was travelling lustfully with a group of beautiful girls he came across Aṅgiras and some other hermits. He teased Aṅgiras calling him 'durbhāga' (unlucky) and Aṅgiras cursed him and changed him to a big serpent and he was promised liberation from the curse, when, during the dvāpara yuga (one of the four ages) Mahāviṣṇu would incarnate as Śrī Kṛṣṇa and would tread upon him and then he would regain his former form. From that day onwards Sudarśana lived on the banks of the river Kālindī in the form of a serpent. It was the time when Śrī Kṛṣṇa was having his game of love with the Gopa women. On one night one serpent bit Nanda the foster father of Śrī Kṛṣṇa. The cowherds or gopas hit at the snake with burned wood. But it was of no use. Śrī Kṛṣṇa came there and thrashed the serpent, which instantly took the form of Sudarśana Vidyādhara and praising Śrī Kṛṣṇa entered heaven. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 10, Chapter 34).

(3) Aṅgiras a Prajāpati. Brahmā had created sixteen prajāpatis, for effecting the creation of the universe. Aṅgiras is one of them. Their names are given below:

1)	Kardama	9)	Pulastya
2)	Vikrīta	10)	Aṅgiras
3)	Śeṣa	11)	Pracetas
4)	Saṁśraya	12)	Pulaha
5)	Sthāṇu	13)	Dakṣa
6)	Marīci	14)	Vivasvān
7)	Atri	15)	Ariṣṭanemi
8)	Kratu	16)	Kaśyapa

(Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa, Araṇyakāṇḍa, Sarga 14).

(4) The wives and children of Aṅgiras. Aṅgiras had several wives such as Śubhā, Smṛti, Śraddhā, Devasenā and Vasudhā. The names of the sons of Aṅgiras are given below:

1)	Bṛhatkīrti	5)	Bṛhadmantra
2)	Bṛhatjyoti	6)	Bṛhadbhāsa
3)	Bṛhadbrahmā	7)	Bṛhaspati.
4)	Bṛhadmanā

The names of the eight daughters of Aṅgiras are given below:

1)	Bhānumatī	5)	Haviṣmatī
2)	Rāgā	6)	Māhiṣmatī
3)	Sinīvālī	7)	Mahāmatī
4)	Arciṣmatī	8)	Kuhū.

Besides these sons and daughters, other sons such as Sudhanvā and Kārttikeya were born to Aṅgiras by his other wives. (Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, five chapters from 218).

(5) The clash between Aṅgiras and Prahlāda. Duśśāsana stripped Pāñcālī of her clothes in the Palace hall, in the presence of the Pāṇḍavas who had been defeated in the game of dice. Before this Pāñcālī had asked Duryodhana one question, "Have you won yourself or myself?" One husband was not authorised to stake his wife Pāñcālī who was the wife of five husbands. Moreover according to the Śāstras (sciences) the deeds executed by a King, who was miserable due to hunting, drinking, playing dice and hankering after a woman, were not legally binding. Hence how could the Kauravas own Pāñcālī?" Vidura said that the witnesses in the hall had to give an impartial answer to this question, and that the punishment of falsehood would come upon the doer himself. As an instance he gave the following old story: Virocana was the son of Prahlāda; Sudhanvā the son of Aṅgiras and Virocana fell in love with the same woman once. There arose a contention between these two as to who was greater. They staked their lives on the issue. Then both of them together approached Prahlāda and requested him to give a decision as to which of them was the elder. Thinking that Prahlāda might side with Virocana his son, Sudhanvā said to him, "Sir,

*There is another story about the birth of Aṅgiras. At a sacrifice celebrated by Rudra, seminal flow occurred to Brahmā who happened to see some celestial maids and was overpowered by passionate feelings. Brahmā put the sperm in the fire. From that fire appeared Aṅgiras along with Marīci, Bhṛgu and others. This deva (the shining one—the God) was called Aṅgiras because his origin was from Aṅgāra or Cinder.

you should not utter words of falsehood, nor should you abstain from speaking the truth. If you do so your head will be cut into a hundred pieces by Indra with his Vajrāyudha (the weapon of thunderbolt)". Hesitating to take a decision, because of the words of Sudhanvā, Prahlāda went to Kaśyapa to clear his doubts, and asked: "Lord, do you know which are the future worlds destined for those who utter words of falsehood or abstain from giving out the truth?" Kaśyapa said, "On him, who abstains from speaking truth knowingly a thousand cords of death will fall. He who tells falsehood will have to perform many a deed of duty to attain heaven."

Having heard the words of Kaśyapa, Prahlāda said to Virocana, "Virocana, Sudhanvā is greater than you. Aṅgiras is greater than me. Likewise the mother of Sudhanvā is nobler than your mother. So according to your bet you owe your life to Sudhanvā." Pleased at the righteousness of Prahlāda, Sudhanvā gave Virocana a boon to live a hundred years more. (Mahābhārata, Sabhā Parva, Chapter 63).

(6) How Aṅgiras became the first son of Agni (Fire God). Once Aṅgiras was blazing out as a furious being. All the worlds were illuminated by that flame-fire. As Aṅgiras was performing the functions of Agni (fire), peoples of the worlds discarded Agni, who being sad at the derision shown towards him by the worlds went to a forest and hid himself there. The living beings were in trouble owing to lack of fire. When he became aware of this Aṅgiras went to the forest and pacified Agni. From that day onwards Aṅgiras agreed to become the first son of Agni, who resumed his duties as usual. (Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 217).

(7) How Aṅgiras got the name Atharvāṅgiras. After the slaughter of Vṛtrāsura, Indra went to the lake known as Amṛtasaras and hid himself there in a lotus flower. At this time the Gods anointed Nahuṣa as Indra. Agastya cursed him and turned him to a serpent and sent him to the earth. When Indra returned to heaven many persons gathered there to greet him. Aṅgiras also was one among them who did obeisance to Indra. He paid his homage by reciting the hymns of Atharvaveda. Indra who was greatly pleased at this, said to Aṅgiras, "Hereafter you shall be known as Atharvāṅgiras". Aṅgiras who got this boon from Indra, returned with gratitude. (Mahābhārata, Udyoga Parva, Chapter 18, Stanzas 5 to 7).

(8) Aṅgiras and Droṇa. In the battle of Kurukṣetra, between the Pāṇḍavas and the Kauravas the great teacher, Droṇa began to release his divine darts towards his enemies in all directions. Immediately Aṅgiras with many other hermits came to Droṇa and told him, "You have burned to death innumerable men with your Brahmāstra (The most powerful of all missiles). Your end is very near. So put your weapons down and stop your fight." Droṇa seems to have paid no heed at all to the advice of the hermits. He did not stop fighting too.

(9) The sermon of Aṅgiras on the merits of Tīrthas or holy places (Baths). Dharmaputra once asked Bhīṣma about the importance of holy ghāṭs or tīrthas (Baths). Bhīṣma told Dharmaputra, what Aṅgiras had once told Gautama about the merits obtained by going on pilgrimage to holy tīrthas or Baths. Aṅgiras had described the holy nature and character of holy Baths in Bhārata such as Puṣkara, Prabhāsa, Naimiśa, Sāgarodaka, Indramārga, Devika, Svarṇabindu, Hiraṇyabindu, Indratoya, and such other numerous tīrthas. (Mahābhārata, Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 25, Stanzas 7-71).

(1) Dakṣa gave his two daughters in marriage to Aṅgiras. (Devī Bhāgavata, Skandha 7).

(2) Aṅgiras once saved the Sun. (Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 92, Stanza 6).

(3) While the Pāṇḍavas were in exile in forest, Aṅgiras had been chanting and meditating in Alakanandā in the region of the mount Gandhamādana. (Mahābhārata, Araṇya Parva, Chapter 142, Stanza 6).

(4) When the hermits had stolen the lotus flowers of Agastya, Aṅgiras gave some hints about the culprits. (Mahābhārata, Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 94, Stanza 20: See Agastya).

(5) Aṅgiras once gave a discourse on fasting and the merits of fasting. (Mahābhārata, Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 106, Stanzas 11 to 16).

(6) Aṅgiras on another occasion delivered lectures on the secrets of duties. (Mahābhārata, Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 127, Stanza 8).

(7) Once Aṅgiras drank the water in the ocean to the last drop. (Mahābhārata, Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 153, Stanza 3).

(8) When his thirst was not quenched, even though he had drunk the entire water available in the world, he created new springs of water again and drank them dry. (Mahābhārata, Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 153, Stanza 3).

(9) Once Agni failed to show respect to Aṅgiras, who cursed Agni and thenceforward smoke came out from fire. (Mahābhārata, Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 153, Stanza 8).

(10) Aṅgiras conducted many of the important sacrifices of King Avikṣit. (Mahābhārata, Aśvamedhika Parva, Chapter 4, Stanza 22).

(11) Indra once gave Aṅgiras a boon. (Mahābhārata, Udyoga Parva, Chapter 18, Stanzas 5 to 7).

(12) Aṅgiras blessed Dhruva who had been doing penance. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Aṁśa 1, Chapter 11).

(13) The daughters named Sinīvālī, Kuhū, Rākā, Anumati were born to Aṅgiras by his wife Smṛti. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 20).

14) Aṅgiras is the first of the Agni devas (Fire-Gods) and a hermit. He had a son called Hiraṇya-Stūpa, who also was a hermit (Ṛgveda, Maṇḍala 1, Anuvāka 7, Sūkta 31).

(15) The Hermit Aṅgiras began to invoke the Gods to get a son equal to Indra. Then Indra, thinking that nobody should be born as his equal, took birth as the son of Aṅgiras. He was called Savya. (Ṛgveda, Maṇḍala 1, Anuvāka 10, Sūkta 51).

(16) Indra sent Saramā, the bitch of the Gods, to find out the place where the cows had been hidden ; Indra acted according to the advice of Aṅgiras. At first the bitch did not consent to go. But when Devendra promised to feed her young one with milk she agreed. Saramā found out the place where the cows were hidden and informed Indra of it. (Ṛgveda, Maṇḍala 1, Anuvāka 11, Sūkta 62).

17) Ṛbhus are the sons of Sudhanvā. (Son of Aṅgiras). The hermit Kutsa also is descended from Aṅgiras. (Ṛgveda, Maṇḍala 1, Anuvāka 16, Sūkta 10).

(18) Aṅgiras was the son of Brahmā in the Svāyambhuva Manvantara (See Manvantara), but in the Vaivasvata Manvantara he was born from Agni.

(19) Once Vāyu (the Wind-God) had to run away from Aṅgiras and hide himself as he had caused some displeasure to Aṅgiras. On another occasion Aṅgiras taught philosophy and sacred doctrines to the hermit Śaunaka. (Muṇḍakopaniṣad).

AṄGIRAS II. In the family of Marīci, son of Brahmā, another King of the name of Aṅgiras is seen.

Genealogy. Descended from Viṣṇu in the following order: Brahmā, Marīci, Kaśyapa, Vaivasvata Manu, Uttānapāda, Dhruva, Śiṣṭi, Ripu, Cākṣuṣa Manu, Ūru, Aṅgiras. (About this Aṅgiras, no other information is available in the Purāṇas. Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Aṁśa 1, Chapter 13; Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 18).

AṄGIROBHAVA. A hermit named Kakṣīvān. (Ṛg veda, Maṇḍala 1, Anuvāka 17, Sūkta 120).

ANĪKAVIDĀRAṆA. A brother of Jayadratha, a King of the kingdom of Sindhu. Arjuna killed him. (M.B., Vana Parva, Chapter 265, Verse 12).

ANIKETA. A Yakṣa, one of the attendants of Kubera. (M.B., Sabhā Parva, Chapter 10, Verse 18). He was a king of the Aṅga dynasty. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 277).

ANĪKINĪ. A division of the army. (See under AKṢAUHIṆĪ).

ANILA I. One of the Aṣṭa (8) Vasus. His father was Dharma and mother Śvāsā. Anila married Śivā and had two sons, Manojava and Avijñāti. (M.B., Ādi Parva, Chapter 66, Verses 17-25).

ANILA II. Garuḍa had a son called Anila. (M.B., Udyoga Parva, Chapter 101, Verse 9).

ANILA III. A word used as a synonym of Śiva. (M.B., Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 149, Verse 100).

ANILA IV. A word used as a synonym of Viṣṇu. (M.B., Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 149, Verse 38).

ANILA V. A Kṣatriya King. His father, Vṛṣādarbhi presented him as Dakṣiṇā to the Saptarṣis (7 sages) at a yajña performed by him (father). The King expired soon after this. There was then a famine in the country. The Saptarṣis, tortured by hunger and thirst got ready to prepare food with the corpse of the King. But the corpse retained its form and they could not cook food with it. (M.B., Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 96).

ANĪLA. A famous serpent. (M.B., Ādi Parva, Chapter 35, Verse 7).

AṆIMĀṆḌAVYA.

1) General. How he got the name Aṇimāṇḍavya. Once there was a famous Brahmin n med Māṇḍavya. He did Tapas (penance) for many years standing silent in front of his Āśrama, under a tree, raising his hands in prayer. At that time some thieves happened to pass by that place, with stolen property belonging to the King. Finding that the King's men were pursuing them, the thieves fled away after leaving their stolen property in Māṇḍavya's Āśrama. The King's men seized Māṇḍavya with the king's property. Even prolonged and repeated questionings did not bring out a single word from Māṇḍavya. At last the thieves were caught. Mistaking him as one of the thieves, the King's men produced Māṇḍavya also along with the thieves before the King. The thieves were all condemned to death. The royal executioners took all of them to the place of execution and stuck them up at the tip of a trident (Śūla). The thieves died, but even after a long time Māṇḍavya did not die. In Mahābhārata, Anuśāsana Parva, Verses 46-51, it is said that at this stage Śiva appeared and blessed him with longevity and then vanished. Several Munis in the shape of birds came near Māṇḍavya who was lying on the trident and made enquiries about him. The King came to know of all these stories. Full of repentance, he went and begged pardon of Māṇḍavya. The attempt to pull out the trident from Māṇḍavya's body failed. At last it was removed by cutting it off. Since the tip (Aṇi) of the trident was left behind in his body he was thereafter known as "Aṇi Māṇḍavya". (M.B., Ādi Parva, Chapter 107).

2) Curse on Dharma. After going about in the world for many years with the tip of the trident in his body, Aṇi Māṇḍavya once asked Dharma : "Oh ! Lord, why is it that an innocent man like me is afflicted with the trident ?". Dharma answered: "In your boyhood you once caught small birds and pierced them with a grass reed. It is a result of that sin that you have been pierced with the trident." Māṇḍavya replied : "The Śāstras ordain that there shall be no punishment for sins committed till the age of twelve. Therefore the punishment inflicted on me is wrong. As the murder of a Brahmin is a greater sin than any other murder, may you be born as a man in the 'Śūdra Caste'."

By the above curse of Māṇḍavya, Dharma was born a son of a Śūdra woman. It was this child who later on became the renowned Vidura of the Mahābhārata. (M.B., Ādi Parva, Chapter 107).

3) The story of how the Sun did not rise. When Aṇi Māṇḍavya lay on the tip of the trident another event happened. Atri Muni's son Ugraśravas was the husband of Śīlavatī. No other woman had so far surpassed Śīlavatī in her fidelity to her husband. Once Ugraśravas happened to fall ill. He expressed his desire to visit a prostitute's house. As he was too weak he could not walk. The devoted wife Śīlavatī carried him on her own shoulders and took him to the prostitute's house. They were passing near the place where Aṇi Māṇḍavya was lying on the trident. Coming to know of the matter, Māṇḍavya pronounced a curse that Ugraśravas should die before sunrise. Śīlavatī shuddered on hearing this. Fearing that she would be widowed by the death of Ugraśravas, she, in her turn, pronounced a curse that the Sun should not rise again.

Next day the sun did not rise. All activities came to a standstill. At last the gods approached Atri Muni. They in uced Anasūyā, Atri's wife to persuade Śīlavatī to withdraw her curse. Then the sun rose again and Ugraśravas died. (Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa, Chapter 42).

4) Other details. When the Pāṇḍavas were living in Hastināpura, Śrī Kṛṣṇa once paid a visit to them. On his way he met with certain munis. Among them was Aṇi Māṇḍavya also. (M.B., Udyoga Parva, Chapter 83).

5) Once the King of Videha told Māṇḍavya that the world is transient and advised him to strive for spiritual peace. Aṇi Māṇḍavya who was pleased with the King's advice attained mokṣa (salvation) at once. (M.B., Śānti Parva, Chapter 276, Verses 3-14).

ANIMIṢA. Verse 10, Chapter 101 of Udyoga Parva refers to one Animiṣa, son of Garuḍa. Also the word is used as a synonym of Śiva (M.B., Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 17, Verse 14) and of Viṣṇu. (M.B., Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 149, Verse 36).

ANIRUDDHA. Grandson of Śrī Kṛṣṇa.

1) Genealogy. From Viṣṇu was born in this order : Brahmā, Atri, Candra, Budha, Purūravas, Āyus, Nahuṣa, Yayāti, Yadu, Sahasrajit, Śatajit, Hehaya, Dharma, Kunti, Bhadrasena, Kṛtavīrya, Kārttavīryārjuna, Jayadhvaja, Tālajaṁgha, Vītihotra, Ananta, Durjaya, Yudhājit, Śini, Satyaka, Sātyaki, Jaya, Kuṇi, Anamitra, Pṛśni, Citraratha, Viḍūratha, Śūra, Śini, Bhoja, Hṛdika, Śūrasena, Vasudeva, Śrī Kṛṣṇa, Pradyumna, Aniruddha.

2) Birth. Śrī Kṛṣṇa had 16008 wives. Out of the 16008 from Rukmiṇī was born Pradyumna and from Pradyumna, Aniruddha.

3) Kidnapped by Uṣā. One of the stories about this handsome prince refers to his being kidnapped by Uṣā daughter of Bāṇāsura. Bāṇāsura, chief among the 100 sons of emperor Mahābali had 1000 hands. Śiva pleased by the sacrificial devotion of Bāṇāsura granted, as requested by him, the boon that he himself (Śiva) and Pārvatī would guard the fort of the Asura, of course with some reluctance. Now, none had the prowess to attack this valiant Asura. Overflowing with conceit at this he challenged Śiva to a fight. Śiva foretold that the flagstaff of Bāṇa would one day be broken and then a powerful antagonist would defeat him. Bāṇa impatiently awaited the threatened day.

One day Uṣā happened to witness the scene of Śiva and Pārvatī engaged in love-making. Excited by the sight Uṣā too desired to enact such a scene with a lover, and she intimated her desire to Pārvatī. Pārvatī told her that Uṣā would, within three days, see in a dream a handsome prince with whom she might make love. Accordingly, dressed herself in all glory with choicest ornaments Uṣā awaited the happy day. On the third day a handsome prince appeared before her in her dream. Waking up, she began crying. Seeing Uṣā crying Citralekhā, her companion, and daughter of her father's minister, assured her (Uṣā) that whoever might be the prince who appeared in her dream shall be brought down with the power of Mantra. Citralekhā drew the pictures of all princes known to her and showed them to Uṣā. The pictures represented all handsome men from Devas to men. 'No, this is not my prince charming' was Uṣā's reply. Then Citralekhā drew the picture of Śrī Kṛṣṇa of Pradyumna, and then of Aniruddha. When Uṣā saw Aniruddha's picture she stretched her hands to embrace that. It was this prince who had appeared before her in the dream.

Next night Citralekhā, by the power of her Mantra, brought into Uṣā's room from Dvārakā Aniruddha, who was then in his sleep. While Uṣā and Aniruddha were thus together in the room her father, Bāṇa, got scent of it and took Aniruddha into custody.

The disappearance of Aniruddha led to much commotion in Dvārakā. Then Nārada reached Dvārakā and gave details about the Aniruddha incident. Śrī Kṛṣṇa and Pradyumna, in all rage, hurried to Bāṇa's palace and encircled his palace with a strong army. Then did Bāṇa's flagstaff break into two and fell down. The fierce fight that ensued ended in the defeat of Bāṇa. Aniruddha married Uṣā and the elated couple started for Dvārakā. Vajra was the son of Aniruddha. (Bhāgavata, Daśama Skandha, Chapters 61, 62 and 63).

4) More information. (1) It was at the feet of Arjuna that Aniruddha mastered the Dhanurveda (Science of warfare). (M.B., Sabhā Parva, Chapter 4, Verse 36).

(2) Aniruddha is also conceived in the forms of Viṣṇu and Brahmā. (M.B., Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 65, Verses 69 and 70).

(3) Brahmā was born from the abdominal centre of Aniruddha when the latter had taken the form of Viṣṇu. (M.B., Śānti Parva, Chapter 341, Verses 15-17).

(4) The word Aniruddha is also used as a synonym of Viṣṇu. (M.B., Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 149, Verse 33).

ANIRUDDHA II. The Mahābhārata refers to another Aniruddha who belonged to the Vṛṣṇi dynasty. Both the Aniruddhas were present at the wedding of Pāñcālī. (M.B., Ādi Parva, Chapter 185, Verses 17-20).

ANIRUDDHA III. The Mahābhārata mentions yet another King Aniruddha. He did not eat flesh. (M.B., Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 115, Verse 15).

AÑJALIKĀŚRAMA. This is a sacred place. One who lives at this Tīrtha for some time, gets the benefit of visiting the sacred tīrtha at Kanyākumārī ten times. (M.B., Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 25, Verse 52).

AÑJALIKĀVEDHA (M). This is an art by which an elephant could be made to stand submissively. Bhīmasena had mastered this art. (M.B., Droṇa Parva, Chapter 26, Verse 23).

AÑJANĀ. 1) Mother of Hanūmān—Wife of Kesarī, the noble monkey and daughter of Kuñjara, the monkey leader. She was the mother of Hanūmān. Once while Śiva and Pārvatī were gamboling in the guise of monkeys, rambling through the woods, Pārvatī became pregnant, That pregnancy was given to Vāyu. At that time Añjanā was doing penance for an issue. Vāyu transferred the pregnancy he had received from Pārvatī to Añjanā. Thus Añjanā gave birth to Hanūmān. (Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa, Kiṣkindhā Kāṇḍa, Sarga 66).

Añjanā gave birth to Hanūmān in the woods in a valley on the southern side of Mahāmeru. She was frightened at the sight of the child shining like the sun. Hanūmān began to cry for mother's milk. Añjanā said to Hanūmān : "Monkeys are fond of red ripe fruits. Therefore eat whatever you find in red colour." Saying this Añjanā transformed herself into a goddess and went to Heaven.

2) Pūrvajanma (Previous Birth). In her previous birth Añjanā was a goddess named Puñjikastala (Mānagarva). As a result of a curse, this goddess was born as a she-monkey in the Himālaya region. With the birth of Hanūmān, the curse was lifted. (Uttara Rāmāyaṇa). For more details see "Puñjikastala".

AÑJANA. This is an elephant belonging to the Asuras. His origin is in the f mily of Supratīka. The other three elephants born in this family are : Airāvata, Vāmana and Kumuda. (This Airāvata was not the Airāvata of Devendra). There are references to Rākṣasas coming to the battle-field on the back of elephants. There is another mention of Añjana the elephant standing in the battle-field. (M.B., Udyoga Parva, Chapter 99, Verse 15; Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 64, Verse 57; Droṇa Parva, Chapter 112, Verse 32).

AÑJANA (M). This is the name of a mountain. (M.B., Sabhā Parva, Chapter 98, Verse 15).

AÑJANA PARVAN. He was the son of Ghaṭotkaca and grandson of Bhīmasena. For genealogy, see BHĪMASENA. (M.B., Udyoga Parva, Chapter 194, Verse 20).

Aśvatthāmā, the son of Droṇa, killed Añjanaparvā. (M.B., Droṇa Parva, Chapter 196, Verse 89).

ANṚTA. Son born to Hiṁsā by Adharma. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa).

ANṚTAM (ASATYA). Hiṁsā, the wife of Adharma, gave birth to daughters, Anṛta and Nikṛti, and from them were born Bhaya, Naraka, Māyā and Vedanā. And, Māyā begot Mṛtyu, the killer of all living beings. From Vedanā was born sorrow. And from Mṛtyu were born disease (vyādhi), Jarā (wrinkles), Śoka (grief), Tṛṣṇā (desire) and Krodha (anger). (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 20).

ANUṢṬUP. One of the seven horses of the Sun God, the other six being, Gāyatrī, Bṛhatī, Uṣṇik, Jagatī, Triṣṭup and Paṅkti. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Part II, Chapter 8).

ANUVINDA I. One of the 100 sons of Dhṛtarāṣṭra. There is a story in the Mahābhārata about his being imprisoned along with Duryodhana. Knowing that the Pāṇḍavas were living in the forest in all comfort and happiness Duryodhana and others went in procession to them. Anuvinda also was in the procession. While Duryodhana and party were staying in a tent in the forest, a Gandharva named Citrasena appeared on the scene and imprisoned them. Anuvinda too was imprisoned. (See Citrasena). (M.B., Vana Parva, Chapter 242, Verse 8). He was killed in war by Bhīmasena. (M.B., Droṇa Parva, Chapter 127, Verse 66).

ANUVINDA II. The purāṇas refer to one Anuvinda, a prince of Avanti. (1) He had a brother called Vinda. (2) He was defeated by Sahadeva who set forth to subjugate the kings of the south just before the Rājasūya yajña of Dharmaputra. (M.B., Sabhā Parva, Chapter 31, Verse 10). (3) An Akṣauhiṇī (division of army) was despatched by Anuvinda to help Duryodhana. (M.B., Udyoga Parva, Chapter 19, Verses 24, 25). (4) On the first day of the war Vinda and Anuvinda fought duels with Kuntibhoja. (M.B., Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 45, Verses 72-75). (5) Irāvān, son of Arjuna defeated both Vinda and Anuvinda in the battle. (M.B., Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 83, Verse, 18-22). (6) They fought with Bhīma, Arjuna and the king of Virāṭa. (M.B., Droṇa Parva, Chapter 25, Verses 20). (7) Anuvinda was killed by Arjuna. (M.B., Droṇa parva, Chapter 399, Verses 27-29). (8) Vinda and Anuvinda had a sister called Mitravindā. The three of them were the children of Rājādhidevī, sister of Śrī Kṛṣṇa's father. Śrī Kṛṣṇa married Mitravindā, which her brother did not like. This was their reason for quitting the Pāṇḍava camp and fighting on the side of the Kauravas. (Bhāgavata, Daśama Skandha, Chapter 58, Verses 30, 31).

ANUVINDA III. The Mahābhārata refers to another prince Anuvinda also. He was the son of a Kekayarāja. He also fought against the Pāṇḍavas and was killed by Sātyaki. (M.B., Karṇa Parva, Chapter 13, Verse 21).

ANUVINDĀ. A wife of Śrī Kṛṣṇa. (Padma Purāṇa).

ANUYĀYI. One of the 100 sons of Dhṛtarāṣṭra. He is called Agrayāyī also; he was killed in battle by Bhīmasena. (M.B., Ādi Parva, Chapter 67, Verse 102; Chapter 116, Verse 11 and Droṇa Parva, Chapter 157, Verses 17-20).

ANVAGBHĀNU. A King of the Pūru dynasty. (For genealogy see Pūru dynasty). Pūru had three sons, Īśvara, Raudrāśva and Pravīra. He had also another son Manasyu by Śūrasenī, another wife. Anvagbhānu is the son born to Manasyu and his apsarā wife, Mitrakeśī. Anvagbhānu is known as Ṛceyu and Anādhṛṣṭi also. (M.B., Ādi Parva, Chapter 94, Verses 8-12).

APĀLĀ. A daughter of the great sage, Atri. Suffering from leprosy and hence forsaken by her husband Apālā stayed with her father and started tapas to please Indra. One day, on her way home from the river, Apālā tasted the Soma which was meant to be offered to Indra and hearing the sound produced then Devendra appeared before Apālā. She gave the Soma to Indra, who was so pleased with her that he cured her of her leprosy. (Ṛgveda, 8-91).

APĀNTARATAMAS. 1) General. A Maharṣi (Great Sage). He was born out of the sound 'bhu' uttered by Mahāviṣṇu. The sage is also known as Sārasvata and Apāntaratamas. Because he was absolutely free from inner darkness or ignorance he was called Apāntaratamas. The sage, who was cognizant of the past, the present and the future divided and systematized the Vedas as ordered by Viṣṇu.

2) Vyāsa was Apāntaratamas reborn. Mahāviṣṇu ordained that in the Dvāpara age he be born as the son of Parāśara and once again divide and systematize the Vedas, and so was he born as Vyāsa. (Śrī Śaṅkara's Muṇḍakopaniṣad and Brahmasūtra Bhāṣya).

APĀNTARATAMĀ. (Sārasvata). This is another name of Apāntaratamas. (See Apāntaratamas).

APARABRAHMA. (See Parabrahma).

APARĀJITA I. One of the serpents born to Kaśyapa of Kadru. (M.B., Ādi Parva, Chapter 35, Verse 13).

APARĀJITA II. A King born out of a part of one of the eight Asuras, who were known the Kālakeyas. (M.B., Ādi Parva, Chapter 67, Verse 49). The Pāṇḍavas had invited this King before they went to war. (M.B., Udyoga Parva, Chapter 4, Verse 21).

APARĀJITA III. A son of Dhṛtarāṣṭra. (M.B., Ādi Parva, Chapter 67, Verse 101). Bhīmasena killed him. (M.B., Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 21, Verse 22).

APARĀJITA IV. A King of the Kuruvaṁśa. (M.B., Ādi Parva, Chapter 94, Verse 54).

APARĀJITA V. One of the eleven Rudras, the other ten being Hara, Bahurūpa, Tryambaka, Vṛṣākapi, Śambhu, Kapardī, Raivata, Mṛgavyādha, Sarpa and Kapāli. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 18).

APARĀJITA VI. Used as a synonym of Mahāviṣṇu. (M.B., Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 149, Verse 89).

APARAKĀŚĪ. A place in ancient India. (M.B., Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 9, Verse 42).

APARAKUNTI. A place in ancient India. (M.B., Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 9, Verse 43).

APARAMLECCHA(M). A place in ancient India. (M.B., Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 9, Verse 65).

APARANANDĀ. A river. Arjuna once crossed it. (M.B., Ādi Parva, Chapter 214, Verses 6 and 7). Aparanandā is counted among the prominent holy rivers. (M.B., Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 165, Verse 28).

APARĀNTA I. A city on the west coast of ancient South India. (M.B., Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 9, Verse 67).

APARĀNTA II. Another name of the Śūrpāraka temple. (M.B., Śānti Parva, Chapter 49, Verse 67).

APARASEKA(M). A place in ancient India. (M.B., Sabhā Parva, Chapter 31, Verse 9).

APARAVALLAVA(M). A place in ancient India. (M.B., Sabhā Parva, Chapter 9, Verse 62).

APARĀVIDYĀ. Knowledge is of two categories or types. Viz.

1) Parāvidyā. That science or knowledge, which helps us to know or realise Him (Brahma) who is without either beginning or end, who could neither be seen with the eyes nor perceived by any of the senses.

(2) Aparāvidyā. This includes knowledge of the four Vedas Ṛg, Yajus, Sāma and Atharva, the six Vedāṅgas (sub-divisions of the Vedas) Śikṣā, Kalpa, Nirukta, Chandas, Vyākaraṇa, Apidhāna, Mīmāṁsā, Dharmaśāstra and the purāṇas, as also, Nyāya Śāstra (Logic), Vaidya Śāstra (medicine) Gandharva Śāstra, Dhanurveda and Artha Śāstra (economics).

APODADHAUMYA. (See Ayodhadhaumya).

APPAYYADĪKṢITA. A reputed Rhetorician in Sanskrit, who thrived in the 16th Century A.D. He wrote two treatises on rhetoric, the Kuvalayānanda and Citramīmāṁsā. The former is an interpretation of chapter 5 of Jayadeva's Candrāloka and is very popular in South India.

APRĀCI. A hell. (See Naraka). (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Part 2, Chapter 6)

APRATIṢṬHA(M). A hell. (See Naraka).

APSARAS.* An Apsaras is a nymph (devastrī). These apsarā women were born at the churning of the ocean of Milk. (Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa, Bālakāṇḍa, Chapter 45, Verse 32 and Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Part 1, Chapter 9 and Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 3). There are thousands of Apsaras. (Details given against the names of Apsaras).

APSUHOMYA. A great sage (Maharṣi) who adorned the assembly of Yudhiṣṭhira. (M.B., Sabhā Parva, Chapter 4, Verse 12).

ARĀ (ARAJAS). Daughter of Śukra maharṣi. Ikṣvāku begot three sons, Daṇḍa, Vikukṣi and Nimi. After his father's death Daṇḍa became king of the country between the Vindhya and the Himālayas. In the course of a hunting expedition once Daṇḍa saw and was immediately attracted by the charms of Arā, daughter of Śukra maharṣi. He committed rape on her and she told her father about the attack by Daṇḍa. The Maharṣi asked his daughter to do tapas, and further told her that he would burn Daṇḍa's kingdom by a rain of fire. Arā did tapas, and at the behest of the Maharṣi Indra destroyed Daṇḍa's kingdom by a downpour of a rain of fire. Afterwards this place became a terrible forest where neither birds nor animals lived, and came to be known as Daṇḍakāraṇya. (Uttara Rāmāyaṇa).

ARAKKILLAM. (Palace of wax). Both the Kaurava and the Pāṇḍava princes lived in Hastināpura. The Pāṇḍavas became experts in archery, and their exemplary character and conduct made them, so to say, the apple of their eyes to the people. This evoked great jealousy in Duryodhana who made up his mind to completely ruin the Pāṇḍavas somehow or other. Duryodhana, with Dhṛtarāṣṭra's consent, built a new palace at Vāraṇāvata. Though many others did not know that the palace was made of wax the Pāṇḍavas, from secret information knew the fact. But, they only pretended ignorance. Duryodhana and his minister Purocana, saw to it that the Pāṇḍavas shifted their residence to the waxen palace. Duryodhana had planned to set fire to the palace and burn to death the Pāṇḍavas. But, the shrewd Vidura through his messenger Kanaka gave notice of the conspiracy to the Pāṇḍavas just in time. One night Purocana set fire to the waxen palace, but the Pāṇḍavas escaped by a secret passage, which the architect of the palace had made while constructing it, and about which the Pāṇḍavas had previous knowledge. The same night a huntsman, with his five children, was also staying in the palace. As they were unconscious with heavy dosage of liquor they could not escape the fire. Those six people, and accidentally Purocana too were burnt to death. People, who gathered at the spot, thus saw seven corpses, and the news was broadcast that the Pāṇḍavas, including their wife Pāñcālī and their mother had been burnt to death. This incident took place one year after the Pāṇḍavas had shifted their residence to the waxen palace. (M.B., Ādi Parva, Chapters 141-151).

ARĀLI. One of the sons who were Brahmavādins, of Viśvāmitra. (M.B., Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 4, Verse 58).

ARANTUKA. A guard posted at a boundary line of Kuurkṣetra. (M.B., Vana Parva, Chapter 83, Verse 52).

ARANTUKA. A sacred spot in ancient India, in river Sarasvatī. A bath there is as beneficial as performing the Agniṣṭoma yajña. (M.B., Śalya Parva, Chapter 53, Verse 24).

ARAṆYA. A King of the Ikṣvāku dynasty. (See Ikṣvāku dynasty).

ARAṆYA PARVA. A sub Parva in the Mahābhārata. (See Mahābhārata).

ARAṬṬA(M). A place in ancient India. After Droṇa was killed in the great war, Kṛtavarmā ran away with the warriors of Araṭṭa. (M.B., Droṇa Parva, Chapter 193, Verse 13).

*Ariṣṭhā, a wife of Kaśyapa, delivered thirteen Apsaras. They were : Alambuṣā, Miśrakeśī, Vidyutparṇā, Tilottamā, Rakṣitā, Rambhā, Manoramā, Keśinī, Subāhu, Surajā, Suratā and Supriyā. Ariṣṭhā gave birth also to four Gandharvas, Hāhā, Hūhū, Atibāhu and Tumburu as mentioned in the following verse.

Ariṣṭāsūta Subhagādevī devarṣitaḥ purā
Alambuṣā miśrakeśī Vidyutparṇā Tilottamā
Aruṇā rakṣitā caiva rambhā tadvat manoramā
Keśinī ca subāhuśca vikhyatau ca hahāhuhū
Tumburuśceti catvāraḥ smṛtāḥ gandharvasattamāḥ.

ARAYANNAM. The swan (Haṁsa).

1) General. A bird (Haṁsa) in Devaloka. The prefix 'ara' denotes royalty, sublimity, greatness etc. Many purāṇas describe Arayannam as a bird of the Devas. Mānasasaras at the heights of the Himālayas is the permanent abode of these divine birds. They do not like the rainy season. So they come down to the earth when rain begins at the Mānasasaras, and go back to the Saras, when rain begins on the earth. This phenomenon explains Cerusśeri's (Malayalam poet) statement in his Kṛṣṇagāthā that 'when rain set in haṁsas —Arayannams—began flying away'.

2) Origin. Kaśyapa, the son of Brahmā, married the eight daughters of Dakṣa, Tāmrā being one of them. Tāmrā bore five daughters Krauñcī, Bhāsī, Śyenī, Dhṛtarāṣṭrī and Śukī. Śyenī gave birth to the kite, Dhṛtarāṣṭrī, the Haṁsa and the Kokā and Śukī the Śukas (doves). Kokā or the Cakravākī bird is the sister of Haṁsa. This is how the Arayanna and the Cakravāka got Devatva (divinity). (Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa, Araṇyakāṇḍa, Canto 14).

3) Bhīṣma and the Arayanna. Śiśupāla, before his death, blabbered a lot of unbecoming things about Bhīṣma, who was partial to his (Śiśupāla's) enemies. And, he related the story of an Arayanna to elaborate the stand taken by the aged Bhīṣma. An aged Haṁsa (Arayanna) which once dwelt on the sea-coast preached to all the other birds much about ethical actions. The birds felt great respect for the Arayanna. They flew across the sea in search of prey after entrusting their eggs to the Arayanna. The old Arayanna grew fat on those eggs. There was one intelligent bird among the lot, and when it looked for the eggs they were not to be found. That bird informed its colleagues about the treacherous conduct of the Arayanna. The birds organised themselves and attacked the Arayanna to death. Oh ! Bhīṣma, the same will be your end also. (M.B., Sabhā Parva, Chapter 41, Verses 30-41).

4) Nala and Arayanna. While Nala, the prince of the Niṣadha kingdom was resting in a garden he saw an Arayanna in a tank there. Out of curious pleasure Nala caught it, but seeing its mental tremor he let it free. Out of gratitude for this generous act, the Arayanna played the role of the messenger for Nala to get as his wife Damayantī, the very beautiful daughter of the King of Vidarbha.

5) How the Arayanna (Haṁsa) got the white colour. Once king Marutta was conducting the Māheśvara Satra (a yāga) and Devas like Indra came down to receive their share of the Havis (oblations in the sacrificial fire). And, this was the time when Rāvaṇa with his attendants was on his triumphal tour. Hearing that the Devas were at the Āśrama of Marutta, Rāvaṇa also went there, and Indra and the other Devas, trembling with fear, assumed different disguises and hid themselves away. Indra assumed the guise of the peacock, Yama of the crow, Kubera of the chameleon and Varuṇa of the Arayanna. Thus beguiled Rāvaṇa went his own way. The Devas, who thus escaped blessed the family of those birds whose forms they assumed. Indra shaped the blue feathers of the peacock with mixed colours and eyes like his own. Moreover, he blessed them that they would never be affected with any disease, and that they would dance with their feathers spread when rain set in. Yamadharma blessed the crows that they would get the offerings made on earth by men to their departed ancestors. And Bhagavān Varuṇa told the Rāja-Haṁsas : "I escaped the clutches of Rāvaṇa by assuming your shape and form. Therefore, be thee, who are now black and white, in future as purely white as milk". Kuberà blessed the Chameleon with capacity to change colour as and how it pleased, and also for its cheeks to appear golden in colour to the onlookers. After thus blessing the birds the Devas disappeared. (Uttara Rāmāyaṇa).

ARBUDA. An Asura. Indra killed this Asura. (Ṛgveda, Maṇḍala 1, Anuvāka 10, Sūkta 51).

ARBUDA I. A nāga (serpent) living in mountains. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 21, Stanza 9).

ARBUDA II. The mountain Ābu. (Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 82, Stanza 55).

ARCANĀNAS. A muni born in the Ātreyagotra of the dynasty of Atri. He desired to marry Rathavīti. But her father had decided to give her in marriage only to a Maharṣi, and, therefore Arcanānas became a Maharṣi with the help of the Marutta and wedded Rathavīti. Maharṣi Śyāvāśva was their son.

ARCIṢMATĪ. The fourth daughter of Maharṣi Aṅgiras. (M.B., Vana Parva, Chapter 216, Verse 6).

ARCIS. Pṛthu and the Arcis were born from the arms of Vena. (Bhāgavata, 4th Skandha, Chapter 15). Pṛthu did tapas in forest and gave up his physical body in fire and attained Vaikuṇṭha (the abode of Viṣṇu) with the Arcis. (Bhāgavata, 4th Skandha). For details see Pṛthu.

ARCIṢMAT. A sect of Pitṛs. (M.B., Śānti Parva, Chapter 236, Verse 15).

ARDHADEVAS (SEMI-GODS). In temples hermits, ancestors, serpents, celestial maids and such others also are worshipped. Among these there are Vasus, Nāgas, Asuras, Paiśācas, Vetālas and many other classes. These are the semi-gods. (See Page 27 of Nāmvanaṅgum Daivaṅgal).

ARDHAKĪLATĪRTHA. A holy ghāṭ or bath built by the hermit Darbhi. (Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 83, Stanza 153).

ARDHASĀDHAKA. A minister of King Daśaratha. He had eight ministers.

"The great king had eight ministers who were pure and famous and experts in dealing with matters of their concern : Jayanta, Dhṛṣṭi, Vijaya, Siddha, Ardhasādhaka, Aśoka, Mantrapāla and Sumantra were they". (Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa, Bālakāṇḍa, Sarga 7, Stanzas 2 and 3 : Vallathol Translation).

ARGHĀBHIHAṆAPARVA. A parva in the Mahābhārata. (See M.B.).

ARIHA. A King of the lunar dynasty. He was a son born to Arvācīna (a king of the Pūru dynasty) and Maryādā, a princess of Vidarbha. Ariha had a son, Mahābhauma, born of his wife, a princess of Aṅga. (M.B., Ādi Parva, Chapter 19, Verses 18-19).

ARIMEJAYA. A Rājā of the Pūru dynasty. (See Pūru dynasty). (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 278).

ARIṢṬĀ. Wife of Kaśyapa. The Gandharvas were born of her. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 19, M.B., Ādi Parva, Chapter 67, Verse 83).

ARIṢṬA (ARIṢṬAKA). An asura, a servant of Kaṁsa. Once, at the instance of Kaṁsa he went to Gokula disguised as an ox to kill Śrī Kṛṣṇa. The ox instilled terror in people by tearing to pieces hills and mountaisn with its horns and bellowing like hell. But Śrī Kṛṣṇa faced the beast, and rained blows on him and it was thrown hundred yojanas away and it died. At the time of death it regained its fromer from as Asura. (Bhāgavata, Daśama, Skandha, Chapter 37).

ARIṢṬANEMA (ARIṢṬANEMI). (See Ariṣṭanemi).

ARIṢṬANEMI I. One of the six sons of Vinatā.

1) Genealogy. Viṣṇu, Brahmā, Kaśyapa and Ariṣṭanemi. Kaśyapa married Dhṛtarāṣṭrī, daughter of Dakṣa. Śukī was their daughter, Śukī had a daughter Natā and she a daughter, Vinatā. Ariṣṭanemi, Tārkṣya, Aruṇa, Garuḍa, Para, Āruṇi and Śrī Vāruṇi were the children of Vinatā. (M.B., Ādi Parva, Chapter 65, Verse 40).

2) Tapaśśakti of Ariṣṭanemi. Ariṣṭanemi with his son was once performing tapas in the forest. The son was immersed in meditation clad in the skin of a deer thus looking like a deer. Parapurañjaya, the King of Hehaya who happened at the time to be hunting in the forest discharged his arrow against the son of Ariṣṭanemi taking him for a deer. When the king found out the real fact he felt extremely sorry, and he craved pardon of the boy's father for unwittingly killing his son. Then Ariṣṭanemi pointing out his son who was standing alive asked the King, "Is this the boy whom you killed ?" The King was naturally wonder-struck. But Ariṣṭanemi told the King that there was nothing to wonder at in the case as nobody would be able to kill them because their Tapaśśakti was so great. The King felt so happy at this, and returned to his palace after prostrating at the feet of the sage. (M.B., Araṇya Parva, Chapter 184).

3) Some other details. (1) Sumati, wife of King Sagara of the Solar dynasty, was the daughter of Ariṣṭanemi. (Rāmāyaṇa, Bālakāṇḍa, Canto 38, Verse 4). (2) Kaśyapa had the synonym Ariṣṭanemi also. (Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa, Kiṣkindhākāṇḍa, Canto 66, Verse 4; Devī Bhāgavata, Saptama Skandha). (3) Ariṣṭanemi's wives delivered sixteen children. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 19). (4) Ariṣṭanemi has spoken a lot about the greatness of Brahmins. (M.B., Araṇya Parva, Chapter 184, Verses 17-22). (5) Ariṣṭanemi once gave much spiritual advice to King Sagara of the Sūrya Vaṁśa. (M.B., Śānti Parva, Chapter 288, Verses 5-46).

ARIṢṬANEMI II. Mahābhārata, Śānti Parva, Chapter 208, Verse 8 refers to one Ariṣṭanemi, the second son of Kaśyapa.

ARIṢṬANEMI III. A Rājā called Ariṣṭanemi occupied a place in the council of Yama. (M.B., Sabhā Parva, Chapter 8, Verse 9).

ARIṢṬANEMI IV. A false name assumed by Sahadeva while the Pāṇḍavas lived incognito in the Virāṭa kingdom. (M.B., Virāṭa Parva, Chapter 10, Verse 5)

ARIṢṬANEMI V. A synonym of Śrī Kṛṣṇa. (M.B., Udyoga Parva, Chapter 71, Verse 5).

ARIṢṬANEMI VI. A King. Realising the transient nature of worldly life, he gave up his kingdom and went to and did tapas at Mount Gandhamādana. Indra who was very much pleased at this sent a messenger with a vimāna (aeroplane) to conduct the King to Svarga (heaven). When he was told that there was in Svarga also the states of being high or low, and fall happened when the effect of good actions decreased, the King gave up his desire for Svarga and sent back Indra's messenger. Then Indra sent the King with a messenger to the Āśrama of Vālmīki so that he might gain spiritual knowledge. Vālmīki consoled the King with the advice that the telling, hearing and pondering over the story of the Rāmāyaṇa alone would be enough to get eternal salvation. (Yogavāsiṣṭham).

ARJUNA. The third of the Pāṇḍavas.

1) Genealogy. Descended from Viṣṇu thus: Brahmā, Atri, Candra, Budha, Purūravas, Āyus, Nahuṣa, Yayāti, Pūru, Janamejaya, Pracinvāṇ, Pravīra, Namasyu, Vītabhaya, Śuṇḍu, Bahuvidha, Saṁyāti, Rahovādi, Raudrāśvan, Matināra, Santurodha, Duṣyanta, Bharata, Suhotra, Suhotā, Gala, Gardda, Suketu, Bṛhatkṣetra, Hasti, Ajamīḍha, Ṛkṣa, Saṁvaraṇa, Kuru, Jahnu, Suratha, Vidūratha, Sārvabhauma, Jayatsena, Ravyaya, Bhāvuka, Cakroddhata, Devātithi, Ṛkṣa, Bhīma, Pratīca, Śantanu, Vyāsa, Pāṇḍu, Arjuna.

2) Previous birth. Arjuna and Śrī Kṛṣṇa are often referred to as Naranārāyaṇas (Nara and Nārāyaṇa). In their previous life they were two Ṛṣis called Nara and Nārāyaṇa, and from that time onwards they lived as inseparable companions and sons of the same parents. They entered Mahāsamādhi at Badaryāśrama in the Himālayas. Of the two Nārāyaṇarṣi was a partial incarnation of Viṣṇu. About the Nararṣi the Devī Bhāgavata has the following to say: "Dharma had his origin in the heart of Brahmā, and he earned great reputation for truthfulness and adherence to Vedic dharma. He married the daughters of Dakṣa. Dharma had four sons, Hari, Kṛṣṇa, Nara and Nārāyaṇa. Of the four sons Hari and Kṛṣṇa became great yogīs, and Nara and Nārāyaṇa, great tapasvins. Nara and Nārāyaṇa did tapas, worshipping Brahmā for 1000 years at the holy Badaryāśrama in the plains of the Himālayas. Nara was born in the next birth as Arjuna. (Devī Bhāgavata, 4th Skandha). See Nara.

3) Birth. To Vicitravīrya son of Śantanu was born Dhṛtarāṣṭra by Ambikā, and Pāṇḍu by Ambālikā. Pāṇḍu had two wives, Kuntī and Mādrī. The curse of a Muni made physical contacts with his wives impossible for Pāṇḍu. (See Pāṇḍu). Kuntī, before her marriage had attended on Maharṣi Durvāsas who pleased with her service made a gift of five mantras to her. The effect of the mantras was that Kuntī would become mother of a son from him about whom she was thinking while she repeated the mantra. As soon as she got the mantras she retired to a solitary place and thinking of the Sun-God repeated the first mantra. At once Sūryadeva appeared and Karṇa was born to her by him. After assuring her that the incident would not affect her chastity Sūrya disappeared. Kuntī abandoned the child to float in the river Gaṅgā, and stayed with Pāṇḍu keeping the other four mantras to herself. Since Pāṇḍu could not contact the body of his wives, with his permission Kuntī began practising the other four mantras one by one. By three mantras she got three sons, Dharmaputra from Kāla, Arjuna from Indra and Bhīmasena from the wind God (Vāyu). The remaining one mantra Kuntī gave to Mādrī. She repeated it thinking of the Aśvinī Devas, and two sons, Nakula and Sahadeva were born to her. (M.B., Ādi Parva, Chapter 63 onwards).

4) Festival of birth. At the birth of Arjuna Kuntī heard a heavenly voice declare as follows: "Oh! Kuntī! your son will be equal to Śiva in prowess and unconquerable just as Indra is. After defeating all the Kings he will perform the Aśvamedha thrice. He will please

Śiva and get the great weapon called Pāśupata from him. On the orders of Indra he will kill Nivātakavacas. Hearing the above prophecy the Devas played ecstatic music and flowers were showered from the sky. The Saptarṣis, Prajāpatis and other sages arrayed themselves in the sky. Thus, all animate and inanimate objects celebrated the birth of Arjuna.

5) Naming. Sages from the top of the Śataśṛṅga mountain came together to perform the christening ceremony of Arjuna. While enumerating the various names of Arjuna, it is said in the Virāṭa Parva that Kṛṣṇa was the name Pāṇḍu gave to his son. (M.B., Ādi Parva, Chapter 123, Verse 20).

6) Childhood. The Pāṇḍavas spent their childhood at Hastināpura with the Kauravas. Then Arjuna studied the art and science of using weapons, dance, music etc. along with the other boys. (M.B., Ādi Parva, Chapter 129, Verse 1). Kaśyapa, the high priest of Vasudeva did for Arjuna the usual Saṁskāras like Upanayana (wearing of the holy thread) etc. Arjuna was taught the first lessons in Dhanurveda (Science of archery) by Rājarṣi Śuka. Afterwards, Kṛpācārya became the preceptor of the Pāṇḍavas in Dhanurveda, and it was then that Droṇācārya came. There is a particular story about Droṇācārya becoming the guru. (See Droṇa).

7) Special favour of Droṇa. Arjuna showed very great interest in the science of the use of weapons. Droṇa, the master, wanted to teach Aśvatthāmā, his son, certain special things, and he began sending all his disciples to fetch water. Aśvatthāmā used to be the first to return with the water, and before the others returned Droṇa began teaching Aśvatthāmā the special lessons. Arjuna came to understand this programme and he began returning with water along with Aśvatthāmā. Then the guru began teaching the special things to both Aśvatthāmā and Arjuna. Droṇa instructed the cook not to serve Arjuna food in the darkness. While Arjuna was once taking his food, wind blew out the burning lamp, and Arjuna alone continued eating. Because of constant practice Arjuna was quite sure about the position of the hand and the mouth in the process of eating, and Arjuna surmised from this that archery also could be practised in darkness. He began practising them. The guru came to know of it, and witnessing Arjuna's performance praised Arjuna as a unique archer. (Bhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 132).

8) Ekalavya's finger was cut. Ekalavya, son of Hiraṇyadhanus, King of the Niṣādas (a tribe of hunters, forest-men) approached Droṇa to learn the science of the use of weapons. Droṇa, the Brahmin, refused the prayer of this prince of the forest tribe. Ekalavya, after prostrating at the feet of Droṇa returned to the woods, made an image of Droṇa with earth and meditating upon it as guru began practising the use of weapons.

The Kauravas and the Pāṇḍavas went hunting in the forest. Seeing there Ekalavya with his matted hair and clad in deer skin the hunting dogs began barking at him. Ekalavya shot into the mouth of the dog seven arrows at one and the same moment. With the arrows thrust in the mouth the dogs ran back to the Pāṇḍavas, and they found out the culprit, Ekalavya, who claimed himself to be a disciple of Droṇa. Grief-stricken at this claim Arjuna hurried up to Droṇa and said: "You had pronounced me to be your foremost disciple without an equal. But, today Ekalavya, another disciple of yours has relegated me to the second place". Thereupon Droṇa went and saw Ekalavya in the forest. Ekalavya, in all devotion stood up and saluted the guru. And the guru said as follows : "Oh ! Ekalavya if thou art my disciple give me the dakṣiṇā (fee) due to the guru, and I desire to get the thumb of your right hand as my fee". At once Ekalavya cut his thumb and gave it to Droṇa. Henceforth Arjuna became Droṇa's unequalled disciple. (M.B., Ādi Parva, Chapter 132).

9) Arjuna got Brahmaśirāstra. When once Droṇa and his disciples were bathing in the river Gaṅgā, a whale caught hold of the leg of the guru. The combined efforts of the disciples failed to extricate the leg from the grip of the whale. Ultimately Arjuna shot an arrow and released the guru's leg. Greatly pleased at this Droṇa imparted to Arjuna knowledge about Brahmaśirāstra, and Arjuna was enjoined not to use the astra against men, but to use it only when confronting higher beings than men. [Bhārata (Malayalam), Ādi Parva, Chapter 133].

10) Competition in arms. When the training of the princes was almost over Dhṛtarāṣṭra decided to have a rehearsal of their attainments, and the scene for it also was set. The princes with bows and arrows appeared on the scene. Yudhiṣṭhira and others first exhibited their skill in shooting arrows in the order of their seniority. Every scene was explained to Dhṛtarāṣṭra by Vidura and to Gāndhārī by Sañjaya. Duryodhana and Bhīma clashed with each other. Aśvatthāmā pacified them and kept them apart. And, then Arjuna and Karṇa appeared on the scene, and the onlookers declared them to be equal in skill in archery. When their shooting exhibition was over, Karṇa who got angry again rushed to the stage. Arjuna also got ready. Arjuna challenged Karṇa's eligibility on the ground that he was low-born and not a Kṣatriya. At once Duryodhana proclaimed him as the King of Aṅga. Though this pacified the scene, this competition in archery served much to make the Kauravas and the Pāṇḍavas the bitterest of enemies. (M.B., Ādi Parva, Chapters, 136, 137).

11) Arjuna's gurudakṣiṇā (Offering of fee to the preceptor). At the starting of training the princes Droṇa told them: "I have one thing in mind, and you must do it for me when you have completed the course of training. All the disciples except Arjuna kept silent at this, but Arjuna promised to fulfil the guru's wish at the proper time

The training was over, and it was time for gurudakṣiṇā. Droṇa asked to be brought bound before him Drupada, King of Pāñcāla. (For Droṇa's enmity towards Drupada see Drupada). Thereupon the Pāṇḍavas marched to Pāñcāla, and in a fierce battle Arjuna defeated Drupada. Though Bhīma tried to kill Drupada Arjuna did not permit it, but took him bound to Droṇa. This ended Droṇa's hatred towards Drupada, who now gifted half his kingdom to Droṇa. Droṇa was very much pleased with Arjuna for the above act, and advised him to fight even him (Droṇa) if the latter opposed him (Arjuna). To this Arjuna replied 'Yes'. (M.B., Ādi Parva, Chapter 139, Verse 14). With this promise to fight even the guru in case the guru attacked him Arjuna became the most reputed archer in Bhārata.

12) Jealousy of Dhṛtarāṣṭra. After the gurudakṣiṇā Arjuna marched against the neighbouring kingdom. He defeated very easily in war the King of Yavana and the Kings Sauvīra, Vipula and Sumitra. These victories of Arjuna made the Kauravas very anxious; Dhṛtarāṣṭra brooded over it. (M.B., Ādi Parva, Chapter 138, Verses 20-23).

13) Escape from the waxen palace. Duryodhana made up his mind to destroy the Pāṇḍavas somehow or other. He got the Pāṇḍavas to shift their residence to a palace made of wax at Vāraṇāvata, and one year after this the palace was set fire to. The Pāṇḍavas escaped death by fire through a tunnel and entered the forest, the next day. (See Arakkillam).

14) Arjuna on the banks of river Gaṅgā. The Pāṇḍavas walked much through the terrible forest, and after midnight reached the banks of the Gaṅgā. At that time Aṁgāraparṇa (Citraratha), the Gandharva was enjoying his time in the river with some Apsarā women. The presence of men at the scene, the Gandharva did not relish. Arjuna and the Gandharva crossed in words, which led to a duel. In the duel the Gandharva was defeated. As the wife of the Gandharva prayed with tears in her eyes Arjuna spared him his life. The grateful Gandharva told the Pāṇḍavas many interesting stories. He also made a present of divine horses and imparted to them the esoteric knowledge called Cākṣuṣīvidyā. The Gandharva finally told the Pāṇḍavas that they were attacked because they came without Agni and Āhuti in their front. He also explained this fact that Arjuna could subjugate him on account of his (Arjuna's) genuine celibacy. (See Citraratha).

15) Pāñcālīsvayaṁvara. Citraratha, during his talks with the Pāṇḍavas had pointed out to them the need to have a priest to lead and guide them in all matters, and accordingly they visited Dhaumyāśrama and installed the Maharṣi (Dhaumya) as their priest.

And, meantime, seeing thousands of people on their way to attend the Svayaṁvara (marriage by open choice of husband by the girl) of Kṛṣṇā (Pāñcālī) daughter of the King of Pāñcāla, the Pāṇḍavas also followed the crowd. Veda Vyāsa, whom the Pāṇḍavas met on their way blessed them. King Drupada wished to give his daughter Kṛṣṇā in marriage to Arjuna. The news that the Pāṇḍavas were burned to death in the palace of wax grieved Drupada. Yet he had made arrangements for a trial of strength by Heroes at the Svayaṁvara. A tremendous bow was got ready and installed on the ground, and a machine constructed which was kept suspended in the air. The target was placed inside the machine. And then Drupada spoke thus: "My daughter shall be married to him who will bend the bow and with the first arrow hit the target placed inside the machine". (M.B., Ādi Parva, Chapter 155, Verse 11). Great warriors like Duryodhana, Karṇa, Śiśupāla, Śiṁśumāra took their seats in the marriage hall. All the kings failed even to lift the bow up. Ultimately Arjuna lifted the bow and hit the target very easily. Pāñcālī put the wedding garland on Arjuna's neck. When the Pāṇḍavas returned to their mother with Pāñcālī in the evening the mother from inside her room said: "What you have got today, my sons, you enjoy among yourselves." Kuntī said this under the impression that what her sons had got was some Bhikṣā. At any rate, in obedience to the above injunction of the mother Pāñcālī became wife to the five Pāṇḍavas. (M.B., Ādi Parva, Chapters 190, 191).

16) Arjuna at Indraprastha. The svayaṁvara of Pāñcālī broadcast news about the whereabouts of the Pāṇḍavas. Dhṛtarāṣṭra brought them back to Indraprastha, and installed them in a new palace built at the place called Khāṇḍavaprastha. (Indraprastha). Dharmaputra ruled a part of the country with Indraprastha as capital. Nārada went there once and advised the Pāṇḍavas to guard themselves against mutual quarrels as the five of them claimed one and the same woman as wife. Thenceforth it was set forth that Pāñcālī would live with each husband in turn for one year. It was also settled that during a particular year if any other husband than the one whose turn it was to live with Pāñcālī saw her the intruder was to go on a pilgrimage for one year.

Once a brahmin came to the palace complaining that his cows were stolen by thieves, and Arjuna promised to help him. Arjuna did so without remembering that all his weapons were stored in Dharmaputra's palace. That year Pāñcālī was living with Dharmaputra. Forgetting the fact Arjuna went to Dharmaputra's palace, got his weapons and helped the brahmin. For thus breaking the rule Arjuna left his palace on a pilgrimage for one year.

17A) Arjuna married Ulūpikā and Citrāṅgadā. Arjuna with his bow and arrows went into the forest. Many brahmins followed him. Arjuna reached the banks of Gaṅgā and entered the waters for a bath. Here Arjuna was attracted by Ulūpikā, daughter of the Nāga King and he married her. A son was born to them called Irāvān. After visiting places like Agastyavaṭam, Vasiṣṭhagiri Arjuna reached Manalur. He married Citrāṅgadā, daughter of Citrāṅgada, King of Manalur. After a stay of three months there he went southwards. Citrāṅgadā gave birth to a son named Babhruvāhana.

17B) The mark on Arjuna's flag is Hanūmān, and the following story is attached to it. Arjuna, once during a tour of the country was much surprised to see the Dam constructed by Śrī Rāma from Rāmeśvara to Laṅkā. He also felt that it was not at all proper on the part of Śrī Rāma to have sought the help of monkeys to construct the dam. Śrī Rāma could have made a dam with arrows. Arjuna put this question to a great scholar (Pandit) who was sitting nearby reading the Rāmāyaṇa. Neither the Pandit nor the other brahmins gathered there could give a convincing answer to Arjuna's doubts. Then a monkey child went up to Arjuna and told him with pride that a dam made of arrows would have broken when the monkeys walked on it. Arjuna said then, "no, no, no monkey will be able to break the dam built with Rāma's arrows; which monkey will break a dam of arrows made even by me ?" And, a debate began about the subject. The monkey and Arjuna agreed to a bet that if a monkey broke the dam made by Arjuna he would end his life by jumping into fire, and if the monkey could not break the dam it would for ever be Arjuna's slave. Arjuna constructed a dam with arrows. And, as soon as the monkey set foot on it it was broken. Arjuna tried again. Though now it caused some efforts on the part of the monkey the dam broke this time also. Arjuna was thus left with no alternative but to die by jumping into fire and a fire was accordingly lit. Before Arjuna jumped into the fire a brahmin boy, who was bathing in the river ran upto Arjuna and told him that his attempt at self annihilation was not justified as the bet was made without an arbiter. When Arjuna who was wedded so much to truth brushed aside this argument and got ready to end his life the boy said : "If you are so very insistent about it you (Arjuna and the monkey) compete once again with me as arbiter. This suggestion of the boy was accepted. The monkey child tried its best to break the dam, but it failed. It developed its body to the size of a mountain and jumped on the dam. Even then it did not break. Then he ran up to the boy who was acting as arbiter and prostrated at his feet crying 'Rāmacandra'. At the same moment Arjuna also prostrated before the boy crying 'Śrī Kṛṣṇa, slave to devotees'. The boy asked both of them to get up, and after admonishing them for their conceit gave them good advice. He also asked the monkey child to keep his word by remaining as the emblem of Arjuna's flag. (The monkey boy was actually Hanūmān and the brahmin boy Śrī Kṛṣṇa).

17 C) Arjuna married Subhadrā. Arjuna went to the holy place called Saubhadratīrtha and redeemed the woman named Vargā from the curse she was labouring under. (See Vargā). Arjuna continued his journey and reached Gokarṇa and Prabhāsa tīrtha, where he met Gada, brother of Śrī Kṛṣṇa. Gada described to Arjuna the great beauty of his sister, Subhadrā. Arjuna went to Dvārakā and paid his respects to Śrī Kṛṣṇa. A few days later the yādavas celebrated a great festival at mount Raivataka. Arjuna went there disguised as a Sannyāsin and forcibly took away Subhadrā with him with the permission of Śrī Kṛṣṇa. Though the yādavas got ready for a fight they were ultimately pacified, and Subhadrā was married to Arjuna. (M.B., Ādi Parva, Chapter, 218-224).

17D) Brahmin boy saved. When once Arjuna was in Dvārakā with Śrī Kṛṣṇa a brahmin appeared on the scene lamenting that his child died as soon as it was born. Nobody paid any heed to this, and then Arjuna rose up and assured protection to the next child to be born to the brahmin and asked him to return home in peace. Arjuna also vowed that he would end his life by jumping into fire if he failed to protect the next child of the brahmin.

As the time for the delivery of his wife approached the brahmin took Arjuna home. Arjuna made the house secure by making an enclosure with his arrows. Yet the child died; not only that, at the time of birth itself its body disappeared. And, the brahmin heaped insults on Arjuna, who looked very foolish. Rendered thus an object of ridicule Arjuna began to make a fire for him to jump into. At this Śrī Kṛṣṇa appeared before Arjuna and prevented him from jumping into fire. And then both Kṛṣṇa and Arjuna went to Viṣṇuloka and submitted the case of the brahmin to him. Viṣṇu told them : "Oh ! Kṛṣṇa and Arjuna, it was I who took away the brahmin boys for the pleasure of seeing you both here. You may immediately return with the brahmin boys. And, Kṛṣṇa and Arjuna returned with the boys to the brahmin, who now felt very happy. (Bhāgavata, Daśama Skandha, Chapter 89).

17E) Burning of Khāṇḍava forest. While Kṛṣṇa and Arjuna were spending their days on the banks of river Yamunā in the summer season Agni Bhagavān (the fire-god) requested them to give the Khāṇḍava forest as food to him. (See Khāṇḍavadāha). Arjuna agreed to oblige Agni Bhagavān, who presented to Arjuna the bow called Gāṇḍīva, a white horse and many other powerful arrows. When Agni began burning the forest, Indra sent a heavy shower of rain. By creating a tent with arrows Arjuna saved the forest from the rain. Arjuna killed Takṣaka's wife, cursed the Nāga called Aśvasena and saved Maya, the architect of the Asuras who was put up in the forest. Indra was pleased and gifted many divine arrows to Arjuna. Maya gave the famous conch, Devadattam to Arjuna. By now the one year of the pilgrimage of Arjuna was over and he returned to Indraprastha. (M.B., Ādi Parva, Chapters 233-239).

17P) Fight between Arjuna and Śrī Kṛṣṇa. (See Gālava, para 4).

18) Again to the forest. Maya, who escaped death in Khāṇḍava forest, in his great gratitude, went to Indraprastha, and with the permission of Dharmaputra built for the Pāṇḍavas an exceptionally beautiful palace. And then the Pāṇḍavas made the conquest of all the earth, and after killing enemy kings like Jarāsandha, the Kimpuruṣas, the Hādakas, Śiśupāla, Kurundha and Bhagadatta returned to Idraprastha and performed the Rājasūya yajña. The Kauravas who got jealous at this went on a visit to Indraprastha. When they entered the palace built by Maya they were put into many a ludicrous situation. (See Sabhāpraveśa). Insulted and humiliated they returned to Hastināpura and challenged the Pāṇḍavas to a game of dice, and in the game the Pāṇḍavas lost not only their kingdom and other riches, but Pāñcālī as well. Duśśāsana dragged Pāñcālī and stripped her of her clothes in the royal assembly and thus mercilessly insulted her. According to the terms and condition agreed to with reference to the game of dice, the Pāṇḍavas had to lead forest life for twelve years and live for one year incognito. The Pāṇḍavas again started for the forest. (M.B., Sabhā Parva).

19) Pāṇḍavas in Kāmyaka forest. A number of brahmins also accompanied the Pāṇḍavas to the forest. The noble brahmin, Śaunaka consoled the aggrieved Dharmaputra in the Dvaitavana. Dharmaputra felt worried that he could not feed the brahmins who accompanied him into the forest. Pāñcālī prayed to the Sun-God, and he gave the Akṣayapātra to her. (See Akṣyapātra). And, after this the Pāṇḍavas, along with the brahmins, entered the Kāmyaka forest. (M.B., Araṇya Parva, Chapter 36).

20) Arjuna secured divine arrows. Dharmaputra asked Arjuna to do tapas in the Himālayas and thus secure divine arrows. Accordingly Arjuna went south and saw Indra in the Indrakīla mountain. Indra gave him boons. There Arjuna killed Mūkāsura. And, then Arjuna went to Mount Kailāsa and prayerfully concentrated his mind on Śiva. Śiva appeared in the guise of a forest dweller. (See Pāśupatāstra). After that he got the Daṇḍāstra from Yama, Pāśāstra from Varuṇa and Antardhānāstra from Kubera. (M.B., Vana Parva, Chapters 37-41).

21) Arjuna in Indraloka. Indra, who was so very pleased that Arjuna got so many divine arrows deputed his charioteer, Mātali, to bring Arjuna to Devaloka, and at Devaloka he learned more about archery and music. The Apsarā women forgot themselves when they saw the exceptionally handsome Arjuna. Urvaśī, mad with love, sent her messenger Citrasena to Indra. Being told about Urvaśī's love Arjuna closed both his ears with hands, and reminded the messenger of Urvaśī's maternal position with reference to him. Urvaśī cursed and turned Arjuna into an eunuch. Indra consoled Arjuna by assuring him that Urvaśī's curse will turn out to be of great benefit to him. Afterwards Arjuna stayed in Devaloka for a few days with Citrasena, and during the period he killed Nivātakavaca and Kālakeya.

Arjuna became a friend of Maharṣi Lomaśa, who had gone to Devaloka to see Indra. Promising Arjuna that he would protect Dharmaputra Lomaśa returned to the earth. Arjuna left the Kāmyaka forest and returned to his brothers after an absence for five years. He met the brothers at Mount Gandhamādana. (M.B., Vana Parva, Chapters 42-47).

22) Procession. At last a witty and humorous brahmin went to Dhṛtarāṣṭra and dilated upon the hardships being suffered by the Pāṇḍavas, and Duryodhana and others were extremely pleased and happy to hear it. Yet, they shed crocodile tears. But, Duryodhana was in a mighty hurry to see with his own eyes the pitiable plight of the Pāṇḍavas. On the pretext of going out for hunting Duryodhana and others with the permission of Dhṛtarāṣṭra, started for the forest with a number of attendants. 8,000 chariots, 30,000 elephants, thousands of infantry soldiers, 9,000 horses, merchants, ornaments, courtesans and thousands of hunters formed this procession into the forest. Just like roaring winds during the rainy season the procession caused thunderous noise. Duryodhana approached the pool in the Dvaita forest and waited at a distance. (M.B., Araṇya Parva, Chapter 239, Verses 25-29).

Duryodhana and attendants put up tents in the forest. The Gandharvas obstructed Duryodhana, and he and the Gandharva called Citrasena clashed with each other. Duryodhana was made a prisoner. Arjuna came on the scene and released him. And, thus humiliated Duryodhana returned to Hastināpura with the attendants. (M.B., Āraṇya Parva, Chapters 239-253).

23) Arjuna lost consciousness. While once Pāñcālī was alone King Jayadratha forcibly took her away. Within seconds the Pāṇḍavas confronted Jayadratha and regained Pāñcālī. Jayadratha and his men were killed. The Pāṇḍavas, who were very weary and tired walking in the forest felt extremely thirsty. Nakula, at the instance of Dharmaputra climbed a tree and looked around and sighted a pool of clear water. When Nakula went to the pool and began to draw water a voice from above was heard saying as follows : "Do not be so very daring. This is my ancestral wealth. If you answer my questions you may not only drink the water but also take some with you". Without paying any heed to this warning Nakula drank water from the pool, and lo ! he fell down unconscious immediately. Sahadeva who went to the pool in search of Nakula and drank water from the pool also met with the same fate as Nakula. Arjuna and Bhīma also had the same fate at the pool. Lastly Dharmaputra went to the pool and understanding what happened to his brothers requested permission to drink water. At once a Yakṣa appeared and brought the brothers of Dharmaputra back to consciousness. In fact, the Yakṣa was none other than Yamadharmadeva. (For questions and answers of the Yakṣa see Dharmaputra.) (M.B., Araṇya Parva, Chapters 312-315).

24) Life incognito. Now the twelve years of forest life being over the Pāṇḍavas decided to spend the one year of life incognito in the Virāṭa palace. Arjuna disguised himself and deposited his clothes and weapons in the hollow of a Śami tree in the forest. And the Pāṇḍavas in various disguises reached the Virāṭa palace. They assumed false names : Dharmaputra as Kaṅka, Bhīma as Valāla, Arjuna as Bṛhannala, Nakula as Granthika and Sahadeva as Ariṣṭanemi and Draupadī as Mālinī.

When the life incognito of the Pāṇḍavas for one year was about to expire a rumour reached the Kauravas that the Pāṇḍavas were at the Virāṭa capital, and the Kauravas thought that the Pāṇḍavas will appear on the scene if a war was fought against King Virāṭa. The Kauravas, with this object in view, lifted the cows of Virāṭa and that led to war. Uttara, the prince of Virāṭa boasted that he would fight provided he had a good charioteer. Bṛhannala (Arjuna) agreed to act as such and they started for the warfield. At the sight of the massive army of the Kauravas Uttara got frightened and tried to run away from the field. But Bṛhannala tightly bound Uttara to the chariot, drove it very fast to the forest, took back from the hollow of the Śami tree his weapons and returned to the battle-field. The Kauravas were absolutely defeated in the war and they took to their heels. They understood that the very clever and terrible warrior in disguise was Arjuna himself. But, by the time the period of the Pāṇḍavas life incognito was over. The king of Virāṭa, greatly pleased over this victory in war gave his daughter, Uttarā in marriage to Abhimanyu, son of Arjuna. (M.B., Virāṭa Parva).

25) Preparations for war. After the forest life and life incognito the Pāṇḍavas returned. The Kauravas refused to give them half the Kingdom. Śrī Kṛṣṇa, on behalf of the Pāṇḍavas, implored that half the kingdom or five districts or five houses or at least one house be given to them. But. the Kauravas took the stand that not even an iota of land would be given to the Pāṇḍavas. And, war was perforce decided upon. Duryodhana went to Kṛṣṇa at Dvārakā to request for support in war. Kṛṣṇa, who favoured the Pāṇḍavas lay in false sleep as he did not want to fight against them. Duryodhana sat at the head of Kṛṣṇa. Arjuna, who came after some time sat at the feet of Kṛṣṇa and remained there standing. Awakening from sleep, it was Arjuna whom Kṛṣṇa saw first. After the greetings were over with Arjuna, Kṛṣṇa saw Duryodhana also. Between Kṛṣṇa without any arms and the armed forces of Kṛṣṇa, Arjuna chose Kṛṣṇa and Duryodhana his armed forces to help each side in the impending war. (Udyoga Parva).

26) War. Both the Parties were encamped in Kurukṣetra ready for war. Śrī Kṛṣṇa acted as Charioteer to Arjuna. He stopped the chariot in between the opposing armies. Arjuna felt deep anguish to find his own people arrayed on the opposite side for war. Reluctant to kill relations, elders, friends and preceptors Arjuna laid down his arms in the chariot. Then did Kṛṣṇa instruct him in Karmayoga (the philosophy of action). That instruction and advice of Kṛṣṇa is the world-famous Bhagavad Gītā. The Gītā cleared off Arjuna's illusions and he praised the Lord, Śrī Kṛṣṇa, who revealed his all comprehensive form (Viśvarūpa) to Arjuna.

On the first day of the war Arjuna fought a duel with Bhīṣma, and the second day he fought the Kaurava forces with exceptional prowess. And then Arjuna prevented Kṛṣṇa from killing Bhīṣma. But, the Kaurava army faced defeat that day. On the third day Arjuna defeated Bhīṣma, Aśvatthāmā, Trigartta, Bhagadatta and others. Thereupon a really fierce fight began. The war lasted for 18 days. The important incidents during the 18 days can be summarised as follows :—

(1) Fierce fight between Arjuna and Bhīṣma.
(2) Fight between Arjuna and Aśvatthāmā.
(3) Arjuna destroyed the Kaurava army.
(4) Irāvān, son of Arjuna, was killed.
(5) Arjuna fought against Droṇa and Suśarmā.
(6) Took the vow to kill Bhīṣma.
(7) Śikhaṇḍī prompted to kill Bhīṣma.
(8) On the appearance of Śikhaṇḍi the Kaurava army, took fright and fled in great disarray.
(9) Arjuna fought a duel with Duśśāsana.
(10) Duel with Bhagadatta.
(11) Duel again with Bhīṣma.
(12) Bhīṣma fainted and fell on the ground.
(13) Duel again with Duśśāsana.
(14) With Śikhaṇḍī in the front made an attack on Bhīṣma.
(15) Arjuna discharged three arrows to serve as pillow to Bhīṣma who, dislodged from the chariot, was lying on a bed of arrows.
(16) Cool water sprinkled on the face of Bhīṣma with the aid of divine arrows.
(17) Fought against Droṇa and defeated his forces.
(18) Satyajit deputed to remain with Dharmaputra to help him.
(19) Sudhanvā killed.
(20) Again fought with Bhagadatta.
(21) Supratīka, the elephant of Bhagadatta killed.
(22) And after that, Bhagadatta also killed.
(23) Vṛṣaka and Acala killed by Arjuna.
(24) Śakuni defeated.
(25) Arjuna killed the three brothers of Karṇa and confronted Karṇa.
(26) Abhimanyu, son of Arjuna, killed.
(27) Hearing about the death of Abhimanyu, Arjuna fell down unconscious.
(28) Awakened, Arjuna vowed to kill Jayadratha.
(29) Arjuna performed Śiva Pūjā.
(30) Arjuna dreamt that night to have paid homage to Śiva along with Kṛṣṇa and that Śiva gave him divine arrows like Pāśupata.
(31) Marched forth routing the elephant regiment of Durmarṣaṇa.
(32) Routed Duśśāsana in fight.
(33) Again fought Droṇa, Kṛtavarmā, Śrutāyudha, Sudakṣiṇa, King of Kāmboja.
(34) Sudakṣiṇa killed in fight.
(35) Śrutāyu, Acyutāyu, Niyutāyu, Ambaṣṭha and the Mlecchas' army killed.
(36) Vinda and Anuvinda killed.
(37) Warfield converted into a house of arrows, on account of the great collection of arrows.
(38) Arjuna defeated Duryodhana.
(39) Fought the nine great warriors on the Kaurava side.
(40) Arjuna cut off the right hand of Bhūriśravas at the instance of Kṛṣṇa.
(41) Cut off the head of Jayadratha with arrows. The head and the arrows were thrown on the lap of Jayadratha's father.
(42) Alambuṣa, King of Rākṣasas killed.
(43) Daṇḍadhāra killed with his elephant.
(44) Arjuna killed the six brothers of Suśarmā, viz., Satyasena, Candrasena, Mitrasena, Śrutañjaya, Sauśruti and Mitradharmā
(45) Difference of opinion arose between Dharmaputra and Arjuna about the failure to kill Karṇa, and in the heat of excitement Arjuna called his elder brother 'thou'.
(46) Immediately repenting Arjuna drew sword to kill himself. But, regained mental peace by begging pardon of the brother.
(47) Killed Vṛṣasena, son of Karṇa,
(48) Karṇa brought down Kṛṣṇa's crown by his arrow resembling the face of the serpent. Enraged at this Arjuna killed Karṇa.
(49) Killed Satyakarmā, Satyeṣṭha and others.
(50) After bowing to Vyāsa, Arjuna withdrew arrow. (M.B., Bhīṣma, Droṇa, Karṇa, Śalya and Sauptika Parvas).

27) After the war. In the great war the Kaurava army, to the very last man, was annihilated. The Pāṇḍavas assembled together. Thoughts about the future came up. Śrī Kṛṣṇa consoled the sorrowing Dharmaputra. As desired by Vyāsa, Kṛṣṇa, Dharmaputra and others returned to Hastināpura and took up the reins of governing the country, and the idea of performing an Aśvamedha Yāga was seriously mooted. A King named Marutta agreed to give money needed for the yajña. Arjuna defeated all enemy kings. (M.B., Śānti Parva).

28) Death and rebirth of Arjuna. On his way back after digvijaya Arjuna was killed by the arrows of his son, Babhruvāhana. Immediately did Ulūpī, Arjuna's wife bring back to life her husband by Mṛtasañjīvanī mantra. Then Arjuna questioned Ulūpī about the reason for his son killing him, and also as to how she happened to be present at the time. Ulūpī described the story of a curse in answer to Arjuna's querry. (M.B., Aśvamedha Parva, Chapter 79).

29) The story of the curse. Ulūpī said : You shall not get angry. Yes, all is for the best. In war you killed Bhīṣma by unrighteous means, viz. with the help of Śikhaṇḍī. On his death, the Aṣṭavasus and Gaṅgā Devī cursed you with hell. I told about this curse to my father, who begged the Vasus for redemption, and they said that you would be redeemed from the curse when your son, Babhruvāhana, killed you. Accordingly he has been brought here to kill you.
The above story pleased Arjuna. (Aśvamedha Parva, Chapter 81).

30) Aśvamedham. Arjuna again defeated Meghasandhi, the King of Magadha, Śakuniputra and others and returned to Hastināpura, where the Aśvamedha yajña was performed. The Yādava dynasty was extinguished before long. Arjuna did all the rites due to them on death. He grieved over the departure of Śrī Kṛṣṇa. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 11, Chapter 31). And then he went to Indraprastha with the consorts of Kṛṣṇa. On the way dacoits overcame Arjuna and snatched away some of the females. Arjuna felt very sad. Then Vyāsa appeared and told him that he would be strong and powerful only in the presence of Kṛṣṇa. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 15).

31) Pāṇḍavas' journey to the other world. Now, it was time for the Pāṇḍavas to journey to the other world.

It was at this juncture that the Yādava dynasty ended and Śrī Kṛṣṇa was killed, and some of Kṛṣṇa's consorts were abducted. Arjuna could not save them, and they jumped into the river and died. Arjuna, who lost all his power began the great journey with his brothers. On their way Agnideva advised him to deposit reputed bow, Gāṇḍīva in the sea, and Arjuna did so. (Mahāprasthāna Parva, Chapter 1, Verses 1-42). The Pāṇḍavas continued their journey, Yudhiṣṭhira leading them. They reached the Himālayas, and there Pāñcālī expired. To Bhīma's querry as to why Pāñcālī expired first, Yudhiṣṭhira replied that it was due to her having been more partial to Arjuna. The others continued their journey and then Sahadeva died. Yudhiṣṭhira explained that Sahadeva died second due to his arrogance and conceit. And, the others continued going forward. An emaciated dog was already with the Pāṇḍavas during their journey. Nakula was the third to die, and Yudhiṣṭhira attributed it to his (Nakula) extreme conceit about his beauty. And, Arjuna's death next, Yudhiṣṭhira said, was due to his having not kept his vow, once made, to kill the whole lot of enemies in a day. After proceeding a short distance further Bhīma also fell dead, and Yudhiṣṭhira thought to himself that it was due to Bhīma's voracious eating. And, then Devendra came in his chariot of gold and welcomed Yudhiṣṭhira to Svarga. But, he refused the offer saying that he would not do go alone, leaving his brothers behind. When Indra assured him that his brothers were already there, in Svarga, Yudhiṣṭhira got into the chariot and reached Svarga, and he was elated to find his brothers there happy with Pāñcālī. (Mahāprasthāna Parva and Svargārohaṇa).

34) Origin of certain words. Towards the close of his life incognito, Arjuna went to the Śami tree to take out Gāṇḍīva kept in its hollow. Uttarā also was with Arjuna. Then Arjuna revealed himself to Uttarā, and also elaborated the meaning of his various names as follows:—

I shall tell you my ten names. Arjuna, Phālguna, Jiṣṇu, Kirīṭi, Śvetavāhana, Bhībhatsu, Vijaya, Kṛṣṇa, Savyasācī and Dhanañjaya......I am called Dhanañjaya, because even after having conquered all the lands and amassed wealth I stand in the centre of righteousness ....I am called Vijaya because in fights with haughty opponents I always succeed......I am called Śvetavāhana because white horses are harnessed in war to my chariot decked with golden ornaments......I am called Phālguna because I was born in the month of Phālguna and under the star, Phālguna....I am kirīṭī because during my fight with the Daityas I put on my head crown glowing as Sun...I am called Bībhatsu by men and Devas because I never resort to revolting means during war...Devas and men call me Savyasācī because both my hands are adept in using the bow, Gāṇḍīva....I am Arjuna because, in the world people are rare who possess such fair colour as I do, and moreover I do only white (just and ethical) acts....I am called Jiṣṇu, because I am unassailable and unconquerable, and I subjugate and conquer, and also because I am the son of Indra...My father gave me the tenth name of Kṛṣṇa because I was very attractive (Kṛṣṇa=attractive). [Mahābhārata (Malayalam)].

35) Wives of Arjuna.

(1) Pāñcālī (2) Ulūpī (3) Citrāṅgadā (4) Subhadrā.

36) Sons of Arjuna. Śṛtakirīṭi, Irāvān, Babhruvāhana, Abhimanyu.

ARJUNA II. A son of Emperor, Nimi.

One Arjuna, son of emperor Nimi, got philosophical advice from a Muni named Asita (Brahmāṇḍapurāṇa, Chapter 47).

ARJUNA III. (See Kārttavīryārjuna).

ARJUNA IV. A member of Yama's assembly. The other members are: Kapotaroma, Tṛṇaka, Sahadeva, Viśva, Sāśva, Kṛśāśva, Śaśabindu and Mahīśvara. (M.B., Sabhā Parva, Chapter 8, Verse 17).

ARJUNĀBHIGAMANAPARVA. A sub Parva in Mahābhārata. (See Mahābhārata).

ARJUNAKA. A hunter. Dharmaputra was called to his side by Bhīṣma his body torn by arrows in fight and he felt very sad and sorry to see Bhīṣma in that state. To console Dharmaputra Bhīṣma related a story and this hunter was one of the characters in the story. The story may be summarised as follows:—

Once, the son of an old Brahmin woman Gautamī, died on account of snake-bite. A hunter caught and brought before Gautamī the snake. His object was to kill it immediately. But the serpent proved its innocence by pleading that it bit the boy impelled and prompted by Death. At once death (mṛtyu) appeared on the scene and explained that it was prompted by the God of Death. And, it was the child who was responsible for the cause of death, and Gautamī was the cause for the birth of the child. Ultimately Gautamī herself assumed responsibility for the sin. Bhīṣma consoled Dharmaputra by telling that as in the case of Gautamī in the story, the cause for every effect was the chain of Karma. (M.B., Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 1).

ARJUNAVANAVĀSAPARVA. A sub parva in Mahābhārata. (See Mahābhārata).

ARKKA I. A synonym of the Sun. (See SŪRYA).

ARKKAPARṆA. Kaśyapa's son by his wife Munī. He was a Devagandharva. (M.B., Ādi Parva, Chapter 65, Verse 43).

ARTHAM. From the forehead of Mahāviṣṇu a golden lotus grew up from which Śrī Devī was born. Dharmārthas (Dharma = righteousness and artha = wealth) also were born from Śrī. "From the forehead of Viṣṇu, sprung up a golden lotus and His wise spouse Śrī arose there from and oh, Pāṇḍava, righteousness and wealth came into being from Śrī". (Bhāṣābhārata, Śānti Parva, Chapter 59, Stanzas 130 & 131).

ARUJAM. A sect among the Rākṣasas. (M.B., Vana Parva, Chapter 285, Verse 2).

ARULMOLITHEVAR. The Śaiva text of the south is called Tirumura, and it contains twelve songs. The first seven of those songs were composed by Tirujñānasambandha, Tirunavukkaiśar and Sundaramūrti. The twelfth song is called Periyapurāṇa composed by Arulmolithevar. He is also called Sekhilar. Tevar was prime minister (A.D. 1063-1112) of Cola. (Some great lives).

ARUṆA I.

1) Birth. Son of Kaśyapa by Vinatā. Kaśyapa, son of Brahmā, married Vinatā and Kadrū, and being so much pleased by their services he gave them boons. Kadrū got the boon to have 1000 nāga (serpent) sons, and Vinatā to have two sons more powerful and vital than the sons of Kadrū. After this Kaśyapa went into the forest again for Tapas. After a period, Kadrū gave birth to 1000 eggs and Vinatā to two. Both the mothers kept their eggs in pots so that they were in the right temperature. After 500 years the pot broke up and Kadrū had her 1000 sons. Vinatā felt pained at this and opened one of her pots. A child only half-developed emerged from the egg and he was Aruṇa. (M.B., Ādi Parva, Chapter 16, Verses 5-7). After another 500 years the other egg of Vinatā hatched itself and a glowing son emerged. He was Garuḍa.

2) Genealogy. While Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa wandered in the forest searching for Sītā they saw the wounded and disabled Jaṭāyu. Jaṭāyu described his genealogy as follows : "Kaśyapa, son of Brahmā, married the daughters of Dakṣa. Of the two wives, Vinatā delivered two sons, Garuḍa and Aruṇa. Sampāti was Aruṇa's elder son and he (Jaṭāyu) the younger. (Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa, Araṇyakāṇḍa, Canto 14). Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 19 also refers to Garuḍa and Aruṇa as the sons of Vinatā.

3) Aruṇa curses his mother. The fact of Vinatā forcing open one of her eggs prematurely and Aruṇa emerging out of it with only a half-developed body has been mentioned above. Aruṇa got angry at the haste of his mother and cursed her to live as slave of Kadrū for 500 years, and then Garuḍa would redeem her from slavery. He also asked her to wait for 500 years so that the birth of another physically deficient son like himself might be avoided. After pronouncing this curse Aruṇa rose to the sky. This curse was the reason for Vinatā's becoming a slave of Kadrū. (M.B., Ādi Parva, Chapter 16, Verses 18-23).

4) Aruṇa became charioteer of Sun. The Sun and the Moon betrayed to the Devas Rāhu, who waited at the entrance of Devaloka to snatch off the Nectar (Amṛtam) got at the churning of the sea of milk (Kṣīrābdhi). Thenceforth Rāhu does often swallow the Sun and the Moon. That phenomenon is called the eclipse (of the Sun or Moon. Sūrya-grahaṇa and Candra-grahaṇa). Enraged by these frequent attacks of Rāhu, the Sun-God began once to burn like anything. Murmuring that everyone would cooperate when there was something to be achieved, but would go on their own way when the object was achieved, the Sun-God began burning so virulently as to destroy all living forms, and the Devas were frightened by this and took refuge in Brahmā. Brahmā called Aruṇa and asked him to stand as charioteer in front of the Sun-God everyday so that the Sun's intensity might be reduced. From that day onwards Aruṇa has been functioning as the charioteer of the Sun. (M.B., Ādi Parva, Chapter 24, Verses 15-20).

5) Birth of sons. Śyenī, wife of Aruṇa delivered two sons, Sampāti and Jaṭāyu. (M.B., Ādi Parva, Chapter 68, Verse 71).

6) Aruṇa assumed female form. Śīlāvatī, the chaste woman, once did naked Tapas to redeem her husband, Ugratapas from the consequences of a curse. The object of her tapas was to prevent the next dawn (Sunrise). Owing to the intensity of her tapas the Sun ceased to rise, and this gave his charioteer Aruṇa some rest. Then it was that Aruṇa came to know of a programme of naked dance by the women in Devaloka. Women alone were admitted to the dance hall. Aruṇa, therefore, assumed female form and sat among the Deva women, and the beautiful 'female' kindled erotic sentiments in Indra and he enjoyed a night with 'her'. Also, a son was born to them. And, before the day dawned Aruṇa, at the instance of Indra entrusted the child to Ahalyādevī and returned to join duty as the Sun-God's charioteer. (Aruṇa, while he acted as Indra's wife was called Āruṇīdevī). Aruṇa was a bit late to report for duty, and when questioned by Sun he detailed the happenings during the last night. This evoked the desire in the Sun to see Aruṇa in female form. Aruṇa did so, and the Sun enjoyed her. This also resulted in the birth of a son, who too was, at the instance of the Sun, entrusted to Ahalyādevī. Ahalyādevī brought both the children with tender love, which Gautama muni, her husband did not like. He cursed them and turned them into monkeys. After some time Indra went to Ahalyā to see his child and he was told the story of Gautama's curse. Indra searched out both the monkeys. In view of the elder one having a long tail he was called Bāli (Vāli) and the neck of the second one being very beautiful, he was named Sugrīva. At that time, Ṛkṣarāja, the monkey King of Kiṣkindhā was very unhappy because he had no sons. He came to know of Bāli and Sugrīva, and requested Indra to give both the monkeys to him as sons. Indra gladly obliged him. Indra blessed Bāli to the effect that half the strength of anybody who attacked him would be added to his own natural power. Indra then sent him and Sugrīva to Kiṣkindhā.

7) Synonyms. Sūrasūta, Anūru, Aruṇa, Kāśyapi, Garuḍāgraja.

ARUṆA II. A king of the solar dynasty, and father of Triśaṅku. (Devī Bhāgavata, Saptama Skandha).

ARUṆA III. A sage in ancient India. A community of Ṛṣis was denoted by this name. Those Ṛṣis were called Āruṇas. The Ajas, Pṛśnis, Sikatas, Ketus and Aruṇas—they attained Svarga by self study. (M.B., Śānti Parva, Chapter 26, Verse 7).

ARUṆA IV. A serpent. Karkkoṭaka, Vāsuki, Takṣaka, Pṛthuśravas, Aruṇa, Kuñjara, Mitra, Śaṁkha, Kumuda, Puṇḍarīka, and the chief of serpents, Dhṛtarāṣṭra. (M.B., Mausala Parva, Chapter 4, Verse 15).

ARUṆA V. A Ṛṣi. Taittarīya Āraṇyaka refers to him as born from the flesh of Brahmā at the time of creation.

ARUṆA VI. A Dānava (Asura) born in the dynasty of Vipracitti. He did tapas for long years repeating the Gāyatrī mantra, and got from Brahmā the boon not to die in war. Becoming very arrogant on account of this boon he left Pātāla (nether region) for the earth and deputed a messenger to challenge Indra for war. At that time a heavenly voice called out that as long as Aruṇa did not give up the Gāyatrī he could not be worsted in war. Then the Devas sent Bṛhaspati to Aruṇa to make him give up Gāyatrī. Aruṇa questioned Bṛhaspati as to why he of the enemy camp had come to him (Aruṇa). Bṛhaspati replied : "You and I are not different; both of us are worshippers of Gāyatrī Devī. Being told so Aruṇa gave up worship of Gāyatrī Devī, and she felt offended at this and sent thousands of beetles against him. Thus, without fighting Aruṇa and his army were extinguished. (Devī Bhāgavata).

ARUṆA VII. A son of Narakāsura. When Narakāsura was killed Aruṇa along with his six brothers fought against Śrī Kṛṣṇa and was killed.

ARUṆĀ I. An Apsarā woman born of Pradhā, wife of Kaśyapa. Pradhā and Kaśyapa had the following children. Alambuṣā, Miśrakeśī, Vidyutparṇā, Tilottamā, Rakṣitā, Rambhā and Manoramā. (M.B., Ādi Parva, Chapter 65, Verses 50, 51).

ARUṆĀ II. A tributary of the river Sarasvatī. (M.B., Vana Parva, Chapter 83, Verse 15).

ARUṆĀSAMGAMAM. The place where Aruṇā falls into Sarasvatī. (M.B., Śalya Parva, Chapter 43, Verses 30-45).

ARUNDHATĪ I. Wife of Sage Vasiṣṭha.

(2) Other information. (1) Once Arundhatī got suspicious about the character of Vasiṣṭha and as a result of misunderstanding her chaste husband her beauty suffered a set-back. (M.B., Ādi Parva, Chapter 232, Verses 27-29).

(2) Arundhatī shone forth in Brahmā's assembly with other Devīs like, Pṛthvī, Hrī, Svāhākīrtī, Surā and Śacī. (M.B., Sabhā Parva, Chapter 11, Verse 41).

(3) She outshone all other chaste women in devotion to her husband. She owed her great power to her chastity and service of her husband. (M.B., Araṇya Parva, Chapter 225, Verse 15).

(4) The seven great Ṛṣis once offered her an honourable seat. (M.B., Vana Parva, Chapter 226, Verse 8).

(5) There is a story in the Mahābhārata of how Śiva once blessed Arundhatī. While the seven great Ṛṣis were staying at the Himālayas it did not rain consecutively for twelve years, and the Munis suffered much without either roots or fruits to eat. Then Arundhatī began a rigorous tapas, and Śiva appeared before her disguised as a brahmin. Since, due to the failure of rains, Arundhatī had no food with her. She cooked food with some cheap roots and served the guest with it, and with that it rained profusely all over the land. Śiva then assumed his own form and blessed Arundhatī, and from that day onwards it became a sacred spot. (M.B., Śalya Parva, Chapter 48, Verses 38-54).

(6) Arundhatī once pointed out to Vṛṣdarbhi the evils of receiving remuneration (fee). (M.B., Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 10, Verse 45).

(7) On another occasion she spoke about the secret principles of ethics among others. (M.B., Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 130, Verses 3-11).

(8) Once all the Devas eulogized Arundhatī and Brahmā blessed her. (M.B., Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 130, Verses 12 and 13).

(9) Arundhatī and Vasiṣṭha did tapas at the sacred Sarasvatī tīrtha and entered into Samādhi. (M.B., Vana Parva, Chapter 130, Verse 17).

ARUNDHATĪ II. A wife of Kāla (God of death). Arundhatī, Vasu, Yamī, Lambā, Bhānu, Marutvatī, Saṁkalpā, Muhurtā, Sādhyā and Viśvā are the ten wives of Kāla. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Part 1, Chapter 15).

ARUṆĪ. Name given to Aruṇa when he attended Indra's assembly disguised as female. (See Aruṇa).

ARUṆODĀ. A river flowing through the island of Plakṣa, one of the seven islands of ancient times. The wind around ten yojanas of Plakṣa is very fragrant because it carries the divine fragrance being emitted always from the bodies of Pārvatī and her attendants, who drink water from river Aruṇodā. (Devī Bhāgavata, Aṣṭama Skandha).

ARŪPĀ. One of Dakṣa's daughters. (M.B., Ādi Parva, Chapter 65, Verse 46).

ARUPATTIMŪVAR. (The sixty-three's). In ancient times there were sixty-three devotees of Śiva in the south. They were called Nāyanāras and they have composed many famous sacred songs. Prominent among them were Tirujñānasambandha, Tirunāvukkaraśa and Sundaramūrti ARVA. The son of Ripuṁjaya. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa).

ARVĀVASU. An ancient Ascetic who had been a luminary in the Durbar hall of King Yudhiṣṭhira. There is a story in the Mahābhārata showing the merits of penance of Arvāvasu. This story was told by the hermit Lomaśa to the Pāṇḍavas, when they arrived at the holy bath Madhugilasamaṅga, during their exile in the forest. "Long ago two ascetics Raibhya and Bharadvāja had built their hermitages and lived here. A son named Yavakrīta was born to Bharadvāja. To Raibhya, two sons called Arvāvasu and Parāvasu were born. Raibhya and his sons were learned men. Bharadvāja and Yavakrīta became ascetics. Yavakrīta started doing penance with a view to get the boon of learning coming to him automatically without getting it directly from Brahmins. When his penance became severe Indra appeared and told him that the boon he asked for was an impossibility and tried to dissuade him from his attempt. Yavakrīta was not willing to give up penance. Later Indra came in the guise of a Brahmin to the Banks of the Ganges and began to build a dam with sand particles. Yavakrīta said that it was an impossible task. Indra said that the desire of Yavakrīta also was as impossible as that. Still Yavakrīta did not show any intention of drawing back. Finally Indra granted him the boon.

Yavakrīta returned to the hermitage. Full of arrogance he hankered after the daughter-in-law of Raibhya. Raibhya plucked a tuft of hair from his head and put it as oblation in fire and created a giant who killed Yavakrīta. Bharadvāja felt sad and cursed Raibhya that he would be killed by his son. Then with Yavakrīta he jumped into the fire and died.

At that time Bṛhaddyumna, a Brahmin performed a sacrifice. He invited Arvāvasu and Parāvasu as helpers. As Parāvasu was going along the forest he saw his father covered with the hide of a deer and shot at him thinking him to be a deer. He stealthily informed the matter to Arvāvasu. Arvāvasu went to the forest completed the funeral rites of his father and returned. Parāvasu spread the rumour everywhere that Arvāvasu had murdered his father. In the innocence of Arvāvasu, nobody believed. Everyone avoided him. He became sad and forlorn and went to the forest and did penance to the Sun. The Sun appeared before him and blessed him. He returned and brought Yavakrīta, Bharadvāja and Raibhya to life again.

All these occurrences happened in this bath called Madhubilasaṁgama. (Mahābhārata, Araṇya Parva, Chapters 135, 136, 137, 138).

The report of a conversation between this hermit, and Śrī Kṛṣṇa who had been on his way to Hastināpura, is given in the Mahābhārata, Śānti Parva, Chapter 336, Stanza 7. Arvāvasu also is counted among the hermits who possessed the Brightness of Brahmā like Rudra. "Hermit Vasiṣṭha ! Now I shall give their names in order. Yavakrīta, Raibhya, Arvāvasu, Parāvasu, Kakṣīvān, Aurṣija, Bala, Aṅgiras, Ṛṣimedha, Tithisuta, Kaṇva, these are the Bright hermits, having the brightness of Brahmā, lauded by the world and as bright as Rudra, Fire and Vasu". (M.B., Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 150, Stanzas 30, 31 & 32).

Arvāvasu did penance to the Sun for getting children. The Sun-God came down from his way in the sky and gave him through Aruṇa directions mentioned in the Kalpa (one of the six Śāstras or Sciences) regarding Saptamī rituals. Arvāvasu observed them strictly and as a result he got children and wealth. This story is given in Bhaviṣya Purāṇa, Brahma Parva).

ARYAMĀ. One of the twelve Ādityas born to Kaśyapa and Aditi. (Ādityas = sons of Aditi). The twelve Ādityas are, Dhātā, Aryamā, Mitra, Śakra, Varuṇa, Aṁśa, Bhaga Vivasvān, Pūṣā, Savitā, Tvaṣṭā and Viṣṇu. (M.B., Ādi Parva, Chapter 65, Stanza 15). Aṁśa is sometimes called AṀŚU.

ARYAŚVA. A King of the Sūrya vaṁśa (Solar dynasty). See the word VAṀŚĀVALĪ (Genealogy).

ASAMAÑJASA (ASAMAÑJA). A King of the Solar dynasty born to Sagara. For genealogy see under SAGARA.

1) Birth. There is a story about his birth in the Rāmāyaṇa. Once there was a king called Sagara in Ayodhyā. He married two women named Keśinī and Sumati. For a long time they had no sons and so they went to the Himālayas and started penance there in the mount of Bhṛguprasravaṇa. After a hundred years Bhṛgumaharṣi appeared before them and pleased them thus : "Your elder wife Keśinī will give birth to a son who will continue your dynasty and your second wife will give birth to sixty thousand children". After a few years Keśinī gave birth to Asamañjas and Sumati to a big ball of flesh. That ball broke and sixty thousand babes came out from it. (Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa, Bālakāṇḍa, Sarga 83).

2) Character of Asamañjas. He was a very cruel man always tormenting people. He used to throw little children into the Sarayū river and stand on the banks of the river enjoying the sight of the children dying drowning. People hated him. His father, therefore, drove him out of his palace. To this bad man was born Aṁśumān, a King who became the favourite of the people. (Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa, Bālakāṇḍa, Sarga 38).

ASAMPREKṢYAKĀRITVA. See under DEVASARMA IV.

AŚANI. A holy hermit. While Śrī Kṛṣṇa was going to Hastināpura this hermit met him on the way. (M.B., Udyoga Parva, Chapter 83).

ASIDDHĀRTHA. A minister of Daśaratha. (Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa, Śloka 3, Sarga 7, Bālakāṇḍa).

ASIKNI I. A river flowing through the Punjab in India. This is called Candrabhāgā and also Cīnāb (Cīnā). The Ṛgveda also mentions about this. (M.B., Bhīṣma Parva).

ASIKNI II. A wife of Dakṣa. Dakṣaprajāpati, son of Brahmā, commenced creation with his own mind. When he found that it was not conducive to the propagation of the species he pondered over the subject once more and decided to effect it by the sexual union of the male and the female. He, therefore, married Asikni daughter of Vīraṇaprajāpati. There is a version in the seventh Skandha of Devī Bhāgavata that Vīraṇī was born of the left thumb of Brahmā.* Then the virile Dakṣaprajāpati begot by Asikni five thousand Haryaśvas with a view to propagating his species and the Haryaśvas also evinced great desire to increase their number. Knowing this devarṣi Nārada of enchanting words approached them and said "Oh, Haryaśvas, I understand you, energetic young men, are going to continue creation. Phew ! You are children who have not cared to understand the ins and outs or ups and downs of this earth and then how do you think you can create people ? You are all endowed with the power to move about on all sides without any obstruction and you are only fools if you do not attempt so find out the limits of this earth". Hearing this they started on a tour to different sides of the earth to find out its boundaries. Just like worms fallen into the ocean the Haryaśvas have never returned so far.

When he found that the Haryaśvas were lost the mighty Dakṣa begot in the daughter of Vīraṇī a thousand sons called Śabalāśvas. They were also desirous of propagation but were also persuaded by the words of Nārada to follow the footsteps of their elder brothers. They discussed it among themselves and said "The words of the Maharṣi are right. We must also follow the course taken by our brothers. It is wise to commence creation after knowing the size of the earth." They also went to different sides and never returned just like rivers falling into the ocean. The loss of the Śabalāśvas infuriated Dakṣa and he cursed Nārada.

Again to commence creation Dakṣa got of Asikni sixty girls. Of these ten he gave to Dharmadeva, thirteen to Kaśyapa, twentyseven to Soma and four to Ariṣṭanemi. Two were given to Bahuputra, two to Aṅgiras and two to the scholar Kṛśāśva. Dharmadeva's wives were Arundhatī, Vasu, Yamī, Lambā, Bhānu, Marutvatī, Saṅkalpā, Muhūrtā, Sādhyā and Viśvā. Of Viśvā were born Viśvedevas. Sādhya delivered the Sādhyas, Marutva, the Marutvans and Vasu, Vasus. Bhānus were born of Bhānu. From Muhūrta came Muhūrtābhimānis and from Lambā, Ghoṣa and from Yamī, Nāgavīthī. (Chapter 15, Anuśāsana Parva, 1; Viṣṇu Purāṇa and Skandha 6, Bhāgavata).

ASIKṚṢṆA. Son of Aśvamedhas, a King of the Lunar dynasty. (Bhāgavata, 9th Skandha).

ASILOMA. Prime Minister of Mahiṣāśva. (Devī Bhāgavata, 5th Skandha).

ASIPATRAVANA. One of the notorious twentyeight hells. If you destroy forests without purpose you will go to this hell. (Chapter 6, Anuśāsana Parva 2, Viṣṇu Purāṇa). The Devī Bhāgavata describes Asipatravana like this : "Those who forsake their own natural duty and go in for that of others are thrown into this hell; they die by the orderlies of Yama, the King of Death. There they will be whipped by a whip made of thorny herbs and as they run about with pain they will be followed and whipped. Crashing against the big stones there they will fall fainting and the moment they wake up from the faint they will be stabbed again. This will be repeated. (Aṣṭama Skandha, Devī Bhāgavata).

ASITĀ. A celestial maiden. She had taken part in the birthday celebrations of Arjuna. (Śloka 63, Chapter 122, Ādi Parva, M.B.).

ASITA I. One of the Ṛtviks of the Sarpasatra of Janamejaya.

Some details. (1) The prominent Ṛtviks were Bhārgava, Kautsa, Jaimini, Sārṅgarava, Piṅgala, Vyāsa, Uddālaka Pramattaka, Śvetaketu, Asita, Devala, Nārada, Parvata, Ātreya, Kuṇḍajāra, Kālaghāṭs, Vātsya, Kohala, Devaśarmā, Maudgalya, Samasaurabha. (Chapter 53, Ādi Parva, M.B.)

(2) Asita, Devala, Vaiśampāyana, Sumantu and Jaimini were disciples of Vyāsa. (Prathama Skandha, Devī Bhāgavata).

(3) Asita, the sage, got by the blessing of Śiva a son named Devala. (Brahmavaivarta Purāṇa).

(4) Once Asita muni explained to King Janaka the philosophy of rebirth. (Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa, Chapter 47).

ASITADEVALA.

Main details. (1) He is one of those who spread the story of Mahābhārata to the public. Vyāsa wrote the Mahābhārata into a lakh of books and first taught the great epic to his son, the sage Śuka. He later expounded it to many other disciples. Nārada spread the story among the devas, Devala among the Pitṛs, Śuka among Gandharvas and Yakṣas and Vaiśampāyana among men. (Ślokas 107 & 108, Chapter 1, Ādi Parva, M.B.).

(2) He was present at the Sarpasatra of Janamejaya. (Śloka 8, Chapter 53, Ādi Parva, M.B.).

(3) He attended the coronation of Yudhiṣṭhira along with Nārada and Vyāsa. (Śloka 10, Chapter 53, Sabhā Parva, M.B.). See under Devala for more information.

ASITADHANVĀ. A king of Vedic times. Sāṁkhyāyana Sūtra states that the Veda of Asuravidyā was written by this King.

ASITADHVAJA. Son of Kaśyapa and Vinatā. He was present at a birthday celebration of Arjuna. (Śloka 72, Chapter 122, Ādi Parva, M.B.).

ASITAKĀŚYAPA (DEVALA). For details see under JAIGĪṢAVYA and Devala..

ASITAPARVATA. A mountain situated on the banks of the river, Narmadā, in the country of Ānarta. (Śloka 11, Chapter 89, Vana Parva, M.B.).

AŚMAKA I. Son born to Vasiṣṭha by the wife of Kalmāṣapāda the King of Ayodhyā. (See Ikṣvāku vaṁśa) while the King Kalmāṣapāda was walking through the forest hunting he saw Śakti the son of Vasiṣṭha. As Śakti did not care to give room for the King, Kalmāṣapāda wounded Śakti, who cursed the King and changed him to a Rākṣasa (giant). The giant immediately killed Śakti. After many years Vasiṣṭha blessed the King and changed the form of the giant and gave him back his former shape. The King was delighted at having recovered his former shape. He took Vasiṣṭha to his palace. Madayantī the wife of the King with his permission went to Vasiṣṭha and got with child. Vasiṣṭha returned to the forest. Even after the lapse of a long period she did not give birth to the child. Madayantī who was miserable at this, took an 'aśman' (a small cylindrical piece of the granite used to crush things placed on a flat square piece of granite) and crushed her stomach with it and she delivered a son. As he was born by using 'Aśma' he was named Aśmaka. This King had built a city called Paudhanyā. (M.B., Ādi Parva, Chapter 176).

AŚMAKA II. Aśmaka (m) is a place between the rivers Godāvarī and Māhiṣmatī. Aśmaka was a king of this land. He fought against the Kauravas on the Pāṇḍava side. (Karṇa Parva).

AŚMAKA III. A sage. (M.B., Śānti Parva, Chapter 47, Śloka 5).

AŚMAKADĀYĀDA. Son of the King Aśmaka. He was a soldier of the Kaurava army. He was killed in the battle by Abhimanyu. (Ślokas 22 and 23, Chapter 37, Droṇa Parva, M.B.).

AŚMAKĪ. Wife of Prācinvā. Kaśyapa was born to Marīci, son of Brahmā. To Kaśyapa was born of his wife Aditi, daughter of Dakṣa, Vivasvān. Descending in order from Vivasvān were born Manu, Ilā, Purūravas, Āyus, Nahuṣa, Yayāti. Yayāti had two wives, Devayānī and Śarmiṣṭhā. The first was the daughter of Śukra and the second the daughter of Vṛṣaparvā. To Devayānī were born two sons, Yadu and Turvasu and to Śarmiṣṭhā were born three sons, Druhyu, Anudruhyu and Pūru. From Yadu came the dynasty of Yādavas and from Pūru came the dynasty of Pauravas. Kausalyā was the wife of Pūru and her son was Janamejaya. Pūru conducted three Aśvamedhas and secured the title of Viśvajita (conqueror of the world) and then accepted the ascetic life and went to the forests. Janamejaya married Anantā alias Mādhavī and got a son named Prācinvā. Because he conquered all the land extending to the eastern horizon he got the name Prācinvā. Prācinvā married a yādava girl of name Aśmakī and got a son named Saṁyāti. (Ślokas 6 to 13, Chapter 95, Ādi Parva, M.B.).

AŚMANAGARA. A city of the nether world. The Uttara Rāmāyaṇa states that Rāvaṇa entered this city when he was going home in the Puṣpaka Vimāna (the aeroplane of ancient times) stolen from Kubera.

AŚMAPṚṢṬA (M). The sacred pond near Gayā known as Pretaśilā. It is believed that if you perform obsequies here even the sin of killing a brahmin would fade away.

AŚMĀ. An ancient sage.

AŚMOPĀKHYĀNAM. This is called Aśmagītā also. After the great Kurukṣetra battle Vyāsa spoke to Dharmaputra to console him and the philosophy he then expounded is called Aśmopākhyānam. Once King Janaka asked the great scholar Aśman on the changes that occur in Man as wealth comes and goes. Aśman then gave the King the same philosophy which Vyāsa gave to Dharmaputra and Aśman's oration to King Janaka came to be known as Aśmagītā. (Chapter 28, Śānti Parva, M.B.).

AŚOKA I. The charioteer of Bhīmasena. When Bhīmasena was fighting a battle with Śrutāyu the King of Kaliṅga, this charioteer brought the chariot to him. (M.B., Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 54, Stanzas 70 and 71).

AŚOKA II. A minister of King Daśaratha. Daśaratha had eight ministers. They were Jayanta, Dhṛṣṭi, Vijaya, Asiddhārtha, Arthasādhaka, Aśoka, Mantrapāla and Sumantra. (Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa, Bālakāṇḍa, Sarga 7).

AŚOKA III. A King of the family of the famous Asura Aśva. This king had been ruling over Kaliṅga. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 67, Stanza 14).

AŚOKADATTA. Once the Vidyādhara (a class of semi gods) named Aśokavega was going through the sky, when the hermit maids of Gālavāśrama (the hermitage of Gālava) were bathing in the Ganges. He hankered after them. So the hermits cursed him and changed him to a man. The name of Aśokavega in his human birth was Aśokadatta. The story of Aśokadatta in the "Kathāsaritsāgara" is as follows :

Long ago there lived a Brahmin named Govindasvāmī, near the river Kālindī. He had two sons, Aśokadatta and Vijayadatta. They were good men like their father. Once there occurred a great famine in the country. Scarcity prevailed everywhere. Govindasvāmī told his wife, "I cannot bear to see the difficulties of our people. So let us give everything we have for famine relief and then go to Kāśī and live there." His good-natured wife agreed to it and giving everything for the relief work, Govindasvāmī with his wife and children started for Kāśī. On the way he met a hermit sage who had renounced the world. He had his whole body besmeared with ashes. With his tuft of hair and garment made of the barks of trees, he seemed to be Śiva. Govindasvāmī bowed before him, and asked about the future of his children. The Yogī (hermit) said, "the future of your two sons is good. But this Vijayadatta will go away from you. Reunion will become possible by the goodness of Aśokadatta." Govindasvāmī felt glad and sad at the same time. Leaving the hermit they proceeded to Kāśī. They neared Kāśī. There was a temple on the way. They stayed there and conducted worship in the temple and took shelter for the night under a tree outside the temple. Other travellers also were there. Being tired of walking all went to sleep. Vijayadatta the second son of Govindasvāmī caught cold. So he woke up in the night. When he began to shiver, because of cold, he called his father and said, "Father, it appears that I have caught cold and I am shivering. I would grow better if I could get some fire. So please get some twigs and make a fire. I don't think, I may complete this night otherwise". They saw a fire close by. It was in a burial-ground. Govindasvāmī took Vijayadatta to that place where a dead body was burning.

Vijayadatta sat near the fire and warmed himself. In the meanwhile he was talking to his father. He said, "Father, what is that round thing seen in the middle of the fire?" "That is the head of a dead body burning" said his father who was standing close by. He took a burning faggot and hit at the head. The head broke into pieces and some viscous stuff from the head fell into his mouth. There occurred a sudden change in Vijayadatta. He became a fearful giant with huge tusks and hair standing erect on the head. Somehow or other he got a sword also. That giant took the burning head from fire and drank up all the viscous liquid in it. With his tongue which looked like blazing fire he licked the bones. Then he threw away the skull. Then he approached his father with open mouth to swallow him. "You ! giant, Don't kill your father, come here !" a voice shouted to him from the burial-ground. Thus Vijaya became a giant and disappeared. "Oh dear ! my child ! my son ! Vijayadatta !", cried his father and came away from the burial-place, and went to the shelter of the tree and told his wife, son and others everything that had happened. Stricken with grief they all fell on the ground. All those who came to worship in the temple gathered round them and tried to console them. Among them was a merchant named Samudradatta, a native of Kāśī. He consoled Govindasvāmī and his family and took them to his house in Kāśī. He showed hospitality and gave them a separate place to live in. Noble men are kind to those who are in distress. The great hermit had said that their son would come back in due course. Hoping that such a time would come soon Govindasvāmī and his family dragged on their time. At the request of that wealthy merchant they stayed there on. Aśokadatta got his education there. When he grew up to a youth, he got physical training. He became such an expert in wrestling and other modes of fighting that nobody on earth could overcome him. During a festival there was a contest in wrestling. A renowned wrestler had come from the south to take part in the contest. In the contest which took place in the presence of Pratāpamukuṭa, the King of Kāśī, the wrestler challenged every wrestler in the country and had overthrown each one of them. Having heard from the merchant Samudradatta, the King sent for Aśokadatta and put him against the wrestler from the south. A very serious fight began between the two. They grappled each other with firm and resolute grips. The audience was struck with wonder at the variety of the modes of grappling and twisting and turning they exhibited. Applause came from everywhere. The fight lasted for a very long time. Finally Aśokadatta threw the other to the ground, and got much presents from the King. Gradually he became a favourite of the King, and consequently became wealthy. One day the King went to a temple of Śiva, a little away from the capital to observe fast on the fourteenth night of the Moon and while returning he passed by a burial-ground and heard a voice saying, "Oh Lord ! The judge had ordered me to be hanged, for a charge of murder, merely out of personal grudge and without any proof, and this is the third day since I was put on this scaffold. My life has not yet departed from the body. My tongue is dried of thirst. Have the kindness to give me a little water."

"Punished without proof ! It will appear only so to him who is punished". Thinking thus the King asked Aśokadatta to give the man some water. "Who will go to a burial-ground in the night ? I myself shall take water to him". Saying so Aśokadatta took water and went to the burial-ground and the King went to the palace. The world was in darkness. With here and there a spark of fire and light of fire-flies and lightning mingled with the shouting of ghosts and the roaring of the demons and occasional cries of birds and animals the burial-ground was a dreadful place, where Aśokadatta came and asked, "Who asked the King for water ?" He heard a voice saying "Myself" and he went to the place of the voice and saw a man lying on a scaffold. An extremely beautiful woman also was lying under the scaffold crying, and getting ready to jump into the burning fire since she could not bear the separation of her husband on the new moon day. She had plenty of golden ornaments on her body. Aśokadatta asked her, "Madam ! who are you, why are you crying here ?" She replied, "I, an unfortunate woman, am the wife of the man on the scaffold. My intention is to burn myself along with his body. I am waiting for his life to depart. Because of my sin he is not dying. This is the third day since he is lying like this. He will be asking for water now and then. So I have brought some water. But his face being high I cannot reach it and I am seeing him burning with thirst, and am swallowing the grief." Aśokadatta said, "See ! The King has sent this water for him. Now climb on my back and you yourself give him this water."

The woman instantly took the water and got on the back of Aśokadatta who had stooped down for her to climb on his back. After a while he felt drops of blood falling on his back and looking up he saw her cutting flesh from the body of the man on the scaffold and eating it. He got wild with anger and catching hold of her legs he was about to strike her on the ground, when she shook her legs free and ran away and disappeared. Because she dragged away her legs with force one bangle came off from her leg and was left with Aśokadatta. Her behaviour aroused in him at first compassion, detestation in the middle stage and fear in the final stage, and when she had disappeared from his sight he looked at the bangle she had left behind with astonishment. When he reached home it was dawn. After his morning ablution he went to the palace. "Did you give him water yesternight?" asked the King and he replied "Yes", and placed the bangle before the King. "Where did you get this from ?" the King asked and in reply he said everything that had happened in the night. The King thought that Aśokadatta was an extraordinary man and calling his queen showed her the ornament and told her everything. She was filled with joy and wonder. She praised Aśokadatta a good deal. The King said, "Dear queen ! This Aśokadatta is a young man of greatness, learning, bravery, truth and of good birth. He is handsome too. If he would become the husband of our daughter what a good thing it will be? I have a desire to give him our daughter Madanalekhā".

The queen also said that the thought was pleasing to her. "This youth is the most suitable person to be her husband. Some days ago Madanalekhā had seen him in Madhu garden and from that day a change is visible in her. All laughing and playing is gone from her, and she spends time in loneliness and thinking. I knew this from her maids. Because of my thought about her I did not sleep last night and only just closed my eyes in the dawn. Then it seemed to me that a divine woman appeared and said to me, "My daughter, Don't give your daughter Madanalekhā to anybody else. She had been the wife of Aśokadatta in previous birth". I woke up immediately. Believing in the dream I consoled our daughter. I am glad that now you also think so. Let the Jasmine creeper entwine round the Mango tree."

When the King heard these things from his queen, without wasting more time he gave his daughter Madanalekhā in marriage to Aśokadatta. They suited each other so much that not only their relatives, but the others also were delighted. Brahmā is well experienced in joining suitable things together. As they were all getting on well one day the queen said to the King, "My lord ! this Bangle being single doesn't shine well. We must have another bangle made in the same shape and design."

The King immediately had some goldsmiths brought before him. He showed them the bangle and asked them to make one of the same pattern. They turned it on all sides and looked at it and said, "Please your highness ! This is not man-made. It is not possible for us to make one of this kind. Precious stones like these are not available in this earth. So the only possible way is to search for its mate in the place where this was found. On hearing these words the King and the queen were crestfallen. Seeing this Aśokadatta said that he would bring the mate of the bangle. Fearing danger the King tried to dissuade him. But Aśokadatta was not prepared to change his decision. He took the bangle and went to the burial-ground that night. To get the bangle he had to meet the same woman who had left the bangle. He began to think of a means to find her out. He procured a corpse took it on his shoulder and walked about calling out "Do you want flesh ?" He heard a voice say "Bring it here", and he walked in that direction. He saw a beautiful woman who appeared to be the mistress, sitting in the midst of so many servant maids on a tree. He called out "Take the flesh". She asked "How much will it cost ?" Aśokadatta said, "There is a bangle with me. If you will give me another bangle like this you shall have the whole body". Hearing the words of Aśokadatta the beautiful woman laughed and said, "That is my bangle. I have its mate with me also. I am the same woman you saw when you came to give water to the man on the scaffold. Now the situation is changed. So you do not recognize me. Tonight is the fourteenth lunar night too. It was good that you thought of coming to night. Otherwise you would not have seen me. Now see; let the flesh be there. If you will consent to do what I say I shall give you the other bangle also." Aśokadatta promised to do what she required. Then she began, "There is a city in the Himālayas known as Trighaṇḍa. There lived a giant in that city. His name was Lambajihva. I bearing the name Vidyucchikhā, am his wife. Only one daughter was born to me. Then my husband was killed in a fight with his overlord Kapālasphoṭa, who being kind did not do us any harm; and I live in my house now. My daughter is now a young woman. I was roaming about thinking of a way to find out a man of might and bravery as husband for my daughter. Then I saw you going this way with the King. The moment I saw you I knew you to be the man I was searching for and I decided to give you my daughter in marriage. What you heard as the words of the man on the scaffold was a trick played by me. You brought water to the scaffold and nobody needed water then. With the knowledge I have in Sorcery and witchcraft I put you into a little confusion. I gave you that bangle to bring you again to me and it has served the purpose today. Let us go to my house. It is my earnest wish that you should be the husband of my daughter. And I shall satisfy your immediate need also."

The brave Aśokadatta agreed to the request of the giantess. She, with her power, took him to their city through the sky. Aśokadatta saw the golden city and wondered if it was the sun taking rest after its tedious journey. There he saw the daughter of the giantess and thought her to be the incarnation of his adventurous spirit. She was beautiful in every part of her body. She was called Vidyutprabhā. He married her and lived with them for a while. Then he said to his mother-in-law "Mother ! now give me the bangle. I must go to Kāśī. I have promised the King to get the mate of this bangle." Vidyucchikhā gave her son-in-law her bangle and a golden lotus flower which he accepted with great joy. As before he came with the giantess to the burial-ground through the sky. Then she said "I shall be here on every fourteenth lunar night on the root of this tree in the burial-ground. If you want to see me come on that day." "I shall do so", so saying Aśokadatta came away and went to his parents. They were stricken with grief at the departure and exile of their remaining son. They were overcome by joy at the return of their son. Not waiting long he went to the King, his father-in-law, who embraced him with joy. Aśokadatta gave him the two bangles. He presented the golden lotus flower also. The King and the queen were amazed at the daring spirit of Aśokadatta who told them in detail everything that had happened to him. The fame of Aśokadatta grew higher and higher. The King and the queen thought it a blessing that they got so adventurous a son-in-law. Next day the King got a casket made of silver and placed the golden lotus at the mouth of the casket and placed it on the step of his own temple for everyone to see. The white casket and the red lotus were very charming to look at and they glistened as the fame of the King and of Aśokadatta. One day the King looked at it with pleasure and said "If we could get one more lotus like this, we could make another casket and place it on the left side of this". As soon as he heard it Aśokadatta said "If the King orders it shall be brought". But the King said "Ho' you need not go anymore on erranda like this. This is not such an urgent need". After a few days the fourteenth lunar night came. Leaving his wife the princess sleeping in the bed he left the palace and reached the burial-ground. He saw his mother-in-law the giantess and went with her to the city of the giant and lived there happily for a while with his wife Vidyutprabhā. When he was about to return he requested Vidyucchikhā to give him one more golden lotus. She said that there was no more lotus with her and that they grew in the lake of the giant King Kapālasphoṭa. Aśokadatta requested her to show him that lake. At first Vidyucchikhā dissuaded him from this attempt. But he was stubborn. So she took him to a place away from the lake and showed it to him. The lake was full of golden lotus flowers. It was a pleasing sight. Aśokadatta immediately got down into the lake and began to pluck the flowers. The guards came and opposed him. He killed a few of them. The others went to their master and informed about the theft. Kapālasphoṭa with his weapons came shouting and roaring and saw his elder brother Aśokadatta. He was overpowered by joy and wonder. Throwing away his weapons, with love and devotion towards his elder brother he bowed before him. "My brother ! I am Vijayadatta your younger brother. By the will of God I lived as a giant so long. You might have heard this from father. Because we have met now by good luck I remembered that I was a Brahmin. My giantness is gone. On that day something obscured my mind. That is why I became a giant". When he heard the words of his younger brother Aśokadatta embraced him. Both shed tears of joy. At that time Prajñapti Kauśika the teacher of the Vidyādharas came to them and said, "You are Vidyādharas. All this happened due to a curse. Now you and your people are liberated from the curse. So learn the duties and functions of your class and with your people take your proper place in the society." Having taught them everything they required he disappeared. Thus the Vidyādhara brothers, having plucked golden lotus reached the peak of the Himālayas through the sky. Aśokadatta went to Vidyutprabhā who also having been liberated from curse became a Vidyādhara girl. With that beautiful girl the two brothers continued their journey and reached Kāśī where they bowed before their parents. That reunion appeared to be a dream or something nearing madness to their parents. They could not believe their eyes. Aśokadatta and Vijayadatta each saying his name bowed before them. Their parents lifted them up and embraced them and kissed them on the head, and cried for joy. They did not know what to do or what to say. Their minds were incapable of thinking. Everybody heard this and was amazed at it. The King was also filled with joy. He came there and took them to the palace. Aśokadatta gave all the lotus flowers to the King, who was happy and joyful at the achievement of more than he had hoped for. Everybody appreciated them. Govindasvāmī, in the presence of the King asked Vijayadatta to tell his story from the moment he turned a giant in the burial-place; "We are very curious to hear it" he said. Vijayadatta began to say "Father, you have seen how because of my mischief, I had broken that skull and some viscous liquid fell into my mouth and I changed to a giant. After that the other giants gave me the name Kapālasphoṭa. They invited me into their midst. We lived together. After a few days they took me to the presence of the King of the giants. As soon as he saw me he was pleased with me and appointed me as the commander-in-chief of the army. He who was overconfident in his power went to war with the Gandharvas and was killed in the fight. From that day onwards all the giants came under my control. Then I met with my brother who came to pluck the golden lotus flowers from my lake. With this all the previous conditions of my life had vanished.

My brother will say the rest of the story. When Vijayadatta had finished saying Aśokadatta continued the story.

Long ago when we were Vidyādharas both of us were going through the sky and we saw the hermit maids of the hermitage of Gālava, bathing in the Ganges. We wished to get those girls. The hermits who saw this with their divine eyes cursed that we would take birth as men and in that birth we would be separated in a wonderful way and both of us would unite again in a place where man could not reach and we would be liberated from the curse and learn everything from the teacher, and would become the old Vidyādharas with our people. And according to this curse we took birth as men and separation was effected. You all have heard it. Today I went to the lake of the King of the giants, with the help of my mother-in-law the giantess for plucking the golden lotus flowers and recovered my brother, this Vijayadatta. There we learned everything from our teacher Prajñapti Kauśika and became Vidyādharas and have arrived here as fast as we could." Thus he informed them everything that had occurred. Afterwards by the learning he received from his teacher he changed his parents and the daughter of the King into Vidyādharas and then bidding adieu to the King Aśokadatta, with his two wives, parents and brother went to the emperor of the Vidyādharas through the sky. When they reached there Aśokadatta and Vijayadatta changed their names into Aśokavega and Vijayavega. According to the orders of the emperor those Vidyādhara youths went to the mountain of Govindakūṭa with their people as it was their abode, and lived with happiness and joy. King Pratāpamukuṭa with wonder took one of the golden lotus flowers and placed it in the temple and with the rest he made oblations to god and considered his family to have made wonderful achievements. AŚOKASUNDARĪ. See the word Nahuṣa.

AŚOKATĪRTHA. A holy place near the temple of Śūrpāraka. (Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 88, Stanza 13).

AŚOKAVANIKĀ. A famous park in Laṅkā. It was in this park that Rāvaṇa kept Sītā having stolen her from Śrī Rāma. It is described in Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa, Sundarakāṇḍa, Sarga 14 and Araṇyakāṇḍa, Saiga 56 and in Mahābhārata also :—

"Thinking of her husband alone, clad in the garments of a hermit woman, eating only roots and fruits, in prayer and fast, in sorrow and sadness, she of the wide eyes lived in the Aśoka park which seemed as a hermitage." (Bhāṣā Bhārata, Araṇya Parva Chapter 280, Stanzas 42 and 43).

AṢṬABANDHA. A kind of plaster used for fixing idols in temples. The following eight things are mixed and ground consecutively for fortyone days and made ready to be put in the cavity around the idol when it is fixed there finally, (1) conch-powder (2) powdered myrobalam (3) resin (4) Kolipparal (a kind of rock) (5) river sand (6) powder of emblic myrobalam (7) lac and (8) cotton.

AṢṬABHĀRYĀ(S). The eight wives of Śrī Kṛṣṇa. (1) Rukmiṇī (2) Jāmbavatī (3) Satyabhāmā (4) Kālindī (5) Mitravindā (6) Satyā (7) Bhadrā and (8) Lakṣaṇā.

AṢṬABUDDHIGUṆA (S). Eight qualities of the intellect. Śuśrūṣā, Śravaṇa, Grahaṇa, Dhāraṇa, Ūha, Apoha, Arthavijñāna, and Tattvajñāna.

AṢṬACŪRṆA. A mixture of eight powders. The eight things are : Cukku (dry ginger), Mulaku (chilli) Tippali (long pepper) Ayamodaka (celery seed) Jīraka (baraway seed) Kariṁjīraka (black caraway seed) Intuppu (sodium chloride) and Kāyam (asafoetida).

AṢṬĀDAŚAPURĀṆA (S). The eighteen purāṇas. See under Purāṇa.

AṢṬADHARMAMĀRGA(S). Eight ways of attaining mokṣa: Yāga, Vedābhyāsa, Dāna, Tapas, Satya, Kṣamā, Dayā, lack of desire.

AṢṬADHĀTU (S). Eight minerals : gold, silver, copper, tin, zinc, black lead, iron and mercury.

AṢṬADIGGAJAS and AṢṬADIKKARIṆĪS. There are eight male and eight female elephants standing guard over the eight zones. They are :

Zone	Male	Female
East	Airāvata	Abhramu
South-east	Puṇḍarīka	Kapilā
South	Vāmana	Piṅgalā
South-west	Kumuda	Anupamā
West	Añjana	Tāmrakarṇī
North-west	Puṣpadanta	Śubhradantī
North	Sārvabhauma	Aṅganā
North-east	Supratīka	Añjanāvatī

(Amarakośa)

Besides these, there are four diggajas (elephants of the universe) who bear the earth standing below in the nether world. It is stated that the sons of Sagara who went into the nether land in search of the lost horse of his father saw these elephants. As they went to the east they saw the huge elephant Virūpākṣa, holding the earth on its head. It is said an earthquake occurs when for a change it shakes its head. Going to the left of it they saw the elephant Mahāpadmasama holding the earth on its head on the south. Going again to the left of it they saw Saumanasa holding the earth on its head on the west and going to the left of it on the north they saw Bhadra holding the earth on its head. (Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa, Bālakāṇḍa, Sarga 40).

AṢṬADIK (S). (Eight zones). East, South-east, South, South-west, West, North-west, North and North-east.

AṢṬADIKPĀLAKA (S). The Devī Bhāgavata states like this about the eight zones and their guardians. Situated in the eight different zones of the Brahmaloka are eight big cities of the eight guardians of these zones each covering an area of 2500 yojanas. All these are on the top of Mahāmeru and Brahmā sits in the centre in his city called Manovatī. Around his city are the others as follows :

(1) On the east is Amarāvatī, city of Indra.
(2) On South-east is Tejovatī, city of Agni.
(3) On the South is Saṁyamanī, city of Yama.
(4) On the South-west is Kṛṣṇāñjanā, city of Nirṛti.
(5) On the West is Śraddhāvatī, city of Varuṇa.
(6) On the North-west is Gandhavatī, city of Vāyu.
(7) On the North is Mahodaya, city of Kubera.
(8) On the North-east is Yaśovatī, city of Śiva.

(Aṣṭama Skandha, Devī Bhāgavata).

AṢṬADRAVYA(S). Eight substances of great medicinal value.

(1) Arayāl, (Aśvattha—Fig tree) (2) Atti (Udumbara—Keg tree) (3) Plāśu (Palāśa—Downy branch butea) (4) Perāl (Vaṭa-Banyan tree) (5) Caınata (6) Ellu (Sesame) (7) Vāyasa (Kṛṣṇāguru cedar tree (8) Ghee.

AṢṬADŪTAGUṆA(S). The eight qualities of a good messenger. (1) He should not stand perplexed when he is being given the message to carry. (2) He must be smart and enthusiastic. (3) He must have compassion for those in distress. (4) He must run his errand quickly. (5) He must be mild. (6) He should not be duped by the cunning words of others. (7) He must be healthy. (8) He must be able to talk convincingly.

AṢṬAGANDHA. Akil (Eaglewood), Candana (Sandal), Guggulu (Indian Bdellium), Māñci (Jaṭāmaṁsī-Spikenard) Kuṅkuma (saffron), Koṭṭa(Kuṣṭa-bostus root), Rāmacca (Uśiram-Sweet rush), Iruveli (Vālaka). (Āyurveda)

AṢṬAGUṆA(S). (1) Bhūtadayā, Kṣamā, Anasūyā, Gaurava, Anāyāsa, Maṅgala, Akārpaṇya and Aspṛhā.
(2) Buddhibala, Kulaśuddhi, Śama, Learning, Parākrama, Mitabhāṣaṇa, Dāna and Kṛtajñatā.
(3) Absence of Jealousy, Ṛjutva, Śucitva, Santoṣa, Bhāṣaṇabhaṅgi, Śama, Satya, Sthairya.

AṢṬAJIHVA. One of the soldiers of Skanda Deva. (Śloka 62, Chapter 45, Śalya Parva, M.B.).

AṢṬAKA. See under Āstika.

AṢṬAKA I. A King of the Pūru dyansty.
Genealogy. Descended in order from Viṣṇu as follows: Brahmā-Atri-Candra - Budha-Purūravas-Āyus-Nahuṣa-Yayāti-Pūru-Janamejaya-Prācinvā - Pravīra - Namasyu-Vītabhaya - Śuṇḍu - Bahuvidha - Saṁyāti - Rahovādi-Raudrāśva- Matināra - Santurodha-Duṣyanta-Bharata-Suhotra-Bṛhatputra-Ajamīḍha-Aṣṭaka.
(This Aṣṭaka was the brother of Śunaśśepha).

AṢṬAKA II. A Rājarṣi born to Viśvāmitra of Mādhavī, wife of Yayāti. (Śloka 18, Chapter 119, Udyoga Parva, M.B.). See under Gālava.
1) How Aṣṭaka went to heaven. This story was told to the Pāṇḍavas by the sage Mārkaṇḍeya.
"Aṣṭaka, son of Viśvāmitra, performed an Aśvamedha Yāga. All the kings took part in this. Pratardana, Vasumanas and Auśinara Śibi, and all the brothers of Aṣṭaka attended the function. After the yāga Aṣṭaka took his three brothers for an air travel and on the way met the great sage Nārada. Nārada was also taken in and as they continued their flight, Aṣṭaka asked Nārada who should step down from the aeroplane if only four were allowed to go to heaven. "Aṣṭaka", replied Nārada and explained the reason also. Once when Nārada stayed at the āśrama of Aṣṭaka the former found many varieties of cows there and asked Aṣṭaka whose they were. Then in self praise Aṣṭaka had said that all those were cows which he had given away as gifts. Aṣṭaka then asked who should get down if only three were allowed to go to heaven. 'Pratardana', said Nārada and explained the reason. Once when Pratardana was taking Nārada in the former's chariot four brahmins one behind the other approached him and begged for a horse each. When Pratardana asked for some time the brahmins were not prepared to wait and so he gave all but one of his four horses and asked the fourth to wait. As he was also found to be persistent he gave the one drawing his chariot also and dragged the chariot himself but abusing the brahmins all the way. It was that abuse that gave him the slur. Then Aṣṭaka asked Nārada who should get down if only two were permitted to enter heaven. 'Vasumanas', said Nārada and explained the reason. Nārada went to the house of Vasumanas three times and each time the latter spoke highly of his chariot. Nārada also joined in praising his flower-chariot and the brahmins present there also followed suit. Pleased at this Vasumanas became proud of his possession and his vainglorious talks made him unfit. Then Aṣṭaka asked if only one were allowed to go to heaven who should go. 'Śibi', said Nārada immediately. Even Nārada would be only next to Śibi and Nārada explained the reason thus. Once a brahmin went to Śibi for food. Śibi asked him what food he relished most and the brahmin said that he would like to have the fresh flesh of Śibi's only son, Bṛhadgarbha. Without even the slightest hesitation Śibi killed his son and cooked his flesh and when the food was ready he went out to invite the brahmin. But on going out the King saw the brahmin setting fire to his palace, treasury, armoury, stables, harem and elephant-sheds. Without even a quiver on his face, the king respectfully took the brahmin inside and gave him food. The brahmin was amazed at the patience of the King and sitting before his food for some time told the King that he would be satisfied if the King himself ate that food. Respecting the request the King was about to eat the flesh of his own son when the brahmin who was none other than Brahmā in disguise praised him for his devotion and gave him back his son adorned with sweet smelling flowers and disappeared blessing them. When his ministers questioned him about this Śibi said, "I do not give for a name or fame. Neither do I give for wealth and happiness. I do it because it is the only way to be rid of sins". (Chapter 168, Araṇya Parva, M.B.).
2) Other details. (1) Aṣṭaka was a Rājarṣi. (Śloka 5, Chapter 86, Ādi Parva, M.B.).
(2) Aṣṭaka gave away all the puṇya (goodness) he earned to Yayāti. See under Yayāti. (Ślokas 13 & 14, Chapter 122, Udyoga Parva, M.B.).

AṢṬAKALĀSYA. This is a gesture in the Kathakali dance. In the play 'Kalyāṇasaugandhika' the character of Hanūmāna and in the play 'Kālakeyavadha' the character of Arjuna do enact this. Increasing step by step the gesture takes eight forms in combination before it is finished accompanied by background drumming and music. (Kathakali).

AṢṬAKAPĀLAM. Puroḍāśa prepared out of eight Kapālas. (Śloka 24, Chapter 221, Śānti Parva, M.B.).

AṢṬAKARAṆA(S). Manas (mind), Buddhi (intelligence), Citta (thought), Ahaṁkāra (egotism), Saṁkalpa in the mind (imagination), determination, pride from egotism and Avadhāraṇa in Citta.

AṢṬAKAṢṬA(S). Kāma (lust), Krodha (anger), Lobha (greed), Moha (delusion), Mada (arrogance), Mātsarya (rivalry), Dambha (pride) and Asūyā (jealousy).

AṢṬAKOPAVYASANA(S). (1) Paiśunya (2) Sāhasa (3) Droha (5) Īrṣyā (5) Asūyā (6) Arthadūṣaṇa (7) Vāgdaṇḍa and (8) Pāruṣya.

AṢṬAKUMBHA(S). Sūryabhedā, Ujjāyī, Sīlkkārī, Śitalī, Bhastikā, Bhrāmarī, Mūrcchā and Plāvinī. All these have to be practised by students of Yoga. (Mokṣapradīpam).

AṢṬALOHA(S). Eight metals.

1.	Suvarṇam	Gold.
2.	Rajatam	Silver.

3. Tāmram Copper.
4. Sīsakam Lead.
5. Kāntikam Mercury.
6. Vaṁśam Vaṅgam—Tin.
7. Lauham Iron.
8. Tīkṣṇalauham Steel.

AṢṬAMĀṄGALA. Brahmins, bow, Fire, gold, ghee, Sun, water and King.

AṢṬAMĀṄGALYA. (1) Kurava (2) Darpaṇa (3) Dīpa (4) Kalaśa (5) Vastra (6) Akṣatam (7) Aṅganā (8) Svarṇa

AṢṬAMANOGUṆA(S). (1) Paratva (2) Aparatva (3) Saṁkhyā (4) Parimāṇa (5) Pṛthakta (6) Saṁ-yoga (7) Vibhāga (8) Vega.

AṢṬAMANTRĪ(S). The eight ministers of the kings of Ikṣvāku dynasty are : (1) Jayanta (2) Dṛṣṭi (3) Vijaya (4) Siddhārtha (5) Arthasādhaka (6) Aśoka (7) Mantrapāla (8) Sumantra.

AṢṬAMĀRGAS. Samyagdṛṣṭi, Samyaksaṅkalpa, Samyagvāk, Samyakkarma, Samyagājīva, Samyagvyāyāma, Samyaksmṛti and Samyaksamādhi. The Buddha Sannyāsins have to live according to these eight directives of life.

AṢṬĀMBĀ(S). See the sixth Khaṇḍika under Devī.

AṢṬAMĪ. The third skandha of Devī Bhāgavata states that the goddess, Bhadrakālī, came into life on an Aṣṭamī day to block up the yāga of Dakṣa. That is why the day is considered to be holy and important.

AṢṬAMŪRTI(S). Earth, Water, Air, Fire, Ether, Hotā, Sun and Moon.

AṢṬANĀGA(S). Eight snakes. Vāsuki; Takṣa, Karkoṭaka, Śaṁkha, Gulika, Padma, Mahāpadma and Ananta.

AṢṬĀṄGAHṚDAYA. The medical science which deals in eight separate division the treatment of the human body. (1) Śārīra (2) Bāla (3) Graha (4) Ūrddhvāṅga (5) Śalya (6) Daṁṣṭra (7) Jara and (8) Vṛṣa. Bāla—Body which has not attained maturity; Graha—External elements which damage the health of infants; Śalya—extraneous substance lodged in the body; Vṛṣa—The seminal fluid. (Directions of treatment).

AṢṬĀṄGAYOGA(S). Yama, Niyama, Āsana, Prāṇāyāma, Pratyāhāra, Dhyāna, Dhāraṇā and Samādhi.

1) Yama. That which prevents the yogīs from doing prohibited things. Ahiṁsā, Satya, Asteya, Brahmacarya and Aparigraha are yamas.

2) Niyama. Actions leading to Mokṣa. They are : (1) ŚAUCA—Cleanliness of the mind—cleaning it of such bad qualities like jealousy. (2) TAPAS—indifference (Samatvabhāva) to the pairs of opposites like pleasure and pain, heat and cold etc. (3) Svādhyāya —pursuit of the science of salvation chanting of OM. (4) SANTOṢA—remaining happy and contented. (5) ĪŚVARA-PRAṆIDHĀNA—surrendering all actions to God.

3) Āsana. Postures of sitting firmly and comfortably. Of the many āsanas the very prominent ones are : Svastikāsana, Vīrāsana, Padmāsana, Siddhāsana, Vastrāsana, Vyāghracarmāsana, Valkalāsana, Kuśāsana, Kṛṣṇāsana, Viṣṭarāsana, Mayūrāsana and Kūrmāsana. Of these Siddhāsana is considered to be the best of the lot. This āsana strengthens the 72,000 nerves of the human system and all the yogīs prefer this to any other. "Kimanyaiḥ bahubhiḥ pīṭhaiḥ pīṭhe Siddhāsane sati" (of what use are the others when there is Siddhāsana).

4) Prāṇāyāma. Control of Prāṇa (Prāṇa is the life giving breath and āyāma is the checking of it). Select an airy place and be seated in an ordinary āsana facing north or east after taking your early morning bath. Sit erect with your breast slightly pushed forward and your head slightly drawn back. Then complete one Prāṇāyāma doing Pūraka, Kumbhaka and Recaka. The Rudrayāmala states thus about Prāṇāyāma.

Dakṣāṅguṣṭhena dakṣaṁ ca.
Ghrāṇaṁ saṁpīḍya mantravit
Iḍayā pūrayedvāyuṁ
Mātrā ṣoḍaśabhiḥ kramāt
Aṅguṣṭhānāmikābhyāñca
Dhṛtvā nāsādvayaṁ tataḥ
Tatastu kampayedvāyuṁ
Pūrakāṇāṁ caturgaṇaiḥ
Anāmayā tathā vāma-
Nāsāṃ dhṛtvā tu dakṣine
Dvātriṃśadbhistu mātrābhir Vāyurecanamācaret.

Closing the right nostril by the thumb of the right hand and inhaling air inside through the left nostril taking 16 seconds is called Pūraka. Closing the nostrils by the thumb and ring-finger and keeping the breath for 64 seconds is called Kumbhaka. Closing the left nostril well and then exhaling through the right nostril taking 32 seconds is called Recaka. Pūrakas should be done through the same nostril through which you have done Recaka. (You must do at least ten Prāṇāyāmas at a time).

5) Pratyāhāra. Withdrawing the mind from worldly objects and sensuous pleasures.

6) Dhyāna. Keeping your mind fixed on the tip of your nose. Meditation.

7) Dhāraṇa. Steadily thinking of things you should know. Concentration.

8) Samādhi. The union of mind with God. This is a blissful superconscious state in which one perceives the identity of the individualised soul and cosmic spirit. (Yogābhyāsa).

AṢṬAPRAMĀṆAS. Eight means of getting correct knowledge. Pratyakṣa, Anumāna, Upamāna, Śabda (Agama), Arthāpatti, Anupalabdhi (Abhāva) Sambhava, Aitihya.

AṢṬARĀGĀDIS. Rāga, Dveṣa, Kāma, Krodha, Lobha, Moha, Mada and Mātsarya (Rāga—Desire for sensuous pleasures. Dveṣa—Desire to seek vengeance on those who have offended you. Kāma—Desire for worldly possessions. Krodha—Anger, Lobha—Miserliness. Moha—Delusion. Mada—Pride. Mātsarya—Jealousy.

AṢṬATĀRAṆĪ. Eight names of Tāraṇīdevī. They are : Tārā, Ugrā, Mahogrā, Vajrā, Kālī, Sarasvatī, Kāmeśvarī and Cāmuṇḍā.

AṢṬĀVAKRA.

1) Birth. The sage Uddālaka had a disciple named Khagodara (Kahodara) and a daughter named Sujātā. Appreciating the devotion and good conduct of his disciple, Uddālaka gave his daughter Sujātā in marriage to him. Sujātā became pregnant. When once Khagodara was reciting from the Vedas the babe in the womb of Sujātā said, "I have learnt the mantra you are chanting but the way you chant it is wrong". (The vibrations of sound created by the utterance of each word is important). Khagodara was angry and he cursed his babe in the womb thus "Since your mind seems to be crooked let your body also be of that type, with curves all over". When Sujātā delivered the child it had eight bends and light curves and so the boy was named Aṣṭāvakra, meaning one with eight bends. (Chapter 132, Vana Parva, M.B.).

2) Father died before he was born. When Sujātā was pregnant they suffered much from poverty and at the insistence of Sujātā, Khagodara went to the King Janaka, to beg for some money. Janaka was performing a yāga then and so Khagodara had to wait. When at last he went to the royal assembly he was asked to enter into a polemical contest with Vāndīna, the court scholar and having been defeated by him was asked to drown himself.

Uddālaka got a son named Śvetaketu and Sujātā delivered Aṣṭāvakra. Both the boys grew in the āśrama on great intimacy and Sujātā withheld the news of the death of her husband from the boys. (Chapter 132, Vana Parva, M.B.).

3) How Khagodara was got back. One day the two boys went to bathe in the river and during a controversial talk Śvetaketu said that Aṣṭāvakra had no father. This teased him much and Aṣṭāvakra went to his mother and gathered all the facts about his father. He went, then, straight to the royal assembly of King Janaka. He was not allowed inside. The gate keeper said that he was only a boy and only learned men could go inside the sacrificial hall. Aṣṭāvakra contended that neither size nor age was any indication of one's knowledge or worth and got himself admitted into the hall. There he entered into a polemical contest with the same court scholar, Vāndīna, who had killed his father. Vāndīna was defeated and was thrown into the same river in which his father had drowned himself. The moment Vāndīna fell into the river Khagodara rose up from there and the father and son along with Śvetaketu returned to the āśrama. Khagodara then took his son for a bath and when it was over Aṣṭāvakra became a bright boy without crooks. (Chapter 133, Vana Parva, M.B.)

4) Marriage. Aṣṭāvakra wanted to marry Suprabhā, the daughter of a sage named Vadānya. When Vadānya was approached for this the Sage decided to test the love which Aṣṭāvakra had towards his daughter and said: "I am going to test you. You go to the north to the Himālayas. Pay homage to Śiva and Pārvatī and go further north. There you will find a very beautiful damsel. You talk to her and return and when you come back I shall give you my daughter."

Accepting this challenge Aṣṭāvakra went north. When he went to the Himālayas Kubera entertained him. He remained there for a year enjoying the dances of celestial maidens and then, after worshipping Śiva and Pārvatī went further north. There he came across seven very attractive women. At the command of Aṣṭāvakra the eldest of the lot, Uttarā, remained with him; all the rest left the place immediately she started making love with him and requested him to marry her. But Aṣṭāvakra did not yield and told her about his promise to Vadānya. Pleased at this reply Uttarā revealed that she was the queen of the north in disguise and was testing him. She then blessed Aṣṭāvakra who fulfilling his mission successfully, returned and married the girl he wanted. (Chapter 19, Anuśāsana Parva, M.B.).

5) Another version of how the body became crooked. There is another story also about Aṣṭāvakra. Once there lived a sage named Asita. He did great penance to please Śiva to bless him with a child. Śiva blessed him and he got a son named Devala. Rambhā, the queen of devaloka, fell in love with him but Devala did not yield to her wishes. Then Rambhā cursed him and made him into one with eight crooks. Thus Devala came to be called Aṣṭāvakra. He then did penance for six thousand years and Bhagavān Kṛṣṇa accompanied by Rādhā appeared before him. Rādhā was shocked by the ugliness of the sage and did not relish his sight. But Kṛṣṇa asking her to remain quiet went and embraced him. At once Aṣṭāvakra lost all his crooks and became a beautiful man. At that time a chariot descended from heaven and all of them went to heaven in it. (Brahmavaivartta Purāṇa).

6) Other information. (1) Aṣṭāvakra was also present among the ṛṣis who partook in the coronation ceremony conducted after Rāma's return to Ayodhyā from Laṅkā. (Uttararāmāyaṇa).

(2) Aṣṭāvakra cursed those celestial maidens who rebuked him for his ugliness and they were born on earth as the wives of Śrī Kṛṣṇa. When after the death of Kṛṣṇa they were being taken by Arjuna to the north they were forcibly taken by some of the shepherds. (Chapter 15, Agni Purāṇa).

AṢṬĀVAKRATĪRTHA. If one observes complete fasting for twelve days doing tarpaṇa in this sacred pond it is said that he gets the benefit of doing of Naramedhayajña. (Śloka 41, Chapter 25, Anuśāsana Parva, M.B.).

AṢṬĀVAKTRA. See under Aṣṭāvakra.

AṢṬAVARGA(S). Meda, Mahāmeda, Kākoli, Kṣīrakākoli, Jīvaka, Iṭavaka, Ṛddhi, Vṛddhi (These are used in infusions for treating rheumatism).

AṢṬAVASU(S).

1) Origin. Gaṇadevatās are called Aṣṭavasus. They were born to Dharmadeva of his wife Vasu, daughter of Dakṣa. They are: Dhara, Dhruva, Soma, Ahar, Anila, Anala, Pratyūṣa and Prabhāsa. (Ślokas 17 and 18, Chapter 66, Ādi Parva, M.B.). There is a version in certain purāṇas that the Aṣṭavasus are the sons of Kaśyapa.

Different purāṇas give different names to these Aṣṭavasus. According to Viṣṇu Purāṇa they are: Āpa, Dhruva, Soma, Dharma, Anila, Anala, Pratyūṣa and Prabhāsa. (Chapter 15 of Aṁśam 1). In Bhāgavata they are Droṇa, Prāṇa, Dhruva, Arka, Agni, Doṣa, Vasu and Vibhāvasu. In Harivaṁśa they are : Akha, Dhara, Dhruva, Soma, Anila, Anala, Pratyūṣa and Prabhāsa. This only indicates that some of these have two or more names for them.

2) Curse of Vasiṣṭha. Once the Aṣṭavasus were enjoying a picnic with their wives and they happened to go to the āśrama of Vasiṣṭha. One of the wives got enamoured over Nandinī, Vasiṣṭha's beautiful cow and wanted it. The Vasu to please his wife took the cow by force and left the place. When the sage found his cow missing after some time he understood by his divine powers who stole the cow and so he cursed the Aṣṭavasus saying that all of them would be born on earth as men. The Aṣṭavasus were greatly worried and approached the sage apologising and craving for pardon. The sage relaxed the curse and declared that their life on earth would be only for a very short time maintaining that the particular Vasu who committed the theft would live for a long time as man. It was this Vasu, Āpa (Dyau) who was born as Bhīṣma.

3) Rebirth of Aṣṭavasus. The Aṣṭavasus were pondering over the curse and were thinking of how to bear it without hardship when Gaṅgādevī appeared before them and they then appealed to her: "Devī, if you become the queen on earth of some noble King we shall be born as your sons and you must throw us into the river as soon as we are born". Gaṅgādevī accepted their request. Once there was a King called Pratīpa in the Candra dynasty. One day when this ascetic King was worshipping Sūrya on the banks of the river Gaṅgā a beautiful damsel arose from the waters and sat on the right thigh of the King. Surprised the King told her thus, "Oh beautiful maiden, who are you ? Do you realise what unrighteous thing you have done ? I am not one who goes after women and it was a bit daring of you to have taken me as a beau. Please understand that the right thigh is intended for a daughter and daughter-in-law. You can claim this right when you become the wife of my son." The beautiful girl was none other than Gaṅgādevī herself and she disappeared soon on receiving the rebuke.

Pratīpa got a son named Śantanu and Gaṅgādevī became the wife of Śantanu. (For more details about this see under Gaṅgā). When Gaṅgādevī became the wife of Śantanu she made a condition to be his queen. "Whether good or bad you should not obstruct any action of mine. You must never give me any opinion of yours on any matter. You must obey what I order. If at any time you break any of these promises I will leave you that instant."

It was while Gaṅgādevī was living on earth as the wife of Śantanu that the Aṣṭavasus were born to her. One after the other she threw into the river seven sons but when she was about to throw the eighth the King objected to it and Gaṅgā disappeared immediately. That son was Bhīṣma, who was none other than Dyau born on earth by the curse of Vasiṣṭha. All the others, released from the curse, went to heaven. (More details under Bhīṣma).

4) A missile to Bhīṣma. When Bhīṣma had to fight against his guru, Paraśurāma, the Aṣṭavasus gave him the missile, Prasvāpā. (See Ambā) (Ślokas 11 to 13, Chapter 183, Udyoga Parva, M.B.).

5) Sons of Aṣṭavasus. The sons of Āpa, the first of the Vasus, are : Vaitaṇḍha, Śrama, Śānta and Dhvani. Kāla, the destroyer of all, is the son of Dhruva. Varcas is the son of Soma. Dharma got of his wife Manoharī five sons Draviṇa, Hutahavyavāha, Śiśira, Prāṇa and Varuṇa. Śivā was Anila's wife and she got two sons, Manojava and Avijñātagati. Agni's son Kumāra was born at Śarastamba. Kumāra got three brothers, Śākha, Viśākha and Naigameya. Kumāra is known as Kārttikeya because he was born of Kṛttikas. The sage, Devala is the son of Pratyūṣa. Devala got two sons of great intelligence and forbearance. Varastrī, sister of Bṛhaspati and a woman of great yogic powers and world-wide travels became the wife of Prabhāsa. She gave birth to the famous Viśvakarmaprajāpati. He was the inventor of a great many handicrafts and ornaments He became the consulting architect of the devas and ranked first in that art. The aeroplanes of the devas were designed by him. Men on earth depend on his art even now. That architect had four sons : Ajaikapāt, Ahirbudhnya, Tvaṣṭā and Rudra, the bold. The great ascetics, Viśvarūpa, Hara, Bahurūpa, Tryambaka, Aparājita, Vṛṣākapi, Śambhu, Kapardi, Raivata, Mṛgavyādha, Śarva and Kapāli were the sons of Tvaṣṭā. These are known as the twelve Rudras. Purāṇas say that there are a hundred Rudras like this. (Chapter 15, Aṁśa 1, Viṣṇu Purāṇa).

AṢṬAVIDHANĀYIKĀ(S). Eight kinds of heroines of the stage :

(1) Svādhīnapatikā. Fit to be a counterpart in a love scene and play the role of one who is always fondled by her husband.

(2) Vāsakasajjikā (Vāsakasajjā). Adorning herself well and waiting for her lover in a well decorated bedroom.

(3) Virahotkaṇṭhitā. Exhausted by the sorrow of separation from her lover.

(4) Vipralabdhā. Cheated by her lover after fixing a date and a rendezvous.

(5) Khaṇḍitā. Angered at the arrival of the husband in the early hours of the morning with suspicion about his character.

(6) Kalahāntaritā. Repenting after having arrogantly disobeyed her husband.

(7) Proṣitabhartṛkā. One who has gone weak and moody thinking about her husband in a foreign place.

(8) Abhisārikā. One who approaches her husband with great passion. (Nāṭyakrama).

AṢṬAVIDHAPRAKṚTYAVASTHĀ(S). Earth, Water, Agni, Air, Ether, Mind, Intelligence and Egotism.

AṢṬAVIDHAPRATIMĀ(S). Śilāmayī, Dhātumayī, Lohamayī, Lepyā, Lekhyā, Mṛṇmayī, Maṇimayī and Manomayī.

AṢṬAVIDHAKUṢṬHA(S). Vimarccika, Bhadru, Maṇḍala, Śukti, Siddhmaka, Kṛṣṇa, Śukla and Taruṇa. (Aṣṭāṅgahṛdaya).

AṢṬAVIVĀHA(S). Eight kinds of marriage. (1) Brāhma (2) Daiva (3) Ārṣa (4) Prājāpatya (5) Gāndharva (6) Āsura (7) Rākṣasa (8) Paiśāca. Brāhma is the one where the father gives her daughter with sacred water to a bachelor without accepting anything in return. When the father gives his daughter to the priest at the time of a yāga it is called Daiva. It is Ārṣa if the father gives the daughter and gets in return a cow or bullock. When the father gives the daughter with her blessings it is Prājāpatya. The marriage between two lovers is Gāndharva. It is Āsura when the male takes his mate by force and it is Paiśācika (most cruel and mean) when the girl is taken as his wife when she is in a state of unconsciousness.

AṢṬAYOGINĪ(S). The eight hermit-maidens who are the attendants of the goddess, Durgā. (1) Mārjjatī (2) Karpūratilakā (3) Malayagandhinī (4) Kaumudikā (5) Bheruṇḍā (6) Mātalī (7) Nāyakī (8) Jayā (Śubhācārā).

AṢṬOPĀYA(S). Eight ways of attaining salvation. Yajña, Dāna, Vedādhyayana, Tapas, Dama, Satya, Ṛjuśīla, and Mārdava. These are the qualities required for attaining salvation.

ASTĪ. Daughter of Jarāsandha, King of Magadha. Kaṁsa married Astī and also another daughter of Jarāsandha. (Ślokas 29 to 32, Chapter 14, Sabhā Parva, M.B.). Chapter 12 of Agni Purāṇa states that Jarāsandha went to war with the Yādavas because of the persuasion of these daughters.

ASTRA. After killing the demoness, Tāṭakā, Viśvāmitra reveals to Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa the secret of using a great many varieties of Divyāstras (Divyāstra is a missile charged with power by holy incantation). Some of those astras are named below:

1.	Daṇḍacakra	2.	Dharmacakra
3.	Kālacakra	4.	Viṣṇucakra
5.	Indracakra	6.	Vajrāstra
7.	Śaivaśūla	8.	Aiṣīka
9.	Brahmaśirāstra	10.	Brahmāstra
11.	Modakīśikharī	12.	Dharmapāśa
13.	Kālapāśa	14.	Vāruṇāstra
15.	Vāruṇapāśa	16.	Paramāstra
17.	Pinākāstra	18.	Nārāyaṇāstra
19.	Āgneyāstra	20.	Śikharāstra
21.	Vāyavyāstra	22.	Prathanāstra
23.	Krauñcāstra	24.	Hayaśśirāstra
25.	Kaṅkālāstra	26.	Musalāstra
27.	Kapālāstra	28.	Kaṅkaṇāstra
29.	Mānavāstra	30.	Prasthāpanāstra
31.	Praśamanāstra	32.	Saurāstra
33.	Varṣaṇāstra	34.	Śoṣaṇāstra
35.	Santāpanāstra	36.	Vilāpanāstra
37.	Madanāstra	38.	Mohāstra
39.	Saumanāstra	40.	Saṁvartāstra
41.	Satyāstra	42.	Māyādharāstra
43.	Tejaprabhāstra	44.	Saumyāstra
45.	Śiśirāstra	46.	Tvāṣṭāstra
47.	Sudāmanāstra

Śrī Rāma received all these astras standing facing east. (Sarga 27, Bālakāṇḍa, Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa)

ASURA. Those born to Kaśyapa of his wife Danu are called Dānavas and those born of his wife Diti are called Daityas. They belong to the demonaic dynasty (Refer under 'Asuravaṁśa' in the genealogy chart). Renowned among the asuras were the following: Prahlāda, Saṁhlāda, Anuhlāda, Śibi, Bāṣkala, Virocana, Kumbha, Nikumbha, Bali, Bāṇa, Mahākāla, Vipracitti, Śambara, Namuci, Pulomā, Viśruta, Asilomā, Keśī, Durjaya, Ayaśśiras, Aśvaśśiras, Aśva, Śaṅku, Mahābala, Garga, Mūrdhā, Vegavān, Ketumān, Svarbhānu, Aśvapati, Vṛṣaparvā, Ajaka, Aśvagrīva, Sūkṣma, Tuhūṇḍa, Ekapād, Ekacakra, Virūpākṣa, Harāhara, Candra, Kupaṭa, Kapaṭa, Para, Śarabha, Śalabha, Sūrya and Candramas.

ASURĀ. One of the eight daughters born to Kaśyapa of his wife Pradhā. (Śloka 41, Chapter 65, Ādi Parva, M.B.).

AŚŪRBANIPAL. (See under Gilgamis, Jalapralaya).

ASŪRTARAJASA. A son born to King Kuśa of his wife Vaidarbhī. Kuśāmba, Kuśanābha, Asūrtarajasa and Vasu are the four sons of Kuśa. (Sarga 32, Bālakāṇḍa, Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa).

AŚVA I. A demon. This was the same demon who later on was born as Aśoka, King of Kaliṅga. (Chapter 67, Ādi Parva, M.B.).

AŚVA II. A maharṣi. The sage Vaśa is the son of this ṛṣi. (Sūkta 112 of Ṛgveda).

AŚVA (Horse). Horses and camels were born, in this world, of Tāmrā, wife of Kaśyapa, grandson of Brahmā. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 19).

AŚVAGHOṢA. A famous Sanskrit poet. He has written many Sanskrit books prominent among which are the two great poems, Buddhacarita and Saundarananda and a drama called Śāriputraprakaraṇa. He lived in the 2nd Century A.D. His history of Buddha (Buddhacarita) was translated into Chinese during the period 414 to 421 A.D. He was known under the following names also: Ācārya, Bhadanta, Mahāvādī and Bhikṣu.

AŚVAGRĪVA. Son born to the Sage, Kaśyapa by his wife, Danu. (Śloka 24, Chapter 65, Ādi Parva, M.B.).

AŚVAHṚDAYA. A mantra (sacred incantation) for controlling the horse. (See under 'Akṣahṛdaya').

AŚVAKETU. Son of King Gāndhāra. He fought on the side of the Kauravas and was killed in the battle by Abhimanyu. (Śloka 7, Chapter 48, Droṇa Parva, M.B.).

AŚVAKṚTA. A river. Once a sage called Ṛcīka went to Gādhi and asked for the hand of his daughter, Satyavatī, in marriage. He demanded as dowry a thousand horses black in colour and with only one ear for each. Ṛcīka prayed to Varuṇa and he gave him the horses required. The river Aśvakṛta (created by horse) was made by the flow of urine from these horses. (Chapter 57, Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa).

AŚVAMEDHA I. A country of ancient India which was ruled by a King named Rocamān. Bhīmasena conquered him during the world-wide conquering campaign. (Śloka 8, Chapter 29, Sabhā Parva).

AŚVAMEDHA II. A yāga. Kings used to conduct this in order to get absolved of all sins. Fixing a victory card on the head of a horse it is allowed to roam about freely. If anybody stops the horse and ties it, the King should go and defeat him in battle and bring back the horse. If you do a hundred such yāgas you can become Indra.*

AŚVAMEDHA. Son of King Sahasrānīka (Refer under Sahasrānīka).

AŚVAMEDHADATTA. Son born to Śatānīka of the princess of Videha. (Śloka 86, Chapter 95, Ādi Parva, M.B.).

AŚVAMEDHAPARVA. A parva of the Mahābhārta. See under Bharata.

AŚVANADĪ. A river in the country of Kuntibhoja. Aśvanadī joins Carmaṇvatī and the latter joins the Yamunā and the Yamunā joining Gaṅgā falls into the ocean. It was through this river that Kuntīdevī floated in a box the infant Karṇa. At night accompanied by her maid, Kunti floated the box containing her illegitimate son and stood on the banks of Aśvanadī weeping bitterly. Then thinking that her father would notice her absence from the palace she returned home soon. The box floated and reached the country, Campāpurī, ruled by a charioteer. (Ślokas 22 to 26, Chapter 308, Araṇya Parva, M.B.).

AŚVARATHĀ. A river in the Gandhamādana valley flowing near the Āśrama of the sage Ārṣṭiṣeṇa. Many kings of the Candra dynasty used to come and stay in this āśrama. (Śloka 10, Chapter 160, Vana Parva, M.B.).

AŚVAŚAṄKU. Son of Kaśyapa born of his wife Danu. (Śloka 21, Chapter 67, Ādi Parva, M.B.).

AŚVAPATI I. Father of the most chaste woman, Sāvitrī. He was King of Madra. He was without children for a long period and for eighteen years he worshipped the goddess, Sāvitrī and got a maiden from Agnihotra whom

* Aśvamedha or horse sacrifice was performed by autocrats to establish their supreme sovereignty. For this the horse let out to roam about should go into all countries. Those who opposed the sovereignty of the King could stop the horse and tie it. Then the King had to defeat him before conducting the yāga. The vedas enjoin that the sacrificial horse should be followed by a hundred young men ready to fight those who opposed the King. Indra had conducted a hundred such yāgas.

he named as Sāvitrī. For more details see under Sāvitrī. (Chapter 293, Vana Parva, M.B.).

AŚVAPATI II. The son born to Kaśyapa of his wife Danu. (Śloka 24, Chapter 65, Ādi Parva, M.B.).

AŚVASENA. A serpent which lived in the forest of Khāṇḍava. This was the son of Takṣaka and he tried his best to escape from the fire that burnt the forest. (Śloka 5, Chapter 239, Ādi Parva, M.B.).

Once when Arjuna and Kṛṣṇa were sitting on the banks of the river Yamunā, Agni approached them and requested them to help him burn the forest of Khāṇḍava (see under Khāṇḍavadāha). They agreed to help him and Agni started burning the forest. Indra poured rains over the fire; Arjuna created a canopy of arrows and prevented the rains from falling down. Aśvasena, son of Takṣaka tried to escape from the fire but Arjuna obstructed his way by arrows. Then Aśvasena's mother swallowed him and kept him in her stomach. Arjuna cut off her head. Seeing this Indra sent a cyclone to smash the canopy of arrows and Arjuna fell fainting. Taking the opportunity Aśvasena escaped. When Arjuna woke up from his unconscious state he found Aśvasena missing. Then Arjuna cursed him thus : "Let not you get refuge anywhere." (Chapter 226, Ādi Parva, M.B.). Aśvasena kept his grudge against Arjuna till the end. In the great battle Arjuna and Karṇa met for a fight and when Karṇa sent his Nāgāstra (serpent missile) against Arjuna, Aśvasena hid himself in that missile and burnt the beautiful headwear of Arjuna. But Karṇa did not like this foul play and refused to accept him when he came back. Enraged at this the serpent attacked Arjuna directly and was killed. Before his death he got acquainted with Kṛṣṇa. (Chapter 96, Karṇa Parva, M.B.).

AŚVAŚIRAS I. A son born to Kaśyapa of Danū. (Śloka 23, Chapter 65, Ādi Parva, M.B.).

AŚVAŚIRAS II. Bhagavān Hayagrīva who was teaching the Vedas at Vaihāyasakuṇḍa near Naranārāyaṇāśrama. (Śloka 3, Chapter 127, Śānti Parva, M.B.).

AŚVAŚIRASTHĀNA(M). A sacred place in ancient India. Arjuna dreams of going to Śiva with Kṛṣṇa and in that dream they visit this place also. (Chapter 80, Droṇa Parva, M.B.).

AŚVĀTAKA. A country of ancient India. (Śloka 15, Chapter 51, Bhīṣma Parva, M.B.).

AŚVATARA. A serpent. A sacred pond built in Prayāga also carries this name. (Śloka 76, Chapter 55, Vana Parva and Śloka 10, Chapter 35, Ādi Parva, M.B.).

AŚVATĪRTHA. An ancient holy place on the banks of the river, Ganges, near Kanauj. It was at this place that the horses rose from the earth at the request of Ṛcīka Ṛṣi to Varuṇa (See under Aśvakṛta). (Śloka 17, Chapter 4, M.B.)

AŚVATTHĀMĀ.

1) Birth and genealogy. The semen of Bharadvāja Ṛṣi fell into the hollow of a bamboo and from there was born Droṇa. As per the instructions of his father Droṇa married Kṛpī, daughter of the sage, Śāradvata. The good-natured Kṛpī gave birth to Aśvatthāmā. (See under Droṇa for genealogy). (Chapter 130, Ādi Parva, M.B.)

2) How he got his name. The moment he was born he made a loud hoot like Uccaiśravas and the sound resembled the braying of a horse. Immediately a voice from heaven said that the boy should be named Aśvatthāmā. The boy was, therefore, named so. (Ślokas 48 and 49, Chapter 130, M.B.).

3) Training in archery. Aśvatthāmā took his lesson in archery from his father Droṇa. At that time Droṇa got new lessons from Paraśurāma and they were also imparted to Droṇa's disciples. When Droṇa became the preceptor of the Kauravas and Pāṇḍavas Aśvatthāmā also went with him. (Ślokas 52 to 64, Chapter 130, Ādi Parva, M.B.).

4) Droṇa's affection for his son. Droṇa was very affectionate to his son and wanted to teach him something special in archery. So he used to instruct him during the time the other disciples went to fetch water for the āśrama. Arjuna came to know of this and he, thereafter, started bringing his quota of water quickly enough to join the special class of Droṇa. Thus Arjuna and Aśvatthāmā learned a lot more than the others in the military art. (Ślokas 17-19, Chapter 132, Ādi Parva, M.B.).

5) The Mahābhārata Battle and Aśvatthāmā. In Sabhā Parva we find Aśvatthāmā participating in the Rājasūya of Yudhiṣṭhira. After that we meet him only at the Kurukṣetra war. Fighting on the side of the Kauravas he played a very important role in that war. He killed many veteran warriors and kings including the following : Nīla, Añjanaparvā, Suratha, Śatruñjaya, Balānīka, Jayānīka, Jayāśva, Srutāśva, Hemamālī, Vṛṣadhara, Candrasena, the ten sons of Kuntibhoja, Sudarśana, Vṛddhakṣetra, Cedirāja, Malayadhvaja and Suratha. He defeated many including Śikhaṇḍī, Abhimanyu, Virāṭa, Sātyaki and Vindhya. By using Āgneyāstra (the arrow of fire) he made Kṛṣṇa and Arjuna fall fainting in the battle-field. He commanded the Kaurava army once. He killed many Pāñcālas and Somakas while they were sleeping. In Chapter 139 of Droṇa Parva we read about Arjuna defeating Aśvatthāmā in a single combat one day.

6) Aśvatthāmā sees a ghost. Dhṛṣṭadyumna, son of King Pāñcāla, killed Droṇa. When Aśvatthāmā heard of his father's death his rage knew no bound. He immediately went to the heart of the military camp of the Pāṇḍavas, Kṛpa and Sātvata following him. There at the gate of the camp he beheld a ghostly apparition. It is described in the Bhāṣā Bhārata (Malayālam version of M.B.) as follows : He saw a huge figure standing at the door with a body blazing like the Sun and the Moon. Bathed in blood and wearing a tiger's skin in the loins the figure wore a snake as his sacred thread and covered his upper body with a deer-skin. There were innumerable hands for this ghost and in each hand adorned with snake-bangles he held a deadly weapon. With crooked teeth and a ghastly face the goblin gave a shiver to those who saw him. Flames bursting forth from his eyes, ears, nose and mouth he barred the way of Aśvatthāmā. Undaunted the son of Droṇa showered divine arrows on the figure. But the ghost by his supreme powers absorbed the arrows to his body the moment they touched him. In despair Aśvatthāmā meditated on Śiva and the latter appearing before him in person gave him a divine dagger. With that he entered the bed-chamber of Dhṛṣṭadyumna, woke him up by striking him with his foot, caught hold of him by the hair on his head and killed him.

7) Aśvatthāmā and his jewel. The anger of Aśvatthāmā did not abate even after killing Dhṛṣṭadyumna, the butcher of his father. With a view to destroying the whole Pāṇḍava dynasty he sent against the Pāṇḍavas the all-powerful Brahmaśirāstra (a missile charged with great power by a holy incantation). But Droṇa had given the same type of missile to Arjuna also and so he sent forth his to meet the other. It created such a great explosion that all the elders on both the sides joined together and requested them to withdraw the missiles. Arjuna demanded the jewel on Aśvatthāmā's head to withdraw his missile. But Aśvatthāmā refused to part with it. He said, "This jewel of mine is more valuable than all the wealth of both Pāṇḍavas and Kauravas put together. If you wear this you need not be afraid of your enemies, disease, hunger and thirst. No harm will come to you from Yakṣas, Nāgas or thieves. I will never part with such a jewel". (Ślokas 28-30, M.B., Chapter 15, Sautika Parva). After great persuasion Aśvatthāmā surrendered his jewel but without withdrawing the missile directed it towards the womb of Uttarā who was bearing a child then. We are reminded of an incident which happened when the Pāṇḍavas were residing in Upaplāvya; a poor brahmin looking at Uttarā said, "When the Kauravas will be weakening in power a child will be born to you. The boy will have to bear a test even while in the womb and so you must name the child Parīkṣit (One who has been tested)".

When the powerful missile was flying straight towards Uttarā's womb Śrī Kṛṣṇa said, "Even though the child in the womb will die of this arrow it will be reborn. Oh, Aśvatthāmā, you will be denounced by all as a sinner for killing this unborn babe. To suffer for this evil deed you will roam about in the earth for three thousand years. Nobody will associate with you; you will be shunned by society. You will be tormented by all diseases on earth. But the babe which you have now killed will be a famous scholar and brave King. He will rule this country for sixty years. He will be known as the next Kururāja. Look, I am giving life to the babe you have killed". Vyāsa supported Kṛṣṇa, and Aśvatthāmā repenting on his hasty action gave the jewel to the Pāṇḍavas and left for the forest with Vyāsa. (Sautika Parva, M.B.).

8) Synonyms of Aśvatthāmā. The Mahābhārata has used the following names also for Aśvatthāmā. Ācāryanandana, Ācāryaputra, Ācāryasuta, Ācāryatanaya, Ācāryasattama, Drauṇi, Drauṇāyani, Droṇaputra, Droṇasūnu, Guruputra, Gurusuta and Bhāratācāryaputra.

AŚVATTHĀMĀ II. Indravarmā, King of Mālava, had an elephant of this name and it was killed in the battle by Bhīmasena. (Śloka 15, Chapter 190, Droṇa Parva, M.B.).

AŚVAVATĪ. A river. It is believed that if one just thinks about it at daybreak, midday and sunset one will get salvation. (M.B., Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 165, Śloka 25).

AŚVAVĀN. The first child of King Kuru. (See under genealogy of Kuru). His mother was Vāhinī. He is known as Avikṣit also. He got eight sons : Parīkṣit, Śabalāśva, Ādirāja, Virāja, Śālmali, Uccaiḥśravas, Bhayaṅkara and Jitāri. (Ślokas 50 to 53, Chapter 94, Ādi Parva, M.B.)

AŚVINĪKUMĀRA(S) (AŚVINĪDEVAS). Satya and Dasra, the two sons of Sūrya (The Sun) are called Aśvianīkumāras. (Ślokas 17 and 18, Chapter 150, Anuśāsana Parva, M.B.). They are also known as Aśvins, and Aśvinīdevas. These two are the physicians of the devas. (Śloka 12, Chapter 123, Araṇya Parva, M.B).

1) Genealogy. Descending from Viṣṇu in order are : Brahmā, Marīci, Kaśyapa, Vivasvān (the Sun), Aśvinīkumāras.

2) Birth. The Viṣṇu Purāṇa describes the birth thus: "Saṁjñā, daughter of Viśvakarmā, was the wife of Sūrya. She got three children : Manu, Yama and Yamī. Once finding the effulgence of Sūrya unbearable she engaged Chāyā to look after Sūrya and left for the forests to do penance there. Sūrya took Chāyā to be Saṁjñā and got three children of her : Śanaiścara, (another) Manu and Tapatī. Once Chāyā got angry and cursed Yama. It was then that Sūrya and Yama came to know that she was not Saṁjñā, getting more details from Chāyā, Sūrya found out by his Jñānadṛṣṭi (a power of sight developed by Yoga by which one could see things far beyond the limits of his vision) that Saṁjñā was practising austerities taking the form of a mare. Then Sūrya went to her disguised as a horse and with her co-operation produced three children of which the first two became known as Aśvinīkumāras. The third son was called Revanta. Then Sūrya took Saṁjñā to his place (Chapter 2, Aṁśa 3, Viṣṇu Purāṇa). Śloka 35 of Chapter 66 of Ādi Parva states that Aśvinīkumāras were born from the nose of Saṁjñā.

3) How Aśvinīkumāras tested Sukanyā. The Devī Bhāgavata contains a story of how the Aśvinīkumāras tested the fidelity of Sukanyā, daughter of Śaryāti and made her old and senile husband into a young and virile one. Śaryāti, son of Vaivasvata manu, had four thousand beautiful princesses as wives. But none had any children. When they were lamenting over this misfortune one of the wives gave birth to a girl and she was called Sukanyā. The father and all his wives together brought up this daughter with great affection.

In the neighbourhood of the palace of Śaryāti there was a tapovana as good and grand as Nandanavana and it contained a lake similar to the Mānasa lake. In one corner of this tapovana a sage named Cyavana was doing penance. He had been sitting there for so long a period without food meditating on a goddess that he was covered with plants and shrubs had grown over him. He was unaware of the growth around him. Once at this time Śaryāti with his wives and child and followed by a large retinue entered the tapovana for recreation. The King and his wives entered the lake and Sukanyā with her friends moved about in the garden plucking flowers and playing. Moving about thus aimlessly Sukanyā and party reached the place where Cyavana was doing penance. She saw the huge shrubby growth and while looking at it saw two gleaming points inside the shrubby heap. She was about to break open the thing when from inside she heard somebody addressing her thus : "Oh, innocent girl, why do you think of doing this mischief. Please do go your way. I am an ascetic. What wrong have I done to you for you to disturb me like this?" But Sukanyā brought up as she was, as a very pet girl did not like anybody advising her like this and so taking a pointed stick gave two pricks at the site of the gleam-points and left the place arrogantly.

The gleam-points were the eyes of Cyavana and so he lost his eyes and suffered much from the pain. Though he felt angry he did not curse anybody. But slowly the country began to witness the evil effects of this cruel deed. People stopped passing urine or faeces. Even animals were affected. The King and his ministers were worried. People came on deputation to the King to describe the disaster that had gripped the state. The King began to doubt that somebody must have done some great injury to the sage, Cyavana. He started enquiries asking his subjects one by one about this. But everybody replied in the negative. He bribed, he threatened. The result was the same. Then one day while the King and his courtiers were sitting despondent Sukanyā approached her father and confessed what she had done. She said : "While I was playing with my friends in the tapovana I saw this huge shrub-heap and two points gleaming from inside. I took a pin-stick and pricked them both and on drawing it out I found it wet also. But I left the matter there and never made any enquiries thereafter". Śaryāti now knew the cause of this national disaster and so immediately rushed to the sage for forgiveness. Prostrating before the ṛṣi the King pleaded "Oh, best of ṛṣis, forgive us for this injury done unknowingly. My daughter who is only an innocent child did this playfully while she was playing in this garden with her friends. She never knew what she pricked for a fun were your eyes. Oh, the best of sage, thou art rich in forgiveness and so please do condone this mischief and bless us." Cyavana replied that he would forgive if he gave Sukanyā in marriage to him. Śaryāti was depressed. How could he give his only and beautiful daughter to this aged senile ugly and blind ṛṣi? While the King was thus pondering over this, Sukanyā herself came to him and said, "Oh, dear father, please do not worry on my account. I shall go as his wife. If he is satisfied the nation would be saved from a calamity and I am prepared to sacrifice my happiness for the sake of the country. I will be only too glad to do so." With suppressed unwillingness the King gave his daughter in marriage to Cyavana.

Sukanyā after her marriage engaged herself fully in the service of looking after the welfare of her husband. She gave her husband healthy and tasty fruits and vegetables, bathed him daily in hot water, placed before him all the materials for his pūjā and when the time came for his meals gave him his food sitting by his side. After the meals she gave him tāmbūla and only after putting him on a bed would she go to attend to her own affairs. After finishing her meals she would come again to her husband and sit by his side massaging him. In the evening she would make ready all the things required for the pūjā and after the pūjā feed him with nourishing food. Whatever remained after his feed would be taken by her. At night she would be at the foot of her husband and take a nap. In the morning she would attend to all the details of the ablutions of her husband. Thus Sukanyā lived true to her husband always anxious to please him. Then one day the Aśvinīkumāras saw her going to the āśrama after her bath. They were very much attracted by the stunning beauty of the maiden that they approached her and asked : "Oh, beautiful maiden, who are you? We are Aśvinīkumāras. You seem to be alone. How did you happen to come to this place? You are one who should always move about with friends and courtiers and what is the reason for your living like this?" Sukanyā replied, "Revered Devas, I am the daughter of Śaryāti and wife of Cyavana. Forced by certain circumstances my father gave me in marriage to this sage who is very old and blind. He is living in the āśrama nearby. I am living with him looking after his comfort. If you think it convenient you can come and accept our hospitality." Hearing this the Aśvinīkumāras told her thus : "Sweet girl, you are fit to be the wife of one who is better than this blind old ascetic. So please do accept one of us as your husband". Sukanyā did not relish this talk and threatening them that if they did not withdraw stopping such blabbering she would curse them to ashes. The Aśvinīdevas were a bit surprised and also frightened at the attitude of Sukanyā. "Oh, Princess, we are immensely pleased at your sense of righteousness and chastity and you can ask of us a boon. We are physicians of the devas and can give your husband his sight and can also make him young and virile. But there is a condition for this. As soon as your husband becomes young and handsome we will also become like him and then you can select one among us. Are you willing? If so we will make your husband charming and handsome at this instant.

Sukanyā was well pleased with this offer but the condition placed did not satisfy her. So she ran to the āśrama and told her husband thus : "Lord, I met the Aśvinīdevas on my way from the river after my bath and enamoured of my beauty they have made this offer. We will make your husband young and beautiful giving him back his eyesight and then we will change ourselves to resemble him. You have then to select one of us as your husband. I am not able to understand their cunning and so I have come to you to get from you the answer for their question. I am anxious to see you young and handsome with your eyesight regained. I shall do as you direct."

Cyavana said : "There is nothing in this for great thinking. You go and tell them that you would do as they wish and bring them down here. On hearing this Sukanyā went to the Aśvinīkumāras and took them to the āśrama. They asked Cyavana to take a dip in the lake nearby and as he entered the lake the Aśvinīdevas also entered it and took a dip in its waters along with Cyavana. Lo! As they rose from the waters all the three became young and handsome looking alike. The Aśvinīdevas then requested Sukanyā to select one among them. Sukanyā was in a fix and she prayed to her goddess to give her power to identify her husband. She was blessed with that power and she selected Cyavana from the lot at which the Aśvinīdevas were also pleased. (Seventh Skandha, Devī Bhāgavata).

4) Cyavana's gratitude. Cyavana who got back his eyesight and youth asked the Aśvinīkumāras what boon they wanted. They then told him thus : "We are the physicians of the devas. Devendra has unnecessarily put a ban on our drinking Soma (juice extracted from the creeper Soma). When Brahmā performed a yāga at Mahāmeru this leader of the devas did not allow us to take a soma drink. If you are capable of doing it you should get us the right to take this celestial drink." Cyavana promised to do that.

Before long, King Śaryāti and his wife came to the āśrama to enquire about the welfare of their daughter. To their great amazement they found a young and handsome ascetic at the āśrama and were a bit suspicious of the character of their daughter. But soon all doubts were cleared and they were immensely pleased. Cyavana then told the King the request of the Aśvinīdevas and Śaryāti also promised his help on this matter.

On their return to their palace Śaryāti decided to perform a big yāga to which all the devas were also invited. Cyavana officiated as priest. The Aśvinīdevas were also present quite to the dislike of Indra. The time came for distributing soma, and when Cyavana called the Aśvinīkumāras to take their share Indra objected saying that since they were physicians of the devas they could not be given that drink. Cyavana argued against that and after a great verbal combat Cyavana succeeded in making the Aśvinīkumāras take the drink. For more details look under 'Cyavana'. (Seventh Skandha, Devī Bhāgavata).

5) Other information regarding Aśvinīkumāras.

(1) How they tested Upamanyu. This story is given under the word Āpodadhaumya.

(2) Birth of Nakula and Sahadeva. Kuntī, wife of Pāṇḍu, had obtained from Sage Durvāsas five sacred mantras, the chanting of each of which would give her a child. Even before her marriage Kuntī tested the power of the mantras by chanting one of them. Sūrya appeared and she had to take a son from him who became the famous Karṇa later. By chanting the second, third and fourth meditating on Yama, Vāyu and Indra, Kuntī got respectively the sons Dharmaputra, Bhīma and Arjuna. The fifth mantra she gave to Mādrī and she meditated on the Aśvinīdevas and got Nakula and Sahadeva.

(3) The Aśvinīdevas were present for the marriage of Pāñcālī. (Śloka 6, Chapter 186, Ādi Parva, M.B.). During the burning of the forest Khāṇḍava the Aśvinīdevas stood on the side of Arjuna.

(4) King Yuvanāśva became pregnant and bore a child. It was the Aśvinīdevas who took the child out by surgery. The boy became known as Māndhātā later. (Śloka 3, Chapter 62, Droṇa Parva, M.B.).

(5) During the Mahābhārata battle the Aśvinīdevas handed over some Pārṣadas to the god, Skanda. (Śloka 38, Chapter 43, Śalya Parva, M.B.).

(6) The Aśvinīdevas like very much oblations of Ghee. The others who like it are Bṛhaspati, Pūṣan, Bhaga and Pāvaka. (Śloka 7, Chapter 65, Anuśāsana Parva, M.B.).

(7) The month of Āśvina (October-November) is the month of Aśvinīkumāras and if a man gives ghee to the Brahmins freely in that month he will acquire more physical beauty. (Śloka 10, Chapter 65, Anuśāsana Parva, M.B.).

(8) One who offers Ghee as oblation to the fire for twelve months in succession will reach the country of the Aśvinīkumāras. (Śloka 95, Chapter 107, Anuśāsana Parva, M.B.).

(9) The great poet of Kerala, Vallathol, in his commentary on the 93rd Sūkta of the Ṛgveda states that there is a belief that the Aśvins and Candrasūryas (the Sun and Moon) are one and the same.

(10) Dīrghaśravas son of Dīrghatamas once prayed to the Aśvinīdevas to get rains and it is said that they gave a downpour of sweet water. (Ṛgveda, Sūkta 112, Ṛk 11).

(11) Once a sage named Gotama was lost in a desert and craved bitterly for drinking water. He prayed to the Aśvinīdevas for water and they dug a well itself in the desert and quenched the thirst of the sage. (Ṛk 9, Sūkta 16, Ṛgveda).

(12) The sage Dadhyañc taught the Aśvinīdevas the technique, Madhuvidyā. There is an interesting story about it. It was Indra who taught this to Dadhyañc and while teaching him he had threatened that if he gave away that secret to anybody else his head would be cut off. Aśvinīdevas found a way to tide over this difficulty. They at first cut off his head and fixed the head of a horse on him. It was with the head of a horse that Dadhyañc taught them Madhuvidyā and as soon as the teaching was over his horse-head was cut off and the real head placed in its place. (Ṛk 22, Sūkta 116, Ṛgveda).

(13) The vehicle of the Aśvinīdevas is a donkey. Once this donkey in the disguise of a wolf went and stayed with Ṛjrāśva, son of the Rājarṣi Vṛṣāgīr. Ṛjrāśva gave the wolf to eat hundred goats belonging to the people of the place. Vṛṣāgīr got angry at this act of his son and cursed him. The son became blind and he got back his eyesight by pleasing the Aśvinīdevas by prayer and offerings. (Ṛk 16, Sūkta 115, Ṛgveda).

(14) Once Suryā decided to give his daughter in marriage to the owner of the horse which would win a horse-race which Suryā would conduct. In the race the horse of the Aśvinīdevas won and they thus married Sūryā's daughter. (Ṛk 17, Sūkta 117, Ṛgveda).

(15) The Aśvinīkumāras killed an asura of name Viṣvak and destroyed his dynasty also. (Ṛk 16, Sūkta 117, Ṛgveda).

AŚVINĪKUMĀRATĪRTHA. It is believed that the physical beauty of man would be increased if he bathes in this lake. (Śloka 17, Chapter 83, Vana Parva, M.B.).

AŚVINĪSUTA. A son born to Sūrya of the wife of Sutapas. There is this story about it in Brahmavaivarta Purāṇa. Once when the wife of Sutapas was on a pilgrimage Sūrya happened to see her. The beautiful and venerable lady refused to accede to the desire of Sūrya and so the latter used force and took her. They had a son who was named Aśvinīsuta. On her return after the pilgrimage with her son she explained all that happened and the sage sent both of them out. Sūrya taught his son Aśvinīsuta astrology and made him a master in that science. Knowing that, Sutapas cursed him and said he would turn to be one very diseased. Later the sage amended his curse and added that he would be free from disease if he worshipped the sun.

ASVINĪTĪRTHA. Promises bodily splendour if one takes a bath in this lake. (Śloka 21, Chapter 25, Anuśāsana Parva, M.B.).

ATALA. This is one of the seven sections of Pātāla. The seven sections are : Atala, Vitala, Sutala, Talātala, Mahātala, Rasātala, Pātāla. Of them Atala has been described as follows : Atala is the first world of Pātāla. There reigns Bala, the son of Maya who is the famous but haughty magician. He has created 96 Mayas who are capable of granting all kinds of desires. Even now certain persons who are interested in the practice of Black magic, learn some of these 96 arts and practise them. When this mighty fellow opens his mouth for yawning, three groups of women known as Puṁścalīs, Svairiṇīs and Kāminīs emerge from his mouth. He has with him a rasāyana called hāṭaka with which he can easily entice and seduce all who enter Atala and to strengthen them for satisfying his lust. After enticing them with it, he enjoys uncontrolled pleasure with them, showering on them his amorous glances, bewitching smiles and embraces. (Devī Bhāgavata, Aṣṭama Skandha).

AṬAVĪŚIKHARA. Name of a village in ancient India. (M.B., Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 9, Verse 48).

ATHARVA(M). Among the Vedas, this has the fourth place. It comprises different kinds of incantations of occult powers for the destruction of enemies. Atharvan the son of Vasiṣṭha was the author of this Veda. In Chapter 6 of the third section of Viṣṇu Purāṇa the following reference is made to Atharvaveda: "Sumantu Maharṣi who was of infinite glory, first taught this Atharvaveda to his disciple Kabandha. (Sumantu Maharṣi was the son of Jaimini, who was the disciple of Vedavyāsa). Kabandha divided Atharvaveda into two parts and communicated them to two Maharṣis named Devadarśa and Pathya. Devadarśa's disciples were: Medhā, Brahmabali, Śautkāyani and Pippalāda. Pathya had three disciples named Jābāli, Kumudādi and Śaunaka. They also made Atharvaveda compilations. Śaunaka divided his compilation into two and gave one part to Babhru and the other to Saindhava. Muñjikeśa learnt it from Saindhava and divided the compilation first into two and later into three parts. The five divisions of the Atharvaveda—Nakṣatrakalpa, Vedakalpa, Saṁhitākalpa, Āṅgirasakalpa and Śāntikalpa, were made by Muñjikeśa. Nakṣatrakalpa contains Brahma's works : Saṁhitākalpa contains Mantra Vidhi ; Āṅgirasakalpa contains ābhicāra and Śāntikalpa contains taming of horses, elephants etc.

The mantras (incantations) in Atharvaveda and their uses are given below :—

Mantras	Uses
1. Suparṇastava	Getting rid of serpents and snake-poison (Sarpa-bādhā-nivāraṇam).
2. Indreṇadatta	Fulfilment of all desires (Sarva-kāma-siddhi).
3. Imā Devī	Attainment of peace (Sarva-śānti-karma).
4. Devamāruta	Attainment of peace (Sarva-śānti-karma).
5. Yamasyālokāt	Prevention of bad dreams (Duḥ svapna-śamana).
6. Indraścandraśca pañcavaṇija	Prosperity in commerce and business (Vāṇijya-lābha).
7. Kāmojevāji	Enjoyment of women (Strī-saubhāgyam).
8. Tubhyamevaja-vīma	Equal to thousand sacrifices (Ayuta-homa-tulyam).
9. Agnegobhinna	Strengthening of the intellect (Buddhi-vṛddhi).
10. Dhṛuvaṁdhṛu-veṇa	Attainment of posts of honour (Sthāna-lābha)
11. Alaktajīva-	Profit from agriculture (Kṛṣi-lābha).
12. Ahan te bhagna	Prosperity in general.
13. Ye me pāśā	Freedom from imprisonment (bandhana-vimukti).
14. Śapatvaha	Destruction of enemies (Śatru-nāśam).
15. Tvamuttama	Enhancement of fame (yaśo-vṛddhi).
16. Yathāmṛgavati	Enjoyment of women (Strī saubhāgyam).
17. Yenapehadiśa	Birth of children (Grabha-lābha).
18. Ayante yoniḥ	Getting sons (Putra-lābha).
19. Śivaśivābhiḥ	Prosperity in general (Saubhāgya-vṛddhi).
20. Bṛhaspatirnaḥ pari pātu	Blessings (Mārga-maṅgala).
21. Muñcāvitva	Warding off death (Mṛtyu-nivāraṇa).

When these mantras are chanted several oblations are made to the sacrificial fire. Substances like Camatā, ghee, rice, milk are thrown into the fire as offerings. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 262).

ATHARVĀ I. This muni is referred to in Mahābhārata, Udyoga Parva, Chapter 43, Verse 50, as a professional chanter of Chandaveda. Once under the curse of Bhṛgu Maharṣi, Agni hid himself under the sea. (See "AGNI"). At that time, it was Atharvā who, at the suggestion of the Devas, went under the water and discovered Agni. (M.B., Vana Parva, Chapter 222, Verse 8).

Atharvā recovered Agni, and re-created the worlds which were lying dormant owing to the absence of fire. (M.B.,Vana Parva, Chapter 222, Verse 19).

Atharvā was born from Brahmā's face. His wife was Śānti, the daughter of Kardama. Citti was another name for Śānti. But there are some Purāṇas which refer to Citti as another wife of Atharvā. Also, there are Purāṇas which say that Atharvā was Aṅgiras himself.

ATHARVĀ II. This name has been used as a synonym of Śiva. (M.B., Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 17, Verse 91).

ATHARVĀ III. In Ṛgveda another Atharvā may be seen. It is said that he was the author of the Atharvaveda. After learning Brahmavidyā from Brahmā, it was this Atharvā who first brought fire to the earth from heaven. Atharvā had two wives named Śānti and Citti. This Atharvā was the same person as Atharvaṇa, the son of Vasiṣṭha. (Bhāgavata, 4th Skandha, Chapter 1).

ATHARVĀṄGIRAS. See AṄGIRAS.

ATHARVAṆA. A son of Vasiṣṭha. (Bhāgavata, Fourth Skandha, Verse 42).

AṬHIDA(M). Name of a Janasthāna (Town) in ancient India. (M.B., Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 9, Verse 64).

ATIBĀHU. He was a Gandharva born to Kaśyapa by his wife Pradhā. He had three brothers : Hāhā, Hūhū and Tumburu. (M.B., Ādi Parva, Chapter 65, Verse 51).

ATIBALA. A mantra. Viśvāmitra who took the boys Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa to the forest taught them two mantras, Bala and Atibala, to liberate them from hunger and thirst. Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa, Bālakāṇḍa, Sarga 22)

ATIBALA I. The Maharṣi Atibala was the cause of the death of Śrī Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa.

After the war with Rāvaṇa, Śrī Rāma returned to Ayodhyā with his retinue and began his reign. After renouncing Sītā while Śrī Rāma was living in the palace with Lakṣmaṇa, Śatrughna and their families, one day Brahmā summoned Yama and said : "Śrī Rāma is the incarnation of Mahāviṣṇu. He has fulfilled all the purposes of the incarnation. Now Viṣṇu has to be recalled to Vaikuṇṭha".

On hearing this, Yama assuming the guise of a Sannyāsi named Atibala appeared before Śrī Rāma. He said he had to tell a secret to Śrī Rāma. Accordingly Śrī Rāma sent everyone else out of the audience chamber.

Lakṣmaṇa was asked to guard the entrance. It was announced that if anyone entered the hall, Lakṣmaṇa would be killed.

At this stage, Maharṣi Durvāsas arrived at the entrance accompanied by many of his disciples. He had come after having performed penance for a thousand years and in great hunger and thirst. He wanted to see the King to ask for sumptuous food. Lakṣmaṇa requested him to wait a little but Durvāsas refused to do so. He even threatened that he would reduce all of them to ashes by his curse. Finding no alternative, Lakṣmaṇa entered the hall and informed Śrī Rāma of the situation. Durvāsas was given a sumptuous meal. But for the fulfilment of the condition Lakṣmaṇa's death became necessary. Śrī Rāma cried with a broken heart. The honest Lakṣmaṇa went alone to the Sarayū river and drowned himself in its depths. Soon after, Śrī Rāma entrusting the affairs of the state to others and in the presence of thousands of spectators plunged into the Sarayū river and renouncing his earthly life, returned to Vaikuṇṭha. (Uttara Rāmāyaṇa).

ATIBALA II. The name of a follower given to Skanda by god Vāyu on the battle-field. (M.B., Śalya Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 44).

ATIBALA III. There was another King named Atibala who was a great scholar in Nītiśāstra. From the tine of his accession to the throne, he began to lead a vicious life. This Atibala's father was a King named Anaṅga. (M.B., Śānti Parva, Chapter 59, Verse 92).

ATIBHĪMA. One of the sons of the Agni, Tapa. (M.B., Vana Parva, Chapter 220, Verse 11).

ATIKĀYA. One of the sons of Rāvaṇa.

1) Previous Birth. This is a story concerning the initial stage of the creation of the Universe. After completing the task of creation Brahmā, in his pride fell into a sleep. In order to slight Brahmā a little, Mahāviṣṇu produced two Rākṣasas called Madhu and Kaiṭabha from his ears. Hearing their terrible roar Brahmā woke up in fear and fled to Mahāviṣṇu seeking refuge. Viṣṇu called Madhu and Kaiṭabha and asked them what boon they would like to ask. They proudly replied that they would grant a boon to Viṣṇu. In that case Mahāviṣṇu wanted them to grant him leave to kill them. They answered : "We will not break our promise about granting the boon. But since our passion for fighting has not been abated, you must fulfil our eager desire." Mahāviṣṇu said : "I agree. But let my boon be carried out first. After that I shall see that your wish is properly fulfilled. After your death, one of you will be reborn under the name of Khara and the other under the name of Atikāya. In the Tretāyuga I shall kill Khara in single combat after allaying his passion for fighting. Lakṣmaṇa who is the incarnation of Ananta will fight with Atikāya to his full satisfaction and kill him. Thus both of you will get Virakti and Mukti."

After saying this, Mahāviṣṇu made the two asuras stand on each of his thighs and killed them with his Sudarśana Cakra. They were born again as Khara and Atikāya. (Kamba Rāmāyaṇa, Yuddha Kāṇḍa).

2) Birth. There is a story about the birth of Atikāya in the Yuddha Kāṇḍa of Kamba Rāmāyaṇa : After his victory over Kubera Rāvaṇa was returning in his Puṣpaka Vimāna. On his way he saw some beautiful Gandharva women playing in the valley of Mayūragiri. Their leader was Citrāṅgī, the wife of Citrāṅgada. Rāvaṇa seduced her and had a secret union with her. At once she became pregnant and gave birth to a dazzlingly bright baby. The mother handed over the child to Rāvaṇa and returned to the world of the Gandharvas. Rāvaṇa, in his paternal love, took the child into the Vimāna and proceeded. On the way, the Vimāna knocked against a mountain peak and the baby was thrown overboard and fell in the forest. Rāvaṇa stopped the Vimāna and made a search for the baby in the forest. He found the child without the slightest injury, smiling and lying on a flat rock in the deep woods. He failed in his attempt to take it up even though he used ten of his hands. The child began to grow steadily in size. Then he tried again to lift the baby up using all his twenty arms. The boy, who had by this time grown into enormous size, suddenly sprang up and getting into the Vimāna took his seat in it. Rāvaṇa gave him the name Atikāya. On his arrival in Laṅkā, he presented him as adopted son to the barren Dhanyamālā. Atikāya was brought up by Dhanyamālā.

3) The Boons. Atikāya went to Gokarṇa and did penance to please Brahmā. Brahmā appeared, but being fully absorbed in Samādhi, Atikāya was not aware of his presence. Even his life-breath had been stopped. Brahmā, by his power, instilled life-breath into him and restored him to consciousness. He granted Atikāya all the boons he asked for. They were three in number. The first was the gift of Brahmāstra which could smash anyone. The second was the gift of an armour which was unassailable by anyone. The third was absence of thirst, desire and other cravings.

4) Education. Atikāya went to Kailāsa and received his education from Śiva. He learnt all the sciences, Arts, Śruti, Smṛti etc. from there. On the completion of his course he asked what Gurudakṣiṇā he should pay. Śiva made him promise that he would never practise Black magic. Pleased with him, Śiva awarded him the Pāśupatāstra.

5) Victory in Battle. Atikāya had an uncle, a Rākṣasa named Candra. Once he was defeated by Indra. It was at this time of chagrin that he came to know that Atikāya had reached Laṅkā with the Pāśupatāstra. Candra Rākṣasa ordered Atikāya to bring Indra as a captive. Atikāya went to Svarga (Heaven) and began a war with Indra. Mahāviṣṇu who came to help Indra used his Sudarśana cakra. Atikāya shot his Pāśupatāstra. Knowing Atikāya's history well, Mahāviṣṇu brought the battle to a close. Both parties accepted the position that Devendra had lost the battle and Atikāya had won.

6) Death. In the Rāmāyaṇa battle Atikāya fought on the side of Rāvaṇa. After a most terrible conflict, Lakṣmaṇa killed Atikāya. (Kamba Rāmāyaṇa, Yuddha Kāṇḍa).

ATILOMĀ. An Asura who was killed by Śrī Kṛṣṇa. (M.B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 38).

ATIMANYU. He was one of the ten sons of Manu.

ATIRATHA. There was a King named Matināra in Pūruvaṁśa. (See PŪRUVAṀŚA). Four sons were born to him: Taṁsu, Mahān, Atiratha and Druhyu. (M.B., Ādi Parva, Chapter 94, Verse 14).

ATIRĀTRA. He was one of the ten children born to Manu by Nadvalā. (See MANU VAṀŚA). Kuru, Pūru, Śatadyumna, Tapasvī, Satyavān, Śuci, Agniṣṭoma, Atirātra, Sudyumna and Atimanyu were the names of the ten brilliant sons of Naḍvalā. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Part I, Chapter 13).

ATIṢAṆḌA. After his death Balabhadra Rāma went to Pātāla in the guise of Ananta. All the serpents worshipped him. Among them was a serpent named Atiṣaṇḍa. (M.B., Mausala Parva, Chapter 4, Verse 16).

ATIŚṚṄGA. Vindhya Presented two pārṣadas to Skanda on the battlefield. They were Atiśṛṅga and Ucchṛṅga. (M.B., Śalya Parva, Chapter 45, Verses 49, 50).

ATISTHIRA. Mahāmeru presented two Pārṣadas named Atisthira and Sthira to Skanda on the battlefield. (M.B., Śalya Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 48).

ATITHI (guest). In ancient Bhārata Atithi-satkāra (hospitality to a guest) was considered as a yajña. In Manusmṛti, Chapter 100, Verse 3, it is said that even if one lives on the scattered grains in the fields after harvest, and even if penance is offered in the midst of Pañcāgni (five fires) unless the Brahmin who comes as a guest is fed, all virtuous deeds would be useless. Besides, Manu has made the following remarks about the Atithi (guest).

"A new visitor at night must be treated as an Atithi. An Atithi is one who comes occasionally, not daily. But one who lives in your village and goes about as a vagabond for a living, does not deserve to be treated as an Atithi. The guest who comes either before or after mealtime should not be sent away without being fed. Even a Vaiśya or Śūdra who comes as a guest to a Brahmin's house has to be given food when the servants are given food."

ATITHIGVA. He was a King referred to in the Ṛgveda. He had another name, "Divodāsa". This King had fought several battles against Asuras with the help of Indra. It is said that once, being afraid of the Asuras, he tried to hide himself under the water. (Ṛgveda, Maṇḍala 1, Anuvāka 10, Sūkta 53; Ṛgveda, Maṇḍala 1, Anuvāka 16, Sūkta 112).

ATIVARCAS. Himavān gave Skanda two Pārṣadas on the battlefield. They were Ativarcas and Suvarcas. (M.B., Śalya Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 46).

ATIYAMA. God Varuṇa gave Skanda on the battlefield two Pārṣadas (attendant soldiers). One of them was Yama and the other was Atiyama. (M.B., Śalya Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 45).

ATRI I.

1) The son of Brahmā. Atri Maharṣi was one of the mānasaputras of Brahmā. The mānasaputras were : Marīci, Aṅgiras, Atri, Pulastya, Pulaha, and Kratu (M.B., Ādi Parva, Chapter 65, Verse 10).

2) One of the Saptarṣis. Brahma's sons, Marīci, Aṅgiras, Atri, Pulastya, Pulaha, Kratu and Vasiṣṭha are known as the Saptarṣis (seven sages). (M.B., Śānti Parva, Chapter 208).

3) Creator of the pracetases. The sage Prācīnabarhis was born in the family of Atri Maharṣi. Ten Pracetases (Prajāpatis) were born as the sons of this Muni. (M.B., Śakti Parva, Chapter 208).

4) Citra Śikhaṇḍī. Among the seven Munis known as Citra Śikhaṇḍīs, we see Atri Maharṣi as one of the Aṣṭaprakṛtis which form the basis of the Universe.

5) Important events. (1) How Mahāviṣṇu became Atri's son. Kaśyapa had a son named Kaśipu. He was a very mighty ruler and carried on his reign in an ungodly manner. In a terrible battle which took place at that time between the Devas and Asuras Kaśipu was killed. Prahlāda became the Asura King. Then there was a battle between Indra and Prahlāda. After six years' war, Prahlāda withdrew, defeated. Later Mahābali, the son of Virocana (grandson of Prahlāda) became emperor of Asuras. War broke out again between Mahābali and Indra. In this war, Mahāviṣṇu helped Indra. The Asuras were utterly defeated. They sought refuge with Śukra, the Asura guru. Śukra promised to help them. He set out to the Himālayas to receive a powerful mantra from Śiva. The Asuras kept waiting for Śukra's return.

At this stage, Mahāviṣṇu who was the protector of Indra, came to Śukra's āśrama and killed Śukra's mother, Kāvyamātā. Seeing this impudence of Mahāviṣṇu, Bhṛgu Maharṣi was enraged and cursed him that he should be born many times in human wombs. It is on account of this that Mahāviṣṇu had to take many avatāras (incarnations). It was in this way that Mahāviṣṇu incarnated as Dattātreya, the son of Atri. (Devī Bhāgavata, 4th Skandha).

(2) Atri and Parāśara. It was a time when Vasiṣṭha and Viśvāmitra were in a state of mutual ill-will. Once King Kalmāṣapāda was going about in the forest on a hunting expedition. He met Śakti, the eldest son of Vasiṣṭha in the forest. The King did not respect him properly. Śakti transformed Kalmāṣapāda into a Rākṣasa by his curse. The Rākṣasa who was also a cannibal, first swallowed Śakti himself. Viśvāmitra offered whatever help he could, to destroy Vasiṣṭha's family. Kalmāṣapāda ate successively all the 100 sons of Vasiṣṭha. Vasiṣṭha, in great sorrow and Sakti's wife, Adṛśyantī lived in an āśrama. Adṛśyantī was pregnant at the time of Śakti's death. In due course she gave birth to a boy who was called Parāśara and who later on became the father of Vyāsa. when Parāśara grew up, he came to know that his father Śakti was eaten by the Rākṣasa. Enraged at this, he started a yajña to annihilate the whole race of Rākṣasas. As the yajña gained intensity and force Atri Muni arrived there with certain other Maharṣis and dissuaded Parāśara from the yajña. (M.B., Ādi Parva, Chapter 181).

(3) Atri's dispute with Vainya. Atri Maharṣi and his wife once got ready to go for Vanavāsa. At that time the poor Maharṣi's wife was in great distress because they had no money to be distributed to their disciples and children. She requested her husband to go to King Vainya and to beg for some money. Accordingly the Maharṣi visited King Vainya at his yāgaśālā (The shed where a yāga is held). He began to flatter Vainya by saying that he was the first among kings and so on. Vainya did not like it. He began to dispute with Atri. Vainya remarked that Indra was the first King. To settle the dispute they went together to Sanatkumāra Muni. Sanatkumāra sent them away reconciled. After that Vainya gave Atri much wealth. After distributing all this wealth among their sons and disciples Atri and his wife set out to the forest to perform penance.

(4) How Atri became Sun and Moon. Once there was a fierce battle between Devas and Asuras. Owing to the shower of arrows from the Asuras, the Sun and Moon became dim. Darkness spread everywhere. The Devas began to grope in the dark. They requested Atri Maharṣi to find a remedy for this. Moved by their distress, Atri suddenly transformed himself into the Sun and Moon. The Moon gave light to the Devas. The Sun burnt up the Asuras by his intense heat. Thus the Devas were saved. This story was told by Vāyu Bhaga-vana, to Arjuna. (M.B., Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 156).

(5) Atri and King Vṛṣādarbhi. In the Mahābhārata we find a story about a difference of opinion between King Vṛṣādarbhi and some Maharṣis. This story was told by Bhīṣma to Yudhiṣṭhira about the kind of persons from whom Brahmins may accept gifts. Once the Munis, Kaśyapa, Atri, Vasiṣṭha, Bharadvāja, Gautama, Viśvāmitra, Jamadagni, and Paśusakhā, with Arundhatī and Gaṇḍā, who were the wives of two Munis, travelled round the world. Their object was to go to Brahmaloka. At that time there was drought in the world. King Vṛṣādarbhi, the son of Śibi, suggested that the above-mentioned Munis should be called and given wealth. They refused to accept it. Vṛṣādarbhi became angry. He performed Homa in Āhavanīyāgni and from the agnikuṇḍa, the Rākṣasī Yātudhānī (Kṛtyā) arose. Vṛṣādarbhi sent Yātudhānī to destroy Atri and all other Munis. As Yātudhānī was guarding a lotus pond in the forest, the munis led by Atri happened to come that way. The Maharṣis were able to recognize Yātudhānī. They beat her with their tridaṇḍu (Trident or a kind of magic wand) and reduced her to ashes. After satisfying their hunger by eating the lotus flowers the Maharṣis went to Brahmaloka. (M.B., Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 93).

(6) Atri and Śrāddha. There is a passage in the Mahābhārata in which Atri gives advice to the emperor Nimi who belonged to Atri's family. The story of how Śrāddha originated in the world which Bhīṣma had told Dharmaputra was retold by Atri. A son named Dattātreya was born to Atri, the son of Brahmā. Dattātreya became King. Nimi was his son. Nimi's son died after one thousand years. Nimi who was in deep grief at the death of his son, ordained a Śrāddha in memory of his son. On that occasion Atri Maharṣi came there and explained to Nimi the importance of Śrāddha. (M.B., Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 91, Verses 20-44).

(7) How Brahmā, Viṣṇu and Maheśvara (Śiva) were born as sons of Atri. There is no other woman in the Purāṇas who surpasses Śīlāvatī in her fidelity to her husband. In order to enable Ugraśravas, her husband, to satisfy his passion, she once carried him on her own shoulders to a prostitute's house. On the way, Māṇḍavya Muni pronounced a curse that Ugraśravas should die before sunrise. The grief-stricken Śīlāvatī pronounced a counter-curse that the sun should not rise on the next day. As the sun failed to rise, the Trimūrtis (Brahmā, Viṣṇu and Śiva), accompanied by Anasūyā, Atri's wife, went to Śīlāvatī. Anasūyā persuaded Śīlāvatī to withdraw her curse. The Trimūrtis who were happy at the success of their mission (of bringing about the Sunrise) asked Anasūyā to demand any boon she wanted. Anasūyā expressed her wish that the Trimūrtis (Brahmā, Viṣṇu and Śiva) should be born as her sons and they agreed.

Mahāviṣṇu, under the name of Dattātreya, was born as the son of Anasūyā. Śiva was born to her under the name of Durvāsas. There is a story about it in the Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa. Once Śiva got angry with the Devas. They began to flee for life. But Brahmā alone did not run away. Śiva who became more furious at this, pinched off one of the heads of Brahmā. Still he was not pacified. Pārvatī who was alarmed, approached Śiva and begged him to suppress his anger. At her request, Śiva's fury was transferred and deposited in Anasūyā, Atri's wife. Durvāsas is the embodiment of that element of Śiva's fury.

According to the promise, Brahmā also took his birth as the moon from Anasūyā, the wife of Atri. (For that story, see PURŪRAVAS). There is a story about that also in the Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa. Once when Brahmā was performing the task of creation, he experienced carnal passsion. Sarasvatī was the offspring of that passion. When Brahmā saw her, he fell in love with her also. This made him feel angry towards Kāmadeva. He pronounced a curse that Kāmadeva should be burnt up in the fire from Śiva's eye. (This is why Kāmadeva was later burnt to death by Śiva). Although Kāma had retreated from Brahmā his passion had not been suppressed. Brahmā transferred his passion to Atri Maharṣi. The Maharṣi gave it to Anasūyā, his wife. Since she was unable to bear such a violent passion, she gave it back to her husband. That passion emerged from Atri's eye in the form of the Moon. This is why lovers experience strong passion for each other at the time of the rising of the moon. (Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa, Chapters 39-43).

(8) Atri and Gaṅgā Devī. Once, while Atri Maharṣi was performing penance in Kāmada forest, there was a terrible drought in the country. At that time, his wife Anasūyā made a Śivaliṅga of sand and offered worship to it. Then Atri asked her to give him a little water. There was no water anywhere. Suddenly Gaṅgā Devī appeared there and said to Anasūyā : "There will be a hole here. Water will come out of it in a torrent."

Pure water began to flow from the place pointed out by Gaṅgā Devī. Anasūyā begged Gaṅgā Devī to stay there for a month. Gaṅgā Devī agreed to do so on condition that Anasūyā would transfer her Tapaśśakti to her for one month.

Atri was pleased by drinking the water. He asked Anasūyā where she got such nice fresh water. She explained to him all matters. Atri expressed his desire to see Gaṅgā Devī. She appeared before him at once. Anasūyā prayed to her that Gaṅgā should continue to exist in the world always. Gaṅgā Devī answered that she would do so if Anasūyā was prepared to give her the fruit of one year's Tapaśśakti and of devoted service to her husband. Anasūyā agreed to that condition. Suddenly Śiva appeared there in the shape of a Liṅga. At the request of Atri and Anasūyā Śiva took his seat there permanently assuming the name of "Atrīśvara". (Śiva Purāṇa).

(9) Other Details. 1. Besides Dattātreya, Durvāsas and Candra. Atri had another son, Prācīnabarhis. (M.B., Śānti Parva, Chapter 208, Verse 6).

2. Many Pāvakas had been born in Atri Vaṁśa. (M.B., Vana Parva, Chapter 222, Verses 27-29).

3. When the Kaurava-Pāṇḍava war was raging with great fury, many Maharṣis went to Droṇa and advised him to stop the battle. Atri Maharṣi was one of them. (M.B., Droṇa Parva, Chapter 190, Verse 35).

4. On another occasion, a King named Soma performed a Rājasūya (Royal sacrifice). Atri Maharṣi was the chief priest at this yāga. (M.B., Śalya Parva, Chapter 43, Verse 47).

5. Atri was also among the Maharṣis who had gone to witness Paraśurāma's tapas. (Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa, Chapter 64).

6. Ṛgveda, 5th Maṇḍala was composed by Atri. (Ṛgveda Saṁhitā, Preface).
7. Once the Asuras put Atri Maharṣi into the Śatadvāra yantra (a machine of torture with a hundred holes). Ṛgveda, 1st Maṇḍala, 16th Anuvāka, Sūkta 51).
8. Once the Asuras tried to burn Atri alive. (Ṛgveda, 1st Maṇḍala, 16th Anuvāka, Sūkta 112).
9. The Asuras at another time made Atri lie down in a machine with a large number of holes and tried to burn him alive in it. At that time he prayed to the Aśvins and they liberated him. (Ṛgveda, 1st Maṇḍala, 17th Anuvāka, Sūkta 116).
10. Atri was among the Maharṣis who visited Śrī Rāma, on his return to Ayodhyā after the war with Rāvaṇa. (Uttara Rāmāyaṇa).
11. From the navel lotus of Viṣṇu Brahmā was born, Atri from Brahmā, Soma from Atri, and Purūravas from Soma were born. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 12).
12. Atri begot by Anasūyā, Soma, Durvāsas and Dattātreya yogī. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 20).

ATRI II. In the Purāṇas another Atri, the son of Śukrācārya, is also seen (M.B., Ādi Parva, Chapter 65, Verse 27).

ATRI III. The term Atri has been used as an epithet of Śiva. (M.B., Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 17, Verse 38).

AU. This word means Maheśvara (Śiva). (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 348).

AUDAKA. This is the place where Narakāsura with his ten thousand girls was once imprisoned. It is a plateau on the top of Maṇiparvata. Because water was in plenty there the place was called 'Audaka'. An asura named Nūrū was the keeper of this plateau. (Sabhā Parva, M.B.).

AUDDĀLAKA. A holy place of ancient India. The place got this name because the sage Uddālaka lived there. It is believed that if one bathes in this holy place one will be absolved of all his sins.

AUDUMBARA. The King of the state of Udumbara. This king once paid respects to emperor Yudhiṣṭhira and gave him several presents and gifts. (Śloka 12, Chapter 53, Sabhā Parva, M.B.).

AUKTHYA. A glorifying prayer in Sāmaveda. (Śloka 36, Chapter 134, Vana Parva, M.B.).

AURASĪKA. A country of ancient India. Śrī Kṛṣṇa conquered this land. (Śloka 16, Chapter 11, Droṇa Parva, M.B.).

AURVA I. (Ūrva, Ūrūja). A fierce saint of the line of Bhṛgu Maharṣi.

1) Genealogy. Descending in order from Viṣṇu, Brahmā, Bhṛgu, Cyavana, Aurva.

Cyavana Maharṣi married Āruṣī, daughter of Manu. Aurva was her child who was the grandfather of Jamadagni and the great grandfather of Paraśurāma.

2) Birth. The Preceptors of the Bhṛgu dynasty were the hereditary gurus of the Kings of Hehaya. Kṛtavīrya a famous King of the Hehaya dynasty and father of Kārtavīryārjuna had his education from a Bhṛgu ṛṣi living in his āśrama. On competing his education the king paid lavishly and the Bhṛgus became rich thereafter. Kṛtavīrya died and his sons did not very much like the Bhārgavas (Bhṛgus) becoming rich by the wealth of their ancestors. Knowing this the Bhṛgus started burying their wealth under the earth. Once a Kṣatriya king forcibly dug out from the house of a Bhṛgu the wealth he had safely buried and from that day onwards the Kṣatriyas and the Bhārgavas became enemies. The Bhṛgus were hunted down by the Kṣatriya kings and the Bhārgavas frightened by this move left their abode and went and hid in Caves in mountains far away. Among those who thus fled was Āruṣī, wife of Cyavana. Āruṣī was pregnant at that time and she hid her 'Garbha' in her thighs while fleeing. A brahmin woman who saw this went and informed the Kṣatriyas and they immediately went and caught hold of her. Then the thigh broke and a boy came out of it. Because he was born from the thighs the boy was named Aurva. (Ūrū = Thigh and so, born of a thigh). (Chapter 179, Ādi Parva, M.B.).

3) The effulgence of Aurva. Aurva was born with fiery radiance and the sudden effulgence made the Kṣatriya Kings blind. Frightened they craved for pardon and praised him. They got back their eyesight then.

4) Aurva and Baḍavāgni. Aurva bore a deep grudge against the Kṣatriyas who had massacred his forefathers. Aurva started doing rigorous penance and by the force of his austerities the world started to burn. At that stage the Pitṛs appeared before him and persuaded him to withdraw from his penance. Aurva then told them thus: "Pitṛs, while I was lying in the thigh-womb of my mother I heard hideous groans from outside and they were of our mothers when they saw the heads of our fathers being cut off by the swords of the Kṣatriyas. Even from the womb itself I nurtured a fierce hatred towards the Kṣatriyas. No helping hand was raised before the pitiable wails of our mothers".

The Pitṛs were astounded at the firmness of the vow of Aurva and horrified at the thought of what would happen if the penance was continued. They pleaded again to cease his austerities and then submitting to their request Aurva withdrew the fire of his penance and forced it down into the sea. It is now believed that this fire taking the shape of a horse-head is still living underneath the sea vomiting heat at all times. This fire is called Baḍavāgni. More about this can be had under the head Baḍavāgni. (Chapter 180, Ādi Parva, M.B.).

5) Aurva and the birth of Sagara. Ayodhyā was once ruled by a celebrated King of Ikṣvāku dynasty named Subāhu. He had as his wife Yādavī a good natured and well behaved woman who was a gem among queens. One day Tālajaṁgha a King of the Hehaya line of rulers who was then the King of Māhiṣmatī defeated Subāhu in a battle. Yādavī was then pregnant. Jealous co-wives poisoned her; Yādavī did not die but the poison affected the child in the womb.

After the defeat, Subāhu and Yādavī went and stayed with Aurva in his āśrama. For seven years they lived there and then Subāhu died. Grief-stricken Yādavī was about to jump into the funeral pyre and end her life when Aurva stopped her from the act pointing out that she was soon to deliver a child. After a few months she delivered a son and Aurva called him 'Sagara' meaning one with 'gara' (poison) in him. (Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa, Chapters 16, 17).

6) Aurva and the sister of Garuḍa. Garuḍa, son of Vinatā, had a sister named Sumati. Upamanyu, a sage, wanted to marry her but neither she nor her relatives liked it. Enraged at this the sage cursed Sumati saying that the brahmin who married her would have his head burst. The marriage of Sumati thus remained a problem for her parents. There was a friend of Vinatā, a sannyāsinī, living in a forest and to find a way to escape from the curse Vinatā sent Garuḍa to her. The sannyāsinī advised Garuḍa to approach Aurva to find a solution for the problem and Aurva was therefore approached for advice.

It was at this time that the people of Ayodhyā came in search of Subāhu and Yādavī who had left them years before. When they knew of Subāhu's death they were plunged in sorrow but were glad to know a son of Subāhu, Sagara, had grown up to be a successor to Subāhu. When Garuḍa made Aurva acquainted with the pitiable tale of his sister Aurva decreed that Sumati should marry a Kṣatriya instead of a brahmin and thus tide over the curse. He then asked Sagara to marry Sumati and blessed them saying that Sagara would one day become an emperor and perform an Aśvamedha yāga. Aurva then sent Sagara along with the people to Ayodhyā where Sagara after defeating all his enemies became the emperor of Bhāratavarṣa. (Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa, Chapters 18-21).

7) Sagara's sons and how Aurva helped in getting them. Sagara ruled the land for three thousand years. He had besides Sumati another wife, Keśinī. Both of them bore no sons for Sagara. Dejected he entrusted the administration of the state with his ministers and left for the āśrama of Aurva. Aurva blessed them and prophesied that Keśinī would deliver a son to continue the dynasty and that Sumati would deliver sixty thousand sons of no great use at all. Sagara and his wives, returned to the palace and very soon both his wives became pregnant. In due time Keśinī delivered a son who was named Asamañjas. But Sumati gave birth to a lump of flesh. Greatly pained the King was about to throw it away when Aurva appeared there and stopped him from doing that. He directed him to cut the piece of flesh into sixty thousand pieces and put one piece each in a jar of ghee. Every year one prince would be born from one of them. Thus Sumati got sixty thousand sons. (Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa, Chapter 92).

8) Teaching of Aurva. In the evening of his life Sagara went and stayed in the āśrama of Aurva. Aurva gave him instructions on many a divine subject. He taught him about the importance of the four āśramas, the rituals to be practised by the different castes of Brāhmaṇa, Kṣatriya, Vaiśya and Śūdra and many such other things. Finally Aurva gave Sagara Brahmajñāna. (Chapter 8, Aṁśam 3, Viṣṇu Purāṇa).

9) Aurvāśrama. All the Bhārgava ṛṣis together once stayed in the āśrama of Aurva. Paraśurāma visited the āśrama one day during that time and paid respects to Bhṛgu, Khyāti, wife of Bhṛgu, Cyavana, son of Bhṛgu and Aurva, son of Cyavana. (Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa, Chaptre 63).

AURVA II. A brahmin living in the country of Mālava. This brahmin got a daughter named Śamīka by his wife Sumedha. She was married very early to Mandāra, son of Dhaumyaka and disciple of Śaunaka. After some days when Mandāra found his wife fully grown he went to Aurva to bring his wife home. Aurva sent them both to the house of Mandāra with his blessings. On their way home they met the Maharṣi Bhuśuṇḍi and burst into laughter at his sight. The sage cursed them and made them into two trees. When Aurva found his daughter and son-in-law missing he started a search for them. Then he came to know that both of them had changed into trees by a curse. Aurva and his wife then prayed to God for help. Aurva then lived in the tree of Śamā in the shape of Agni and Śaunaka made an idol of Gaṇapati with the root of the Mandāra tree and worshipped him. Gaṇapati was pleased by the devotional deeds of Aurva and Śaunaka and changed the trees again into Śamīka and Mandāra. (Gaṇeśa Purāṇa).

AUŚANAS (Kapālamocana). A holy place on the banks of the river, Sarasvatī. Brahmā, the devas and many maharṣis lived here once. (Chapter 83, Vana Parva).

This place is called Kapālamocana also. There is a story behind the place getting this name.

At the forest of Daṇḍaka Śrī Rāma killed many demons. The force of the arrows took the skulls of the demons to far off places in the forest. One of the skulls thus sent far fell on the feet of a sage named Mahodara who was then going that way. The skull went deep into his foot and not only did it wound his foot but it stuck to his foot so hard that it could not be drawn out also. With his foot in pains the sage visited all the holy places but with no relief to his pain. At last Mahodara came to Auśanasa and to his surprise the skull came off from his foot healing his wound. He remained there for some time and obtained many divine attainments. From then onwards the place was called 'Kapālamocana'. After this incident Brahmā, Viśvāmitra, Balabhadrarāma and many such divine persons visited the place. (Chapter 39, Śalya Parva, M.B.)

AUŚIJA I. A King of ancient India. He equalled Indra. (Śloka 226, Chapter 1, Ādi Parva, M.B.).

AUŚIJA II. An ancient sage. There is a reference to this sage who is the son of Aṅgiras in Ṛgveda. This ṛṣi was a brilliant member of the royal council of Dharmaputra. (Chapter 208, Śānti Parva, M.B.).

AUŚĪNARA (AUŚĪNARI). Śibi, son of the King of Uśīnara. See under Śibi.

AUŚĪNARĪ (UŚĪNARĀ). A śūdra girl born in the country of Uśīnara. Gautama Muni got his sons Kakṣīvān and others of this girl. (Śloka 5, Chapter 21, Sabhā Parva, M.B.).

AUṢṆĪKA(M). An ancient place in India. The King of this country paid respects to Dharmaputra offering him several gifts. (Śloka 17, Chapter 51, Sabhā Parva, M.B.).

AUTATHYA. Son of Utathya (See under Utathya).

AUVVAYĀR. A celebrated Tamil poetess. She was born in a Paraya (lowest of the Hindu castes) family. Her mother left her as soon as she was delivered and a low caste Śūdra brought her up. She lived for 240 years before she left on a long journey never to return. She wrote several books in Tamil. The important ones are Ātticūti, Kontaiventa, Mutturai, Natvali, Katvali slukka, Nannūtkova, Nantanikova, Aruntamilmāla, Darśanappattu, and Jnānakurul. She has made a dictionary in verses also.

AVABHṚTHAM. The bath taken at the end of a sacrifice.

"Then all the Kṣatriya Kings approached Dharmatanūja (Dharmaputra) who had completed successfully, under the protection of the Mighty Lord of the bow, the cudgel and the wheel, the great sacrifice of the Rājasūya (imperial inauguration) and taken the avabhṛtasnāna (the bath at the end of the sacrifice)."

(Mahābhārata, Sabhā Parva, Chapter 45, Stanzas 40, 41).

AVĀCĪNA. The son born to Jayatsena, a King of the Pūru dynasty, by his wife Suśrāva the princess of Vidarbha. To him was born Ariha of Maryādā the princess of Vidarbha. (M.B., Ādi Parva, Chapter 95, Stanzas 17 and 18).

AVADHŪTEŚVARA. An incarnation of Śiva. Once Indra and Bṛhaspati went to Kailāsa to do homage to Śiva who clad in air only hindered their way. Indra requested that person to get out of the way. He requested repeatedly several times but in vain. Indra who got angry took his weapon of Vajra. But Śiva froze it. Moreover fire emanated from his eye on the forehead. At the request of Bṛhaspati Śiva turned the fire from his eye towards Lavaṇa Samudra (the sea of Salt). Jalandhara who was killed by Śiva had his origin in this fire. (Śiva Purāṇa).

AVAGĀHA. A warrior of the Vṛṣṇi dynasty. (Mahābhārata, Droṇa Parva, Chapter 11, Stanza 27).

AVAIŚĀKHA. (See Dhanaśarmā).

AVĀKĪRṆA (M). A holy place on the bank of the river Sarasvatī. (M.B., Śalya Parva, Chapter 41).

AVANTI. A country called Mālava in ancient India. The famous Ujjayinī was the capital of Avanti. This city is situated on the bank of Śiprā. The renowned poets such as Kālidāsa and others, lived in this city. This is one of the seven cities considered to be capable of giving Mokṣa (heavenly bliss). (M.B., Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 9, Stanza 43).

AVANTI VAṀŚA. (The Dynasty of Avanti). The dynasty of Avanti Kings had its origin in the Yadu dynasty. Candra was born to Atri the son of Brahmā. Budha was born to Candra, Purūravas to Budha, Āyus to Purūravas, Nahuṣa to Āyus, Yayāti to Nahuṣa and Yadu to Yayāti. Yadu had five sons, the eldest of whom was known by the name Sahasrajit. The rest of them were known as Nīlāñjika, Raghu, Kroṣṭu and Śatajit.

Sahasrajit had three sons called Śatajit, Haihaya and Reṇuhaya. Dharmanetra was born to Haihaya, Sahana to Dharmanetra, Mahimān to Sahana, Bhadrasena to Mahimān, Durgama to Bhadrasena and Kanaka to Durgama. From Kanaka were born the four sons Kṛtavīrya, Kṛtāgni, Karavīra and Kṛtaujas. Arjuna (Kārttavīryārjuna) was born as the son of Kṛtavīrya.

Arjuna renowned as Kārttavīrya became the supreme lord of the earth comprising the Saptadvīpa (Seven Islands) by the merits of his penance. He got invincibility and thousand hands in battles, as boons. He performed ten thousand sacrifices all in conformity with the rules and regulations. To escape from loss of wealth one had only to remember his name. It was ordered that Kings other than Kārttavīrya, however great the extent of their might and prowess, and the number of sacrifices, offering of alms and penance done be, would not stand on a par with him.

Kārttavīrya had a hundred sons, of whom the most famous were Śūrasena, Śūra, Dhṛṣṭa, Kṛṣṇa, and Jayadhvaja. Jayadhvaja the most renowned of these five ruled in Avanti as King. Tālajaṅgha who had several sons, was born from Jayadhvaja.

The family of the Haihayas was split into five. They were the Bhojas, the Avanti family, the Vītihotra family, the Svayaṁjātā family and the Śauṇḍikeya family. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 275)

AVARODHA. A King of the family of Bharata.

AVASĀNAM. An ancient Bath in Bhārata. One could attain the merits of Sahasragodāna (giving a thousand cows as alms) by bathing in this holy bath. (M.B., Vana Parva, Chapter 82, Stanza 128).

AVATĀRA. (Incarnation). The incarnations of Mahāviṣṇu:—

1) General information. God takes three kinds of incarnations such as avatāra, āveśa and aṁśa. That which has full power is avatāra ; that which has power only for the time being is āveśa and partial incarnation in aṁśāvatāra.* The incarnations of Viṣṇu are countless. Hermits, Manus, Devas (gods) and sons of Manus are incarnations in part (aṁśāvatāras) of Viṣṇu. Complete avatāras are ten in numbers of which Balabhadra Rāma is not considered as an avatāra by some. Instead of him they place Buddha.

b) Reason for the incarnations. Mahāviṣṇu has taken so many incarnations in the world. In the Śrī Mahādevī Bhāgavata a story occurs to the effect that Mahāviṣṇu was forced to take so large a number of incarnations due to the curse of the great hermit Bhṛgu. The story is as follows : Kaśyapa had a son named Kaśipu. He was daring and brave and ruled the country as an enemy of the Gods. There arose a severe battle between the gods and the Asuras. Kaśipu was killed in that battle. After Kaśipu his son Prahlāda became King. He too was an enemy of the Gods. So there was a battle between Indra and Prahlāda. The battle continued for a hundred years. At last Prahlāda was defeated. He felt very sorry at the defeat. So he anointed Bali, son of Virocana, as King and leaving the Kingdom he went to the Gandhamādana and began to do penance. The fight continued between Bali and Indra. In this fight Mahāviṣṇu helped Indra. The Asuras were completely destroyed. The defeated Asuras went to their teacher Śukra who promised to protect them by spells and incantations and herbs. The Gods knew that Śukra had undertaken to protect the asuras.

Leaving the asuras behind, Śukra went to Kailāsa to get more power of spells and incantations from Śiva. Before going to Kailāsa Śukra had asked the Asuras to wait for him with faith. After this the Asuras sent Prahlāda to the Gods for a truce. Prahlāda, though an Asura was in good favour with the Gods. He reached the court of Indra and said, "Gods, we have no desire at all for war. We have decided to spend the remaining period in penance wearing barks of trees and tufts of hair. How wicked a deed is battle and how delightful it is to become a devotee of God ! So hereafter you will not be troubled by us. Likewise I hope you will not do us innocent people any harm."

The gods believed Prahlāda. The Asuras, in the guise of hermits waited for Śukra in the hermitage of Kaśyapa. Śukra reached Kailāsa and bowed before Śiva and requested that he might be given the power of defeating the Gods by some means quite unknown to Bṛhaspati the teacher of the devas (Gods). Śiva was in trouble. He could refuse neither Śukra nor the Gods. At last he told hermit Śukra that to come by such a spell he had to stand head downwards, inhaling smoke for a thousand years. Śiva said so thinking that when the dreadful nature of the feat was considered, Śukra might desist from the attempt. But Śukra began that penance instantly.

The Gods understood everything. The deceit of the Asuras, the crookedness of Śukra all were now clear to them. They trembled with fear and began to consult how to get over the difficult situation. Finally they decided to go to war with the Asuras. The gods did accordingly. The Asuras were in trouble. They were not strong enough to face the Gods. So they all went to Kāvyamātā, the mother of Śukra. The devas (gods) with Mahāviṣṇu at their head chased the Asuras. Kāvyamātā, by the merits of her devotional meditation petrified Mahāviṣṇu and Indra. Mahāviṣṇu thought of his Sudarśana (wheel-weapon of Viṣṇu) which instantly made its appearance and cut off the head of Kāvyamātā. The great hermit Bhṛgu got angry because Mahāviṣṇu committed woman-slaughter, and cursed him thus: "You are a crooked being, a viper, a deceit. The hermits who adore you as the seat of all that is good are mere fools; you are wicked, of a black character, and I curse you to take countless incarnations in the world, and painful confinement by and by because of your sins." (Śrī Mahādevī Bhāgavata, 4th Skandha).

Thus having cursed Viṣṇu, the hermit Bhṛgu took some water from his water-pot and sprinkled it on the face of Kāvyamātā, who woke up as if from sleep. (For the remaining portion of the story see Śukra).

2) Daśāvatāras. (The ten Incarnations). Owing to the curse of Bhṛgu, mentioned above, Mahāviṣṇu had to undertake so many incarnations, complete as well as partial. Complete incarnations are ten in number. They are called Daśāvatāras (The Ten Incarnations).

Matsyaḥ Kūrmo Varāhaśca
Narasiṁhaśca Vāmanaḥ /
Rāmo Rāmaśca Rāmaśca
Kṛṣṇaḥ Kalkir janārdanaḥ //

Matsya (Fish), Kūrma (Turtle), Varāha (Pig), Narasiṁha (Lion-man), Vāmana (Dwarf), Rāma (Paraśurāma), Rāma (Śrī Rāma), Rāma (Balabhadrarāma), Kṛṣṇa (Śrī Kṛṣṇa), Kalki (Yet to come). These are the ten incarnations of Janārdana.

The daśāvatāras are described one by one below.

1) Matsyāvatāra. (Fish Incarnation). To Kaśyapa, the son of Marīci, and the grandson of Brahmā a son was born, by his wife Aditi. He was called Vivasvān and the Manu who was the son of Vivasvān is known as Vaivasvata Manu or Satyavrata Manu. It was during the time of this Manu that Viṣṇu incarnated as a Matsya (fish).

Once, while Brahmā was reciting the Vedas (the Scriptures) Hayagrīva, an asura, stole the Vedas from the side of Brahmā and with them he went under water to the bottom of the ocean and hid himself there. So Mahāviṣṇu decided to take the form of a fish to recover the stolen Vedas.

Vaivasvata Manu, the first and foremost of the godfearing, was once doing penance in a place known as Badarī. He got down into the river Kṛtamālā to take a bath. Then a small fish said to the Manu : "Oh King, I am afraid of large fishes. So please don't forsake me". Hearing this the Kind Manu took the fish in his hand and put it in an earthenware pot and brought it up. In a few days the fish began to grow. When the pot became insufficient the King put it in a larger pot. When that also became too small, the King put the fish in a pond. When the pond could not hold the fish any longer the King put it in the Ganges at its request. After a few days the Ganges also became too small for the fish. Finally the fish told the King: "Oh, King, within seven days there will be a great flood in the world. You should make a boat and take the seven hermit-sages with you in the boat and escape. I will help you."

Hearing this he got an immensely large boat ready and obeyed the instructions of the fish. Within seven days rain started in torrents. Everything in the world, the moving and the not moving, were under the flood. A horn began to sprout from the head of the fish. Manu tied his boat on that horn. The fish reached the summit of the Himālayas with the boat, which was tied to the highest peak. Since the peak came to be called 'Naubandhana Śṛṅga' (The peak to which boat is tied). The rain ceased to pour. It was seen that everything in the world had been destroyed except the Manu and the seven hermit-sages and some of the germs, saved in the boat. (This story occurs in the great Hindi work 'Kāmāyanī' of Jayaśaṅkar Prasād). (M.B., Araṇya Parva, Chapter 187; Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 2; Bhāgavata 8th Skandha, Chapter 24).

This story of the incarnation of Viṣṇu as fish is seen in the Bible figuratively. "In the order of the generations of Adam, the first creation of God, Śeth, Enos; Kaināṇ, Mahalīl, Jāred, Enoch, Methūselah, Lamech and Noah were born. When Noah was five hundred years old he begot Shem, Ham and Japheth.

There was a great flood during the time of Noah. God said to him : "The end of all flesh is come before one; for the earth is filled with violence through them, and behold, I will destroy them with the earth. Make thee an ark of gopher wood; rooms shalt thou make in the ark and shalt paint it within and without with pitch. And this is the fashion which thou shalt make it of. The length of the ark should be three hundred cubits, the breadth of it fifty cubits, and the height of it thirty cubits. A window shalt thou make to the ark and in a cubit shall thou finish it above and the door of the ark shalt thou set in the side thereof, with lower, second and third stories shalt thou make it. And behold, I, even I, do bring a flood of water up on the earth. to destroy all flesh wherein is the breadth of life from under heaven and everything that is in the earth shall die. But with thee will I establish my covenant, and thou shalt come into the ark, thou and thy sons and thy wife and thy sons' wives with thee, and of every living thing of all flesh, two of every sort, shalt thou bring into the ark to keep them alive with thee; they shall be male and female. Of fowls after their kind, and of cattle after their kind, and of every creeping thing of the earth after their kind, two of every sort shall come unto thee to keep them alive. And take thou unto thee of all food that is eaten and thou shalt gather it to thee, and it shall be for food for thee and for them." Thus did Noah according to all that God commanded him, so did he.

And the Lord said unto Noah, "Come thou and all thy house into the ark, for thee Have I seen righteous before me in this generation. Of every clean beast thou shalt take to thee by sevens the male and his female and of beasts that are not clean by two the male and his female. Of fowls also of the air by sevens the male and the female to keep seed alive up on the face of all the earth. For yet seven days and I will cause it to rain up on the earth forty days and forty nights, and every living substance that I have made will I destroy from off the earth." And Noah did according unto all that the Lord commanded him.

And Noah was six hundred years old when the flood of waters was up on the earth. And Noah went in, and his sons and his wife and his sons' wives with him into the ark because of the waters of the flood. Of clean beasts and of beasts that are not clean and of fowls and of everything that creepeth upon the earth. There went in two and two unto Noah into the ark the male and the female as God had commanded Noah. And it came to pass after seven days that the waters of the flood were upon the earth. In the six hundredth year of Noah's life in the second month on the seventeenth day of the month the same day were all the fountains of the great deep broken up and the windows of heaven were opened and the rain was up on the earth for forty days and forty nights. In the self-same day entered Noah and Shem, and Ham and japheth the sons of Noah and Noah's wife and the wives of the sons with them into the ark. They and every beast after his kind and all the cattle after their kind and every creeping thing that creepeth upon the earth and every fowl after his earth after his kind, every bird of every sort. And they went in unto Noah into the ark, two and two of all flesh wherein is the breadth of life. And they that went in, went in male and female of all flesh as God had commanded him and the Lord shut him in. And the flood was forty days upon the earth, and the waters increased and bore up the ark and it was lifted up above the earth. And the waters prevailed and were increased greatly upon the earth and the ark went up on the face of the waters. And the waters prevailed exceedingly upon the earth and all the high hills that were under the whole heaven were covered. Fifteen cubits upward did the waters prevail and the mountains were covered. And all the flesh died that moved upon the earth, both of fowl and of cattle and of beast and of every creeping thing that creepeth up on the earth, and every man. All in whose nostrils was the breadth of life, of all that was in the dry land, died. And every living substance was destroyed which was up on the face of the ground both man and cattle and the creeping things and the fowl of the heaven, and they were destroyed from the earth. And Noah only remained alive, and they that were with him in the ark. And the waters prevailed upon the earth for hundred and fifty days.

And God remembered Noah and every living thing and all the cattle that was with him in the ark and God made a wind to pass over the earth and the waters became calm. The fountains also of the deep and the windows of heaven were stopped and the rain from heaven was restrained. And the waters returned from off the earth continually and after the end of the hundred and fifty days, the waters were abated. And the ark rested in the seventh month on the seventeenth day of the month upon the mountains of Arārat. And the waters decreased continually until the tenth month. In the tenth month on the first day of the month were the tops of the mountains seen. And it came to pass at the end of forty days that Noah opened the window of the ark which he had made. And he sent forth a raven which went forth to and fro until the waters were dried up from off the earth. Also he sent forth a dove from him to see if the waters were abated from off the face of the ground. But the dove found no rest for the sole of her foot and she returned unto him into the ark for the waters were on the face of the whole earth. Then Noah put forth his hand and took her and pulled her to the ark. And he stayed yet other seven days. And again he sent forth the dove out of the ark. And the dove came in to him in the evening, and lo, in her mouth was an olive leaf plucked off. So Noah knew that the waters were abated from off the earth. And he stayed yet other seven days and sent forth the dove, which returned not again unto him anymore. And it came to pass in the six hundredth and first year in the first month, the first day of the month the waters were dried up from off the earth and Noah removed the covering of the ark and looked and beheld the face of the ground was dry. And in the second month on the seven and twentieth day of the month was the earth dried. And God spake unto Noah saying: "Go forth of the ark, thou and thy wife, and thy sons and thy sons' wives with thee. Bring forth with thee every living thing that is with thee, of all flesh both of fowl and of cattle and of every creeping thing that creepeth up on the earth, that they may breed abundantly in the earth and be fruitful and multiply up on the earth. And Noah went forth and his sons and his wife and his sons' wives with him. Every beast, every creeping thing and every fowl and whatsoever creep up on the earth after their kinds went forth out of the ark. And Noah built an altar unto the Lord and took of every clean beast and of every clean fowl and offered burnt offerings on the altar. And the Lord smelt a sweet savour and the Lord said in his heart : "I will not again curse the ground anymore for man's sake. For the imagination of man's heart is evil from his youth. Neither will I again smite anymore every thing as I have done. While the earth remaineth seed time and harvest and cold and heat and summer and winter and day and nignt shall not cease. (Holy Bible, Genesis, Chapters 6, 7 and 8).

2) Kūrmāvatāra. (Incarnation as a tortoise). Long ago when Durvāsas visited the realm of Gods he presented Devendra with a garland made of flowers of exquisite fragrance. Indra tied it on to the tusk of Airāvata (the elephant of Indra). When the beetles which gathered on the garland for honey became a nuisance, Airāvata destroyed that garland. Durvāsas who got angry at this cursed the gods as a whole that they would get wrinkles and grey hair. The gods were advised by Mahāviṣṇu that if they got Ambrosia (Amṛta—celestial honey) from the sea of Milk by churning it they could escape from this. Accordingly the Gods called the asuras for help, and they approached the sea of Milk. They made use of the Mountain of Mandara as churn-drill and the huge snake Vāsuki as churning rope, and the churning commenced. The gods took hold of the tail of the snake and as the churning was proceeding the churn-drill, the mountain of Mandara, having no fixation at the bottom sank down. Then Mahāviṣṇu took the form of a turtle, and got under the Mandara mountain and lifted it up on his back. By the force of lifting it went higher and higher up. Then Mahāviṣṇu took the form of an eagle and sat on the top of the mountain and it came down a little and placed itself in the right position. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 8, Chapter 7; Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 3; Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa, Bālakāṇḍa, Sarga 45).

3) Varāhāvatāra. (Incarnation as a Pig). Jaya and Vijaya were the two watchers who stood at the gate of Mahāviṣṇu. Once the great hermit-sages Sanaka and others reached Vaikuṇṭha to visit Mahāviṣṇu. Then Jaya and Vijaya treated the hermits without respect. The hermits cursed them that they would become Dānavas (Asuras or giants). They also said that when they were slain thrice by Mahāviṣṇu they would reach heaven. At that period when hermit Kaśyapa was carrying on his evening prayer and devotional rites, his wife Diti approached him with lustful desire. Kaśyapa told her that as he was engaged in prayer and meditation it was not proper on her part to select that particular moment for her lustful desire. But she persisted and the sage yielded and out of that union two sons were born. They are the two asuras Hiraṇyākṣa and Hiraṇyakaśipu. Of these Hiraṇyākṣa was the incarnation of Jaya and Hiraṇyakaśipu that of Vijaya.* With the birth of these two the whole world began to tremble. These two asura brothers began to terrorize the world. They wandered about causing destruction and devastation wherever they went. Once Hiraṇyākṣa got down into the ocean and began to beat the waves in the ocean with his cudgel. The ocean began to sway and surge. Varuṇa (the Lord of water) was terrified and he ran to Mahāviṣṇu and sought protection. Mahāviṣṇu took the form of a Pig and came to the ocean. When Hiraṇyākṣa saw Mahāviṣṇu he took the earth in his hand and ran to Pātāla (the nether world). Mahāviṣṇu followed him and killed him and recovered the earth. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 3, Chapter 18; Bhāgavata, Skandha 2, Chapter 7 and Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 4).

4) Narasiṁhāvatāra. (Incarnation as lion-man). With the death of Hiraṇyākṣa, his brother Hiraṇyakaśipu became furious more than ever. He wanted to avenge the death of his brother. His fury was turned towards Mahāviṣṇu. So he got on the top of the Mountain of Mandara and did penance before Brahmā and Brahmā appeared and granted him boons, one of which was that nobody but Viṣṇu should be able to kill him. He returned with gladness and began to roam about torturing devotees of Viṣṇu everywhere.

A son named Prahlāda was born to him. He was a god-fearing child and from birth an ardent believer in Viṣṇu. Hiraṇyakaśipu tried his utmost to change his son to a hater of Viṣṇu. He got a special teacher for the purpose and Prahlāda was taken to the house of the teacher to live with him until he changed his mind. The result was that the teacher and all others who advised him ultimately became believers in Viṣṇu. Anger overpowered Hiraṇyakaśipu. Prahlāda was thrown before mad elephants. But the tusks of the elephant missed the aim and were driven into the earth and broken. Venomous snakes were employed and those which bit him had their fangs broken. Finally the child was put in blazing fire. But the child felt the fire to be cool and soothing. From that fire a ghost arose and tried to kill Prahlāda. Instantly the Sudarśana, the wheel-weapon of Viṣṇu came down and cut off the head of the ghost. Hiraṇyakaśipu jumped with anger and called out. "Where is your Viṣṇu?" His son replied that his Viṣṇu dwelt in every movable and immovable thing. Hiraṇyakaśipu kicked at a stone pillar close by and asked him, "Is your Viṣṇu in this pillar?" Prahlāda replied, "My Viṣṇu is in Pillar and in fibre". Before he had finished, the Pillar broke open and a monster as horrible as the Destroyer Śiva, in the shape of a lion-man made its appearance.

"Mīmāṁsamānasya samuthito 'grato
Nṛsiṁharūpastadalaṁ bhayānakaṁ
Prataptacāmīkaracaṇḍalocanaṁ
Sphuratsaṭākesarajṛmbhitānanaṁ
Karāladaṁṣṭraṁ Karavālacañcala-
Kṣurāntajihvaṁ bhrukuṭimukholbaṇaṁ
Stabdhordhvakarṇam girikandarādbhuta-vyāttāsyanāsaṁhanubhedabhīṣaṇaṁ
Divispṛśatkāyamadīrghapīvara-
Grīvoruvakṣaḥsthalamalpamadhyamaṁ
Candrāṁśugauraiśchuritaṁ tanūruhai-ṛviṣvagbhujānīkaśataṁ nakhāyudham."

"Before him who was waiting with curiosity to see what would happen, with eyes blazing as molten gold, mouth wide open in the middle of long bushy mane, tusks long and curved and protruding fearfully, tongue swaying like a sword, eyebrows fierce looking, ears standing erect and still, two nostrils as wide and deep as mountain canyons, jaws prominent and thick and broad and set with fierceness, colossal body reaching the sky, neck very thick and fat and short, breast excessively broad and strong, waist very small and narrow, body thickly covered with bushy hair exuberantly grown and as yellow as the light of the moon, a number of claws very sharp and pointed, the horrid monster Narasiṁha (Lion with human head) suddenly appeared. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 7, Chapter 8, Stanzas 20-22).

This was the figure of Narasiṁha. Mr. S. Paramesvara Iyer, Ulloor, has described this figure in his "Bhaktidīpikā" as follows :

"Glaring eyes burning as blazing cinder, tongue as a dagger just used in piercing to death, neck with folds, eyebrows looking mad, tusks like young moon, fierce face with bushy mane grown to it, hair long and sharp like pointed wire, claws looking like having drunk blood, body shining as if countless suns had risen together, all combined as if the fire of anger burning inside had incarnated, in the shape of a lion up to neck and human shape beyond the neck." (Bhaktidīpikā)

The horrid monster caught hold of Hiraṇyakaśipu the King of the Asuras, pushed him to the ground and opened his heart with its fierce claws. Blood sprouted like a spring. With great ferocity he pulled out the intestines of Hiraṇyakaśipu and wore them round his neck as a garland and roared loudly. Prahlāda, with songs of praise and chanting of hymns of adoration pacified the stormy Narasiṁha and bowed low down before him. The Narasiṁha was pleased with the devotion of Prahlāda. He blessed the child and then disappeared. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 7, Chapter 8).

*During their next birth they made their appearance as Rāvnca and Kumbhakarṇa and during the third birth they were Śiśupāla and Daṇḍavaktra.

5) Vāmanāvatāra. (Incarnation as a Dwarf). It was to expel the Emperor Mahābali, that Mahāviṣṇu incarnated as a dwarf. To Kaśyapa, the son of Marīci and the grandson of Brahmā, was born of Diti, Hiraṇyakaśipu. And from Prahlāda the son of Hiraṇyakaśipu was born Virocana and Bali was the son of Virocana. Bali got the name Mahābali because of his prowess. He was the emperor of the Asuras. A fierce battle began over the Ambrosia got from churning the sea of Milk, between the Asuras and the gods. In the battle Indra cut Mahābali down with his Vajrāyudha. The Asuras took the body of Mahābali to Pātāla (the nether world) where their teacher Śukra brought him to life again. Then Mahābali worshipped the Bhārgavas and became more powerful than before and went to heaven again and renewed the battle. This time he defeated the Gods altogether and subjugated the realm of the Gods who were scattered to all sides. The devas or gods are the sons of Kaśyapa born by his wife, Aditi. She felt very sorry at the defeat of the gods. Seeing that she was silent and sad Kaśyapa asked her the reason. She replied that she was thinking of ways to enable the gods to recover their lost power and position. Kaśyapa advised her to please Mahāviṣṇu by observing Dvādaśī vrata (fast of the twelfth lunar night). Aditi did so and Viṣṇu appeared before her and asked her what she desired. Her request was that Viṣṇu should take birth in her womb and recover Indra to his lost power and position. Thus Viṣṇu took birth as the younger brother of Indra in the shape of Vāmana (dwarf.)

At this time Emperor Mahābali was celebrating a sacrifice on the bank of the River Narmadā after having subjugated the whole of the world. A large number of hermits gathered there. Vāmana also was among them. He requested Mahābali to grant him three feet of ground as alms. The teacher Śukra warned Mahābali against granting the request. But the emperor granted the request and asked Vāmana to measure the ground. Vāmana immediately enlarged his body and measured the heaven, the earth and the Pātāla (the upper realm, the earth and the lower realm) in two steps and asked for place for the third step. The honest Mahābali showed his head and requested to complete the three steps. Vāmana put his step on the head of Mahābali and pushed him down to Pātāla. Thus the gods regained their lost places. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 8, Chapter 19). A description that by the toe of Vāmanas' raised foot (raised for measuring the third step) the testicle of Brahmā was cut open where from the Ganges originated, is seen in the Bhāgavata, Skandha 5.

When Viśvāmitra took Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa to the forest they entered a holy hermitage and Viśvāmitra told the boys that it was the hermitage where Aditi, long ago had observed dvādaśī fast. It was in that same place that Vāmana incarnated and placed his step on the head of Mahābali.

"The bright Mādhava took birth in Aditi as Vāmana and went to Mahābali, requested for three feet of ground and brought under control the three worlds for the good of all. By binding Bali by might, he gave to Indra the three worlds and this hermitage is the place where He once placed his steps. I am a devotee of that Vāmana." (Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa, Bāla Kāṇḍa, Sarga 29).

6) Paraśurāmāvatāra. (Incarnation as Paraśurāma). Once Kārttavīryārjuna pleased the hermit-sage Dattātreya the son of Atri, by doing penance and got the boon of one thousand hands. One day he went to the forest for hunting and entered the bank of Narmadā. The hermit Jamadagni had been living there with his wife Reṇukā and sons Paraśurāma and others. The King being tired of hunting got into the hermitage. Paraśurāma was not there. The hermit called his divine cow Kāmadhenu, which provided the King and his followers with a very good supper.

When the King departed he asked for the wonderful cow. The hermit did not consent. The King caught hold of the cow by force and went to his city. Paraśurāma went to Māhiṣmatīnagar the capital of Kārttavīryārjuna, killed the King and took Kāmadhenu back. From that day onwards the sons of Kārttavīrya were waiting for an opportunity to take revenge.

Once Reṇukā went to the river to bring water. A gandharva (semi god) named Citraratha was bathing in the river. She happened to look at him for a little while. When she returned the hermit was very angry and asked each of his sons to cut off the head of their mother. They all refused. But Paraśurāma immediately obeyed his father and cut off her head. His father was pleased and said that he might ask any boon. He requested his father to bring his mother back to life. Accordingly Reṇukā was brought back to life.

Once the sons of Kārttavīrya got into the hermitage, at a time when Paraśurāma was away and cut off the head of the hermit Jamadagni and took it off. When he returned his mother told him how his father was killed. She cried and beat her breast twentyone times. Paraśurāma became an incarnation of revenge, and travelled over the world twentyone times and killed every Kṣatriya King. The blood of all those Kings flowed into one channel and gathered in a holy Bath called Syamantapañcakaṁ. Thus Mahāviṣṇu took his sixth incarnation as Paraśurāma and fulfilled his duty of destroying the wicked Kṣatriya Kings (For details about Paraśurāma see under Paraśurāma and Kārttavīryārjuna). (Bhāgavata, Skandha 9, Chapter 16).

7) Śrī Rāmāvatāra. Mahāviṣṇu took the incarnation of Śrī Rāma to kill Rāvaṇa. (For further information see the words Śrī Rāma and Rāvaṇa).

8) Balabhadrarāmāvatāra. (The incarnation of Balabhadrarāma) (See the word Balabhadrarāma).

9) Śrī Kṛṣṇāvatāra. (The incarnation of Śrī Kṛṣṇa) (See the word Kṛṣṇa).

10) Kalkyavatāra (The incarnation as Kalki). At the end of Kaliyuga (the Age of Kali) all the people would become atheists and sceptics. Rewards will be received from the depraved. The classes will be mixed. People would become degenerate having no good qualities. A religion called 'Vājasaneyam' with its fifteen doctrines only will be acceptable. People would become irresponsible wearing the garment of duty. Lawless people would take the form of Kings and will begin to eat men. In those days Lord Viṣṇu will incarnate as Kalki, the son of Viṣṇuyaśas and the priest of Yājñavalkya and learn the arts of wielding weapon and handling missiles and destroy all lawless ones. The subjects will be brought back to the four classes and the four āśramas or stages of life and the doctrines and directions of the long-established religion and peace and order will be restored. Then the Lord will cast away the form of Kalki and go to heaven. After that, as of old, Kṛtayuga (the first age) will begin class distinctions and the four stages of life and such other establishments will once more prevail. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 16).

3) The Incarnations of Mahāviṣṇu.

It is mentioned in Śrī Mahādevī Bhāgavata, Skandha 1, Chapter 3 that Mahāviṣṇu had taken the twentysix incarnations given below :

1) Sanaka 2) Sananda 3) Sanātana 4) Sanatkumāra 5) Varāha (pig) 6) Nārada 7) Nara Nārāyaṇas 8) Kapila 9) Dattātreya 10) Yajña 11) Ṛṣabha 12) Pṛthu 13) Matsya (fish) 14) Mohinī 15) Kūrma (turtle) 16) Garuḍa (eagle) 17) Dhanvantari 18) Narasiṁha (Lion-man) 19) Vāmana (dwarf) 20) Paraśurāma 21) Vyāsa 22) Śrī Rāma 23) Balabhadrarāma 24) Śrī Kṛṣṇa 25) Buddha 26) Kalki. (Information about Matsya, Kūrma, Varāha, Narasiṁha, Vāmana and Paraśurāma, are given under the word Avatāra and for the rest see the same words).

In the first Skandha of "Bhāgavata Kilippattu" the incarnations are exhaustively dealt with as follows :

"And after that to make it possible for the Lord with four faces to rule his subjects justly and well. He took various incarnations with his portions, the first four of which are four persons, Sanaka, Sananda, Sanātana and Sanatkumāra, in the order given, four or five-year old children, well-versed in the four Vedas, the four always inseparable wandered everywhere come to the world to show the merits of Brahmacarya (the vow of celibacy). To kill Hiraṇyākṣa and to lift up the earth He took the form of Sūkara (Pig). To show the world the tattva (essence) of Sat (good) and tama (darkness) He took the form of hermit Nārada. To show the merits of penance He became Nara and Nārāyaṇa. To impart to the world the meaning of Sāṁkhya Yoga (Indian Philosophy dealing with evolution and union with the Supreme Spirit) He came as Kapila the learned. To teach the world the laws of chastisement He was born as Datta of the wife of Atri. Then He came as Yajña to become Indra. The next incarnation He took was Ṛṣabha, the noble King. To shorten and flatten the earth He came as Pṛthu. To recover the Vedas he took the form of Matsya (fish). To remove wrinkles and grey hair the gods had churned the sea of Milk and then to lift the mount Mandara He went under it and as a bird He got up on it. To give the world Āyurveda (the scripture of medicine) He came as Dhanvantari. To entice Asuras and to recover Ambrosia from them He took the form of Mohinī. To save the devoted Prahlāda and to slay his father He came in the form of Narasiṁha. Then as Vāmana the younger brother of Indra to deceive Mahābali and to recover the lost worlds for the gods he came. To destroy the Kings who were haters of Brahmins He came as the son of Jamadagni. Then he took the incarnation of Veda Vyāsa. And to slay the giant Rāvaṇa He became Śrī Rāma. Next we see Him as Balabhadrarāma. Then He came as Devakīsuta [son of Devakī (Kṛṣṇa)]. Next He came in the Kaliyuga as Śrī Buddha and at the end of Kaliyuga He will come as Kalki. And there are many incarnations still to speak of."

AVĪCI. One of the twentyeight hells. The following are the twentyeight hells :

(1) Raurava (2) Sūkara (3) Rodha (4) Tāla (5) Viṣāsana (6) Mahājvāla (7) Taptakumbha (8) Lavaṇa (9) Vilohita (10) Rudhirāmbhas (11) Vaitaraṇi (12) Kṛmīśa (13) Kṛmibhojana (14) Asipatravana (15) Kṛṣṇa (16) Lālābhakṣa (17) Dāruṇa (18) Pūyavāha (19) Pāpa (20) Vahnijvāla (21) Adhaśśiras (22) Sandaṁśa (23) Kālasūtra (24) Tamas (25) Avīci (26) Śvabhojana (27) Apratiṣṭha (28) Aprāci. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Aṁśa 2, Chapter 6).

The hell called Avīci is described thus : "This is the hell meant for those who stand false witness, who take false oath and false name. The soldiers of Yama will push these false people into the hell of Avīci, from the top of a mount which is a hundred yojanas (league) high. The place of Avīci, like the waves of the ocean, is swelling and falling and swaying and surging always. When sinners fall there their bodies will be crumbled to pieces. Their life will enter into new bodies and then the punishment will be repeated again and again." (Devī Bhāgavata, Skandha 8).

AVIJÑĀTAGATI. Two sons were born to Anila, a vasu by his wife Śivā. They were called Avijñātagati and Manojava. (M.B., Ādi Parva, Chapter 66, Stanza 25).

AVIKAMPANA. This ancient King got from the hermit Jyeṣṭha Sātvatadharma (righteousness). (M.B., Śānti Parva, Chapter 384, Stanza 47).

AVIKṢIT I. A famous King. The son of Karandhama and father of Marutta. He was honoured even by Bṛhaspati, having performed a hundred horse sacrifices. Mention is made in the Mārkaṇḍeya Purāṇa that Avikṣit had seven wives : Varā, Gaurī, Subhadrā, Līlāvatī, Vibhā, Maṅgavatī, and Kumudvatī. Besides them Vaiśālinī the princess of Viśālā also was his wife. He had taken this Vaiśālinī from her Svayaṁvara dais (the bride herself selecting a husband from those who are present), defeating the Kings who were present there. Those defeated Kings, later, joined together and defeated Avikṣit and took him a prisoner. Finally Karandhama rescued him. His greatness is described as follows:

"The righteous man Avikṣit is equal to Indra in prowess. This austere and righteous man has become a great sacrificer. In brightness he is equal to the Sun, as forgiving as the earth, in intelligence equal to Bṛhaspati and as firm as the Himālayas. By his thought, word, and deed and self control and noble actions he kept his subjects in peace and prosperity." (Bhāṣā Bhārata, Aśvamedha Parva, Chapter 4, Stanzas 19-21).

AVIKṢIT II. Five sons were born to King Kuru by his wife Vāhinī. Avikṣit was one of them. [See the word Vaṁśāvalī (Genealogy)].

AVIMUKTA (M). The middle part of the city of Kāśī. There is a holy temple here. It is said that those who commit suicide in this temple would attain heaven. (Vana Parva, Chapter 64, Stanzas 78 and 79). For more information see the word Divodāsa.

AVINDHYA. A giant in whom Rāvaṇa had confidence. But he held the opinion that Sītā should be returned to Rāma.

"The aged giant and noble leader Avindhya, who had earned the confidence of Rāvaṇa, brave, learned and of good qualities, pleaded with Rāvaṇa and said that Rāma would exterminate the entire race of the giants, but the wicked Rāvaṇa would not pay heed to his words."

(Śrī Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa, Sundara Kāṇḍa, Sarga 37, Stanzas 12 and 13). This aged giant had sent Trijaṭā to the Aśoka park to console Sītā. Hear what she says: "The famous giant leader, the noble aged well-wisher of Rāma, Avindhya, had told me about you."

"(M.B., Araṇya Parva, Stanza 56). There is a situation in Vana Parva when this noble giant prevented Rāvaṇa from his attempt to kill Sītā.

"When he saw the decision of Rāvaṇa to kill Sītā, Avandhya pacified Rāvaṇa" and said, "you, a great King of a great kingdom should not deteriorate to the level of killing a woman. A woman who is in prison and at your disposal is as good as dead. But in my opinion, even if you cut her body into pieces she would not die and if she must die you will have to kill her husband." (M.B., Araṇya Parva, Chapter 289, Stanzas 28 to 30). From this statement the wonderful intelligence of Avindhya could be understood. It is seen in stanzas 6 and 7 of Chapter 291 of M.B., Vana Parva that it was Avindhya who had taken Sītā before Śrī Rāma when he had captured Laṅkā.

AVIRATHA. A hermit of the family of Kardama.

Genealogy. Brahmā-Kardama-Kapila-Gṛtsapati-Brāhmaṇa-Dhanvantari-Ketumān-Aviratha.

AVIVĀHITA. (Spinster). In the Mahābhārata a statement regarding spinsters and widows is seen.

"Place meat on the ground and many birds will come to it. So also men will gather round the woman who is having no husband." (M.B., Ādi Parva, Chapter 158, Stanza 12).

AVYAYA. A serpent of the Dhṛtarāṣṭra family. This serpent fell in the sacrificial fire meant for serpents, prepared by Janamejaya. (M.B., Ādi Parva, Chapter 57, Stanza 16).

AYAŚŚAṄKU. A great Asura. He was born as a Prince of the Kekaya kingdom. (M.B., Ādi Parva, Chapter 67, Verse 10).

AYAŚŚIRAS. A son of Kaśyapa by his wife, Danu. (M.B., Ādi Parva, Chapter 65, Verse 23). He was born a prince of Kekaya. (M.B., Ādi Parva, Chapter 67, Verse 10).

AYĀTAYĀMA (S). See Guruparamparā.

AYĀTI. Son of King Nahuṣa and brother of Yayāti. (M.B., Ādi Parva, Chapter 75, Verse 30).

AYĀVAHA (M). A place in ancient India. (M.B., Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 9, Verse 5).

AYOBĀHU (AYOBHUJA). A son of Dhṛtarāṣṭra. (M.B., Ādi Parva, Chapter 67, Verse 98). Bhīmasena killed him at Kurukṣetra. (M.B., Droṇa Parva, Chapter 157, Verse 19).

AYODHADHAUMYA (Āyodhadhaumya). Āpodadhaumya, Apodadhaumya, Dhaumya. A great Muni (sage). He had three disciples, Āruṇi, Upamanyu and Veda.

1) Disciple Āruṇi. He belonged to Pāñcāla, and once his guru deputed him to construct embankments in the field. But, his attempts to construct embankments did not succeed. Finally he lay himself in the field where the embankment was required, and then the flow of water stopped. The guru enquired about Āruṇi, who was thus lying in the field. Then only he knew the reason for Āruṇi's absence. The guru went to the field and called Āruṇi. Then the embankment burst open and Āruṇi came out, and because of that Āruṇi got the name Uddālaka. (M.B., Chapter 3, Verses 21-33).

2) Disciple Upamanyu. Once Dhaumya (the guru) asked his second disciple Upamanyu to tend the cows. He used to take care of the animals grazing in the woods during daytime and return home at dusk and prostrate before the guru. Looking at the plump and healthy body of Upamanyu the guru asked him how he was feeding himself. His reply was that he was begging alms and feeding himself with what he got thus. Then the guru asked him to hand over to him (guru) all alms got in future. After that he used to give everything he got by way of alms to the guru. And, he continued returning to the Gurukula at dusk and prostrating before the guru. Finding Upamanyu even then as plump and healthy as he was formerly, the guru said : My son Upamanyu, you hand over to me all the alms you get, and yet your body looks as trim as of old. How happens it so?" Upamanyu replied : "After giving the alms I get first to you, my guru, I do again beg for alms and feed myself". To this the guru reacted thus: My boy, what you do is not the proper thing. By the second course of alms-taking you stand in the way of other people getting their food. It is gross injustice to do so."

Upamanyu, from that day onwards strictly followed his guru's instruction, and continued returning at dusk to the guru and doing obeisance to him.

Even then finding Upamanyu to be quite plump and healthy the guru told him : "Well, now you hand over to me all the alms you get, and you do not take alms a second time the same day. Yet you are quite fit and fat. How is it so?"

To this Upamanyu's reply was that he was feeding himself on the milk of the cows he tended. The guru told him that this too was not just and proper on his part. The guru had not permitted him to drink milk thus.

Upamanyu agreed to obey his orders. And, as usual he continued tending the cows and returning at dusk. Even then he maintained the same plump and healthy physique. And the Guru told him as follows : "You do not eat the food you get at the first alms-taking, you do not go in for alms a second time the same day, nor do you drink milk. Yet, how is it that you maintain the same fat and healthy physique as in former days?"

Upamanyu's reply was that he was feeding now-a-days on the foam of milk bristling at the mouth of the calves when they had fed on their mother's milk. And, the guru said : "if that is so the calves will be, out of kindness and sympathy for you, releasing much foam of milk out of their mouths. That will affect them. So, do not repeat the process. Since the guru forbade him to have food in any manner as detailed above, Upamanyu, while tending the herd of cows in the forest, ate the bitter and poisonous leaves of a tree one day to satisfy his burning hunger. The leaf was bitter in taste and injurious in its properties. Therefore, this new way of satisfying hunger affected the health of the eyes of Upamanyu and he became blind. Moving about in this condition he fell into a neglected well in the woods.

When, even after the sun had set, Upamanyu did not, as usual, return, the guru enquired about him from other disciples. Naturally, they told the guru that Upamanyu was out in the forest with the cows. As the guru felt that Upamanyu was staying away late in the forest since he had been prevented from doing everything he (guru) went to the forest accompanied by other disciples and called out for Upamanyu, and Upamanyu responded from deep down the well. He also told the guru how he happened to fall into the well. After telling him that if only he would pray to the Aśvinīdevas they will cure his blindness the guru returned to the Āśrama with other disciples. Upamanyu, accordingly offered praises and prayed to the Aśvinīdevas, who were so pleased with him that they appeared before him and gave him a bread. Upamanyu refused to eat the bread without giving it to the guru. Then the Aśvinīdevas told him thus: "In the past when we gave your guru a bread like this he ate the same without giving it to his guru. You may just imitate him and eat the bread yourself". Even then Upamanyu did not eat the bread. The Aśvinīdevas were so much pleased at this that they blessed Upamanyu thus : "The teeth of your guru will turn into hard iron and yours into pure gold. Your blindness will be cured and all happiness and prosperity will be yours."

The blessings of the Aśvinīdevas took full effect, and Upamanyu hurried to his guru and prostrated at his feet. Dhaumya and the other disciples of his congratulated Upamanyu. (M.B., Ādi Parva, Chapter 3, Verses 34-77).

3) Disciple, Veda. Ayodhadhaumya one day said to Veda, his third disciple: "You stay with me for sometime serving me. That will bring you all prosperity in life." Veda agreed, and stayed for a long time in the Āśrama in the service of the guru. Without even the slightest murmur he put up with every discomfort and hardship, be it acute hunger and thirst or extreme cold or heat, and gladly performed all the work and duties the master imposed on him. The guru was absolutely pleased and his blessings resulted in all prosperity and omnipotence for the disciple. (M.B., Ādi Parva, Chapter 3, Verses 78-80).

AYODHYĀ. A city in North India which enjoyed great importance and reputation for many years as the capital of the Kings of the solar dynasty. (See Ikṣvāku dynasty). All the Kings of this dynasty ruled the country from this city as their capital. Vasiṣṭha, the great preceptor of the Ikṣvāku Rājas, came to Ayodhyā during the period of the reign of Kalmāṣapāda, who was the thirtyfifth ruler in succession to Ikṣvāku. A quarrel broke out between Kalmāṣapāda and Vasiṣṭha during a hunting expedition, and Vasiṣṭha cursed the King and as the result the latter became a Rākṣasa. After regaining his former form as King, he apologised to Vasiṣṭha and they became friends again. At the request of the King in the interests of his dynasty Vasiṣṭha came to Ayodhyā, and the people were greatly elated. A son was born to Vasiṣṭha by Kalmāṣapāda's wife and that son was Aśmaka. After that Vasiṣṭha used to go to Ayodhyā frequently and was installed as family preceptor of the Ikṣvākus. Till the time of Śrī Rāma the city of Ayodhyā maintained its pomp and glory, and after that gradually its decay and fall set in. Laudatory references to the city are found in most of the Purāṇas like the Mahābhārata, Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa etc. (See Kosala).

AYOMUKHĪ. A Rākṣasa woman. She met Śrī Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa on their way to Mataṁgāśrama in search of Sītā, and requested Lakṣmaṇa to marry her. Lakṣmaṇa, as in the case of Śūrpaṇakhā cut off her nose and breasts and drove her away. (Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa, Araṇya Kāṇḍa, Chapter 69).

AYUTANĀYĪ. A king of the Pūru Vaṁśa; he was the son of Mahārāja Bhauma. Suyajñā, Kāmā and Akrodha were the names respectively of his mother, wife and son. He came to be known as Ayutanāyi because of his having performed 10,000 Puruṣamedhas. (M.B., Ādi Parva, Chapter 95, Verses 19-20)

AYUTĀYU. A king who ruled his state for 1000 years. The Purāṇas like Bhāgavata, the Matsya and the Vāyu refer to him as the son of Śrutaśravas.

AYUTĀYUS. Father of King Ṛtuparṇa. (Bhāgavata, Navama Skandha). For genealogy see Ikṣvāku dynasty.

Ā. (आ) This word means Brahmā and also anādaravākya (a word showing disrespect). In the indeclinable form it means limit, anger and pain.

ĀBHĪRAS.

A few details: 1) A low-caste people. People living in the estuary of the rivers of Sindhū and Sarasvatī were generally called Ābhīras. In the Sabhā Parva of Mahābhārata we find Nakula defeating these people during his victory march after the great Mahābhārata battle.

2) Once Ābhīras went to Dharmaputra with many gifts. (Ślokas 11-13, Chapter 51, Sabhā Parva, M.B.).

3) Once it was prophesied by Mārkaṇḍeya Ṛṣi, that low-caste people like Ābhīras and Śakas would become rulers of states in different parts of Bhārata during Kaliyuga. (Ślokas 35-36, Chapter 188, Vana Parva, M.B.).

4) In the Garuḍavyūha (Battle array named after Garuḍa) which Droṇa created during the Kurukṣetra battle he included Ābhīras also. (Śloka 6, Chapter 20, Droṇa Parva, M.B.).

5) Because of the hatred of Śūdras and Ābhīras a sacred lake named Vināśana disappeared from the river, Sarasvatī. (Ślokas 1 and 2, Chapter 37, Śalya Parva, M.B.).

6) Ābhīras were Kṣatriyas formerly. Afraid of Paraśurāma they fled and lived in mountain-caves not continuing their hereditary work and thus became Śūdras. (Śloka 16, Chapter 29, Aśvamedhika Parva, M.B.).

7) When Dvārakā was destroyed by floods and all the Yādavas were killed Arjuna went north taking along with him the wives of Śrī Kṛṣṇa. At that time Ābhīras were among those who attacked and carried away the women. (Ślokas 47-63, Chapter 7, Mausalya Parva, M.B.).

ĀCAMANA. First drink water three times accompanied by incantations and then with water wipe your face twice and your eyes, ears, nose, shoulders, breast and head once. This act is called Ācamana.

"Trirācamedapaḥ pūrvaṁ
Dviḥ pramṛjyāttato mukhaṁ
Khāni caiva spṛśedadbhir
Ātmānaṁ śira eva ca"

(Manusmṛti, Śloka 60, Chapter 2).

Devī Bhāgavata in its eleventh Skandha says about Ācamana like this: "Drinking water by your right hand is called ācamana. Curve your palm into the shape of a spoon, hold water in it and drink. There must be enough water in the palm to cover a green-gram seed, not less nor more. If it falls short or exceeds the measure it is considered to be like drinking alcohol. While shaping your palm neither your little finger nor your thumb should touch the other fingers. At the time of ācamana you should support your right hand by your left hand. Otherwise the water will turn impure."

ĀCĀRAMARYĀDAS. See under Pūjāvidhi.

ĀḌAMBARA. One of the five Pārṣadas whom Brahmā gave to Skandadeva. Brahmā gave Kunda, Kusuma, Kumuda, Damba and Āḍambara.

ĀḌI. A mighty son of the demon, Andhakāsura. He did penance to please Brahmā and obtained from him a boon to seek vengeance on Śiva who had murdered his father. The boon was that Āḍi would die only when he left his present form and took another form. After obtaining the boon Āḍi went to Kailāsa and outwitting the sentries entered the abode of Śiva in the shape of a serpent. After that he disguised himself as Pārvatī and went near Śiva. But Śiva knew the trick and killed him. (Sṛṣṭi Khaṇḍa of Padma Purāṇa).

ĀḌĪBAKA. A combat without serving any useful purpose and conducted out of sheer spite between two people to the surprise of others. The fight between Vasiṣṭha and Viśvāmitra was of this kind. (Skandha 6 of Devī Bhāgavata).

ĀDIGADĀDHARA. It was with the bones of an asura (demon) named Gada that Mahāviṣṇu made the first gadā (mace). By that mace Viṣṇu killed Heti and other asuras of that lot and got the name Ādigadādhara (He who first handled the mace). (See under Gadā).

ĀDIKŪRMA. The mountain of Mandara which was used as a churn-stick to churn the great milky ocean, Kṣīrābdhi went down the ocean. Then Mahāviṣṇu took the shape of a tortoise to lift it up and this first tortoise was called Ādikūrma. (Śloka 12, Chapter 18, Ādi Parva, M.B.).

ĀDIPARVA. One of the parvans of the epic Mahābhārata. It is the first parva. (See under Bhārata).

ĀDIPARVATA. The place of abode of Śiva in the Himālayas. (Śloka 22, Chapter 327, Śānti Parva, M.B.).

ĀDIRĀJA. The son of Kuru who was a king of the Pūru dynasty. (See under Pūru).

ĀDIŚIŚIRA. One of the disciples of Śākalya. Vyāsa made the Vedas and taught his son Śākalya a portion of it. Śākalya divided his portion into five different and equal divisions and taught each of his five disciples, Vātsyāyana, Maudgalya, Śāli, Ādiśiśira and Gokhali a division. (Skandha 12, Bhāgavata).

ĀDIṢṬI. The disciple who was ordained by his preceptor to observe celibacy for a stipulated number of years.

ĀDITYA. The twelve sons born to the sage Kaśyapa of his wife Aditi are known as the twelve Ādityas. They are the following : Dhātā, Mitra, Aryamā, Rudra, Varuṇa, Sūrya, Bhaga, Vivasvān, Pūṣā, Savitā, Tvaṣṭā and Viṣṇu. Besides these Aditi had twentyone children including Indra. All of them are called Ādityas meaning children of Aditi. From the thirtythree sons of Aditi were born the thirtythree crores of devatās. Of these the eldest is Indra and the youngest, Vāmana. (Śloka 36, Chapter 66, Ādi Parva, M.B.). (There is corroboration for this in Śloka 14, Sarga 14, Araṇya Kāṇḍa, Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa).

Sirdar K.M. Panikar in his preface to the book "Ṛgvedasaṁhitā" writes thus about Ādityas : "Generally we think of Sūrya (the Sun) when we hear the word Āditya. But there are many different Ādityas in Ṛgveda, chief of them is Varuṇa. Though Savitā, Pūṣā and Mitra are all synonyms of Sūrya in Ṛgveda they are all separate devas. There is no end to the varieties of Ādityas and their prominence in the Vedas. Summarising we can say thus. The familiar devas like Indra, Agni, Varuṇa and Sūrya are not found in the same form or power as we are taught to believe. Those whom we have lowered down to the posts of the eight sentries of the universe are very prominent devatās in the Vedas. Many Ādityas have merged in Sūrya and winds in the god of Vāyu. Rudra has merged in Śiva. Who will believe that the all-powerful Deva of the Ṛgveda and the vainglorious Indra who lives in fear of men doing penance are one and the same person?"

ĀDITYAHṚDAYA. A mantra (incantation) of great power to destroy all enemies. During the combat with Rāvaṇa at one time Rāma fell exhausted in the battlefield. Seeing this the sage Agastya rushed to him and taught him this mantra. (Sarga 107, Yuddha Kāṇḍa, Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa).

ĀDITYAKETU. One of the sons of Dhṛtarāṣṭra. Bhīma sena killed him in the great battle of Kurukṣetra. (Śloka 102, Chapter 67, Ādi Parva and Śloka 28, Chapter 88, Bhīṣma Parva, M.B.).

ĀDITYASENA. A very brave King. Stories about this King are found in Kathāsaritsāgara. (Taraṅga 4, Kathāpīṭhalambaka).

ĀDITYATĪRTHA. An ancient holy place on the banks of the river, Sarasvatī. (Śloka 17, Chapter 99, Śalya Parva, M.B.).

ĀDITYAVARṆA. A king who always ordered without thinking and repented later. The book Kathāsaritsāgara tells the story of this King in the fifth taraṅga of its part, Kathāpīṭhalambaka.

ĀDYAKAṬHA. A sage of old. He attended the sacrifice conducted by the King Uparicara. (Śloka 9, Chapter 336, Śānti Parva, M.B.).

ĀGNEYAPURĀṆA. See under Agnipurāṇa,

ĀGNEYĀSTRA. A powerful weapon or missile. One night Arjuna fought against a gandharva, Aṅgāraparṇa, on the banks of the river Ganges. Arjuna then described to him how he came into possession of this missile. This powerful missile was given first to Bhāradvāja by Bṛhaspati and Bharadvāja gave it to Agniveśya who in turn gave it to Droṇa and the latter gave it to Arjuna, his most favourite disciple. (Ślokas 29-30, Chapter 170, Ādi Parva, M.B.).

ĀGNEYĪ. Wife of Kuru, son of Manu. Śambhu wife of Dhruva gave birth to two sons, Śiṣṭi and Bhavya. Succhāyā wife of Śiṣṭī gave birth to five sinless sons Ripu, Ripuṁjaya, Vipra, Vṛkala and Vṛkatejas. Cākṣuṣa was born of Bṛhatī, wife of Ripu. Manu was born to Cākṣuṣa of his wife Puṣkariṇī, daughter of the great Vīraṇaprajāpati. Puṣkariṇī hailed from the dynasty of Marutta. To Manu were born of Naḍvalā ten sons, Kuru, Puru, Śatadyumna, Tapasvī, Satyavān, Śuci, Agniṣṭoma, Atirātra, Sudyumna, and Abhimanyu. Of these, Kuru got of his wife Āgneyī six sons: Aṅga, Sumanas, Khyāti, Kratu, Aṅgiras and Śibi. Vena was born to Aṅga of his wife Sunīthā. (Chapter 13, Aṁśam 1, Viṣṇu Purāṇa).

ĀGNĪDHRA. See Agnidadhra.

ĀGNIVEŚYA (AGNIVEŚA). An ancient sage who received an armour and the sacred mantras associated with it from Bṛhaspati. He was the Ācārya of Dhanurveda and the revered preceptor of Droṇa. (Ślokas 67 and 68, Chapter 94, Droṇa Parva, M.B.).

ĀGRĀYAṆA. The fourth son of the Agni, Bhānu. (Śloka 13, Chapter 221, Vana Parva, M.B.).

ĀGREYA. A country conquered by Karṇa. (Ślokas 19-21, Chapter 254, Vana Parva, M.B.).

ĀHAVANĪYA. An agni. (M.B., Ādi Parva, Chapter 74, Verse 67).

ĀHUKA. A king of Yadu Vaṁśa. He was the father of Ugraśena, the father of Kaṁsa. (Some Purāṇas say that Āhuka and Ugrasena were the names of the same person). For genealogy, see "YADU VAṀŚA". In M.B., Sabhā Parva, Chapter 14, Verse 33, we find that Akrūra had married Sutanū, the daughter of Āhuka. Āhuka had a hundred sons. (M.B., Sabhā Parva, Chapter 14, Verse 56). There were constant quarrels between Āhuka and Akrūra. (M.B., Śānti Parva, Chapter 81, Verses 8-11).

ĀHUTI. A Kṣatriya King. Śrī Kṛṣṇa defeated this King in the city called Jārūthī. (M.B., Vana Parva, Chapter 12, Verse 30).

ĀJAGARA. An ascetic. Śānti Parva of Mahābhārata in its 179th Chapter states that Prahlāda conversed with this sage.

ĀJAGARA PARVA. A sub-division of the Vana Parva of Mahābhārata. (See under M.B.).

ĀJAGARAVRATA. The vrata practised by the sage, Ajagara. (A vrata is a predetermined course of action which is followed with continued persistence). In his own words it is the following : "If I get a grand feast I will accept it but I will go without food for days together if I do not get any food at all. People used to feed me well sometimes, sometimes a little and sometimes not at all. I will eat vegetables and cakes sometimes. I will eat meat and any kind of food. I will lie on soft bed or on bare earth sometimes and in big houses if I get the chance. I will wear costly clothes if I get them or I will wear dried leaves and animal skins. If I get food from yāgaśālās I will never refuse it, but I will never go seeking for it." (Ślokas 19-25, Chapter 179, Śānti Parva, M.B.).

ĀJAGAVA. The bow of Māndhātā and Pṛthu and the Gāṇḍīva of Arjuna bear the name Ājagava. (Ślokas 33 and 34, Chapter 126, Vana Parva; Śloka 94, Chapter 145, Droṇa Parva, M.B. and Chapter 13, Aṁśam 1 of Viṣṇu Purāṇa).

ĀJAMĪḌHA. A king born of the family of Ajamīḍha.

ĀJĀNEYA. A species of good horses. (Śloka 10, Chapter 270, Vana Parva, M.B.).

ĀJYAPA(S). A community of Pitṛs belonging to the dynasty of Pulaha. They are called so because they drink during yāgas the ghee made out of goats milk (Ājyam) (Matsya Purāṇa). They live in the land of Kardama Prajāpati. Their daughter Virajā is the wife of Nahuṣa. (Sṛṣṭi Khaṇḍa, Padma Purāṇa).

ĀKARṢA. People living in the land named Ākarṣa are called Ākarṣas. (Śloka 11, Chapter 34, Sabhā Parva, M.B.).

ĀKĀŚAJANANĪ. Holes made on the walls of a Fort. Bullets are sent out from the fort through these holes.

ĀKATHA. Son of Maṅkaṇa. He was a great devotee of Śiva and once when his house was burnt completely the idol of Śiva inside his house was partially destroyed. Worried much over this loss Ākatha was about to give a portion of his body also to the flames when Śiva appeared before him and blessed him. (Pātāla Khaṇḍa, Padma Purāṇa).

ĀKROŚA. A king of ancient Bhārata. He was king over the land of Mahottha. Nakula conquered him during his victory march. (Ślokas 5 and 6, Chapter 32, Sabhā Parva, M.B.).

ĀKṚTI. A king of ancient Bhārata. This king ruled over the land of Saurāṣṭra. (Śloka 61, Chapter 31, Sabhā Parva, M.B.).

ĀKṚTIPUTRA. Ruciparvā, son of Ākṛti. He fought on the side of the Pāṇḍavas and was killed by Bhagadatta. (Ślokas 40 to 47, Chapter 27, Droṇa Parva, M.B.).

ĀKŪTI. Wife of Ruciprajāpati. Brahmā's son Svāyambhuva Manu got of his wife Śatarūpā two sons Priyavrata and Uttānapāda and two daughters Prasūti and Ākūti. Prasūti was married to Dakṣaprajāpati and Ākūti to Ruciprajāpati. Ākūti delivered twins named Yajña, a son, and Dakṣiṇā, a daughter. (Chapter 7, Vaṁśam 1, Viṣṇu Purāṇa).

ĀLAJĀLA. See under "YAMAJIHVA".

ĀLAMBA. An ancient sage. He flourished in Yudhiṣṭhira's court. (M.B., Sabhā Parva, Chapter 5, Verse 5).

ĀLAMBĀYANA. A comrade of Indra. (M.B., Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 13, Verse 15).

ĀLVĀR. See the word NAMMALVĀR.

ĀMA. See under AVATĀRA.

ĀMARATHA. A place in ancient Bhārata. (Śloka 54, Chapter 9, Bhīṣma Parva, M.B.).

ĀNA I. (A Malayalam word meaning elephant). Bhāgavata relates the story of how Indradyumna became an elephant by the curse of Agastya. (See under Indradyumna).

ĀNA II. (Elephant). Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa narrates the origin of elephants thus: "Kaśyapa was born to Marīci, son of Brahmā. Kaśyapa married the daughters, Aditi, Diti, Danu, Kālikā, Tāmrā, Krodhavaśā, Manu and Analā, of Dakṣaprajāpati. Of these Krodhavaśā gave birth to ten girls, Mṛgī, Mṛgamadā, Harī, Bhadramatā, Mātaṅgī, Śārdūlī, Śvetā, Surabhi, Surasā, and Kadrū. Elephants were born as the sons of Mātaṅgī. (Sarga 14, Araṇya Kāṇḍa, Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa.).

There is a story in the Mahābhārata to explain why the tongue of the elephant is curved inside. "Bhṛgu Maharṣi cursed Agni and greatly dejected over this he disappeared from public and hid somewhere. The Devas started searching for him and it was an elephant that showed the devas the hiding place of Agni. Agni then cursed the elephants and said that thereafter all the elephants would have their tongues curved inside. (Śloka 36, Chapter 85, Anuśāsana Parva, M.B.).

The signs of good elephants and the treatment to be accorded to sick ones are detailed in Agni Purāṇa. "Elephants with long trunks and heavy breathing belong to the top class and they will possess great endurance power. Those who have nails eighteen or twenty in number and who became turbulent during winter belong to a superior class. Those ones whose right tusks are a bit raised, whose cry is stentorian as that of thunder whose ears are very big and whose skins are spotted are the best of the species. Other varieties especially the dwarfish type and she-elephants in the early stage of pregnancy are not good and not fit to be tamed. Elephants who have Varṇa, Sattva, Bala, Rūpa, Kānti, Śarīraguṇa and Vega will conquer enemies in a battle; there is no doubt about it. Elephants are an ornament for any battle-array. The victory earned by a King with his elephants is more respected.

For all diseases of an elephant Anuvāsana or Snehavasti is recommended. A bath after anointing it with oil or ghee is good. For skin diseases the ghee may be combined with Mañjal (Turmeric), Maramañjal or gomūtra (cow urine). If it suffers from enlargement of the belly, giving it a bath with sesame oil is good. It can be given Pañcalavaṇas and Vāruṇīmadya to drink. If there is fainting it must be given rice mixed with Vlalari, Triphala, Cukku, Mulaku and Tippali and water mixed with honey to drink. If there is headache anointing the head with sesame oil and inhalation of the same is good.

For diseases of the foot, treatment with Snehapuṭas is prescribed. To get motion of the bowels Kalkaṇṭa Kaṣāya (infusion of sugar candy) is good. To those who have shivers should be given the flesh of peacock, Tittiri bird and Lāva bird mixed with Tippali and pepper. For dysentery the tender fruit of Kūvala, skin of Pāccotti, flower of Tātiri should be dried and powdered and be given mixed with sugar along with rice. For Karagraha (pain inside the trunk) Nasyam of ghee with Intappū mixed in it should be done. It must be given "Muttaṅga Kañci with tippali, Cukku and Jīraka in it. For Utkarṇaka (pain in the ear) flesh of pigs should be given. For Galagraha (pain in the neck) a liniment made of Daśamūla, Mutirappuli and Kākkappancci in oil should be rubbed at the site of pain and the elephant kept under chains. If there is difficulty in passing urine light liquor containing powdered Aṣṭalavaṇas should be given. For all skin diseases use Vep oil as an ointment and give the infusion of Āṭaloṭaka to drink. For worms (inside the stomach) give cow's urine with powdered Vlālari in it. If the elephant is getting reduced and weak it should be given milk or meat soup with Cukku, Tippali and grapes well mixed in it. If there is lack of appetite it is to be given Mulgaudana (rice boiled along with Cerupayar) to which is added Cukku, Mulaku and Tippali. If it is Gulma it should be given sesame oil boiled with the following: Trikotpakkonna, Cukku, Mulaku Tippali, Kotuvelikkilaṅgu, Nāgadantiveru, Erikkinveru, Nātkkotpakkonna, Milk and Attittippali. Navara rice with sort of cerupayar can also be given. For swellings on the face, a paste made of tender Kūvala fruits can be rubbed at the site of the swelling. For all sorts of pains in the stomach rice well mixed with the powder made by grinding together Vlālari, Kuṭakappālayari, Asafoetida, Carala, Mañjal, Maramañjal may be given.

The best food for elephants is the rice of Navara, Vrīhi and cennellu. Yava and wheat are next to the above. Any other food is inferior to these. Yava and sugarcane will give strength to elephants. Dry yava rice is not good. Milk and meat cooked with carminative ingredients are good for elephants who have gone lean.

If the elephants receive great injuries in a battle the meat of birds like crow, fowl, cuckoo and Hari mixed with honey is good. Fumigation by the burning of chilli, fish, Vlālari, caustic soda, Puttal, Pīram and maramañjal mixed together is effective. Dropping honey medicated with tippali tandula, sesame oil, and fruit honey in the eyes is not only good for the eyes but is also inducive of digestion. Make an ointment with the faces of the birds cātaka and Pārāvata mixed with the burnt skin of Nātpāmara dissolved in light spirit. If this ointment is applied, the elephant would defeat all enemies in a battle. Powder Nīlotpala, Muttaṅga and Takara and make an ointment using rice gruel. Applying this ointment in the eye is excellent.

If the nails grow they should be cut at least once a month. Once in a month an oil bath is good for the elephants. Elephant sheds should be spread with cowdung discs and dust. Doing Seka with ghee during autumn and summer is advisable. (Chapter 287, Agni Purāṇa).

1. Vlālari—The grain of Vlal—Viḍaṅga (Babreng)
2. Triphalā—A combination of the three fruits :
   a) āmalakī (Emblic Myrobalam) b) Vibhītakī (Beleric Myrobalam) and c) Harītakī (Myrobalam)
3. Cukku—Suṇṭhī (dry ginger)
4. Mulaku—Raktamarīca (chilli)
5. Tippali—Pippalī (long pepper)
6. Kūvala—Vilva (Bengal Kins)
7. Pāccotti—Lodhra (symplocos Racemosa)
8. Tātiri--Dhātakī (Grislea Tomentosa)
9. Nasyam—A method of introducing medicine through the nose
10. Intappū—Śallakī Puṣpa (Flower of Boswellia Thurifera)
11. Muttaṅga—Mustā (Cyperus Rotendus) Kañcī means rice boiled with water and Muttaṅga Kañcī means rice and muttaṅga boiled together.
12. Jīraka—Jīraka (cumin seeds)
13. Daśamūla—A combination of ten herbs.
14. Mutirappuh
15. Kākkappanacci—Kākatindu
16. Aṣṭalavaṇas—Eight salts like common salt, rock salt, magnesium sulphate etc.
17. Āṭaloṭaka—Āṭarūṣa (Vasaka)
18. Cerupayar—Mudga (green-grain)
19. Gulma
20. Trikotpakkonna—Trivṛt (Turbithroot)
21. Koṭuvelikkilaṅgu—Citraka (Plumbago rose)
22. Nāgadantiveru—Root of Nāgadantī (Glancous leaved Physicnut)
23. Erikkin Veru—Root of Arkka (Gigantic swallow wort)
24. Nātkkotpakkonna—Kṛṣṇa Trivṛt
25. Attittippalī—Hasti-pippalī
26. Navara—Ṣaṣṭikā—A kind of rice.
27. Carala—Saralā (long leaved pine)
28. Mañjal—Haridrā (Turmeric)
29. Maramañjal—Dārvī
30. Vrīhi—Cinaḥ (A kind of paddy)

ĀNAKA. A person of the Yādava dynasty. (See under YĀDAVAVAṀŚA).

ĀNAKADUNDUBHI. An epithet of Vasudeva, father of Śrī Kṛṣṇa.

ĀNANDA. A forest on the top of the mountain Mahāmeru. It was inhabited by celestial damsels, devas, gandharvas and Maharṣis. (Chapter 93, Bhūmi Khaṇḍa, Padma Purāṇa).

ĀNANDA (CĀKṢUṢA). Son of Maharṣi Anamitra. It was he who was born as Cākṣuṣa, the sixth Manu. There is a story behind his birth. One day, while his mother was keeping him in her lap and caressing him the baby laughed and questioned "Oh mother why are you caressing me, but look at those two cats. They consider me as their food". After some time one of the cats took the child away and put it in the cradle of the child of King Vikrānta. Vikrānta took the child as his for granted and reared him. At the time of Upanayana the King asked the boy to prostrate before his mother at which the boy exclaimed "Oh King, I am not your son. Your son is at some other place. By births and rebirths all of us have many mothers and so it is better to be above rebirths". After having said so much Ānanda went to the forest and started doing penance. Brahmā appeared before him and blessing him said that he would become the sixth Manu and lead the world to righteousness. By the blessing of Brahmā Ānanda was reborn as Cākṣuṣamanu. (See under Cākṣuṣa). (Mārkaṇḍeya Purāṇa).

ĀNANDAVARDHANA. A great critic of Sanskrit literature. He lived in the 9th century A.D. He expounded his theory of Dhvanivāda by 120 Kārikās. His own commentary of the Kārikās is the book called Dhvanyāloka. There are four parts for Dhvanyāloka and each part is called an Udyota.

There is a belief among a few that the Kārikās were written by another scholar, Sahṛdaya, and that Ānandavardhana had written only a commentary on it. He was a member of the royal council of Avantivarmā who ruled Kashmīr during the period 854-884 A.D. It is believed that he wrote Dhvanyāloka in 850 A.D. Many commentaries have been written of Dhvanyāloka of which the one written by Abhinavagupta is considered to be the best.

ĀNARTTA. Grandson of Vaivasvatamanu. He was a king, son of Śaryāti.

1. Genealogy. Descending in order from Viṣṇu-Brahmā-Marīci-Kaśyapa-Vivasvān - Vaivasvatamanu - Śaryāti - Ānartta.

Sixteen sons were born to Vaivasvatamanu: Manu, Yama, Yamī, Aśvinīkumāra, Revanta, Sudyumna, Ikṣvāku, Nṛga, Śaryāti, Diṣṭa, Dhṛṣṭa, Karūṣa, Nariṣyanta, Nābhāga, Pṛṣadhra and Kavi. Of these Śaryāti got two children, Sukanyā and Anartta. Sukanyā became the wife of Cyavana.

2) Other details. It was this king who built the fortresses at the town of Kuśasthalī (Dvārakā). Varuṇa submerged in the ocean all the fortresses built by him and the place for some time remained as a forest-land. (Daśama Skandha, Bhāgavata Kilippāttu). It was after that that Śrī Kṛṣṇa made that land beautiful and called it Dvārakā. The country ruled over by Ānartta was called Ānarttam. During his regime there lived in his land a very great scholar named Vedaratha. (Umeśānavrata, Śiva Purāṇa) See under Vedaratha.

ĀNARTTA (M). A place in ancient Bhārata. Arjuna conquered this place. (Śloka 4, Chapter 26, Sabhā Parva, M.B.).

ĀNDHRA. The present Āndhra Pradeśa. It was famous even from purāṇic times and it was annexed by Sahadeva by defeating its ruler in a game of dice.

ĀṄGARIṢṬHA. A king of ancient Bhārata. (Ślokas 13 and 14, Chapter 123, Śānti Parva, M.B.).

ĀṄGIRASAKALPA. A saṁhitā division of Atharvaveda. The five saṁhitā divisions of Atharvaveda written by Muñjikeśa are the best. They are: The Nakṣatra Kalpa dealing with the pūjā rites of the stars; The veda Kalpa dealing with the rites associated with Brahmā, the Ṛtvik; The Saṁhitā Kalpa, dealing with the use and practice of Mantras; The Āṅgirasa Kalpa dealing with sorcery; and the Śānti Kalpa dealing with matters relating to the welfare and control of animals like horses and elephants. (Chapter 6, Aṁśam 3 of Viṣṇu Purāṇa).

ĀṄGIRASĪ. A very chaste wife of a Brahmin. By the curse of Śakti, son of Vasiṣṭha Kalmāṣapāda, a king of the Ikṣvāku dynasty became a demon. That demon killed and devoured the husband of Āṅgirasī. Enraged at this the Brahmin lady cursed Kalmāṣapāda saying that if he touched his wife thereafter he would die. That was why Vasiṣṭha had to beget a son for Kalmāṣapāda of his wife. (Ślokas 16-22, Chapter 181, Ādi Parva, M.B.).

ĀṄGHRIKA. One of the sons of Viśvāmitra who were Brahmavādins. (Śloka 54, Chapter 4, Anuśāsana Parva, M.B.).

ĀÑJALI. A sage who was a classmate of Śaunaka. (Skandha 12, Bhāgavata).

ĀÑJANA KULA. A division of elephants (in the army). (Ślokas 17 and 18, Chapter 112, Droṇa Parva, M.B.).

ĀNUŚĀSANIKA PARVA. One of the Parvans of the Mahābhārata. (See under Mahābhārata').

ĀPA. One of the Aṣṭavasus. The Aṣṭavasus are Āpa, Dhruva, Soma, Dharma, Anila, Agni, Pratyūṣa and Prabhāsa. The sons of Āpa are Vaitaṇḍa, Śrama, Śānta and Śvani. (See under Aṣṭavasus). (Chapter 15, Aṁśam 1, Viṣṇu Purāṇa).

ĀPAGĀ. A sacred river. It is said that if one gives food to one brahmin on the banks of this river it will be equivalent to giving food to a crore of brahmins elsewhere. (Śloka 68, Chapter 83, Vana Parva, M.B.).

31. Cennellu—Śāli (Red rice)
32. Yava—yava (Barley)
33. Puttal
34. Piram
35. Taṇḍula—same as Vlāl
36. Nātpamara—Four trees : Vaṭa, Vaṭa, Aśvattha and Udumbara.
37. Nīlotpala—Nīlapadma (Blue water-lilly)
38. Takara—Tagara
39. Seka—A drip-bath with medicated oil.

ĀPASTAMBA. An ancient sage. He once consoled King Dyumatsena. (Śloka 18, Chapter 298, Vana Parva, M.B.).

1) How he got his name. Once a brahmin did not get a suitable man toofficiate as priest for a śrāddha ceremony. He then prayed to his ancestors, Viśvedevas and Mahāviṣṇu for help and then Āpastamba appeared before him. The brahmin gave him food to his heart's content and asked him how he felt. To the surprise of the brahmin Āpastamba replied, he wanted some more and thus made the Śrāddha ineffective. The brahmin got angry and cursed him by sprinkling on his face water taken in his palm. But before the water-particles reached his face Āpastamba ordered the water-drops to remain still. Water stopped stiff and still midway by the power of the sage. Because water (Āpa) became stiff (Stamba) the ṛṣi was named Āpastamba. (Brahma Purāṇa).

2) How Āpastamba tīrtha came into existence. Once he met Agastya Muni and asked him who was superior among the gods Brahmā, Viṣṇu and Śiva. Agastya declared that Śiva stood supreme of the lot and gave him advice as to how to please Śiva. Following his instructions Āpastamba did penance on the banks of the river Gautamī and Śiva appeared before him, blessed him, and made that place a holy one. Śiva declared that those who, bathed at that place would obtain 'Divyajñāna' (Divine knowledge enabling one to know the past, present and future). From then onwards that place was known as Āpastamba tīrtha.

3) Other details. Āpastamba had a very chaste and humble wife named Akṣasūtrā. Their son was Gārki. 'Gṛhyasūtrasaṁgraha' containing a prayer and two mantras is a contribution to the holy science by Āpastamba. Many Hindus follow it even now. He had stated that the decrease in the number of great sages was because of the fact that people were not practising the control of the senses as before.

ĀPADDHARMA PARVA. A sub-divisional Parva of the Mahābhārata. (See under Mahābhārata).

ĀPAVAN I. Another name of sage Vasiṣṭha. (Śloka 5, Chapter 99, Ādi Parva, M.B.).

ĀPAVAN II. An ancient sage. Kārttavīryārjuna once burnt the āśrama of this ṛṣi and he cursed Agni and Kārttavīryārjuna. (Ślokas 42 and 43, Chapter 49, Śānti Parva, M.B.).

ĀPODADHAUMYA. (See Ayodadhaumya).

ĀPTA. A well-known serpent of the Kaśyapa dynasty. (Śloka 8, Chapter 35, Ādi Parva, M.B.).

ĀPŪRAṆA. A well-known serpent of the Kaśyapa dynasty. (Śloka 6, Chapter 35, Ādi Parva).

ĀR. The significance of the number six among the ancients, is given below. (In Malayālam Ār means six).

1) Six factors which reduce the span of life. Eating dry meat, Drinking curd at night, Sleeping at dawn, Drinking impure water, Exposure to sun's heat in the morning. Inhaling fumes from dead body.

2) Six divine qualities. Omniscience, Omnipresence, Omnipotence, Sarvakāraṇatva (being the cause of everything); Sarvanityatva (immortality) and Sarveśvaratva (having domination over everything).

3) Six noblest qualities. Truth, Wisdom, Mercy, Justice, fortitude in grief, control of anger.

4) Six Ṛṣi Dharmas (Duties of Sages). Brahmacarya, Absolute truth, Japa, Jñāna (wisdom), Niyama, Sense of Justice.

5) Six qualities of noble wives. A minister in business, a servant-maid in action, the goddess Lakṣmī in appearance, the Earth in patience, a mother in love and a prostitute in bed.

6) Six qualities of a bad wife. Habit of dispute, stealing of money, showing favour to strangers, scandal-mongering, taking food earlier than the husband, spending most of the time in other houses.

7) Six Vedāṅgas. Śikṣā, Kalpa, Vyākaraṇa, Nirukta, Jyotiṣa, Chandas.

ĀRĀLIKA. A mahout who could control elephants that had gone mad temporarily. (Śloka 9, Chapter 2, Virāṭa Parva, M.B.).

ĀRAṆEYAPARVA. A sub-divisional Parva of the Mahābhārata. (See under Mahābhārata).

ĀRCOKA. A mountain in front of the forest Saindhava inhabited by Manīṣipuruṣās. (Śloka 16, Chapter 125, Vana Parva, M.B.).

ĀRJAVA. Son of Subala and brother of Śakuni. He was killed by Irāvān son of Arjuna. (Bhīṣma Parva, M.B.).

ĀROCAKA(M). A country of ancient Bhārata. The people of this place are called Ārocakas. (Śloka 7, Chapter 51, Bhīṣma Parva, M.B.).

ĀRṢA(M). A form of marriage. Brāhma is the form of marriage in which the bride is given to a man of good ancestry and fine character. Marriage by giving the bride after receiving a pair of cows from the bridegroom is called Ārṣa. Prājāpatya is the form of marriage in which the bride is given to the man who asks for her. When the bride is given with dowry, the marriage is known as Āsuram. Marriage with the mutual love and consent is Gāndharva. Capturing the bride after a fight and marrying her by force is Rākṣasa. Marriage after deceiving the bride is called Paiśāca. These are the seven types of marriage. According to the author of the Smṛti another form of marriage known as DAIVA is also mentioned. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 154).

ĀRṢṬIṢEṆA. A Maharṣi. In the Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 159 there is a reference to the Pāṇḍavas visiting this sage during their life in the forest. Ārṣṭiṣeṇa's āśrama was midway between Badaryāśrama and Kubera's capital.

Power of Tapas. In Kṛtayuga this sage did rigorous tapas in Pṛthūdakatīrtha. Owing to the rigour of the tapas he obtained all the chief vedas. He gave three boons to that sacred tīrtha :—

1. Those who bathe in this tīrtha will get the benefit of Aśvamedha yāga.
2. There will be no fear of snakes in this tīrtha.
3. A slight effort made here, will be rewarded with greater results.

After giving these three boons to the river Sarasvatī which is Pṛthūdakatīrtha the sage attained Brahminhood and entered Devaloka. (M.B., Śalya Parva, Chapter 40, Verses 3-9).

ĀRTTĀYANI. Śalya, son of Ṛtāyana. He was noted for his great honesty and love of truth. (Śloka 56, Chapter 32, Śalya Parva, M.B.).

ĀRTIMĀN. A mantra which eliminates all kinds of fear. (M.B., Ādi Parva, Chapter 50, Verses 23-26).

ĀRUṆI I. A disciple of the sage Āyodhadhaumya. (For details see under Āyodhadhaumya).

ĀRUṆI II. A cobra born in the family of the serpent, Dhṛtarāṣṭra. This cobra fell dead at the Sarpasatra of Janamejaya. (Śloka 19, Chapter 57, Ādi Parva, M.B.).

ĀRUṆI III. A son born to Kaśyapa of his wife Vinatā. (Śloka 40, Chapter 65, Ādi Parva, M.B.).

ĀRUṆI IV. A soldier of the Kaurava army. He fought against Arjuna along with Śakuni. (Śloka 122, Chapter 156, Droṇa Parva, M.B.).

ĀRUṆI V. One of the one hundred and eight Upaniṣads.

ĀRUṢĪ. A daughter of Manu. Cyavana Maharṣi married her. They got a son named Aurva. The child was taken from the thigh of Āruṣī. Rcīka was the son of this Aurva. Rcīka was the father of Jamadagni, father of Paraśurāma. Even from childhood Aurva was a bold, bright and good boy. (Ślokas 47 and 48, Chapter 66, Ādi Parva, M.B.).

ĀRYAS. The Ṛgveda gives us most of the information regarding the Āryas who came to the north of India during the times of the Vedas through the passes on that north-western side of Bhārata. Sirdar K.M. Panikar writing in his preface to the 'Ṛgvedasaṁhitā' by Poet Vallathol summarises the information available in the Ṛgveda about Āryan culture and says: "When the Āryans first entered India they were rich in cattle. They used to breed goats, dogs, donkeys, and horses. The elephant was unknown to them. In the Vedas the vehicle of Ind a is a horse and not an elephant. When hailing Indra they shout 'come, come on your horse-back'. The Veda does not say anything about how Indra got the elephant, Airāvata, as his vehicle. Sing to the glory of Indra against whom in his chariot driven by two horses no enemy would dare to face.

The Ṛgveda gives great importance to agriculture. Areas under cultivation were called Urvara and 'Kṣetra'. Fields were ploughed by attaching six, eight and even twelve bullocks to the plough. Water was taken from hṛadas and Kulyakas (ponds and tanks) for the purpose of irrigation. Agriculture was a very familiar art to them. They used to cultivate all sorts of grains and grams including yava. They conducted trade by the exchange of goods generally. There is a reference in one place of the use of a coin 'Niṣka'

The Āryas were clever in the art of leather work, woodwork and metallurgy. They were well versed in medicine also. In a sūkta of the ninth maṇḍala it is stated that the father of a ṛṣi was a medical practitioner. There are references to many industries also. Weaving was a very important industry at that time. Cotton cloth and woollen blankets were made by them on a large scale. Iron was used by them with great skill. The manufacture of armours and the descriptions about them in Ṛgveda are ample evidence of the proficiency of the Āryas in ironmongery and blacksmithy. Sea voyage was not familiar to them. References to traders cruising in boats in the Sindhu river do not give much importance to the cruising. In food rice and ghee were important. Meat was also relished. Ṛṣis wore animal skins but others wore dhotis and shawls.

During the Ṛgvedic times their social structure was divided into four stages: Grāma was a colony of families and was the nucleus of the society. A number of gramas formed into a place called Viṣaya. A number of Viṣayas became what was known as 'Janam'. The importance of Janas can be understood by the statements made about Pañcajanas and the existence of special Janas like Yādava Jana and Bhārata Jana.

There is no wonder why the Āryas who had to live among enemies accepted kingship. The Ṛgveda narrates the difficulties people would have to encounter if they were left to fight their enemies without a proper leader and so advocates Kingship and gives it an exalted position in their social structure. Sūkta 22, Anuvāka 12 of Maṇḍala 10 describes the coronation of a King thus: "I do hereby crown you as King. Come to our midst. Rule us with courage and an unwavering mind. Let all your subjects love you. Let thy kingdom remain with you for ever". The next mantra is also of the same idea. A King is above punishment. The veda speaks about many famous kings of which the following are worth mentioning. Divodāsa, Sud s, Ambarīṣa, Nahuṣa and Purūravas.

The chief priest was always the political advisor also. Viśvāmitra and Vasiṣṭha were two great priests of the Bharata dynasty. There were other priests also. Mention is there about a Rājasabhā though nothing is said about their powers or functions. It can be surmised that the Sabhā was constituted of only men of character and learning.

It is interesting to note the type of domestic life in vogue then. A father had the right, to sell his children, To cite an example is the story of Śunaśśepha who was made into a cow and sold to Viśvāmitra who looked after him well. The father had the right to make his children lose all rights over his properties. Viśvāmitra sent out from his family fifty sons who refused to obey him. Dowry was current then. Sūkta 11, Anuvāka 3, Maṇḍalam 10 ordains that the bride should go to the house of her husband after the marriage. Polygamy was not objected to. There is a mantra to harass the co-wife and its purpose is to make the husband more attached to her who hates the co-wife. The originator of this mantra was Indrāṇī, the queen of Indra. Indra had many wives. Marriage was considered as a necessary duty. Widow marriage was allowed.

The Ṛgveda gives the picture of a society of people who were always at war with each other. "We are surrounded by mighty enemies. Help us". This is the slogan that rings out from the Ṛgveda.

The Ṛgveda is a history of the Āryas. The march from Kubhātaṭa (Kubul) to the banks of Yamunā is depicted there. It was at Kubhātaṭa that the mantras were first made. When they reach the banks of the Gaṅgā the period of Ṛgveda ends. The crossing of each of the five rivers of Pañcanada is treated as a big event by the ṛṣis. When they saw the huge and deep river, Sindhu, they were amazed. The wonder is reflected in a lovely mantra. It was after crossing Sindhu that they had to oppose the 'Dasyus'. The Ṛgveda itself records that the Dasyus were more cultured than the Āryas. Śambara, a Dasyu King, was the ruler of a hundred cities. Their fortresses were strong. They have been described in the Ṛgveda as Aśvamayī, Āyasī and Śatabhujī.

The chief opponents of the Āryas were a tribe of people called Paṇis. From the Nirukta of Yāska we are given to understand that the Paṇis were mainly engaged in trade. The Ṛgveda names many Dasyu kings of which the following few were more daring and brave and the Āryas acknowledged their superior strength and courage: Dhuni, Cumuri, Vipru, Varcis and Śambara. Among the several divisions of the Dasyus, the Śimyus, Kīkaṭas, Śigrus and Yakṣus ranked foremost in power. They are described as having black colour and flat noses and speaking a language different from that of the Āryas. We may surmise from these facts that they belonged to the Drāviḍa class of people. They never conducted yāga nor did they worship gods like Indra. They were idol worshippers for they have been abused as 'Śiśnadevas'. Later the Āryas learnt from the Dasyus the worship of Śiva, Devī and Liṅga.

Conquering these daring and cultured enemies the Āryas reached the banks of the Yamunā to find to their pleasant surprise a radical change in themselves. The Bharatas settled themselves in the land between the Yamunā and Gaṅgā and remained friendly with the Dasyus living to the east of Gaṅgā. The Āryas who settled down in Pañcanada were strong and to prevent them from coming and conquering them Bharata tried to keep them remain on the other side of Śutudri (Sutlej). This led to a war called Dāśarājña.

This war is to be considered as one of the most important of wars in the world. Those who opposed Sudās were Āryas though among the supporters of Sudās were also Āryas. It was the people under Sudās who came out victorious in that war and put a stop to further conquests by the Āryas. From thereafter the Āryas joined hands with the aborigines and laid the foundation for the great Hindu civilization. Thereafter the Ṛgveda states about prayers for help to combat 'our enemies of Āryas and Dasyus'. The gods who were recognised later were those who were not found in the vedas of the Āryas. The worship of Mahāyogī and Devī found in Mohenjodaro is an evidence of this change.

ĀRYĀ. One of the seven mothers who were present at the birth of Subrahmaṇya. (Śloka 13, Chapter 228, Vana Parva, M.B.).

ĀRYAKA. A famous serpent. (Śloka 7, Chapter 35, Ādi Parva, M.B.) Āryaka is associated with Bhīmasena in the following story. Once Duryodhana gave snake poison in his food to Bhīmasena. Unaware Bhīma took his food as usual and went to bathe in the river. After some time Bhīma became unconscious due to the effect of the poison and fell flat in the river.

Immediately Duryodhana bound him by ropes and put him in more deep waters. Bhīma reaching the bottom was bitten by all the snakes there. This fortunately served as an antidote and the poison in Bhīma's body was neutralized and Bhīma became his old self again and killed all the serpents. Those serpents who escaped went and brought their chief, Vāsuki. At that time it was Āryaka who advised Vāsuki to give him 'rasapāna'. (Ślokas 64-68, Chapter 127, Ādi Parva, M.B.).

ĀRYAKU. Another name for Durgādevī. (Chapter 12, Agni Purāṇa).

ĀRYĀVARTA. Another name for Bhārata. There is also a place of that name. According to Smṛti the land lying between the Himālayas and the Vindhyas is called Āryāvarta. (Śloka 15, Chapter 325, Śānti Parva, M.B.).

ĀRYĀVARTA. A king of the dynasty of Viśvakarmā.

Genealogy. Descending in order from Viṣṇu are Brahmā, Dharma, Prabhāsa, Viśvakarmā, Priyavrata, Agnīdhra, Nābhi, Ṛṣabha and Āryāvarta.

Of these Ṛṣabha got of his wife Jayantī twenty sons: Bharata, Kuśīvarta, Ilāvarta, Brahmāvarta, Aryāvarta Malaya, Ketu, Bhadrasena, Indraspṛk, Vidarbha, Kīkaṭa, Kavi, Hari, Antarīkṣa, Prabuddha, Pippalāyana, Āvirhotra, Dramiḍa, Camasa and Karabhājana. Of these Bharata ruled over this land and gave it the name Bhārata. Brothers of Bharata ruled different parts of this land. Dramiḍa's land became known later as Drāviḍa (Dakṣiṇabhārata).

ĀṢĀḌHA I. A Kṣatriya King. He was the incarnation of a Rākṣasa called Krodhavaśa. Kaśyapa was the son of Marīci, Brahmā's son. Kaśyapa married Krodhavaśā, daughter of Dakṣa. The Rākṣasa group called Krodhavaśas were the children of Krodhavaśā. Many Kṣatriya kings trace their descent from this group of Rākṣasas. The names of such Kṣatriya Kings are given below: Madraka, Karṇaveṣṭha, Siddhārtha, Kīṭakariddha, Subāhu, Bālhika, Kratha, Vicitra, Suratha, Cīravāsas, Kauravya, Dantavaktra, Durjaya, Rukmi, Janamejaya, Āṣāḍha, Vāyuvega, Bhūritejas, Ekalavya, Sumitra, Gomukha, Vātadhāna, and Kṣemadhūrti. (M.B., Ādi Parva, Chapter 6, Verses 59-64).

ĀṢĀḌHA II. Śiva. (M.B., Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 17, Verse 121).

ĀṢĀḌHABHŪTI. See under Pañcatantra.

ĀṢĀḌHA. Name of a month. By feasting in this month, one will have many sons and much wealth. (M.B., Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 106, Verse 26).

ĀṢĀḌHA. Name of a star. After observing a fast on the day of this star, if curd is given to a Brahmin of noble birth, one can take rebirth in a family having many cows. (M.B., Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 64, Verses 25-26).

ĀṢĀḌHAKA. A mahout in the Udayana story. In Kathāsaritsāgara, Kathāmukhalambaka, 5th Taraṅga, we find a reference to an elephant called Bhadravatī and a mahout named Āṣāḍhaka in the palace of the heroine, Vāsavadattā.

ĀSAṀGA. See under ANAŚA.

ĀSAṀGAPLĀYOGI. A King, who was generous by nature. In the Ṛgveda, there is a reference to this King who once lost his masculinity and was transformed into a woman but was restored to manhood by a Muni named Medhyātithi.

ĀSANA. Posture in Yogābhyāsa. There are different types of āsanas. The chief of them are given below:

1) Bhujaṅgāsana. Lying flat, face downwards on a sheet with hands placed close to the body on either side. After relaxing all the muscles of the body, concentrate the mind on health. Keeping the feet close together and pressing the knees against the ground, raise the soles upwards to the sky. Place both palms, pressing against the ground, touching the shoulders on both sides. Then raise the head and bend the neck backwards as far as possible. At this time, the trunk and legs should be in close contact with the ground. Gradually raise the chest, supported by the hands on the ground. Bring the head down in the same way as it was raised and restore the body to its former position. This āsana strengthens the backbone.

2) Śalabhāsana. Lie flat on the sheet, face downwards. Keep the legs close together and raise the feet up with the heels touching each other. Place the hands close to the body on either side and close the fists upwards. Place the fists and shoulders close to the ground and make the whole body stiff after inhaling the breath. Then try to raise the legs. Support the weight of the body with the breast and hands. This is possible by pressing the fists, firmly against the ground. Until the āsana is completed, do not send out the breath. Keep the legs straight and stiff. The lower abdomen and legs may be raised slightly. This makes the āsana complete. On feeling suffocation, the legs must be brought down slowly.

Besides these, there are many other āsanas like Dhanurāsana, Paścimātānāsana, Halāsana, Mayūrāsana, Sarvāṅgāsana, Matsyāsana, Śīrṣāsana, Arddhamatsyendrāsana, Pādahastāsana, Trikoṇāsana, Uḍḍīyāsana, Nauli, Viparītakaraṇi, Yogamudrā, Śavāsana, etc. (See under Yoga).

ĀŚĀVAHA I. A son of Kaśyapa and Aditi. From Viṣṇu Brahmā, from Brahmā Marīci and from Marīci Kaśyapa were born. Kaśyapa married Aditi, daughter of Dakṣa. Aditi gave birth to ten sons: Bṛhadbhānu, Cakṣurātmā, Vibhāvasu, Ṛcīka, Savitā, Arka, Bhānu, Āśāvaha, Ravi and Vivasvān. Vaivasvata Manu was the son of Vivasvān. (M.B., Ādi Parva, Chapter 1, Verse 42).

ĀŚĀVAHA II. A prince of the Vṛṣṇi dynasty. He was present at the Svayaṁvara of Draupadī. (M.B., Ādi Parva, Chapter 185, Verse 19).

ĀŚRAMA. Asramites (Inmates of an Āśrama) have to pass through four stages. The four stages of Brahmacarya, Gārhasthya, Vānaprastha and Sannyāsa are known as the four Āśramas. Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Part III, Chapter 9 describes each of the Āśramas as follows:

1. Brahmacarya. "After Upanayana a boy should maintain a Brahmacārī's vrata, engage himself in the study of the Vedas, suppress his indriyas (the five senses) and live in the house of the preceptor. Living there with proper observance of śauca, customs and vratas he should serve and attend on the Guru. The study of Vedas should be with proper observance of Vratas and steady attention. A Brahmacārī should worship with concentration, the Sun and Agni at the time of the two sandhyās (dawn and dusk) and after that he should do obeisance to the Guru. When the Guru stands, he should also be standing. When the guru walks, he should walk behind him and when he sits, he should sit in a lower position. The Śiṣya (disciple-pupil) should not do anything against the guru. When the guru himself asks, the Śiṣya should sit in front of him and recite Vedas without attending to anything else. After that, with his permission he may eat food which has been got by begging. The Śiṣya may take his bath in the water only after the Ācārya (guru) has taken his bath in it. Everyday the Camata, darbha, water and flowers which the guru needs, must be brought and supplied (by the Śiṣya).

2. Gārhasthya. After the study of the Vedas the intelligent śiṣya gives Gurudakṣiṇā (Payment to the preceptor) and with the consent of the Guru, enters into Gṛhasthāśrama. Then he is to marry and by earning money from a suitable occupation, should fulfil all obligations of a Gṛhastha according to his capacity. The Gṛhastha who worships the Pitṛs with Piṇḍadāna (offerings of rice balls), Devas with Yāgas (sacrifices), Ṛṣis with Svādhyāya (self discipline), Prajāpatis with begetting of children, spirits with bali (offering of food etc.) and the whole world with love, attains the holy world by his own virtuous deeds. Gṛhasthāśrama is the only source of support for sannyāsīs and brahmacārīs who beg their food. Therefore feeding them is an act of nobility. Brāhmaṇas travel from country to country to study Vedas, for pilgrimage and for seeing the places. The Gṛhastha is the only refuge and support of those who are homeless, who do not carry their food with them and those who spend the night wherever they reach. If such people come to his house, the Gṛhastha should welcome them with kind and loving words, and give them bed, seat and food. The guest who leaves a house disappointed, is really departing after transferring his own sins to that householder and taking away all the virtuous deeds of the householder. It is not proper for the Gṛhastha to treat a guest with disrespect, to behave rudely or treacherously towards him, to regret what has been given to the guest, or to obstruct or rebuke him. The Gṛhastha who performs the supreme duty of Gṛhasthāśrama in this way properly, is liberated from all secular bonds and reaches the noblest worlds.

3. Vānaprastha. After having finished all his duties in this way, to his satisfaction, the Gṛhastha, with the commencement of old age, should go to the forest, either after entrusting his wife to his sons or taking her also with him. There, he should use leaves, roots and fruits for his food, grow hair and beard, sleep on the bare ground, lead the life of a tāpasa and receive and honour all classes of guests. His clothes, sheets and blankets should be of deer-skin and darbha grass. The rule is that he should bathe three times a day. Worship of gods, performing homas, hospitality to all guests, mendicancy —all these are the laudable features of Vānaprastha. Any oil that is available in the forest is to be used for his oil bath. Enduring heat and cold, performing tapas, are also his duties. The Muni who observes this rule in Vānaprastha with due austerity, burns up all his evils as with fire and attains the eternal worlds.

4. Sannyāsa. The fourth Āśrama is that of the Sannyāsī. Before entering upon the fourth Āśrama one has to renounce the love of travel, wealth and wife and also give up all spirit of rivalry. One who embraces sannyāsa should abandon completely the efforts for the three Puruṣārthas of Dharma, Artha and Kāma, treat friends and foes alike and continue to love all living beings. Not even a single creature should be offended by thought, word or deed. Conquering all passions, the Sannyāsī should renounce all bonds and attachments. He should not stay in a village more than one night and in a town more than five nights. Even that should be in such a way that no one feels any love or hatred towards him. For sustaining life, he should go about begging food from the houses of the people of the three castes—Brahmins, Kṣatriyas and Vaiśyas. It should be after all people have taken their food and put out the cooking fire. The Sannyāsī should cast away all vices like Kāma, Krodha, Garva, Lobha, and Moha and should not have any thought of self in anything. The Muni who goes about giving shelter to all creatures will not have to fear any creature. The Brāhmaṇa who follows the Sannyāsāśrama as described above with a pure heart and without difficulty will shine like fire without fuel and attain Brahmaloka in peace.

ĀŚRAMAVĀSA PARVA. One of the Parvas in the Mahābhārata. (See under Mahābhārata).

ĀŚRAMAVĀSIKA PARVA. One of the Parvas in the Mahābhārata. (See under Mahābhārata).

ĀŚRĀVYA. A muni (sage) in Indra's assembly. (M.B., Sabhā Parva, Chapter 7, Verse 18).

ĀSTĪKA. The son of the Maharṣi Jaratkāru and his wife, also named Jaratkāru. He stopped King Janamejaya's Sarpasatra and saved the nāgas.

1) Birth. There is a story about Āstīka's birth in the Devī Bhāgavata. Long ago the people of the world were so much troubled by the serpents, that they sought protection from Kaśyapa Prajāpati. To find a remedy for this, Kaśyapa discussed the matter with Brahmā. To put an end to the troubles from the serpents, Brahmā suggested that a number of mantras and a deity as the basis of those mantras should be created. Accordingly Kaśyapa created many mantras and Manasā Devī as the basic deity of those mantras. She is named "Manasādevī" because Kaśyapa created her by his mental power. Manasādevī has eleven other names also, namely Jaratkāru, Jagatgaurī, Siddhayoginī, Vaiṣṇavī, Nāgabhaginī, Śaivī, Nāgeśvarī, Jaratkārupriyā, Āstīkamātā, Viṣaharā and Mahājñānayutā.

Manasādevī (Jaratkāru) when quite young, went to Kailāsa for doing tapas (penance). There she did tapas to Śiva for a thousand years. At last Śiva appeared and blessed her with divine wisdom. She returned with great learning and devotion. (Devī Bhāgavata, Navama Skandha).

At that time, a Muni (sage) named Jaratkāru, when travelling through the forest happened to see his pitṛs (souls of forefathers) hanging over a precipice at the end of a blade of grass. They were hanging precariously at the end of a reed grass, head downwards, about to fall into the abyss. Jaratkāru enquired why they were lying in that condition. They explained that they were in that plight because their descendant Jaratkāru had no children. As he is a bachelor there is no hope either, of his having any issue. Since he has no children, we will not get to heaven, they added. To save the Pitṛs from their predicament, Jaratkāru decided to marry. But he wished to marry a woman who had the same name as his. Once Vāsuki met Jaratkāru and told him that he had a sister named Jaratkāru and that he would be very happy if Jaratkāru married her. Jaratkāru accepted the offer readily and married Jaratkāru.

After their marriage, while they were living together in a place called Puṣkara tīrtha, an unexpected event happened which interrupted the happy course of their life. One evening, the husband was sleeping with his head in the wife's lap, under a tree. The sun was about to set. As the Maharṣi did not wake up before sunset, the wife became anxious. It is believed that he who does not wake up before sunrise and he who does not offer prayers at dusk will be guilty of the sin of Brahmahatyā (killing a Brahmin). Nor was it proper to wake him up from a sound sleep. But in the end, she did wake him up. The husband sprang up in great fury. He renounced the wife then and there. Weeping bitterly, she begged for his forgiveness. At last Jaratkāru relented and told her : "You will have a very noble, brilliant, renowned, virtuous, scholarly and devout son who will be a devotee of Viṣṇu and a preserver of the family". After this Manasādevī set out to Kailāsa. When she reached there Parama-Śiva and Pārvatī comforted her.

Manasādevī was pregnant. The precepts and spiritual advice given by Jaratkāru, Parama-Śiva and Pārvatī were heard by the child in the womb and so even before his birth he became a Jñānī and a yogī. In due course Manasādevī gave birth to a son who was a part of Nārāyaṇa (Viṣṇu). Since he was the son of Manasādevī who had deep devotion to the Guru and to the Gods, the boy was named Āstīka.

The Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, gives another reason for giving this name to the boy. When the sage Jaratkāru abandoned his wife, he had blessed her saying that the child in her womb would be a brilliant and devoted son. That is why this boy came to be called Āstīka.

2) Boyhood Āstīka was taught Veda, Vedāṁgas etc. by Parama-Śiva himself. After receiving the blessings of Parama-Śiva, Āstīka went to Puṣkara tīrtha and did tapas to Viṣṇu for many years. Having received Viṣṇu's blessings also, he returned to Kailāsa. After living there happily with his mother for some time, one day they started to the Āśrama of Kaśyapa Prajāpati, the father of Manasādevī. Kaśyapa was very much pleased to see his noble-hearted daughter and her brilliant son. To enhance the fame and accomplishments of the boy Kaśyapa gave a sumptuous feast to ten crores of Brahmins. (Devī Bhāgavata, Navama Skandha).

Vāsuki was Manasādevī's brother. Āstīka grew up there under the care of Vāsuki. It was Cyavana Muni who taught Sāṁgavedas to Āstīka, at this time. (M.B., Ādi Parva, Chapter 48, Verse 18).

3) Āstīka at the Sarpasatra. Once King Parīkṣit, the son of Abhimanyu was travelling through the forest for hunting animals. He picked up a dead snake with the tip of his bow and put it on the shoulder of a sage named "Śamīka". Śamīka's son, Śṛṁgī came to know of this. In his anger, Śṛṁgī pronounced a curse that King Parīkṣit should die within seven days by the bite of Takṣaka. When Parīkṣit heard of this, he had a palace built on a single pillar in the middle of the ocean, quite inaccessible to Takṣaka and took shelter there. The most famous physicians and wizards were engaged to ward off the approach of Takṣaka to that place. Six days passed like this. On the seventh day, determined to make a final attempt, Takṣaka disguised himself as an old Brāhmaṇa and set out to the King's place of shelter. On his way he met Dhanvantari who was proceeding to Parīkṣit to protect him. They became friends and as a result of it, Dhanvantari returned after receiving a large number of rare precious stones given to him by Takṣaka. Assuming the form of a small worm, Takṣaka secretly entered into a fruit which was to be presented to the King. As soon as the King took that fruit in his hand, Takṣaka took his own shape and size and bit the King who died immediately. Janamejaya was the son of this King Parīkṣit.

Janamejaya performed all the obsequies of his father. After that, in a spirit of revenge, with the object of annihilating the whole race of serpents, he summoned Brāhmaṇas to conduct a sarpa satra (snake sacrifice). In the sacrificial fire specially prepared at that yāga, many serpents were being burnt up. It seemed that the whole race of serpents would shortly be wiped out. But Takṣaka alone was not to be seen. The officiating priests were beginning to get angry. Impatient cries of Where is Takṣaka rent the air. The frightened Takṣaka fled for life to the palace of his friend Indra and there lay down, curling round Indra's cot. When the priests understood this they decided to use their charms and mantras which would bring Indra, his bed, cot and all, along with Takṣaka to the sacrificial fire.

At this stage, all the gods rushed to Manasādevī and fell at her feet and begged her to save the situation. The kindhearted Devī called her son Āstīka and advised him to persuade Janamejaya to stop the sarpasatra. Āstīka went to Janamejaya and requested him to give him the lives of Takṣaka and Indra as a gift. Janamejaya, after consulting the munis and priests and at their advice, agreed to do so. In this way, the Sarpasatra was stopped and the remaining serpents escaped with their lives. (Devī Bhāgavata, Navama Skandha, M.B., Ādi Parva).

ĀSTĪKA PARVA. One of the Parvas in the Mahābhārata. See Mahābhārata.

ĀSURAM. A form of marriage. (See VIVĀHA).

ĀSURĀYAṆA. A son of Viśvāmitra. (M.B., Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 4, Verse 56).

ĀSURI. An ancient Maharṣi. He was the ācārya of Kapila Sāṁkhyadarśana and the guru of the maharṣi Pañcaśikha. Once Āsuri had a full vision of God. He gave many precepts on spiritual matters to other Maharṣis. The Bhāgavata says that Āsuri received his spiritual enlightenment from his wife, Kapilā. (M.B., Śānti Parva, Chapter 218, Verses 10-14).

ĀŚVALĀYANA I. A son of Viśvāmitra. (M.B., Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 4, Verse 54).

ĀŚVALĀYANA II. An Ācārya. He was a disciple of Śaunaka. Āśvalāyana composed three famous works: Āśvalāyana Gṛhyasūtra, Āśvalāyana Śrautasūtra and Āśvalāyana Stuti.

ĀṬAKA. A serpent born of the Kaurava dynasty. This serpent was burnt at the Sarpasatra of Janamejaya. (Śloka 12, Chapter 57, Ādi Parva, M.B.)

ĀṬAVĪPURI. An ancient city in India. Sahadeva conquered this city. (M.B., Sabhā Parva, Chapter 31, Verse 72).

ĀTHARVAṆA. A sage. When Arjuna dreamed of going to Śiva accompanied by Kṛṣṇa they visited in the dream the āśrama of this sage also.

ĀTMADEVA. See under Gokarṇa.

ĀTREYA. A sage. This sage had acquired the power to go from one planet to another. Once this ṛṣi went to devaloka as the guest of Indra and there he drank Amṛta (the celestial elixir) and enjoyed the dances of the celestial maidens A desire to have a similar heaven of his own budded in his mind and he approached Viśvakarmā who gave him a new heaven of his own. But before long the demons took over this heaven from him. Though Viśvakarmā took back the same from the demons, Ātreya did not go back but returned to his old āśrama on the banks of Gomatī and doing penance there for a long time attained salvation (Brahma Purāṇa).

More details. Ātreya was also present among the ascetics who assembled at the sarpasatra of Janamejaya. (Śloka 8, Chapter 55, Ādi Parva, M.B.).

2) Ātreya was a disciple of Vāmadeva. (Śloka 6, Chapter 192, Vana Parva, M.B.).

3) This ṛṣi taught his disciples about Nirguṇabrahma. (Śloka 7, Chapter 137, Anuśāsana Parva, M.B.).

ĀTREYA(M). A place of ancient Bhārata. (Śloka 68, Chapter 9, Bhīṣma Parva, M.B.).

ĀTREYĪ I. Wife of King Ūru. Svāyambhuva Manu got of his wife Śatarūpā two sons, Priyavrata and Uttānapāda. Uttānapāda got a son named Uttama of Suruci and one of name Dhruva of Sunīti. Dhruva got three sons, Śiṣṭi, Bhava and Śambhu. Śiṣṭi got five sons, Ripu Ripuñjaya, Śipra, Vṛkala and Vṛkatejas. Cākṣuṣa was, born to Ripu of his wife Bṛhatī. Manu was born to Cākṣuṣa of his wife Vīraṇī. Ūru was the son of Manu. Ūru got of Ātreyī Aṅga, Sumanas, Svāti, Kratu, Aṅgiras and Gaya. (Chapter 18, Agni Purāṇa).

ĀTREYĪ II. A river. (Śloka 22, Chapter 9, Sabhā Parva, M.B.).

ĀTREYĪ III. Anasūyā, wife of Atri is also called Ātreyī.

ĀTREYĪ IV. Daughter of Maharṣi Atri. She was married to Aṅgiras, son of Agni. Aṅgiras always spoke rudely to her and pained at this she once approached her father and told him about this. Her father told her thus: "Your husband is the son of Agni. That is why he appears unbearable to you. Therefore give him a cold bath always and he would gradually become mild." Hearing this the devout Ātreyī transformed herself into a river and started to cool him down by constant showers. This river later on became the famous Paruṣṇī Nadī. (Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa).

ĀVAHA. A Vāyu. (M.B., Śānti Parva, Chapter 328, Verse 37).

ĀVANTIKĀ. Daughter of Yaugandharāyaṇa, a famous character in the story of Udayana. (See under Yaugandharāyaṇa).

ĀVARAṆA. A King of Viśvakarmā's dynasty.

Genealogy. From Viṣṇu were born in the following order: Brahmā - Dharma - Prabhāsa-Viśvakarmā-Priyavrata-Āgnīdhra-Nābhi-Ṛṣabha-Bharata-Āvaraṇa.

Bharata married the world-beauty, Pañcajanī. Five children, Sumati, Rāṣṭrabhṛt, Sudarśana, Āvaraṇa, and Dhūmraketu were born to her. (Bhāgavata, Daśama Skandha).

ĀVARTANANDĀ. A sacred Tīrtha. One who bathes in this tīrtha will be able to enjoy life in Nandanavana. (M.B., Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 25, Verse 45).

ĀVAŚĪRA. A place in ancient India. It is said that Karṇa conquered this place. (M.B., Vana Parva, Chapter 254, Verse 9).

ĀVASTHYA. An Agni. (M.B., Vana Parva, Chapter 221, Verse 5).

ĀVIRHOTRA. A king of Viśvakarmā's dynasty.

Genealogy. From Viṣṇu were descended in the following order: Brahmā - Dharma-Prabhāsa-Viśvakarmā-Barhiṣmatī-Priyavrata-Āgnīdhra-Nābhi-Ṛṣabha-Āvirhotra.

Jayantī, Ṛṣabha's wife bore to him twenty children who were: Bharata, Kuśāvarta, Ilāvarta, Brahmāvarta, Āryāvarta, Malaya, Ketu, Bhadrasena, Indraspṛk, Vidarbha, Kīkaṭa, Kavi, Hari, Antarīkṣa, Prabuddha, Pippalāyana, Āvirhotra, Dramiḍa, Camasa and Karabhājana. The eldest of them, Bharata, became the ruler of India. From him this country came to be called "BHĀRATA". All the younger brothers ruled over the different parts of this country.

ĀYATI. A daughter of Mahāmeru. Two daughters were born to Mahāmeru, Āyati and Niyati. Āyati was married by Dhātā and Niyati by Vidhātā. Dhātā and Vidhātā are the two sons born to Bhṛgu Maharṣi of his wife Khyāti. Dhātā got a son, Prāṇa, of Āyati and Vidhātā, a son, Mṛkaṇḍu of Niyati. Prāṇa got a son Dyutimān and he got a son Rājavān. (Chapter 10, Aṁśam 1, Viṣṇu Purāṇa).

ĀYAVASA. A King. There is mention about this king in Sūkta 128, Maṇḍala 1 of the Ṛgveda.

ĀYOGAVA. A special caste of people. Their profession was drama acting. They were adepts in handicrafts. See under Cāturvarṇyam. (Chapter 151, Agni Purāṇa).

ĀYODHADHAUMYA. See under Ayodhadhaumya.

ĀYRĀJAS. Name of a class of Kings. Till the beginning of the 10th century A.D. Āyrājas were a prominent political force in Kerala. They ruled over a huge area in S. Kerala (S. Travancore) till the time of the Veṇād dynasty coming into power.

ĀYUDHA PARĪKṢĀ. A test in the skill of archery was conducted when the Pāṇḍavas and Kauravas finished their study at the feet of Droṇācārya. This is described beautifully in Chapter 134 of ādi Parva, M.B.

ĀYURVEDA. It is the science which the sage Dhanvantari taught Suśruta. This describes all the diseases and the treatment meant for them. Ailments are of four kinds : Śārīrika refers to fever, skin diseases etc., Mānasika refers to those arising out of anger ; Āgantuka refers to cuts, wounds and injuries, and Sahaja refers to hunger, thirst, old age, etc. (Chapters 279 to 286, Agni Purāṇa). Refer Dhanvantari for more details.

ĀYUS I. Son of Purūravas and father of Nahuṣa.

1) Genealogy. Descending in order from Viṣṇu Brahmā-Candra-Budha-Purūravas-Āyus.

Āyus was born to Purūravas of Urvaśī. To Āyus was born of his wife Svarbhānavī Nahuṣa. (Śloka 24, Chapter 7, Ādi Parva, M.B.).

2) Birth of the son. See under Nahuṣa.

3) Other details. Āyus was a king who had acquired great power by penance. (Śloka 15, Chapter 296, Śānti Parva, M.B.).

ĀYUS II. One who was the king of frogs. Suśobhanā was the daughter of this frog-king. Suśobhanā was married to King Parīkṣit. For the interesting story of the marriage of a king with a frog see under Parīkṣit II.

ĀYUṢMĀN. Kaśyapa, son of Marīci, got two sons, Hiraṇyākṣa and Hiraṇyakaśipu and a daughter Siṁhikā, of his wife Diti. Siṁhikā became the wife of Vipracitti. Of her were born the celebrated asuras, Saiṁhikeyas, of which Rāhu was one. Hiraṇyakaśipu had four brave sons, Anuvrāta, Vrāta, Prahlāda and Saṁhrāda. Of these Vrāta got a son Vrata, Saṁhrāda got Āyuṣmān, Śibi, and Bāṣkala and Prahlāda got a son, Virocana. Mahābali was the son of Virocana. (Chapter 19, Agni Purāṇa).

B

BĀBHRAVYA. An author of the 'Science of Love'. Śvetaketu was the first of the authors who had written on the Science of amour (Kāma-śāstra). Bābhravya made only a condensation of the work of Śvetaketu.

BĀBHRAVYAM. A clan or gotra of Brāhmaṇas in Ancient India. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Śānti Parva, Chapter 342, Stanza 103 that the hermit Gālava belonged to this clan.

BABHRU I. A maharṣi of the line of preceptors from Vyāsa. (See Guruparamparā).

BABHRU II. A Yādava of the Vṛṣṇi dynasty. He was one of the ablest of Yādava warriors. (Chapter 14, Dākṣiṇātya Pāṭham, M.B.). Even in his old age he used to do penance. Śiśupāla carried away his wife when once he was away in Dvārakā. He was a friend of Śrī Kṛṣṇa. He died when hit by an arrow from Vyāsa. (Chapter 4, Mausala Parva, M.B.).

BABHRU III. A king of Kāśī. By the help of Śrī Kṛṣṇa he attained Rājyalakṣmī. (Chapter 28, Udyoga Parva, M.B.).

BABHRU IV. A son of King Virāṭa. (Śloka 33, Chapter 57, Udyoga Parva, M.B.).

BABHRU V. One of the sons of Viśvāmitra who were Brahmavādīs. (Śloka 50, Chapter 4, Anuśāsana Parva, M.B.).

BABHRUDAIVĀVṚDHA. A Yādava king. The information from Purāṇas available about him is given below :

1) This Rājarṣi was an adept in the art of yajña. He was a disciple of Nārada and Parvata Maharṣi. (Aitareya Brāhmaṇa 7.34).

2) He was a Yādava of the Vṛṣṇi dynasty and one of the seven noted ministers of the Yadu line of Kings. (Sabhā Parva, M.B.).

3) At the time of the kidnapping of Subhadrā Babhrudaivāvṛdha was partaking in a grand festival at the mountain of Raivataka. (Chapter 211, Ādi Parva, M.B.).

4) When once this Rājarṣi went on a visit to Kṛṣṇa, Śiśupāla carried away his wife. (Chapter 42, Sabhā Parva, M.B.).

5) When in the end the Yādavas in Dvārakā quarrelled with each other and were destroyed, the plight of the Yādava ladies became miserable. Then Śrī Kṛṣṇa entrusted Dvāraka and Babhrudaivāvṛdha with the task of taking care of them. But in the battle of the maces he was killed with a mace thrown at him. (Chapter 5, Mausala Parva, M.B.).

BABHRUMĀLI. A sage. He was a lively member of the Sabhā of Yudhiṣṭhira. (Śloka 16, Chapter 4, Sabhā Parva, M.B.).

BABHRUSETU. A Gāndhāra king. He was the brother of Druhyu and father of Purovasu. (Chapter 277, Agni Purāṇa).

BABHRUVĀHANA. A son of Arjuna.

1) Birth. When the Pāṇḍavas were residing in Indraprastha after marrying Pāñcālī, Nārada went to see them once. With a view to avoiding any quarrel between the Pāṇḍavas over the one wife they jointly possessed, Nārada suggested that each should take Pāñcālī for a year in turn and he who violated the arrangement should go to the forest for a year. Once Arjuna went to the house of Yudhiṣṭhira who was with Pāñcālī and for thus violating the arrangement Arjuna had to go to the forest for a year. During this exile while he was staying at Gaṅgādvāra he married the serpent girl, Ulūpi and got a son called Irāvān of her.

After that he went to a country called Maṇalūr. At that time that country was being ruled by a king called Citrāṅgada. Prabhañjana one of the forefathers of Citrāṅgada had, by hard penance for a progeny, acquired from Śiva a boon and each of his successors got a son each to maintain the line. But when it came to Citrāṅgada to his surprise he got a girl instead of a son. But he got her up as a son and named her Citrāṅgada. It was when she was ready for marriage that Arjuna went there. The king received Arjuna with respect and after enquiring about his welfare requested him to marry his daughter. Arjuna married her and stayed there for three months. Leaving that place Arjuna went to Pañcatīrtha and there he gave salvation to the celestial maidens who were lying in the tīrthas as crocodiles. When he went back to Maṇalūr Citrāṅgadā had delivered a son whom he named Babhruvāhana. Promising them that he would take them later to Hastināpura, he left the place.

2) His fate to kill his own father. It was by a ruse that Arjuna made Bhīṣma fall. Arjuna put Śikhaṇḍī before his chariot and Bhīṣma refused to take arms against a eunuch and accepted defeat. But Gaṅgādevī witnessing the battle between Bhīṣma, her son, and Arjuna from above could not bear this foul play and so cursed that Arjuna would die at the hands of his son. Ulūpi the serpent wife of Arjuna heard this curse and went to her father Kauravya who in turn went to Gaṅgā and begged for a relief from the curse. Gaṅgādevī then said that Arjuna would be killed by Babhruvāhana but would be brought to life by Ulūpi by placing the Mṛtasañjīvanī stone on the dead man's breast.

3) The killing of Arjuna. The Mahābhārata battle was over. When Yudhiṣṭhira was performing the Aśvamedha yāga Arjuna conducted a victory march with the yāga horse. On his way he reached Maṇalūr. At once Ulūpi called Babhruvāhana and asked him to challenge Arjuna. Babhruvāhana with his bow and arrows attacked Arjuna and in the grim battle that followed Arjuna fell dead. Seeing this Citrāṅgadā came to the place of battle weeping and abused Ulūpi for persuading Babhruvāhana to kill his own father. Ulūpi immediately went to the serpent world and brought the Mṛtasañjīvanī stone and as she placed it on Arjuna's breast he came to life as if waking up from a sleep. When he saw Citrāṅgadā, Babhruvāhana and Ulūpī he smiled and asked them why they had all come there. Ulūpī then explained to him the story of the curse and extremely pleased over the end of the curse Arjuna took them all to Hastināpura. (Chapters 218 to 210 of Ādi Parva and Chapters 79 to 82 of Aśvamedha Paıva, M.B.).

4) Other details. (1) On reaching Hastināpura Śrī Kṛṣṇa gave Babhruvāhana as a present a chariot drawn by divine horses. (Śloka 6, Chapter 88, Aśvamedha Parva, M.B.).

(2) The diffeıent names given to him in the Purāṇas are as follows : Citrāṅgadāsuta, Maṇippūrpati, Dhanañjayasuta and Maṇipureśvara.

BADARIKĀŚRAMA. (BADARYĀŚRAMA). A very holy place in the Himālayas. It was here that Nara and Nārāyaṇa did penance for thousands of years and the Purāṇas, therefore, give it a very prominent place in them.

BADARĪPĀCANA TĪRTHA. (BADARAPĀCANA). A sacred place in Kurukṣetra. If one lives here fasting for twelve years eating dates only, one will become as great as Vasiṣṭha. (Chapter 83, Vana Parva, M.B.).

BADARĪVANA. A sacred place. Viśālapurī an ancient city of purāṇic fame is near this place. The Badarikāśrama comprises Badarīvana and Viśālapurī also.

BAḌAVĀGNI. See under Aurva.

BADHIRA. A serpent of the Kaśyapa dynasty. (There is a reference to this serpent in Śloka 16, Chapter 74, Udyoga Parva, M.B.).

BĀDULI. A son of Viśvāmitra. He was a follower of the Brahma cult. (M.B., Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 4, Stanza 53).

BAHIRGIRI. A mountainous region of ancient Bhārata. Mention is made in Mahābhārata, Sabhā Parva, Chapter 27, Stanza 3 that this country lying in the vicinity of the Himālayas had been conquered by Arjuna during his conquest of the North.

BĀHU I. A king of the Sūrya-vaṁśa (solar dynasty). He was the father of Sagara. He is known by the name Subāhu also. This king was once defeated in a battle and being weary and sad he entered the hermitage of Aurva. His queen was given poison by another wife of the King. But the child in her womb did not die. The queen wanted to jump into the fire in which the body of her husband was to be burned. But Aurva told her that her son would become a famous king and that she should not commit suicide. Thus she desisted from committing suicide. A son was born to her. As she had been poisoned when the child was in her womb the son was given the name Sagara (with poison). It is said in Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva that this prince became a famous king later.

BĀHU II. Mention is made in Mahābhārata, Udyoga Parva, Chapter 4, Stanza 22, that the Pāṇḍavas thought of sending an invitation to a king named Bāhu for the battle between the Kurus and themselves.

BĀHU III. A king of the Sundara dynasty. Mention is made about this king in Mahābhārata, Udyoga Parva, Chapter 74.

BAHUBHĀRYĀTVA. (Polygamy). Polygamy was a custom in vogue in ancient India. It was not prohibited for a man to have more than one wife. It was customary to give dowry also. It is said in the Ṛgveda, Maṇḍala 10, Anuvāka 3, Sūkta 11 that the bride should proceed to the house of the husband, after the marriage. A spell (mantra) meant for keeping down one's co-wife, is seen in the Ṛgveda, Maṇḍala 10, Anuvāka 11, Sūkta 17. It is a prayer to destroy the love of husband for a co-wife and to direct that love towards oneself. The deity of this spell is Indrāṇī the wife of Indra who was a polygamist. In those days marriage was an essential duty. Widow marriage was not forbidden.

BĀHUDĀ. A holy bath. If one stays in this place for a night in celibacy and fast, one will get the fruits of performing a sacrifice to devas (gods). The modern investigators say that this place is on the bank of river Dhavala which flows near Avadhi. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Śānti Parva, Chapter 23 that the hermit Likhita had recovered his lost hand, by bathing in this holy place and giving oblations to his ancestors.

BAHUDĀMA. An attendant of Subrahmaṇya. (M.B., Śalya Parva, Chapter 46, Stanza 10).

BAHUDANTAKA. A book on the science of Ethics (Nītiśāstra), the work of Brahmā. It contains ten thousand chapters. This book was abridged into five thousand chapters by Purandara. (M.B., Śānti Parva, Chapter 69, Stanza 83).

BAHUDANTĪ. Mother of Purandara who was the Indra during the Manvantara (Period of a Manu) of Manu Vaivasvata. (See the word Purandara).

BĀHUDĀSUYAŚĀ. The wife of Parīkṣit, a King of the Kuru dynasty. A son named Bhīmasena was born to her. (M.B., Ādi Parva, Chapter 95).

BAHUGAVĀ. A king born of the family of Yayāti. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 9).

BĀHUKA I. A serpent born in the family of Kauravya. This snake fell in the sacrificial fire of Janamejaya and was burnt to death. (M.B., Ādi Parva, Chapter 57, Stanza 13).

BĀHUKA II. The pseudo-name assumed by Nala when he was living in the palace of Ṛtuparṇa in disguise. For further information see the word Nala.

BĀHUKA III. A mighty hero of the family of the Vṛṣṇis. About this Bāhuka, mention is made in Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 129, Stanza 19.

BAHULĀ I. A river. In Mahābhārata, Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 9, Stanza 29, mention is made about this river which is famous in the Purāṇas.

BAHULĀ II. An attendant of Subrahmaṇya. (M.B., Śalya Parva, Chapter 46, Stanza 3).

BAHULĀ III. Wife of Vidura a Brahmin, who frequented the houses of harlots. Bahulā was in the habit of going to the temple of Gokarṇa and hear Purāṇas, after the death of her husband. By this good deed Vidura got deliverance from sin. (Skanda Purāṇa 3.3.22).

BAHULĀŚVAN I. A king of the family of Śrī Rāma. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 9).

BAHULĀŚVAN II. A king of Mithilā. He was god-fearing. Once Śrī Kṛṣṇa visited his palace. At that time he received much good advice from Śrī Kṛṣṇa. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 10).

BAHUMŪLAKA. A serpent born to Kaśyapa Prajāpati of his wife Kadru. (M.B., Ādi Parva, Chapter 35, Stanza 16).

BAHUPUTRA. A Prajāpati (creator). He was one of the spiritual sons (Mānasaputras) of Brahmā. (Vāyu Purāṇa 65:53).

BAHUPUTRIKĀ. An attendant (female) of Subrahmaṇya. (M.B., Śalya Parva, Chapter 46, Stanza 3).

BAHURATHA. A king of the family of Bharata. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 9).

BAHURŪPA. One of the eleven Rudras. Eleven Rudras were born to Kaśyapa by his wife Surabhi. Surabhi, who had been purified by Maheśvara whom she had pleased by her penance, got as sons, Aja, Ekapād, Ahirbudhnya, Tvaṣṭṛ and Rudra. The renowned Viśvarūpa was the son of Tvaṣṭṛ. The eleven Rudras are Hara, Bahurūpa, Tryambaka, Aparājita, Vṛṣākapi, Śambhu, Kapardin, Raivata, Mṛgavyādha, Sarpa and Kapālin The number of the Rudras is one hundred lakhs. They pervade everything moving and not moving. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 18).

BĀHUŚĀLI. A prince of Avanti. He was a friend of Śrīdatta. (For further information see the word Śrīdatta).

BAHUSUVARṆAKA. An ancient city on the bank of the Ganges. (Kathāsaritsāgara).

BAHUVĀDYA. A country in ancient India. Mention is made about this country in Mahābhārata, Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 9, Stanza 55.

BAHUVIDHA. A king of the family of Aṅga. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 277).

BAHUYOJANĀ. An attendant of Subrahmaṇya. (M.B., Śalya Parva, Chapter 46, Stanza 9).

BAHVĀŚI. One of the hundred sons of Dhṛtarāṣṭra. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 28 that he was killed by Bhīmasena in the battle of Mahābhārata.

BĀHYAKARṆA. A serpent born to Kaśyapa Prajāpati of his wife, Kadru. (M.B., Ādi Parva, Chapter 35, Stanza 9).

BĀHYAKUṆḌA. A serpent born in the family of Kaśyapa Prajāpati. Mention is made about this serpent in Mahābhārata, Udyoga Parva, Chapter 103.

BĀHYĀŚVAN. A king of the Pūru dynasty. He was the son of King Purujāti. Five sons were born to Bāhyāśvan called Mukula, Sṛñjaya, Bṛhadiṣṭha, Yavīnara and Kṛmila. These five sons became famous as Pañcālas. Of these, the family of Mukula became the Maukulyas, who were having temples and were of two classes. A son named Pañcāśva was born to Mukula. A son named Divodāsa and a daughter named Ahalyā were born to Pañcāśva. Ahalyā got with child from the hermit Śāradvata and gave birth to a son named Śatānanda. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 278).

BAKĀ. Daughter of the demon, Sumāli. He had four daughters : Bakā, Puṣpotkaṭā, Kaikasī and Kumbhīnadī. Rāvaṇa is the son of Kaikasī. (Uttara Rāmāyaṇa).

BAKA I. A demon. The Pāṇḍavas escaping from the trap of Arakkilla (lac-house) through a secret tunnel went to the village Ekacakrā on the banks of the river Gaṅgā and stayed there in the house of a brahmin. Baka was a demon who was terrorising the villagers there. He used to come to the village freely and carry away people for his food. Because of this nobody lived in peace and so they all joined together and decided to send one man daily with plenty of other eatables to the demon in this cave. Days went by like that and one day the turn came to the brahmin who was sheltering the Pāṇḍavas. That brahmin had besides his wife one son and a daughter. The problem arose as to who should go to the demon. The father was willing but the wife did not want him to go and vice versa. The children began to cry and hearing the noise Kuntī, mother of the Pāṇḍavas, went there to enquire and learned the tragic story of the family. She immediately went to Bhīma and acquainted him with the problem before the brahmin. Bhīma at once volunteered to go to the demon deciding to kill the man-eater and thus putting an end to his depredations.

Bhīma started on his journey to the demon carrying a cartload of rice and curry. Deliberately Bhīma arrived at the place of the demon very late. Baka rolled his eyes in anger at the sight of the late-comer. But Bhīma without heeding him sat in front of the demon and started eating the rice and curry. Baka charged at Bhīma with fury but Bhīma defended and a battle ensued in which Baka was killed and he fell dead like a mountain-head dropping down.* (Chapters 157-164, Ādi Parva, M.B.).

BAKA II. A demon. As young boys Śrī Kṛṣṇa and Balarāmabhadra were once playing in Ambāḍi (Gokula) on the banks of the river Yamunā when the demon, Baka, despatched by Kaṁsa, went to them*f* in the form of a huge terrible-looking stork. In no time opening its ferocious beaks the stork swallowed Kṛṣṇa. But the touch of Kṛṣṇa burnt the throat of the bird and vomitting Kṛṣṇa the bird fell dead.

*Kirmīra, a demon, was the brother of Baka. (Śloka 23, Chapter 11, Araṇya Parva, M.B.).

f It is in the 10th Skandha of Bhāgavata that the story of this Baka occurs. But in the vernacular translation of the same the story is not so clear. Hence the original in Sanskrit is quoted below :

Sa vai Bako nāma mahānasuro bakarūpadhṛk
Āgatya sahasā Kṛṣṇam tīkṣṇatuṇḍo 'grasadbalī
Kṛṣṇam mahābakagrastaṁ dṛṣṭvā Rāmādayo 'rbhakāḥ
Babhūvurindriyāṇīva vinā prāṇaṁ vicetasaḥ.

BAKA III. (Bakadālbhya). The great sage who poured into the sacrificial fire the country of King Dhṛtarāṣṭra. For details see under Dālbhya.

BALA. A sacred incantation. (See Atibala).

BALA I. (VALA). A demon born to Kaśyapa Prajāpati of his wife Danāyu. This demon had three brothers: Vikṣara, Vīra and Vṛtra. It was this Bala who later on became the king of Pāṇḍyadeśa. (Śloka 42, Chapter 67, Śloka 33; Chapter 65, Ādi Parva, M.B.).

Chapter 168 of Vana Parva states that this Bala was killed by Indra. (For details see Vala).

BALA II. A deva born to Varuṇa of his elder brother's wife. (Śloka 52, Chapter 66, Ādi Parva, M.B.).

BALA III. The son born to Parīkṣit of the Ikṣvāku dynasty of the daughter of Maṇḍūkarāja. This Bala had two wives, Śalā and Dalā. (Śloka 38, Chapter 192, Vana Parva, M.B.).

BALA IV. A monkey. In the battle with Kumbhakarṇa this monkey did many brave deeds. (Śloka 6, Chapter 287, Vana Parva, M.B.).

BALA V. One of the two warriors whom Vāyu Bhagavān gave as a gift to Subrahmaṇya. The name of the other was Atibala. (Śloka 44, Chapter 91, Śalya Parva, M.B.).

BALA VI. A Maharṣi of ancient Bhārata. He was the son of Maharṣi Aṅgiras. (Śloka 27, Chapter 208, Śānti Parva, M.B.).

BALA VII. A sanātana Viśvadeva. (Śloka 30, Chapter 91, Anuśāsana Parva, M.B.).

BALA VIII. A pārṣada of Viṣṇu. When Vāmana trampled over the head of emperor Bali and sent him to the underworld, the followers of Bali ascended the yajña maṇḍala and created a commotion. Bala was one of the pārṣadas who then came to the scene to quell the trouble. (Aṣṭama Skandha, Bhāgavata).

BALA IX. A son of Māyāsura. He lived in a place in the netherlands called Atala. He created ninetysix different kinds of magic and gave them to the asura magicians who by the use of them gave the devas immense trouble.

Once when Balāsura yawned three bad women, Svairiṇī, Kāminī and Puṁścalī were born. They had with them a potable substance called Hāṭaka which they gave to men whom they liked and after enlivening the sex impulse in them enjoyed a sexual life with them to their heart's content. (Pañcama Skandha, Bhāgavata).

Once during a fight between Indra and Jalandhara Bala defeated Indra in a pathetic way. Indra then sought refuge in him and praised him with songs. Flattered by this Bala asked Indra to ask of him whatever he wanted and the sly Indra requested for the physical body of Bala. Without the least hesitation Bala cut his body into pieces and gave him. Indra threw away the cut pieces to different sides and all the places where these pieces fell were at once transformed into Diamond mines.

After the death of Balāsura his wife Prabhāvatī went to their preceptor (Kulaguru) Śukrācārya and told him all that took place and requested to bring back to life her lost husband. But Śukrācārya regretted that he could not give life again to her dead husband but could by his powers make her hear his voice again. Prabhāvatī agreed to that and then she heard her husband say "Leave your body and join me". Prabhāvatī immediately courted death and joining Bala became a river. (Padma Purāṇa, Uttara Khaṇḍa, Chapter 6).

BALA(M). To know what are Daśabalas see under Pattu.

BALABANDHU. A king of ancient Bhārata. There is a reference to him in Śloka 236, Chapter 1, Ādi Parva, M.B.

BALABHADRA. (Balabhadrarāma, Balarāma, Baladeva). The elder brother of Śrī Kṛṣṇa and the eighth incarnation of Mahāviṣṇu.*

1) Birth. When the number of wicked kings increased Bhūmīdevī (goddess of Earth) turned herself into a cow and took refuge in Mahāviṣṇu. Mahāviṣṇu then promised to be born as the sons of Vasudeva named Balabhadrarāma and Śrī Kṛṣṇa and destroy the wicked. Vasudeva was the son of the Yādava, Śūrasena, King of Madhurā. To Devaka the brother of another Yādava King, Ugrasena, was born a daughter Devakī. The marriage of Devakī with Vasudeva was celebrated but on the same day an Aśarīriṇī (a heavenly voice from above) said that the eighth child of Devakī would kill Kaṁsa. Instantly Kaṁsa put both Vasudeva and Devakī in jail. The first six sons born to Devakī were killed the moment they were born by striking them against the ground. Devakī became pregnant for the seventh time. The babe in the womb was Ananta incarnate by Viṣṇu's directive to be of help to him when he would also be born soon as Kṛṣṇa. Therefore it was necessary to save the child from the cruel hands of Kaṁsa as it was certain he would kill the babe the same way he had killed all the others before. So he ordered Māyādevī to take the child from the womb of Devakī and place it in that of Rohiṇī, another wife of Vasudeva. Māyādevī did so and the boy got the name Saṁgharṣaṇa, also because of this. The news spread that Devakī aborted. Rohiṇī delivered a boy and was named Saṁgharṣaṇa alias Balabhadrarāma. (Daśama Skandha, Bhāgavata).

2) The colour of Balarāma and Śrī Kṛṣṇa. Śrī Kṛṣṇa is the eighth child of Devakī. The elder brother Balarāma is white in complexion while the younger, Śrī Kṛṣṇa is black in complexion. There is a story behind this. The devas decided to be born as Gopālas (shepherds) in the earth to be of help to Kṛṣṇa in his duty of killing the wicked. They informed Mahāviṣṇu of their decision and the Lord was immensely pleased. He then took one white hair from his head and said that it would go to Rohiṇī's womb and change into Balarāma and

Taṁ tālumūlam pradahantamagnivad
Gopālasūnum pitaraṁ jagadguroḥ
Cacchardda sadyo 'tiruṣākṣatam Baka-
Stuṇḍena hantum punarabhyapadyata
Tamāpatantam sa nigṛhya tuṇḍayor
Dorbhyām Bakaṁ Kaṁsasakhaṁ satām patiḥ
Paśyatsu bāleṣu dadāra līlayā
Mudāvaho vīraṇavaddivaukasām.
(Chapter 11, Daśama Skandha, Bhāgavata).

*Since the life of Balabhadra is so mixed with that of Kṛṣṇa a complete life story of Balarāma could be had only if it is read along with that of Kṛṣṇa.

taking a black hair said that it would go into Devakī's womb and change into Śrī Kṛṣṇa. It was thus that Balabhadra became white and Śrī Kṛṣṇa black. (Chapter 199, Ādi Parva, M.B.).

3) Brothers. Balabhadrarāma had six brothers born of his mother Rohiṇī. They were: Gada, Sāraṇa, Durddama, Vipula, Dhruva, and Kṛta. (Navama Skandha, Bhāgavata).

4) Till their marriage Śrī Kṛṣṇa spent his childhood in Aṁbāḍi and Balarāma, in Madhurā. Once the sage Garga went to the house of Vasudeva and it was he who then told the story behind the births of Balarāma and Kṛṣṇa. Hearing this Vasudeva went to Madhurā and brought Balabhadrarāma also to Aṁbāḍi. Gargamuni then performed all those sacred rites which were usually done to boys of that age and both of them then remained in Aṁbāḍi. Several important events happened during their stay here, notable among which are: Pūtanāmokṣam (killing of the demoness Pūtanā and giving her salvation). Śakaṭāsuravadha (killing the asura, Śakaṭa), Tṛṇāvarttavadha (killing the asura, Tṛṇāvartta), Vatsāsuravadha (killing the asura, Vatsa), Bakavadha (killing the demon bird, Baka), Aghāsuravadha (killing the asura, Agha), Dhenukāsuravadha (killing the asura, Dhenuka), Kāliamardana (beating the snake, Kālia) and Pralambavadha (killing Pralamba). (See under Kṛṣṇa for more details).

Kaṁsa conducted a Cāpapūjā (worship of the bow) to kill Kṛṣṇa. It was on a festive scale and both Kṛṣṇa and Balarāma went to Madhurā to attend the same. There they killed Kaṁsa and after that went to the āśrama of Sāndīpani Maharṣi for education. When they completed their education they at the request of the preceptor gave as Gurudakṣiṇā (The fee you pay in the end for the instructions given) the lost child of the guru. Then they went to Madhurā and there several events took place, important among which was the fight between Kṛṣṇa and Jarāsandha. By this time the Yādavas were becoming lean financially and so to make some money Kṛṣṇa and Rāma went to the diamond-infested mountain of Gomantaka. On their way they met Paraśurāma doing penance under a Banyan tree. On the advice of Paraśurāma they killed Sṛgālavasudeva and got immense wealth. On their return Rāma and Kṛṣṇa along with many Yādavas went and settled down in the island, Dvārakā, in the western ocean. (Daśama Skandha, Bhāgavata).

5) Marriage. Before the advent of Balarāma and Kṛṣṇa the island Dvārakā was known as Kuśasthalī. It was ruled over by a famous Rājarṣi, Revata. This king was the son of King Ānartta and grandson of emperor Śaryāti. Revata got a hundred sons, Kukudmin being the first and a daughter named Revatī. When the time for marriage of his daughter came the King was anxious to find out a fitting husband for her and he went to Brahmaloka to take the advice of Brahmā. Revatī also accompanied him. There stupefied he saw Vedas, Yajñas, mountains, rivers, oceans, Ṛtus, all in divine figures standing before Brahmā, worshipping him. The sweet celestial songs gave them both untold happiness. He then told Brahmā the purpose of his visit and Brahmā meditating for some time told him that Balabhadrarāma, son of Vasudeva, was the only one person suited for her. The king returned to Dvārakā and gave his daughter in marriage to Balarāma. (Saptama Skandha, Devī Bhāgavata).

6) A pilgrimage. When the great Pāṇḍava-Kaurava battle started Kṛṣṇa became the charioteer of Arjuna and Balarāma went to the forest, Naimiśa. He was not much interested in the battle. At the forest of Naimiṣa he saw Sūta telling Purāṇic stories to the several sages assembled there before him. Sūta did not rise up when he saw Balarāma and the latter moved to anger very soon cut off the head of Sūta. The sages assembled there decried the act of Balarāma and lamented deeply over the incident. At this Balarāma promised that he would give birth, from the dead body of Sūta, to one who will be well versed in all the Vedas, śāstras and sciences. The sages then blessed Balarāma.

During that time there lived in the vicinity of Naimiṣa forest a demon called Balvala (Vatkala). He used to annoy the sages there and the sages requested Balarāma to put a stop to the atrocities of that demon. He immediately killed the demon by his weapon, Hala, and then raised from the dead body of Sūta a paṇḍita of great erudition. Later, to remedy the sin of killing Sūta, Balarāma, repentant, visited all the sacred places in Bhārata. Once when he heard about the grim battle between Duryodhana and Bhīmasena, he went to the battle-field and tried his best to stop the war. Disappointed he returned to Dvārakā. (Daśama Skandha, Chapter 79, Bhāgavata).

7) Death. Once the ṛṣis Nārada, Kaṇva and Viśvāmitra came to Dvārakā. To make fun of them some of the Yādavas dressed a Yādava like a pregnant woman and producing her before the sages asked them what child she would deliver. Enraged at this the munis said in one voice that she would deliver a mace and that iron mace would be the cause of the end of all Yādavas.

After the Mahābhārata battle the Yādava dynasty remained alive only for thirtysix years. After that by the curse of the brahmin the Yādavas were all killed in a drunken brawl between themselves in the very presence of Kṛṣṇa and Balabhadra. This happened on the shore of Prabhāsa tīrtha and Balarāma was sitting there then in deep meditation. Suddenly the soul of Balarāma went out from his mouth in the shape of a white serpent and the serpent entering the nether world was given a warm welcome by the prominent serpents there. (Mausala Parva, M.B.).

8) Other details.

(1) It was Balabhadrarāma who taught Bhīmasena the mace-fight. (Śloka 4, Chapter 138, Ādi Parva, M.B.).

(2) Balabhadrarāma was present along with Śrī Kṛṣṇa at the marriage of Pāñcālī. (Śloka 17, Chapter 185, Ādi Parva, M.B.).

(3) Balabhadrarāma became very indignant when he heard about Arjuna carrying away Subhadrā and it was Kṛṣṇa who pacified him. (Chapter 22, Ādi Parva, M.B.).

(4) He was present at the marriage of Abhimanyu conducted at the city of Upaplāvya. (Śloka 21, Chapter 72, Virāṭa Parva, M.B.).

(5) He was very insistent that the Pāṇḍavas and Kauravas should come to a truce. (Chapter 2, Udyoga Parva, M.B.).

(6) He witnessed the battle of maces between Duryodhana and Bhīmasena at Kurukṣetra. (Chapter 34, Śalya Parva, M.B.).

(7) Balarāma conducted a pilgrim tour and visited all the holy places of Bhārata at a time when the Pāṇḍava-Kaurava war was in full swing. (Chapter, 35-54, Śalya Parva, M.B.).

(8) Balarāma was of opinion that it was unjust of Bhīmasena to have killed Duryodhana and was about to kill Bhīmasena. (Śloka 4, Chapter 60, Śalya Parva, M.B.).

(9) Once Balarāma spoke in extolling terms about the secrets of Dharma. (Śloka 17, Chapters 126, Śalya Parva, M.B.).

(10) It was Balarāma who performed the obsequies of Abhimanyu. (Śloka 6, Chapter 62, Aśvamedha Parva, M.B.).

(11) He went to Hastināpura when Yudhiṣṭhira performed the Aśvamedha yāga. (Śloka 4, Chapter 66, Aśvamedha Parva, M.B.).

(12) Balarāma introduced Prohibition in Dvārakā. (Śloka 29, Chapter 1, Mausala Parva, M.B.).

(13) Once he made dry the river Kālindī. (See Kālindī).

BALABHADRARĀMA II. A very mighty serpent. (Śloka 37, Chapter 1, Ādi Parva, M.B.).

BALADA. The first son of the Agni, Bhānu. It is this Agni which gives life and strength to all living beings. (Śloka 10, Chapter 221, Śānti Parva, M.B.).

BALANDHARĀ. A daughter of the king of Kāśī. Let the mightiest of men marry her, said her father. Defeating all the kings who tried to take her Bhīmasena married her and Sarvaśa was the son born to Bhīmasena of Balandharā. (Śloka 70, Chapter 95, Aśvamedha Parva, M.B.).

BĀLADHI. An ancient hermit. He was powerful. He performed a severe penance for getting sons. The Devatās appeared and granted him a boon. Accordingly a son called Medhāvin was born to him. Once Medhāvin teased the great hermit Dhanuṣākṣa, who cursed him to death. (M.B., Vana Parva, Chapter 135).

BALĀHAKA I. (VALĀHAKA). A serpent famous in the Purāṇas. This serpent stays in the durbar hall of Varuṇa, worshipping him. (M.B., Sabhā Parva, Chapter 9, Stanza 9).

BALĀHAKA II. (VALĀHAKA). A brother of Jayadratha the King of Sindhu. He helped Jayadratha in kidnapping Draupadī. (M.B., Vana Parva, Chapter 265, Stanza 12).

BALĀHAKA III. (VALĀHAKA). A famous horse yoked on the right side of the chariot of Śrī Kṛṣṇa. Mention is made about this horse in M.B., Virāṭa Parva, Chapter 45, Stanza 23.

BALĀHAKA IV. A king. Once Śiva gave this king a vision of him in the shape of a cow-calf. After that in the place where Śiva appeared as calf a Śivaliṅga arose. It began to grow to the extent of an atom daily. But the growth ceased, when an outcaste who became so by Karma (action) visited it. (Skandha Purāṇa 3-2-27).

BALĀKA (VALĀKA). A forester. This forester used to go for hunting and he gave everything he got to his old parents without reserving anything for himself. One day he did not find any animal even though he had made a thorough search in the forest. He was much worried. At last he reached the bank of a river. He saw an extraordinary animal drinking water. He had never seen such an animal before. It was a peculiar creature. That creature had done penance before Brahmā, from its young age with the view of destroying everything. Brahmā appeared before the creature and granted it the boon that it would have the power to make anything blind. Brahmā also said that anybody who killed the creature would be given a place in the realm of Gods. The creature had been wandering in the forest making blind every creature it met, and one day it was drinking water and it was then that Valāka shot it down. As soon as the creature fell down the gods showered flowers, and took him to the realm of Gods in a divine chariot. (M.B., Karṇa Parva, Chapter 69).

BALĀKĀTĪRTHA. (VALĀKĀTĪRTHA). A holy place near the mountain of Gandhamādana. Those who bathe in this holy bath would become as bright and famous as devas (gods) It is mentioned so in the Mahābhārata, Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 25, Stanza 19.

BALĀKĀŚVA. (VALĀKĀŚVA). He is the grandson of the hermit Jahnu and the son of Aja otherwise called Sindhudvīpa. Balākāśva had a son called Kuśika. (M.B., Śānti Parva, Chapter 49, Stanza 3).

BĀLAKHILYA(S). (VĀLAKHILYAS). A group of hermits.

1) Origin. Sixty thousand hermits were born to Kratu, one of the Saptarṣis (seven hermits), by his wife, Santati.* They are called Bālakhilyas. Everyone of them was only the size of half a thumb, but they were as bright as the blazing sun and had attained control over their senses. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Aṁśa 1, Chapter 10).

2) Garuḍa (Eagle) and Bālakhilya(s). A story connecting the birth of Garuḍa with Bālakhilyas occurs in the Purāṇas.

Once Kaśyapa Prajāpati performed a sacrifice to obtain children. The work of bringing firewood for the sacrifice was entrusted to Indra and the other devas (Gods) and the Bālakhilyas. When Indra was heaping up on heaps pieces of big logs the Bālakhilyas who were very small were bringing in chips of wood. Seeing this Indra laughed. The Bālakhilyas got angry and stopping the work entrusted to them began to do penance with a view to create another Indra. Knowing this Indra was much flurried. He went to Kaśyapa and told him everything. Kaśyapa went to the Bālakhilyas and pacified them. At this time Vinatā, a wife of Kaśyapa, was doing penance to obtain a son. Kaśyapa said that the penance of the Bālakhilyas would not be fruitless and that as a result of their penance a son who would overpower Indra would be born to Vinatā. Accordingly a son was born to her. Garuḍa was that son. The fact that Garuḍa overthrew Indra when he went to heaven for ambrosia, is well known. (M.B., Ādi Parva, Chapter 31).

3) Routine of life. The Bālakhilyas live in the maṇḍala of Sūrya (solar region). They travel in front of the sun in the shape of birds. They wear hides of animals. They are righteous and are only as big as a thumb. They are very ardent in doing the works of devas (Gods). They are sinless. There are Bālakhilyas living in the lunar region also. They worship the Sun daily. All the world stand firm in truth because of the penance of the Bālakhilyas. (M.B., Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 141.).

*In some other Purāṇas the mother of Bālakhilyas is given the name 'Sannati'. This may be a mistake in the manuscript.

4) Other information. (1) Garuḍa (Eagle) who went to the realm of devas (gods) for Amṛta (ambrosia) took rest on the branch of a banyan tree, and that branch was broken from the tree. Sixty thousand Bālakhilyas were doing penance hanging head downwards on that branch. Garuḍa knew this only after the branch was broken. Fearing the curse form them he took the branch in his beak and flew about here and there. At last, according to the advice of Kaśyapa, he took the branch to the mount Gandhamādana and without causing any harm to the small hermits placed it there. (M.B., Ādi Parva, Chapter 30).

(2) When Duṣyanta entered the hermitage of Kaṇva he saw the Bālakhilyas doing panance, hanging down on the trees in the vicinity. (M.B., Ādi Parva, Chapter 7).

(3) In Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa, Bālakāṇḍa, Sarga 51, it is mentioned that the Bālakhilyas were engaged in prayer and meditations and offering oblations to fire in the hermitage of Vasiṣṭha.

(4) It is mentioned in Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa, Bālakāṇḍa, Sarga 51, that in the period of the Rāmāyaṇa, in South India, when Rāvaṇa was going to the house of Mārīca, he saw the Bālakhilyas doing penance.

(5) The Bālakhilyas learned the Vedas and Śāstras (scriptures) sitting in the chariot of the sun. (Kampa Rāmāyaṇa, Pūrvakāṇḍa).

BĀLAKHILYA SAṀHITĀ. See the word Guruparamparā

BALĀKI. (VALĀKI). One of the hundred sons of Dhṛtarāṣṭra. Mention is made in the Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 185, Stanza 2, that Valāki had been present on the occasion of the svayaṁvara (wedding) of Draupadī.

BĀLĀKI. A hermit. He is called Gārgya also as he is a son of Garga. He acquired much knowledge and so he became arrogant. Because of this some called him Dṛptabālāki.

Once the hermit went to the King of Kāśī and told him that he would impart to him the knowledge of Brahma. The king replied that he would give thousand cows in return. Bālāki declared that the sun-god was Brahmā. The king said that he had known it. Everything that Bālāki said had been known to the king earlier. So, in the end Bālāki had to become the disciple of the King. Then the King took him to a man who was sleeping. The King called the sleeping man. But he did not wake up. The King woke him up and then asked the hermit, where he had gone when he was sleeping. Bālāki could not say where men go when they are sleeping and where they return from when they wake up. The king said "In our sleep we attain 'Sārūpya' (assimilation to god). But we are not aware of it. Though we get eternal bliss we do not know it. If we can get eternal bliss when we keep awake that is 'Ātmajñāna' (knowledge of Supreme Soul). As the flames emanate from fire, and as the spider weaves its net and sits in its centre, the soul creates everything, controls everything and pervades everything." (Bṛhadāraṇyakopaniṣad).

BALĀKṢA. An ancient king of Bhārata. While the Pāṇḍavas were living incognito in the kingdom of Virāṭa, Duryodhana and his brothers stole the cows of Virāṭa, in consequence of which there was a battle. The devas (gods) came in planes to see the fight between Arjuna and the teacher Kṛpa. It is mentioned in the Mahābhārata, Virāṭa Parva, Chapter 56, that the King Balākṣa was there with the gods when they came to see the fight.

BALAMITRA. A king. Śatrughna who led the yāga horse of Śrī Rāma fought with Vīramaṇi and at that time Balamitra fought on the side of Vīramaṇi. (Chapter 40, Pātāla Khaṇḍa, Padma Purāṇa).

BALAMODAKA. The son of Suratha, the King of Kuṇḍalanagarī. (Padma Purāṇa, Chapter 40).

BALĀNĪKA (VALĀNĪKA) I. A son of the King Drupada. Mention is made in Mahābhārata, Droṇa Parva, Chapter 156, that Aśvatthāmā killed him in the battle of Kurukṣetra.

BALĀNĪKA (VALĀNĪKA) II. A brother of Matsya, the King of Virāṭa. During the battle of Kurukṣetra he had taken the side of the Pāṇḍavas and had fought against the Kauravas. (M.B., Droṇa Parva, Chapter 158).

BĀLASVĀMĪ. A warrior of Subrahmaṇya. (M.B., Śalya Parva, Chapter 45, Stanza 74).

BĀLĀVATĪ. The daughter of hermit Kaṇva. She did penance to please the Sun to obtain a husband of a very good nature. The Sun appeared before her and gave her some dates and asked her to prepare food with them and bring them back. Bālāvatī began to cook the dates. Though all the faggots she had gathered were consumed it was not properly boiled. As there was no more firewood she put her leg into the oven. Seeing this the Sun-God was pleased and said "All your wishes will be realized". From that day onwards that place was called by the name 'Bālāpa'. (Padma Purāṇa, Uttara Khaṇḍa, Chapter 152).

BĀLAVINAṢṬAKA. The hero of a story, given in Kathāsaritsāgara, Kathāmukhalambaka, Taraṅga six, to show that it is not good to make others angry. The story is as follows :—

Long ago there was a Brahmin named Rudra Śarmā. He had two wives. Both gave birth to a son each. The elder wife died and her son also was brought up by the younger wife. Being jealous she fed the child with food too hard for the child and it became lean with stomach swollen and the bones projecting. It looked an uncouth figure. Seeing him like this Rudra Śarmā called him Bālavinaṣṭaka (one who is lost when he is a boy). He gradually grew up. When he was only five years old he showed extraordinary intelligence. One day he decided to teach his foster-mother a lesson. On that day he was sitting alone on the lap of his father. He said to his father, "Father, I have two fathers". Thenceforward the father began to doubt his wife, that she was having a lover. He grew jealous. He would not talk to her. The foster-mother thought Bālavinaṣṭaka was the cause for this change in her husband's behaviour. One day she called the boy to her mildly and asked him for the reason for the change in the behaviour of his father towards her. He said that he would bring about a change in the behaviour of his father if he would be cared for properly. She agreed. Then he took a mirror and held it before his father and when the reflection of his father fell in the mirror he said, "Father, I have two fathers". Immediately the doubt of his father was removed. It is not right to make even a boy angry.

BĀLĀYANI. An ācārya (Teacher). In Bhāgavata, Skandha 10, it is seen that Bālāyani was taught Bālakhilya saṁhitā by Bāṣkala.

BĀLAYOGĪ. A king of the Aṅga dynasty. He was the son of Bali, who had six sons named Aṅga, Vaṅga, Kaliṅga, Puṇḍra, Bāleya and Bālayogī. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 277).

BALĀYUS. One of the eight sons born to Purūravas by Urvaśī. (Padma Purāṇa, Sṛṣṭi, Chapter 12).

BĀLHĪKA. (BĀLHIKA) I. A powerful king born in the family of Ahara. (M.B., Ādi Parva, Chapter 67, Stanza 25).

BĀLHĪKA II. A king who in his previous life was the asura called Krodhavaśa. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Droṇa Parva, Chapter 96, Stanza 12, that this King helped the Kauravas in the battle of Kurukṣetra.

BĀLHĪKA III. A king who was the third son of Janamejaya and the grandson of King Kuru. (M.B., Ādi Parva, Chapter 94, Stanza 56).

BĀLHĪKA IV. A son of Pratīpa, a King of the Kuru dynasty. He had two brothers, Devāpi and Śantanu. It is said in Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 94 that Sunandā, the princess of the country of Śibi was their mother. Mention is made in Bhāgavata, Skandha 9, Chapter 22, Stanza 18 that this king Bālhīka had a son named Somadatta. Bālhīka was a friend of the Kauravas and the Pāṇḍavas. Bālhīka exhorted them strongly, not to engage in a battle. Still, when the battle was begun, Bālhīka sided with the Kauravas. Bālhīka was once elected as the general of eleven divisions of the army of Duryodhana.

The achievements of Bālhīka in the battle of Kurukṣetra are given below :—

1) There was a combat on the first day of the battle between Bālhīka and Dhṛṣṭaketu. (M.B., Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 45, Stanza 38).

2) Bhīmasena defeated Bālhīka. (M.B., Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 104, Stanza 26).

3) Fought with Drupada. (Mahābhārata, Droṇa Parva, Chapter 25, Stanza 18).

4) Bālhīka fought with Śikhaṇḍī. (Mahābhārata, Droṇa Parva, Chapter 96, Stanza 7).

5) Bhīmasena killed Bālhīka. (Droṇa Parva, Chapter 157, Stanza 15).

BĀLHĪKA V. The charioteer of Dharmaputra. (M.B., Sabhā Parva, Chapter 58, Stanza 20).

BĀLHĪKADEŚA. A country in ancient Bhārata. Mention is made about this country in Mahābhārata, Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 9.

BALI (MAHĀBALI) I. An emperor of the Asuras. He was the son of Virocana and the grandson of Prahlāda.

1) Genealogy and Birth. The Asuras or the Daityas are the sons born, of his wife Diti, to Kaśyapa Prajāpati, son of Marīci and grandson of Brahmā. There were so many Asuras born as the sons of Diti. But among them Hiraṇyākṣa, Hiraṇyakaśipu, Śūrapadmā, Siṁhavaktra, Tārakāsura and Gomukha were notorious. Of their sisters Siṁhikā and Ajamukhī were famous.

Four sons called Prahlāda, Saṁhrāda, Hrāda and Anuhrāda were born to Hiraṇyakaśipu. Virocana was the son of Prahlāda and Mahābali was the son of Virocana. Bāṇa was born from Mahābali and four crores of Asuras called Nivātakavacas were born from Bāṇa.

2) The churning of the ocean. Once Mahābali had stolen the wealth of Devendra. While he was carrying it to his house, it all fell in the ocean. Mahāviṣṇu ordered the devas (gods) to recover the lost wealth from the ocean. It was impossible to churn the ocean without the help of Mahābali. So the devas went to Mahābali and sought his help. Mahābali agreed to help them.

The real aim of the devas was not to regain the lost wealth but to obtain the celestial nectar known as Nectar of Immortality (Amṛta) and to defeat the Asuras in battle. On the side of the Asuras there was the knowledge of the Mṛtasañjīvanī (life-restoring remedy). So the dead were being brought to life. But it was not possible for devas to do so. It was to make up this deficiency, by obtaining Ambrosia from the sea, that the devas tried to churn the sea, under the pretence of recovering the lost wealth. Mention is made in the Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Aṁśa 1, Chapter 9 and Matsya Purāṇa, Chapters 250 and 251 that these events took place during the regime of the Indra named Mantradruma in the Cākṣuṣamanvantara (the period of the manu named Cākṣuṣa).

3) War with Indra. The great teacher Śukra again anointed Bali, who was brought to life again, as Indra. After that he performed the sacrifice of Viśvajit (conqueror of the world) on behalf of Bali. Assuming the responsibilities of government, Bali performed one hundred Aśvamedha yāgas (Horse sacrifices) (Bhāgavata, Skandha 8).

After the Viśvajit sacrifice, Yajñadeva (god of sacrifice) who was greatly pleased at the sacrifice, presented Bali with a divine chariot, equal in all aspects to that of Indra, a golden bow, two quivers, which would never become empty and a divine armour, and his grandfather gave him a garland that would never fade, and the teacher Śukra gave him a divine conch, and Brahmā presented a garland. (M.B., Śānti Parva, Chapter 216).

4) Attainment of the Position of Indra. Mahāviṣṇu had not been on good terms with the devas, for a time. Taking this opportunity, Śukrācārya the teacher of the Asuras, persuaded Bali to engage the devas in a battle. Bali defeated the devas completely in a pitched battle.

Thus the realm of the gods came under the sway of Mahābali. Once, during that period Bali invited his grandfather Prahlāda to heaven and requested him to accept the most honourable seat there. Prahlāda accepted his invitation and anointed Bali as Indra. Bali enquired of Prahlāda as to the method of carrying on the government of heaven. Prahlāda said thus in reply: "Only virtue will always win. Rule the kingdom without deviating from virtue." (Vāmana Purāṇa, Chapter 74). Because Bali had ruled his kingdom according to the advice of Prahlāda, he became famous in the three worlds. (Vāmana Purāṇa, Chapter 75).

According to the version of Bhāgavata, Prahlāda when he grew old, left his kingdom in the hands of his son Virocana and went to the forest for penance. Virocana was not as famous as Prahlāda. After the period of Virocana, Mahābali came to the throne. He was a mighty king. Within a short time he became the emperor of the Asuras. It was during this period that the churning of the Milk Sea took place. The Asuras and the Devas (gods) sat on either side and using the mount Mandara as churn-drill, churned the Milk Sea and obtained Amṛta (the celestial nectar of immortality). A battle took place between the Asuras and the Devas for the possession of Amṛtakalaśa (the Ambrosia and the container) and the emperor Mahābali was killed in the battle. The Asuras carried the dead body of Mahā.

bali to his capital, where Śukrācārya (their teacher-priest Śukra) brought him to life again by the help of sacred herbs. Mahābali instantly waged another war, fiercer than the previous ones, with the devas, and having defeated them, he drove them out of their realm and brought it under control. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 8).

5) The curse of Prahlāda. As the whole of heaven came under the sway of Bali, the devas began to leave the country one by one. Everybody was happy and comfortable under the rule of Bali. But the devas and Brāhmaṇas were denied the privileges they deserved. They approached Viṣṇu and represented their grievances. Viṣṇu told them thus : "Bali is devoted to me. Still, to redress your grievances I shall take the incarnation of Vāmana shortly."

In course of time the Asuras and their countries began to be weakened. Seeing the approach of destruction emperor Bali became thoughtful. He approached Prahlāda to learn the reason. Prahlāda told Bali thus: "Lord Viṣṇu is now staying in the womb of Aditi for his incarnation as Vāmana. That is why the country and the Asuras are subjected to destruction. Hearing this Mahābali said: "Our Rākṣasas are more powerful than that Viṣṇu." Hearing these haughty words of Bali, Prahlāda got angry and cursed Bali "Let your country be destroyed." Bali requested Prahlāda to pardon him. Prahlāda advised Bali "You will get salvation only by relying on Viṣṇu". (Vāmana Purāṇa 77).

6) Defeated by Vāmana. The defeated devas had taken refuge in forests. Aditi the mother of the devas was very sorry at this. She shed tears before her husband Kaśyapa Prajāpati, who advised his wife to take a fast of twelve days, and taught her the rules and rituals of the fast. Accordingly she took the fast, Viṣṇu appeared before her and asked her what boon she wanted. She requested Viṣṇu to take birth as her son, to drive away Bali and to restore her sons, the devas (gods), to their kingdom of heaven. Mahāviṣṇu agreed.

Aditi became pregnant and gave birth to the son Vāmana. He was an incarnation of Mahāviṣṇu. [The 5th incarnation (avatāra) of Viṣṇu].

At this time Mahābali was performing a sacrifice on the bank of the river Narmadā. Vāmana came to the place of sacrifice in the dress of a hermit boy and told Mahābali that he was a helpless hermit boy and requested that he might be given three steps of ground. Mahābali was pleased with the boy and told him that he was willing to give the boy even the country called Bhṛṅgāraka and that he was prepared to forego the kingly pleasures for the boy. The hermit boy did not show any desire for them. So many gathered round them to witness this sight. The teacher Śukrācārya called Mahābali and said that the boy was a cheat and that his request should not be granted. But Mahābali decided to grant the wish of the boy and as a token of his gift he began to offer the boy water from a waterpot. Then the teacher got into the mouth of the pot in the shape of a mote and water would not flow freely out of the mouth of the pot. Knowing this Vāmana took a grass of Darbha and pushed it at the mouth of the pot. The grass pierced one eye of Śukrācārya. From that time onwards Śukrācārya had only one eye. Water flowed freely into the hands of Vāmana. Śukra got angry and cursed Bali. Vāmana began to measure the ground and simultaneously began to grow. The asuras who were horrified at this, began to attack Vāmana with anything they could lay hands on. Still Vāmana was growing. Finally he became an immensely large being. With one step he measured the whole of earth and with the second step he took the whole of heaven. Then he asked Bali, where to place the third step. Mahābali said that he had only his body left, as his own, and that Vāmana might take it and complete three steps. Vāmana placed his foot on the head of Bali and pushed him down to Pātāla (the Netherworld). Thenceforward the asuras became the inhabitants of Pātāla. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 8).

7) Bali and Rāvaṇa. Once Rāvaṇa visited Bali who was under custody in Pātāla, and said to him, "I have come to save you from here. So get yourself free from the custody of Mahāviṣṇu, with my help." Hearing this, Bali asked Rāvaṇa to fetch the two earrings of Hiraṇyakaśipu, which were shining like blazing fire a little away from them. Rāvaṇa moved forward to take them. But he fell unconscious. Bali caused him to recover and said: "These earrings were worn by my great grandfather Hiraṇyakaśipu. How could you, who are not even capable of taking his earrings, save me from his slayer, Viṣṇu? Viṣṇu is Almighty and All-powerful and Supreme Lord of everything." Hearing this, Rāvaṇa was filled with shame and he returned. (Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa, Uttara Kāṇḍa, Prakṣipta Sarga).

8) Bali born as a Gardabha (Ass). Bali, who was fallen from power took birth in the womb of an ass and roamed about. Brahmā instructed Indra to find out Bali. (M.B., Śānti Parva, Chapters 216-218).

9) Other information.

(1) Mahābali shines in the durbar of Varuṇa. (M.B., Sabhā Parva, Chapter 9, Stanza 12).

(2) Once Mahābali went to Prahlāda and repented of his sins and begged for pardon. Then he began to make enquiries on spiritual matters. (M.B., Vana Parva, Chapter 28, Stanza 3).

(3) From his childhood Mahābali was a hater of the Brāhmaṇas. (M.B., Śānti Parva, Chapter 90, Stanza 24).

(4) Once Mahābali was engaged in a serious contest with Indra. (M.B., Śānti Parva, Chapter 223).

(5) After having lost his kingdom Mahābali ridiculed Indra in various ways. (M.B., Śānti Parva, Chapter 225, Stanza 30).

(6) Once Mahābali talked with Śukrācārya about giving gifts of flower, smoke and light. (M.B., Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 98, Stanza 15).

(7) Lakṣmī Devī had forsaken Mahābali because he behaved haughtily towards Brāhmaṇas. (M.B., Śānti Parva, Chapters 216-218).

(8) In the religious Books such as Yogavāsiṣṭha the story of Mahābali is given to illustrate disinterestedness (Anāsakti).

BALI II. A hermit. It is mentioned in the Mahābhārata, Sabhā Parva, Chapter 4, Stanza 10, that this hermit lived in Hastināpura.

BALI III. An incarnation of Śiva. Śiva incarnated in the hermitage of the Bālakhilyas in the mount of Gandhamādana during the period of Varāha Kalpa (Kalpa—one day of Brahmā or the period of 14 manus). It is seen in Śiva Purāṇa, Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa that Bali had four sons, called Sudhāmā, Kaśyapa, Vasiṣṭha and Virajas.

BALI IV. A king of the Yādavas. He was the son of Kṛtavarman. Bali married Cārumatī, the daughter of Rukmiṇī. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 10).

BALI V. A famous monkey-king of the country of Ānava. This King who was the son of Sutapas was a contemporary of the great King Sagara.

Bali did penance and Brahmā appeared before him, and blessed him and said, "You will become a great sage and will live till the end of the Kalpa (a period of world age). Your power will be inimitable. Nobody will overthrow you in battle. You will be loved by your subjects and they will obey you. You will be well-versed in the knowledge of law and its observance and the learned will recognize your knowledge. You will re-establish caste system in your kingdom." (Harivaṁśa, 1. 31.35.39).

Sudeṣṇā was the wife of Bali. The couple had no children. At last they appealed to Dīrghatamas a hermit, from whom they got five sons called Aṅga, Vaṅga, Kaliṅga, Pāṇḍu and Suhma (Brahma Purāṇa). In Bhāgavata it is mentioned that he had one more son called Andhra.

Bali left his body at the end of the Kalpa and entered heaven. Before his death he had divided his kingdom equally among his sons. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 9, Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 92).

BĀLI. A mighty monkey-king.

1) Birth. Bāli is the son of Indra. There is a story about the birth of Bāli as follows:—

Śīlavatī who was devoted to her husband once carried her husband Ugratapas who was a leper, on her shoulder to the house of a harlot one night. On the way they saw the hermit Aṇimāṇḍavya, who had been placed on a trident by the order of the King, beating his limbs with agony. Lying on the trident he saw Ugratapas. Seeing the amorous nature of Ugratapas Aṇimāṇḍavya cursed him that before sunrise he would die. Śīlavatī who was a woman of great purity and loyalty hearing the curse said, "Let the Sun not rise tomorrow."

Next day, though it was time the sun did not rise. The night prolonged. Aruṇa the charioteer was ready at the usual time but saw the Sun sitting motionless. Wasting time was intolerable to the charioteer. So he decided to make the best use of the time at his disposal by witnessing a little of the dance of the celestial beauties in the realm of the devas. But males had no admittance there. So Aruṇa took the shape of a beautiful woman and got in. Seeing a new person, very beautiful to look at, sitting in the midst of the celestial maids Indra grew amorous. He secretly took her to a dark place and a son was born out of that coition. That son is Bāli. When Aruṇa returned the Sun was standing full of anger. Being afraid of him Aruṇa confessed everything to the Sun. When he heard the whole story the Sun expressed his desire to see that figure which Aruṇa had adopted. Accordingly Aruṇa again became a woman. The Sun also had coition with her and Sugrīva was the son born out of this coition. Bāli and Sugrīva were brought up by Ahalyādevī in the hermitage of Gautama.

At that time a monkey-king named Ṛkṣarāja had been ruling over the forest with Kiṣkindha as his capital. He had no sons and so he approached Indra and placed before him his grievances. Indra brought Bāli and Sugrīva from the hermitage of Gautama and handed them over to Ṛkṣarajas. (M.B., Ādi Parva, Chapter 107; Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa, Chapter 42; Uttara Rāmāyaṇa and Kampa Rāmāyaṇa, Pūrvakāṇḍa).

2) Marriage and Kingship. Owing to difference of opinion, Bāli defeated the asuras who came for the churning of the Sea of Milk. The devas who were pleased at this, gave Bāli, a woman named Tārā, derived from the Sea of Milk. Thus Tārā became his wife and he got a son by her, named Aṅgada who became famous as a mighty warrior-prince. Sugrīva married Rumā. At that time Ṛkṣarāja died and Bāli became King. (Kampa Rāmāyaṇa, Pūrvakāṇḍa).

3) Enmity with Hanūmān. It was during this period that Hanumān was born. While Śiva and Pārvatī were living in the forest as monkeys Pārvatī got with child. The child was given to Bhagavān Vāyu (Wind-God) with the womb. Vāyu placed the womb with the child in Añjanā Devī's stomach. Nārada informed Bāli all these things. Bāli thought that his position would be lost, if a being born of Śiva, grew up in the form of a monkey. In accordance with the advice of Nārada, Bāli melted Pañcaloha (Five metals) and passed it into the womb of Añjanā. Still the child in the womb was not killed as it was the sperm of Śiva. The molten metals became earrings of the child in the womb. (Kampa Rāmāyaṇa, Pūrvakāṇḍa).

4) Sugrīva separated. Once, the son of Maya, the carpenter of the asuras, wanted to defeat Bāli by a combat or cunning sleights as he was an expert wrestler and magician. He came to Kiṣkindhā in the midnight and standing before the palace, challenged Bāli, who getting angry came out followed by Sugrīva. Seeing the two of them the magician began to run. Bāli and Sugrīva chased him to a cave. Placing Sugrīva at the mouth of the cave Bāli followed the magician. Before going, Bāli said to Sugrīva: "Brother, I will go in and kill the Magician and return. Be brave and stay here. If the asura dies milk will appear at the mouth of the cave and if he kills me blood will be seen. If the latter happens close the mouth of the cave firmly and return to Kiṣkindhā and live happily there."

Bāli did not return even after a year. Finally the asura was killed. But by the cunning sleights of the magician it was blood that appeared at the mouth of the cave. Thinking that his brother was slain by the magician Sugrīva felt sorry. Then he closed the mouth of the cave firmly with stone and returned to Kiṣkīndhā. Hearing about the death of Bāli the monkeys anointed Sugrīva as King. After a time Bāli returned stronger than before and saw the mouth of the cave closed. He thought that Sugrīva had closed the mouth of the cave deliberately to kill him and to usurp his throne. Bāli reached Kiṣkindhā and drove Sugrīva away. Sugrīva fled to Mount Ṛśyamūkācala which was prohibited area for Bāli due to a curse. Mātaṅga had cursed him that if he entered that mountain his head would be broken. So Sugrīva was safe in that mountain.

The desire of Bāli to take revenge on Sugrīva increased everyday. Everyday he used to go to the four sea-shores and conduct bath, prayer, meditation etc. and return to Kiṣkindhā within a short time. With one jump he will reach one place from another, and in each jump he would put one step on the head of Sugrīva in the Ṛśyamūkācala. Hanumān was the minister of Sugrīva. He was much annoyed at this habitual torture of Sugrīva. One day as usual Bāli was stepping on the head of Sugrīva to jump to another place, when Hanumān caught hold of Bāli by his waist. Hanumān thought that if Bāli was dragged down on the mountain somehow or other, his head would break and there would be an end of his wicked deeds. Bāli thought that if he could jump into Kiṣkindhā with Hanumān it would be easy for him to destroy Sugrīva. But both were of equal strength. So Bālī did not jump with Hanumān to Kiṣkindhā and Hanumān did not drag Bāli to the ground. Both did not know how to stop the fight. At last they made a treaty. Bāli agreed to stop torturing Sugrīva and Hanumān agreed not to cause any trouble to Bāli. Both returned to their own places. After that Sugrīva lived in Ṛśyamūkācala with his ministers and Bāli in Kiṣkindhā. (Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa, Kiṣkındhā Kāṇḍa, Sarga 10; Kampa Rāmāyaṇa, Pūrvakāṇḍa).

5) Bāli was cursed by Mātaṅga the great hermit. See the word Dundubhi para 4.

6) Defeating Rāvaṇa. Bāli had got a boon from the Gods that he would get half the strength of his opponent who stood face to face with him in fight. This power enabled Bāli to defeat all his foes and bring the countries in all directions under his sway. Rāvaṇa heard about this and decided to overpower Bāli somehow or other and approached Kiṣkindhā. Bāli knew this. His minister, Tāran, went to Rāvaṇa and told him about the power of Bāli and of the boon by which Bāli got half the strength of his opponent. When Rāvaṇa heard of this peculiar boon he decided to kill Bāli. His idea was to kill Bāli by going behind him when he went to the sea-shore to take bath in the morning.

Next morning Bāli went to the eastern sea-shore and began his prayer and meditation. Rāvaṇa approached Bāli from behind and sat close to him. Perhaps the idea of Rāvaṇa might have been to take Bāli by his tail and beat him on the ground. Bāli knew that Rāvaṇa was sitting behind him. But pretending that he knew nothing put his long tail on the body of Rāvaṇa, and passed it lengthwise and breadthwise through every part of his body and tied him like a bundle of faggots, and made a jump into the air. Within a short time he visited all the usual places and reached Kiṣkindhā. Seeing Rāvaṇa hanging by the tail of Bāli, even the women folk laughed. Thus Rāvaṇa admitted defeat. Bāli let him go unhurt. (Uttara Rāmāyaṇa).

7) Death. After Sītā had been stolen away Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa wandered about in the forest. Then they met with Hanumān, who took them to his King Sugrīva. Śrī Rāma and Sugrīva entered into a treaty, by which Śrī Rāma was to kill Bāli and to restore to Sugrīva his wife who was under the custody of Bāli, and to make him the King of Kiṣkindhā, in return for which Sugrīva and his men had to help Śrī Rāma to find out and recover Sītā. In accordance with the conditions of the treaty, Śrī Rāma and Sugrīva reached Kiṣkindhā, to confront with Bāli. Śrī Rāma and Sugrīva had hit up on a plan, by which Śrī Rāma was to shoot Bāli down, when Sugrīva was engaged in boxing with Bāli. Sugrīva challenged Bāli to a single combat. Bāli came out and a horrible boxing began between the two. But Srī Rāma could not distinguish one from the other. Thier faces were so alike. Sugrīva, being defeated, receded from fight. Śrī Rāma and Sugrīva returned to Ṛśyamūkācala. Surgīva spoke ill of Śrī Rāma. But Śrī Rāma revealed the truth, and Sugrīva believed it. Next day morning both of them started for Kiṣkindhā to kill Bāli. Śrī Rāma had put a flower garland around the neck of Sugrīva to distinguish him from Bāli. This time Tārā tried to the utmost to dissuade Bāli from fighting. But without paying any heed to her words Bāli engaged Sugrīva in fighting. Śrī Rāma, sitting in ambush, instantly sent an arrow to the breast of Bāli who looked to the side from which the arrow came. Before falling down, looking at Śrī Rāma Bāli said "It is not right on the part of the King of Ayodhyā to have shot an arrow from ambush". Hearing that Śrī Rāma said, "If you see me face to face you will become devoted to me. It is not right to kill one's devotee. You are a friend of Rāvaṇa, who as you know, is my foe. If I let you alone Rāvaṇa is likely to get your help. Besides, you have a boon that you will get half the strength of the foe who faces you, and as such you cannot be killed by anybody in direct fight. It is unavoidable for the safety of Sugrīva, for my interest, for the protection of the world at large, and for the preservation of law and order that you should be killed. Was it not a violation of duty on your part to steal the wife of Sugrīva ?"

Bāli fell down. Immediately Tārādevī and Aṅgada arrived there. Tārā spoke very harsh words to Śrī Rāma. At last Bāli entrusted Tārā and Aṅgada with Śrī Rāma and then he died. (Kampa Rāmāyaṇa, Kiṣkindhākāṇḍa).

BALĪHAṀ. A dynasty of Kṣatriyas. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Udyoga Parva, Chapter 74, Stanza 14 that there was a king named Arkaja in this dynasty.

BĀLIŚIKHA. A serpent born to Kaśyapa prajāpati of his wife Kadru. (M.B., Ādi Parva, Chapter 35, Stanza 8).

BALIVĀK. A hermit. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Sabhā Parva, Chapter 4, Stanza 14 that this hermit had been a member of the durbar of Yudhiṣṭhira.

BALLĀLA. Son of a Vaiśya named Kalyāṇa. From childhood Ballāla was an ardent devotee of Gaṇapati. When he was a child he used to gather pebbles and make a heap and then worship it, imagining it to be Gaṇeśa (Gaṇapati).

His parents did not like this. They tried their best to dissuade him from this habit. Once they tied him to a tree and gave him severe cuts. But their attempts were futile. One day an image of Gaṇapati arose in the place where the child used to worship. (Gaṇeśa Purāṇa 1 : 2).

BALLAVA (VALLAVA). A country in Bhārata. Mention is made about this country in Mahābhārata, Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 9.

BALLAVA (VALLAVA). This is the pseudo-name assumed by Bhīmasena, while the Pāṇḍavas were living in pseudonymity in the kingdom of Virāṭa. In some Purāṇas this name is shown as 'Valala'. (M.B., Virāṭa Parva, Chapter 2, Stanza 1).

BALOTKAṬĀ. A female attendant of Subrahmaṇya. (M.B., Śalya Parva, Chapter 46, Stanza 23).

BALVALA (VALKALA). An asura. This asura had been tormenting the hermits of the forest of Naimiśa.

This asura was killed by Balabhadrarāma.* For detailed story see para 6 of the word Balabhadrarāma.

BĀṆA (BĀṆABHAṬṬA) I. A Sanskrit poet who lived in the 7th century A.D. He was a member of the assembly of emperor Harṣavardhana. 'Harṣacarita' (prose) is the most important work of Bāṇa. Though many of the descriptions in this book contain exaggerations it affords plenty of scope for investigation into the features of ancient Sanskrit literature. He has mentioned about Vyāsa, Bhaṭṭāra-hariścandra, Sātavāhana, Pravarasena, Bhāsa, Kālidāsa and such others.

Harṣacarita, in a sense, is a Romance. It is divided into eight Ucchvāsas. From the first two or three chapters informations could be had of Bāṇabhaṭṭa. His mother Rājyadevī died when he was a little boy. At the age of fourteen his father also died. After that he arrived at the palace of Harṣa. The story of Harṣacarita begins with the death of Prabhākara-Vardhana, father of Harṣa. The Book ends with the story incomplete. Harṣacarita is the only historic prose work available in Sanskrit.

BĀṆA II. A mighty and powerful Asura.

1) Genealogy and birth. Descended from Mahāviṣṇu in the following order:Brahmā-Marīci- Kaśyapa-Hiraṇyakaśipu-Prahlāda-Virocana-Mahābali-Bāṇa.

2) Getting a boon. Bāṇa began his reign with the city of Śoṇitapura as his capital. Then he went to the vicinity of the Himālayas and began to do penance thinking of Śiva. Śiva made his appearance and asked him what he wanted. He requested that he should be considered as the son of Pārvatī and that he should be given thousand hands so as to destroy all his enemies. Śiva granted him the boon. From that day onwards Pārvatī considered him as the younger brother of Subrahmaṇya. He returned to his Kingdom and began to reign.

3) Battle with Śrī Kṛṣṇa and his fall. (See the word Aniruddha).

4) Other information. (1) In the Purāṇas Bāṇāsura is often called by the name Mahākāla, which is the name of an attendant of Śiva. (M.B., Ādi Parva, Chapter 65, Stanza 20).

(2) Śukrācārya (the teacher of the Asuras) always worked for the uplift of Bāṇa. (M.B., Sabhā Parva, Chapter 38, Stanza 29).

(3) In the Battle with Śrī Kṛṣṇa, Bāṇa was helped by Śiva, Subrahmaṇya, and the Gods like Agni (fire) and others. (M.B., Sabhā Parva, Chapter 38).

(4) Śrī Kṛṣṇa cut down the thousand hands of Bāṇa with his Cakrāyudha (the wheel weapon). (M.B., Sabhā Parva, Chapter 38).

(5) Bāṇa often stood under the cover of the mountain of Krauñca and attacked the devas (gods). So once Subrahmaṇya had to cut the mountain Krauñca with his arrows. (M.B., Śalya Parva, Chapter 46, Stanza 82).

BĀṆA III. A warrior of Subrahmaṇya. Mention is made about this Bāṇa in Mahābhārata, Śalya Parva, Chapter 45, Stanza 67.

BĀṆA IV. An asura. During the regime of Śrī Rāma this Asura fought against the King and his brothers. A Śivaliṅga had been consecrated in the throat of this asura. So it was not possible for Lakṣmaṇa to defeat him though he had fought with him for so many days. Lakṣmaṇa heard an etherial voice saying, "Unless and until the image of Śivaliṅga is removed from his throat Bāṇa could not be killed." By the operation of arrows Lakṣmaṇa smashed the image of Śivaliṅga in his throat. With the same arrow he cut the throat of the asura also and thus Bāṇa was killed. (Kampa Rāmāyaṇa, Uttara Kāṇḍa).

BANDHUDĀYĀDA. A son who can claim to be a heir. The Purāṇas state about six different kinds of Bandhudāyādas.

1) Svayaṁjāta. A son born to one's wife without a progenitor.

2) Praṇīta. A son born to one's wife by the blessing of any holy man.

3) Putrikāputra. Son of one's daughter.

4) Paunarbhava. A son born after a re-marriage.

5) Kānīna. A son born before marriage.

6) Bhāñja. Son of one's sister. All these sons are heirs. (Chapter 119, Adi Parva, M.B.).

BANDHUMĀN. A king of the country of Videha. (Chapter 6, Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa).

BANDHUMATĪ. A lady attendant of Vāsavadattā, wife of Udayana. (See Vāsavadattā).

BARBARA. A country of purāṇic fame. The people living there were called Barbaras. They were considered as low caste people. There is also a statement that these people were born of the sides of the cow, Nandinī. (Śloka 37, Chapter 174, Ādi Parva, M.B.). During the victory march of the Pāṇḍavas Bhīmasena conquered the Barbaras. Nakula also conquered these people. (Chapter 32, Sabhā Parva, M.B.). In the Rājasūya yajña of Dharmaputra the Barbaras were present with gifts.

BARBARIKA. Son of Maurvī born of Ghaṭotkaca, son of Bhīma. Skanda Purāṇa gives the following details about him.

Barbarika was a Yakṣa in his previous life. Once the devas unable to bear the insufferable harm done to them by the Dānavas approached Lord Mahāviṣṇu for help and then the Yakṣa who was present there at that time said with arrogance, "There is no need for Viṣṇu to curb the activities of the Dānavas. I shall do it myself." Hearing those arrogant words Brahmā cursed him saying that in his next life he would be killed by Viṣṇu.

True to the curse the Yakṣa was born in his next life as Barbarika, son of Ghaṭotkaca. To lessen the force of the curse Kṛṣṇa advised him to worship Devī. At last pleasing the goddess by the kindly help of a brahmin named Vijaya Barbarika killed a demoness called Mahājihva and a demon of name Repalendra. The brāhmin further gave him a weapon named Vibhūti which could split the vital centres of the body of an enemy and said, "Use this weapon against the Kauravas who oppose the Pāṇḍavas."

Once Barbarika defeated his grandfather Bhīma in a battle and greatly grieved over the injury done started to commit suicide. Then Devī appeared before him and reminded him thus, "You will get salvation only if you are killed by Śrī Kṛṣṇa and so desist from committing suicide."

* In the original of Bhāgavata this name is given as Balvala. But in the Malayalam translation the name used is "Valkala".

The great war started and Barbarika fighting on the side of the Pāṇḍavas started using his weapon Vibhūti. He sent it against all excepting the Pāṇḍavas, Kṛpācārya and Aśvatthāmā. He did not leave even Kṛṣṇa alone and the weapon fell on the feet of Kṛṣṇa also. Enraged at this Kṛṣṇa used his Sudarśana Cakra and cut off his head ; at once Devī appeared and brought him to life. After the great battle on the advice of Kṛṣṇa Barbarika went and lived in Guptakṣetra.

BARHAṆĀŚVA. A king born of the dynasty of emperor Pṛthu. Descending in order : Pṛthu-Viśvarandhi-Candra-Yuvanāśva-Śāvanta - Bṛhadaśva - Dhundhumāra (alias Valayāśva) - Dṛḍhāśva - Haryaśva - Nikumbha and to Nikumbha was born Barhaṇāśva and from him Kṛśāśva-Prasenajit-Yuvanāśva - Māndhātā. (Saptama Skandha, Devī Bhāgavata).

BARHIS. A devagandharva clan. These were born to Kaśyapa prajāpati of his wife Pṛthā. (Chapter 65, Ādi Parva, M.B.).

BARHIṢAD(S). A class of Manes. It is mentioned in Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 20 that some classes of manes such as Agniṣvāttas, Barhiṣads, Anagnis, and Sāgnis are said to have derived from Brahmā. Brahmā created two different sets of Pitṛs, Agniṣvāttas and Barhiṣads. (Chapter 10, Aṁśam 1, Viṣṇu Purāṇa).

These Barhiṣads who are members of the Yamasabhā (council of the God of Death) perform the māntric rites for the dead. The name brings into its fold the world of the seven sacred sages also. (Chapter 208, Śānti Parva, M.B.). It was through these Barhiṣads that Brahmā taught Sātvatadharma to a brahmin who became well-known later as Jyeṣṭha. (Chapter 34, Śloka 45, Śānti Parva, M.B.).

Manusmṛti states that the Barhiṣads are the sons of the Maharṣi Atri and the Pitṛs of all the Daityas, Dānavas, Yakṣas, Gandharvas, Uragas, Rākṣasas, Suvarṇas and Kinnaras.

Daityadānavayakṣāṇāṁ
Gandharvoragarākṣasām
Suvarṇakinnarāṇāṁca
Smṛtā Barhiṣado'trijāḥ
(Manusmṛti, Śloka 196, Chapter 3).

BARHIṢMATĪ. Wife of Priyavrata, son of Svāyambhuva Manu and brother of Uttānapāda. She was the daughter of Viśvakarmaprajāpati. Priyavrata married another daughter of his named Surūpā. Surūpā delivered ten sons and a daughter. They were : Agnīdhra, Idhmajihva, Yajñabāhu, Mahāvīra, Rukmaśukra, Ghṛtapṛṣṭha, Savana, Madhātithi, Vītihotra, Kavi and a daughter Ūrjjasvatī. Priyavrata got of his wife Barhiṣmatī three sons, Uttama, Tamasa and Raivata. These sons became in due course the Manvantarādhipatis. (Aṣṭama Skandha, Devī Bhāgavata).

BĀRHASPATYA. The Nītiśāstra of Brahmā. Bṛhaspati condensed and codified the laws of Ethics by Brahmā. This was compiled by Bṛhaspati. This book contains three thousand chapters. Mention is made about this Book in Mahābhārata, Śānti Parva, Chapter 59, Stanza 84.

BĀṢKALA I. A king of the asuras.

1) Birth. Two sons, Hiraṇyākṣa and Hiraṇyakaśipu and a daughter Siṁhikā, were born to Kaśyapa prajāpati of his wife Diti. Siṁhikā became the wife of Vipracitti. Four sons, Anuhrāda, Hrāda, Prahlāda and Saṁhlāda, were born to Hiraṇyakaśipu. Hrāda was the son of Hrada. Three sons Āyuṣmān, Śibi and Bāṣkala were born to Saṁhrāda.

2) Later history. Bāṣkala became one of the ministers of the famous and mighty hero Mahiṣāsura. Cikṣura was the minister of law and order. Tāmra was the Finance Minister. Asiloma was the Prime Minister and Biḍāla the minister of foreign affairs. Udarkka was the general of the army; Bāṣkala, Trinetra and Kālabandhaka were members of the administrative council. Śukrācārya was the minister of education. Bāṣkala played an important part in the battle between Mahiṣāsura and Indra. When soldiers were killed by thousands, Mahiṣāsura sent lastly, Bāṣkala and Durmukha. Bāṣkala engaged himself in a combat with Devī who fought on the side of the Devas. Bāṣkala became angry and aiming at the breast of Devī he gave a severe blow with his club. But Devī evaded him with her club and gave him a severe thrust with her trident at his breast and Bāṣkala fell dead. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 19; Devī Bhāgavata, Skandha 5).

BĀṢKALA II. One of the disciples of Vyāsa. (See the word Guruparamparā).

BAṬU (VAṬU). A brahmin who reads the Gītā daily. Because in life he held fast to duty he was carried to heaven after death. The dead body was eaten away by birds and the bony skeleton remained. When rains started the empty skull was filled with water and a sinner passing that way touched the skull and the sinner got salvation. (Padma Purāṇa, Uttara Khaṇḍa).

BAUDHĀYANA. A teacher-priest who acted according to Kalpa Sūtras (rituals of sacrifices).

BHADRA I. A king of Cedi who fought on the Pāṇḍava side. Karṇa killed him. (Karṇa Parva, Chapter 56, Verse 48).

BHADRA II. One of the four elephants which, from Pātāla, support the world. (See Aṣṭadiggajas).

BHADRA III. Son of Sraddhā, daughter born to Svāyambhuva Manu by his wife Śatarūpā. Sraddhā had the following sons : Śubha, Prasāda, Maitrīputra, Abhaya, Dayātmaja, Śāntija, Bhadra, Muda, Tuṣṭija Smaya, Puṣṭija and Yoga. (Bhāgavata, Caturtha Skandha)

BHADRA IV. A yakṣa, one of the ministers of Kubera. He had to be born as a lion on account of the curse of sage Gautama.

BHADRA V. People of the kingdom of Bhadragaṇa are generally called Bhadras. It is stated in the Sabhā Parva that the Kṣatriya princes of Bhadragaṇa presented lots of money in connection with the Rājasūya yajña of Yudhiṣṭhira.

BHADRA VI. A maharṣi, son of Pramati, and father of Upamanyu.

BHADRA VII. A son born to Śrī Kṛṣṇa of Kālindī. (Bhāgavata, Daśama Skandha).

BHADRĀ I. See Bhadrakālī.

BHADRĀ II. The beautiful daughter of King Kakṣīvān. She was married to King Vyūṣitāśva of the Pūru dynasty. When Bhadrā, in unbearable grief lamented the death of her husband his soul appeared on the skies and blessed her. Accordingly she got pregnant by the corpse of her husband and delivered six sons. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 120, Verse 38).

BHADRĀ III. One of the wives of Kubera. Kuntī once related the story of Bhadrā to Pāñcālī and exhorted her to live like Bhadrā. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 198, Verse 6).

BHADRĀ IV. The word Bhadrā is used as another name of Subhadrā, sister of Śrī Kṛṣṇa in Verse 14, Chapter 218 of Ādi Parva.

BHADRĀ V. Yet another Bhadrā, daughter of the King of Viśālā is mentioned in Chapter 45 of the Mahābhārata. She did penance for getting the kingdom of Karūṣa, when Śiśupāla, disguised as King Karūṣa appeared on the scene and carried her away.

BHADRĀ VI. There is reference to another Bhadrā, daughter of Soma in Chapter 154 of the Anuśāsana Parva. She once did intense penance to secure Utathya as her husband. Atri maharṣi, father of Soma, came to know of the desire of his granddaughter, and got her married to Utathya. Varuṇa once fell in love with Bhadrā, who was an exceptionally beautiful woman, and abducted and concealed her in the sea. When Utathya returned to the Āśrama, his wife was missing. He understood what had happened to Bhadrā by the light of his divine knowledge (television of mind). Burning with anger he drank up the sea completely dry, and Varuṇa shuddering with fear returned Bhadrā to Utathya and profusely apologised. Thus ended the problem.

BHADRĀ VII. Verse 24, Chapter 7 of the Mausala Parva, states that Bhadrā, one of the four wives of Vasudeva, father of Śrī Kṛṣṇa died by jumping into the funeral pyre of her husband.

BHADRĀ VIII. A daughter of the King of Kāśī. The grandson of Sagara, a king of the Solar dynasty married Bhadrā, daughter of the King of Kāśī. (Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa, Chapter 96).

BHADRĀ IX. One Bhadrā, daughter of Meru was married by King Agnīdhra. She had eight sisters, viz. Meru Devī, Pratirūpā, Ugradamṣṭrī, Latā, Ramyā, Śyāmā, Nārī and Devavītī. (Bhāgavata, Pañcama Skandha).

BHADRA X. See Vidūṣaka.

BHADRA(M). A kingdom in ancient India. The Kṣatriya princes of Bhadram gave costly presents to Dharmaputra at the Rājasūya Yāga (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 52, Verse 14). Karṇa, in the course of his digvijaya (conquest of countries) subjugated this kingdom. (Vana Parva, Chapter 254.)

BHADRABĀHU. A king of Pūruvaṁśa. (Navama Skandha, Bhāgavata).

BHADRACĀRU. A son of Pradyumna. (Bhāgavata, Daśama Skandha).

BHADRADEHA. A king. According to the Viṣṇu Purāṇa he was one of the sons of Vasudeva by Devakī.

BHADRAKA I. A king belonging to the Aṅga dynasty. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 277).

BHADRAKA II. A brahmin outcaste. This brahmin, who spent his whole life in committing sins, by chance, took māgha bath for three days at Prayāga, and thus got himself sanctified.

King Vīrasena, who was then ruling the Avanti kingdom had earned ample sanctity by the performance of seventeen Aśvamedha yāgas. The Deaths of King Vīrasena and Bhadraka took place on one and the same day. Though Bhadraka was immoral in his life, he went to heaven along with Vīrasena after death as he had taken the māgha bath. (Padma Purāṇa, Uttarakhaṇḍa).

BHADRAKĀLĪ. Another form of Pārvatī.

1) General. Lord Śiva, on hearing about the self-immolation in fire of his wife, Satī at the famous yajña conducted by Dakṣa rushed in all anger to the spot, and beat the earth with his matted hair, and there ensued two forces called Vīrabhadra and Bhadrakālī. This Bhadrakālī was really Satī or Pārvatī in another form.

2) Bhadrakālī and Kaṁsa. There is a story in the Daśama-Skandha of Bhāgavata that Kaṁsa took away from the room in which Devakī had delivered Śrī Kṛṣṇa the child of Yaśodā by whom Kṛṣṇa had been replaced, and dashed the child against a rock, and that the child then escaped from his clutches and rose up to the sky. That child was Bhadrakālī in another form. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 12).

3) Kampa, Laṅkālakṣmī and Bhadrakālī. Laṅkālakṣmī, who was guarding the city of Laṅkā, was the first to prevent Hanumān from entering the city. Tamil Purāṇas aver that this Laṅkālakṣmī was an incarnation of Bhadrakālī. Hanumān thrashed Laṅkālakṣmī with his left hand at which she vomitted blood and fell down unconscious. On regaining consciousness remembrance of the past occurred to her, and after thanking Hanumān, who restored her to her former form, she returned to Kailāsa. She complained to Śiva that she could not witness the Rāma-Rāvaṇa war. Then Śiva told her thus:

"You go to the Drāviḍa country and be put up in the 'Svayambhūliṅga' temple there. I shall be born there as Kampa, compose the Rāmāyaṇa in Tamil and get conducted the dolls-play. Then you would be able to enjoy the story of Śrī Rāma, especially the Rāma-Rāvaṇa war, both by hearing and seeing the same in better manner than by actually seeing the war.

Bhadrakālī acted according to this bidding of Śiva. There lived a great scholar named Saṅkaranārāyaṇa close to the temple. His wife was Ciṅkāravallī. Lord Śiva, as decided upon previously was born as the son of Ciṅkāravallī, who had become a widow while she was worshipping 'Svayambhūdeva' for the gift of a child. But, Ciṅkāravallī, who feared scandal in her, a widow, becoming a mother, forsook the child in the temple precincts and left the place. One Gaṇeśakaunta sighted the orphan child, and took it to Jayappavallan, the Kaunta chief. The Kaunta chief, who was without children brought up the orphan child as though it had been his own child. Since the child was recovered from the foot of the flagstaff it was named Kampa. Kampa, who was very intelligent even in his infancy, but lazy by nature turned out to be a great scholar and good poet in Tamil by the time he grew up to be a youth, and he became, consequently a prominent member in the 'poets' assembly' of King Cola. When to his name was added the plural suffix 'r' as a token of great respect he came to be known as Kampar.

Once King Cola asked Kampar and Oṭṭakkūtta another member of the poets' assembly to compose in Tamil poetry the story of Śrī Rāma. The King's direction was that. Oṭṭakkūtta should compose his poem upto the incident, Setubandhana (building a bridge in the sea up to Laṅkā) and Kampar should write the story of the war in his poem. Oṭṭakkūtta completed the task allotted to him within six months. But Kampar had not attempted to write even a single line. Having been informed about the matter the King ordered that the poem, Rāmāyaṇa should be recited in the assembly the very next day itself. Kampar, who began writing his poem the same day with the object of completing it in the night itself fell asleep without writing anything at all. When Kampar awoke early in the morning he saw a divine form disappearing from his room, and exclaimed, "Oh! mother ! you have slipped away". To this the divine form replies, "Oh Kampar ! I have finished writing". And, then the divine form vanished completely.

When Kampar got completely out of sleep and looked about he found the Rāmāyaṇa story fully written in verse on his desk. Kampar inferred that the poem was composed by Śāradābhagavatī, the presiding deity of learning and literature, and he was wonder-struck. He recited the poem in the royal assembly, and the King and others too were wonder-struck. And, afterwards, according to the orders of the King the story of the war (Yuddhakāṇḍa Kathā) began to be exhibited as dolls-play in the presence of the idol of the Devī in the temple. Thus Śiva incarnated himself as Kampar, recited the story of the Rāma-Rāvaṇa war in the temple, and hearing it Bhadrakālī danced.

The above is the chief legend about Kampar.

BHADRAKĀLIPPĀṬṬU. (Pāṭṭu=Song). Folk song very popular in Kerala temples. The practice is to sing songs in praise of Bhadrakālī

BHADRAKĀRA. A king of ancient India; he once left his kingdom, in fear of Jarāsandha, and took refuge in South India. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 14, Verse 26).

BHADRAKARṆEŚVARA(M). A sacred place. He who visits this place conducts worship will never have to face ill fate. (Vana Parva, Chapter 84, Verse 39).

BHADRAMATĀ (BHADRAMANĀ). Daughter born to Kaśyapa prajāpati of his wife, Krodhavaśā. The ten daughters of Krodhavaśā are: Mṛgī, Mṛgamandā, Harī, Bhadramatā, Mātaṅgī, Śārddūlī, Śvetā, Surabhi, Surasā and Kadru. (Sarga 14, Āraṇya Kāṇḍa, Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa).

BHADRAMATI. A very poor brahmin. This brahmin had six wives and two hundred and fortyfour daughters. (Nārada Purāṇam).

Once, hearing the glory of Bhūdāna (giving away land free to the deserved) he was much impressed and from then onwards he became filled with a strong desire to give land free to the poor. He had no land of his own. But he went to the king of Kauśāmbī and begged for some land which when received was immediately given as gift to poor brahmins. After that he went and bathed in the Pāpanāśana tīrtha situated in the mount of Veṅkaṭācala. Bhadramati got salvation by this good deed. (Skanda 2,1,10).

BHADRAŚĀKA. A name of Subrahmaṇya. It is the figure of Subrahmaṇya in the shape of a goat that is known as Bhadraśāka. (Śloka 4, Chapter 228, Vana Parva, M.B.).

BHADRAŚĀLA(M). A forest on the top of the Mountain Bhadrāśvavarṣa which lies to the east of Mahāmeru. There is a tree called Kālāmra in this forest. This is a very sacred tree standing miles high above other trees and is being worshipped by the Vṛddhacāraṇas. By worshipping this tree the men have become white and majestic and by drinking a juice prepared from its leaves the women keep themselves eternally young. Chapter seven of Bhīṣma Parva says like this about this tree: "Kālāmra stands towering miles high bearing flowers and fruits at all times of the year. The Vṛddhacāraṇas worshipping it are white, strong and majestic. The women drinking its juice are lotus-complexioned, beautiful, Moonfaced, well versed in music and dance and having a life-span of over a thousand years, remaining young all the time."

BHADRASĀRA. A king in the region of Kāśmīra. His only son, Sudharman, was very much devoted to Śiva and spent most of his time worshipping him. The father tried his best to withdraw his son from this excessive devotion but failed.

Then one day the great sage, Parāśara, came to the King as his guest and the King then requested him to make his son withdraw from his Śiva-worship. But Parāśara then told him about the previous life of Sudharmā and consoling him persuaded the King to do the 'Rudrābhiṣeka' (uninterrupted pouring of cold water over an idol of Śiva) by himself. The king then entrusted the state with his son and left for the forests accepting an ascetic life. (Skandha Purāṇa, 3.3.20-21).

BHADRASENA. A king. Uddālaka Maharṣi performed a demoniac yāga to destroy this king. (Śatapatha-brāhmaṇa).

BHADRAŚRAVAS. A king whom the Purāṇas extol as having ruled Saurāṣṭra in Dvāparayuga. At the forest of Naimiśa sage Sūta told the following story to explain how Lakṣmī (goddess of wealth) took her abode in the houses of men.

Bhadraśravā (Bhadraśravas) who was ruling Saurāṣṭra had seven sons and a daughter of his wife Suraticandrikā. The daughter was named Śyāmabālā. Once truthful-Śyāmabālā was sitting under a green-wood tree with her playmates playing with diamonds and gold sand when the goddess of wealth disguised as an aged brahmin woman went to the gates of the palace and asked for permission to see the queen, Suraticandrikā. The sentries pressed for details about her and then she said this: "My name is Kamalā. My husband is a man named Bhuvanāśva and we live in Dvārakā. Your queen in her previous birth was a Vaiśya woman. One day she quarrelled with her husband and he beat her hard and then crying loudly she ran out of the house. I met her and when she told me her story I instructed her to observe a Puṇyavrata (Fasting to any particular deity). She did it willingly and as a result she acquired great wealth and happiness.

One day the husband and wife died. Yama, the king of Death, then sent his orderlies to bring before him that couple who had always quarrelled with each other while living. Bound by ropes the ghastly servants of Yama were about to drag them to their land when the angelic servants of Viṣṇu with the insignia of 'Śaṁkha-Cakra-Gadā' on their lapels arrived there and those messengers of Lakṣmī headed by Svaprakāśa cut off the ropes and carrying them in a Rājahaṁsa chariot took them through noble paths to the land of Lakṣmī. They lived there happily for a period calculated at the rate of a thousand years for one week of Puṇyavrata observed. In the end to complete the goodness remaining they were born as King and queen on earth with plenty of wealth and happiness. But they have now forgotten about the Puṇyavrata and I have come here to remind them of it."

The gate-keeper immediately went to her mistress and told her all that happened. But the queen, Suraticandrikā got angry when she heard the story and ordered the old woman to be sent away from there with thrashes. The old woman ran away from the palace crying loudly and Śyāmabālā on hearing the cry went and enquired about the incident. On hearing the story from the woman Śyāmabālā got instructions regarding that Puṇyavrata from the old woman and started observing it. Within four weeks she got married and went to her husband's house. After Śyāmabālā's departure from the palace the wealth of the King began to wane and they became so poor that at the request of the queen the King Bhadraśravā went to his daughter to ask for help. The daughter gave his father a block of solid gold drapped in a paper. But on his return to the palace when he opened the bundle he found there a block of charcoal instead of gold. On seeing the mishap the king burst into a cry.

Suraticandrikā then went to her daughter and was well received and attended to. During her stay there the Puṇyavrata day of the month came and the daughter tried her best to make her mother also observe the same. But the poverty-stricken queen broke the fast without her daughter's knowledge by eating what remained in the dishes of the children. But the next month Śyāmabālā compelled her mother to observe the fast strictly and so Suraticandrikā took the Vrata successfully. A few days after that Suraticandrikā returned home and to her amazement found everything in plenty there once more. (Chapter 11, Bhaga 2, Padma Purāṇa).

BHADRAŚREṆYA. A Hehaya King who was ruling a state with Māhiṣmatī as capital. He had fought many wars with Divodāsa, king of Kāśī. (See under Divodāsa).

BHADRĀŚVA I. A king of Pūruvaṁśa. He was the son of Rahovādi. Bhadrāśvā had ten sons: Ṛkṣeyu, Kṛṣeyu, Sannateyu, Ghṛteyu, Citeyu, Sthaṇḍileyu, Dharmeyu, Sammiteyu, Kṛteyu and Matināra. (Chapter 278, Agni Purāṇa).

Once Agastya went and stayed for seven days in the palace of Bhadrāśva and his wife Kāntimatī. Everyday Agastya used to speak in glowing terms about Kāntimatī and asked about the reason for it he replied: "In her previous birth Kāntimatī was a servant girl in a wealthy house. The master of the house once entrusted her with the task of seeing that none of the temple lights went out on the night of Dvādaśī in the month of Tulā (Āśvina—October). She did her duty so willingly and sincerely that she was born as a queen and you a King". Then Agastya gave them instructions about that Vrata which both Bhadrāśva and Kāntimatī observed sincerely, receiving as a result benediction from Viṣṇu. (Vāyu Purāṇa).

BHADRĀŚVA II. Agnīdhra, son of Priyavrata and grandson of Manu, got nine sons of his wife Pūrvacitti, a celestial maiden. One of the sons was Bhadrāśva. His brothers were Nābhi, Kiṁpuruṣa, Hari, Ilāvṛta, Ramyaka, Hiraṇmaya, Kuru and Ketumāla. The country ruled by Bhadrāśva was called Bhadrāśva lying to the east of the mountain Gandhamādana. (Pañcama Skandha, Bhāgavata).

BHADRĀŚVA. An island near the mountain of Meru. Dharmaputra was ruling this land and Sañjaya once described this land to Dhṛtarāṣṭra. (Chapter 14, Śānti Parva and Chapter 7, Bhīṣma Parva).

BHADRATANU. An immoral brahmin. On the advice of Danta he became a devotee of Viṣṇu and attained salvation. (Padma Purāṇa, Kriya, Chapter 17).

BHADRATUṄGA. A sacred place; a dip in the holy waters of this place would entitle one to Brahmaloka. (Vana Parva, Chapter 82, Verse 80).

BHADRAVAṬA. The abode of Pārvatī and Parameśvara. The glory of it is described in Chapter 82, Vana Parva, M.B.

BHADRĀYU. A king who was a devotee of Śiva. He was a leper and in his life he suffered much, even the pangs of death. His wife was the dutiful and good natured lady, Kīrtimālinī.

On the sixteenth birthday of Bhadrāyu Śiva appeared before him in the name of Ṛṣabha and blessed him after instructing him on the precepts of Rājadharma. He further gave him a dagger and a conch as weapons and twelve thousand elephants. With the might of all these, Bhadrāyu became unconquerable. (Śiva Purāṇa, Śatarudrasaṁhitā).

One day, while Bhadrāyu was ruling the country, Śiva came in the guise of a tiger and carried away the wife of a brahmin. Bhadrāyu, a firm protector of his subjects gave his own wife to the brahmin and prepared himself to give up his life in fire. Śiva greatly pleased at this selfless act of Bhadrāyu befitting a true King appeared before him and blessed him and gave back the brahmin his wife.

Bhadrāyu in his previous birth was a King called Mandara and Kīrtimālinī in her previous birth was Piṅgalā, queen of Mandara. (Skanda Purāṇa, 3.3.12; 9.14).

BHAGA I.

1) General. One of the twelve Ādityas born as sons of Kaśyapa prajāpati by his wife, Aditi. Viṣṇu, Śakra, Aryaman, Dhātā, Tvaṣṭā, Pūṣā, Vivasvān, Savitā, Mitra, Varuṇa, Aṁśu and Bhaga—these are the Dvādaśādityas, and they were Devas famous as Tuṣitas in the last Cākṣuṣamanvantara.

2) Other information. (1) Bhaga married Siddhi, and the couple begot three sons called Mahiman, Vibhu and Prabhu and three daughters called Suvratā, Varārohā, and Āśīs.

(2) Bhaga participated in the birthday celebrations of Arjuna. (M.B., Ādi Parva, Chapter 122, Verse 66).

(3) At the time of Khāṇḍavadāha (burning of the Khāṇḍava forest) Bhaga, as a supporter of Indra, who was fighting Arjuna and Śrī Kṛṣṇa, sprang upon the enemies with sword in hand. (M.B., Ādi Parva, Chapter 236, Verse 36).

(4) Bhaga shines forth in Indra's assembly. (M.B., Sabhā Parva, Chapter 7, Verse 22).

(5) Bhaga was also present at the installation of Subrahmaṇya as commander of the fighting forces. (M.B., Śalya Parva, Chapter 45).

(6) After Devayuga (Deva age), the Devas asembled together and decided upon the share of yajñas due to each of them, and in thus fixing shares they left out Rudra. Enraged at this neglect Rudra made a bow and fought against the Devas. During the fight Rudra, with the point of his bow, extracted the hands of Savitā, the eyes of Bhaga and the teeth of Pūṣā. Ultimately the Devas satisfied and pleased. Rudra, who returned to Bhaga and others the eyes etc. which had been extracted. (M.B., Sauptika Parva).

BHAGA II. Certain Purāṇas refer to Bhaga as one of the eleven Rudras. But, this view is not universally accepted.

BHAGA III. A vedic god considered to be the lord of wealth, prowess and happiness. Bhaga is also one of the six Ādityas mentioned in the Ṛgveda, viz. Bhaga, Mitra, Aryamā, Varuṇa, Dakṣa and Aṁśa. (Ṛgveda, 2.27).

BHAGADĀ. An attendant (woman) of Subrahmaṇya. (Śalya Parva, Chapter 46, Verse 26).

BHAGADATTA. Bhagadatta was King of Prāgjyotiṣapura. Mahābhārata furnishes the following information about him.

1) Bhagadatta was born from a limb of the asura called Bāṣkala. (M.B., Ādi Parva, Chapter 67, Verse 9).

2) He was present at the wedding of Pāñcālī. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 185, Verse 12).

3) Known also as lord of the Yavanas (Yavanādhipa). Bhagadatta was a friend of Pāṇḍu, and that friendship was transferred to Yudhiṣṭhira too. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 14, Verse 14).

4) The triumphal tour of Arjuna in connection with the Rājasūya yajña performed by Yudhiṣṭhira evoked feelings of jealousy in the heart of Bhagadatta, and he fought against Arjuna. The courage and prowess Arjuna exhibited in the fight astonished Bhagadatta, who congratulated Arjuna on his supreme courage and admitting defeat yielded to Arjuna. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 26, Verse 7).

5) Bhagadatta, along with the Yavanas was present at the Rājasūya of Yudhiṣṭhira. He also made presents of horses of very high pedigree and very costly gems etc. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 51, Verse 14).

6) Karṇa once defeated Bhagadatta in fight. (Vana Parva, Chapter 254, Verse 5).

7) In the great war he, with his army, fought on the side of Duryodhana. (Udyoga Parva, Chapter 19, Verse 15).

8) During the first day of the war Bhagadatta fought a duel with the King of Virāṭa. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 49).

9) He was defeated in his fight with Ghaṭotkaca. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 64, Verse 59).

10) In the fight which took place after the above defeat Bhagadatta caused Bhīmasena to faint in the field. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 64, Verse 13).

11) And after that he defeated Ghaṭotkaca in fight. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 83, Verse 40).

12) Next ensued the combat with King Daśārṇa in which the King was defeated. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 95, Verse 48).

13) It was not long after this that Bhagadatta cut off the hands of the Kṣatradeva. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 95, Verse 73).

14) Viśoka, the charioteer of Bhīma-sena, hit by the arrows of Bhagadatta fell down and fainted. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 95, Verse 76).

15) Bhagadatta and Sātyaki fought against each other. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 111, Verse 7).

16) Chapters 113 and 114 of the Bhīṣma Parva describe the combats fought by Bhagadatta with Bhīmasena and Arjuna.

17) Bhagadatta and Drupada fought with each other. (Droṇa Parva, Chapter 14, Verse 40).

18) Bhagadatta killed king Daśārṇa. (Droṇa Parva, Chapter 26, Verse 38).

19) Bhagadatta killed Ruciparvan. (Droṇa Parva, Chapter 26, Verse 52).

20) He shot the Vaiṣṇavāstra (arrow given by Viṣṇu) on Arjuna. (Droṇa Parva, Chapter 29, Verse 17).

21) Arjuna killed Bhagadatta. (Droṇa Parva, Chapter 29, Verse 48).

22) After his death, his son, Vajradatta became King of Prāgjyotiṣa. Arjuna killed Vajradatta also. (Aśvamedha Parva, Chapter 76).

23) King Śailālaya, who was Bhagadatta's grandfather, attained Indraloka on account of the greatness of his tapas. (Āśramavāsika Parva, Chapter 20, Verse 10).

BHAGANANDĀ. An attendant woman of Subrahmaṇya. (Śalya Parva, Chapter 46, Verse 11).

BHAGAVADDHYĀNAPARVA. A sub-parva of Udyoga-Parva. It comprises chapters 72-150 in Udyoga Parva.

BHĀGAVATA. One of the eighteen famous Purāṇas. Gāyatrī is the main theme of this Purāṇa and based on it it dwells on the greatness of Dharma (duty) and states about the dharmas of Sārasvatakalpa. (See under Purāṇa).

BHAGAVAD GĪTĀ.

1) General. The Bhagavad Gītā is a poem consisting of 650 verses divided into eighteen chapters. The Gītā covers chapters 25-45 in the Bhīṣma Parva of the Mahābhārata, and it is in the form of a talk or discussion between Arjuna and Lord Kṛṣṇa. The mighty armies of the Pāṇḍavas and the Kauravas were arrayed on opposite sides for mortal combat on the field of Kurukṣetra when Arjuna, overcome by grief at the prospect of fathers, brothers, preceptors and other Kinsmen fighting and killing one another expressed to his charioteer, Śrī Kṛṣṇa his aversion to fighting. But, the Lord pointed out to the unwilling Arjuna, by unique and various arguments, his imperative duty, under the circumstance, to fight and fight in heroic earnestness with the result that Arjuna shed his disinclination to fight and entered the fray, which ended in the ultimate victory of the Pāṇḍavas. And the dialogue between Arjuna and Kṛṣṇa, and especially the great teaching of Kṛṣṇa on the field form the theme of the Gītā. The Gītā contains three spheres or fields of teaching; the karma yoga (philosophy of action), jñāna yoga (philosophy of knowledge) and Bhaktiyoga (philosophy of devotion). The three yogas are treated each in six chapters.

The theme of the Gītā is philosophy, and it is revered as one of the most sublime philosophical texts of the Hindu religion. Many a great thinker and philosopher like Ācārya Śaṅkara, Rāmānujācārya and Madhvācārya have annotated, and written commentaries on the Gītā. There is a school of thought which believes that the Gītā was taught to Arjuna by Kṛṣṇa himself on the battle-field in something like tabloid form and that Vyāsa eleborated the mighty teaching in its present form. The poet, Bāṇa, who flourished in the 7th century A.D., and the great Śaṅkara, who lived in the 8th century believed that the Gītā was sung by Kṛṣṇa himself. But there are some modern thinkers, who argue that the Gītā was composed some time between the third and fourth centuries B.C. and it was interpolated into the Mahābhārata in the second century A.D.

The Gītā has translations in all the languages of the world. The whole world has acclaimed it as a very weighty and valuable contribution in the sphere of philosophy.

2) Theme of the Gītā. It has been mentioned above that the Gītā forms chapters 25-45 in the Bhīṣma Parva of the Mahābhārata. The subject-matter of each chapter of the Gītā is given below.

Chapter 25. Arjunaviṣāda yoga:—Both the armies take positions in Kurukṣetra. At the sound of the conches Arjuna becomes dejected and sorrowful at the prospect of killing relations, preceptors and Kinsmen.

Chapter 26. Sāṁkhya yoga :—The greatness and majesty of the Sāṁkhya and the Karma yogas.

Chapter 27. Karma yoga :—The need for action according to the Jñāna and the Karma yogas.

Chapter 28. Jñānakarma Vibhāga yoga :—Power of Saguṇa Brahma (Brahma with attributes), Niṣkāma-karma yoga (Action without an eye on the result) spiritual greatness of various yajñas.

Chapter 29. Sannyāsa yoga :—Sāṁkhya yoga, Niṣkāma-karma yoga, Jñāna yoga, Jñāna yoga with Bhakti.

Chapter 30. Ātmasaṁyama yoga :—Niṣkāmakarma yoga, Ātmodhāraṇa, Jñānayoga.

Chapter 31. Jñāna yoga :—Jñānavijñānas, origin of the world, the Daiva and Āsura aspects of Īśvara, worship of other Devas.

Chapter 32. Tārakabrahma yoga :—Seven questions of Arjuna about Brahma, Ātmatatva and Karma. Śrī Kṛṣṇa's answers thereto. Bhakti yoga, the Śukla and the Kṛṣṇa mārgas.

Chapter 33. Rājarāja guhya yoga :—Jñāna and Vijñāna, origin of the world, Īśvarasvarūpa, Sakāmaniṣkāmopāsana, Bhagavadbhakti.

Chapter 34. Vibhūti yoga : —Bhagavān's Vibhūti (Divine attributes), Bhakti yoga.

Chapter 35. Viśvarūpadarśana yoga :— Arjuna's prayer to be shown Viśvarūpa (cosmic form), description of viśvarūpa by Śrī Kṛṣṇa and Sañjaya, Śrī Kṛṣṇa reveals viśvarūpa to Arjuna; fear-stricken at the sight, Arjuna sings the praise of Kṛṣṇa.

Chapter 36. Bhaktiyoga :— The great benefits of worshipping God with form and without form.

Chapter 37. Kṣetrakṣetrajña Vibhāga yoga :—Description of Kṣetrakṣetrajña with Jñāna, and of Prakṛti and Puruṣa.

Chapter 38. Guṇatrayavibhāga yoga:— The greatness of Jñāna; world's origin from Prakṛti and Puruṣa, the three guṇas, sattva, rajas and tamas; means to attain god; marks of Yugātītapuruṣa.

Chapter 39. Puruṣottama yoga:— Essential principles of world and life, attainment of God, relationship between Jīvātmā and Paramātmā, principle and theory of kṣara puruṣa and akṣara puruṣa.

Chapter 40. Daivāsura sampadvibhāga yoga:—Good actions, evil deeds, scientific actions and unscientific actions.

Chapter 41. Śraddhātrayavibhāga yoga:—Descriptions of Scientific tapas, diet, yajñatapas and dāna. Interpretation of Om.

Chapter 42. Mokṣasannyāsa yoga:— Tyāgam, Sāṁkhya theory, Varṇadharmas, jñānaniṣṭhā, Niṣkāmakarmayoga with bhakti and the greatness of the Gītā.

(For another story about the greatness of the Gītā see Duśśāsana II).

BHAGAVATĪ. The words Bhagavān and Bhagavatī mean Paramātmā (universal self) and Prakṛti (Nature and its modifications) respectively. Prakṛti is also called by the name Śakti. The following elucidation once given by Mahāviṣṇu about Bhagavān and Bhagavatī is greatly illuminating.

Time, space, atmosphere and the universe (Brahmāṇḍam) are, just like Paramātmā, eternal. This is the truth and reality. Below this eternal Gokula exists Vaikuṇṭhaloka, which also is, like the former, eternal. Just like this, Prakṛti, which is a sport to Brahmā and is also without beginning or end (Sanātanī) too is eternal. In the same manner as flame exists in fire inseparable from it, moonlight in moon, beauty in the lotus flower and brightness in the sun, so does nature exist in soul inseparable therefrom. In the same way as the goldsmith cannot make gold ornaments without gold and the potter cannot make pots without clay, the Paramātmā will not in the least be able to function unaided by Prakṛti. Prakṛti (Nature, Devī) is all powerful. 'Para' becomes powerful enough to do everything when he joins the Devī.

The sound 'Śa' means welfare and good fortune, and the sound 'kti' means prowess. Hence "Śakti" means the embodiment of welfare and prowess or she, who is the giver of welfare and prowess. Bhagavatī combines in herself knowledge, affluence, riches, fame and strength. As the Paramātmā is always with and inseparable from such Bhagavatī he is called Bhagavān also. When Prakṛti and Paramātmā remain combined it is called Parabrahma, which possesses neither form nor attributes. And, when Prakṛti and Puruṣa separate, of their own accord, they assume forms and attributes.

The above is Śaiva doctrine in a nut-shell. The Vaiṣṇavas do not accept this position. They ask, "How is it possible to have brightness or effulgence without there being an effulgent one?" Therefore, the Vaiṣṇavas believe in the existence, at the centre of an effulgent sphere, of a thing possessing the utmost effulgence and brightness equal to that of Brahmā. This 'thing'—Deva—is very efficient and effective to remedy sorrows due to birth, death, disease etc. and to him the lifetime of Brahma is just one minute only. This Deva is called Paramātmā, Parabrahma and Kṛṣṇa by the Vaiṣṇavas. 'Kṛṣ' means maximum devotion (love) towards Paramātmā, and 'ṇa' means he who becomes slave to such devotion. Hence Kṛṣṇa means he who becomes a slave to the love of his devotees. There is another meaning also for the word Kṛṣṇa. Kṛṣ means all and 'ṇa' means seed or root; and thus Kṛṣṇa means he, who is the root of everything. In the very beginning there was only this Kṛṣṇa ; and this Lord, subject only to his own will and pleasure, divided himself into two, the left side becoming woman and the right side man. (Devī Bhāgavata, Navama Skandha).

BHAGINI. A word used in addressing women. Verse 129 in chapter two of the Manusmṛti lays down that the wife of another person and women who are not one's relatives should be addressed either as Bhavati, Subhage or Bhagini.

BHAGĪRATHA.

1) Genealogy. Descended from Viṣṇu thus: Brahmā-Marīci - Kaśyapa-Vivasvān-Vaivasvata manu-Ikṣvāku-Vikukṣi-Śaśāda -Kakutstha-Anenas-Pṛthulāśva-Prasenajit-Yuvanāśva - Māndhātā - Purukutsa - Trasadasyu-Anaraṇya-Haryaśva-Vasumanas - Sudhanvā - Traiyyāruṇa-Satyavrata or Triśaṅku - Hariścandra-Rohitāśva-Harita - Cuñcu - Sudeva - Bharuka - Bāhuka - Sagara-Asamañjas-Aṁśumān*-Bhagīratha.

2) Recluse. Many years had not lapsed after his coronation as King when, in the heart of Bhagīratha spiritual thoughts began to crop up. A great sage called Tritula was his guru. Once Bhagīratha asked the guru what was the means to get rid of worldly sorrows, and the guru replied as follows:—

The ego will be annihilated when the tendencies and cravings towards objects of the senses are absolutely suppressed and the whole and perfect truth is realised through knowledge, the practice of concentration etc. The ego will not disappear as long as one does not become one's real self by completely overcoming the sense of pride, shame etc. which form the outer case of worldly life. The egoless state is the ultimate achievement and most supreme state. Oh ! Bhagīratha ! if you would get rid of sentiments like pride etc., give up all attachment to material objects, become fearless and gift away, with thoughts concentrated on the inner self, all your wealth to enemies, and then move among those enemies, without any sense of ego and pride about this material body, and take alms from them (enemies) and also give up me, who am your preceptor in the matter of knowledge ; then you will become the most sublime Brahma". This advice of the guru affected him so much that Bhagīratha, holding his duties firmly in mind, engaged himself in spiritual practices, and after spending some time thus he performed, according to rules, the Agniṣṭoma yajña aimed at gifting away everything. All wealth like cows, land, horses, gold etc. were distributed in gifts to noble brahmins and the poor folk according to their eligibility for the same. Within three days he had gifted away everything except the clothes he was wearing. And, then he invited his neighbouring enemy king and gave to him, without the least hesitation, the kingdom which had been bereft of all wealth. The ministers and other citizens felt very sorry about the whole thing. But, Bhagīratha left the country at once for other places having with him only the clothes he was wearing. He spent his days in various places and forests where he was not known even by name. Ere long, Bhagīratha attained ultimate spiritual solace. And, then he accidentally came to his former kingdom, which was then being ruled by the enemy King. The ministers and other citizens to whose houses he went begging for alms recognised him, and with sorrow unbearable they appealed to him to accept the throne again and rule the country. Bhagīratha rejected their request, and, after staying there for some time, he started for other places. During this wandering of his he met his old preceptor, Tritula, and both of them, in company, toured for some time cities and forests. They felt it very painful to keep on to their body like that. They thought like this : "Why should the body be kept like this. What if this material object continues to exist or perishes ? But let it (the body) continue as long as it exists without in any way being against the order of things and ethical practices". And, in this frame of mind they traversed the forests. Now, the minister of a distant kingdom who was on the look out for a successor to the King who had died heirless, persuaded Bhagīratha to accept the Kingship of that country. The ministers of Bhagīratha's former Kingdom also now requested him to resume his old kingship, especially since its new ruler had already expired. Bhagīratha obliged them, and became once again King of his own country. (Jñānavāsiṣṭham).

3) Bhagīrathaprayatnam. (Himālayan or Herculean effort). Sagara, an old predecessor of Bhagīratha had two wives called Keśinī and Sumati. Keśinī had one son named Asamañjas and Sumati 60,000 sons. Sagara once conducted an Aśvamedha yajña in the Indo-Gangetic plane, when Indra stole away the sacrificial horse and kept it quite near to sage Kapila who was doing tapas in Pātāla. The 60,000 sons of Sagara set out in search of the horse and found it out in Pātāla. At the sight of the horse they shouted themselves hoarse. Enraged at this sage Kapila reduced those sons of Sagara to ashes in the fire which emanated from his eyes.

After entrusting Asamañjas with the duty of performing the funeral rites of his 60,000 sons Sagara expired. Asamañjas transferred that duty on to Aṁśumān, and he to Bhagīratha. Bhagīratha did penance on the seashore concentrating his mind on Gaṅgādevī. The Devī appeared before Bhagīratha and asked him to choose what boon he would, and he requested the Devī to perform the funeral rites of 60,000 sons of Sagara remaining in the form of ashes in Pātāla. To this Gaṅgādevī replied that the earth will not be able to withstand the impact of her powerful flow, but she shall, if Śiva permits, flow into his matted hair. And, Gaṅgādevī asked Bhagīratha to first get that permission. This did not dishearten Bhagīratha, who went to mount Kailāsa to do penance so that Śiva might grant him his prayer. He thus did penance for 1000 years. Śiva appeared to him and agreed to receive the rushing flow of Gaṅgā water on his matted head. And, accordingly Śiva stood in position to receive the rushing waters of Gaṅgā, and Gaṅgā flowed on to his head. Even the most powerful flow of Gaṅgā water on his head did not cause Śiva to move from his position even by a hair's breadth. This awakened the conceit in Gaṅgādevī, understanding which Śiva contained her on his head. Without finding any outlet the waters of river Gaṅgā flowed along the matted hairs of Śiva for thousand years. So, Bhagīratha had once again to please Śiva. Thus pleased again Śiva shook his matted head and one drop of water fell on the ground, and that is the river Ganges in North India. The Gaṅgā flowed along plane ground to Pātāla and performed the funeral rites of Sagara's sons. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 108 ; Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa, Bāla Kāṇḍa, Canto 42; Brahmāṇḍa purāṇa, Chapter 97 ; Bhāgavata, Navama Skandha, Kampa Rāmāyaṇa (Tamil), Yuddha Kāṇḍa; Padma Purāṇa, Part 4, Chapter 21).

4) Other Information.

(1) Bhagīratha is a member of Yama's assembly and serves him. (M.B., Sabhā Parva, Chapter 8, Verse 11).
(2) Śiva bestowed boons on him. (Vana Parva, Chapter 180, Verse 1).

*According to verse 12, Chapter 25, of Vana Parva, Bhagīratha is the son of Dilīpa. But most of the Purāṇas refer to him a the son of Aṁśumān.

(3) Bhagīratha had faith in the great efficacy of making a gift of cows. (Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 76, Verse 25).
(4) He married his daughter to Kautsa. (Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 131, Verse 25).
(5) Once Bhagīratha made a gift of one lakh of cows with calves to Maharṣi Kohala, and attained Uttamaloka. (Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 137, Verse 27).

BHĀGĪRATHĪ. Another name of Gaṅgā. (See under Gaṅgā).

BHAGNARATHA. A synonym of Citraratha. (See Citraratha).

BHĀGURI. A man of great erudition, Bhāguri was noted for his proficiency as a Sarvaśāstra Paṇḍit (scholar of all sciences), Vyākaraṇakāra (grammarian), Kośakāra (etymologist), Jyotiśśāstrajña (Astronomer) and Smṛtikāra (authority on Smṛti).

BHAIRAVA I. A nāga belonging to the Dhṛtarāṣṭra Vaṁśa. There is a reference to this nāga in Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 51, Verse 17. He was burnt up at the Sarpasatra performed by King Janamejaya.

BHAIRAVA II. A Pārṣada of Śiva.
1) General. Immediately after his birth, this terrible monster subdued all the Devas without getting the permission of Śiva. Enraged at it, Śiva turned him into a tree by a curse. But Śiva was soon pacified and lifted the curse by declaring that those who offered pūjā to the gods would get the full reward for their worship only if they offered pūjā to Bhairava also.
Bhairava became a tree as soon as he was cursed. He became a tree because he subdued the gods. Therefore that tree came to be called "DAMANAKA" tree (Damana = Subdue). It has another name, "TĀTIRI" tree. Even now, pious people offer pūjā to this tree. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapters 52-80).
2) Birth. Once Brahmā and Viṣṇu became swollen with pride. In his haughty way, Brahmā insulted Śiva. Under the insult, Śiva was infuriated and out of the fire of his fury was born Bhairava with his black form. (Liṅga Purāṇa 1.90).
3) Brahmahatyā. As soon as he was born, Bhairava rushed towards Brahmā and pinched off his fifth head which had insulted Śiva. By this, he incurred the sin of Brahmahatyā. For the expiation of this sin, as ordered by Śiva, Bhairava started on a journey to go abegging, with Brahmā's severed head in his hand. Śiva then created a woman named "Brahmahatyā" and asked her to follow Bhairava.
Although Bhairava visited many holy places, he was not able to liberate himself from the sin of Brahmahatyā. At last, at the suggestion of Śiva, he went to Vārāṇasī and washed off his sin. Brahmā's head which he carried, was also deposited there and the place became famous under the name of "Kapālamocana tīrtha". (Śiva Purāṇa, Śatarudra Saṁhitā).
4) Family. In Kālikā Purāṇa there is an elaborate account of the family of Bhairava. According to this Purāṇa, Vijaya, the reputed King of Vārāṇasī was born in the family of Bhairava. Kālikā Purāṇa also says that Vijaya destroyed the Khāṇḍavī city and set up the Khāṇḍava forest in its place.
According to Kālikā Purāṇa, Bhairava and Vetāla were, in their previous births, two Śivapārṣadas named Mahākāla and Bhṛṅgi. It was by the curse of Pārvatī that they were born as mortals in their next birth. (Kālikā Purāṇa 53).
The Purāṇas mention eight Bhairavas called Asitāṁga, Ruru, Caṇḍa, Krodha, Unmatta, Kapāli, Bhīṣaṇa and Saṁhāra.
5) Shape. Bhairava has a terrible shape. He wears the crescent moon and plaited hair on his head. His weapons are, sword, arrow, dagger, bow, trident, rope etc. At times he is dressed in elephant-skin. He has five faces. Serpents are his ornaments. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapters 52-80).

BHAIRAVĪ. One of the eight Ambas. They are: Rudrārcikā, Rudracaṇḍī, Naṭeśvarī, Mahālakṣmī, Siddhacāmuṇḍikā, Siddhayogeśvarī, Bhairavī and Rūpavidyā. All these are the eight different forms of Devī. (See the word DEVĪ).

BHAJAMĀNA. A Yādava King, whose father was Satvata and mother Kausalyā, and they had, beside Bhajamāna, another son called Satvata or Andhaka. Bhajamāna married the two daughters of S ñjaya, named Bāhyakā and Upabāhyakā by whom he got six sons. (Bhāgavata, Navama Skandha).

BHAJYA. An ācārya in the line of the Ṛk disciples of Vyāsa. Bhajya studied Vālakhilyasaṁhitā at the feet of his guru Bāṣkali. (Bhāgavata, Dvādaśa Skandha).

BHAKṢAKA. A Śūdra sinner. In Padma Purāṇa the following story is related about this Śūdra.
Bhakṣaka who was once going aimlessly somewhere felt extremely thirsty, and quenched his thirst by drinking water which was found near the small platform raised for the holy Tulasī shrub. The sanctity of the water thus drunk washed away all the sin attached to him. Some time later he was killed by a forest-dweller, and he attained svargaloka (heaven). Bhakṣaka, in his previous birth, was a king who led a voluptuous life, and he, once, robbed a very beautiful woman of her chastity, and it was as a punishment for the sin that the King had to be born, in the next birth, in the womb of a Śūdra woman. (Padma Purāṇa, Brahma Kāṇḍa, Chapter 22).

BHAKTI. A Devī born in Drāviḍa deśa (Southern India). Once Devī, along with her two sons, Jñāna and Vairāgya, started on a walking tour to Gokula and Vṛndāvana via Karṇāṭaka, Mahārāṣṭra and Gurjara (Gujarat). During the long tour the mother and her sons became aged. But, as soon as they set foot on Gokula and Vṛndāvana old age quitted Bhakti and she became young again. But, her sons remained old. So the mother requested Nārada to turn them young again. Nārada read out to them the Vedas, the Vedānta (Upaniṣads) and the Bhagavad Gītā, all to no purpose. Bhakti's sons still remained old. Then Sanaka, Sananda and Sanatkumāra asked Nārada to read out the Bhāgavata to them. Nārada did so, and the sons of Bhaktī Devī became young again. (Padma Purāṇa).

BHALANDANA. A king. Though by birth he was a brahmin he became a Vaiśya because of doing things belonging to the Vaiśya community like trade and commerce. (Mārkaṇḍeya Purāṇa). According to the Bhāgavata, Viṣṇu Purāṇa and Vāyu Purāṇa Bhalandana was the son of Nābhāga.

BHALLĀṬA. A king of the line of Bharata. He was the son of King Viśvaksena and father of King Bṛhadaśva. (Navama Skandha, Bhāgavata).

BHALLĀṬA(M). A place of habitation in ancient India. Bhīmasena conquered this land during his victory march. (Śloka 5, Chapter 30, Sabhā Parva, M.B.).

BHĀLUKI I. A Ṛṣi, who was a member of Yudhiṣṭhira's assembly. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 4, Verse 15).

BHĀLUKI II. A maharṣi. He also accompanied the Pāṇḍavas to Dvaitavana. (Vana Parva, Chapter 27).

BHĀLUKI III. An ācārya. He was a disciple of Lāṅgali, a member of the Sāma line of disciples of Vyāsa. (Vāyu Purāṇa).

BHĀMAHA. A critic who lived in the sixth century A.D. He was one of the top critics in the Sanskrit language. His important work is 'Kāvyālaṁkāra'. This is also called Bhāmahālaṁkāra by a few. There are six chapters in this. The first chapter deals with Kāvyaśarīra, the second and third with Alaṁkāra, the fourth with Kāvyadoṣa the fifth with Nyāya and the sixth with Śabdaśuddhi. As against Daṇḍī Bhāmaha separates 'Kathā' from 'Ākhyāyikā'. According to him the requisites of a good Kāvya are sweetness, pleasantness and liveliness. Daṇḍī prescribes ten attributes for a good Kāvya. Bhāmaha is of opinion that Vakrokti is no alaṁkāra at all. In a wider sense it is 'atiśayokti' (exaggeration). But Bhāmaha admits it has a place in Kāvya.

BHĀMINĪ. Wife of Avikṣit, King of Vaiśāli. The famous Marutta is the son born to this couple. The Mārkaṇḍeya Purāṇa states that Bhāminī once went to Nāgaloka to give refuge to the serpents there.

BHĀNAVĪ. A river. Śrī Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa on their way to the forests from Citrakūṭa crossed this river, Bhānavī. (Sarga 52, Ayodhyā Kāṇḍa, Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa).

BHĀṆḌĀYANI. A maharṣi. This sage sits in Devaloka and worships Indra. (Śloka 12, Chapter 7, Sabhā Parva, M.B.).

BHĀṆḌĪRA(M). An ancient forest. It was in this forest situated in Aṁbāḍi that Śrī Kṛṣṇa with his cowherd chums conducted his childhood exploits. There was a very huge tree of name Bhāṇḍīra in this forest and it was under this great tree that Kṛṣṇa and his friends met daily for their play. This forest is on the northern bank of Gaṅgā in front of Keśighaṭṭa in Vṛndāvana. The Purāṇas proclaim that it was here that Brahmā conducted the marriage of Kṛṣṇa with Rādhā. (Chapter 38, Sabhā Parva, Dākṣiṇātya Pāṭha, M.B.).

BHAṄGA. A serpent born in the Takṣaka dynasty. Bhaṅga was burnt to ashes at the Serpent Yajña performed by King Janamejaya. (M.B., Chapter 57, Verse 9).

BHAṄGAKĀRA I. A king, son of Avikṣit and grandson of King Kuru of the Lunar dynasty. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 94, Verse 53).

BHAṄGAKĀRA II. A king of the Yadu dynasty. He attended the grand celebrations held at Mount Raivata. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 218, Verse 11).

BHĀṄGĀSURI I. Another name of King Ṛtuparṇa.

BHAṄGĀSVAN (BHAṄGĀSVANA). A king in ancient India. For the story of his transformation into a woman refer to para 42 under 'Indra'.

BHĀNU I. A son born to Kṛṣṇa of Satyabhāmā. (Daśama Skandha, Bhāgavata).

BHĀNU II. Son of Dyau; this Bhānu was a guru of Sūrya. (Śloka 42, Chapter 1, Ādi Parva, M.B.).

BHĀNU III. A devagandharva born to Kaśyapa prajāpati of his wife Pṛthā. (Śloka 47, Chapter 65, Ādi Parva, M.B.).

BHĀNU IV. He is the son of an agni called Pāñcajanya. He is born of the spiritual essence of Aṅgiras and Cyavana. This Bhānu is called Manu and Bṛhadbhānu. (Chapters 220 and 221, Vana Parva, M.B.).

BHĀNU V. A king of ancient Bhārata. This king took a flying tour of Kurukṣetra in Indra's aeroplane to witness the battle between Arjuna and Droṇa. (Śloka 9, Chapter 56, Virāṭa Parva, M.B.).

BHĀNU VI. A yādava. He learnt the art of archery from Pradyumna. Sahadeva married the daughter of this Bhānu called Bhānumatī. (Vana Parva, 180, 27 and Harivaṁśa 2.20.12).

BHĀNUDATTA. A brother of Śakuni. In the Mahābhārata battle he fought against Bhīma and died. (Śloka 24, Chapter 157, Droṇa Parva, M.B.).

BHĀNUDEVA. A warrior of Pāñcāla state. Karṇa killed him in battle. (Śloka 15, Chapter 48. Karṇa Parva).

BHĀNUKOPA. A demon. He fought against Subrahmaṇya. (Asura Khaṇḍa, Skanda Purāṇa).

BHĀNUMĀN I. A king of the dynasty of Śrī Rāma. He was the father of a King called Śakradyumna. (Navama Skanda, Bhāgavata).

BHĀNUMĀN II. A son born to Kṛṣṇa of Satyabhāmā. (Daśama Skandha, Bhāgvata).

BHĀNUMĀN III. A prince of Kaliṅga. He fought on the side of the Kauravas and was killed by Bhīmasena. (Chapter 54, Bhīṣma Parva, M.B.)

BHĀNUMATĪ I. The daughter of Bhānu, a leader of the Yādavas. When Śrī Kṛṣṇa went with his retinue of Yādavas to visit the holy palace called Piṇḍāraka the Yādavas conducted a wine festival. During that festival a demon of the name Nikumbha carried away Bhānumatī. This was because of a curse to Bhānumatī from Durvāsas whom Bhānumatī did not respect once when they met at the garden of Raivata. Durvāsas had after the curse consoled her by assuring her that she would be saved and married by Sahadeva, one of the Pāṇḍavas. True to this, Bhānumatī was married to Sahadeva in the presence of Nārada and Kṛṣṇa. (Viṣṇu Parva, Chapter 90).

BHĀNUMATĪ II. Daughter of Kṛtavīrya. She was the wife of Ahaṁyati, a king of the Pūru line of monarchs. They had a son named Sārvabhauma.

BHĀNUMATĪ III. Daughter of Aṅgiras. She was extraordinarily beautiful. (Śloka 3, Chapter 218, Vana Parva, M.B.).

BHĀNUSENA. A son of Karṇa. He was killed in the battle by Bhīmasena. (Śloka 27, Chapter 48, Karṇa Parva, M.B.).

BHARADVĀJA I. Another name of Dīrghatamas.

 Dīrghatamas is also called Bharadvāja. But the Bharadvāja of purānic fame is not Dīrghatamas. Dīrghatamas is the son whom Bṛhaspati illegitimately got of Mamatā, his brother's wife. There was then another legitimate child in the womb of Mamatā. Knowing this the devas told her 'Bharadvāja' meaning 'bear the brunt of two' and so the son of Bṛhaspati got the name of Bharadvāja also. The real name of this son was Dīrghatamas or Vitatha. Dīrghatamas is not the Bharadvāja who was the father of Droṇa. The famous Bharadvāja was the son of Atri. Dīrghatamas or Vitatha was the adopted son of Bharata. son of Duṣyanta. (Bhāgavata and Kamparāmāyaṇa. For details see under Bharata I and Dīrghatamas.

BHARADVĀJA II. The sage Bharadvāja of Purāṇic fame.

1) General information. Ayodhyā Kāṇḍa of Kampa Rāmāyaṇa states that this sage was the son of Atri Maharṣi. He lived for many thousands of years. He is connected with Vālmīki and the story of Śrī Rāma. Bharadvāja was for many years a disciple of Vālmīki. He was present with Vālmīki when the hunter killed one of the couple of Krauñca. When Vālmīki and Bharadvāja reached the shores of the river, Tamasā, that day Vālmīki told Bharadvāja thus : "Look, Bharadvāja, what a clean ghat this is. The water is pure and clear. Place your water-jug here and give me my valkala. We will get down here in this sacred water". Then Vālmīki taking the valkala from the disciple walked along the shore admiring the beauty of the forest trees and found on his way the historic Krauñca couple. (Sarga 2, Bāla Kāṇḍa, Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa).

2) Bharadvāja and the study of Vedas. Bharadvāja gave himself untiringly to the study of the Vedas. He obtained from Indra a boon to extend his term of life on earth to many thousands of years by different stages, each stage covering a span of a thousand years of life. All these years he devoted to an incessant study of the Vedas. Finding the term not sufficient for completing the study of the Vedas he appealed to Indra again for extension and Indra appearing in person took him before three mountains and giving him three handfuls of sand told him thus, "What you have studied about Vedas till this time is equivalent to the amount of sand I have now given and what is yet to be studied about the Vedas is as big as the three mountains before you". Any other mortal being would have been disheartened by this revelation made by Indra, but not Bharadvāja. Undaunted he continued his studies. (Bhāgavata).

3) Bharadvāja in the role of a magician. The āśrama of Bharadvāja was in Citrakūṭa and Śrī Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa in the beginning of their exile went to his āśrama accepting his blessings. Bharata on his return from Kekaya knew about the exile of his brothers and hoping to bring them back to Ayodhyā went in search of them with a big retinue of soldiers and men. Keeping the retinue outside, Bharata went to the āśrama of Bharadvāja. The latter decided to give Bharata and his people a grand reception and calling Viśvakarmā to his side asked him to arrange a royal banquet that night. Devas, Gandharvas, Apsarases, Aṣṭadikpālas and all such people were invited for the night. Renowned dancers from devaloka like Ghṛtācī, Hemā, Viśvācī Miśrakeśī and Alambuṣā appeared for entertainment. Even Vanarājī took part in the dance. Dishes of food came to the guests of their own accord. The night came to an end wonderfully and at daybreak everything vanished and all were amazed at the magic of the sage. (Sarga 91, Ayodhyā Kāṇḍa, Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa).

4) Droṇa's origin. Droṇa was the son born to Bharadvāja of the celestial woman, Ghṛtācī. (see under Droṇa).

5) How Bharadvāja died once but was born again. See under Arvāvasu.

6) The name Bharadvāja. This is how the connotation of the word is explained.

Bhare'sutān bhare śiṣyān
Bhare devān bhare dvijān
Bhare ca bhāryāmavyājād
Bharadvājo'smi śobhane

(I protect even those who are not my sons, I protect my disciples, I protect devas and the brahmins. I protect my wife and all these I do with ease and so I am named Bharadvāja). (Bhāgavata)

7) Other details.

(1) Bharadvāja once gave refuge in his āśrama to Manoramā, daughter of the King of Kaliṅga and her son. (See under Manoramā).

(2) The sixth maṇḍala of Ṛgveda contains the songs of Bharadvāja.

(3) He was among the sages who once went to Dvārakā and cursed Sāmba. (See under Sāmba).

(4) Bharadvāja had a daughter Devavarṇinī whom Viśravas married and got the son, Kubera. (see under Kubera).

(5) Once Bharadvāja was travelling through an uninhabited forest with his son when he became exhausted by hunger and he then begged of a śūdra, Pṛthu, several cows. (Śloka 107, Chapter 1, Manusmṛti).

(6) This sage took part in a birthday celebrations of Arjuna. (Śloka 57, Chapter 122, Ādi Parva, M.B.).

(7) Because of the blessing of Bharadvāja Bharata got a son named Bhūmanyu. (Śloka 22, Chapter 94, Ādi Parva, M.B.).

(8) Bharadvāja taught the secret of the missile Āgenya to Agniveśa. (Śloka 39, Chapter 129, Ādi Parva, M.B.).

(9) He worshipped Brahmā sitting in the council of Brahmā. (Śloka 22, Chapter 11, Sabhā Parva, M.B.).

(10) This sage came to the battlefield during the Mahābhārata battle and requested Droṇa to lay down his missile. (Śloka 35, Chapter 196, Droṇa Parva, M.B.).

(11) Once Bhṛgu Maharṣi asked him some questions on the creation of this universe and Bharadvāja gave him satisfactory answers. (Chapter 182, Śānti Parva, M.B.).

(12) This sage performed the sacrifice Putrakāmeṣṭi, and gave a son to Divodāsa. (Chapter 30, Anuśāsana Parva, M.B.).

BHARADVĀJA III. The eldest son of the Agni, Śamyu. (Śloka 5, Chapter 219, Vana Parva, M.B.).

BHARADVĀJA IV. A renowned sage. Bharata, a King of the Pūru line of kings, had no sons and as he was spending his days in sorrow Marutta gave Bharata this Bharadvāja as a son. Bharadvāja who was by birth a brahmin from then onwards became a Kṣatriya. (Matsya Purāṇa 49. 27-39 and Vāyu Purāṇa 99. 152-158).

BHARADVĀJA V. A maharṣi born of the line of Aṅgiras. He was the father of Yavakrīta and a friend of Raibhya, son of Viśvāmitra.

Once Raibhya created a Kritya and that Kritya killed Bharadvāja's son Yavakrīta. Unable to bear the loss of his son Bharadvāja was preparing to give up his own life by jumping into the fire when Arvāvasu brought to life Yavakrīta and gave him to the sage. Immensely pleased at the regain of his son Bharadvāja ended his life on earth and went to heaven. (M.B., Vana Parva, 165-168)

BHARADVĀJA VI. A brahmarṣi who lived in the Pūrvamanvantara. He was living on the shore of Gaṅgā doing rigorous penance. One day desirous of conducting a special type of Yajña he went to bathe in the river along with other sages. There he saw the celestial beauty, Ghṛtācī, standing in all splendour after her bath. Bharadvāja had seminal emission and from that was born a daughter, Śrutavatī, to him. (Chapter 47, Śalya Parva, M.B.).

BHARADVĀJA VII. A great scholar well-versed in all the Śāstras. He is the author of 'Dharmasūtra' and 'Śrautasūtra'. (The Viśvavidyālaya of Bombay keeps a hand written copy of his work Śrautasūtra written in Pāṇḍu script).

BHĀRADVĀJA I. A Maharṣi. It was he who convinced Dyumatsena, father of Satyavān that he (Satyavān) would be endowed with long life. (Vana Parva, Chapter 288, Verse 16).

BHĀRADVĀJA II. The collective name of a particular sect of preceptors mentioned in the Upaniṣads. The Bṛhadāraṇyaka Upaniṣad refers to this sect of preceptors as disciples of Bhāradvāja, Pārāśarya, Valāka, Kauśika, Aitareya, Āsurāyaṇa and Baijavāpāyana.

BHĀRADVĀJA III. A grammarian. According to the Ṛktantra, prātiśākhya of Sāmaveda, it was Brahmā, who first composed the science of grammar. This science was taught by Brahmā to others in the following order : Brahmā to Bṛhaspati, he to Indra, Indra to Bhāradvāja and he to his disciples.

Pāṇini has discussed the grammatical concepts of Bhāradvāja. Ṛkprātiśākhya and Taittirīya have quoted the opinions of this grammarian.

BHARADVAJA(M). A place of habitation in ancient Bhārata. (Śloka 68, Chapter 9, Bhīṣma Parva, M.B.).

BHĀRADVĀJATĪRTHA. One of the five sacred places (bathing ghāṭs in sacred rivers). (See Varga).

BHĀRADVĀJĪ. A famous Indian river mentioned in the Purāṇas. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 9, Verse 29).

BHĀRADVĀJĪPUTRA. A preceptor, who was a disciple of Pārāśarīputra. In the Bṛhadāraṇyakopaniṣad he is referred to in many contexts as Vātsīmāṇḍavīputra.

BHARAṆĪ. One of the twentyseven constellations. Puṇya is assured if one gives as gift a cow to a brahmin on that day. (Śloka 35, Chapter 64, Anuśāsana Parva, M.B.).

BHARATA I. Son of Duṣyanta born of Śakuntalā.

1) Genealogy. Descending in order from Viṣṇu - Brahmā-Atri-Candra-Budha-Purūravas-Āyus-Nahuṣa - Yayāti - Pūru-Janamejaya - Prācinvā - Pravīra-Namasyu - Vītabhaya-Śuṇḍu-Bahuvidha - Saṁyāti - Rahovādī - Raudrāśva-Matināra-Santurodha-Duṣyanta-Bharata.

2) Birth. Duṣyanta was once hunting in the forests when he hit a fawn with his arrow. The fawn fled to the Āśrama of Kaṇva Muni and the king followed it. On reaching the Āśrama grounds he saw Śakuntalā watering the plants helped by her companions Anasūya and Priyaṁvadā. Duṣyanta and Śakuntalā fell in love with each other at first sight. Kaṇva was absent from the Āśrama and they married according to the Gāndharva rites and Śakuntalā became pregnant soon. The king gave her his signet ring as a sign of faith and left for his palace. When Duṣyanta left her Śakuntalā fell into a deep reverie and she never knew about the arrival of the arrogant sage, Durvāsas to the āśrama. Durvāsas mistook her as disrespectful and cursed her saying that she would be forgotten by the man of whom she was thinking then. Śakuntalā never knew about the curse also. Kaṇva Muni when he returned to the Āśrama and knew everything, sent Śakuntalā to the palace of Duṣyanta. But King Duṣyanta never recognised her and when Śakuntalā was returning deeply grieved Menakā her mother, took her and left her in the āśrama of Kaśyapa. There Śakuntalā delivered a son. The boy grew brave and fearless and he could subdue even the wildest of animals around there. Kaśyapa, therefore, named him Sarvadamana.

Once when Duṣyanta was returning home after visiting Indra he saw Śakuntalā, recognised her, and took her and the boy to his palace. This was the boy who later on became known as Bharata. (Chapter 73, Ādi Parva, M.B.).

3) Marriage and reign. Bharata was a partial incarnation of Mahāviṣṇu. Even while he was young he became a ruler and conquering the world destroyed the wicked. Bharata had three wives. All the sons born to them were bad and so the mothers killed them all. Aggrieved over the loss of his sons he worshipped the devas to get a son for him. At that time the great preceptor Bṛhaspati forcibly married Mamatā the wife of his brother. Mamatā was pregnant then and when she conceived from Bṛhaspati also she bore two children. On delivery she threw the child of Bṛhaspati in the forests and went away with the other son.

The Devas took care of the discarded child and named him Bharadvāja and gave the child to Bharata. Bharata gave the boy the name Vitatha (Dīrghatamas). Bharata ruled over his land for twentyseven thousand years and the land was, therefore, called Bhārata. (Śloka 96, Chapter 2, Ādi Parva, M.B.).

After ruling the land ideally he left for the forests entrusting the land to his son, Vitatha. (Navama Skandha, Bhāgavata).

Vitatha also was called Bharata and he had five sons: Suhotra, Suhota, Gaya, Garbha and Suketu. (Chapter 278, Agni Purāṇa).

BHARATA II. Son of Daśaratha.

1) Genealogy. Descending in order from Viṣṇu-Brahmā-Marīci-Kaśyapa-Vivasvān - Vaivasvatamanu - Ikṣvāku-Vikukṣi-Śaśāda-Kakutstha-Anenas-Pṛthulāśva -Prasenajit - Yuvanāśva - Māndhātā - Purukutsa - Trasadasyu-Anaraṇya-Haryaśva-Vasumanas-Sudhanvā-Trayyāruṇa-Satyavrta-(Triśaṅku)-Hariścandra-Rohitāśva - Harita-Cuñcu-Sudeva-Bharuka - Bāhuka - Sagara - Asamañjas-Aṁśumān-Bhagīratha-Śrutanābha-Sindhudvīpa - Ayutāyus-Ṛtuparṇa-Sarvakāma-Sudās - Mitrasaha (Kalmāṣapāda)-Aśmaka-Mūlaka-Khaṭvāṅga (Dilīpa, Dīrghabāhu)-Raghu-Aja-Daśaratha-Bharata.

2) Birth. Daśaratha, King of Ayodhyā, had three wives : Kausalyā, Kaikeyī and Sumitrā. Kausalyā gave birth to Śrī Rāma, Kaikeyī to Bharata and Sumitrā to Lakṣmaṇa and Śatrughna. Kaikeyī, mother of Bharata, was the sister of Yudhājit, Rājā of Kekeya. Bharata was born on the day of Pūya. (Śloka 14, Sarga 18, Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa)

Daśaratha remained in sorrow without children for a very long time and then he performed a Putrakāmeṣṭi yāga (A sacrificial ceremony to get children) with the Maharṣi Ṛṣyaśṛṅga as the officiating priest. From the sacred fire arose a divine figure carrying a pot of pudding and it was after taking that pudding that the wives of Daśaratha became pregnant. (Sarga 15, Bālakāṇḍa, Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa).

3) Till the end of Śrī Rāma's forest life. The sons of Daśaratha married the daughters of Janaka, King of Mithilā. Śrī Rāma married Sītā, Bharata, Māṇḍavī, Lakṣmaṇa, Ūrmilā and Śatrughna, Śrutakīrtī.

Daśaratha made arrangements to crown Rāma as King and then leave for the forests and lead an ascetic life. At that time Bharata and Śatrughna were in the country of Kekaya with their uncle, Yudhājit. When the day of coronation was drawing near Kaikeyī demanded of Daśaratha the execution of two boons which were once promised by Daśaratha to her long ago during a battle between the devas and asuras. One of them was to crown her son, Bharata, as king and the other to send Rāma to the forests for a period of fourteen years. Daśaratha was shocked to hear that. But, without any hesitation, Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa accompanied by Sītā went to the forests and Daśaratha overcome with immense grief caused by this unpleasant turn of events fell down dead. Messengers were sent then to Kekaya to bring Bharata and after travelling for three days Bharata and Śatrughna reached Ayodhyā. Though they were not informed of the death of their father they were worried all the way because of the several bad omens which they saw. On entering Ayodhyā they were shocked to find all the roads desolate and arriving at the palace they found it silent and gloomy. Kaikeyī then told him all that had happened and when Bharata knew that his mother was at the root of all this calamity his rage knew no bounds. Forgetting himself he drew from the sheath the glittering sword and stood before his mother with the drawn sword wavering to strike or not to strike and mused to himself "No, Not a woman and not one's own mother, No, it should not be done". Immediately after this was decided, he swung the sword straight to his throat. But adroitly Śatrughna intervened and swept away the sword before it fell at its aim. This strong move of Śatrughna brought Bharata to his senses and he looked at his mother so fiendishly that at his stare his mother turned pale like a flower brought near a burning flame. Bharata immediately changed into the dress of a Sannyāsī and started to go to the forests. Śatrughna followed his brother. Vasiṣṭha also started. The news spread like wildfire and people began to crowd at the palace eager to follow the brothers. Very soon a huge procession was seen moving towards the forests. Vasiṣṭha and Arundhatī in a chariot in the front, Kausalyā and Sumitrā in another next to it and Bharata and Śatrughna closely following the chariots, walking. People joined the procession from behind. The great crowd of people reached the banks of the river Gaṅgā. Guha coming to know of the great exile of people from Ayodhyā through spies went and saw Bharata, at first in disguise, and later as himself made his acquaintance. He then took Bharata and Śatrughna across the river to the presence of Śri Rāma at Citrakūṭa.

When they reached Citrakūṭa only Bharata-Śatrughna, Vasiṣṭha and Arundhatī, Kausalyā and Sumitrā entered the āśrama of Śrī Rāma, all the others remaining outside. When Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa were told about the death of their father they were filled with grief. All the sons, then, Vasiṣṭha officiating, performed the obsequies of their father. Rāma and Bharata then discussed the future. Śrī Rāma persisted in his vow and said he would return to his country only after fourteen years and insisted that Bharata should rule the country during that period. Bharata accepted the arrangement saying that if his brother did not come back after fourteen years he would give up his life by jumping into the fire. Śrī Rāma then gave his sandals to Bharata who accepting the same with due respect returned home followed by others. On reaching Ayodhyā Bharata did not go to the royal palace which he considered as empty because of the absence of his brother, Rāma and abhorrent because of the presence of his mother, Kaikeyī. Instead, he went to a nearby village called Nandi and installing the sandals there lived there and ruled the country.

4) Return of Śrī Rāma. Śrī Rāma when he came back to Ayodhyā after fourteen years was crowned King. Bharata got two sons of his wife Māṇḍavī, Subāhu and Śūrasena. While they were thus living happily in Ayodhyā, message was sent through an ascetic by Yudhājit from Kekaya that some gandharvas were creating trouble in that country. It was the state of Sindhu in Kekaya which was subjected to this molestation and on the advice of Rāma Bharata went and subdued the trouble, killing the gandharvas. He then created two small states on either side of Sindhu and made his two sons the Kings of those states. When Śrī Rāma gave up his life in Sarayū river and rose to heaven as Viṣṇu Bharata and Śatrughna also gave up their lives and took the forms of the conch and the wheel which adorn the hands of Viṣṇu. (Uttara Rāmāyaṇa).

BHARATA III. A son of Ṛṣabha.

1) Genealogy and birth. Descending in order from Viṣṇu-Brahmā - Svāyambhuvamanu - Priyavrata - Agnīdhra-Nābhi-Ṛṣabha-Bharata.

Emperor Priyavrata partitioned his empire to his eight children. Agnīdhra got Jambudvīpa. Agnīdhra had nine sons: Nābhi, Kimpuruṣa, Harivarṣa, Ilāvṛta, Ramya, Hiraṇvan, Kuru Bhadrāśva and Ketumāla. On the death of the father Jambudvīpa was divided into nine states and Nābhi got the land called Hima. Nābhi married Merudevī and got a son, Ṛṣabha. Ṛṣabha had a hundred sons and Bharata was the eldest. (Chapter 1, Aṁśam 2, Viṣṇu Purāṇa).

2) Marriage, administration and entry into Āśrama life. Bharata took over the administration of the kingdom at the death of his father, Ṛṣabha. He married Pañcajanī daughter of Viśvarūpa. They had five sons, Sumati, Rāṣtrabhṛt, Sudarśana, Āvaraṇa and Dhūmraketu. The Pañcama Skandha of Bhāgavata contains a statement to the effect that India got the name Bhārata from this king. (It is worthwhile remembering at this juncture a previous statement that the name Bhārata was obtained from Bharata, son of Duṣyanta). Bharata like his forefather was very erudite and affectionate and always respected his duties. He always meditated on Brahmā and in his heart there shone the Paramapuruṣa in the figure of Vāsudeva adorned with Srīvatsa, Kaustubha, Vanamālā, Śaṁkha, Cakra, Gadā and Padma. He ruled the country for a crore of years and after that dividing the country among his sons went to the āśrama of Pulaha Maharṣi to spend the rest of his life there. On the rocks lying in the river flowing in front of the Āśrama were the marks of Cakra on one side and Nābhi on the other and the river therefore came to be known as Cakranābhi. Bathing in this river and doing pūjā Bharata lived there oblivious of the world outside. (Pañcama Skandha, Bhāgavata).

3) Bharata and the deer. Bharata led a purely ascetic life performing everyday the rites laid down by scriptures and muttering the mystic formula of Brahmākṣara. One day a thirsty pregnant deer went to drink water in a nearby pond. As it was drinking it heard the loud roar of a lion nearby. Frightened the poor animal without even waiting to quench its thirst ran into the forest and on its way delivered a child and the deer-babe fell into the river. The deer exhausted and tormented by fear ran into a cave and fell down dead. Bharata happened to see the new-born deer floating on the river and took it to his āśrama. From then onwards Bharata's mind was diverted from the spiritual to the mundane effort of taking care of the young deer. The deer followed him wherever he went and if it did not turn up in time in the evening after grazing Bharata went about in search of it weeping. Years went by and Bharata became old and died with the name of the deer on his lips. (Pañcama Skandha, Bhāgavata).

4) Rebirths of Bharata. Because he died with the thought of the deer in his mind he was reborn as a deer. The deer was aware of his previous birth and regretted that he spent the life of a man for the sake of a deer. The deer, therefore, left the house of his mother in the mountain of Kālañjara and went to the āśrama of Pulaha. The pious animal daily bathed in the river and died there on the bank of that river. So in its next life the deer was born as the son of a brahmin in the line of Aṅgiras. That brahmin had two wives and got nine sons of his first wife and one of the second. The son born to the second wife was none other than Bharata. In due course the brahmin died and his second wife jumped into the funeral pyre and ended her life. Thrown an orphan Bharata became a puppet in the hands of his brothers. Bharata was asked to look after the cattle and fields of his brothers for his living. With great forbearance Bharata did all he was told.

One day Bharata was keeping watch over the fields of his brothers. It was midnight. In the neighbourhood the Caṇḍālas were making merry over the birth of a child to one of the women. Some of them were bringing a man bound by ropes to be given as 'Narabali' to the goddess Kālī. (Narabali is the offering of a human being with his head cut off to propitiate a deity). On the way the man escaped and the disappointed Caṇḍālas were roaming about in search of a substitute when they came across Bharata keeping watch over the fields. Immediately he was bound by ropes and taken before the idol of Kālī. The effulgence of the brahmin astounded Kālī and getting angry for bringing such a pious brahmin for sacrifice she devoured the Caṇḍālas and allowed the brahmin to go free.

Escaping from there Bharata reached a village walking all the way. That village was being ruled over by a king called Rahūgaṇa and that king was going to see Bhagavān Kapila Maharṣi along the banks of the river Ikṣumatī in a palanquin. The palanquin had not enough bearers and so the brahmin was asked to join the team of bearers. As they were moving the palanquin shook because of the wrong steps kept by Bharata. The king reprimanded Bharata and Bharata then gave the king fitting replies based on the ethics of Vedānta. The erudition of Bharata greatly impressed the king and he stepped down from the palanquin and bowed to Bharata.

Bharata went from there to the forests singing devotional songs in praise of Viṣṇu and at last attained salvation. (Pañcama Skandha, Bhāgavata).

BHARATA IV. A sage and the famous author of Nāṭyaśāstra. He was a critic who lived around the year 400 B.C. His book on Nāṭyaśāstra (Histrionics) is world famous. Kālidāsa in the second act of his drama, Vikramorvaśīya states that this Bharata used to coach the devas in the art of acting. Nāṭyaśāstra is a book comprising thirtyseven chapters dealing with the art of dance and music. He has written in detail about the four Alaṁkāras, Upamā, Dīpaka, Rūpaka and Yamaka and also about the ten requisites of a Kāvya. He has not forgotten to write about the defects and demerits of Kāvya also. Commentaries on Nāṭyaśāstra have been written by lions in the profession : Mitragupta, Harṣavardhana, Śaṅkuka, Udbhaṭa, Bhaṭṭanāyaka and Abhinavagupta. Of these 'Abhinavabhāratī' the commentary written by Abhinavagupta is the only one freely available now.

BHARATA V. The Mahābhārata speaks about a few other Bharatas who were sons of Agni. Śamyu is a son of Agni known as Bharata. This Bharata has got another name, Ūrjja. (Śloka 6, Chapter 219, Vana Parva, M.B.). There is an Agni of name Bharata with a son named Bhārata. When this Agni is propitiated one gets healthy and strong and so this Agni is called Puṣṭimān also. (Śloka 7, Chapter 219, Vana Parva, M.B.). There is another Bharata son of an Agni called Adbhuta. It is this Agni that burns dead bodies. As this Agni lives permanently in Agniṣṭoma Yajñas; it gets the name of Niyata also. (Śloka 6, Chapter 222, Vana Parva, M.B.).

BHĀRATA (MAHĀBHĀRATA). An epic written by Vyāsa.

1) General information. The Mahābhārata is an epic. Bharata is acclaimed as the first emperor of Bhārata. The theme of this great epic is the fight between the two lines of princes belonging to the dynasty of Bharata. That is why the book is called Mahābhārata. The great size of the volume and the greatness of the wisdom contained therein have contributed much to its getting the name, Mahābhārata. Once the devas put the Mahābhārata in one pan of a balance and the Vedas in the other pan. Then the devas were convinced that the Mahābhārata weighed more than all the Vedas put together. (Ślokas 269-271, Chapter 1, Ādi Parva, M.B.).* This book contains over a lakh of verses. There is no subject on earth which is not dealt with in the Mahābhārata. None of

* Purā kila suraiḥ sarvaiḥ sametya tulayā dhṛtam
Caturbhyaḥ sarahasyebhyo Vedebhyo hyadhikaṁ yadā
Tadā prabhṛti loke'smin mahābhāratamucyate
Mahatve ca gurutve ca dhriyamāṇaṁ yaśo'dhikam
Mahatvād bhāravatvāc ca Mahābhāratamucyate.

the world's epics is so big as Mahābhārata. In size the Mahābhārata is double that of Homer's Iliad and Odyssey put together. The following poem about it is worth mentioning now:

Yathā samudro bhagavan
Yathā ca himavān giriḥ /
Khyātāvubhau ratnanidhī
Tathā bhāratamucyate //

Mahābhārata is not a mere epic. It is a whole literature in itself containing a philosophy which has been an unfailing and perennial source of spiritual strength to the people of India. Above all it has for its core the Gītā which is perhaps the noblest of scriptures.

The Mahābhārata comprises eighteen books, each book being called a Parva. There are 2109 chapters in it, the chapters differing in size. Besides, there is an annexe called Harivaṁśa which deals with the life and history of Śrī Kṛṣṇa.

2) Contents. The contents of each Parva are succinctly given below: The Parvas are so named as to give a hint of their central theme.

(1) Ādi Parva. (Ādi=beginning). Pāṇḍu and Dhṛtarāṣṭra, king of the Candra dynasty, are brothers. Bhīṣma brought them up. Dhṛtarāṣṭra was born blind and he got a hundred children of his wife Gāndhārī. They were called the Kauravas. Pāṇḍu had two wives Kuntī and Mādrī and got of them five sons called the Pāṇḍavas headed by the eldest Yudhiṣṭhira.

(2) Sabhā Parva (Sabhā=court). The Pāṇḍavas and Kauravas lived together in the court at Hastināpura. There, the Kauravas entered into a game of dice with Yudhiṣṭhira and through the deceitful tactics engineered by the keen-witted Śakuni, Yudhiṣṭhira was defeated and he lost everything he possessed. The Pāṇḍavas were then compelled to go into exile to the forests for twelve years and spend another year after that incognito. If they were found out during that period of incognito they were to go into exile for another term of twelve years. The Pāṇḍavas accompanied by Pāñcālī left for the forests.

(3) Vana Parva (Vana=forest). This is one of the longest of Parvas and describes the life of the Pāṇḍavas in the forest Kāmyaka. The well known stories 'Nala Carita' and 'Kirātārjunīya' are told in this Parva'.

(4) Virāṭa Parva. (Virāṭa=name of a King). The Pāṇḍavas after completing their term of exile in the forests spent the year of their life in incognito at the court of King Virāṭa. Many wonderful events took place during their stay there and this Parva deals in detail about them.

(5) Bhīṣma Parva (Bhīṣma=The first Generalissimo of the Kauravas). The great Mahābhārata war was fought in the vast expanse of Kurukṣetra lying to the north-west of Delhi. Bhīṣma was the first generalissimo of the Kauravas and Dhṛṣṭadyumna of the Pāṇḍavas. Vyāsa describes the events of the battle classifying it according to the generalissimos of the Kaurava army giving the four generalissimos a Parva each. Bhīṣma fought for ten days and was struck down on the tenth day by an arrow from Arjuna.

(6) Droṇa Parva (Droṇa=The second Generalissimo). When Bhīṣma fell Droṇa took charge as the supreme commander. This Parva deals with the fight under his command. Droṇa was killed in the end by Dhṛṣṭadyumna.

(7) Karṇa Parva. (Karṇa=The third generalissimo). This Parva deals with the war under the command of Karṇa. Karṇa fell in the end at the hands of Arjuna.

(8) Śalya Parva. (Śalya=The fourth and last of the Generalissimos). When Karṇa fell Śalya took over charge of the Kaurava army. As the war was coming to an end most of the big warriors of the Kaurava army were killed. In the end Bhīma and Duryodhana met in a grim fight with maces in which Duryodhana was killed. This Parva deals with the final stage of the battle.

(10) Sauptika Parva. (Sauptika=pertaining to sleep). This Parva tells us the tragic story of how Kṛpācārya, Kṛtavarmā and Aśvatthāmā who were the only three left with Duryodhana after the great battle went into the camp of the Pāṇḍavas at night and killed all the brave warriors of the Pāṇḍava army, excepting the Pāṇḍavas, who were sleeping in their camp unaware of the foul play lying ahead.

(11) Strī Parva. (Strī=woman). This Parva deals with the great lamentation in the battlefield, after the war, of Gāndhārī and other women.

(12) Śānti Parva. Yudhiṣṭhira was crowned king and even at that time Bhīṣma was lying on his bed of arrows awaiting death. Before taking up his duties of the state Yudhiṣṭhira went to where the grandsire lay dying and took his blessing and instruction in dharma. This instruction of Bhīṣmācārya to King Yudhiṣṭhira of the three dharmas, Rājadharma, Āpaddharma and Mokṣadharma is the famous Śanti Parva.

(13) Anuśāsana Parva. (Anuśāsana = Instruction). Bhīṣma still on his death-bed continues his instructions on several topics, like duty, freedom and fasting, giving entertaining stories to illustrate the essence of his teaching. This Parva is devoted to this.

(14) Āśvamedhika Parva. (Aśvamedha=yāga conducted by emperors). This Parva deals with the yāga conducted by Yudhiṣṭhira when he became the emperor of Bhārata.

(15) Āśramavāsika Parva. (Āśramavāsa=life in a hermitage). Dhṛtarāṣṭra, the blind and his wife Gāndhārī accompanied by Kuntī left for the forests and lived there for two years in a hermitage. One day the forest caught fire and the three without trying to escape sat on the ground facing eastwards in yoga posture and calmly gave up themselves to the flames. This is dealt with in this Parva.

(16) Mausala Parva. (Mausala=Mace). This Parva gives the story of how the Yādavas fought against each other with maces and were destroyed and how Dvārakā sank down into the ocean. It describes the death of Śrī Kṛṣṇa and Balarāma also.

(17) Mahāprasthānika Parva. (Mahāprasthāna=Death). Dharmaputra entrusts his kingdom to his successor and alongwith his four brothers and wife Pāñcālī sets out on a long journey to Mahāmeru never to return. This journey to death is detailed in this Parva.

(18) Svargārohaṇa Parva. (Svarga=Heaven). This Parva describes the entry of the Pāṇḍavas and their relatives into Svarga, heaven.

3) Mode of Narration. Most of the verses in the Mahābhārata are in the Anuṣṭup metre. At certain places other metres also have been used. There are prose pieces also in it. There are twenty notable pieces, three in Ādi Parva, seven in Vana Parva, seven in Śānti Parva and three in Anuśāsana Parva. All the pieces are statements by realised souls. The style of the poetry is simple and the method of presentation lively. At times the imagination of the poet extends up to the horizon. Though there is a flow of spiritualism throughout the matter is purely mundane.

4) Authorship. Bhagavān Vyāsa is believed to be the author of Mahābhārata. He was a contemporary of the Pāṇḍavas and the Kauravas. Many of the events of the Mahābhārata were personally witnessed by Vyāsa. He took three years to write this book. The following ślokas will support the above:

Kururāja kulasthānāṁ
Dṛṣṭaṁ vṛttaṁ ca yatsthitam /
Tatsarvaṁ bhagavān Vyāso
Varṇayāmāsa Bhārate. //
(Padma purāṇa)

Tribhirvarṣaiḥ sadotthāyi
Kṛṣṇadvaipāyano muniḥ /
Mahābhāratamākhyānaṁ
Kṛtavānidamuttamam. //
(Śloka 55, Chapter 62, Ādi Parva).

The Varāha Purāṇa states that Vyāsa composed the Mahābhārata at a period when the end of Dvāpara yuga merged with the dawn of the Kaliyuga. The Bhāgavata states that Śrī Kṛṣṇa passed away on the first day of Kaliyuga. The Bhāgavata is devoted to admire and praise the life of Śrī Kṛṣṇa. This book also is written by Vyāsa. This śloka found in the first Chapter of Ādi Parva clears the doubt:

Vāsudevasya māhātmyaṁ
Pāṇḍavānāṁ ca satyatām /
Durvṛttaṁ Dhārttarāṣṭrāṇāṁ
Uktavān Bhagavānṛṣiḥ. //

The original name of the Bhārata which Vyāsa composed was 'Jaya'. In the first Chapter of Ādi Parva is this śloka to support this statement:

Nārāyaṇaṁ namaskṛtya
Naraṁ caiva narottamaṁ/
Devīṁ Sarasvatīṁ caiva
Tato Jayamudīrayet//

After the death of the Pāṇḍavas and the Kauravas the disciples of Vyāsa, Sumantu, Jaimini, Paila, Śuka and Vaiśampāyana gave this book great publicity. They wrote books based on this story of Bhārata of which only the 'Bhārata' of Vaiśampāyana and the Aśvamedha Parva of Jaimini are now available.

Vyāsa's Bhārata was first expounded by Vaiśampāyana at the Sarpa-satra of Janamejaya. At the request of Janamejaya, Vaiśampāyana added some more facts to the original work known then as 'Jaya'. Jaya with the accretions came to be known as Bhāratasaṁhitā. Sūta who narrated this story to Śaunaka and others at the forest of Naimiśa added some more matter to the Bhāratasaṁhitā and made it larger. The present Mahābhārata is this expanded edition.

The following facts prove that the Mahābhārata has thus passed through three stages of evolution:

1) This book is known by three names: Jaya, Bhāratasaṁhitā and Mahābhārata.[1]

2) There is a reference to the three parts of the book in Śloka 66, Chapter 1 of Ādi Parva.[2]

3) There are three different opinions regarding the total number of ślokas in the Mahābhārata. According to Ugraśravas there are 8800 verses, according to Vyāsa 24000 verses and according to another statement a lakh of verses.[3]

4) The narration appears to be of three different kinds, descriptive, philosophical and oratorical, indicative of three different authorships.

5) Sūta and Vaiśampāyana have made accretions to the original work 'Jaya' of Vyāsa.

Viewed with these facts we are led to believe that Vyāsa has composed only the very essence of Mahābhārata comprising 8800 ślokas and that work was known as 'Jaya' as referred to in the first invocatory verse of the epic. Vaiśampāyana added a few verses of his own and brought the number to 24,000 and gave the book the name of 'Bhāratasaṁhitā'. It was Sūta who made many more additions and made the book so big as to fetch it the name of 'Mahābhārata'. The epic which is now current among us contains a lakh of verses and it took perhaps centuries to get this transformation of the book from 'Jaya' to 'Mahābhārata'.

6) Period of publication. The Kali Varṣa starts from 3102 B.C. The great Mahābhārata war was fought at a period when the end of Dvāpara yuga merged into the dawn of Kali yuga as could be gathered from the following verse from the epic:

Antare caiva samprāpte
Kalidvāparayorabhūt /
Samantapañcake yuddhaṁ
Kurupāṇḍavasenayoḥ. //
(Śloka 13, Chapter 2, Ādi Parva).

So it can be deduced that the great war was fought round about 3102 B.C. Dhṛtarāṣṭra lived for eighteen years after the great battle and the Pāṇḍavas ruled the country for 36 years. (Strī Parva, M.B.). It was when Śrī Kṛṣṇa died that the Pāṇḍavas ended their rule and commenced the Mahāprasthāna. So it can be surmised that Śrī Kṛṣṇa lived for 36 years after the war.

1 (a) Jayo nāmetihāso'yaṁ

(b) Caturviṁśati sāhasrīṁ

(Śloka 78, Chapter 1, Ādi Parva).
(3) Refer to the śloka given in para 1.

Aṣṭau ślokasahasrāṇi Aṣṭau ślokaśatāni ca
Ahaṁ vedmi śuko vetti Sañjayo vetti vā na vā.
(Ādi Parva, Chapter 1).

Śrī Kṛṣṇa died on the first day of Kali yuga, 3102 B.C. Therefore it is clear the Mahābhārata battle was fought in 3138 B.C. There are indications in other purāṇas to support this theory. There was that rare phenomenon of a Saptagraha yoga (Combination in astronomical position of seven planets) while King Parīkṣit, son of Arjuna, was ruling the country.[1] This happened in a month of Māgha (January) and a probe into the dates of such previous occurrences revealed that a similar one had happened in the month of Māgha in the years 3177 and 477 B.C. (The next one is to happen in 2223 A.D.). This phenomenon repeats itself in every hundred years and so it is to be believed that one of the kind happened in 3077 B.C. precisely during the period of Parīkṣit. It is therefore confirmatory to the statement that the great war occurred in 3138 B.C.

The Pāṇḍavas ruled the country for 36 years after the war and Vyāsa wrote this divine epic after the death of the Pāṇḍavas. Vyāsa took three years to complete his work. Therefore it can be well concluded that Vyāsa wrote the epic in 3100 B.C. The Pāṇḍavas commenced their Mahāprasthāna after entrusting the administration of the state into the hands of Parīkṣit. This must have happened in 3102 B.C. Parīkṣit ruled the country for 60 years and so his son Janamejaya became King in 3042 B.C. It was after two years of his becoming King that he conducted the Sarpasatra and it was at this Sarpasatra that Vaiśampāyana first expounded 'Jaya' (Mahābhārata) to the sages assembled there.

This fixing of the date of Mahābhārata is based on the conclusions arrived at by the pandits of Bhārata, but foreign chronologists differ from us. They argue that it was in the 10th century B.C. that the Mahābhārata battle took place on the strength of the following:

The theme of the Mahābhārata is a fight between Kurus and Pāñcālas. After the war the two join and there is a statement in the Yajurveda of a people formed by the merger of the two. Therefore the great war should have happened in the 10th century B.C. It was a period of hero-worship and songs on the heroic deeds of the Kurus and Pāṇḍavas were sung and handed over from one generation to the other and gradually those songs took shape in the form of the Mahābhārata.

There is another school of thought. In the Mahābhārata, Brahmā is given great prominence. But in Vedic times Brahmā was not counted at all. During the golden period of the Buddhists Brahmā had a conspicuous hold on Hinduism. Therefore it should be deduced that the Mahābhārata was written during the 6th century B.C. Then there were about 8,000 verses in the Mahābhārata.

Towards the second stage of Mahābhārata the epic grew in size bringing into its fold about 24,000 ślokas. It was at this stage that the Mahābhārata got a vaiṣṇavite colour and Śrī Kṛṣṇa was adored as an incarnation of Viṣṇu. Megasthenes who visited India in 300 B.C. records that the majority of Hindus were vaiṣṇavites at that period. There are references in certain parts of the Mahābhārata to Greeks and Buddhists. Therefore a set of foreign chronologists conclude that those portions of the Mahābhārata could have been written only after Buddha and after the attack on Bhārata by the Greeks i.e. by 300 B.C.

The third stage of the Mahābhārata is its present form and it was at this stage that it included new philosophy in it. The Dharmasaṁhitā of Manusmṛti became popular in the fifth century A.D. and therefore the third stage of the Mahābhārata must have started before that, in the 3rd century A.D.

BHĀRATA II. (Bhāratavarṣa. India).

The purāṇas describe the Earth to be constituted of seven continents: Jambūdvīpa, Plakṣadvīpa, Śālmalīdvīpa, Kuśadvīpa, Krauñcadvīpa, Śākadvīpa and Puṣkaradvīpa. Of these India is Jambūdvīpa.

The Bhāratavarṣa was constituted of nine islands at that time in the following positions: In the centre was Ilāvṛta and to the east was Bhadravarṣa. To the south-east was Hiraṇyaka and to the south was Bhārata. To the southwest was Hari and to the west was Ketumāla. To the north-west was cambaka and to the north was Kuruvarṣa. Beautiful Kiṁpuruṣa varṣa stood to the north-east of Ilāvṛta. There was neither the passage of time nor the fear of ageing or death in any of these continents excepting Bhāratavarṣa.

This Bhāratavarṣa itself is a group of nine islands each separated from the other by oceans and thus made not easily accessible between each other. Indradvīpa, Kaśerumān, Tāmraparṇa, Gabhastimān, Nāgadvīpa, Kaṭāha, Siṁhala and Vāruṇa are the eight others and the ninth is this island of Bhāratavarṣa. This island is called Kumāra also. On the eastern boundary of this island live Kirātas, on the western side, Yavanas, on the southern boundary Āndhras and on the north Turuṣkas. In the Centre live the Brāhmins, Kṣatriyas, Vaiśyas and Śūdras. The eight sacred mountains of this place are Mahendra, Malaya, Sahya, Śuktimān, Ṛkṣaparvata, Vindhya and Pāriyātra. There are several other mountains also in Madhyapradeśa. They are: Kolāhala, Vaibhrāja, Mandara, Durddhara, Vātadhūma, Vaidyuta, Maināka, Sarasa, Tuṅgaprastha, Nāgagiri, Govardhana, Ujjayanta, Puṣpagiri, Arbuda, Raivataka, Ṛṣyamūka, Gomanta, Citrakūṭa, Kṛtasmara, Śrīparvata and Koṅkaṇa. This place is inhabited by Āryas and Mlecchas. The rivers which they use for drinking water are the following:

Sarasvatī, Pañcarūpā, Kālindī, Hiraṇvatī, Śatadru, Candrikā, Nīla, Vitastā, Irāvatī, Kuhū, Madhurā, Hārarāvi, Uśīrā, Dhātakī, Rasā, Gomatī, Dhūtapāpā, Bahudā, Dṛṣadvatī, Nisvarā, Gaṇḍakī, Citrā, Kauśikī, Vadhūsara, Sarayū and Lohitya. All these rivers originate from the base of Himavān. Those originating from Pāriyātra are: Vedaśmṛti, Vedasvanī, Vṛtraghnī, Sindhu, Parṇāśā, Nandinī, Pāvanī, Mahī, Śarā, Carmaṇvatī, Lūpi, Vidiśā, Veṇumatī, Citrā and Oghavatī. Those flowing down from the Ṛkṣaparvata are: Śoṇa alias Mahānada, Narmadā, Surasā, Kriyā, Mandākinī, Daśārṇa, Citrakūṭā, Devikā, Citrotpalā, Tamasā, Karatoyā, Piśācikā, Pippalaśreṇī, Vipāśā, Vañjulāvatī, Satsantajā, Śuktimatī, Cakriṇī, Tridivā, Vasu, Valguvāhinī. From the base of Vindhya flow down the following rivers: Śivā, Payoṣṇī, Nirvindhyā, Tāpī, Veṇā, Niṣadhāvatī, Vaitaraṇī, Sinībāhu, Kumudvatī, Toyā, Revā, Mahāgaurī, Durggyā and Antaśśivā. Those originating from the base of Sahya are the following great rivers: Godāvarī, Bhīmarathī, Kṛṣṇā, Veṇyā, Saridvatī, Viṣamādrī, Suprayogā, Vāhyā, Kāverī, Dugdhodā, Nalinī, Vārisenā, and Kalasvanā. Those arising from Śuktimān are the following: Kṛtamālā, Tāmravarṇī, Vañjjulā, Utpalāvatī, Śunī and Sudāmā. All these rivers are very sacred and are considered to be absolvers of sins, mothers of the universe and wives of oceans. There are bad rivers also besides these.

1. (a) Saptarṣayo maghāyuktāḥ kāle pārikṣite śatam (Matsya purāṇa 271.46).
(b) Te tu pārīkṣite kāle maghāsvāsan dvijottama (Viṣṇu purāṇa 4. 24. 106).

The Madhyapradeśa comprises the following states: Matsya, Kuśūdra, Kuṇḍala, Pāñcāla, Kosala, Vṛka, Śaka, Barbara, Kaurava, Kaliṅga, Vaṅga, Aṅga and Marmaka. The states lying to the north are the following: Ābhīra, Śāṭhyadhānaka, Bāhlīka, Vātadhāna, Abhīra, Kālatoyada, Aparānta, Śūdra, Pahlava, Kheṭaka, Gāndhāra, Yavana, Sindhu, Sauvīra, Bhadraka, Śātadrava, Lalittha, Pārāvata, Mūṣika, Māṭhara, Urukadhāra, Kekaya, Daṁśana, Kāmboja, Darada, Aṅga, Lokika, Veṇa, Tuṣāra, Bāhya, Todara, Ātreya, Bhāradvāja, Prasthala, Daśeraka, Lambaka, Tāvakārāma, Cūdika, Taṁgaṇa, Alasa, Ālibhadra, Kirāta, Tāmasa, Haṁsamārga, Supārśva, Gaṇaka, Kūlūta, Kurhika, Cūrṇa, Ūrṇapāda, Kukkuṭa, Māṇḍavya and Pāṇavīya. Those lying to the east are the following :

Aṅga, Vaṅga, Madgurava, Antarggiri, Bahirggiri, Pravaṁga, Vāṁgeya, Māṁsāda, Baladantika, Brahmottara, Prāvijaya, Bhārgava, Āṅgeya, Marṣaka, Prāgjyotiṣa, Vṛṣaddhra, Videha, Malla, Tāmraliptaka, Magadha and Ānanda. The states lying to the south are the following: Puṇḍra, Kerala, Cola, Kulya, Jānuka, Mūṣikāda, Kumārāda, Mahāśaka, Mahārāṣṭra, Māhiṣika, Kaliṅga, Ādīra, Vaiśikya, Āraṇya, Śabara, Pulinda, Vindhyaśaileya, Vidarbha, Daṇḍaka, Paurika, Sārika, Aśmaka, Bhogavardhana, Naimika, Kuntala, Āndhra, Udbhida and Nalakāraka. The western states are: Śūrppāraka, Vāridhāna, Durga, Cālīkaṭa, Pulīya, Sunīla, Tāmasa, Tāpasa, Kāraskara, Bhūmi, Nāsikānta, Sunarmmada, Dārukaccha, Sumāheya, Sārasvata, Vātsiya, Surāṣṭra, Āvantya and Ārbuda. The follwoing states lie adjacent to Vindhya: Kārūsa, Ekalavya, Mekala, Utkala, Uttamarṇa, Daśārṇa, Gopta, Kikarava, Tosala, Kosala, Traipura, Khelliśa, Turaga, Tuṁbara, Vahela, Niṣadha, Anūpa, Tuṇḍikera, Vītihotra and Avanti.

There are a few more states which lie attached to mountains: Nirāhāra, Haṁsamārga, Kupatha, Taṅgaṇa, Khaśa, Katha, Prāvaraṇa, Ūrṇa, Āplaṣṭa, Suhūhuka, Trigartta, Kirāta, Tomara, Saśikha and Adrika. (Chapter 13, Vāmana Purāṇa).

(See the map of Paurāṇika Bhārata).

BHĀRATASAṀHITĀ. Another title of the Mahābhārata. (See Bhārata I).

BHĀRATĪ. A famous river mentioned in the Purāṇas. It is stated in Verse 25, Chapter 222 of the Vana Parva that Agni (fire) originated in this river.

BHARATĪ. Daughter of the Agni called Bharata. (Śloka 9, Chapter 219, Vana Parva, M.B.).

BHĀRAVI. A Sanskrit poet who flourished in the 6th century A.D. He is the author of the mahākāvya called Kirātārjunīya. Raghuvaṁśa, Kumārasambhava, Kirātārjunīya, Śiśupālavadha and Naiṣadha are the five Mahākāvyas in Sanskrit with established reputation. In the Ehole records of A.D. 634 Bhāravi is held up in praise along with Kālidāsa.[1] The theme of Kirātārjunīya is Śiva, in the guise of a hunter, attacking Arjuna immersed in penance. Bhāravi's literary style is simple and sweet. In the use of similes he is second only to Kālidāsa. Among his books only Kirātārjunīya has been found out yet.

BHARGA I. Grandson of Divodāsa, a King of the Pūru line. Divodāsa got a son named Pratardana. Bharga and Vatsa were the sons of Pratardana. (Chapter 278, Agni Purāṇa).

BHARGA II. A synonym of Śiva.

BHARGA(M). A village of ancient India. (Śloka 51, Chapter 9, Bhīṣma Parva, M.B.).

BHĀRGAVA. One who belongs to the Bhṛgu dynasty. (See Bhṛgu).

BHĀRGAVA (M). A city in ancient India. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 9, Verse 50).

BHARMYAŚVA. A famous king of Pāñcāla Deśa. He had five heroic sons headed by Mudgala. (Navama Skandha, Bhāgavata).

BHARTṚHARI. A famous Sanskrit poet.

1) Birth. He was the son of Vidyāsāgara, a great brahmin scholar, who lived in Pāṭalīputra. There is a legend about the birth of Bhartṛhari in Uttara Bhārata.

Vidyāsāgara while young learnt the Vedas from his guru. But he was not satisfied with that study and wanted to learn more about all śāstras and so he started on a tour to find out a guru who would teach him all he wanted. On his way he met several great scholars but none came up to his standard of a guru. One day tired after a long journey he reached a mountain valley. Washing his hands and feet in a nearby river and quenching his thirst he went and sat down under a banyan tree to rest. The cool breeze sent the tired brahmin to sleep and he slept.

A Brahmarākṣasa who was living on the top of the banyan tree when it became midday descended from the tree to perform the sacred rites of the day and found a man lying asleep. By the sacred thread on his body the Brahmarākṣasa surmised that the man was a brahmin and woke him up. Waking up Vidyāsāgara found to his surprise the bearded Brahmarākṣasa standing before him and after mutual enquiries Vidyāsāgara told him of his mission. The Brahmarākṣasa told him thus: "Boy, let your name Vidyāsāgara (ocean of learning) be true in your life. I am acquainted with many śāstras and I shall teach you everything I know. But there are certain conditions for the same which you have to observe. You must live with me for six months and should fast during that period behaving yourself as one under a vow. I shall, however, teach you a mantra which would help you to remain unaffected by hunger, thirst or sleep. If you are prepared to accept these terms and become my disciple I shall quench your thirst for knowledge. Vidyāsāgara willingly agreed to his terms and became his student.

Both of them then climbed on the banyan tree and the Brahmarākṣasa sat in his usual place on a branch on the tree and Vidyāsāgara on a branch just below it. The instructions started and continued for six months. Vidyāsāgara never felt thirst or hunger during that period. When the teaching was complete the Brahma-

1. Yenāyoji na veśma sthiram arthavidhau vivekinā jinaveśma/ Sa jayatāṁ ravikīrtiḥ kavitāśrita-Kālidāsa-Bhāravikīrtiḥ.// rākṣasa bade farewell to his disciple and departed leaving his body behind.

Vidyāsāgara then got down from the tree and performed the obsequies of his guru. Vidyāsāgara while he was learning used to note down the instructions of the guru on the leaves of the banyan tree. It had come to a huge bundle on completion. Taking the bundle along with him Vidyāsāgara left for his country. By the time he left the forest area the power of the mantra faded and Vidyāsāgara began to feel the pangs of hunger and thirst. By dusk he reached Kaliṅga and there he came to the door of a dancing girl named Mandākinī. The door was locked as the owner was away in a Śiva temple nearby. Exhausted by the journey, hungry and thirsty, Vidyāsāgara lay down on the doorstep and soon fell asleep with the leaf-bundle as a pillow. Mandākinī when she returned from the temple at about ten at night saw a brahmin sleeping on the doorstep, tired and exhausted. She soon asked her servants to get him inside and sent for a doctor. By the clever treatment of the doctor and the expert nursing of Mandākinī, Vidyāsāgara survived. When he was fit for travel he started to go but Mandākinī objected and requested him to marry her. Vidyāsāgara did not agree to it and she took him to the King and told him all that had happened. Finding Vidyāsāgara to be one with great erudition and good manners he decided that Vidyāsāgara should marry his daughter (a Kṣatriya), daughter of his minister (a brahmin), daughter of Kulapati (a vaiśya), and also Mandākinī (a Śūdra). There was an injunction in those days that a brahmin should marry a Śūdra only after having married from all the higher castes. The decision of the King surmounted this difficulty for Vidyāsāgara to marry the śūdra girl, Mandākinī. Marriages were all conducted in order. The King's daughter bore the name Kalāvatī, the minister's Mālatī and Kulapati's Sumaṅgalī. Each delivered a son. The brahmin boy was named Vararuci, the Kṣatriya boy, Vikramāditya, the Vaiśya boy, Bhaṭṭi and the Śūdra boy, Bhartṛhari.

2) Kingship. When the King of Kaliṅga became old he gave the kingdom to Vidyāsāgara and when Vidyāsāgara died all his other sons made Bhartṛhari the King. Bhartṛhari gave his father on his death-bed a promise that he would see that no sons were born to him.[1] So though Bhartṛhari married three wives he was careful enough not to produce any children by them.

3) Bhartṛhari becomes a sannyāsī. Bhartṛhari was living happily with his wife when one day a yogī of divine disposition came to his house and giving him a ripe mango said: "If you eat this mango you will never become old. It is because you who are perfect in education and fortune should live long for the benefit of the people that I am giving you this." So saying he gave the mango and left the place. When the sannyāsī left him Bhartṛhari thought thus: "After some years my wife would become old and die. What is the use of my remaining alive after she is gone. So this mango should be given to her. Let her live long." He, therefore, gave the mango to his wife explaining to her the greatness of the fruit. That wife whom poor Bhartṛhari accepted to be very loving and chaste had a lover. He was none other than the horse-groom of her husband and that prostitute thought thus: "Of what use is my life when my lover is dead. Let him live for ever". So thinking she sent for her lover and giving him the mango explained to him the greatness of the thing. But the horse-groom was well devoted to his wife and desiring that his wife should remain young always he gave it to her. The groom's wife was a servant-maid of the palace and it was at the time of her departure from the palace after her day's work that she was given the mango by the horse-groom and so she carried it home in her hand. Bhartṛhari who was returning from somewhere to the palace saw the woman carrying the mango and questioned her and knew how she got it. On coming to the palace he sent for the horse-groom and though at first the horse-groom tried to shield the queen, he was compelled to tell the truth in the end. The truth pained him much "Phew! It was this wretched and unfaithful woman whom I was believing to be very chaste and loving. Woman can never be believed. Look, she has fallen in love with an ugly-looking servant of mine and unless he was her lover she would not have given this mango to him. It is better that this matter is not pursued any further now. We will decide about the future course of action later". Thinking thus, he sent away the horse-groom and went to his bed-chamber and lay there immersed in thoughts. The horse-groom immediately informed the queen of everything that took place and the queen felt sorry that her secret had come to light. She knew that besides the punishment that her lover would get her name would also be blackened and so decided to kill her husband before the affair became public. At once she made an oṭṭaṭa (flat bread made of wheat or rice) with poison in it and bringing it to the bed-room told her husband thus with much pretended affection. "It will take some time for your lunch to be ready. Let not you lie with an empty stomach. Eat this now". So saying she placed the bread in the hands of Bhartṛhari and left the room.

Bhartṛhari suspected foul play and mused "This bread has been prepared by her with poison to kill me. It is better to give up living with her. There is no doubt about it. Of the four āśramas the fourth, Sannyāsa, is the best. It is pleasant and sorrowless. Therefore gradually that āśrama should be accepted". Thinking thus he came out from his room with the bread and placed it hidden somewhere in the lower end of the roof of the house remarking "Oṭṭappam Vīṭṭeccuṭum" (The oṭṭaṭa will burn the house). Then taking an earthern bowl for begging he left the house unnoticed by any. The moment Bhartṛhari left the house the house caught fire and everything in it was burnt to ashes.

Bhartṛhari renouncing all and changing himself into the robes of a sannyāsī went about living by begging. After some time he decided that he would never beg but would eat only that which others gave him voluntarily. He had by that time reached a big temple[2] in south India where in one of the entrances to the temple, the east one, was sitting the famous sannyāsī Paṭṭanatt Pillayār. Bhartṛhari, therefore, went and sat at the western entrance with his bowl before him. Whatever food fell into the bowl was eaten by him. Sometimes for days together he went without food. But he never was sick or felt weak.

1. There is a belief that if a son is born to a Śūdra who was himself born of a brahmin the brahmin father would go to hell.
2. This temple is believed to be the Chidambaram Temple.

One day a beggar went to the eastern gate and asked Paṭṭanatt Pillayār for alms. Pillayār said, "I am also a beggar like you. I have nothing in my hand to give you. But there is a man sitting in the western gate. He is a rich man and he may give you something". The beggar went to Bhartṛhari and asked for alms. Bhartṛhari also expressed his helplessness in the matter. But then the beggar said "The man sitting at the opposite entrance told me that you were a rich man." Bhartṛhari smiled. He knew then why Paṭṭanatt Pillayār said so. A man who has renounced everything need not keep even a bowl to beg. The bowl was a luxury and a sign of wealth. Bhartṛhari threw away the bowl and remained at the temple entrance till the end of his life. It was while sitting there that he wrote his famous poems.

4) His well-known works are: (1) The Nīti Śataka (2) The Śṛṅgāra Śataka (3) The Vairāgya Śataka and (4) The Subhāṣitas.

BHARTṚSTHĀNA (M). A very holy place in ancient India. It is said that even those who merely visited this place would get the benefit of performing an Aśvamedha yajña. The place got its importance because Lord Subrahmaṇya lived there. (Śloka 76, Chapter 84, Vana Parva, M.B.)

BHĀRU. A daughter of Dakṣaprajāpati. The prajāpati, at one stage begot sixty girls of Vairiṇī and gave them to Kaśyapa, who distributed them among several Devas. Bhāru was the woman so given to the Viśvadevatās. (Hari Vaṁśa, Chapter 3).

BHARUKA. A king of the Solar dynasty. He was the son of Sudeva and father of Bāhuka. (Navama Skanda, Bhāgavata).

BHARUKAKṢA (M). A village of ancient India. Śūdras lived there. At that time of the Rājasūya of Dharmaputra these Śūdras brought gifts to the King. (Chapter 51, Sabhā Parva).

BHĀRUṆḌA. A particular kind of bird found in the Kingdom called Uttarakuruvarṣa. These birds carry in their strong beak corpses to their caves and eat them. (Bhīṣmaparva, Chapter 7, Verse 12).

BHĀRYĀ. Wife. Bhīṣma points out the sanctified importance of Bhāryā (wife) as follows:—

Without her even the palace will prove itself to be just a forest. She will be a great support (to the husband) in the matter of dharma (duty) artha (wealth) and Kāma (enjoyment of material comforts). (These three precede the ultimate state of Mokṣa (salvation) and the wife will be a great support in fulfilling the conditions during the first three stages.) While on tour in foreign places she will remain faithful to him and instil confidence in him. Bhāryā is great wealth to man.

In his forlorn life on earth the wife is of great help to man. To him, who is suffering from diseases and is otherwise in distress there is no remedy (medicine) like a good wife. There is no relative like a wife. In the matter of practising dharma there is no other support to match the wife. If one has no good wife to take care of domestic affairs one will be driven to the forest; the home will be like a forest. (Śānti Parva, Chapter 144).

BHĀSA. A very prominent dramatist in Sanskrit. As Bāṇa and Kālidāsa have noticed him in their works, it may safely be assumed that Bhāsa lived in an earlier period. Since Pratimā nāṭaka and Abhiṣeka nāṭaka, which are universally admitted to have been composed by Bhāsa, depend for their themes on the Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa, it is clear that Bhāsa lived after Vālmīki. Kālidāsa's period has not yet been fixed beyond doubt. It is almost settled that Bāṇa lived sometime between the sixth and seventh centuries A.D. Prof. Keith has been of the view that Vālmīki lived before the 4th century B.C. In the light of all such factors it could be presumed that Bhāsa lived in the period between the 4th century B.C. and 6th century A.D.

Though Bhāsa has so many glories to his credit he does not fully match Kālidāsa, and this might have been the reason why Indians did almost forget Bhāsa with the advent of Kālidāsa on the literary arena.

We are not in a position to name with unerring definiteness the works of Bhāsa. The general belief is that he has written nearly twenty three dramas. In 1922, Pandit Gaṇapati Śāstrī unearthed from various sources thirteen dramas of Bhāsa. Three out of them, viz. Pratijñāyaugandharāyaṇa, Svapnavāsavadatta and Avimāraka owe their themes to the Bṛhatkathā, while Pratimā nāṭaka and Abhiṣeka nāṭaka have Rāmāyaṇa as their basic inspiration. Out of the eight remaining dramas six, viz. Madhyama vyāyoga, Pañcarātra, Dūtavākya, Dūtaghaṭotkaca, Karṇabhāra and Ūrubhaṅga owe their themes to the Mahābhārata, while the last two dramas, Bālacarita and Cārudatta are dependent for their themes on anecdotes about Śrī Kṛṣṇa and on yakṣa stories.

Though Dr. Gaṇapati Śāstrī has strongly contended that all the above thirteen dramas were written by Bhāsa himself, his view has not yet received universal acceptance. Whatever that be, it is an admitted fact that Svapnavāsavadatta is by far the best among the thirteen dramas. It is a continuation of the story of Pratijñāyaugandharāyaṇa. The wedding of king Udayana and Vāsavadattā is the subject matter of Svapnavāsavadatta.

With his killing of the Rākṣasa 'Avi' the Sauvīra king comes to be known as Avimāra, and Avimāra's falling in love with Kuraṅgī, daughter of Kuntibhoja forms the theme of the drama, Avimāraka. In Pratimā nāṭaka is told the story narrated in Rāmāyaṇa from Ayodhyākāṇḍa to Paṭṭābhiṣeka. Abhiṣeka nāṭaka codifies the stories in the Kiṣkindhā Kāṇḍa and Sundara Kāṇḍa of the Rāmāyaṇa and describes the coronations of Sugrīva and of Śrī Rāma. Though the characters in Pañcarātra are borrowed from Mahābhārata the story is entirely Bhāsa's. Madhyama vyāyoga, Dūtavākya, Dūtaghaṭotkaca, Karṇabhāra and Ūrubhaṅga are one-act plays. These five plays have as their basis some of the anecdotes in the Mahābhārata. In Cārudatta is treated the love story of Cārudatta and Vasantasenā.

Indisputable evidence is still lacking to credit Bhāsa with the authorship of all the thirteen plays referred to above.

BHĀSAS. (See Bhāsī).

BHĀSAKARṆA. A military captain of Rāvaṇa. Hanumān killed him in fight. (Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa, Sundara Kāṇḍa 46, 47).

BHĀSĪ. Daughter of Tāmrā, Dakṣa's daughter. Kaśyapa prajāpati married the following daughters of Dakṣa: Aditi, Diti, Danu, Kālikā, Tāmrā, Krodhavaśā, Manu and Analā. Tāmrā had five daughters, viz. Krauñcī, Bhāsī, Śyenī, Dhṛtarāṣṭrī and Śukī. And, the sons of Bhāsī are the Deva sect called the Bhāsas. (Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa, Āraṇya Kāṇḍa, Canto 14).

BHĀSKARA. One of the Dvādaśādityas born of Kaśyapa prajāpati and Aditi. (Anuśāsana Parva, Verse 150).

BHĀSKARĀCĀRYA. A master astronomer of ancient India. It was he who declared, much earlier than western experts, that the earth is round in shape.

BHĀSKARI. An old maharṣi of India. He accompanied the Ṛṣis who visited Bhīṣma on his bed of arrows. (Śānti Parva, Chapter 47, Verse 12).

BHASMA. (Sacred ash). To know a story about the greatness of Bhasma see under the word Durjaya.

BHASMĀSURA. A demon. There is no mention about this demon in any of the Sanskrit purāṇas but 'Śivalīlāmṛta' in Marāṭhi contains the following story about him.

Bhasmāsura was born of the Bhasma dust (ashes) on the body of Śiva. Pleased at the great devotion of the demon towards him Śiva asked him to name any boon he wanted. Bhasmāsura said that he wanted the power to burn to ashes anybody on whose head he placed his hand. Bhasmāsura became arrogant with the boon and he became a nightmare to the whole world. Then Mahāviṣṇu appeared before him in the form of Mohinī, an attractive dancer and alluring him by her charm started on a dance called Muktanṛtya. During the course of this dance Bhasmāsura was forced to place his hand on his own head and the moment his head touched his head he was burnt to ashes.

BHĀSVARA. One of the two attendants presented by Sūrya to Subrahmaṇya; the other was named Subhrāja. (Śalya Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 31).

BHAṬṬANĀRĀYAṆA. A sanskrit poet who flourished near about A.D. 700. Veṇīsaṁhāra, a drama in six acts is the only composition of his found out, yet. He is also known by another name, Mṛgarājalakṣma. Certain scholars opine that he might have lived before Bāṇa and after Vāmana.

BHAṬṬANĀYAKA. A literary critic who flourished in the 10th century A.D. in India. He composed a critical study on the science of dance (Nāṭya) named Hṛdayadarpaṇa based on the Nāṭya śāstra of Bharata. But, the book has not been found out, yet. Contesting the dhvanivāda (the rhetorical theory that in poetry suggested or implied meaning is superior to the explicit meanning) of Ānandavardhanācārya, he established the rasavāda (that sentiment is supreme in poetry). Abhinavagupta also has supported the rasavāda. Hence, it may be inferred that Bhaṭṭanāyaka lived in the period after Ānandavardhana and anterior to Abhinavagupta. Bhaṭṭanāyaka's theory is that Abhidhā, Bhāvakatvaṁ and Bhojakatvaṁ should be the three excellences of good poetry.

BHAṬṬI. A sanskrit poet who lived in the 7th century A.D. His most important composition is the Mahākāvya, Rāvaṇavadha, which has become very popular and famous by the name Bhaṭṭikāvya. This mahākāvya deals with the story of Rāmāyaṇa in its twentytwo Kāṇḍas (cantos). The kāvya is believed to have been composed at Valabhī in obedience to the request of King Śrīdharasena.

BHAUMA I. The fourteenth Manu. In the time of this Manu, the person called Śuci will be Indra. Under his control there will be five groups of Devas. These groups are called Cākṣuṣas, Pavitras, Kaniṣṭhas, Bhrājikas and Vāpāvṛddhas. The Saptarṣis (seven sages) of that Manvantara are Agnibāhu, Śuci, Śukra, Māgadha, Agnīdhra, Yukta and Jita. At that time, the sons of Manu who will be protecting the earth will be Ūru, gaṁbhīrabuddhi and other Kings. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, 3rd Part, Chapter 2).

BHAUMA II. Another name of Narakāsura. (See the word Narakāsura).

BHAUMA III. A Rākṣasa born to Siṁhikā by Vipracitti. Paraśu-Rāma killed him. (Brahmāṇḍa—3-6-18-22).

BHAUTYA. See the word Manvantara.

BHAVA I. One of the eleven Rudras. He was the son of Sthāṇu and grandson of Brahmā. (Chapter 66, Ādi Parva, M.B.).

BHAVA II. A sanātana Viśvadeva. (Chapter 60, Ādi Parva, M.B.).

BHAVA III. One of the sons born to Kaśyapa of Surabhi.

BHĀVA (M) I. A famous forest mentioned in the Purāṇas. Bhāva was near the Veṇumanda mountain, which was close to Dvārakā. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 38).

BHĀVA. One of the twelve Devas born to Bhṛguvāruṇi Ṛṣi of his wife Divyā.

BHAVABHŪTI. A Sanskrit poet who lived in the 7th century A.D. His important works are the three dramas, Mālatīmādhava, Mahāvīracarita and Uttararāmacarita. Bhavabhūti was a brahmin of the Kaśyapagotra. He was the son of one Nīlakaṇṭha and one Jātukarṇī. He was a great devotee of Śiva and he got his name Bhavabhūti later because of this. His original name was Nīlakaṇṭha. Bhavabhūti was born in Padmapura in the state of Vidarbha. But Bhavabhūti spent most of his life in the palace of Yaśodharmā, king of Kannauj.

Bhavabhūti's first drama is believed to be Mahāvīracarita. There are seven acts in this. The theme is based on the story of Śrī Rāma. But there are some variations from the original Rāmāyaṇa in this drama. Bhavabhūti states that even at the time of the svayaṁvara of Sītā, Rāvaṇa was a suitor. There is an opinion among certain critics that Bhavabhūti did write only up to the 46th verse in the fourth act and the rest was written by another poet named Subrahmaṇya.

Mālatīmādhava is a drama of ten acts. It is a love-story of Mālatī and Mādhava. Mālatī was the daughter of the minister of Ujjayinī and Mādhava was the son of the minister of Vidarbha. It was while Mādhava was having his education in Ujjayinī that he came to love Mālatī. It was Kāmandakī who was a classmate of both the ministers and who became a sannyāsinī later who pulls the strings of this love story. The king of Ujjayinī wanted Mālatī to marry Nandana, a friend of his. But Mālatī did not love him. Yet afraid of getting the displeasure of the King, Mālatī's father decided to give her in marriage to Nandana. In despair Mādhava was about to commit suicide when from the temple nearby Mādhava heard an agonised weeping. He rushed to the site of the sound and found to his bewilderment the gruesome sight of Mālatī being dragged for sacrifice by a sorceress named Kapālakuṇḍalā helped by her guru Aghoraghaṇṭa. Mādhava killed Aghoraghaṇṭa and saved Mālatī. Disappointed Kapālakuṇḍalā swore that she would seek revenge on Mādhava and disappeared. Mālatī went back to her palace. At this time Madayantikā, sister of Nandana and Makaranda, a friend of Mādhava became lovers. Once Madayantikā was attacked by a tiger in a Śiva temple and Makaranda saved her from the wild beast, and they became lovers thereafter. The proposal to give Mālatī in marriage to Nandana was still pending then. The marriage day was fixed and a day before that by a clever ruse played by the keen-witted Kāmandakī Mālatī and Mādhava eloped together. Makaranda, friend of Mādhava, was disguised and dressed in bridal robes and Nandana little suspecting the trick played on him married the substitute. Before they went to the bridal chamber for the night Nandana's sister came to see her new sister-in-law and the moment she put her eyes on her she understood who it was and that night they also eloped. Thus poor Nandana was left alone.

Kapālakuṇḍalā by her sorcery separated Mālatī from Mādhava but luckily Saudāminī a disciple of Kāmantakī saved her from Kapālakuṇḍalā. Later Mālatī married Mādhava with the permission of the King. This is the story of Mālatī-Mādhava.

Uttararāmacarita is a play of seven acts. The theme is the story of Rāma after his return to Ayodhyā after the exile. It begins with the renouncement of Sītā by Rāma and ends with the vanishing of Sītā.

All these three dramas used to be enacted during the festival of 'Kālapriyanātha' at Ujjayinī. The predominant emotion in Mahāvīracarita is 'Vīra', in Mālatī-Mādhava, 'Śṛṅgāra' and in Uttararāmacarita 'Karuṇa'. In expressing and elaborating the emotion of 'Karuṇa' Bhavabhūti excels Kālidāsa. The one draw-back which keeps him second to Kālidāsa is his lack of humour and wit. The sanskrit poet Dhanapāla in his book' 'Tilakamañjari' speaks about Bhavabhūti thus :

Spaṣṭabhāvarasā citraiḥ
Padanyāsaiḥ pravarttitā /
Nāṭakeṣu naṭastrīva
Bhāratī Bhavabhūtinā //

BHAVADĀ. A follower of Skandadeva. (Chapter 45, Śalya Parva).

HAVANMANYU. A king of Pūruvaṁśa. He had five B sons: Bṛhatkṣatra, Nara, Garga, Mahāvīrya and Jaya. (Chapter 19, Aṁśa 4, Viṣṇu Purāṇa).

BHĀVANIKĀ. A companion of princess Mṛgaṁkāvatī. (See Śrīdatta).

BHAVATI. The word prescribed by Manu to be used while addressing women. Not all women should be addressed like that. All women who are not your relatives and the wives of others should be addressed using any one of the following words: Bhavati, Subhagā or Bhagini.

Parapatnī tu yā strī syād asambaddhā ca yonitaḥ /
Tāṁ brūyād bhavatītyevaṁ
Subhage bhaginīti ca. //
(Manusmṛti, Chapter 2).

BHĀVAYAVYA. A muni, whose glories are sung in the Ṛgveda. He married Romaśā, daughter of Bṛhaspati. Once she approached her husband with the request for coition, and the husband laughed at her. (Ṛgveda, Maṇḍala 19, Anuvāka 19, Sūkta 127).

BHĀVINĪ. A female attendant of Subrahmaṇya. (Śalya Parva, Chapter 44, Verse 11).

BHAVIṢYA PURĀṆA. This purāṇa contains the instructions given by the god Sūrya to Manu. There are about fourteen thousand books in this purāṇa and they deal with almost all subjects on earth including such important ones like, Sṛṣṭi (creation), Kālamāna (time), Garbhādhāna (conception), Godāna (gift of cows), Āśramadharmas (duties of a hermit) Liṅga Śāstra (science of sex), Viṣacikitsā (treatment of poisoning) and Āyurveda (Medical science). (Chapter 272, Agni Purāṇa).

BHAVIṢYARĀMĀYAṆA. The part after Uttararāmāyaṇa. Uttararāmāyaṇa states about Bhaviṣyarāmāyaṇa being sung by Kuśa and Lava in the presence of Śrī Rāma.

BHĀVUKA. A king of the solar dynasty. He was the son of Ravīya and father of Cakroddhata. (Bhāgavata, Navama Skandha).

BHAVYA I. A son of Dhruva. He got of his wife Śambhu two sons, Śiṣṭi and Bhavya. (Chapter 13, Aṁśa 1, Viṣṇu Purāṇa).

BHAVYA II. A clan of devas in Raivatamanvantara. Parimiti, Priyaniścaya, Mati, Mana, Vicetasa, Vijaya, Sujaya and Syoda are some of the prominent devas of the clan. (Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa, 2.36, 71-72).

BHAVYA III. One of the Saptarṣis (seven sacred saints) of Dakṣasāvarṇi Manvantara.

BHAYĀ. A demoness, sister of Kāla who presides over the land of death. She was married to Heti, son of Brahmā and brother of Praheti. Vidyutkeśa was their son and he married Sālakaṇṭakā, daughter of Sandhyā. (Uttara Rāmāyaṇa).

BHAYA (M). Hiṁsā is the wife of Adharma. They got a son named Anṛta and a daughter named Nikṛti. From them were born Bhaya, Naraka, Māyā and Vedanā. Of these Māyā produced Mṛtyu, destroyer of matter. Vedanā got of her husband Raurava son named Duḥkha. From Mṛtyu were born Vyādhi, Jarā, Śoka, Tṛṣṇā and Krodha. (Chapter 20, Agni Purāṇa). Another version about the birth of Bhaya is found in Śloka 54, Chapter 66 of Ādi Parva, M.B. Adharma married Nirṛti and to them were born Bhaya, Mahābhaya and Mṛtyu, three sons of demoniac disposition. These three sons led a sinful life.

BHAYAṄKARA I. A prince of the country of Sauvīra. He was a dependant of Jayadratha. It was this Bhayaṅkara who followed Jayadratha with his flag when he was trying to kidnap Pāñcālī. Arjuna killed him. (Chapter 265 and 271, Vana Parva, M.B.).

BHAYAṄKARA II. A sanātana Viśvadeva. (Chapter 91, Anuśāsana Parva, M.B.).

BHAYAṄKARĪ. A follower of Subrahmaṇya. (Śloka 4, Chapter 46, Śalya Parva, M.B.).

BHEDĪ. A female attendant of Subrahmaṇya (M.B. Śalya Parva, Chapter 46, Verse 13).

BHELA. A disciple of Punarvasu Ātreya who was an Āyurveda ācārya. He was a contemporary of Agniveśa and has composed a work on Āyurveda, entitled 'Bhelasaṁhitā'.

BHERĪSVATĀ. A female attendant of Subrahmaṇya. (M.B. Śalya Parva, Chapter 46, Verse 26).

BHĪMA. Bhīmasena, one of the five Pāṇḍavas.[1]

1) Genealogy. (See genealogy of Arjuna).

2) Birth and childhood. King Vicitravīrya of Candra vaṁśa (lunar dynasty) had two sons called Dhṛtarāṣṭra and Pāṇḍu. The Kauravas (Duryodhana etc.) were sons born to Dhṛtarāṣṭra of his wife Gāndhārī, and the

1. Since much information about Bhīma is given under the captions Dharmaputra, Arjuna, Nakula, Sahadeva and Pāñcālī only a brief description of Bhīma is attempted under the present heading.

Pāṇḍavas were the sons of Pāṇḍu and his wives Kuntī and Mādrī. Dharmaputra, Bhīma and Arjuna were the sons of Kuntī, and Nakula and Sahadeva of Mādrī.[1]

Kuntī directed a mantra gifted to her by Durvāsas towards Vāyubhagavān (the wind-god) and the result was the birth of Bhīma. Hence he is called Vāyu-putra (son of the wind-god). At the time of his birth a celestial voice announced that the boy would grow up to be the strongest among the strong. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 122, Verse 14). On the tenth day after birth the child Bhīma fell from his mother's lap on a rock. Bhīma was not injured in any manner by that fall, although it crushed the rock into power. (This story is told in the southern texts of the Mahābhārata in Chapter 132 of Ādi Parva). The naming ceremony of the child was performed by the Maharṣis, who stayed at Śataśṛṅga. Kaśyapa Maharṣi, family priest of Vasudeva performed the ceremonies like wearing of the sacred thread. Bhīma learned fighting with the gadā (club or mace) from Śuka, the famous Rājarṣi.

The Kauravas and the Pāṇḍavas spent their childhood in Hastināpura. Droṇācārya taught them fighting with weapons. The Kauravas and the Pāṇḍavas often engaged themselves in children's games. In all such games Bhīma used to hurt and defeat the Kauravas, and to this fact the unending hatred of the Kauravas towards Bhīma owed its origin. Once they administered poison to Bhīma who fell down unconscious, and then they threw him into the depths of the Gaṅgā (Ganges). Going deeper and deeper in the waters Bhīma, at last, reached the Nāgaloka, where the nāgas (serpents) bit him which neutralized the effects of the poison in his body. There he got acquainted with a nāga called Āryaka, who introduced him to Vāsuki, king of the nāgas, and Vāsuki presented him with much wealth and other costly gems. But, what use was all this wealth to Bhīma ? Then Vāsuki agreed to give him a divine drink, which would give the user of it the strength of thousand elephants. Bhīma drank at one draught eight pot-fulls of that divine drink, and thus became tremendously strong. But, he had to wait in Nāgaloka for eight days so that the drink might be thoroughly assimilated, and on the ninth day the nāgas saw him off in all pomp and splendour. Bhīma returned to his mother and brothers and consoled them, who were terribly anxious at his absence.

When the training of the princes in the use of weapons was over a competition or test was conducted. Duryodhana and Bhīma entered into a 'club-fight', and when Karṇa tried to intervene in the fight his nobility was questioned by Bhīma. Duryodhana then insulted Bhīma. Arjuna agreed to present King Drupada before Droṇācārya as gurudakṣiṇā to him. In the fierce war the Pāṇḍavas fought with Drupada, Bhīma annihilated the elephant division of the latter's army. And, afterwards Bhīma underwent higher training in club-war at the hands of Balabhadrarāma. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 136, Verse 4).

3) The Pāṇḍavas left Hastināpura. As enmity between the Kauravas and the Pāṇḍavas began growing stronger and stronger, Duryodhana, with his father's permission, removed the Pāṇḍavas to vāraṇāvata and settled them there. They were put up there in a palace specially made of lac. The Pāṇḍavas divined the secret of it and escaped from the fire, when the palace was set fire to. Verse 10, Chapter 147 of the Ādi Parva states that it was Bhīma, who set fire to the palace. Escaping thus through a tunnel the Pāṇḍavas travelled a great distance in the forest. Kuntī and four of her sons got tired by the exertions of the travel and were forced to sit down for rest on the way. Bhīma, continued the journey carrying the mother and his four brothers on his shoulders. With their entry into Hiḍimba forest the weakness left them, and they became their former selves.

4) Hiḍimba killed. Kuntī devī and four sons slept under the shade of a tree at dusk, and Bhīma kept guard over them. There dwelt in the forest a Rākṣasa called Hiḍimba with his sister, Hiḍimbī. Hiḍimba looked around that particular day from the top of a tree, and detecting Bhīma his mouth watered. He deputed Hiḍimbī to bring Bhīma over to him. Hiḍimbī approached Bhīma, whose fine figure kindled feelings of love in her. She desired to have him as husband. Hiḍimbī having not returned even after a long time Hiḍimba went over to the spot, and there finding Hiḍimbī in love-talks with Bhīma he got terribly angry. He wanted to kill Hiḍimbī. Bhīma, who could not suffer the killing of a woman in his presence rushed against Hiḍimba, The noise of the fight awakened the other Pāṇḍavas from sleep, and at the instance of Arjuna, Bhīma killed Hiḍimba. Thus rendered helpless and forlorn Hiḍimbī again craved Bhīma for love. On the suggestion of Kuntī, whose heart melted at the sight of Hiḍimbī's helplessness Bhīma took her as his wife. But, one condition was stipulated for their enjoying the honey-moon. The condition was that they might enjoy honey-moon, from dawn to dusk in the sky and on mountain tops, Hiḍimbī, who was endowed with magic powers carrying Bhīma with her. And, after dusk Bhīma was to be returned to Kuntī. Accordingly Bhīma and Hiḍimbī spent one year, and to them was born a son called Ghaṭotkaca. Promising that he shall return when wanted, Ghaṭotkaca with his mother went into the forest. The Pāṇḍavas also left for the village called Ekacakrā. (Ādi Parva, Chapters 147-154).

5) Killing of Baka and the wedding of Pāñcālī. While at Ekacakrā Bhīma killed the Rākṣasa called Baka and freed the people of the village from their distress. Afterwards the Pāṇḍavas attended the Svayamvara (free choice of the husband by woman) of Pāñcālī, who became their wife. There Bhīma defeated Śalya in fight. And, the Pāṇḍavas duly returned to Hastināpura. (For details see Baka, Pāñcālī and Arjuna).

6) Again to forest. On their return to Hastināpura the Pāṇḍavas took their residence in the palace built by Maya. There Maya presented a magnificent club to Bhīma. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 3, Verse 18). It was Śrī Kṛṣṇa, lord of Dvārakā who served as the right hand of the Pāṇḍavas. Jarāsandha, who was then King of Magadha fought with Kṛṣṇa eighteen times and got defeated. Yet he did not yield, and at last Kṛṣṇa decided to do away with him. Kṛṣṇa, Arjuna and Bhīma, in disguise, set out for Magadha. They entered Jarāsandha's palace and challenged him to a duel. Bhīma and Jarāsandha clashed, and at the instance of Kṛṣṇa Bhīma rent the latter in two and threw him on the ground. Though Jarāsandha was alive again, Bhīma rent him in two and threw away the two parts to two places. (M. B. Sabhā Parva, Southern Text, Chapter 24).

The main impediments and thorns in their way thus having been removed, Dharmaputra decided to perform Rājasūya. Bhīma was deputed to conquer all the kingdoms in the eastern part of India. Bhīma achieved the object and returned with great wealth to Indraprastha. Though Bhīma got ready to kill Śiśupāla, who alone refused to acknowledge the suzerainty of Yudhiṣṭhira, he also yielded on the tactful advice of Bhīṣma. The Rājasūya Yajña went off quite successfully. It was Bhīma, who, after the Yajña was over, took Bhīṣma and Yudhiṣṭhira to Hastināpura. Afterwards, in the contest in the game of dice played between Dharmaputra and Duryodhana, the Pāṇḍavas lost everything. The Kauravas brought Pāñcālī into the assembly hall and attempted to strip her naked in public. Bhīma who got enraged at this shouted that the hands of Yudhiṣṭhira who played dice should be burnt in fire. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 68, Verse 6). And, Bhīma took then and there the terrible pledge that he would, with his hands stained by blood from the chest of Duśśāsana, who tried to rip Pāñcālī naked, tie up Pāñcālī's hair which got untied in the scuffle. He also swore that he would break the thigh of Duryodhana. In uncontrollable rage Bhīma also shouted that he would turn into ashes all those who took part in the game of dice. Bhīma took also the vow that all the Kauravas would be killed.

According to the terms and conditions laid down with regard to the contest in the game of dice the Pāṇḍavas went into the Kāmyaka forest to live there for twelve years and then to live incognito for one year.

7) Life in forest and life incognito. There lived in Kāmyaka forest a Rākṣasa called Kirmīra, brother of Bala, whom Bhīma had killed on an earlier occasion. Kirmīra, who was awaiting an opportunity to avenge the murder of his brother, now clashed with Bhīma in the forest. Bhīma did very easily kill him. (For details see Kirmīra).

Thus the Pāṇḍavas spent their days once again in the Kāmyaka forest under the spiritual leadership of sage Dhaumya. They thought about their lost kingdom. Should they go to war against the Kauravas or should they spend the rest of their lives in the exercise of dhārmic injunctions? At one time Bhīma advised Yudhiṣṭhira against war; but on another occasion he pleaded vehemently in favour of war. It was during this time that Arjuna went to the Himālayas to please Śiva by penance and get from him the Pāśupatāstra. (Arrow called Pāśupata). The Pāṇḍavas naturally got nervous and upset at the rather long absence of Arjuna; Bhīma was more anxious and sorry than the others. Then the Pāṇḍavas set out in search of Arjuna, and travelled upto Mount Gandhamādana. Then the party got so tired that they could not proceed any further. Pāñcālī fell down fainting. Then Bhīma remembered Ghaṭotkaca, who appeared before his father (Bhīma) at once. As directed by Bhīma Ghaṭotkaca mounted the Pāṇḍavas on his shoulders and the journey continued. They reached the Āśrama of Naranārāyaṇas, and rested there for six days. One day the wind blowing from the north-east dropped near Pāñcālī a Saugandhika flower. And, Bhīma set out in the north-east direction to fetch saugandhika flowers for Pāñcālī, who felt a special liking for them.

Walking and walking Bhīma entered Kadalīvana. Hanūmān, his skin wrinkled and hair grey due to old age, was living in this forest. He obstructed the path of Bhīma. Hanūmān awoke from sleep and raised his tail with a terrific sound. Bhīma walked upto the place whence the sound was heard.[1] (Vanaparva, Chapter 146). In the clash that ensued between Hanūmān and Bhīma the former came out victorious. Hanūmān, however, congratulated Bhīma and directed him on the path to the saugandhika forest.

Bhīmasena reached the saugandhika forest, which was being guarded by the Rākṣasas called Krodhavaśas. Bhīma overcame them, collected the flowers and returning with them stayed in the Badarikāśrama with his brothers and Pāñcālī. Here it was that Bhīma killed Jaṭāsura. (For details see Jaṭāsura II).

Four years were thus spent; yet Arjuna had not returned. The Pāṇḍavas continued their journey northward. On the 17th day they came to the Āśrama of Vṛṣaparvā in the Himālayas. They were duly received by the maharṣi, who directed them in their onward journey. Continuing the journey they reached the Āśrama of Ārṣṭiṣeṇa whence, after crossing various mountain peaks and still walking they reached Kubera's Alakāpurī when a Yakṣa called Maṇimān obstructed their further progress. Bhīma killed Maṇimān and the other Yakṣas who rushed to his support. Finally Kubera himself saw Bhīma and blessed the Pāṇḍavas.

While they were returning from Kubera's palace Bhīma was caught by a python. But, it was really Nahuṣa transformed into a python on account of a curse. Bhīma killed it and it assumed its original form as Nahuṣa. (See Agastya, Para 8). By this time Arjuna had obtained Pāśupatāstra from Śiva and he duly returned to his brothers, and the Pāṇḍavas continued their journey in the forest.

Meantime, knowing that the Pāṇḍavas were put up in Dvaitavana, the Kauravas started for their dwelling place in a procession led by Duryodhana with the army and camped nearly two furlongs away from a pool in Dvaitavana. While thus camping Duryodhana clashed with a Gandharva called Citrasena, who with a number of his comrades came to the pool for water games, and in the encounter the latter made Duryodhana prisoner. Bhīmasena who witnessed the scene very much laughed at Duryodhana. But, Arjuna intervened and set free Duryodhana and others.

The Pāṇḍavas again entered the Kāmyaka forest, and it was at that time that Jayadratha abducted Pāñcālī. Bhīma killed Koṭikāsya who acted on behalf of Jayadratha. (See Koṭikāsya). Moreover Bhīma captured Jayadratha, got his head shaved clean and declared that he was a slave of Dharmaputra. It was here at Dvaitavana that Dharmadeva tested the Pāṇḍavas, who had gone to a nearby pool to fetch water; all the Pāṇḍavas except Yudhiṣṭhira died at the pool, but were brought back to life again. (See Dharmaputra, Para 7). The twelve years' forest-life of the Pāṇḍavas now came to an end.

1. When raised, Hanūmān's tail was as high in the sky as the flag of Indra. and produced a thunderous sound. As though the mountains were vomitting through their mouth, the sound produced by the raising of the tail shook the mountains. Drowning the trumpeting of excited elephants the sound reverberated all around the mountains. Hearing the sound Bhīma, his whole body horripilated entered the forest in the direction of the sound. In the middle of Kadalīvana, on a mighty rock, Bhīma saw Hanūmān.

According to the advice of Dharmadeva the Pāṇḍavas selected the Virāṭa palace for their life incognito, Bhīmasena assuming the name Vallava (Valala). And, here Bhīma killed in a duel Jīmūta, the pugilist. (See Jīmūta II). It was also here that Bhīma killed Kīcaka and the Upakīcakas. (See Kīcaka). On another occasion, at the instance of Yudhiṣṭhira Bhīma took Sudharmā, King of Daśārṇa to Yudhiṣṭhira captive; but he was later set free. Next year the Pāṇḍavas defeated Duryodhana in the fight in connection with the theft of the cows of the Virāṭa King, and then they declared that their forest life and life incognito were over.

8) Bhīma in the great war. Even after the return of the Pāṇḍavas after the forest life and life incognito the Kauravas refused to give them half of the kingdom. So, both the parties began preparations for war. Given hereunder is the main incident relating to Bhīma from this period to the Svargārohaṇa (going to Heaven) of the Pāṇḍavas after relinquishing the kingdom in favour of Parīkṣit, including their victory in war and the administration of the country.

(1) Sañjaya described to Dhṛtarāṣṭra the prowess and achievements of Bhīma. (Udyoga Parva, Chapter 50).

(2) Śrī Kṛṣṇa before leaving for the Kaurava assembly for compromise talks asked for the views of Bhīma about the whole problem, and Bhīma opined that peace was preferable to war. (Udyoga Parva, Chapter 74).

(3) When Śrī Kṛṣṇa admonished Bhīma he opted for war and waxed eloquent about his heroism and prowess. (Udyoga Parva, Chapter 76).

(4) Bhīma wanted Śikhaṇḍī to be appointed chief of the army. (Udyoga Parva, Chapter 161).

(5) Bhīma sent back with an insulting reply Ulūka, who was sent by Duryodhana to the Pāṇḍavas with a message. (Udyoga Parva, Chapter 163).

(6) Bhīma questioned Dharmaputra who, when the armies had taken position on opposite sides, went on foot to the Kaurava assembly without bow and arrows. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 48, Verse 17).

(7) The world shuddered at the war cry of Bhīma. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 44, Verse 8).

(8) On the first day of the war Bhīma fought a duel with Duryodhana. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 19).

(9) In the fight with the Kaliṅgas Bhīma killed Śakradeva. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 54, Verse 24).

(10) Bhīma killed Bhānumān. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 54, Verse 39).

(11) He killed Satyadeva and Śalya, who guarded the chariot wheels of Śrutāyus, King of Kaliṅga. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 54, Verse 76).

(73) Defeated Duryodhana again. (Karṇa Parva, Chapter 61, Verse 53).
(74) Taking upon himself all the responsibilities of the war deputed Arjuna to guard Dharmaputra. (Karṇa parva, Chapter 65, verse 10).
(75) Defeated Śakuni. (Karṇa Parva, Chapter 81, Verse 24).
(76) Fought fiercely with Duryodhana. (Karṇa Parva, Chapter 82 and 83).
(77) Killed Duśśāsana in accordance with his (Bhīma's) old pledge and drank the blood from his (Duśśāsana's) chest. (Karṇa Parva, Chapter 83, Verse 28).
(78) Killed ten sons of Dhṛtarāṣṭra, viz. Niṣaṅgī, Kavacī, Pāśī, Daṇḍadhara, Dhanurgraha, Alolupa, Śala, Śandha (Satyasandha) Vātavega and Suvarcas. (Karṇa Parva, Chapter 84, Verse 2).
(79) Next, single-handed Bhīma killed 25000 infantry men. (Karṇa Parva, Chapter 93, Verse 28).
(80) Defeated Kṛtavarmā (Śalya Parva, Chapter 11, Verse 45).
(81) Did club-fight with Śalya. (Śalya Parva, Chapter 12, Verse 12).
(82) Defeated Duryodhana again. (Śalya Parva, Chapter 16, Verse 42).
(83) Killed the charioteer and horses of Śalya. (Śalya Parva, Chapter 17, Verse 27).
(84) Killed another 25,000 infantry men, single-handed. (Śalya Parva, Chapter 19, Verse 49).
(85) Killed 11 sons of Dhṛtarāṣṭra, viz. Durmarṣaṇa, Śrutānta (Citrāṅga) Jaitra, Bhūribala (Bhīmabala) Ravi, Jayatsena, Sujāta, Durviṣaha (Durviṣāha). Durvimocana, Duṣpradharṣa (Duṣpradharṣaṇa) and Śrutarvā.
(86) After that killed Sudarśana, son of Dhṛtarāṣṭra. (Śalya Parva, Chapter 27, Verse 49).
(87) In the club fight that ensued between Duryodhana and Bhīma, Duryodhana's thigh was broken by the blows with Bhīma's club. (Śalya Parva, Chapter 58, Verse 47).
(88) Then Bhīma kicked Duryodhana on the head. (Śalya Parva, Chapter 59, Verse 4).
(89) Bhīma rushed forward to get hold of Aśvatthāmā, who was then sitting with Vyāsa on the Gaṅgā shore. Bhīma challenged him. (Sauptika Parva, Chapter 13, Verse 16).
(90) Consoled Pāñcālī by giving to her Aśvatthāmā's gem. (Sauptika Parva, Chapter 16, Verse 26).
(91) Bhīma apologised to Gāndhārī. (Strī Parva, Chapter 15).
(92) Bhīma made Yudhiṣṭhira to retract from his intention to renounce the world and become a Sannyāsin. (Śānti Parva, Chapter 19).
(93) Yudhiṣṭhira installed Bhīma, as crown prince. (Śānti Parva, Chapter 41, Verse 9).
(94) Yudhiṣṭhira settled Bhīma down in the palace of Duryodhana killed in war. (Śānti Parva, Chapter 44, Verse 6).
(95) As directed by Vyāsa, Nakula and Sahadeva were put in-charge of protecting the Kingdom. (Aśvamedha Parva, Chapter 72, Verse 19).
(96) It was Bhīma who, along with the brahmins, measured the yajñabhūmi, in connection with Yudhiṣṭhira's Aśvamedhayajña. (Aśvamedha Parva, Chapter 88, Verse 6).

(97) During one of those days Babhruvāhana visited Bhīma, who sent the former back loaded with money and foodgrains. (Aśvamedha Parva, Chapter 88, Verse 6).

(98) It was Bhīma who held the umbrella to Śrī Kṛṣṇa in the chariot on his way back from the company of the Pāṇḍavas to Dvārakā. (Aśvamedha Parva, Southern Text, Chapter 92).

(99) Bhīma opposed Dhṛtarāṣṭra's demand for money to perform the rituals of those who had died in war. (Āśramavāsika Parva, Chapter 11, Verse 7).

(100) After Dhṛtarāṣṭra, Kuntī and Gāndhārī retired into the forest Bhīma visited them once. (Āśramavāsika Parva, Chapter 23).

8) Bhīma's conceit put down. While, after the great war, the Pāṇḍavas and Śrī Kṛṣṇa were discussing several matters all the Pāṇḍavas except Bhīma said they owed their success in war to Kṛṣṇa. But, Bhīma, in all haughtiness claimed the credit for victory to his personal prowess. With the object of putting down this conceit on the part of Bhīma, Śrī Kṛṣṇa, with Bhīma seated along with him on Garuḍa, set out on a journey to the south. After crossing the sea and Mount Subela Śrī Kṛṣṇa, pointing out to Bhīma a lake twelve yojanas wide and lying near Laṅkā, asked him to find out the source of the lake and return with the information. Though Bhīma walked some distance he could not find out its source. Not only that, all the warriors there jointly attacked Bhīma, and finding himself impotent to counter the attack he ran back to Śrī Kṛṣṇa for refuge. Then Śrī Kṛṣṇa with his ring clipped and threw away the lake, and said to Bhīma as follows :—"This is the skull of Kumbhakarṇa killed by Śrī Rāma in the Rāma-Rāvaṇa war. The warriors who attacked you are the asuras called 'Sarogeyas'." These words of the lord put down Bhīma's conceit, and he apologised to Kṛṣṇa. (Skanda Purāṇa, 1.2.66).

9) Death. After entrusting matters of administration of the country to Parīkṣit the Pāṇḍavas set out on their great journey. Yudhiṣṭhira walking in the front, they started for Kailāsa. During the course of their journey Pāñcālī, Sahadeva, Nakula and Arjuna one after the other fell down dead. Bhīma asked Yudhiṣṭhira the reason for the deaths and he was given suitable answers by the latter. At last when Bhīma too was about to fall down and die he asked the reason thereof, and Yudhiṣṭhira replied that Bhīma's over-eating was the reason. Afterwards when Dharmaputra entered Heaven he found his brothers had already their seats there. (See Arjuna, Para 31).

10) Other information. (1) Bhīma had a son named Sutasoma by Pāñcālī. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 95, Verse 75).

2) A son called Sarvaga was born to Bhīma of Balandharā, daughter of the King of Kāśī. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 95, Verse 97).

3) The following names are found used in the Mahābhārata as synonyms for Bhīma. Acyutānuja, Anilātmaja, Arjunāgraja, Arjunapūrvaja, Vallava, Bhīmadhanvā, Jaya, Kaunteya, Kaurava, Kuśaśārdūla, Mārutātmaja, Māruti, Pāṇḍava, Pārtha, Pavanātmaja, Prabhañjanasuta, Rākṣasakaṇṭaka, Samīraṇasuta, Vāyuputra, Vāyusuta, Vṛkodara.

BHĪMA II. The Mahābhārata makes mention of another Bhīma, son of King Parīkṣit and brother of Janamejaya. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 3, Verse 1). It was this Bhīma who, at the yajña conducted at Kurukṣetra attacked, without reason, the son of Saramā, a dog of the Devas.

BHĪMA III. A Deva gandharva delivered by Munī, the wife of Kaśyapa prajāpati. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 65, Verse 42). He took part in the birthday celebrations of Arjuna. (Ādi parva, Chapter 122, Verse 55).

BHĪMA IV. Yet another Bhīma, grandson of King Avikṣit of the Lunar dynasty and son of Parīkṣit is mentioned in Chapters 94 and 95 of Ādi Parva. His mother was Suyaśā. He married Kumārī, daughter of Kekaya Rāja and they had a son called Pratiśravas.

BHĪMA V. Father of Divodāsa, king of Kāśi. (Udyogaparva, Chapter 117, Verse 1).

BHĪMA VI. A Śūdra who attained Svarga as on his head fell water with which the feet of a brahmin were washed. The following story about him occurs on page 619 of the Padmapurāṇa.

In the dvāpara yuga there lived a Śūdra called Bhīma, who engaged himself in the profession of Vaiśyas. An outcaste from practices pertaining to Śūdras he enjoyed life with a Vaiśya woman. He was a terrible fellow, who had killed many brahmins, and also enjoyed the wives of many elderly people including his teachers. He was a robber as well. Once he went to a brahmin house, and with the object of robbing his wealth spoke to him in a pathetic tone as follows:—"Respected sire, you will please listen to my grievance. You appear to be kind-hearted. Please give me some rice, or else I will die this very moment."

Brahmin:—"Oh hungry guest ! There is no one here to cook food. I shall give you daily some rice, which you may cook yourself. I have neither father, mother, son, brothers, wife nor any other relatives. All of them are dead and gone. The unfortunate fellow that I am, I am staying here alone. No servants or others here."

Bhīma:—"Oh revered brahmin ! I too am a lonely person. I shall live here for ever serving you. I am a Śūdra."

These words of Bhīma pleased the brahmin so much that he cooked some food quickly and served the Śūdra with it. He stayed with the brahmin from that day onwards. His idea was to rob the brahmin of his wealth at some convenient time and get away. But, since he used to pour on his head everyday the water with which the brahmin's feet were washed he got redemption from all his sins.

One night a thief got into the brahmin's room to steal his earnings. Seeing the thief Bhīma rushed at him to give him a good thrashing. But, the thief, in the twinkling of an eye, cut off Bhīma's head and escaped from the scene. At once there came down the attendants of Lord Viṣṇu to lead Bhīma to Vaikuṇṭha. A divine chariot drawn by Rājahaṁsas (swans) also came down. Bhīma got into the chariot and reached the abode of Viṣṇu.

BHĪMA VII. Father of Damayantī. (See Damayantī).

BHĪMA VIII. One of the hundred sons of Dhṛtarāṣṭra. He was killed by Bhīma, one of the Pāṇḍavas. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 64, Verse 86).

BHĪMA IX. Verse 17, Chapter 94 of Ādi Parva, Mentions about one Bhīma born to King Īlin of his wife Rathandharī. This Bhīma had four brothers, viz., Duṣyanta, Śūra, Pravasu and Vasu.

BHĪMA X. One of the five attendants given to Subrahmaṇya by the Deva called Aṁśa. Parigha, Vaṭa, Dahati and Dahana were the other four. (Śalya Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 34).

BHĪMA XI. A king of ancient time. He sits in yama's assembly worshipping yama. There are hundred kings in yama's assembly, having the name Bhīma. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 8, Verse 24). It is on account of the penance of the hundred Bhīmas that the difficulties of people are lifted. (Vana Parva, Chapter 3, Verse 11). These one hundred persons were kings in ancient days. Owing to several adversities they left their kingdoms for the assembly of yama. (Śānti Parva, Chapter 227, Verse 49).

BHĪMA XII. A yādava king, the father of Andhaka. This Bhīma was a contemporary of Śrī Rāma. He conquered Madhurāpurī founded by Śatrughna after killing the Daitya called Madhu.

BHĪMA XIII. A friend of Rāvaṇa, king of Laṅkā. It was on the top of Bhīma's house that Hanūmān rested for the first time after arriving at Laṅkā. (Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa, Sundara Kāṇḍa, Canto 6).

BHĪMABALA I. (BHŪRIBALA). One of the hundred sons of Dhṛtarāṣṭra killed by Bhīma. (Śalya Parva, Chapter 26, Verse 14).

BHĪMABALA II. One of the five Vināyakas born from the asura called Pāñcajanya. These Vināyakas cause difficulties and obstructions to the yajñas of Devatās. (Vana Parva, Chapter 221, Verse 11).

BHĪMABHAṬA. A gandharva. The following story has reference to his past life.

On the death of Śrutadhara, king of Ekalavyanagara the younger of his two sons, Satyadhara drove out of the kingdom the elder brother, Śīladhara. Thus ousted from his kingdom Śīladhara did due penance and got from Śiva the boon that Satyadhara be killed while he himself be made a gandharva. Owing to the blessing of Śiva Satyadhara died, and he was born again as Samarabhaṭa, son of Ugrabhaṭa, King of Rādhānagara, and Śīladhara was born as Bhīmabhaṭa, brother of Samarabhaṭa. On the death of Ugrabhaṭa Bhīmabhaṭa, after killing Samarabhaṭa ascended the throne. And, on one of those days, he was transformed into a wild elephant as the result of the curse of a muni. But, he iremembered his previous existence, and, though turned into elephant could speak like men. Bhīmabhaṭa became a gandharva because he received and treated well once a traveller and related to him his (Bhīmabhaṭa's) own story. (Kathāsaritsāgara Śaśāṅkavatīlambaka).

BHĪMAJĀNU. A king in ancient India. He remained in the assembly of yama serving the latter. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 8, Verse 21).

BHĪMĀKṢA. A Rākṣasa, who used to attack the kingdoms of Kāśi and Kosala often. Finally the above kings jointly encountered him. He was killed by King Haryaśvan. (Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa).

BHĪMARATHA I. A king of the family of Viśvāmitra. His father was Ketumān and Divodāsa his son. (Bhāgavata, Navama Skandha).

BHĪMARATHA II. One of the hundred sons of Dhṛtarāṣṭra killed in the war by Bhīma. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 64, Verse 36).

BHĪMARATHA III. A hero who fought on the Kaurava side. It was this Bhīmaratha who stood at the centre of the garuḍa vyūha (army formation in the form of the bird garuḍa, Kite) set up by Droṇa. (Droṇa Parva, Chapter 20, Verse 12). He killed Śālva, the Mleccha king and a supporter of the Pāṇḍavas. (Droṇa Parva, Chapter 25, Verse 26). When Yudhiṣṭhira was king at Indraprastha Bhīmaratha sat in Pāṇḍava assembly as a comrade of the Pāṇḍavas. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 4, Verse 26).

BHĪMARATHĪ (BHĪMĀ). A river in the South extolled in the purāṇas. Sins of those who bathe in this river will vanish. On its shore is a sacred place called Paṇḍharapura. (Vana Parva, Chapter 88, Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 9).

BHĪMAŚARA. One of the hundred sons of Dhṛtarāṣṭra. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 67, Verse 99).

BHĪMAVEGA. One of the hundred sons of Dhṛtarāṣṭra. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 67, Verse 99).

BHĪRU. A son born to Maṇibhadra and his wife Puṇyajanī.

BHĪṢAṆA. Son of Baka. From the day his father was killed by Bhīma Bhīṣana was impatiently waiting for revenge. When the Pāṇḍavas began the Aśvamedha yajña he obstructed it at a place near Ekacakra. Arjuna fought and killed him. (Jaimini Aśvamedha Parva, Chapter 22).

BHĪṢMA.

1) Genealogy. From Viṣṇu were descended in the following order—Brahmā-Atri-Candra-Budha - Purūravas - Āyus - Nahuṣa - Yayāti - Pūru - Janamejaya - Prācinvā-Pravīra - Namasyu - Vītabhaya - Śuṇḍu - Bahuvidha - Saṁyāti - Rahovādi - Raudrāśva - Matināra - Santurodha-Duṣyanta-Bharata-Suhotra-Suhotā -Gala-Gardda -Suketu-Bṛhatkṣetra-Hasti - Ajamīḍha - Ṛkṣa - Samvaraṇa - Kuru- Jahnu-Suratha-Vidūratha - Sārvabhauma-Jayatsena-Ravyaya-Bhāvuka-Cakroddhata - Devātithi - Ṛkṣa - Bhīma-Pratīpa-Śantanu-Bhīṣma.

2) Birth and Boyhood. Bhīṣma's name in his boyhood was Devavrata. He was the eighth son of Śantanu, a king of the lunar dynasty and Gaṅgādevī. This boy was the human embodiment of Dyau, one of the Aṣṭavasus. Śantanu, his father was the re-birth of another king, Mahābhiṣeka. The story concerning this, as given in the Mahābhārata is as follows:—

King Mahābhiṣeka after his death, attained Viṣṇuloka. Once he went to visit Brahmā at Satyaloka. At that time Gaṅgādevī was also present in Brahmā's assembly. In that pious atmosphere, a gentle breeze began to blow and Gaṅgādevī's clothes were slightly deranged. Just at that moment, Mahābhiṣeka took a stealthy glance at her and she also returned that glance. This was noted by Brahmā who turned both of them into human beings by a curse. Gaṅgādevi begged pardon and Brahmā lifted the curse and blessed her that the Aṣṭavasus would come to the earth to be born as her sons and that afterwards she could come back to Heaven. After that Gaṅgādevī was born as a mortal woman in the world under the name Gaṅgā and she spent her days in the forests near the Gaṅgā river valleys.

In those days the ruler of the Lunar dynasty was a king named Pratīpa. Having no children, he went to the bank of the river Gaṅgā and performed tapas there. Gaṅgādevī who was moving about in the forests nearby, saw the King deeply absorbed in his tapas. She approached him and sat on his right thigh. She wanted the King to be her husband. He explained to her that the right thigh is the proper seat of a daughter-in-law and so she would become his son's wife in due course. In course of time, Pratīpa had a son, Śantanu, born to him. When Śantanu grew up into a young man, one day he went for a hunt to the Gaṅgā-valley and there he met Gaṅgādevī. He fell in love with her at first sight and courted her. Gaṅgādevī agreed to become his wife on condition that he should not say anything to displease her and if he violated that condition she would leave him. The king accepted the condition and they became man and wife.

At about that time, the wife of Dyo, one of the Aṣṭavasus, happened to see the sacrificial cow of the sage Vasiṣṭha and wished to have it. She expressed her desire to her husband, Dyo. Dyo, with the other seven vasus went and took away by force, Vasiṣṭha's cow. Vasiṣṭha in his anger cursed the Aṣṭavasus to be born as mortals. They repented and begged pardon from Vasiṣṭha. The sage told them that all of them would be born as the sons of Gaṅgādevī and all except Dyo, who actually stole the cow, would return to Heaven at the time of birth itself. As for Dyo, he would continue to live in the world for a long time, as an adventurous hero.

Gaṅgādevī became pregnant and gave birth to her first child. She carried the child to the river Gaṅgā and threw it into the river. Śantanu who followed her up to the river bank, did not say anything against her, remembering his promise.

Seven children were born to her and she threw all of them into the river in this way. When she gave birth to the eighth child, Śantanu insisted that he would not allow her to throw away that child into the river. As he had violated the condition, the angry Gaṅgādevī left the palace with her child. She named it Devavrata and brought him up in the forest. The sage Vasiṣṭha and Gaṅgādevī taught him all branches of knowledge. Thirtytwo years later, the king went to the same forest for hunting. He saw a handsome boy stopping the flow of the river Gaṅgā. Getting interested in the boy, the King approached him. But by that time he had disappeared. The King prayed to Gaṅgādevī to give back the child. She appeared with the child and after handing over the child to him vanished. The king returned to the palace with the child. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapters 95-100).

3) The name Bhīṣma. Devavrata was anointed, as heir-apparent. One day King Śantanu reached the forest near the Gaṅgā river valley, for hunting. As he was hunting, absorbed in the beauty of the forest scenery, he felt the perfume of musk filling the air in the forest. He wondered from where it could come. He went on and on trying to find out the source of this smell until he reached the cottage of a fisherman. The fisherman had a daughter named Satyavatī. It was from her that the fragrance of musk spread all around.[1] The king fell in love with her at first sight. He asked the fisherman to give the girl in marriage to him. But the brave fisherman did not yield to the king's demand immediately. He laid down several conditions, one of which was that Satyavatī's sons should succeed to the throne of Śantanu. The king was in a fix. Devavrata was the eldest son and heir-apparent. To deny kingship to his sons would be highly improper. Unable to find a solution to this difficult problem, the king returned to the palace, much depressed and gloomy. There he avoided all company and took to his bed, passing his time in sadness and solitude.

When Devavrata knew about his father's condition, he called the Ministers and asked them about it. They told him everything in details. At once, without informing even his father, Devavrata went to the fisherman's cottage on the bank of the river Gaṅgā and begged for Satyavatī on behalf of his father. The fisherman repeated his former condition. Devavrata agreed that Satyavatī's son shall be given the right of Kingship. The fisherman pointed out that disputes were likely to arise between Devavrata's sons and Satyavatī's children regarding the right of succession to the throne. At once Devavrata stood up and made a solemn pledge that he would remain a bachelor for life. The fisherman gave Satyavatī to Devavrata to be taken to the King. Devavrata took her to the palace and presented her to his father. The King, when he came to know of the part played by his son in the matter, rose from his bed and embraced Devavrata with tears of joy and gratitude. The gods showered flowers on the scene. Because he had taken such a solemn oath, it was declared that henceforth he would be known by the name "BHĪṢMA". The loving father Śantanu also gave him a boon that Bhīṣma would die only when he wished. (M.B., Ādi Parva, Chapter 100).

4) Affairs of the Kingdom in crisis. Two sons named Vicitravīrya and Citrāṅgada were born to Satyavatī by Śantanu, who died shortly afterwards. As desired by Satyavatī, Bhīṣma crowned the boy Citrāṅgada as king. Although Citrāṅgada's reign was a prosperous one, it could not last long. Once a Gandharva named Citrāṅgada attacked him at Kurukṣetra and after a battle which lasted for three years, the Gandharva Citrāṅgada killed the King Citrāṅgada. It was Bhīṣma who performed the funeral rites of the King Citrāṅgada. After that Vicitravīrya was crowned King.

It was at that time that the Svayaṁvara of the three daughters of the King of Kāśī, Aṁbā, Aṁbikā and Aṁbālikā, was held. Bhīṣma thought that it would be good if Vicitravīrya married them. So Bhīṣma attended that function. The presence of Bhīṣma who was an old man, at the Svayaṁvara, frightened the girls. The other kings who were present, stopped him from entering the place, since he had taken an oath to remain a lifelong bachelor. The old Bhīṣma stood up and spoke at length about the eight different forms of marriage and after defeating several kings like Śālva, he seized the three daughters of the King of Kāśī and took them with him in his chariot to Hastināpura. Preparations were made for the marriage of Vicitravīrya with the three princesses. Then Ambā approached Bhīṣma and told him that she had already dedicated her heart to the king of Śālva. Bhīṣma generously allowed her to return home. (For the rest of Ambā's story, see the word "Ambā".

1. Satyavatī's original name was Kālī. The fisherman got her from the stomach of a fish. (See the word Adrikā). Since she had the smell of fish she got the name of "Matsyagandhī." She used to assist a fisherman in his work as a ferryman in the river Gaṅgā. Once the sage Parāśara happened to get into her boat and he fell deeply in love with her. The sage removed the smell of fish from her and gave her the perfume of musk instead. By this mystic power he created a mist at noon and under its cover, he had a sexual union with her. As a result of it the child Kṛṣṇa (Vyāsa) was born. The child immediately left the mother to perform tapas in the forest after promising to return to her whenever she wished for his presence. Although she gave birth to a child, Parāśara blessed that she would again remain a virgin. The whole episode remained a secret. As usual, Satyavatī returned to the fisherman's cottage in the evening and continued to live with him. It is at this stage that Śantanu was attracted by the perfume of musk and came to the cottage where he met Satyavatī.

Vicitravīrya married Ambikā and Ambālikā. He ruled over the country for seven years at the end of which he died of consumption. The dynasty faced a crisis, as there was no one to succeed him. Satyavatī approached Bhīṣma with a suggestion to beget children by Vicitravīrya's wife. But Bhīṣma stood firmly on his solemn oath to continue as a life-long bachelor. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Verse 100-104).

5) Bhīṣma's Wire Pulling. After that Satyavatī summoned Vyāsa to Hastināpura and sons were born to Ambikā, Ambālikā and their maid by him. Ambikā gave birth to Dhṛtarāṣṭra, Ambālikā gave birth to Pāṇḍu and the maid gave birth to Vidura. They grew up and Dhṛtarāṣṭra married Gāndhārī and Pāṇḍu married Kuntī and Mādrī. Duryodhana and his brothers were born to Dhṛtarāṣṭra, while the Pāṇḍavas were born to Pāṇḍu. Pāṇḍu died at the Śataśṛṅga vana and Mādrī observed satī by jumping into his funeral pyre and burning herself alive. After that, the Kauravas and Pāṇḍavas who lived in the palace at Hastināpura, split up into two blocs. When the palace made of lac was destroyed by fire, the Pāṇḍavas went into the forest and came back to the country after their marriage with Pāñcālī. They ruled over the country with Indraprastha as their capital. In the gambling contest between Dharmaputra and Duryodhana, the Pāṇḍavas lost their kingdom and everything and so they went to the forest again. They lived for twelve years in the forest and spent one year incognito in the palace of the King of Virāṭa. At that time the Pāṇḍavas reappeared in the battle which took place as a result of the theft of King Virāṭa's cows by the Kauravas. Duryodhana asserted that he would not give so much land to the Pāṇḍavas as to put a dot with a needle. With the failure of Śrī Kṛṣṇa's mediation, the Kauravas and Pāṇḍavas encamped on the opposite sides of the field of Kurukṣetra, preparing for a grim battle.

Bhīṣma was the chief protagonist in all these events relating to the Kauravas and Pāṇḍavas. At every stage in the story we see Bhīṣma's influence. The main events in which this superman who used to give shelter to Kauravas and Pāṇḍavas alike, played a decisive role, are given below:—

(1) Bhīṣma sent a messenger to Subala, king of Gāndhāra, to ask for the hand of Gāndhārī, to be married to Dhṛtarāṣṭra. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 109, Verse 11).

(2) He went to the palace of Śalya, king of Madra and secured Mādrī to be married to Pāṇḍu. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 112).

(3) He brought about the marriage between Vidura and the daughter of Devaka. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 113, Verse 2).

(4) The Maharṣis who were the inhabitants of Śatasṛṅga told Bhīṣma about the birth of the Pāṇḍavas. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 125, Verse 22).

(5) Bhīṣma offered 'Jalāñjali' (worship with holy water) to Pāṇḍu at his death. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 126, Verse 27).

(6) He performed the death anniversary of Pāṇḍu. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 127, Verse 1).

(7) He engaged Droṇācārya to teach archery to the princes. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 130, Verse 77).

(8) He burst into tears and wept bitterly on hearing that Pāṇḍavas were burnt to death in the palace of lac and was about to offer them 'Jalāñjali'. Just then, Vidura came to him and secretly informed him that the Pāṇḍavas were not dead. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 149, Dākṣiṇātya Pāṭha).

(9) He advised Duryodhana to give half the kingdom to the Pāṇḍavas. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 202).

(10) He had taken part in Dharmaputra's Rājasūya Yajña. Dharmaputra had entrusted to Bhīṣma, the arrangements for that yajña. (M.B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 35, Verse 6).

(11) He advised Yudhiṣṭhira to give the highest place of honour in that yajña to Śrī Kṛṣṇa. (M.B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 36, Verse 28).

(12) Bhīṣma ridiculed Śiśupāla (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 33).

(13) Śiśupāla insulted Bhīṣma. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 41).

(14) Bhīṣma stopped Bhīma who rushed out to kill Śiśupāla. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 42, Verse 13).

(15) It was Bhīṣma who narrated the life story of Śiśupāla. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 43).

(16) In the battle against Śiśupāla, Bhīṣma selected powerful Kings to help Śrī Kṛṣṇa. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 44, Verse 41).

(17) Once Bhīṣma asked the sage Pulastya about the value and importance of pilgrimage. (Vana Parva, Chapter 82, Verse 4).

(18) Bhīṣma advised Duryodhana to be on friendly terms with the Pāṇḍavas. (Vana Parva, Chapter 253, Verse 4).

(19) In the battle which was fought by Kauravas against King Virāṭa, Bhīṣma arranged the regiments in order, after sending Duryodhana to Hastināpura. (Virāṭa Parva, Chapter 52, Verse 16).

(20) A grim fight took place between Arjuna who went to help the Virāṭa army and Bhīṣma. At last, it was the charioteer who removed Bhīṣma, (who had fallen down unconscious) from the battlefield. (Virāṭa Parva, Chapter 64).

(21) When the Kauravas were contemplating to fight against the Pāṇḍavas who had returned after their incognito life, Bhīṣma ridiculed Karṇa and praised Arjuna. (Udyoga Parva, Chapter 21, Verse 16).

(22) At that time, he explained to Duryodhana, the greatness of Śrī Kṛṣṇa and Arjuna. (Udyoga Parva, Chapter 49, verse 2).

(23) Duryodhana proposed to bind the hands and feet of Śrī Kṛṣṇa who was expected to come as the envoy of the Pāṇḍavas. Hearing this, Bhīṣma in great anger, walked out of the council hall. (Udyoga Parva, Chapter 88, Verse 19).

(24) Bhīṣma strongly advised Duryodhana to make a treaty of peace with the Pāṇḍavas. (Udyoga Parva, Chapter 125, Verse 2).

(25) He declared that he would not kill the Pāṇḍavas but would kill 10,000 soldiers of the Pāṇḍavas everyday. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 156, Verse 21).

(26) As desired by Duryodhana, Bhīṣma declared the Rathīs and Mahārathīs who belonged to the Kaurava side. (Udyoga Parva, Chapters 165-168).
(27) Bhīṣma described all the Mahārathīs of the Pāṇḍava side to Duryodhana. (Udyoga Parva, Chapters 169-172).
(28) Bhīṣma told Duryodhana that Śikhaṇḍī and the Pāṇḍavas should not be killed. (Udyoga Parva, Chapter 172, Verse 20).
(29) Bhīṣma offered pūjā to Paraśurāma. (Udyoga Parva, Chapter 123, Verse 27).
(30) Ambā who was allowed by Bhīṣma to marry her lover, King Śālva, was rejected by him and returned to Bhīṣma again. But he did not accept her. Although Paraśurāma pleaded with him on behalf of Ambā, Bhīṣma did not marry her. (Udyoga Parva, Chapter 178, Verse 32).
(31) In connection with Ambā's case, a duel was fought on the field of Kurukṣetra between Bhīṣma and Paraśurāma. Bhīṣma started the duel after asking for the permission of Paraśurāma. Pleased with the fight, the Vasus presented to Bhīṣma, the Prasvāpana arrow. But he did not use that arrow against Paraśurāma, since the gods and Nārada prevented him from doing so. At the request of the gods, pitṛs and Gaṅgādevī, Bhīṣma stopped the fight and prostrated at the feet of Paraśurāma. (Udyoga Parva, Chapters 178-185).
(32) Bhīṣma narrated to Duryodhana the story of Ambā who was re-born as Śikhaṇḍī. (Udyoga parva, Chapters 188-192).
(33) Bhīṣma himself told Duryodhana that he had the strength to annihilate all the Pāṇḍavas. (Udyoga Parva, Chapter 193, Verse 14).
(34) Before the beginning of the battle, Yudhiṣṭhira went to Bhīṣma and asked for his permission to start it. Bhīṣma granted him permission and blessed him. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 43, Verse 44).
6) Bhīṣma in Bhārata Yuddha.
(1) On the first day of the battle a duel took place between Bhīṣma and Arjuna. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 8).
(2) In the battle Bhīṣma killed Śveta, the son of king Virāṭa. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 48, Verse 3).
(3) There was again a terrible fight with Arjuna. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 52).
(4) Sātyaki killed Bhīṣma's charioteer. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 64, Verse 114).
(5) Seeing that the army of the Kauravas was being scattered in all directions by the violent strokes of Arjuna Bhīṣma ordered to stop the second day's battle. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 55, Verse 42).
(6) Bhīṣma challenged Śrīkṛṣṇa for the fight. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 59, Verse 96).
(7) Fought again with Arjuna. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 60, Verse 25).
(8) Bhīṣma gave orders to Droṇācārya and Duryodhana to save Bhagadatta who fell in danger. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 64, verse 64).
(9) Bhīṣma told Duryodhana that Arjuna and Kṛṣṇa were the incarnations of Nara and Nārāyaṇa. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapters 65-68).
(10) Bhīṣma praised the greatness of Brahmapūta Stotra. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 68, Verse 2).
(11) Seeing Śikhaṇḍī rushing forward to oppose him, Bhīṣma put an end to the battle. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 69, Verse 29).
(12) A terrible fight took place between Bhīṣma and Bhīmasena. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 70).
(13) There was again a fight with Arjuna. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 71).
(14) Bhīṣma wounded Bhīmasena and defeated Sātyaki. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 71, Verse 21).
(15) Bhīṣma wounded King Virāṭa. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 73, Verse 2).
(16) Duryodhana who was frightened by Bhīmasena's deeds of valour, was encouraged by Bhīṣma. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 80, Verse 8).
(17) He deprived Dharmaputra of his chariot. (Bhīṣma parva, Chapter 86, Verse 11).
(18) When Bhīmasena killed Bhīṣma's charioteer, the horses turned round and ran away, dragging the chariot with them. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 88, Verse 12).
(19) He ordered Bhagadatta to fight with Ghaṭotkaca. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 95, Verse 17).
(20) He swore that all except Śikhaṇḍī would be killed. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 98, Verse 4).
(21) Sātyaki and Bhīṣma fought again. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 104, Verse 29).
(22) Bhīṣma killed 14,000 Mahārathīs who belonged to the Cedi, Kāśi and Karūṣa countries. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 106, Verse 18).
(23) Bhīṣma explained to Dharmaputra, the method by which he (Bhīṣma) could be killed. (Bhīṣma parva, Chapter 107, verse 76).
(24) He declared that he would not fight with Śikhaṇḍī, who was neither man nor woman. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 108, Verse 43).
(25) He allowed Yudhiṣṭhira to launch an attack on himself (Bhīṣma). (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 115, Verse 13).
(26) Bhīṣma, shot by Arjuna's arrow, fell down unconscious. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 117, Verse 64).
(27) Bhīṣma who recovered and rose again, killed Śatānīka, brother of King Virāṭa. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 118, Verse 27).
(28) Bhīṣma routed the Pāṇḍava army most disastrously. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapters 118, 119).
(29) He considered the misery of life and the sweetness of death. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 119, Verse 34).
(30) Bhīṣma who was wounded by Arjuna's arrows, described to Duśśāsana, the heroism of Arjuna. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 119, Verse 56).
(31) Arjuna shot his arrow at Bhīṣma and made him fall down from his chariot. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 119, Verse 87).
(32) He told Haṁsa that he would remain alive until the sun came to Uttarāyaṇa. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 119, Verse 104).
(33) Bhīṣma who fell and lay on a bed of arrows begged for a pillow to the Kings. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 120, Verse 34).
(34) When he found that they were not paying any heed to his entreaties, he asked for a pillow to Arjuna. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter, 120, Verse 28).
(35) He exhorted the Kings to put an end to the battle. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 120, Verse 51).
(36) Bhīṣma begged for water to Arjuna. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 121, Verse 18).

(37) He advised Duryodhana to end the battle. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 121, Verse 38).

(38) As Karṇa wished for 'Vīrasvarga' (Heaven for the valiant) Bhīṣma permitted him to fight. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 122, verse 34).

(39) Vyāsa sent Dharmaputra to Bhīṣma to learn the mysteries of "Dharma" from Bhīṣma before his (Bhīṣma's) death. (Śānti Parva, Chapter 37, Verse 5).

(40) Bhīṣma said that Śrī Kṛṣṇa was more competent to give advice on "Dharma" than himself. (Śānti Parva, Chapter 52, Verse 2).

(41) When the frightened and ashamed Yudhiṣṭhira approached him, Bhīṣma cheered him up. (Śānti Parva, Chapter 14, Verse 19).

(42) Bhīṣma explained to Yudhiṣṭhira, with the help of various examples and illustrations, "Rājya Dharma", "Āpaddharma", and "Mokṣa Dharma". (Śānti Parva, Chapter 56, to Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 165).

(43) After giving his advice to Yudhiṣṭhira Bhīṣma gave him permission to enter Hastināpura. (Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 166, verse 50).

(44) He gave advice to Dhṛtarāṣṭra regarding his duties and responsibilities. (Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 167, Verse 30).

(45) He asked for Śrī Kṛṣṇa's permission to renounce his body. (Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 167, Verse 37).

(46) With Śrī Kṛṣṇa's permission, Bhīṣma renounced his body. (Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 168, Verse 2).

(47) The Kauravas performed the funeral rites and Jalāñjali (purification by sprinkling water) of Bhīṣma (Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 168, Verse 10).

(48) Gaṅgādevī lamented that Śikhaṇḍī, who was neither man nor woman, killed Bhīṣma. (Anuśāsana Parva, 168, Verse 21).

(49) Vyāsa and Śrī Kṛṣṇa told Gaṅgādevī that Bhīṣma died by Arjuna's arrow. (Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 168, Verse 30).

(50) On a later occasion Vyāsa invoked into the river Gaṅgā, those who died in the battle and among them Bhīṣma was also present. (Āśramavāsika Parva, Chapter 32, verse 7).

(51) After his death, Bhīṣma remained in Heaven as Dyau, one of the Aṣṭavasus. (Svargārohaṇa Parva, Chapter 5, Verse 11).

Other names of Bhīṣma. Āpageya, Āpagāsuta, Bhāgīrathīputra, Bhārata, Pitāmaha, Bharatarṣabha, Bharatasattama, Bhīṣmaka, Śāntanava, Śantanuputra, Śantanusuta, Śantanuja, Devavrata, Gaṅgāsuta, Gāṅgeya, Jāhnavīputra, Kaurava, Kauravanandana, Kauravya, Kuruśārddūla, Kuruśreṣṭha, Kurūdvaha, Kurukulaśreṣṭha, Kurukulodvaha, Kurumukhya, Kurunandana, Kurupati, Nadīja, Prapitāmaha, Sāgaragāsuta, Satyasandha, Tāladhvaja, Vasu are other names of Bhīṣma used in the Mahābhārata.

BHĪṢMAKA. King of Vidarbha and born in the Bhoja dynasty, Bhīṣmaka was the father of Rukmiṇī, the wife of Śrī Kṛṣṇa. He had five sons. A friend of Bhīṣma, he conquered and ruled over a fourth of the world. He defeated the Krathas, Pāṇḍyas and Kaiśikas. He was very much devoted to Jarāsandha. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 14, Verse 21). Sahadeva, who was on a triumphal tour in connection with the Pāṇḍava's aśvamedha yajña fought and defeated Bhīṣmaka at Bhojakaṭanagara. Bhīṣmaka was also called Hiraṇyaroma. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 31, Udyoga Parva, Chapter 158, Śānti Parva, Chapter 4).

BHĪṢMA PARVA. A sub parva in the Mahābhārata.

BHĪṢMASVARGĀROHAṆA PARVA. A sub division of Anuśāsana Parva. Chapters 167 and 168 of Anuśāsana Parva are included in this.

BHĪṢMAVADHA PARVA. A sub Parva of Bhīṣma Parva. It comprises Chapters 43-122 of the Bhīṣma Parva.

BHOḤ. A term used for greeting elders. When saluting an elderly person, the term "Bhoḥ" is used as a suffix to his name.

For example:

"Somaśarmā nāma aham asmi bhoḥ"
Bhoḥ śabdaṁ kīrtayedante
Svasya nāmnābhivādane /
Nāmnāṁ svarūpa bhāvo hi
bhobhāvo ṛṣibhiḥ smṛtaḥ //
(Manusmṛti, Chapter 2, verse 124)

BHOGAVĀN. A mountain—Mahābhārata, Sabhā Parva, Chapter 30, Verse 12 says that in the course of his triumphant over-running of the eastern lands, Bhīmasena conquered this mountain also.

BHOGAVATĪ I. Nāgaloka or Pātāla. When Sugrīva sent monkeys in all directions in search of Sītā, he gave instructions to them to go and search for her in Bhogavatīpura. Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa, 41st Sarga, Kiṣkindhākāṇḍa describes the place as the city infested with serpents (nāgas) and guarded by them. Vāsuki, King of serpents, lives there.

BHOGAVATĪ II. Gaṅgā of Pātāla. (M. B. Sabhā Parva, Dākṣiṇātya Pāṭha, Chapter 38).

BHOGAVATĪ III. A place of holy bath at Prayāga. It is better known as Vāsuki tīrtha. Mahābhārata Vana Parva, Chapter 85 says that a bath at this tīrtha is as efficacious as an Aśvamedha yajña.

BHOGAVATĪ IV. Another name for the river Sarasvatī. (M. B. Vana Parva, Chapter 24, Verse 20).

BHOGAVATĪ V. A female attendant of Subrahmaṇya. (M.B. Śalya Parva, Chapter 46, Verse 8).

BHOJA I. A king of the ancient country named Mārttikāvata. In Mahābhārata Ādi Parva, Chapter 185, Verse 6, we see that this king had attended the Svayaṁvara of Draupadī. He was slain by Abhimanyu at the battle of Kurukṣetra. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 48, Verse 8).

BHOJA II. A king of Yaduvaṁśa. Mahābhārata, Śānti Parva, Chapter 166, Verse 79 says, that he died under the stroke of the sword of Mahārāja Uśīnara. Bhojavaṁśa takes its source from this king.

BHOJA III. A king who became renowned as a Sanskrit scholar. It is believed that he lived from 1018 to 1054 A.D. His capital city was Dhārā. Bhoja is credited with the authorship of two scholarly books entitled, "Sarasvatīkaṇṭhābharaṇa" and "Śṛṅgāraprakāśa". Of these, the first is a compendious volume in five chapters, dealing with the merits and defects of poetry, figures of speech, etc. Bhoja observes that besides the four styles (in poetry) laid down by Rudraka, there are two more styles, namely, "Avanti" and "Māgadhī".

BHOJA IV. A follower of Sudās. In Ṛgveda, 3rd Maṇḍala, 58th Anuvāka, 7th Sūkta we find that this Bhoja had given help to sage Viśvāmitra in performing his Aśvamedha yāga.

BHOJA V. A king of Kānyakubja. Once this king Bhoja met a woman with a fantastic shape. Her body was of human shape while her face was that of a female deer. When the king asked her about her strange shape, she related her past history as follows:—"In my previous birth, I was a female deer. On one occasion the whole of my body except my face, was plunged in a river and those parts of the body under the water were transformed into human shape. From that day, I have been changed into this form."

On hearing her story, the king took her to the holy river and immersed her again in it. She was at once transformed into an actual woman and the king married her. (Skanda Purāṇa, 7-2-2).

BHOJĀ. An exquisitely beautiful virgin of the country, Sauvīra. Mahābhārata Droṇa Parva, Chapter 10, Verse 33 says that Sātyaki abducted her and made her his wife.

BHOJA (M). (BHOJAVAṀŚA). This is a branch of Yaduvaṁśa. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 217, Verse 18).

BHOJAKAṬA. The capital of Vidarbha. Once Sahadeva, one of the Pāṇḍavas conquered this city. It was at this place that Śrī Kṛṣṇa defeated Rukmī, the brother of Rukmiṇī at the time of Rukmiṇī's Svayaṁvara. The original name of Bhojakaṭa was "Kuṇḍinapura". (M.B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 31 and Udyoga Parva, Chapter 158).

BHOJIKA. A Brāhmaṇa. (See the word Pāṭalīputra).

BHOJYĀ. A Bhoja princess. She was abducted by Jyāmagha of the Yādava family and married to his son, Vidarbha. (See Jyāmagha).

BHOṢA. A word meaning a comic, stupid or eccentric person. Bhoṣas are of eight kinds. Those who feel derided, those who babble, those who are obstinate, sophists, those who indulge in hollow laughter, those who pretend to be blind, those who pretend to be deaf, and those who try to assert their self-importance—these are the eight classes of "Bhoṣas".

BHRAMARA. A prince of the land of Sauvīra. He was a comrade of Jayadratha. M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 265 describes how Bhramara walked behind the chariot of Jayadratha with banner in his hand, when the latter abducted Pāñcālī. Bhramara was killed by Arjuna.

BHRĀMARĪ. A Rākṣasī who was the follower of Jaṁbhāsura. As directed by Jaṁbhāsura, she took birth in the house of Kaśyapa to kill Gaṇeśa. One day she treacherously gave poisoned sweets to Gaṇeśa. Gaṇeśa detected her treachery and fisted her to death. (Gaṇeśa 2-21).

BHRĀSAKARṆA. A Rākṣasa. He was the son of Ketumatī, by the Rākṣasa, Sumālī. They had ten sons—Prahasta, Akaṁpana, Vikaṭa, Kālakāmukha, Dhūmrākṣa, Daṇḍa, Supārśva, Saṁhrāda, Prākvāṭa, and Bhrāsakarṇa and four daughters—Vekā, Puṣpotkaṭā, Kaikasī and Kuṁbhīnasī. (Uttara Rāmāyaṇa).

BHṚGU.

1) General. A sage, the son of Brahmā. He was the founder of Bhṛgu vaṁśa. Members of the Bhṛgu vaṁśa are called 'Bhārgavas.' Bhṛguvaṁśa has been reputed for many of its members who were Ṛṣis of great sanctity and grandeur.

2) Birth.

"Utsaṁgād Nārado jajñe
Dakṣo 'ṁguṣṭhāt svayaṁbhuvaḥ /
Prāṇādvasiṣṭhaḥ saṁjāto
Bhṛgustvacaḥ karātkratuḥ".[1] //

From these lines we see that Bhṛgu was born from Brahmā's skin (tvak). But in M.B. Ādi Parva, 5th Chapter, we find another version regarding his birth. In that passage we read that Bhṛgu was born from "Vahni" (fire). In the light of these two statements, we may examine Bhṛgu's birth.

Bhṛgu had two incarnations. The first time he was born from Brahmā's skin. In course of time, the sage Bhṛgu became famous. In the Dakṣayāga, this sage was present as one of the Ṛtviks (officiating priests). On that occasion, Satīdevī who was in rage and grief because her husband (Śiva) was not invited to the yāga, committed suicide by jumping into the sacrificial fire. Hearing about this, Śiva was enraged and the monster spirits who emerged from his matted locks caught hold of the Ṛtviks. Bhāgavata caturtha skandha says that the Bhūta named Nandīśvara, who emerged from Śiva's locks, caught hold of Bhṛgu and killed him.

Therefore the Bhṛgu who was born from Brahmā's skin must be considered as having died at Dakṣayāga. Bhṛgu was born again in Vaivasvata Manvantara. This second birth was at the famous Brahmayajña of Varuṇa. He was reborn from fire, as Brahmā's son. This child who was born from Brahmā's semen which fell in the sacrificial fire, was brought up by Varuṇa and his wife Carṣaṇī. Consequently Bhṛgu is referred to as "Varuṇaputra" and "Carṣaṇīputra" in some Purāṇas. Since he was born at Varuṇa's yāga he is sometimes called "Vāruṇī Bhṛgu".

3) Bhṛgu Vaṁśa. (Bhṛgu family). Each birth of Bhṛgu gave rise to a separate family. They are given below separately:—First birth: Bhṛgu and his wife Khyāti had a daughter Lakṣmī and three sons, Dhātā, Vidhātā and Kavi. Mahāmeru's daughters, Āyati and Niyati became the wives of Dhātā and Vidhātā, respectively. Two sons, Prāṇa and Mṛkaṇḍu were born to those two couples. Mārkaṇḍeya was born to Mṛkaṇḍu and from Mārkaṇḍeya was born Vedaśiras. Prāṇa had a son, Dyutimān who had a son Rājavān. From that Rājavān, Bhṛgu Vaṁśa multiplied. The family tree of this first Bhṛgu Vaṁśa is given below:—(See Viṣṇu purāṇa, Part I, Chapter 10).

BRAHMĀ
Bhṛgu — Khyāti
Dhātā = Āyati | Vidhātā = Niyati | Kavi | Lakṣmī = Viṣṇu
Dhātā = Āyati → Prāṇa → Dyutimān → Rājavān
Vidhātā = Niyati → Mṛkaṇḍu → Mārkaṇḍeya → Vedaśiras

Second Birth: The second Bhṛgu Vaṁśa is the family which took its origin from the second birth of Bhṛgu as the son of Varuṇa. Varuṇa's son, Bhṛgu married the woman, Pulomā. They had six children who were, Bhūta, Cyavana, Vajraśīrṣa, Śuci, Śukra, and Savana. By his first wife Bhūtā, he had his sons, "Ekādaśa Rudras" (eleven Rudras) and "Rudra Pārṣadas"

[1] Nārada was born from Brahmā's lap, Dakṣa from his Aṁguṣṭha, Vasiṣṭha from his Prāṇa, Bhṛgu from his skin and Kratu from his arm.

(Attendants of Rudra) and by his second wife Sarūpā he had a crore of Rudras. Cyavana had two wives, Sukanyā and Āruṣi. Aurva, a son was born to Āruṣi. From Aurva was born Ṛcīka, from Ṛcīka Jamadagni and from Jamadagni, Paraśurāma. Cyavana had a son, Pravati, by his wife Sukanyā. Ruru or Śunaka was the son of Pravati by the Apsarā Ghṛtācī. Ruru and his wife Pramadvarā had a son, Śaunaka. Śuka, the son of Bhṛgu had two sons, Caṇḍa and Alarka and a daughter, Devayānī. This is the second Bhṛgu Vaṁśa.[1] The family tree is given below.

4) Bhṛgu cursed Mahāviṣṇu. Once a terrible war broke out between Devas and Asuras. In that war, not only were the Asuras defeated but many of them were also killed. Diti, the mother of the Asuras, with tears in her eyes, complained to Bhṛgupati. Pulomā, Mother of Śukra, promised to find a remedy for this somehow. She at once went to the forest and started a tapas for the annihilation of the Devas. As the tapas gained force, the Devas were alarmed and they sought the protection of Mahāviṣṇu. Mahāviṣṇu used his Vajrāyudha (Vajra weapon) against Bhṛgu's wife, Pulomā. Under the stroke of Vajra she fell down, a headless corpse. The enraged Maharṣi Bhṛgu cursed Mahāviṣṇu to be born as a mortal in this world and to suffer the pangs of separation from his wife. When the curse was pronounced against Mahāviṣṇu, he directed his weapon Cakra against the Maharṣi. Bhṛgu fled in panic and at last begged pardon and prayed for shelter to Mahāviṣṇu himself in the ocean of milk. Viṣṇu withdrew his Cakra. Bhṛgu himself restored Pulomā to life. To fulfil the condition of Bhṛgu's curse, Viṣṇu agreed to incarnate in the world as Śrī Rāma, the son of Daśaratha and to experience the pain of separation from his wife. (Uttara Rāmāyaṇa).

5) Bhṛgu kicked Viṣṇu. Long ago all the Maharṣis joined together to perform a yāga on the bank of the river Sarasvatī. A dispute arose among them as to who was the most mighty among the Trimūrtis. Some of them voted for Brahmā, others declared that Viṣṇu was more mighty than the other two, while a third group stood for Śiva's superiority. They unanimously elected Bhṛgu to ascertain and find out the truth of the matter.

Bhṛgu set out to Devaloka. First he went to Brahmā's assembly. There, in the presence of Brahmā who was seated in the midst of many Munis, Bhṛgu took his seat on a stool. Brahmā was provoked by this act of disrespect. Bhṛgu left the place without a word and went to Śiva's place. Śiva rose from his seat and approached him to embrace and welcome him. Bhṛgu, shrank back saying, "Do not touch me ?" Śiva became angry and was about to hit him with his trident when Pārvatī stopped him.

Bhṛgu then turned his steps to Vaikuṇṭha, the abode of Mahāviṣṇu. There he saw Mahāviṣṇu in a deep slumber. Seeing Mahāviṣṇu whose task is the preservation of the world, sleeping like an irresponsible person, Bhṛgu gave him a kick on his breast. Viṣṇu who sprang up suddenly, saw Bhṛgu standing before him. He begged pardon of the sage. He declared that he would carry Bhṛgu's footprint permanently on his chest as a sign of his repentance for having shown disrespect to the Maharṣi. This foot-print still remains on Viṣṇu's chest and is known by the name "Śrīvatsa". In this way, the Munis came to the conclusion that Mahāviṣṇu is the noblest of the Trimūrtis. (Bhāgavata, Daśama Skandha).

6) The origin of Bhṛgu Tīrtha. There is a sacred spot called, "Bhṛgu Tīrtha" on the western side of Daśāśvamedha. It is here that Bhṛgu once offered tapas to Śiva. Owing to the austerity of his tapas, his hair became matted and discoloured. His body was completely covered with earth heaped up by termites. When Śiva was still not propitiated, Pārvatī interceded with him on behalf of Bhṛgu, Śiva agreed to bless Bhṛgu.

Śiva sent his bull to the place where Bhṛgu was sitting. The bull in the course of its gambols broke up and destroyed the earthen covering on his body which was made by the termites. Bhṛgu became angry and chased the bull. But he was stunned by the sight of the bull rising up to heaven through the air. A divine light spread there. Śiva appeared before him and asked him what boon he wanted. Bhṛgu prayed that the place where he was doing tapas should become a holy spot. Śiva granted his prayer and from that day, the place became famous under the name "Bhṛgu Tīrtha".

1. Devī Bhāgavata, Saptama Skandha says that Bhṛgu had married two daughters of Dakṣa. Mahābhārata Anuśāsana Parva Chapter 85, Verse 127 says that Bhṛgu had seven sons, namely Cyavana Vajraśīla, Śuci, Aurva, Śukra, Vareṇya, and Savana.

Brahmā and other Devas and the Kinnaras still worship this Bhṛgu Tīrtha. All sin is removed by a mere sight of this sacred Tīrtha. Those who bathe in the holy water of this place attain Heaven and they will not be born again. Even by hearing about the greatness and glory of this Bhṛgu Tīrtha, one will be cleared of all sins and find an easy way to Śivaloka. (Padma Purāṇa, Chapter 20).

7) Other details. (1) It was Bhṛgu who gave the boon for having progeny to Sagara, King of the solar dynasty. Sagara, with his two wives, Keśinī and Sumati, performed tapas at Bhṛgu prasravaṇa in the Himālayas. After a hundred years, Bhṛgu, who was pleased, blessed the king that he would have numerous children by one wife and one son who would be progenitor of a vaṁśa, by the other wife. (Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa, Bālakāṇḍa, 38th Sarga).

(2) Once when some Munis went to Dvārakā, Sāmba and other Yādavas mocked them and the Munis cursed them. Bhṛgu was one of those Munis. (See the word Sāmba).

(3) Paraśurāma, after exterminating the Kṣatriya kings, went to the Āśrama of Bhṛgu, the founder of the family and received his blessings. (Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa, Chapter 62).

(4) Bhṛgu Maharṣi was a prominent member in Yudhiṣṭhira's assembly. (M.B. Chapter 4, Verse 16).

(5) He was also a member of Indra's assembly. It was by Bhṛgu's brilliance that Indra's glory was heightened. (M.B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 7, Verse 29).

(6) Bhṛgu was a member of Brahmā's assembly also. (M.B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 11, Verse 19).

(7) Once Bhṛgu blessed his son Ṛcīka and his daughter-in-law Satyavatī that they would have children. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 116, Verse 35).

(8) Śrī Kṛṣṇa who went as the messenger of peace to Hastināpura, travelled in Dakṣiṇāvarta, along with the sage Bhṛgu. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 83, Verse 27).

(9) Bhṛgu entered the scene of battle between the Kurus and Pāṇḍavas and tried to persuade Droṇācārya to withdraw from the fight. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 190, Verse 34).

(10) Once Bhṛgu lectured on the origin of the earth, Philosophy of life, etc. (M.B. Śānti Parva, Chapter 128).

(11) Bhṛgu explained to Bharadvāja how the Pañcabhūtas except the sky originated (Śānti Parva, Chapter 183).

(12) Bhṛgu discussed in a logical manner, the principle of life and the transmigration of the soul. (Śāntiparva, Chapter 187).

(13) He made a critical examination of the merits and defects of racial discrimination. (Śānti Parva, Chapter 187).

(14) Once Bhṛgu bestowed Brahminhood on a King named Vītahavya. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 30, Verse 57).

(15) He got the name "Bhṛgu" because he was born out of fire. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 85, Verse 105).

(16) It was Bhṛgu who gave the necessary advice to Agastya to depose Nahuṣa from Indra's post.

(17) There is a story that Nahuṣa kicked Agastya on the head while the latter was carrying Nahuṣa's palanquin and that Bhṛgu, who was hiding in Agastya's locks of hair, cursed Nahuṣa and changed him into a python. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 100).

BHṚGUTĪRTHA. A place made sacred by the performance of tapas by Bhṛgu. (For more details see the 6th para under Bhṛgu).

BHṚGUTUṄGA. A peak on which the sage Bhṛgu performed tapas. Ṛcīka had lived there with his wife and children. (Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa, Bālakāṇḍa, 61st Sarga).

BHṚṄGĪ. A Maharṣi who was a devotee of Śiva. Once he went to Kailāsa and began to go round Śiva to pay homage to him. But since Pārvatī and Śiva were sitting together as one body, he could not go round Śiva separately. He did not have much reverence for Pārvatī. So he took the form of a female beetle (Bhṛṅgī) and bored his way through a hole made in the place where their bodies were united and thus went round Śiva alone. Pārvatī was angry at this slight shown to her and cursed him to become physically weak. His legs became so weak that they were unable to support his body. So he prayed to Śiva again and he blessed him with a third leg. In this way Bhṛṅgī became a Maharṣi with three legs. (Maharṣis).

BHṚŚUṆḌI. A fisherman. He used to earn his living by theft.

Once when the Maharṣi Mudgala was passing through a forest, Bhṛśuṇḍi stopped him. But in the presence of the Brahmanic effulgence of the Maharṣi, the fisherman was dazed. Mudgala took pity on Bhṛśuṇḍi and advised him to worship Lord Gaṇeśa.

From that time Bhṛśuṇḍi gave up his evil ways, and accepting the advice of Mudgala, started the worship of Gaṇeśa with single-minded devotion. As a result of it, an elephant's trunk began to grow from the middle of his forehead. Bhṛśuṇḍi who thus acquired a shape closely resembling Gaṇeśa, was visited by Indra, mistaking him for Gaṇapati. (Gaṇeśa : 1.67).

BHŪ (Ḥ). In the creation of the world, the Lord broke the beginningless "Aṇḍa" (the primal egg or seed) and from it the sound "Oṁ" emerged. The first sound of it was "BHŪḤ"; the second was "BHUVAḤ"; and the third was "SVAḤ". So the combination "Bhūr Bhuvaḥ Svaḥ" was formed. Then came the most adorable and superlative effulgence of the creator (Savitā). That radiance dried up all water. A little of the water became a highly viscous substance. This viscous matter gradually solidified and became the earth. Where the aṇḍa originally was became the source of that supreme effulgence. As it was the first radiant light, it came to be called Āditya (ādi=first). The great procreator Brahmā seemed to emerge from the centre of the aṇḍa. The garbhajala (the water contained in the aṇḍa) became the oceans and rivers of the world. (Vāmana Purāṇa, Chapter 43).

BHUJAKETU. A king who fought on the side of Duryodhana in the Bhārata Yuddha.

BHUJAṄGA. A son of Kadrū by Kaśyapa prajāpati.

BHUJYU. A Rājarṣi (royal sage), the son of Tugra. King Tugra sent his son with an army across the sea to conquer the enemies in a distant island. When the boat in which they sailed had reached mid-ocean, it was caught in a storm and wrecked. The prince and the soldiers sank into the sea. At that time the prince prayed to the Aśvins who saved Bhujyu from drowning and carried him back to the palace in boats and chariots travelling through the air. This story is given in the Ṛgveda where the adventures of Aśvins are described. (Ṛgveda, 1st Maṇḍala, 17th Anuvāka, 116th Sūkta.).

BHŪKAMPA. (Earthquake). The cause of earthquake according to ancient belief is given below:— The earth is being supported and held in its position by an elephant called Virūpākṣa. When he feels the burden too heavy he shakes his head and earth tremors follow. (Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa, Bālakāṇḍa, 40th Sarga).

BHŪLIṄGA (M). A bird which lived on the opposite side of the Himālayas. The cry of this bird resembles "MĀ SĀHASA".[1] But this bird lived by pecking at and eating the flesh between the teeth of a lion. Śiśupāla mentioned this bird as an example to illustrate that Bhīṣma's advice was at variance with his practice. The bird exhorts people not to act in a rash way (Mā Sāhasa) and at the same time acts rashly.

BHŪMANYU I. A king who was the grandson of King Duṣyanta and the son of Bharata. From Mahābhārata Ādi Parva, Chapter 94, Verse 19, we see that he was born by the blessing of Bharadvāja. His mother was Sunandā, daughter of Sarvasena, King of Kāśi. When Bhūmanyu grew up, his father Bharata entrusted him with the affairs of the Kingdom. Bhūmanyu had six sons by his wife Puṣkariṇī; they were Diviratha, Suhotra, Suhotā, Sukavi, Suyaju, and Ṛcīka. In Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 95, Verse 33, we see that he had another son Suhotra by a woman Vijayā, a Dāśārha maid.

BHŪMANYU II. There is another Bhūmanyu, grandson of Kuru, a King of the Lunar dynasty and son of Dhṛtarāṣṭra, mentioned in Mahā Bhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 94, Verse 59.

BHŪMANYU III. A Deva Gandharva. He participated in the celebrations connected with Arjuna's birth. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 91, Verse 35).

BHŪMI I. The earth.

1) General. The Purāṇas maintain that Bhūmi has a Devī (goddess). The births of Bhūmi and its basic goddess are in two different ways.

The Mahābhārata, (Dākṣiṇātya Pāṭha) says that the goddess Bhūmi was the daughter of Brahmā and that she was married by Mahāviṣṇu. The earth on which we live is the Mṛtpiṇḍa of which the basic deity is this Bhūmidevī. Of the many versions given in the Purāṇas regarding the origin of earth, three are given below:—

1) Long ago, towards the end of the age of floods, the earth was in a liquid state. At that time, Śiva cut open his thigh and let fall a drop of blood in the water. It assumed the form of an "aṇḍa" (egg). Śiva took that aṇḍa and split it. A man came out of it. From him was made Nature (Prakṛti) for the creation of the Universe. One half of the broken aṇḍa became sky and the other half became the earth. (Kathāsaritsāgara, Kathāpīṭhalaṁbaka, 2nd Taraṅga).

(2)Mahāviṣṇu lay on the surface of water which spread everywhere in the beginning. A lotus sprang up from the navel of Viṣṇu and from its top Brahmā was born. Liquid matter began to flow out of Viṣṇu's ears on both sides. From it were born two Rākṣasas named Madhu and Kaiṭabha. They persecuted Brahmā. Mahāviṣṇu woke up and killed Madhu and Kaiṭabha. The thick fat of these Rākṣasas hardened into the earth. (Devī Bhāgavata, Navama Skandha).

3) In the beginning Mahāviṣṇu (Mahāvirāṭ Puruṣa) spread everywhere. In every pore of that Mahāvirāṭ who was lying on the surface of the water, there was a Brahmāṇḍa. In course of time that Virāṭ obtained mind. That mind stood connected with each of the pores equally. Later from it were formed the "Pañcamahābhūtas". From their combination was formed the Bhūta called "Mahā Pṛthvī". It was cut into many pieces and each of the pieces was deposited in each pore. It was these Pṛthvī pieces which became "Bhūmis" at the time of creation. At the time of the floods, these Bhūmis sank again into those pores as before. In each of these Brahmāṇḍas, there are the earth, mountains, forests, oceans, the seven islands, Himavān, Meru, Sun, Moon, Stars and other planets. Also, each of them has its own Brahmā, Viṣṇu, Śiva and other Devas. Since all the different Bhūmis in all the Brahmāṇḍas had been formed artificially, they all perish in the floods. (Devī Bhāgavata, Navama Skandha).

3) Bhūmi Devī (Goddess Earth) is the wife of Mahā Viṣṇu. In Varāha Kalpa (Age of the Pig) the Asura Hiraṇyākṣa carried the Earth and Submerged it under water. At once Mahā viṣṇu appeared in the form of a Pig and lifted up the Earth on its horns. When the Earth floated on the surface of water like a lotus leaf, Bhūmi Devī who was pleased, stood up in her charming figure. Mahāviṣṇu fell in love with her and with the brilliance of a crore of suns, had sexual union with her for the period of one Devavarṣa. It is from that time that Bhūmi Devī became Mahāviṣṇu's wife. As a result of their union, a son named Maṅgala was born to them.

Ghaṭeśa is the son of Maṅgala. Maṅgala has another name, Covva. After the birth of Maṅgala, at the behest of Lord Viṣṇu, all people began to offer worship to Bhūmidevī. Mahāviṣṇu himself first worshipped her by reciting the mantra—"Om Hrīṁ-Śrīṁ-Krīṁ-Vasudhāyai Svāhā". After that this mantra became popular for worshipping Bhūmidevī. (Devī Bhāgavata, Navama Skandha).

Narakāsura was Bhūmidevī's son by Hiraṇyākṣa, the Asura. When Hiraṇyākṣa, in the form of a pig, carried Bhūmidevī on his horns to Pātāla, the horns came in contact with Bhūmidevī and she became pregnant. In Bhāgavata, Daśama Skandha we read that Narakāsura was born as the result of this contact. (See the word Naraka I).

Sītā was the daughter of Bhūmidevī, born on another occasion. Sītā was married by the Kosala King Śrī Rāma. When she was abandoned by her husband, she was at last accepted by Bhūmidevī within her own self. (See the word Sītā).

4) Bhūmi and Prahlāda. Since Bhūmidevī had been the wife of the Asura Hiraṇyākṣa she has also been called the mother of the Asura clan. Hiraṇyākṣa's brother was

1 Mā Sāhasa = Do not act rashly.

Hiraṇyakaśipu. Prahlāda, the son of Hiraṇyakaśipu, was a devotee of Viṣṇu. The father did not like the son's devotion to Viṣṇu. So he persecuted Prahlāda in various ways. Once he threw down Prahlāda from the top of a high building. At that time Bhūmi devī appeared there and received him in her arms. (Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa, Chapter 24).

5) Bhūmidevī and Pṛthu. Once the Emperor Pṛthu turned Bhūmidevī into a cow and milched all resources from her. (For details, see the word Pṛthu).

6) Pārvatī's curse. Once Pārvatī and Śiva indulged in their sexual act for many years. The earth began to shake to its foundations. The gods approached Śiva with a request to refrain and he agreed. Śiva's semen was discharged and fell on the earth. Pārvatī who was angry at this, cursed Bhūmidevī as follows:— "You Bhūmidevī ! You will assume many forms and become the wife of many. Since you have prevented me from giving birth to a son, no children will be born to you in future." (Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa, Bālakāṇḍa, 36th Sarga).

7) Other details.

(1) Narakāsura has another name, "Bhauma". (M.B. Sabhā Parva, Dākṣiṇātya Pāṭha, Chapter 38).

(2) Bhūmidevī prayed to Śrī Kṛṣṇa and obtained Vaiṣṇavāstra for her son Narakāsura. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 29, Verse 30).

(3) When Paraśurāma was carrying on the annihilation of Kṣatriyas, Bhūmidevī induced the sage Kaśyapa to entreat Paraśurāma to stop his massacre of Bhūpālas. (Protectors of Bhūmi = Kṣatriyas). (M.B. Śānti Parva, Chapter 79, Verse 44).

(4) Once she (Bhūmidevī) described to Śrī Kṛṣṇa, the greatness of Brahminhood. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 34, Verse 22).

(5) At another time she explained to Śrī Kṛṣṇa the nature of Gṛhasthāśramadharma, (Duties of a householder). (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 97, Verse 5).

(6) On one occasion, when King Aṅga touched her, Bhūmidevī lost her own form and vanished. At that time, Kaśyapa prajāpati paralysed her. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 152, Verse 2).

(7) Paraśurāma gifted the whole earth to the sage Kaśyapa. From that time Bhūmidevī has been called "Kāśyapī" (daughter of Kaśyapa). (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 154, Verse 7).

BHŪMI II. Wife of Dhruva. This Bhūmi devī, the daughter of Śiśumāra had two sons named Kalpa and Vatsala, by Dhruva. (Bhāgavata, Caturtha Skandā).

BHŪMI III. Another Bhūmi, who was the wife of a king named Bhūmipati is mentioned in M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 117, Verse 14).

BHŪMIÑJAYA. A warrior who fought on the side of the Kauravas. He took his position in the centre of the "Garuḍa Vyūha" (Name of a phalanx) formed by Droṇa. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 20, Verse 13).

BHŪMIPĀLA. A Kṣatriya king of ancient India. He was born from a portion of an Asura called Krodhavaśa. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 67, Verse 61).

BHŪMIPARVA. A subdivision of Bhīṣmaparva in Mahābhārata. Chapters 11 and 12 of Bhīṣma Parva are included in this.

BHŪMIPATI. A king of ancient India. There is a reference to this King in M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 117, Verse 14.

BHŪMIŚAYA. A king in ancient India. M.B. Śānti Parva, Chapter 166, verse 75 says that King Amūrtarayas gave a sword to Bhūmiśaya who gifted it to Bharata, the son of Duṣyanta.

BHŪPATI. A viśvadeva. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 91, Verse 32).

BHŪRI I. A king of the Kuru dynasty. Somadatta, king of the Kuru dynasty had three sons, Bhūri, Bhūriśravas and Śala.[1] In M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 185, we read that they had attended the Svayaṁvara of Draupadī and in Sabhā Parva, Chapter 94 it is said that they had taken part in Yudhiṣṭhira's Rājasūya. In Droṇa Parva, Chapter 166, we read that this King Bhūri was slain by Sātyaki during the war between Kauravas and Pāṇḍavas. After death, Bhūri obtained a place with the Viśvedevas. (M.B. Svargārohaṇa Parva, Chapter 5, Verse 16).

BHŪRI II. A son of the sage Śuka. Vyāsa's son, Śuka married Pīvarī, the daughter of Pitṛs. She had four sons by Śuka, who were named Kṛṣṇa, Gauraprabha, Bhūri and Devaśruta, and a daughter named Kīrti. (Devī Bhāgavata, Prathama Skandha).

BHŪRIBALA. (BHĪMABALA). One of the hundred sons of Dhṛtarāṣṭra. Mahābhārata Śalya Parva, Chapter 26, Verse 14 says that at the battle of Kurukṣetra he was slain by Bhīmasena.

BHŪRIDYUMNA I. A king in the assembly of Yama. He attained Heaven (Svargaloka) by virtue of his having performed godāna (gift of cow). (M.B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 8, Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 76).

BHŪRIDYUMNA II. A Maharṣi. This sage once went to Hastināpura as a messenger of peace. On the way he met with Śrī Kṛṣṇa whom he reverently worshipped by doing "Pradakṣiṇā".

BHŪRIDYUMNA III. He was the only son of Vīradyumna, a King. Bhūridyumna was lost somewhere in the forest. (M.B. Śānti Parva, Chapter 127, Verse 14)

BHŪRIHAN. A Rākṣasa. He was a king in ancient times. (M.B. Śānti Parva, Chapter 277, Verse 51).

BHŪRIKĪRTI. A king. He had two daughters, Campikā and Sumati who were married by Lava and Kuśa respectively. (Ānanda Rāmāyaṇa, Vivāha Kāṇḍa).

BHŪRIŚRAVĀ (BHŪRIŚRAVAS).

(1) General. He was the son of Somada, a king of Kuruvaṁśa (Kuru dynasty).

(2) Other details. Bhūriśravas had two brothers named Bhūri and Śala. They were all present at the Svayaṁvara of Draupadī. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 185, Verse 14).

(3) He once described to Duryodhana, the heroic qualities of the Pāṇḍavas and advised him to maintain peaceful relations with them. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 199, Dākṣiṇātya Pāṭha).

(4) He took part in Yudhiṣṭhira's Rājasūya yajña with his father and brothers. (M.B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 34, Verse 8).

(5) In the war between Kauravas and Pāṇḍavas, he arrived with an "Akṣauhiṇī" (A division of the army) in order to give help to Duryodhana. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 19, Verse 16).

1 In Agnipurāṇa, Chapter 278, we see another statement that Śantanu, king of the Lunar dynasty, had three sons, Devāpi, Bālhika and Somada and of them Bālhika had four sons, Somadatta, Bhūri, Bhūriśravas and Śala.

(6) Bhīṣma once remarked that Bhūriśravas deserved to be counted among the Rathīs and Yūthapatis. (Udyoga Parva, Chapter 165, Verse 29).
(7) On the first day of the battle at Kurukṣetra Bhūriśravas fought a duel with Śaṅkha. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 35).
(8) He fought with Sātyaki (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 63, Verse 33).
(9) He killed the ten sons of Sātyaki. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 74, Verse 25).
(10) Defeated Dhṛṣṭaketu in battle. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 84, Verse 35).
(11) He fought a duel with Bhīmasena. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 11, Verse 44).
(12) A duel was fought with Śikhaṇḍī. (Droṇa Parva, Chapter 43, Verse 45).
(13) Bhūriśravas fell down under the stroke of Sātyaki. (Droṇa Parva, Chapter 142, Verse 59).
(14) Arjuna cut off the left arm of Bhūriśravas. (Droṇa Parva, Chapter 141, Verse 72).
(15) Enraged by Arjuna's action, Bhūriśravas squatted on the ground to attain Svarga (Heaven). (Droṇa Parva, Chapter 143, Verse 33).
(16) Sātyaki killed Bhūriśravas. (Droṇa Parva, Chapter 143, Verse 54).
(17) After death Bhūriśravas became a Viśvadeva. (Svargārohaṇa Parva, Chapter 5, Verse 16).
(18) Some of the other names of Bhūriśravas given in Mahābhārata are:—Bhūridakṣiṇa, Śālāgraja, Kaurava, Kauraveya, Kauravya, Yūpaketana, Yūpaketu, Śārdūla, Kuruśreṣṭha, Kurūdvaha.

BHŪRITEJAS. A king in ancient India. He was born from a portion of the Asura Krodhavaśa, according to Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 67, Verse 63).

BHUŚUṆḌA. A dispassionate and large-hearted crow. The residence of this crow was a Kalpavṛkṣa standing on a beautiful peak surrounded by luxuriant vegetation in the north-eastern corner of Mahāmeru. There were numerous bird-nests on the southern branch of that Kalpavṛkṣa. In one of them lived this centuries-old bird.

Once when the sage Vasiṣṭha went to Devaloka, he happened to hear about this crow. He went to see Bhuśuṇḍa in its nest. The crow recognised Vasiṣṭha at once. They exchanged greetings. The sage opened the conversation as follows:—"Oh, King of birds! when were you born? How did you become a great soul? How old are you? Have you recollections of the past? Who was the prophet who suggested this residence for you?"

The bird calmly replied as follows :— "If you are interested in hearing my past history I shall tell you. Lord Śaṅkara the Almighty lives in this world. He has numerous attendant spirits. Besides these spirits who have hoofs on their head, hands in the hoofs, teeth in the hands and stomach in the face, and who have faces resembling those of monkeys, camels, and elephants, he has also hordes of Mātṛs in his retinue. The Mātṛs, attended by spirits continue their dance in the presence of the Lord. Mountain peaks, the sky, the different worlds, deep pits, cremation grounds, etc. are their haunts. Chief among these Mātṛs are eight sisters named, Jayā, Vijayā, Jayantī, Aparāhitā, Siddhā, Raktā, Alambuṣā and Ulpalā. They have other followers also. Alambuṣā's vehicle is the crow named Caṇḍa. All these Mātṛs assembled together on one occasion to celebrate a festival in the sky. There was a display of many kinds of entertainments at that time. Disputations in spiritual matters, music, dancing, drinking and other forms of hilarious activities were freely indulged in. In another part of the sky, their vehicles were also enjoying themselves with similar celebrations of drinking, dancing, and merry-making. The swans who were the vehicles of Brāhmīdevī were dancing in one place, intoxicated by drink. Caṇḍa, the crow, who was Alambuṣā's vehicle, also joined their company. Completely absorbed in their delirious raptures, the intoxicated swans indulged so freely in their amorous pleasures with Caṇḍa that they became pregnant. At last when the merry-makings ended and all of them dispersed, the swans became aware of their plight and informed Brāhmī about it. The gracious goddess (Brāhmī) told them that in their present state they were unable to discharge their duties in drawing her chariot and so they were allowed to go and enjoy themselves wherever they liked. After this she entered into a trance. The swans in the fullness of time, gave birth to twentyone sons. We, the twenty-one brothers, are those children. We and our mothers went to Brāhmīdevī and offered worship to her for a long time. As a result, the Devī woke up from her trance and pleased with us, gave us her blessing. After that, we went to our father (Caṇḍa) and offered our devoted services to him and prostrated before him and Alambuṣādevī. They blessed us. We asked our father to suggest a most suitable place for a secluded life. This Kalpa Vṛkṣa is the secluded place recommended by him. We paid obeisance to our father and Alambuṣādevī and came to settle down here. Many ages have passed since then. Now your visit and holy presence here, have liberated me from all worldly bonds and ennobled my life. My twenty brothers lived for many Kalpas and yugas at the end of which, convinced of the meaninglessness of worldly life, renounced their bodies and attained Śivaloka.

On hearing this, Vasiṣṭha asked Bhuśuṇḍa to tell him more about his past life. Bhuśuṇḍa resumed his story:— "Long long ago, the whole earth was full of big rocks, without trees, forests or mountains. After a great flood the surface of the earth was covered with ashes. In one caturyuga (a period equal to the length of the four yugas, Kṛta, tretā, dvāpara and Kali) the earth was filled with forest trees and in another Caturyuga, mountain ranges appeared. I have seen an age in which Brāhmaṇas were drunkards, Śūdras were virtuous and women of noble families committed adultery. You have now been born in the eightieth "Janma" as the son of Brahmā. You were born once from the sky, at another time from water, then from the mountain and again from fire. I can remember this earth sinking into the ocean five times and Lord Viṣṇu taking the form of a tortoise, lifting it up, above the water. I have seen the ocean of milk being churned twelve times. I know that Hiraṇyākṣa had taken the earth three times to Pātāla (underworld). The Lord has incarnated six times as Bhārgava Rāma. Incarnation of Buddha has taken place in six Kaliyugas. Tripuradahana (burning of the Tripurāsuras) has taken place thirty times. Dakṣa yāga was broken up twice. Lord Śiva has slain ten Indras. He fought seven times with Śrī Kṛṣṇa for the sake of Bāṇa. I also remember another epic entitled "Rāmāyaṇa", containing one lakh of verses and dealing with metaphysical problems. I have seen the customs of Kṛtayuga being followed in Kaliyuga and the customs of Kaliyuga being followed in Kṛtayuga."

Having heard the whole story, Vasiṣṭha gave his blessing to Bhuśuṇḍa and left the place. (Jñāna Vāsiṣṭha, Bhu uṇḍopākhyāna).

BHŪTADHĀMĀ. An Indra. This Indra is different from the actual Indra. There is reference to this Indra in Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 96, Verse 28.

BHŪTAJYOTI. A king who was the father of Vasu and son of Sumati.

BHŪTAKARMĀ. A warrior who fought on the side of the Kauravas in the battle at Kurukṣetra. He was killed by Śatānīka, the son of Nakula. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 22, Verse 25).

BHŪTĀLAYA (M). A famous village in the purāṇas. It was a resort of thieves and robbers. Dead bodies were often thrown into the river which was flowing through this village. Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 129, verse 9 says that it was against Śāstras to bathe in this river.

BHŪTAMATHANA. A warrior of Subrahmaṇya. (M. B. Śalya Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 69).

BHŪTASANTĀPANA. One of the sons of Hiraṇyākṣa. (Bhāgavata, Saptama Skandha).

BHŪTAŚARMĀ. A warrior who fought on the side of the Kauravas against the Pāṇḍavas. He had taken his position in the "Garuḍavyūha" (name of a phalanx) formed by Droṇācārya. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 20, Verse 6).

BHŪTAS. (A set of beings created by Rudra).

1) General. A Mānava class or sect in ancient India. In the Purāṇas, this Mānava sect is classified into four subdivisions. (1) Dharmapraja (2) Īśvarapraja (3) Kāśyapīyapraja (4) Pulahapraja.

2) Birth. In the Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa there is the following story about the birth and shape of Bhūtas:—

Bhūtas are one of the subdivisions of Pulaha's creations. Long ago, Brahmā asked the Rudra, Nīlalohita, to perform the function of creation. Accordingly he begot thousands of Bhūtas in the womb of his wife Satī. All the issues were the exact replica of his own figure. Lean limbs, long ears, thick hanging lips, red eyes, bushy eyebrows, long, pointed and protruding teeth, long nails, matted dirty hair etc. were the grotesque features of these Bhūtas. These music-haters used serpents as their Yajñopavītas (sacred threads). These spirits who loitered in Śiva's assembly were, as a rule, naked and carried skulls on their heads. But at times they wore fantastic dress with elephant skin. Their chief weapons were, trident, bow, sword, etc.

3) Bhūta Chief. In the Purāṇas, Rudra is acknowledged as the Bhūta chief. That is why Rudra is known by such names as "Bhūtanāyaka", "Gaṇanāyaka", "Rudrānucara", "Bhavapariṣada" etc. But since the common name Rudra is used for the ruler (king) of all the Bhūtas, Vāmana Purāṇa declares that Rudra is not an individual. Both Vāmanapurāṇa and Matsyapurāṇa represent Vīrabhadra and Nandikeśvara as two Rudras who are the masters of Bhūtas. (Matsyapurāṇa 181, 2; Vāmanapurāṇa 4, 17).

In Vāmana Purāṇa, the number of Bhūtas is given as 11 crores. Śkanda, Sākha, Bhairava are the chief among them. Under them are innumerable Bhūtas. Ashes and Khatvāṁga etc. are their weapons. The emblem on the banner is a cow or a bird. That is how the Gaṇanāyakas have got the titles like "Mayūradhvaja", "Mayūravāhana". (Vāmana Purāṇa 67, 1-23).

4) War with Asuras. In the war between Śiva and Andhakāsura, the Bhūtas fought on the side of Śiva. It was Vināyaka, the master of the Bhūta hordes who first came into conflict with the Asura. In that battle Andhaka defeated Vināyaka. After that, Nandi, another leader of the Bhūtas, attacked Andhaka jointly with Vināyaka and defeated him. At last, Andhaka approached Śiva himself for protection, and Śiva received him and appointed him as commander of one of his hordes of Bhūtas. It is this Andhakāsura who later became famous under the name of Bhṛṅgi.

In this way, the Bhūtas had fought many battles with the Asuras, joining the party of the Devas. But at the time of Dakṣa's yajña, they joined the party of the Asuras and opposed the Devas.

Although the Bhūtas won all the battles they fought both on the side of the Devas and on the side of the Asuras, in the end they had to leave north India and to come and settle down in south India. By the time of Vaivasvata manvantara they had already become South Indians.

BHŪTIVARMĀ. A Rākṣasa who was the friend of Kāṇabhūti. (Kathāsaritsāgara).

BHUVANA I. A Maharṣi who visited Bhīṣma when he was lying on the verge of death. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 26, Verse 81).

BHUVANA II. A sanātana Viśvadeva. There is a reference to him in M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 91, Verse 35.).

BHUVANA II. A sanātana Viśvadeva. There is a reference to him in M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 91, Verse 35.).

BHUVANĀ. Bṛhaspati's sister. She was married to Prabhāsa, one of the Aṣṭavasus. A son named Viśvakarmā was born to them. (Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa, 3-3-21-29).

BHUVANEŚA. See the word Bhadraśravas.

BĪBHATSU. One of the ten names of Arjuna. He got this name because he desisted from doing loathful acts. "I will never resort to loathful deeds in war. Therefore the devas and men call me Bībhatsu". (Mahābhārata, Virāṭa Parva, Chapter 44, Stanza 18).

BIḌĀLA. A minister of Mahiṣāsura. (Devī Bhāgavata).

BIḌĀLOPĀKHYĀNA. See the word Ḍiṁḍika.

BIḌAUJAS. A son born to Aditi by the blessings of Viṣṇu. (Padma Purāṇa, Bhūmikāṇḍa, Chapter 3).

BILVA. (VILVA). A devotee of Viṣṇu. There is a story in Skanda Purāṇa about Bilva who lived as a Vaiṣṇavite first and then was converted to a Śaivite.

In the beginning Brahmā created many things among which Vilva (tree) (Crataeva religiosa) also was created. Under that tree an anonymous man began to live. Brahmā gave him the name Vilva. Being pleased at the behaviour and devotion of Bilva, Indra asked him to turn the wheel of administration of the earth. Accepting the offer Bilva requested Indra to give him the Vajra (diamond) for the smooth running of the administration of the earth. Indra told him that vajrāyudha (diamond-weapon) would be at his disposal, when he thought about it, if the occasion required it.

Once Kapila a Śaivite reached the palace of Bilva. After a long conversation both became fast friends. One day there was a debate between Bilva and Kapila as to whether penance or Action (doing one's duty) was appreciable. In this discussion Bilva lost the equilibrium of his mind and thinking of the diamond-weapon of Indra cut off the head of Kapila. In Kapila there was the power of penance as well as the power of Śiva. So through Śiva Kapila got immortality. In the meanwhile Bilva went to Viṣṇu and got a boon that every living thing in the earth should fear him. But the boon was futile. This was a turning point for Bilva. The mind of Bilva changed to devotion for Śiva. He concentrated his attention on the worship of Śivaliṅga at the forest of Mahākāla. One day Kapila came by that way and was greeted by Bilva with honour and regard, and they again became fast friends.

BILVAKA. A famous serpent born to Kaśyapa prajāpati of his wife Kadrū. (Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 35, Stanza 12).

BILVAKATĪRTHA. A holy place in Haradvāra. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 25, Stanza 13 that those who bathe in this holy Bath will attain heaven.

BILVAPĀṆḌURA. A serpent. The father of this serpent was Kaśyapa and mother, Kadrū. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 35, Stanza 12).

BILVAPATRA. A serpent born in the family of Kaśyapa prajāpati. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 103, Stanza 14).

BILVATEJA. A serpent born in the family of Takṣaka. This serpent was burnt to death by falling in the sacrificial fire of Janamejaya. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 57, Stanza 9).

BINDUGA. A Brāhmaṇa who lived in the village of Bāṣkala. Being a frequenter of the houses of harlots and of various other mean habits, he had led his wife Cañcalā also to lead an immoral life. Once Binduga called his wife and told her thus: "You may continue the life of a harlot; but all the money acquired must be handed over to me." Thus they continued their lives and after their death both were reborn as devils in the mountain of Vindhya. In the midst of their life as devils, once it chanced for Cañcalā to hear the Śiva Purāṇa recited and she got her shape of devil changed. She requested Pārvatī to change the shape of her husband also. Pārvatī sent her attendant Tumburu to Binduga to tell him the story of Śiva and thus he also got his form changed. (Śiva Purāṇa Māhātmya).

BINDUMATĪ. The queen of the great King Māndhātā. Bindumatī was the daughter of the King Śaśabindu. Purukutsa and Mucukunda were the two sons born to her from Māndhātā. (Devī Bhāgavata, Skandha 7).

BINDUSARAS. A holy place famous in the Purāṇas. The following information is obtained from the Purāṇas about this holy place.

(1) Bindusaras lies on the north of the Mount Kailāsa. (Mahābhārata Sabhā Parva, Chapter 3, Stanza 2).

(2) It was at Bindusaras that Bhagīratha did penance to bring down Gaṅgā to the earth (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 3, Stanza 10).

(3) Devendra performed hundred sacrifices at this place. (Mahā Bhārata, Sabhā Parva, Chapter 3).

(4) Once Śiva performed a sacrifice at Bindusaras. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 3).

(5) Śrī Kṛṣṇa did penance here for several years to get righteousness. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 3, Stanza 11).

(6) At this place, Maya, the asura gave Arjuna the famous conch known as Devadatta and to Bhīmasena the famous club of Vṛṣaparvā. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 3).

BODHA. A king. In the Mahābhārata, Sabhā Parva, Chapter 14, Stanza 20, mention is made that this King fled to South India with his brothers and relatives fearing the attack of Jarāsandha.

BODHA(M). A place in ancient India. It is famous in the Purāṇas. Mention is made about this place in Mahābhārata, Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 9, Stanza 39.

BODHĀYANA. An individual of the lineage of teachers. (See the word Guruparamparā).

BODHISATTVA. A good-natured husband generally quoted in Sanskrit works. The following is the story given about him in Kathāsaritsāgara, Taraṅga 9.

Once there lived a wealthy Vaiśya, who had a son named Bodhisattva. When the childhood of the boy was at an end his mother died. The Vaiśya married again and got his son also married. Because of the ear-buzzing of his wife, the Vaiśya drove his son out of the house. Bodhisattva left the house of his father, with his wife. By and by they reached a desert. Not a drop of water was to be had. There was not even the shoot of a grass. It was a sandy place with nothing else in sight. He walked for seven days carrying his wife on his shoulders. His wife grew weary and worn with hunger and thirst. Seeing that she was about to die he gave her his flesh and blood. The wicked woman took them and saved herself from death. On the eighth day they reached the jungles of a hilly place full of fruit-trees and with a river with grassy banks, flowing down to the valley. With fruits and cool water he appeased the hunger and thirst of his wife. Then he got down to the river to take a bath. He saw a man with his limbs cut off, coming afloat. Now and then he was producing pitiable sounds. The kind son of the Vaiśya, without minding his weakness due to fast for the last seven days, swam to the man and brought him to the bank of the river. He did all services possible for him. Then he asked him who had cut off his limbs. He replied that his enemies had done so, with the intention that he might die suffering severe pain for a long time. The Vaiśya's son stood still for a little while. Then he took his bath. With his wife he lived in the forest doing penance. The wounds of the man he saved had been healed. The Vaiśya's son, one day, went out to the forest to gather fruits and roots for their food. At that time his wife grew lustful and had coition with the man without limbs. Gradually she began to dote on him. She decided to kill her husband who was an impediment on her way. She pretended to be ill. The Vaiśya's son began to treat her. One day she took her husband to the edge of a very deep well and said: "See, there is a divine herb at the bottom of this well. I will be cured if I could eat it. This is what a goddess told me in a dream yesternight". Hearing this her husband made a rope, and tied it to a tree. Then he began to go down the well by the rope. She cut the rope and the man fell into the well. There was a passage from the well to the river. The current took him through that passage to the river. He got out of the river, and sat under a tree thinking of the wickedness of women. There was a city close by. At that time the King of the city was dead and there was no heir left. The subjects of the city brought an elephant and said, "whom ever this elephant takes and places on his back shall be our king". They sent the elephant out. The elephant was pleased at the virtuous character of the son of the Vaiśya. So taking him, as if he was God, placed him on its back and walked to the city. The people gathered round him and anointed him as their King. The son of the Vaiśya became King. He never even thought of women who are generally fickle and wicked.

The wicked wife of the Vaiśya's son took the limbless man on her shoulder and wandered about saying, "The enemies of my husband have put him in this plight. Because of my conjugal fidelity I carry him thus and earn our daily bread. Please give us alms". In this manner she spent her days in begging. Thus wandering from place to place she reached the city where the Vaisya's son was the King. The people, seeing her loyalty to her husband, honoured her and spoke highly of her. Hearing that a very loyal wife had reached his city the King sent for her. The King recognized her instantly. But she did not know him. The King reminded her of her deeds of the past one by one and began to tease and scold her. Finally when she understood that the King was her husband she was dumb-founded. The amazed ministers looked at each other. The King revealed everything to them. The ministers disfigured her and drove her away.

BODHYA. A famous teacher-priest. Once there was a discussion between Nahuṣa and Bodhya on Philosophy. The summary of what Bodhya said is as follows:—

Before I advise others, I do it myself first. I am the teacher of none. I take the world as my teacher. I learned the lessons of harmlessness from snakes, disappointment from Piṅgala the harlot, self-sacrifice from animals, concentration from the archer, and loneliness from a maid who is a spinster. (M.B., Śānti Parva, 171, 56, 61).

This hermit came to the King Yayāti and taught him philosophy and ethics. The whole of the Chapter 171 of Mahābhārata, Śānti Parva, comprises the exhortations of this hermit, which are known by the famous name Bodhya-Gītā (Song of Bodhya).

BRADHNĀŚVA. A king. Agastya once approached this King to request him for some wealth. (See the word Agastya).

BRAHMĀ :

One of the trimūrtis of the Hindu Pantheon. The trimūrtis are Brahmā, Viṣṇu and Śiva.

1) General information. God who is the creator of the Universe. It is mentioned in the Purāṇas that Brahmā creates, Viṣṇu preserves and Paramaśiva destroys the universe.

2) The birth of Brahmā. The birth of Brahmā is from the nave of Viṣṇu. It is mentioned in Devī Purāṇa, Skandha 1, about the birth of Brahmā as follows:—

In the beginning Mahāviṣṇu lay on a banian leaf in the shape of a baby and began to think, "Who am I? Who created me? What for? What is my work? Where to work?" and so on. At that time an ethereal voice said:— "Sarvaṁ khalvidamevāhaṁ nānyadasti sanātanam".* Mahāviṣṇu was amazed at this ethereal voice. He did not know whose oracle it was. Still He lay meditating upon the words. Then Mahādevī, with four hands and weapons such as Śaṅkha (conch), Cakra (wheel), Gadā (club), Padma (lotus) and maids who are prosperities and having worn glorious clothes and ornaments, and accompanied by the Śaktis (powers) named Rati, Bhūti, Buddhi, Mati, Kīrti, Dhṛti, Smṛti, Śraddhā, Medhā, Svadhā, Svāhā, Kṣudhā, Nidrā, Dayā, Gatī, Tuṣṭi, Puṣṭi, Kṣamā, Lajjā, Jṛmbhā and Tandrā, appeared before Mahāviṣṇu, who was struck with wonder. Mahādevī said, "Oh, Viṣṇu, what is there to wonder at? Every time the universe is subjected to creation, preservation and destruction, you are born thus due to the great power of the supreme spirit. It seems that you have forgotten those matters. Know that the supreme power is beyond qualities. We are all with qualities. Your main quality is Sattva. From your nave Brahmā will be born. His attribute is Rajoguṇa (activity, passion or motion). From the middle of the eyebrows of Brahmā, will be born Rudra, whose attribute will be Tāmasaguṇa (darkness). Brahmā, with the power of penance, will acquire the ability of creation and by his attribute of Rajoguṇa will create the world in the colour of blood. You will be the preserver of that world. The same world will be destroyed by Rudra at the end of the Kalpa (world age)".

Accordingly from the nave of Viṣṇu a lotus grew up and in that lotus flower Brahmā took his form. The same Brahmadeva did penance before Mahāviṣṇu and Jagadambā, who were pleased at his penance and gave him all the boons he wanted. After that Brahmā began the work of creation. He created with his mind the Saptarṣis, (seven sages) and then the Prajāpatis (the lords of emanation). From them all the movables and the immovables in the universe came into existence. (Devī Bhāgavata, Skandha 7).

In manusmṛti, Chapter 1, the following stanza about the creation of Brahmā occurs.

"Tadaṇḍamabhavad haimam Sahasrāṁśusamaprabhaṁ /
Tasmin jajñe svayaṁ Brahmā
Sarvalokapitāmahaḥ" //

That egg was as radiant as the Sun, with the colour of gold. Brahmā the great grandfather of everything in the world took birth by himself in it.

From the supreme power, an egg fell on the water which was the first creation. That egg became a germ of golden colour. Creating a life, which had done penance in its former births in such a way as to enable it to become Brahmā, in the golden germ of the egg, the supreme power entered the life that is to become Brahmā as its inner guide. That Brahmā is known as the Pitāmaha (Grandfather of the manes) or Paternal grandfather of all the worlds."

Vāmanapurāṇa Chapter 43 states as follows about the creation of Brahmā :—

Ages before the beginning, when all the worlds with everything they contained were submerged in the single ocean of the great flood, the germ of living things formed itself into a big egg. Brahmā who had been inside the egg went to a long sleep. The sleep continued for a thousand yugas (ages) when Brahmā woke up; as Sattva guṇa (purity) was the foremost attribute of him, he saw that the world was void. When the thought of creation occurred in his mind Rajoguṇa (activity or passion) became his foremost attribute. Rajas is the attribute that creates and Sattva, that which preserves. At the time of destruction Tamoguṇa (darkness) becomes the foremost attribute. That Bhagavān (Supreme 1 Idaṁ sarvaṁ khalu aham eva, Sanātanam anyad nāsti. All these are myself. Except me there is nothing eternal.

Spirit) the Puruṣa (the Male creative Energy) pervades over everything, in all the living worlds. That Eternal Being is Brahmā, Viṣṇu, Śiva.

Knowing that the world was lying in pure water, the Bhagavān (Supreme Being) cut the egg open. From it the Oṁkāra (the sacred syllable 'Om') emanated. The first sound of it was 'Bhūḥ', the second, sound, 'Bhuvaḥ' and the third sound 'Svaḥ'. So they came to be known as "Bhūrbhuvaḥ Svaḥ". Then the glorious radiance of the sun was born from it and Brahmā the grandfather of the worlds originated in the centre of the egg.

3) Instigation to compose Rāmāyaṇa. It was Brahmā who instigated Vālmīki to compose the Rāmāyaṇa.

A fowler of the forest tribe shot down one of a couple of snipes which were carrying on love-making, on the banks of the River Tamasā. Seeing this Vālmīki cursed the fowler. The curse came out of the mouth of Vālmīki in the form of a verse,[1] "mā niṣāda pratiṣṭhām tvamagamaḥ śāśvatīḥ samāḥ, yat krauñcamithunādekam, avadhīḥ kāmamohitam," which according to hearsay, is the first piece of poetry in the world. Brahmā who was attracted by the poetry came to the hermitage of Vālmīki and instigated him to compose the story of Rāma in verse. It is stated in Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa, Bālakāṇḍa, Sarga 2, that the Rāmāyaṇa was composed thus.

4) Rāvaṇa is given a boon. It was Brahmā who made Rāvaṇa an ever-powerful hero. Penance was done by Rāvaṇa in the vicinity of the Himālayas and Brahmā appeared before him and granted him the boon that no living creature except man, would kill him. (Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa, Bāla Kāṇḍa, Sarga 16).

5) The loss of a head. Long ago Śiva plucked off a head of Brahmā. This story occurs in various purāṇas with slight changes. Two of them are given below:—

(1) In olden days, in the period of Satyayuga, Mahāviṣṇu did penance in Śvetadvīpa (the island Śveta) to obtain Eternal Bliss, being deeply engaged in the study of Brahmavidyā. Brahmā also went to another place and began to do penance for the suppression of passions. Both were doing severe penance. So they began to walk in order to take rest from the penance. On the way they met each other. One asked "who are you ?" The other also asked the same question. The talk ended in a contest as to who was the greater of the two. Each claimed himself to be the supreme power of the world. Neither of them was prepared to recognize the claims of the other. In the midst of this contest, a phallus, extra-ordinarily bulky and fair appeared before them and an ethereal voice said from the sky: "You need not quarrel as to who is superior. He who reaches the extremity of this phallus is the superior person. So both of you proceed, one upwards and the other downwards and find out the end." Hearing this Viṣṇu went downwards to find out the bottom and Brahmā, upwards to the top. Viṣṇu travelled for a long time and finding no end thought the attempt futile and returned to the starting point with disappointment and sat down.

Brahmā travelled upwards for a long time and found no end. On the way he saw the petal of a paṇḍānus flower, coming down from the sky. Brahmā took it and joyfully returned and said haughtily to Viṣṇu : "See, I have taken this flower from the head of the Phallus. I have brought this to convince you. You have been defeated. So can you not admit that I am the superior ?" Mahāviṣṇu did not believe the words of Brahmā. So he called the Paṇḍānus flower to him and questioned it. The Paṇḍānus flower took false oath and witnessed in favour of Brahmā, who had asked the flower beforehand to be on his side. Mahāviṣṇu did not believe this either and said, "Let Śiva be witness to this flower". Śiva at these words appeared before them and revealed the deceit played by Brahmā and the flower and then cursed the Paṇḍānus flower that thenceforward it should not have a place among the flowers of oblation to Śiva. Then Śiva got angry and plucked off a head of Brahmā. That is the skull Śiva uses for receiving alms. (Devī Bhāgavata, Śkandha 5.)

(2) In days of old all the worlds with everything in them were under water in a single ocean. The Sun, the Moon, the Stars, air, fire, everything was destroyed. A day of utter darkness appeared. Grass, bush all were destroyed. Nothing could be seen and recognized. All existents and non-existents were destroyed. Bhagavān, (Supreme Being) was sleeping continuously for so many thousands of nights. At the end of the night Bhagavān assumed the attribute of Rajas (Activity) and got ready for the work of creation. He, the knower of all Vedas and Vedāṅgas appeared in the shape of a wonderful being with five faces. Another being with three eyes, matted hair, a trident in one hand, and a garland of beads in the other, and with darkness as its attribute took shape. That being was called Puruṣa (the male creative energy). Then the Mahātmā (the Supreme Spirit) created Ahaṁkāra (Egoism). It affected Brahmā and Śiva. Overcome by egoism, Śiva said to Brahmā:—"Who are you ? Who created you ?" Swelled with egoism Brahmā asked in reply:—"Who are you ? Who are your parents ? Let me hear it." This talk ended in a quarrel. The origin of Bhagavān (the Lord) was from this quarrel. Immediately after his birth the Lord took an unparralleled lute and playing it, went up to the sky. Śiva being defeated by Brahmā, bowed his head and coloured. While Parameśvara was standing angrily thus, the fifth face told him, "You, who are having three eyes and whose attribute is darkness ! look here ! I will tell you all. You, who wear air as garments, and ride on an ox, are the destroyer of the world." Hearing these words Śiva grew more and more angry, opened his third eye and looked steadily at Brahmā to burn him. Seeing the faces shining like the Sun Brahmā said,"When you beat on water, bubbles will appear. But do they have any prowess ? Hearing this, Śiva plucked off the head of Brahmā with the tip of his finger nails. (Vāmana Purāṇa, Chapter 2).

5) Changing Vijayalakṣmī to Laṅkālakṣmī, by curse. Vijayalakṣmī, one of the eight Lakṣmīs, was the treasury-keeper of Brahmā. Once she became careless in discharging her duties. Brahmā got angry and cursed her. "You go to Rāvaṇa and keep his tower". She humbly requested for absolution from the curse. Brahmā said, "At the time of the incarnation of Śrī Rāma, a monkey-hero named Hanumān will reach Laṅkā in search of Śrī Rāma's wife, whom Rāvaṇa had kidnapped. You will obstruct him, and he will strike you down. On that day you will be absolved from the curse and you will return here instantly." Accordingly Vijayalakṣmī was born in

1 You forester, your life will not continue for many years since you have killed one of the couple of snipes.

Laṅkā under the name Laṅkālakṣmī. When Hanumān jumped to Laṅkā she prevented him, and he struck her down to the ground. (Kampa Rāmāyaṇa, Sundara Kāṇḍa).

6) Brahmā cursing the daughters of Himavān. Three daughters named Kuṭilā, Rāgiṇī and Pārvatī and a son named Sunābha were born to Himavān by his wife Menā. The three daughters went to the Himālayas for penance, to get Śiva as husband. They were not even six years old then. The devas saw them. The Ādityas and the Vasus took Kuṭilā who was doing penance, to the world of the gods. All the gods gathered together and asked Brahmā. "Oh Lord, be pleased to tell us if this girl will be able to bear a son who could kill Mahiṣāsura". Brahmā replied. "This poor girl will not be capable of bearing the radiance of Śiva. So let her go away." Kuṭilā got angry at Brahmā and said "Lord, I will try to become fit to bear the unbearable radiance of Śiva. Harken, I will do penance properly and please Viṣṇu and make Śiva bow his head. I take a vow to that effect." Brahmā became angry and told Kuṭilā, "You, wicked Kuṭilā, you did not succumb to my words. So by my curse you will be turned to water."

Kuṭilā having been cursed by Brahmā became water and began to flood the world of Brahmā. Seeing the flow of water, Brahmā made cause-ways on four sides with the Vedas of Ṛg, Yajus, Sāma and Atharva. Thus being tied up she stays in the world of Brahmā.

The Devas took Rāgiṇī also before Brahmā and put the same question. The reply of Brahmā was the same as before. She also got angry and said to Brahmā. "I will do great penance so as to enable to give birth to one in my family to be the killer of Mahiṣāsura." Brahmā cursed her also. "You are deliberately disobeying my words which even devas won't gainsay. So you will become the colours of the twilight." Thus she became the fast colours of the twilight, and her body was divided among the Pleiades. (Vāmana Purāṇa, Chapter 51).

7) Giving a boon to a tiger and golden colour to Pārvatī. The first name of Pārvatī, the daughter of Himavān was Kālī. She was given this name (Kālī) because of her dark complexion. After the marriage Śiva and Pārvatī led a household life in the golden house built by Viśvakarmā. Once Śiva called Devī humorously, by the name Kālī. Pārvatī got angry and said to her husband. "A wound by an arrow will be cured. If you cut down a tree by an axe it will sprout again. A wound inflicted by hard words will never be cured. The arrows of words shoot out of the mouth. Those who are hit by them suffer pain day and night. Wise people should not shoot them at others. You have violated that principle. So my lord, I am going to do intensive penance. I will endeavour to create such a condition, that you may not call me by the name Kālī again." Saying thus, Pārvatī bowed before Parameśvara and bidding good-bye she went up into the air and reached the peak of Himālayas and thought of Jayā, Vijayā, Jayantī and Aparājitā. Instantly they arrived to see Kālī. They got permission and stayed with Pārvatī to attend on her.

While Pārvatī was engaged in doing penance, a tiger, with his weapons of tusks and claws came there from the jungles of the Himālayas. Umā (Pārvatī) was standing on one leg. The tiger began to think, "I shall do it when it is needed". Thinking thus it gazed at the face of Devī with staring eyes and consequently it lost one eye. Pronouncing the word Brahmā Devī did penance for a hundred years. After that Brahmā, the Lord of the three worlds appeared before her and said to her: "I am much pleased. Your penance was flawless. Ask your boon." Kālī replied, "Oh, Lotus-born ! First give this tiger a boon. It will please me." Then Brahmā gave the wonderful tiger leadership of the Gaṇas, devotion to Śiva, invincibility and righteousness. After giving the tiger this boon Brahmā told Pārvatī, "Now, Ambikā, ask your boon. Don't hesitate, I will grant the boon." Then Pārvatī asked the boon. "Brahmā, give me golden colour". Brahmā said "Let it be so", and disappeared. The dark complexion of Pārvatī disappeared. She got the colour of the filament of the lotus flower. From the discarded skin Kātyāyanī was born. Then Indra appeared and asked for her as a gift. Indra requested Pārvatī on behalf of heaven. "Let me have her. Let this Kauśikī be my sister. Because she was born from your Kośa, (outer skin) she is Kauśikī, I am also Kauśika." Devī gave the beautiful Kauśikī to Indra. Sahasrākṣa (Indra who has thousand eyes) took her to the Vindhya mountain; when they reached there Indra told her. "You stay on this mount, honoured and revered by gods. You will be known as Vindhyavāsinī (who stays on the Vindhya). He consecrated the goddess there. She was given a lion as her carrier (Vāhana) "You destroy the asuras?" saying so Indra returned to Heaven. (Vāmana Purāṇa, Chapter 54).

8) Brahmā became river. Long ago in the period of Cākṣuṣa manvantara (the age of a Manu), Brahmā decided to perform a sacrifice on the Sahya Mountain and preparations were made for it. Brahmā came with Viṣṇu and Śiva. Bhṛgu and the other hermits took their seats. Mahāviṣṇu called Svarādevī, the wife of Brahmā. But she was very slow in coming. The hermit Bhṛgu said to Viṣṇu : "You yourself have gone to call Devī. But she is very slow. The auspicious moment is coming to an end. So how are we to commence the rituals ?" "If Svarā does not appear before the end of the stipulated time we shall seat Gāyatrī in her place," said Viṣṇu. Śiva also agreed to it. So Bhṛgu seated Gāyatrī on the right side of Brahmā and the rituals were performed. By then Svarā reached the sacrificial hall. When she saw that Gāyatrī was placed in her place and the rituals were performed she became angry, because of her quarrel with her co-wife. She called out: "Where the person to whom respect is due, is not given respect and where the person who ought not to be respected is given undue respect, there, scarcity, death and fear will be rampant. She dared to sit on the right in my place. So she will grow lean and become a river which will not be seen in the world. All of you will become rivers because you have placed a person lower than me in my position." Hearing the curse of Svarā, Gāyatrī rose up trembling, and cursed Svarā also to become a river. Before Svarā was changed to a river, Brahmā and the other gods rose up and requested for absolution from the curse. Svarā said, "Gods, it is because you have not given oblations to Gaṇapati in the beginning of the sacrifice, that this break, due to my anger, has been caused. My curse cannot be futile. So each of you change to a river by your portions and we, your wives, will also become rivers by our portions, and flow to the west."

Thus Brahmā, Viṣṇu and Maheśvara became rivers with their portions. Brahmā became the fast-flowing Kukudmatī, Mahāviṣṇu changed to river Kṛṣṇā and Śiva, the river Veṇī. The devas also changed their portions to rivers and flowed from the Sahya mountain to the east and their wives changed to rivers by their portions and flowed to the west. Svarā and Gāyatrī flowed as two rivers to the west and then joined together as one river called Sāvitrī. Viṣṇu and Śiva who were consecrated at the sacrifice by Brahmā came to be called Bala and Atibala (Powerful and more powerful). This is the origin of the rivers in Kerala. (Padma Purāṇa, Chapter 113).

9) Brahmā is not worshipped. Long ago Brahmā and Viṣṇu went to see Śiva near Himavān. They saw a shining phallus there in front of them. It was of immense size. One of them went downwards and the other upwards to find out the end of it. Both returned without reaching the top or the bottom and by penance they pleased Śiva who appeared before them and asked them what boon they desired. Brahmā asked Śiva to take birth as his son. Śiva did not like this and said that nobody would worship Brahmā because of his extravagant desire (namely, to have Śiva as his son). Viṣṇu requested that he should be made a servant at Śiva's feet. So Viṣṇu incarnated as Śiva's Śakti (power). That Śakti is Pārvatī. So Viṣṇu and Pārvatī are one and the same in a sense. (Kathāsaritsāgara, Kathāpīṭhalambakaṁ, Taraṅga 1).

10) The abode of Brahmā. It is said in Devī Bhāgavata, Skandha 8, that the abode of Brahmā is on the top of Mount Mahāmeru. There are nine towns there. Manovatī which is in the centre, is the town of Brahmā. Due east of Manovatī stands Amarāvatī, the town of Indra. On the south-east corner there is Rajovatī which is owned by Agni (fire-god). Due south of Brahmapurī there is the town of Saṁyamanī which is the town of Yama (God of death) On the south west corner there is the town of Nirṛti. It is named Kṛṣṇāñjanā. On the west there is the town called Śraddhāvatī. It is the abode of God Varuṇa. On the north-west corner there is the town called Gandhavatī which is the abode of Bhagavān Vāyu (Wind-God). Due north to Brahmapurī stands the town of Kubera (God of wealth). It is known by the name Mahodaya. On the north east corner there is the city of Śiva. It is known as Yaśovatī.

11) The sons of Brahmā. Brahmā is the creator of all the living things in the world. Still mention is made in the Purāṇas about countless divine persons who were born from the mind and body of Brahmā, directly and indirectly. They are given below in groups

(1) Marīci, Aṅgiras, Atri, Pulastya, Pulaha, and Kratu. It is mentioned in the Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 65, Stanza 10, that these six grand hermits were born from the mind of Brahmā.

(2) Dhātā and Vidhātā. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata Ādi Parva, Chapter 66, Stanza 51 that these two were good sons born to Brahmā.

(3) Rudra. Mention is made in Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 20, that Brahmā had a roaring son who was named Rudra.

(4) Svāyambhuva Manu. It occurs in Bhāgavata Skandha 11, that Manu Svāyambhuva was the son of Brahmā.

(5) Kandarpa (Kāmadeva—Cupid). In Kathāsaritsāgara, Lāvāṇakalambaka, Taraṅga, 6, it is mentioned that Cupid was born from the Egoism of Brahmā.

(6) Madhuka and Golikā. In Uttara Rāmāyaṇa, mention is made that from the playful habit of Brahmā, a giant named Madhuka and a giantess named Golikā were born.

(7) Bhṛgu. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 5, Stanza 8, that the hermit Bhṛgu was the son of Brahmā.

(8) Jāmbavān. It is seen in Kampa Rāmāyaṇa that Jāmbavān was born from the sweat of Brahmā.

(9) The Sanakas. In Bhāgavata mention is made that the Sanakas (Sanaka, Sananda, Sanātana and Sanatkumāra) were sons of Brahmā.

(10) In Mahābhārata, Anuśāsana Parva there is a passage given as the words of Vasiṣṭha spoken to Bhṛgu, about the birth of many of the sons of Brahmā. "May I tell you a story I have heard long ago about the revelation of Brahmā of himself?

Lord Rudra took the form of Varuṇa and performed a sacrifice. Many hermits, all the devas, Agni and others, Vaṣaṭkāra (Exclamation in sacrifice) which took body, and all yajñāṅgas came to the sacrificial hall. All the expedients, all the glories which are thousands in number took shape and came to the sacrifice. Ṛgveda arrayed in garments of heroism came there. All the omens, all the voices, all the emotions, all the etymologies of pronouncing Veda Sūktas, all the svarabhaktikas, Oṁkāra (the syllable Oṁ) the eye of all the Vedic metres and their theories, all restraints and donations, all Vedas, Upaniṣads, accomplishments, Sāvitrī, the past, the near future and distant future, all these came there. The Lord Śiva held everyone of them. He offered his spirit by his spirit. The sacrifice took many forms and shed radiances. Paramaśiva is heaven, is the sky, is the earth, is the ether and the husband of the Earth, is the lord of all accomplishments, is noble and the lord of radiance. This Lord is lauded by the names Brahmā, Śiva, Rudra, Varuṇa, Agni, and Prabhāvatī. Śiva is the King of all the worlds. Penances, sacrifices, vows emblazed by fast, all the directions and gods of directions, Indras, celestial maids, mothers of the worlds, all these assumed forms and came to the sacrifice in multitudes. Everybody who witnessed the sacrifice of Parameśvara, who was in the form of Varuṇa, was greatly pleased. Seeing the pleased celestial maids standing in rows passion arose in Brahmā. He had seminal discharge. Āditya (the Sun) took the earth on which the semen fell and threw it into the sacrificial fire, which blazed furiously. Brahmā who became the offerer of oblation had discharge again. He got it in the sacrificial ladle and with recitation of spells offered it in the sacrificial fire as if it was ghee. The powerful semen contained the three attributes of Sattva, Rajas and Tamas. From the attribute of Rajas arose the living world which had activity as its purpose. Radiance is the quality of Sattva which entered the living and nonliving world. It gives light to everything. It also gives the power of discrimination. From the semen offered in the fire, three sons with body and the attributes of demi-gods came out. The male who had originated from the flame called 'Bharjana' became Aṅgiras. The male who originated from the burning coals became Kavi. Over and above these three radiances, other radiances also originated from the sacrificial fire. From the Marīcis

(rays) of the fire Marīci the father of Kaśyapa was born. From the Kuśa-grass spread on the floor of the hall of sacrifice, the Bālakhilyas were born. Atri also was born from the Kuśa-grass. The noble hermits called Vaikhānasas, who have grown powerful by penance and became the seat of all good qualities, were born from the sacrificial ashes. From the stream of fire which are the eyes of the sacrificial fire the handsome Aśvins were born. The rest of the Prajāpatis were born from the ears of the fire. From the pores of the skin of fire were born the hermits, from the sweat the 'chandas' (metre of Vedas) and from might, the mind. For this reason the Vedic scholars and knowers of the Śruti and those who see the superiority of Vedas, say that fire is a combination of all the gods. The trees that feed the fire are called Māsas (months), the sap of the tree is called Pakṣa (half of the month i.e. full moon to new moon and new moon to full moon), the pith of the tree is called night and day and the flames are called Muhūrtas (auspicious moments). Rudras were born from the blood of fire and the golden coloured gods, the Maitras, also were born from the blood of fire. From the smoke of the fire, the Vasus, from the flame of the fire Rudras and the Ādityas of the extreme radiance were born. The planets and stars which stand in their places in the sky are the charcoal of the fire. Brahmā declared that fire was Brahmā the supreme spirit, eternal and the giver of all wishes. The sinless Mahādeva, who was in the form of Varuṇa said, "This sacrificial fire is mine, and I am the sacrificer. So the children born as the first fruit of this sacrifice are mine. So Bhṛgu, Aṅgiras and Kavi are my sons, no doubt. Let everybody who moves along the sky know that these three are my sons, the fruit of my sacrifice." Agni said, "These are born from my organs. They had been depending on me for their sustenance. So they are my sons." Brahmā the teacher of all the worlds and the grandfather of all living beings said, "They are my sons. I offered my sperm to the fire, and these sons were born therefrom. How can they be claimed by anybody else ? Here, I am the utterer of the spell and the offerer of the sperm. I am the owner of the sperm. Am I not the owner of the fruit ? There is no contest on the point that the birth of Bhṛgu and others is from the oblation of my sperm." The Gods who heard these arguments bowed their heads before Brahmā and greeting him said, "Lord Brahmā, It is not only us that are born from you, but the entire world of living and non-living is born from you. So let Agni and Deva in the shape of Varuṇa have their wishes."

12) Brahmā and the giantess Karkkaṭī. In days of old, a ferocious giantess named Karkkaṭī lived on the northern side of the Himālayas. Because of the hugeness of her body and the scarcity of food she became famished. She began to do penance for the alleviation of her hunger and thirst. She stood on one leg in the Himālaya Mountain, fixing her eyes on the sun in the day and on the Moon in the night, and the severe penance continued for a thousand years. Then Brahmā appeared before her and told her that she could ask for any boon. She said "I wish to become a Sūcī (Needle) as hard as iron, having the form of disease. This is the boon I pray for, Brahmā". Brahmā blessed her and said, "Let it be so, my daughter, you shall be a sūcikā (needle) with the prefix 'V' that is Viśūcikā (Spasmodic cholera) You can eat those who eat stale food, those who are wicked, those who sit in places where they ought not to sit and those who are hard-hearted. Enter into their bodies and affect their hearts, spleens and life-breaths. Thus carry out the work of destruction ? You can affect both the good and the bad. But good people should not be killed. So to save them from death, you can use this mantra (spell).

"oṁ, hrāṁ, hrīṁ, śrīṁ, śāṁ, viṣṇuśaktaye, namaḥ; bhagavati viṣṇuśakti ehi, enāṁ hara hara: dehe hana hana ? paca paca ! matha matha : utsādaya utsādaya : dūre kuru kuru svāhā—viṣūcike ! tvaṁ himavantaṁ gaccha ? jīvasaraḥ candramaṇḍalaṁ gatāsi svāhā."

Saying these words Brahmā disappeared. Karkkaṭī made her body smaller and smaller and finally assumed the shape of a needle. After that she began her work by entering the body of those who had lost their energy because of illness, in the form of a needle of gout and caused Cholera, and the body of those who were lean and worn and weary, in the form of internal cholera. Thus assuming two bodies and killing countless people she travelled for a long time in the earth and the sky, until she herself felt aversion to her work. When she remembered her original form she loathed the needle-form. Karkkaṭī again went to the vicinity of the Himālayas and began to do penance, which lasted for another thousand years. Thus she became pure and by the power of thinking, she acquired spiritual knowledge. Then she wanted to be saved from the mirage of birth and death, to attain which, she did penance for yet another thousand years at the end of which, the highly pleased Brahmā appeared before her and said, "daughter Karkkaṭī, all the darkness is erased from your heart and you have attained deliverance from delusion. Now I will bless you according to your wish. Receive your original body and walk about in the worlds eating the ignorant, bad beginners, the imprudent, those who sit in bad places and dwell in bad places."

She became a giantess again, but as she had attained purity of soul, she engaged herself in deep meditation which was free from doubt. The meditation lasted for a long time. Finally her mind waved. Then she remembered about worldly things and felt hunger. She remembered, "Brahmā has ordained the wicked as my food. So I shall seek them." Thinking thus she went to a jungle in the vicinity of the Himālayas. That was the dwelling place of foresters. In that dark night the King and the minister of the foresters approached the place where Karkkaṭī sat. Karkkaṭī seeing them thought, "let me know first if they are good or bad." So she decided to ask them some questions.

She asked them in a voice like thunder. "Who are you ? Are you enlightened sages or ignorant fools ? say quickly." The king of the foresters hearing this replied in a cynical way. "You insignificant ghost ? What is your form ? Where do you sit ? Let us see your powerless body. Who is there to fear at your sound which is like the humming of a she-beetle ?"

Hearing this reply Karkkaṭī showed her tusks and laughed loud, to spread light, and to terrify them. They heard the loud roaring sound of her laugh and saw her huge form in the light. But those mighty heroes were not at all shaken by the sound they heard or the sight they witnessed. The Minister looked at her and said, "Hei, Giantess ? These delusions of yours will have no effect on us. Even if a number of mosquitoes like you come before us, they will be only dry leaves before wind. You are acting like this merely for food. So what is your need? Tell us, we will satisfy you".

Hearing the words of the minister Karkkaṭī knew that her might was useless before such valiant men. She thought them to be sages. So she said "Hey mighty heroes. Who are you? Tell me the truth". The minister said: "This the King of foresters and I am his minister. We came for a night-walk to find out and punish wicked people like you."

The giantess appreciated them and said: "I am about to put some questions to you. If you give me suitable answers you will be saved." The King agreed. The questions put by her are given below in the order they were asked:—

1) Inside what atom which is unit and multiple at the same time, do the lakhs of universes originate and vanish as bubbles in a sea?

2) What does shine as ether and non-ether?

3) What is it that is something and nothing?

4) What is it that is going and not going at the same time?

5) What is it that has taken form from voidness?

6) What is it that is moving and at the same time stationary as a rock?

7) Who draws pictures in clear sky?

8) In what seed do the worlds exist as a big tree in its seed?

9) From what substance can the living and non-living things in the worlds, not be separated as the foam and waves cannot be separated from the ocean?

10) What substance is dualism not separate from (others) as fluidity from water?

The reply given by the minister to each question is given below in the order of the questions.

1) Hey, Giantess: All the questions you have put before us encased in figurative words discernible only to the Vedic sages, are concerned with the supreme Being. The atom is the supreme Spirit which is beyond all knowledge of the mind and the senses. As it is without organs of action it is as unmanifested as the sky. And inside that supreme atom which could be felt only by the mind, crores and crores of bubbles of universes originate and vanish due to frailty.

2) The impersonal Supreme Being, having no substance, pervades everything. This Supreme Being, Brahman, is pure knowledge (Jñānasvarūpa). It is the sky and the non-sky.

3) As it is indescribable the Impersonal Supreme Spirit is nothing, but as it is a reality it is something.

4) As it pervades everything accessible, the Impersonal Supreme Spirit has the quality of motion. But as it has no emotions and as there exists no space beyond, it is motionless.

5) As it is inaccessible to others the Supreme Spirit is having no existence, but as it is the essence of everything that is good, it has existence.

6) The Supreme Spirit is the radiance of motion or activity and as there is nothing else to be found out, that is, as it doesn't know anything else it is as rigid as a rock.

7) In the clear sky the Supreme Spirit draws the pictures of the universe.

8) Exists in the Supreme Atom.

9) As the entire visible world cannot be separated from the Supreme Spirit nothing is other than the Impersonal Supreme Spirit.

10) The differentiations of the various worlds are mere appearances of the Supreme Spirit and so dualism is of the same figure.

The King drew Karkkaṭī nearer to the Impersonal Supreme Spirit. He advised her not to commit slaughter. She accepted the advice. The King asked her to come to his palace assuming the form of a beautiful woman. She asked, what could he offer to a giantess as food. The King said: "You good woman, we shall find out a way for that. You change yourself to a beautiful woman wearing golden ornaments and stay in my palace for a while. I shall arrange to gather sinners, robbers and such other wicked people who are to be given capital punishment, in thousands from various places, and shall give them to you. You can take your original form and take them all to the peaks of the Himalaya and feed on them.

Gluttonous people like to eat in solitude. After having eaten sumptuously, take some sleep, and a little rest in meditation. When you wake up you come again and take away people destined to be killed. The slaughter done for the sake of righteousness is not a sin. It is said to be equal to mercy. When your desire for meditation is over you must come to me. If an attachment of love is formed even with bad persons it is difficult to break the love."

Karkkaṭī obeyed the King. They all reached the palace. Within six days three thousand wicked persons, who were sentenced to death, were brought before the King, from his own country and the various dependent countries, and were given to Karkkaṭī. In the night she took her original form, gathered all the wicked people, who deserved killing and bidding good bye to the King, went to the Peaks of the Himālayas. (Jñānavāsiṣṭha).

13) Brahmā and Haindavas. At the end of the day of Brahmā there was the great flood, and destroying all the heavens, Brahmā went to sleep. He woke up next morning and after the usual morning ablutions, prepared for creation. He looked around at the sky, and saw some heavens still engaged in usual activities. He was amazed at this unusual occurrence. Ten Brahmās and the countless devas (gods) under them were doing their routine work. Brahmā stared at the worlds for a long time thinking "How is it". Then he by his divine power caused one of the suns, working in a heaven, to come to him, and asked him. "Who are you, shining one? How have these worlds come into existence?"

The Sun said with humility. "Your sons Marīci and others erected a beautiful shed called Suvarṇataṭam, in a corner of Jaṁbudvīpa in the valley below Kailāsa. A Brāhmaṇa named Indu arose from that hall. The Brahmāṇa who was a Vedic scholar, righteous and peaceful, led the life of a house-holder with his wife for a long time. But they were childless. So they went to Kailāsa and did penance to get children. They entered a natural arbour which was quite silent and began severe penance. Śiva appeared and said that they would get children.

In course of time, ten sons were born to them. After a long time, when the sons had reached manhood the old parents died. The sons felt very sorry. They regarded life as short and full of woe and misery. So they went for penance, as they had no relatives left to care for them. They abstained from all the pleasures of the world and reached Kailāsa. They began to meditate upon the shortness of life. "What is there which is noble in this world? Is there anything except woe and misery? How simple is the desire of man for greatness? One thinks himself prosperous if he becomes a house-holder. The head of the village is more prosperous than a house-holder. The King of a dependent state is more powerful than the head of a village. An independent king is far more prosperous than a dependent King. When we think of the state of an emperor how simple is an independent king! When compared with Indra, the Lord of the three worlds what is an emperor after all? But there is nothing glorious in the state of Indra also as it ends in a Brahmamuhūrtta (a period in the life of Brahmā). So what is there substantial and eternal? "Brahmā alone is eternal and indestructible." said the eldest brother. "Concentrate your mind and say to yourself, 'I am the supreme Being Brahmā seated on a lotus', and meditate upon it and pray for it and knowledge of Brahmā will be conferred upon you." They understood this and thus the ten brothers became Brahmās. There are ten heavens of them. They are ten worlds in the sky of mind. I am the sun who creates day and night in one of them," saying thus the Sun went away. Brahmā commenced his activity. (Jñānavāsiṣṭha).

14) The age of Brahmā. Forty-three crores twenty lacs of human years is one four-yuga period called 'Devacaturyuga' (a period of four yugas of the devas or gods). One thousand deva caturyugas will make one Mahāyuga (great yuga) A Mahāyuga is a day time of Brahmā. During the period of one Mahāyuga, that is, during one day of Brahmā, fourteen Manus, one after another, help Brahmā in doing the work of creation. This is the time of the seventh Manu in the present day time (Kalpa) of the present Brahmā. The period of six Manus are over in the present day time of the present Brahmā. Vaivasvata is the present Manu. Brahmā wakes up in the morning—the beginning of a Kalpa. Those which underwent destruction in the night, are created again in the morning. As Brahmā wakes up daily in the morning, what are the things created before, which do not undergo destruction? At that time there will remain, without destruction, six or twentyfour tattvas (principles) which are natural creations. These twenty-four principles are not the creation of Brahmā. He who is beyond names, He who created Brahmā in the lotus flower, created them. Brahmā who was originated in the lotus which grew from the nave of Nārāyaṇa performs the work of creation guided by these twentyfour principles. The work of creation performed by Brahmā is called Pratisarga (substitute creation). Everything Brahmā created in the day time will be destroyed in the evening. After a day time is over there is the night time and sleep for Brahmā. The life of Brahmā is hundred years, that is thirty-six thousand Brahmā days and and Brahmā nights. At the expiry of this period the life of Brahmā will come to an end, and will dissolve in Nārāyaṇa. Thus crores and crores of Brahmās have appeared and passed away and in future also crores will appear and pass away. (Bhāgavata).

15) The creations and substitute creations of Brahmā. The creations performed by Brahmā are of two kinds. The first is Sarga or creation and the second is Pratisarga or substitute creation. In the first Kalpa when a Brahmā is born from the lotus, certain creations are made and the things thus originated do not undergo destruction in the evening or at the end of the Kalpa. They are the sarga or creation. On that day and every day of the life of Brahmā they help Brahmā in the work of creation. In a sense they could be called Prajāpatis (the lords of emanation). But as most of them have not left sons, and for other reasons also, they are not well known by that name. Only the persons mentioned here have as long a life as that of Brahmā. The Sanakas, Karddama, Marīci, Atri, Aṅgiras, Pulastya, Pulaha, Kratu, Bhṛgu, Vasiṣṭha, Dakṣa, Nārada, Dharma, Adharma, Nirṛti, Sarasvatī, Kāma, Atharva, the Manes, Agni, Sthāṇu, and Svāyaṁbhuva: these do not end at the end of a Brahmā's day (or Kalpa) and will be dissolved only when Brahmā is dissolved. A Brahmā creates in his first morning not only persons from Sanaka to Svāyaṁbhuva, but also creations which have a history only up to the end of that day, such as the lokas (worlds) of Bhūloka, Bhuvarloka and Svarloka, and minerals, plants, animals, humanity etc. Sarga or creation is called Prākṛta Sṛṣṭi (natural creation). Pratisarga or substitute creation is called Aprākṛta Sṛṣṭi or unnatural creation. At the end of the Kalpa, Saṁvarttakāgni (Fire which destroys the universe) and Saṁvarttaka varṣā (Rain which destroys the universe) will occur and all the unnatural creations will be destroyed. In all the morning, following the first morning of a Brahmā substitute creation takes place, and they are destroyed at the end of each Kalpa by Saṁvarttakāgni and Saṁvarttakavarṣā. (Bhāgavata).

(49) Brahmā granted a boon to Surabhi. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 83, Stanza 36).
(50) Brahmā originated the Prajāpatis by offering his sperm into the sacrificial fire at the sacrifice of Varuṇa. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 85, Stanza 99).
(51) Once Brahmā gave the devas (gods), Ṛṣis (hermits) and the Nāgas (serpents) the ekākṣaramantra (the one-syllable-spell) 'OM'. (M.B. Aśvamedha Parva, Chapter 26, Stanza 8)
(52) In almost all the Purāṇas Brahmā is called 'Caturmukha' (having four faces) and to substantiate this the following story is given in the Matsyapurāṇa. Brahmā created Śatarūpā with half the portion of his body, and accepted that bright and beautiful woman as his wife. He could not bear his beautiful wife to be away from his sight even for a moment. So much had he become attached to her.

One day Śatarūpā was walking round Brahmā. The daughters born from his mind also were seated close by. So he could not turn round and round and look at his wife as she was moving. To solve this problem, in place of one face, there arose four faces.

Once Śatarūpā was walking in the air. To see her at that time there arose a fifth head on the top of his matted hair. It is this face that was plucked off by Śiva.

(53) Various stories occur in the purāṇas regarding how Śiva plucked off the fifth head of Brahmā. They are given below.

(1) Once Brahmā praised Śiva and pleased him and asked him to become his son. Śiva did not like it. He got angry and cursed, "I shall become your son. But I will pluck off your fifth head."

(2) In the beginning Brahmā created the incarnation of Śiva, called Nīlalohita also, along with the creation of worlds and everything in it. In later creations Brahmā did not think of Nīlalohita. Seeing Brahmā carrying on the work of creation forgetting him, Nīlalohita got angry and cursed Brahmā, "Your fifth head will shortly be destroyed."

(3) After Brahmā became five-faced the brightness of the devas began to decrease day by day. Seeing this the conceited Brahmā said to Śiva: "I am the first who got existence in this world. So by all means I am the eldest." Hearing this Śiva got angry and plucked off the fifth head of Brahmā and threw it away. (Matsyapurāṇa, 183, 84-86).

When the fifth head was gone, the rest of the heads were benumbed. The sweat which flowed from them was thrown into the earth by Brahmā. Out of it came out a horrible monster, which began to chase Śiva, who caught hold of it and gave it to Viṣṇu. (Skanda, 5, 13, 4).

(4) In the Śiva-Rudra collections a story occurs about the quarrel between Śiva and Brahmā.

Once Brahmā fell in love with Satī the wife of Śiva; coming to know of this Śiva tried to kill Brahmā. Mahāviṣṇu tried to pacify Śiva, but it was of no avail. Śiva took away the fifth head of Brahmā and made him ugly, and consequently Brahmā became invincible in the world.

(5) Once Śiva showed his daughter Sandhyā to Brahmā who grew lustful instantly; Śiva insulted Brahmā by showing this ill-owned passion of his to his sons (Brahmā's sons). As a revenge Brahmā created Satī and insulted Śiva through Dakṣa. (Skanda, 2, 2, 26).

17) Various names of Brahmā and their meanings: In Amarakośa, the following names are given to Brahmā.

"Brahmātmabhūḥ surajyeṣṭhaḥ
Parameṣṭhī pitāmahaḥ /
Hiraṇyagarbho lokeśaḥ
Svayambhūścaturānanaḥ //
Dhātābjayonir druhiṇo
Virañciḥ kamalāsanaḥ /
Sraṣṭā prajāpatir vedhā
Vidhātā viśvasṛṭvidhiḥ //
Nābhijanmāṇḍajaḥ pūrvo nidhanaḥ kamalodbhavaḥ /
Sadānando rajomūrtiḥ
Sattyako haṁsavāhanaḥ //

Brahmā—he who increases.
Ātmabhū—born of his own accord or born of the Supreme Spirit.
Surajyeṣṭha—he who came into being before all the suras (gods).
Parameṣṭhin—he who dwells in the world of truth or Parama.
Pitāmaha—grandfather of the manes such as Aryamā and others.
Hiraṇyagarbha—having the golden egg (mundane egg) in womb.
Lokeśa—the god of the worlds.
Svayambhū—who is born of himself.
Caturānana—who has four faces.
Dhātā—who holds or bears everything.
Abjayoni—born of lotus. (abja)
Druhiṇa—who hurts asuras.
Virañci—he who creates.
Kamalāsana—who sits on lotus.
Sṛṣṭā—he who creates.
Prajāpati—Pati of prajās (Lord of progeny).
Vedhā—he who creates.
Vidhātā—he who does.
Viśvasṛṭ—who creates the world.
Vidhi—he who does or decides or judges.
Nābhijanmā—born from the nave of Viṣṇu.
Aṇḍaja—born from the egg.
Haṁsavāhana—who has swan as his conveyance.

BRAHMA. See Parabrahma.

BRĀHMA. A kind of marriage. The bride is adorned with all kinds of ornaments and is taken to bridegroom; and given to him as wife. This is called Brāhma marriage. Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 73, Stanza 8 states that this mode of marriage was allowed to all the four castes of ancient Bhārata.

BRAHMABALI. An individual of a dynasty of teachers. (See Guruparamparā).

BRAHMACĀRI I. See Brahmacarya.

BRAHMACĀRI II. A devagandharva (a class of Gods) born to Kaśyapaprajāpati of his wife Pṛthā. He took part in the Birth festival of Arjuna. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapters 65 and 122).

BRAHMACARYA. In ancient India an ideal life was considered to pass through four stages, and Brahmacarya is one of the stages of life. The four stages are Brahmacarya (Vedic student vowed to chastity), Gārhasthya (married householder), Vānaprastha (forest hermit) and Sannyāsa (an ascetic who has renounced the world). Brahmacarya, the first stage of the four is considered as the period of education. The rules and conduct of a Brahmacārī are given in Manusmṛti, Chapter 2.

The brahmacārī who lives with the teacher has to obey certain rules and principles. He should bathe in the river at sun-rise and offer oblations to gods and manes. A brahmacārī has to abstain from using honey, meat, fragrance, flowers, flower of chrysanthemum (Ind.) women, curd, milk, ghee, churned-curd, slaughter, bath applying oil, anointing the eyes with collyrium, sandals, umbrella, lust, anger, covetousness, dance, music, gambling, slander, ridicule, falsehood, and causing injury to others. A Brahmacārī should go to bed alone. Semen should not be made to discharge through lust. If seminal discharge occurs in dream he should take bath early in the morning and worship the Sun, pronouncing the mantra or spell 'Punaḥ' thrice. The Brahmacārī should live on alms. It is the duty of the brahmacārī to bring water, flower for oblation, cowdung, soil and darbha (grass) for the teacher. He should receive alms only from the houses of those who believe in the Vedas and sacrifices. He should not go to the house of his teacher or his heirs and their families for alms. Provided there are no other houses he may receive alms from the houses of his teacher's relatives and in the absence of such houses he may approach the houses of heirs to his teacher and in the absence of such houses he may receive alms from the house of the teacher. He should fetch 'Camata' (fuel chiefly from butea frondosa) from a place of purity in the forest, as instructed in rules and dry it in the sun ; in the absence of which it may be got dried in a sheltered place. This fuel should be put in the sacrificial fire in the mornings, at noons, and in the evenings. If a healthy Brahmacārī fails in doing his duties consecutively for seven days it will be considered that his vow of Brahmacarya is broken and then he will have to take the vow of 'Avakīrṇi' again. Without waiting for the order of the teacher, the Brahmacārī (student) should engage himself in devotion and meditation and in the service of the teacher daily. When the student is before the teacher he should stand with folded hands controlling his body, speech, brains, sensitive organs, and mind. Only when he is asked to sit, should he do so before the teacher, covering the portions of his body, which are to be covered, with clothes. He should rise up in the morning before his teacher wakes up, and go to bed only after the teacher has retired for sleep. When his teacher calls him, he should not give reply lying, sitting, walking, eating or looking in the opposite direction. He should not gainsay the teacher. The student should attend to the orders of the teacher and comply with them, sitting if the teacher is sitting, standing if the teacher is standing, standing back if the teacher is advancing towards him, running behind if he is walking, standing close by when he is facing the opposite direction, folding his limbs when the teacher is lying or sitting near. The student should have his seat and bed one step lower than those of his teacher. The student should not sit in a careless manner in places where the teacher's eyes could reach. He should not utter the name of his teacher. If anybody speaks ill of his teacher he should close his ears and run away from the spot. If a Brahmacārī scoffs his teacher, he will be born as a donkey, and as a dog if he scorns him, and as a worm if he steals the wealth of his teacher and as a beetle if he becomes jealous at the greatness of his teacher. When the teacher is angry the brahmacārī should not go near him. The Brahmacārī should not speak unasked. A Brahmacārī could sit with his teacher only when they are in a vehicle, or on a camel or in a tower or on the steps or on rocks or in a boat. He should consider the teacher of his teacher as his teacher. He should not address his parents who visit the house of the teacher, without the permission of his teacher. He should respect learned men, holymen, sons of the teacher and those who are born of his family, as a teacher. If the wife of the teacher is of the caste of the teacher, the brahmacārī should consider her as his teacher. If the wife is not of the same caste the brahmacārī needs only to stand up and make obeisance to her. A brahmacārī should not apply oil to the body of his teacher's wife, wash her, massage her body, and comb her hair. A brahmacārī may either shave his head or grow matted hair. He should never be asleep at sunrise or sunset. For learning Vedas etc. the student should not give the teacher cows, clothes etc. as free gifts beforehand. On completion of education, when the student asks the teacher for permission to get married, he should give the teacher what he demands. A brahmacārī who has fully complied with the rules mentioned above, will attain heaven after his death.

BRAHMADATTA I. A famous king of Kāmpilyapura.

1) Birth. Brahmadatta was born in the family of Bṛhatkṣatra who was a scion of the Solar dynasty. Bṛhatkṣatra begot Suhotra, Suhotra begot Hasti, Hasti begot Ajamīḍha, Ajamīḍha begot Bṛhadiṣu, Bṛhadiṣu begot Bṛhaddhanus, Bṛhaddhanus begot Bṛhaddharmā, Bṛhaddharmā begot Satyajit, Satyajit begot Viśvajit, Viśvajit begot Senājit and Senājit begot Rucira, Rucira begot Pṛthusena, Pṛthusena begot Nīpa, Nīpa begot Para, Para begot Pṛthu, Pṛthu begot Sukṛta, Sukṛta begot Vibhrāja, Vibhrāja begot Aṇuha, and Aṇuha married Kṛtvī, the daughter of hermit Śukra. Brahmadatta was born to Aṇuha by Kṛtvī.

2) Previous birth and kingship. In Padmapurāṇa, Part III, Chapter 10, there is a story stating how the seven sons of Kauśika, a hermit, became fishermen by a curse and how they got absolution and attainment of heaven by offering oblations to the manes. The story is given below. Brahmadatta was the rebirth of Pitṛvartti, one of those seven sons.

In days of old there was a hermit named Kauśika in Kurukṣetra. His seven sons, Śvarūpa, Krodhana, Hiṁsra, Piśuna, Kavi, Vāgduṣṭa and Pitṛvartti were studying under Garga, a teacher. Their deeds were as bad as their names indicated. Their father died. The sons were in want. There was no rain anywhere in the world. These brothers had taken the milking cow of their teacher Garga to the forest for grazing. They decided to kill the cow of their teacher. The youngest of them said, "If we kill the cow we can use it as offerings to the manes, and the sin will not be visited on us." The elder brothers agreed to it. Accordingly Pitṛvartti killed the cow and began sacrifice to the manes. Two of the elder brothers were detailed to give oblations to the devas, and three of them to offer oblations to the manes. One was detailed to be the guest and himself as the sacrificer. Thus remembering the manes the sacrifice was completed with the necessary rituals. In short, those seven hermits got divine power and became daring wicked men and ate the cow of their teacher. They told the teacher that the cow was eaten by a leopard and gave him the calf.

In course of time they all died and were born again as wild men in Daśapura. But because of their offerings to the manes they had retained memory of their previous births. So they fasted in holy baths and discarded their lives before the people. They were born again as deer in the mount of Kālañjara. Because of the power of knowledge and the penance and fast they discarded the body of deer in Prapatana and got rebirth as Cakravāka (ruddy goose) in the lake called Mānasasaras. In this birth their names were Sumanas, Kusuma, Vasu, Citradarśi, Sudarśi, Jñāta and Jñānapāraga, names suitable to their character. Those seven loving brothers were saints by virtue of their harmony with the Supreme spirit. But owing to mental disturbance three of them lost their attainments. Seeing the pleasures that King Aṇuha of Pāñcāla was enjoying by his wealth, vehicles, big army and beautiful women one of the Cakravākas, Pitṛvartti, the devoted Brāhmaṇa, who being loyal to his father had performed sacrifice and given offerings to the manes, desired to become a king. The other two brothers seeing the wealth, glory and power of the two ministers, wished to become ministers. Thus Pitṛvartti was born as the son of Aṇuha with the name Brahmadatta and the other two were born as Puṇḍarīka and Subālaka, sons of the two ministers. Brahmadatta was anointed as King of Pāñcāla in the great city of Kāṁpilya. The King loved his father. He was mighty and powerful. He was regular in performing sacrifices and giving offerings to the manes. He had the attainment of harmony with the supreme spirit. He understood the thought and speech of birds and animals. He married Sannati, the daughter of Sudeva (Devala); she was in her former birth the cow of Garga.

Once as the King was walking in the garden with his wife, he saw two ants. The minute creatures, who were husband and wife were engaged in a petty quarrel. The male one, with loving words, pacified the female one, who instantly came close to her husband and they became happy. The King felt amazed at this conversation of the ants, and he laughed. Because of the attainments of his previous lives, he had the power to understand the language of animals, birds, etc. Seeing the King laughing without any reason the queen Sannati asked him why he laughed. She said that there was no reason whatsoever for the king to laugh just then. The King replied, "Oh, beautiful one ! just now there was a quarrel between a female and a male ant. I heard it, That is why I laughed. There is no other reason." The queen did not believe the King. She thought that the King had been scoffing her. She asked him how he came to understand the language of such creatures. The King could not answer her question. He fasted for seven days. On the seventh day Brahmā appeared before him and told him, "The King will know everything from the words of a Brāhmin, whom he would meet when he goes to walk in the streets."

Brahmadatta returned to the palace and spent the night there. Next morning he started with his wife and ministers, for a walk. When they left the palace they saw an old Brahmin coming towards them. Seeing the king the Brāhmin recited a verse:

"Brāhmaṇas in Kurukṣetra which seven as wild men in Daśapura ?
Stags in Kālañjara, ruddy geese in Mānasa,
Then, are we, now living here".

When the King heard this verse the memory of his former births revived and he fell down in a swoon.

There is a reason why the old Brāhmin recited the verse. The Ruddy geese mentioned before took their next birth as sons of a poor Brāhmin in the same city. They had the memory of their previous births. They were called Dhṛtimān, Sarvadarśi, Vidyācandra and Tapodhika, names suitable to their character. The Brahmin boys decided to go for penance to attain supreme bliss. Then the poor father asked them, "My dear sons, what is this ? You are going away leaving your poor and aged father. Is that dutiful ? The sons replied, "We will tell you a way to earn wealth. You recite to the King, to-morrow morning this verse, which we will teach you now. You will get plenty of wealth." The boys taught their father this verse and then they went to the forest. Their father, the old Brahmin, came to the gate of the palace at Kāṁpilya. The King was Brahmadatta.

There is another story how Brahmadatta became the King of this place. Long ago Aṇuha, the King of Pāñcāla did penance before Brahmā, who appeared before the King and asked him what he desired. The King made his request that he might have a son who should be a mighty hero, a learned man, a great hermit and who could understand the language of all living creatures. Brahmā granted him boon and thus Brahmadatta was born to Aṇuha. It was before this Brahmadatta that the Brāhmaṇa recited his verse and it was that King who swooned and fell down.

The two ministers were Subālaka the son of Bābhravya who was the author of the Kāmaśāstra and Puṇḍarīka the son of Pāñcāla who propagated the science of medicine. They also remembered about their former births and also fell down unconscious. When they recovered the King Brahmadatta and the minister Subala and Puṇḍarīka bemoaned the loss of powers they had attained before by devotion, meditation, penance and sacrifice. They cried, "Fate has made us desirous of the objects of our senses and we have lost our harmony with the Supreme Spirit." They repeated the cry again and again and they spoke about the blessings obtained by offering oblation to their manes. Brahmadatta gave the old Brāhmaṇa plenty of wealth and several villages and sent him fully satisfied. Then he anointed his capable and fully qualified son Viṣvaksena as King and with his retinue retired to Mānasa-saras for penance.

3) A bird as his wife when he was King. When Brahmadatta was the King of Kāṁpilyapura a bird named Tapanīyā become his friend. Her head was purple coloured and body black. By and by this bird became his wife. A daughter named Sarvasenā was born to Brahmadatta by his bird-wife. The King had sons by other wives. Tapanīyā would wash her child and place her in the cradle early in the morning and then go to the forest and fly about in the air. She would return in the evening and tell the King news all over the world. It went on like this for a long time.

Once, when there was nobody in the room a prince took Sarvasenā from the cage and choked her to death. Tapanīyā returned and seeing the dead body of her daughter, waited for a long time. Finally she pecked out the eyes of the prince and flew away into the air. (Harivaṁśa, Chapter 20).

BRAHMADATTA II. Another King who ruled over Kāṁpilya. This King was the son of the hermit Cūli and his wife Somadā, a Gandharva woman whose mother was Ūrmilā. When he was ruling Kāṁpilya, Kuśanābha was the King of Kānyakubja. One hundred beautiful daughters were born to the King Kuśanābha. One day while they were playing in the jungle Vāyubhagavān (wind-god) saw them and grew lustful. But they did not yield to his request. So he got angry and cursed them and they became hump-backed. The King was very sorry. He presented his hundred hunch-backed daughters to King Brahmadatta, who, by his divine power straightened their backs. When they regained their former form they became the wives of Brahmadatta. This story occurs in Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa, Bālakāṇḍa, Sargas 32 & 33.

BRAHMADATTA III. Mention is made in Mahābhārata, Bhaviṣya Parva, Chapter 104, about another Brahmadatta. He was the King of Sālva. Though he had two wives he had no children. Finally by the grace of Śiva two children were born to them. They were called Haṁsa and Ḍibhaka. (For further information see Ḍibhaka).

BRAHMADATTA IV. A king who ruled over the country of Kāśi. One night he saw two swans flying in the air. They were of golden colour. There were a number of swans around them. They seemed like two lightnings in the midst of white clouds. Brahmadatta wished to see them again. His desire increased to such an extent that he had desire for nothing else. He consulted his ministers and made a lake. Every creature which seemed beautiful to him was brought to that place. Hearing this those two swans also came there. By and by he tamed them and asked them how they got the golden colour. The swans said thus : "Oh King! you might have heard of the famous mountain Mandara, which is the field of games of the Devas (gods). At the time of the churning of the milk sea when this mountain was used as churn-drill, Amṛtaṁ (celestial nectar of immortality) touched this mountain. So the flowers, fruits and roots in the vicinity of this mountain got the power of removing death, wrinkles etc. Candracūḍa also will come to this mountain occasionally to play on the top of it and so it became more glorious than the mount Kailāsa. One day while Mahādeva was playing in those gardens he had to leave on an urgent matter concerning Gods. So he left Pārvatī there and went away. Devī began to walk about in those gardens with pangs of separation. Spring season came. The Gaṇas (servants of Śiva) and the maids of Pārvatī attended on her. One day Maṇipuṣpeśvara, a Gaṇa, hankered after Candralekhā, daughter of Jayā. She had been engaged in fanning Pārvatī. Both were young and their figures suited each other. Candralekhā reciprocated his love. Understanding this Piṅgeśvara and Guheśvara, two gaṇas looked at each other and smiled. Seeing this Devī looked round with anger to see what caused them to smile. They squinted their eyes and showed Maṇipuṣpeśvara and Candralekhā to Devī. Because of separation she had been much worried, weary and sad. So all these affairs made her angry. She said : "It is good that you behave like this when I am in this plight ! The two are making love. Seeing that, you are laughing. May these two dotards be born on the earth and become husband and wife there. Let you two who laughed before me without humility also be born on the earth, first as poor Brāhmaṇas, and then as Brahmarakṣas (demon friends), outcasts, robbers, dogs with tails cut off and finally as various kind of birds." Thus she cursed the four of gaṇas. Then a gaṇa named Dhūrjaṭa said to Pārvatī : "Devī, this is unfortunate. They have not commited any severe crime." Devī got angry at him and cursed him too: "May you also be born on the earth as a human being." After this Jaya the loved maid of Pārvatī requested her for absolution from curse, for all. The Devī said that all of them would get absolution at the place of penance of Brahmā and other gods and would return here. Of these, Candralekhā and her husband and Dhūrjaṭa would be happy on the earth. The two others would lead a miserable life on the earth." (Kathāsaritsāgara, Padmāvatīlaṁbaka, Taraṅga 1).

BRAHMADEVA. A warrior who fought on the side of the Pāṇḍavas against the Kauravas in the battle of Mahābhārata. His duty was to protect the army in the rear. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 196, Stanza 25).

BRAHMĀDUMBARA. A holy place in Kurukṣetra. In Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 83, Stanza 71, it is said that this place is auspicious to Brahmā.

BRAHMAHATYĀ. Killing a Brāhmaṇa is called Brahmahatyā. In ancient India killing a Brāhmin was considered to be a great sin. He, who committed this sin had to build a hut in the forest and live there for a period of twelve years, or make an alms-pot called 'Śivaśirodhvaja' and wander about begging alms, to purify his soul, or else to attempt to jump into a blazing fire thrice with bowed head, or perform one of the three sacrifices Aśvamedha, Svarjit or Gosava. If none of these was possible, he had to give all the wealth he had to Brāhmins well-versed in Vedas, as gift. It is mentioned in Agnipurāṇa, Chapter 169, that if any of the vows mentioned above was performed he would be absolved from the sin of Brahmahatyā.

BRAHMAJIT. A son of Kālanemi. (Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa 35:38).

BRAHMAMEDHYĀ. A river, famous in the Purāṇas. Mention is made about this river in Mahābhārata Bhīṣmaparva, Chapter 9, Stanza 32.

BRĀHMAMUHŪRTA. The period of forty-eight minutes before the sunrise is called Brāhmamuhūrta. The deity of this period is Brahmā. In Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 155, it is instructed that one should wake up at this period and engage in prayer and meditation.

BRĀHMAṆA. (BRĀHMIN).

(1) Origin. Brāhmaṇas, Kṣatriyas, Vaiśyas, and Śūdras are the caturvarṇas or the four castes. The Purāṇas say that the four castes originated from different parts of the body of Brahmā. See Manusmṛti, Chapter 1, Stanza 87

"Sarvasyāsya tu sargasya
Guptyarthaṁ sa mahādyutiḥ
Mukhabāhūrūpajjānāṁ
Pṛthakkarmāṇyakalpayat.

(With a view to sustain the world, Brahmā ordered activities, for the four castes (Brāhmaṇa Kṣatriya, Vaiśya, and Śūdra) who were born from his face, arms, thighs and feet). From this statement it is seen that the Brāhmaṇas were born from the face, Kṣatriyas from the arms, Vaiśyas from the thighs and Śūdras from the feet of Brahmā.

2) The activities of a Brāhmaṇa. The duties of a Brāhmaṇa are, performing sacrifice, and encouraging others to perform sacrifice, learning Vedas and teaching Vedas, giving gifts and getting remuneration. A Brāhmaṇa has two births in one life. Till the time of investiture with the sacred string is one birth and from that period onwards is the second birth. So a Brāhmaṇa is called 'dvija' or twice-born.

The Brāhmaṇas were allowed to do the works of agriculture, keeping cows, trade and commerce and Kusīda (money-lending). Living on the interest of money giving out as loan is Kusīda. But they should not trade on products from cow, jaggery, salt, lac and flesh. The suffix 'Śarmā' should be added to the name of Brāhmaṇa. A Brāhmaṇa can have four wives.

BRĀHMAṆA(M). See Veda.

BRAHMĀṆḌA. The word Brahmāṇḍa means the aṇḍa of Brahmā (aṇḍa-egg), the Supreme Being which is the root of the origin of the universe. At a time long ago, which is beyond reckoning, there was nothing but an egg. This egg was split into two and from it a male child with the radiance of innumerable suns came out. This wonderful child was helpless. After his birth he cried for a while, because of hunger and thirst. He got no help. There was nobody to feed it. So this wonderful child looked up and lay there. This helpless child was called 'Virāṭpuruṣa' (the next emanation from Brahmā) by those versed in the Purāṇas. The boy was so called because he was the most material of materiality. But he was an atom of atoms and the first figuration of God. From each pore of the skin of the great virāṭ, who was the base of all the worlds a universe came into being. Thus all the countless universes were born. Each universe has its own trinity of Brahmā, Viṣṇu, Śiva and devas (the bright ones), the protectors of the eight zones. One universe comprises fourteen worlds or realms, from Pātāla to the Brahmaloka (from the nether world to the upper world or the realm of Brahmā). Countless such universes exist. Over and above all these universes there is Vaikuṇṭha, and above Vaikuṇṭha there is another world with an area of fifty crore yojanas (leagues), called 'Goloka' (the world of cow). Only the two worlds Vaikuṇṭha and the Goloka are eternal. Bhūloka (the earth) consists of seven islands and sixty-four peninsulas. There are seven worlds above and seven worlds below. The seven upper worlds are Bhūloka, Bhuvarloka, Svarloka, Janaloka, Tapoloka. Satyaloka and Brahmaloka. Thus a universe consists of fourteen worlds. This is the idea given by the Purāṇas about Brahmāṇḍa. (Devī Bhāgavata, Skandhas 9).

Mention is made, in the Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Aṁśa 2, Chapter 7, about the construction of Brahmāṇḍa.

This Brahmāṇḍa, like the seed of the Kapittha tree (Vitar—the wood-apple), is covered under, above and all around by aṇḍakaṭāha (egg-shell). The aṇḍa (egg) is covered by water ten times the egg in volume. This water-shell is covered by a shell of fire. Around the shell of fire there is the shell of air and the air-shell is covered with ether. Around the shell of ether there is the shell of Egoism of darkness. Over the shell of Egoism there is the shell of glory and the shell of glory is covered by Prakṛti, the Divine Nature. It is immeasurable. Prakṛti contains numberless Brahmāṇḍas. As oil exists in sesame, God pervades the whole universe. This is the connection between Prakṛti and Puruṣa. (The Nature and the Supreme Spirit).

BRAHMĀṆḌAPURĀṆA. One of the eighteen purāṇas. This purāṇa contains a talk by Brahmā about the glory of Brahmāṇḍa. There are twelve thousand verses in this purāṇa. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 272).

BRĀHMAṆIPPĀṬṬU. (Pāṭṭu=song). A performance connected with the temples of Kerala.

BRAHMĀÑJALI. When a disciple stands before his teacher he should have both his arms folded. Folding both arms in this way is called Brahmāñjali. (Manusmṛti, Chapter 2).

BRAHMAPRALAYA. See Manvantara.

BRAHMAPURĀṆA, (BRĀHMAPURĀṆA). This is a great book of twenty-five thousand verses taught to the great hermit-sage Marīci by Brahmā. It is mentioned in Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 271, that if a copy of this book is taken and offered to a Brahmin on the full moon day of the month of Vaiśākha with cow and water, the giver will attain heaven.

BRAHMAPURĪ. The abode of Brahmā. Brahmapurī is on the summit of Mahāmeru, with an area of fourteen thousand yojanas (leagues). Around this city, at the four sides, (East etc.) and at the four corners (South-East etc.) there are eight towns, very big and beautiful, kept by eight protectors such as Indra and others. The river Gaṅgā which springs from the feet of Mahāviṣṇu wets the whole of Candramaṇḍala (Lunar region), falls down on the Brahmapurī, and dividing itself into four rivers called Sītā, Alakanandā, Cakṣus and Bhadrā flows in four directions. The river Sītā flows through the top of the mountains and passing through the mountain in the east called Bhadrāśva, falls in the Eastern Ocean. The river Alakanandā flows to the south and reaches Bhārata. Then it divides into seven rivers which unite in the ocean. The river Cakṣus passes through the mountains in the west and enters the country called Ketumālavarṣa and then flows into the ocean. The river Bhadrā passes through all the mountains in the north and flows through the north country of the Kurūṣa and falls in the North Ocean. The mountain of Mālyavān in the west and the mountain of Gandhamādana in the east are as long as the mountain of Nīlagiri in the north and the mountain of Niṣadha in the south. Mount Meru shaped like an earring stands in the middle of these four mountains. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Aṁśa 2, Chapter 21).

BRAHMAŚĀLĀ. A holy place. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 87, Stanza 23, that the moment one visits this holy Bath in the river Gaṅges, one would attain heaven.

BRAHMASARAS. A holy place in Dharmāraṇya. If a man fasts in this holy place for one night, he would reach the world of Brahmā. In this holy place there is a peg driven down by Brahmā himself. One who walks round this peg will attain the fruits of performing a Vājapeya yajña (a drinking sacrifice). There is another holy bath of the name Brahmasaras in Gayā. (M. B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 25, Stanza 89).

BRAHMASĀVARṆI. Tenth Manu. (See Manvantara).

BRAHMAŚIRAS. See Brahmāstra.

BRAHMASTHĀNA. A holy place. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 84, Stanza 103, that a person who visits this holy place will get the fruits of performing Aśvamedha yāga. (Horse sacrifice).

BRAHMĀSTRA. This is known by another name Brahmaśirāstra also. This weapon was given to Agastya by Śiva. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 138, Stanza 9, that Agastya gave this weapon to Agniveśa, who gave it to Droṇa and Droṇa gave it to Arjuna and instructed him about the use of it as follows :

"You should never shoot this arrow at man. If it is used against mean people the three worlds would be destroyed. It is said that this weapon has no parallel in the world. Keep this pure, and give ear to what I say. If an enemy, other than human being attacks you, this weapon may be used to kill him in battle."

BRAHMATĪRTHA. A holy place in Kurukṣetra. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 83, Stanza 113, that a non-brāhmaṇa who bathes in this holy place willl attain Brāhmaṇatva. (the state of being a brāhmaṇa).

BRAHMATUṄGA. A mountain. Arjuna dreamt that Śrī Kṛṣṇa and himself went to the presence of Śiva. Brahmatuṅga was a mountain that Arjuna saw on the way in his dream-travel. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 80, Stanza 31).

BRAHMAVAIVARTAPURĀṆA. One of the eighteen Purāṇas. Sāvarṇi Manu taught this Purāṇa to Nārada. The theme of the Purāṇa is the story of Rathandhara. This Purāṇa contains eighteen thousand verses. It is stated in Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 272, that this Purāṇa is good to be given as a gift on the full moonday of the month of Māgha.

BRAHMĀVARTTA. A holy place situated in Kurukṣetra. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 83, Stanza 53, that he who takes a bath in this holy place will go to the world of Brahmā. Manusmṛti, Chapter 2, Stanza 17, refers to this Brahmāvartta. Manu says as follows :

"Sarasvatīdṛṣadvatyor-devanadyoryadantaram /
Taddevanirmitaṁ deśaṁ
Brahmāvarttaṁ pracakṣate. //

"The place between the two rivers Sarasvatī and Dṛṣadvatī is called Brahmāvartta, which was made by the devas."

BRAHMAVEDHYĀ. A river, famous in the Purāṇas. Mention is made about this river in Mahābhārata, Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 9, Stanza 30.

BRAHMAYAJÑA. A special sacrifice to be performed by a Brāhmin only. The rules and rituals of the sacrifice are given below :—

The Brāhmaṇa should rinse his mouth three times. Then he should wipe his mouth twice and face once. Then he should take water in his hand and sprinkle it on his hands and legs, and then sprinkle it on his head, eyes, nose, ears, chest and forehead. After that uttering the name of the place, date, time, star etc. he should say to himself, "I am beginning to perform Brahmayajña." For this he should have to place two darbhas (grass—Poa cynosuroides) in his right hand, three in his left hand, one on the seat, one each on his Brahma-string (sacred string worn by brahmins), hair and legs, and then think of the time, place, etc. and say to himself, "I am about to perform Brahmayajña to please the gods known in the Sūktas (hymns in the Vedas) for the absolution of all my sins." Then recite Gāyatrī (spell) thrice. Then recite the following Vedic mantras or spells, in the order given: Mantras beginning with; "Agnimīle"; "Yadaṅga"; 'Agnirvai'; 'Mahāvratām'; 'Panthā etacca'; 'Saṁhitavidāmaghavat'; 'Mahāvratasya'; "Iṣe tvorjje", "Agna āyāhi" and śannodevīḥ." Then in conformity with the number of letters used, he should recite the grammatic Śutra known as Vṛddhirādaic. (Devī Bhāgavata, Skandha 11).

BRAHMAYONI. A holy place in Kurukṣetra. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 83, Stanza 143 that one who bathes in this holy Bath will attain the world of Brahmā.

BRĀHMAHUTAM. A sacrifice. There are five kinds of sacrifice, known as Āhuta, Huta, Prahuta, Brahmahuta and Prāśita. Āhuta is sacrifice to Brahmā, Huta is sacrifice to devas or Gods, Prahuta is sacrifice to Ghosts, Brahmahuta is sacrifice to man and Prāśita is the sacrifice to the manes. (Manusmṛti, Chapter 3).

BṚBU TAKṢA. A king of the period of the Vedas. He was liberal and interested in architecture and all kinds of construction work. In the Ṛg Veda and Sāṁkhyāyana Śrauta Sūtra mention is made that this king offered plenty of presents to the hermit Bharadvāja.

BṚDHNĀŚVA. A king. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 98, that Agastya once went to this king and begged him for wealth.

BṚHADANTA I. A king of the country known as Ulūka. Once in a battle, Arjuna defeated this King. Thenceforward he was friendly with the Pāṇḍavas. Bṛhadanta offered Arjuna a good deal of costly presents. In the battle of Bhārata, this king fought on the side of the Pāṇḍavas and was killed in the battle. (M.B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 27, Ādi Parva, Chapter 185, Udyoga Parva, Chapter 4; Droṇa Parva, Chapter 23 and Karṇa Parva, Chapter 9).

BṚHADANTA II. Brother of the king Kṣemadhūrti. He fought against the Kauravas and was killed in the battle. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 25; Karṇa Parva Chapter 5).

BṚHADAŚVA I. An ancient hermit. He had much respect for Dharmaputra. It is stated in the Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 52, that Bṛhadaśva went to the forest Kāmyaka with Dharmaputra. Bṛhadaśva narrated the story 'Nalopākhyāna' to Dharmaputra in order to divert his mind from the thought of the loss of his kingdom. When he had finished the story he taught Dharmaputra, the two important spells, Akṣahṛdaya and Aśvaśiras.

BṚHADAŚVA II. A king of the Ikṣvāku dynasty. His father was Śrāvasta. The King Kuvalayāśva was the son of Bṛhada'va. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 122, Stanza 7).

BṚHADĀTMĀ. A king of the Aṅga dynasty. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 278).

BṚHADBALA I. A king in ancient India. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 1, Stanza 237).

BṚHADBALA II. Son of Suba, a King of Gāndhāra. He was present at the Pāñcālī Svayamvara (marriage of Pāñcālī) with his brothers Śakuni and Vṛṣaka. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 185, Stanza 5).

BṚHADBALA III. A king of the country known as Kosala. During his conquest of the East, Bhīmasena defeated this King. This powerful King of Kosala had given fourteen thousand horses for the Rājasūya (imperial inauguration) of Yudhiṣṭhira. He fought with Abhimanyu and Ghaṭotkaca in the battle of Bhārata. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Droṇa Parva, Chapter 40, Stanza 20, that Abhimanyu killed this Bṛhadbala in the battle.

BṚHADBĀLIKĀ. An attendant of Subrahmaṇya. (M.B. Śalya Parva, Chapter 46, Stanza 4).

BṚHADBHĀNU. A fire. A hermit who had acquired great knowledge in Vedas and Vedāṅgas (scriptures) also has this name. (M. B. Vana Parva, Chapter 231, Stanza 8).

BṚHADBHĀSA. See Bṛhadkīrti.

BṚHADBHĀSĀ. A daughter of the Sun. It is mentioned in the Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 221, Stanza 9, that Bṛhadbhāsā was the wife of the Agni (fire) called Bhānu.

BṚHADBRAHMĀ. See Bṛhadkīrti.

BṚHADDHLA I A great King of Kosala. He gave fourteen thousand best horses for the Rājasūya (imperial inauguration) sacrifice performed by Yudhiṣṭhira as present. In the battle of Mahābhārata, Bṛhaddhala sided with the Kauravas and fought against the Pāṇḍavas and was killed in the battle by Abhimanyu. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, 46; 24; Bhāgavata, Skandha 9).

BṚHADDHALA II. The son of Subala, the king of Gāndhāra—Bṛhaddhala attended the Pāñcālī Svayamvara (marriage of Pāñcālī) with his brother Śakuni and Vṛṣaka.

BṚHADDHALA III. A king of the Yādavas. He was the son of Devabhāga, the brother of Vasudeva. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 9).

BṚHADDHALADHVAJA. A hermit who was a leper. It is stated in Brāhma Parva of Bhaviṣya Purāṇa that this hermit recovered from leprosy by Sun-worship.

BṚHADDHVAJA. A Rākṣasa (giant). This giant wandered about stealing the wealth and women of others. One day Bṛhaddhvaja happened to meet with Keśinī, the beautiful wife of king Bhīmakeśa. The lustful giant was about to take her away, when she told him thus :— "I hate my husband very much. So I am ready to come with you, of my own accord."

Taking her in his chariot the giant went to Gaṅgāsāgara saṅgama. When she learned that this place was under the rule of her husband, she died of fear. Being unable to bear separation from Keśinī, the giant also died. As these two had died at the holy place of Gaṅgāsāgara saṅgama, both attained the world of Viṣṇu. (Skanda Purāṇa, Kriyākāṇḍa).

BṚHADDHVANI. A river in India. This river is famous in the Purāṇas. Mention is made about this river in Mahābhārata, Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 9, Stanza 32.

BṚHADGARBHA. Son of emperor Śibi. (For further information about him see Aṣṭaka).

BṚHADGIRI. A person named Yati. He was one of those who were against sacrifice. (For further information see Pṛthuraśmi).

BṚHADGURU. A king in ancient India. Mention is made about this king in Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 1, Stanza 233.

BṚHADIKṢU. A king of the family of Bhārata, (Bhāgavata, Skandha 9).

BṚHADIṢṬHA. A king of the Puru dynasty. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 279).

BṚHADRATHA I. A king. He went to the forest to lead a life of retirement after having installed his eldest son on the throne. He began to do penance in the forest for the attainment of heaven. One day the hermit Śākāyanya appeared before him and told him that he might ask any boon. Accordingly the king said, "Tell me, what eternal Truth is and give me Spiritual knowledge". The hermit complied with his request. (Maitrī Upaniṣad).

BṚHADRATHA II. A king of the Aṅga family. It is stated in Agnipurāṇa, chapter 277 that he was the son of Jayadratha and that Viśvajit was the son of Bṛhadratha. The Lamsuras, a forest tribe of the mountain of Gṛddhrakūṭa, saved this King from the attempt of extermination of the Kṣatriyas by Paraśurāma. (Mahābhārata, Śānti Parva, Chapter 49; Droṇa Parva, Chapters 57 and 62).

BṚHADRATHA III. A king of the Puru dynasty. This Bṛhadratha was one of the seven sons of Girikā. Kuśa, Yadu, Pratyagra, Bala, Matsyakāla and Vīra were the brothers of Bṛhadratha. A son named Kuśāgra was born to Bṛhadratha. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 275).

BṚHADRATHA IV. Son of Uparicara, the king of Cedi. Uparicara made his son Bṛhadratha, king of Magadha. In course of time he became a powerful emperor. This Bṛhadratha was a mighty warrior-king with an army of three akṣauhiṇīs (an akṣauhiṇī is a complete army consisting of 21870 horses and 109350 infantry). Though he had married two daughters of the King of Kāśi he was childless. The sorrowful king went with his wives to a hermit named Caṇḍakauśika and pleased him by giving him precious stones. The King told the hermit about his sorrow due to lack of children. The hermit gave them a mango fruit and said that the King should enthrone the son who would be born by eating the mango, and return to the forest for penance. The hermit gave eight boons for the son who was to be born.

The King and his wives returned to the palace and divided the mango fruit into two and both of his wives ate the fruit and became pregnant. Each of them gave birth to half of a child. The lifeless forms of these half children were thrown out. A giantess called Jarā put them together and instantly the pieces joined together and became a living child. The giantess took that child and made a present of it to the King. That child grew up and was known by the famous name Jarāsandha. From that time onwards Giantess-worship began in Magadha. When Jarāsandha came of age the King anointed him as King and went to the hermitage of Caṇḍakauśika with his wives and began to do penance. After coming to the forest Bṛhadratha killed a giant named Ṛṣabha and with his hide made three Big drums and placed them in the city. The sound of one beat on the drum will last for a month. When Bhīma, Arjuna and Śrī Kṛṣṇa came to Magadha to kill Jarāsandha they broke these drums. (M.B. Ādi Parva, 53; Sabhā Parva, Chapters 17, 19 and 21).

BṚHADRATHA V. A king who lived in a portion of an asura named Śūkṣma. This king was present at Pāñcālī svayambara (marriage of Pāñcālī). (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 67, Stanza 185).

BṚHADRATHA VI. An Agni (fire). As this Agni is the son of Vasiṣṭha he has got the name Vasiṣṭha also. A son named Praṇīti was born to this Agni. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 220).

BṚHADVATĪ. A river in India, purāṇically famous. Mention is made about this river in Mahābhārata, Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 9, Stanza 30.

BṚHADVIṢA. A king of the family of Bhārata. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 9).

BṚHADUKTHA. He was the son of the hermit named Pāñcajanya. He was transformed to a god, who is remembered at the beginning of the sacrifice known as agnihotra. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 22, Stanza 13).

BṚHADDYUMNA. See Arvāvasu.

BṚHAJJYOTI. The son born to Aṅgiras of his wife Śubhā. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 218, Stanza 2).

BṚHAKA. A deva Gandharva. (A class of Gods). It is mentioned in Mahābhārata Ādi Parva, Chapter 122, Stanza 57 that this Gandharva was present at the Birthday celebration of Arjuna.

BṚHANMANAS I. See Bṛhatkīrti.

BṚHANMANAS II. A hermit. This hermit was one of the seven sons born to Aṅgiras of his wife Sumanā. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 208).

BṚHANMANTRA. See Bṛhatkīrti.

BṚHANMEDAS. A king of the Yādavas. He was the son of Vapuṣmān and father of Śrīdeva. (Kūrma Purāṇa, 1 : 24 : 6—10).

BṚHANNALA. The name adopted by Arjuna during the concealment of the Pāṇḍavas in the Kingdom of Virāṭa. (For further information see Arjuna).

BṚHANTA I. A king. Yudhiṣṭhira performed a horse sacrifice. Arjuna was taking the sacrificial horse round, for the conquest of the North when King Bṛhanta opposed him. Arjuna defeated him and brought him under subjugation. He presented Arjuna with a large quantity of precious stones. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 177).

In the battle of Mahābhārata Bṛhanta fought on the side of the Pāṇḍavas, and was killed by Duśśāsana. (M.B. Karṇa Parva, Chapter 4).

BṚHANTA II. A warrior on the side of the Kauravas. He was the brother of Kṣemadhūrti. Bṛhanta was killed in a fight with Sātyaki. (M.B. Karṇa Parva, Chapter 4).

BṚHANTĀ. One of the seven mothers of Subrahmaṇya. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 118, Stanza 10).

BṚHASPATI. The teacher of the devas (Gods).

1) Birth. The father of Bṛhaspati was Aṅgiras, the son of Brahmā. Brahmā grew amorous, at the sight of some celestial maids who were present at a sacrifice performed by Rudra ; and he had seminal flow. Brahmā put the semen in fire. From that fire the devas such as Marīci, Bhṛgu, Aṅgiras and others were born. The name Aṅgiras was given because he was born out of aṅgāra (live-coal). Eight sons were born to Aṅgiras by his wife Vasudā. They were Utathya, Bṛhaspati, Vayasya, Śānti, Ghora, Virūpa, Saṁvarta and Sudhanvā. All of them were sages who had attained oneness with the supreme Spirit by knowledge, and who had been free from worldly pain. Of them Bṛhaspati, Utathya and Saṁvarta became famous through all the worlds. In some purāṇas Vasudā, the mother of Bṛhaspati, is given the name Śraddhā also.

It is stated that Bṛhaspati had a sister named Āṅgirasī. She was a follower of the Brahmā cult. She became the wife of Prabhāsa the last one of the eight Vasus.[1] Viśvakarmā was her son. (Bhāgavata Skandha 4, Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 66).

2) Is Bṛhaspati the son of Agni? In some purāṇas Bṛhaspati is described as the son of Agni. Its authority is given below. Aṅgiras, the father of Bṛhaspati was once doing penance in his hermitage. When the fire of penance increased the brightness of the real fire decreased. Agni (fire) stood before Aṅgiras and said "Oh Lord ! your brightness surpasses mine. From this day onwards you are the real fire. So you shall be the first fire and I will be the fire of Prajāpati which is the second fire."

Because of this boon of Agni, the devas (gods), recognized Aṅgiras also as a fire-god. So in some Purāṇas Bṛhaspati is mentioned as the son of Agni (fire-god). (Bhāgavata, Skandha 4).

3) Teacher of the Devas. The story of how Bṛhaspati became the teacher of the devas, is given in the Bhāṣābhārata, Chapter 76 as shown below :

"The Suras and the asuras (the gods and the demons) became enemies from time immemorial, regarding the possession of wealth and prosperity in the three worlds. To secure victory in the battles the gods made Bṛhaspati their teacher and likewise the asuras made Śukra their teacher."

The devas and asuras began to fight for prosperity and wealth. At that time the devas selected Bṛhaspati and the asuras selected Śukra, as their teacher.

4) The conjugality of Bṛhaspati. Tārā was the wife of Bṛhaspati. She was very beautiful. Seeing Candra's handsome figure she doted on him. There arose several quarrels over this affair. Finally the devas intervened and Tārā was given back to Bṛhaspatī. Budha was born to Candra by Tārā.

The individual called Tāra in the family of the monkeys, was a son of Bṛhaspati. It is mentioned in Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa, Bāla Kāṇḍa, Sarga 17, Stanza 10 as follows, which proves this fact.

"Bṛhaspati begot the mighty monkey Tāra." In the Ṛgveda, Maṇḍala 1, Anuvāka 19, Sūkta 126, it is mentioned that Bṛhaspati had a daughter named Romaśā. When her husband teased her Romaśā said to her husband : "You please come and feel your hand on my body. Don't think that my organs are small. Though I am hairy like the goats of Gāndhāra, I have got all the organs fully grown." This is the statement in the Ṛgveda. In the Uttara Rāmāyaṇa, it is stated that Bṛhaspati had a Brāhmaṇa son named Kuśadhvaja, and that a daughter named Devavatī was born to Kuśadhvaja. Devavatī was born from his mouth while Kuśadhvaja was engaged in devotional recitation of the Vedas. Sītā was the rebirth of this Devavatī. It is stated in the Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 67, Stanza 69, that Droṇa, the son of Bharadvāja, was born from a portion of Bṛhaspati. Kaca was another son of Bṛhaspati. For full particulars of the story how Devayānī (daughter of Śukra) hankered after Kaca, see 'Kaca'. Mention is made in Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 219, Stanza 1, that Bṛhaspati had a wife called Cāndramasī and that she gave birth to six Agnis. In Kampa Rāmāyaṇa, Yuddhakāṇḍa mention is made that Bṛhaspati had a daughter named Sulekhā. Six sons and a daughter were born to Cāndramasī. The six sons were six Agnis (fires) : In sacrifices the burnt offerings and the ghee were the portions meant for the great and mighty fire Śamyu, the son of Bṛhaspati. It is to satisfy this great fire which blazes with numberless pointed tongues, that in sacrifices such as Cāturmāsya, Aśvamedha etc. animals are slaughtered. The daughter of Dharma was the wife of Śaṁyu. The name of the wonderful being (Śamyu's wife) is Satyā. A son named Dīpti and three daughters were born to Śamyu. The son of Dīpti is Bharadvāja who is the recipient of first portion of Ghee oblated in sacrifice. On all full-moon days offerings of sacrifices are meant for Bharata. Bharata had a son named Bhārata and a daughter named Bhāratī. Bharata the Agni is said to be the son of the Agni who is Prajā-

1 It is stated in Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 218 that the mother of Bṛhaspati had another name, Śubhā, and that Bṛhaspati had six more brothers, born later, named Brhatkīrti, Bṛhatjyoti, Bṛhadbrahmā, Bṛhadmanā, Bṛhadmantra, and Bṛhadbhāsa and that Āṅgirasī had the name Bhānumatī also.

pati Bharata. Thus Bharata got the famous name 'the great'. Bharata married Vīrā and a son was born to them called Vīra. This Vīra like Soma is the recipient of sacrificial ghee, according to the belief of the Brāhmaṇas. As this Vīra is the recipient of the second ghee offered in sacrifice, as Soma, he is known by names such as Rathaprabhu, Rathadhvāna and Kumbharetas. Vīra married Sarayū and became the father of Siddhi—Siddhi the Agnidevatā—who is remembered in all fire songs. Fire which has no action on prosperity, fame and vigour has the name Niścyavana. Niścyavana praises the earth. Satya is the son of Niścyavana. Satya which blazes by flame determines time. Satya is known by another name Niṣkṛti. The Agni Svana spreads diseases. The Agnis called Vipulaprabha, Yatātmā and Brahmacāri are invoked in simple domestic sacrifices by Brāhmaṇas. The awful fire Baḍavāgni is supported by life. The sixth son of Bṛhaspati and Tārā is called Śvetakṛt. The oblation offered to this Agni is known as Udadvāra. Svāhā was the daughter of Cāndramasī. Svāhā had three sons. They are three Agnis called Kāmāgni, Amogha, and Ukthya. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 4).

5) Growing amorous on the wife of elder brother. A story stating how Bṛhaspati begot a son by the wife of Utathya is given in Skandha 9 of Bhāgavata. Mamatā, the wife of Utathya, was pregnant. Bṛhaspati had coition with her when her husband was away. The mother and the child in the womb who opposed the act of Bṛhaspati were cursed. Mamatā gave birth to two children. Fearing that her husband might cast her out she left the son of Bṛhaspati in the forest and was about to go, when there was a divine voice from above, "Mūḍhe, Bharadvājamimam bhara dvājaṁ Bṛhaspate." "You senseless woman, bring up this one born of the two. Bṛhaspati, bring up this one born of the two." Hearing this ethereal voice Bṛhaspati took the child and gave him the name Bharadvāja and brought him up. After that the child was given to emperor Bharata. The famous archer Droṇa was the son of this Bharadvāja.

6) Personation of Bṛhaspati. The enmity between the devas and asuras increased day by day. Śukrācārya the teacher of the asuras began to do penance before Śiva in the Himālayas, with a view to get a divine spell or incantation to destroy the devas. The duration of the penance was thousand years. Indra came to know of this secret and sent his daughter Jayantī to get the spell from Śukra by deceit. She stayed with Śukra as his disciple and servant. Thousand years passed by. Śiva appeared before Śukra and gave him the spell, capable of destroying the devas. When he was about to return Jayantī accepted him as her husband. Because of his familiarity with her, of a long standing, he could not refuse her request. Śukra told her that he would become her husband, for a period of ten years and that during that period both of them would be invisible to the world. Thus the couple began an invisible life.

Bṛhaspati thought of making the best use of this period. He personated himself as Śukrācārya and went to the Asuras, who thinking that their teacher had returned after a long penance gave him a loving and sincere welcome. Bṛhaspati sat on the seat of Śukrācārya and began to exhort the asuras in such a manner that within the period of ten years he was able to remove factionalism and hatred from them.

At the expiry of ten years' invisible life Śukra returned having sent Jayantī away. The asuras saw two Śukras together and were amazed. They declared that the real Śukra was he who had been teaching them for the last ten years. Being dismayed at the ingratitude of the asuras he cursed them that they would shortly be destroyed and then left the place. At this juncture Bṛhaspati also assumed his real form and returned to heaven. Thus the asuras became a people without a leader like sheep without a shepherd. At last they approached their teacher Śukra who became their teacher again, when they begged for his pardon. But he said that his curse could not be recalled. But he gave them absolution by saying that they would regain their lost power during the time of Manu Sāvarṇi. (Devī Bhāgavata, Skandha 4).

7) Cursing Rāvaṇa. Once Rāvaṇa was returning haughty and proud after having defeated the devas and conquered heaven, when Sulekhā the daughter of Bṛhaspati, got terrified and ran away to hide herself from him. Rāvaṇa chased her and when she was caught he tried to ravish her. Bṛhaspati got angry and cursed him. "You, who have grown rank by the dart of Cupid, will meet with death by the dart of Rāma". (Kampa Rāmāyaṇa, Yuddha Kāṇḍa).

8) Bṛhaspati and Hanūmān. Añjanā the mother of Hanūmān was a servant of Bṛhaspati in her previous birth. Her name then was Puñjikāsthalī. She once went to fetch water. At that time many Vidyādhara young people, both male and female, came there and engaged in amorous acts. Puñjikāsthalī witnessed these love-scenes for a long time and then returned home. It is mentioned in Kampa Rāmāyaṇa that Bṛhaspati cursed her to be born in the next birth as a female monkey.

Añjanā gave birth to Hanūmān. When he grew up Hanūmān desired to learn Vedas and Śāstras (scriptures). Hanūmān approached Bṛhaspati to learn from him. But Bṛhaspati was not prepared to teach a monkey who jumped about everywhere. The disappointed Hanūmān went to the Sun, who asked him how it could be done by him as he was engaged in travelling without stop. Hanūmān said that he would move in front of the sun always. Thus Hanūmān who had been rejected by Bṛhaspati became the disciple of the Sun. (Uttara Rāmāyaṇa).

9) Other information.

(1) It is mentioned in Devī Bhāgavata, Skandha 1, that Bṛhaspati was the teacher of the hermit Śuka.

(2) In Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 51, it is instructed that Bṛhaspati should be consecrated in temples as wearing a necklace of beads (Elaeo carpus seeds) and a water pot.

(3) Mention is made in the Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 169, Stanza 21 that Bṛhaspati gave Bharadvāja Āgneyāstra (the arrow of fire).

BṚHATSENA I. A king born of the family of Bharata. (Bhāgavata Skandha 9)

BṚHATSENA II. An asura (opponent of gods) born from a portion of Krodhavaśa, a daitya (asura). Lakṣmaṇā, the daughter of Bṛhatsena was one of the wives of Śrī Kṛṣṇa. In the battle of Mahābhārata, Bṛhatsena was on the side of the Kauravas.

BṚHATSENA III. A teacher. It is mentioned in Garuḍa Purāṇa that Nārada had taught Bṛhatsena, Brahmavidyā (theosophy).

BṚHATSENĀ. A female attendant of Damayantī. Mention is made in Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 60, that when Nala was defeated in the game of dice, Damayantī sent Bṛhatsenā to inform the ministers about the defeat of the King.

BṚHATTA I. Another name of the Sun. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 1, Stanza 42).

BṚHATTA II. A king born to Kāleya, an asura. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 67, Stanza 55).

BṚHATTA (M). A song of Sāma (conciliation—one of the four expedients) originated from the head of hermit Pāñcajanya. From the face of this hermit another song of Sāma called Rathantara also originated. These two songs of Sāma are very effective expedients. So they are called Tarasāharas (quickly effective). (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 220, Stanza 7).

BṚHATĪ I. Mother of Cākṣuṣamanu. Two sons, Śiṣṭhi, and Bhavya were born to Dhruva by his wife Śambhu. Succhāyā the wife of Śiṣṭhi gave birth to five sons, Ripu, Ripuñjaya, Vipra, Vṛkala and Vṛkatejas. These sons were sinless. Bṛhatī was the wife of Ripu. Cākṣuṣa Manu was born to Ripu and Bṛhatī. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Aṁśa 1, Chapter 13).

BṚHATĪ II. One of the seven horses of the Sun. The seven horses of Sun are, Gāyatrī, Bṛhatī, Uṣṇik, Jagatī, Triṣṭup, Anuṣṭup and Paṅkti. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Aṁśa 2, Chapter 8).

BṚHATVA. A devagandharva (a class of gods). In the Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 122, mention is made that this gandharva had participated in the birth celebration of Arjuna.

BṚLHAṆA (BILHAṆA). A Sanskrit poet who lived in the 11th Century A.D. Bṛlhaṇa is the author of Vikramāṅkadevacarita, Caurapañcāśikā, Karṇasundarī and such other works. Of these Karṇasundarī is a four-act play. The theme of the play is Kāmadeva the king of the Cālūkyas marrying Karṇasundarī a vidyādhara woman. The King at first sees her in a dream and falls in love with her. She then appears before the King in the guise of a boy. But the intelligent minister recognizes her by her fragrance and introduces her to the King and the King marries her. Bṛlhaṇa had written his dramas on the model of Mālavikāgnimitra, Ratnāvalī and such other dramas.

BUDBUDĀ. A celestial maid. She was the hand-maid of Vargā a celestial beauty. (For further information see Vargā).

BUDHA I. Son of Candra.

1) Birth. Bṛhaspati the teacher-priest of the devas had a very beautiful wife named Tārā. One day seeing the handsome figure of Candra, Tārā became amorous. Candra was the Disciple of Bṛhaspati. It was not right on the part of the wife of the teacher to feel amorous towards a disciple. Bṛhaspati came to know of the affair and sending for Candra asked him to return his wife. Both Candra and Tārā did not pay any heed to Bṛhaspati. Both sides were about to engage in a battle. The devas arrayed themselves on both sides. Seeing that this was not an honourable thing some devas tried for a compromise. Finally Candra returned Tārā to Bṛhaspati. At this time Tārā was pregnant. Both Candra and Bṛhaspati claimed the paternity of the child in the womb of Tārā, who witnessed that Candra was the father of the child. All accepted the words of Tārā. Budha was the child Tārā gave birth to.

2) Marriage and birth of a child. Budha grew up to be a youth. During the period the King Sudyumna one day entered Kumāravana (a forest) and was changed to a woman. When the King became a woman the name adopted was Ilā, who grew amorous of Budha. The famous King Purūravas was the son born to them. (For more information see Ilā, Candra and Purūravas).

3) Other information

(1) Budha wears a necklace of Rudrākṣa beads (Elaeo Carpus Seeds) and has a bow. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 51).

(2) Candra performed the christening ceremony of Budha. (Bhāgavata Skandha 9).

(3) Budha is a luminous member of the assembly of Brahmā. (M.B. Sabha Parva, Chapter 11, Stanza 29).

BUDHA II. A hermit. Once he spoke about the importance of Vānaprastha (retirement in the forest). It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Śānti Parva, Chapter 244, Stanza 17, that this hermit spent the whole of his life in Vānaprastha (retirement in the forest) and at the end he entered heaven.

BUDHA III. A scientist on ethics. He has written a book called Dharmaśāstra on the different kinds of rites of consecration, initiation etc. from formation in the womb till Upanayana (investiture with the Brahmā string), different kinds of marriages, Pañcamahāyajñas (the five essential sacrifices) Śrāddha (offering to the manes), Pākayajña (simple domestic sacrifices), Somayāga (drinking the moon-plant juice at the Soma sacrifice) and such other matters of ethics.

BUDHA IV. A Brāhmaṇa who lived in Gauḍadeśa. Budha who was the incarnation of all vices drank too much and spent a whole night lying unconscious on the veranda of the house of a harlot. His father became anxious about him as he had not returned though the night had advanced much. He searched everywhere and finally came to the place where he was lying unconscious. He reviled the son, who getting angry killed his father then and there.

After that he returned home. His mother advised him to leave off his vices. His wife shed tears before him. Seeing that his mother and wife were impediments on his way, he put an end to their lives.

Once this Brāhmaṇa carried away Sulabhā the beautiful wife of hermit Kālabhūti and ravished her. Sulabhā cursed him and made him a leper.

Budha wandered about and reached the city of King Śūrasena. On that day the King was about to go to Heaven with the entire city by aeroplane. However hard the pilots might try the plane would not move an inch. Then the devas told the King : "Drive away the leper there. The vices of that sinful murderer have made the plane stationary."

Śūrasena who was kind and righteous, neared the leper and cured him with caturākṣarīmantra (a spell of four letters) and got ready to take him also to heaven. (Gaṇeśa Purāṇa 1 : 76).

BUDDHA. The founder of Buddhism. Some consider him to be an incarnation of Viṣṇu. In days of old in a battle the devas were defeated by the asuras and the gods approached Viṣṇu with their grievance. Mahāviṣṇu incarnated as the son of Śuddhodana with the name Gautamabuddha (Siddhārtha). Then he went to the asuras and made them reject the Vedas and the laws thereof. All the Daityas (Asuras) became Buddhists. There is a story in Agnipurāṇa, Chapter 16, that thus it was the purpose of Buddha to convert every asura to Buddhism and send him to hell.

The story given above is in accordance with the Purāṇas. The following are the facts gained by historic investigations.

Gautama Buddha was born in B.C. 560, in Kapilavastu near the Himālayas. His father was Śuddhodana. He was born in the family of the Śākyas. The word 'Śākya' is another form of the word Kṣatriya. The real name of Buddha was Siddhārtha. Śuddhodana brought up his son in such a way that he should not be subjected to any sort of mental pain or worry. So he kept Buddha aloof from the outer world. Thus he spent his childhood in comfort and pleasure. Once by chance he happened to see a sick man, an old man and a dead body. The sight made him thoughtful. He began to think upon a way to remove sorrow and pain from the world and to bring about peace and comfort.

The change that appeared in the son worried the father. So at the age of sixteen he made Siddhārtha marry Yaśodharā. A son was born to them. But the mind of Siddhārtha was restless, distressed and agitated. One day Siddhārtha discarded everything and went out of the palace alone.

Siddhārtha wandered from place to place learning from various teachers. But he did not find peace. Once on a full-moon day while he was sitting in meditation under a banian tree he got 'Bodha'. (insight or conviction). From that day onwards he began to be known by the name 'Buddha'. After that he came to Kāśi, and told his disciples how he got Bodha or conviction. The number of his followers increased day by day. Thus Buddhism came into being. Buddha said that the reason for pain and sorrow in the world was desire and that sorrow could be exterminated only by controlling and overcoming all desire. To attain Eternal Bliss one should be true and righteous in thought, deed and word and that 'Not Killing' was the foundation of righteousness. Buddhism spread everywhere in Bhārata.

Gautama Buddha died at the age of eighty.

BUDDHAGHOṢA. An ancient Sanskrit poet. It is believed that he lived in the 4th century A.D. The most important work of this poet who was a Buddhist, is 'Padyacūḍāmaṇi'. The life of Buddha is described in this Book in ten Kāṇḍas (sections). A similarity to the poems of Kālidāsa and Aśvaghoṣa is seen in this poem. Buddhaghoṣa is said to have reached Ceylon in 357 A.D. and translated some Buddhist literature.

BUDDHI. A wife of Dharmadeva. In Viṣṇu Purāṇa Aṁśa 1, Chapter 7, it is mentioned that Dharmadeva had married thirteen daughters of Dakṣa. They are Śraddhā, Lakṣmī, Dhṛti, Tuṣṭi, Medhā, Puṣṭi, Kriyā, Buddhi, Lajjā, Vapus, Śānti, Siddhī and Kīrti.

BUDDHIKĀMA. An attendant of Śubrahmaṇya. (M.B. Śalya Parva, Chapter 46, Stanza 12).

BUDDHISM. (BUDDHA-MATA). The origin of Buddhism was in the sixth century B.C. This new religion was shaped out of Hinduism that prevailed at that time. Buddhism which had its origin in North India, prevailed everywhere in India up to the eleventh century A.D. During that period there was an overflow of this religion to the other parts of Asia. Now this religion has its full sway over the people of Burma. 90% of the population there, are adherents of Buddhism. 80% of the people of Thailand, 60% of the people in Ceylon and Japan and 17% in China are now Buddhists. In India, Pakistan and the Philippines the Buddhists are only a minority. Even though Indonesia is a Muslim country there is a small class of Buddhists there. Combodia, Lavos and Tibet are considered to be Buddhist countries. In Nepal there are only two religions, Hinduism and Buddhism. In countries outside Asia there are followers of Buddhism. Statistics reveal that there are one hundred and sixty-five thousand Buddhists in North America, one hundred and thirtyfive thousand in South America, and ten thousand in Europe. The number of Buddhists in the world today is 150.31 crores.

C

C. (च) The letter C has two meanings, viz., evil people and pure man.

CAIDYA. Śiśupāla, king of Cedi. Dhṛṣṭaketu, King of Cedi, is also known by this name. It was this Caidya who led the Krauñcavyūha created by Dhṛṣṭadyumna in the great battle. (Krauñcavyūha = A battle array in the shape of a stork). (Śloka 47, Chapter 50, Bhīṣma Parva).

CAITRARATHA. A prince born to King Kuru of his queen Vāhinī (Śloka 50, Chapter 94, Ādi Parva).

CAITRARATHA (M). A forest of purāṇic fame. Once King Yayāti enjoyed sexual acts with the apsaras Viśvācī in this forest. (Śloka 43, Chapter 75, Ādi Parva). It was here in this forest that Pāṇḍu spent some days once with his wives Mādrī and Kuntī. (Śloka 48, Chapter 118, Ādi Parva).

As a support to the great mountain Mahāmeru were four mountains, Mandara, Merumandara, Supārśva and Kumuda. Above each of these was a garden-wood, Nandana, Caitraratha, Vaibhrājaka and Sarvatobhadra. Thus it is to be presumed that Caitraratha was on Merumandara. (Chapter 16, Pañcama Skandha, Bhāgavata).

CAITRARATHA PARVA. A sub-division of Ādi Parva, (See under Mahābhārata).

CAITYAKA. A mountain. This mountain is situated near Girivraja, the capital city of Magadha. This mountain was very dear to the people of Magadha. The followers of Bṛhadratha deemed it as a God and worshipped it. (Chapter 21, Sabhā Parva).

CAKAṬA. (See Brahmadatta II).

CAKRA I. A son of Vāsuki, the Nāga king. He died at the serpent yajña (Sarpa Satra) of Janamejaya by falling into the fire. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 57, Verse 6).

CAKRA II. One of the three attendants given to Subrahmaṇya by Viṣṇu, the other two being Saṅkrama and Atikrama. (Śalya Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 40).

CAKRA III. One of the two attendants presented to Skandhadeva by Tvaṣṭa, the other one being Anucakra. (Śalya Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 40).

CAKRA (M) I. Sudarśana Cakra (disc) of Mahāviṣṇu. The Viṣṇu Purāṇa contains the following story about the origin of the Cakra.

Sūryadeva (the Sun God) married Saṁjñā, daughter of Viśvakarmā. But, due to the insufferable heat of her husband the marital life of Saṁjñā became miserable, and so she requested her father to lessen the heat of Sūrya. And, accordingly Viśvakarmā ground Sūrya on a grinding machine and thus diminished his effulgence. But, the grinding could diminish only 1/8 of that effulgence, which glowing red-hot dropped on the earth, and with that Viśvakarmā made the Sudarśana Cakra, the Triśūla, the Puṣpakavimāna and the weapon called Śakti. Out of those four things the Triśūla came to be possessed by Śiva, the Puṣpakavimāna by Kubera and Śakti by Brahmā. The Sudarśana Cakra which was glowing like anything was deposited in the sea. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Part 3, Chapter 2). There is a story in the Mahābhārata as to how the Cakra thrown into the sea came into the possession of Mahāviṣṇu. While Śrī Kṛṣṇa and Arjuna were picnicing on the shores of the Yamunā Agnideva went to them and requested them to give Khāṇḍava forest to him for food. As Takṣaka, friend of Indra, was living in the forest the latter was causing heavy rains to fall there. Kṛṣṇa and Arjuna realized the fact that Agni would be able to consume the forest only after subjugating Indra. But, how to manage it? Then Agni said that he would supply the weapon to fight Indra with, and accordingly he meditated on Varuṇa, who presented to him (Agni) a chariot and flag with monkey as symbol, a quiver which would never become empty of arrows, a bow called Gāṇḍīva and the Sudarśana Cakra. Agnideva gave the Cakra to Śrī Kṛṣṇa and the other things to Arjuna. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 297).

CAKRA (M) II. A city in ancient India. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 9, Verse 45).

CAKRADEVA. A warrior born in Vṛṣṇi vaṁśa. (Vṛṣṇi dynasty). (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 14, Verse 57).

CAKRADHANUS. A synonym of Kapila maharṣi. (See Kapila).

CAKRADHARA. A very intelligent brahmin. One-eyed and bent down in body he is a character in Vatsarājacarita. (See Vidūṣaka).

CAKRADHARMĀ. Chief of the Vidyādharas. He, with his younger brother is engaged in singing the praise of Kubera. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 10, Verse 27).

CAKRADVĀRA (M). A great mountain. Indra performed a yajña on this mountain. (Śānti Parva, Chapter 4, Verse 185).

CAKRAKA. The son, a Brahmavādin, of Viśvāmitra. (Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 4, Verse 64).

CAKRAMANDA. A nāga (a serpent). It was this nāga which was deputed by Ananta (nāga king) to lead the soul of Balarāma on his death to Pātāla. (Mausala Parva, Chapter 4, Verse 16).

CAKRANEMĪ. A woman attendant of Skandadeva. (Śalya Parva, Chapter 46, Verse 5).

CAKRĀTI. A town in ancient India. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 9, Verse 45).

CAKRAVĀN. A mountain very much extolled in the Purāṇas. When deputing monkeys in quest of Sītā, Sugrīva instructed them to make a special search in Mount Cakravān. It was on this mountain that Viśvakarmā made the Sudarśana Cakra. (Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa, Kiṣkindhā Kāṇḍa, Chapter 42, Verse 16).

CAKRAVYŪHA. A Phalanx.

A particular pattern of army formation on ground. In the Kaurava-Pāṇḍava war Droṇācārya formed a Cakravyūha wherein Abhimanyu, son of Arjuna got himself trapped and killed. (Abhimanyu, who forced himself inside the Vyūha did not know the method of geting out of it which Arjuna alone knew). Cakravyūha is made in the form and shape of Cart-wheels. Vyāsa has described the Cakravyūha made by Droṇa as follows:— The great preceptor made the Cakravyūha and posted in it to maximum capacity kings, who were equal to Indra. In every opening of the vyūha were posted princes equal in prowess to the Sun. All the princes were organised compactly. And, all of them wore red uniforms and were adorned with other things also red in colour and held red flags. They also wore golden ornaments and garlands scented with Sandal paste. Ten thousand strong they rushed forward to fight with Abhimanyu. Duryodhana's son, Lakṣmaṇa, led the onrush. In the centre (of the Cakravyūha) stood Duryodhana in the company of heroes like Karṇa, Duśśāsana and Kṛpa. And, at the head of the army stood Droṇa, the captain of the army, who looked like the rising sun. Then there was the King of Sindhu, and near him stood Aśvatthāmā, and there stood in front of them thirty Kauravas, all of them equal to Devas. On the flanks were great heroes like Śalya, Bhūriśravas. And then did the battle rage. (Droṇa Parva, Chapter 34).

CAKRIKA. A forest hunter. The following story is told about him in Chapter 16, Kriyāyoga of the Padma Purāṇa.

Devoted much to his parents, Cakrika was a great devotee of Viṣṇu. He used to worship Viṣṇu daily with fruits, (edible) roots etc. But, he did so only after himself tasting them. One day while thus tasting a fruit, somehow or other it got itself lodged in his throat, and all his attempts to dislodge it failed. The fruit had to be, at any rate, offered to Viṣṇu and therefore Cakrika drew his sword and cut his throat with it. Lord Viṣṇu who was so pleased at such great devotion of the man appeared on the scene and brought him back to life. Sometime afterwards Cakrika expired at the Dvārakā temple, and thus attained salvation.

CAKRODDHATA. A king in the dynasty of Yayāti. (Bhāgavata, Navama Skandha).

CAKṢUS I. A synonym of the Sun. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 1, Verse 42).

CAKṢUS II. A tributary of river Gaṅgā. Starting from Viṣṇupāda (Svarga) the Gaṅgā falls into Devayāna and thence into the moon and after flooding the whole area it divides itself into four tributaries, viz., Sītā, Cakṣus, Alakanandā and Bhadrā and falls into Brahmaloka and flows in four directions. Of the four tributaries the river called Cakṣus falls on the peak of Mount Mālyavān and then flows through Ketumāla and falls into the western sea. The Gaṅgā which flows through India is a branch of the above-mentioned tributary, Alakanandā. (Devī Bhāgavata, Aṣṭama Skandha).

CAKṢUS III. A king born in the lunar dynasty. He was the son of King Anudruhyu. (Bhāgavata, Navama Skandha).

CAKṢURVARDHANIKĀ. A river which flows through Śākadvīpa. (Śāka island). (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 11, Verse 33).

CĀKṢUṢAMANU.

1) General. The sixth of the fourteen Manus. (See Manvantara).

2) Genealogy. Uttānapāda and Priyavrata were the sons of Svāyambhuvamanu, and Dhruva was Uttānapāda's son. Dhruva had two sons, Śiṣṭi, and Bhavya by his wife Śambhu. Suchāyā, wife of Śiṣṭi, had five sons, viz., Ripu, Ripuñjaya, Vipra, Vṛkala and Vṛkatejas. From Bṛhatī, wife of Ripu, was born Cākṣuṣa, the mighty and Cākṣuṣa begot a son called Manu by Puṣkaraṇī, daughter of Vīraṇaprajāpati and one of the offsprings of Varuṇa. This Manu was called Cākṣuṣa Manu. And Cākṣuṣa Manu had ten sons by his wife Nadvalā, daughter of Vairājaprajāpati, called Kuru, Puru, Śatadyumna, Tapasvī, Satyavān, Śuci, Agniṣṭoma, Atirātra, Sudyumna and Abhimanyu. Out of the ten, Puru had the following sons by Āgneyī, viz. Aṅga, Sumanas, Khyāti, Kratu, Aṅgiras and Śibi. Aṅga married Sunīthā, and Vena was their son. The famous emperor, Pṛthu was Vena's son.

3) Former life. The following story is told in the Mārkaṇḍeya Purāṇa about the former life of Cākṣuṣa before he was born as Cākṣuṣa. In that former life he was Ānanda, son of Anamitra. Once a cat carried Ānanda away and laid him on the bed of the child of King Vikrānta, and the same cat deposited the king's child somewhere else. And, Ānanda grew up as the real son of the King. But, one day he told the King the truth about him and left for the forest for tapas. Brahmā appeared before him and blessed that he would, in the next birth, be born as the sixth Manu and thus Cākṣuṣa became the sixth Manu.

4) Chief incidents during his time. During Cākṣuṣamanvantara were born the famous Nara and Nārāyaṇa as the sons of Dharma. It was also during this period that Brahmā was born as Candra, Viṣṇu as Dattātreya and Śiva as Durvāsas from Anasūyā, the purest of women and the wife of Atri. (Devī Bhāgavata, Caturtha Skandha).

CĀKṢUṢĪ. An art, the study of which will enable one to see anything in the three worlds. Cākṣuṣī was taught by Manu to Soma, by him to Viśvāvasu, by him to Citraratha, the Gandharva and by him to Arjuna, son of Pāṇḍu. (Ādi Parva).

CĀKYĀRKŪTTU. A very important art practised in temples mainly in Kerala. It is called so because it is exhibited by Cākyārs (a sect attached to temples). In important temples a place called Kūttambala is set apart for displaying the art. The Kūttu now prevalent in Kerala temples is not exactly of its old form. Kulaśekharavarmā perumāl (elected ruler of old Kerala) effected some changes in the old art form, and Bhāskararavivarmā perumāl and Tolakavi made further reforms in it. The art of Kūttu was evolved with the object of relating purāṇic stories in such a manner as will help devotional feelings grow in man.

The main aim of the Kūttu is to narrate purāṇic stories in such a way as to instil Bhakti in the hearers and to create an interest in them in the Purāṇas. The Cākyār (the man who gives the discourse who usually belongs to the Brahmin sect called Cākyārs) tells the story in a very interesting way, reciting appropriate passages from the Purāṇas and illustrating them with apt examples and similes. The narration is from the beginning till end humorous. The Cākyār who delivers the discourse is usually a man with a good sense of humour and a sense of what is odd, strange or eccentric in nature and human character. There are three varieties of Kūttu : Prabandhaṁ Kūttu, Naṁbiar Kūttu and Kūṭiāṭṭam. Of these the first is narrative (Ākhyānapara) while in the second and third type, the element of acting is more important (Abhinayapara).

CALĀ. Lakṣmīdevī. The following story is told in the Devī-bhāgavata as to how this name came to be applied to the devī. Once Revanta the very handsome son of Sūryadeva came to Vaikuṇṭha riding Uccaiḥśravas, Indra's horse. Devī, who was at that time with Viṣṇu gazed for a few minutes in wonder at the horse. She did not, therefore, attend to Viṣṇu's talk. Angered at this Viṣṇu told the devī : "Since your eyes find enjoyment on unnecessary things and move about among such objects, you shall be called from today onwards Ramā and Calā. Also you will be born as a mare on earth. Accordingly Mahālakṣmī was born as a mare on the banks of river Sarasvatī, and regained her old form only after delivering a son by Viṣṇu. That son was Ekavīra, founder of the Hehaya kingdom. (Devī Bhāgavata, Skandha 6).

CAMARA. (CAMARĪ). An animal whose tail is its most important and valued organ. In the course of its movements in the forest if the tail gets entangled anywhere it is supposed to lie down there till the tail is freed by itself. About the origin of Camara, the following story is told in the Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa. Krodhavaśā, daughter of Dakṣaprajāpati and wife of Kaśyapa had ten daughters, viz. Mṛgī, Mṛgamadā, Hari, Bhadramadā, Mātaṅgī, Śārdūlī, Śvetī, Surasā, Surabhi and Kadrū. To Mṛgamadā the Sṛmaras and Camaras owe their origin. (Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa, Araṇya Kāṇḍa, Canto 14).

CĀMARA(M). A rod (handle) with a large tuft of hair, fibre or feathers at the end. A symbol used by kings and brahmins. Cāmara of the king should have a golden handle, and it should be made of the wings of the swan, the pea cock, the Balākā bird etc. But, the wings of different birds shall not be intermixed. Circular in shape, the Cāmara should have on its handle 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, or 8 sandhis (joints, knots). (Agnipurāṇa, Chapter 245).

CAMASA. A yogi, the younger brother of Bharata, a king born in the dynasty of Priyavrata, son of Manu. This country got its name Bhārata from king Bharata (country ruled by Bharata). Bharata had nine brothers called Kuśāvarta, Ilāvarta, Brahmāvarta, Āryāvarta, Malaya, Bhadraketu, Sena, Indraspṛk and Kīkaṭa. Bharata had also nine other brothers renowned as navayogīs, born of another mother. Camasa was one of them, the other eight being Kavi, Hari, Ambarīṣa, Prabuddha, Pippalāyana, Āvīrhotra, Dramiḍa and Kharabhājana. (Bhāgavata Pañcama Skandha).

CAMASODBHEDA. A holy place in Saurāṣṭra which forms part of the very reputed sacred place called Vināśana. It is said that it was here that the river Sarasvatī which once became invisible, was detected. A bath here is as efficacious as performing the Jyotiṣṭoma yajña. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 82, Verse 112).

CAMATKĀRA. (See PATTU).

CAMOHARA. A viśvadeva. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva. Chapter 191, Verse 35).

CAMPA. A king born in the Aṅga dynasty. (See CANDRAVAMŚA).

CAMPĀ. (CAMPĀPURĪ). A city on the banks of river Gaṅgā, Campā is often referred to in the Purāṇas. It was here that Lomapāda lived in tretāyuga. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 113, Verse 15). In Dvāparayuga the city was ruled by a Sūta called Atiratha, who got Karṇa, while he and his wife were brooding over their lack of a child. In after years Karṇa also ruled the city. (M.B. Śānti Parva, Chapter 5, Verse 7).

CAMPAKA. A vidyādhara. Once he visited the banks of river Yamunā with his wife Madālasā when they got from the forest nearby a child. The child in later years became famous as Ekavīra, founder of the Hehaya dynasty. (See EKAVĪRA).

CAMPAKĀRAṆYA. (CAMPĀKARA). A holy place in Northern India. One day's halt at the place and a bath there is considered to be as good as giving away one thousand cows as gift. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 84).

CĀMPEYA. Son of Viśvāmitra who was a brahmavādin (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 4, Verse 58).

CAMPŪ. A literary form of presenting a story in a mixture of prose and verse, and abounding in beautiful descriptions : "Gadyapadyamayaṁ kāvyaṁ Campūrityabhidhīyate". Over and above prose and verse the Campūs use daṇḍakas (very long, involved and poetical prose). This literary form had its origin first in Sanskrit and other Indian languages adopted it with some variations. For instance, though prose in Sanskrit Campūs is really prose, that in Malayalam is something akin to metrical prose. There are more than two hundred Campūs in Malayalam. The most famous of the Campū writers in Malayālam are Punam Namboothiri, Mahāmaṅgalam Namboothiri and Nīlakaṇṭha.

CAMŪ. A division of an army. (See Akṣauhiṇī)

CĀMUṆḌĀ. (See Pārvatī).

CĀṆAKA. The auspiciousness of Cāṇaka (cowdung) is due to Lakṣmī. (See Lakṣmī, Paras 1 and 6).

CĀṆAKYA (KAUṬILYA). The famous author of "Arthaśāstra" a treatise on political economy.

Eastern and western scholars have made exhaustive researches on this intellectual giant of ancient India, Cāṇakya. But, nothing definite has yet been established about his time or life. Indians have accepted as a fact the traditional legend that he was a minister of Candragupta, the founder of the Maurya dynasty. It is also firmly believed that it was this mighty intellect of a brahmin who made Candragupta a powerful emperor and steered the ship of his state. The phrase 'Cāṇakya's kuṭilanīti' (crooked tactics) has become proverbial. Some scholars hold the opinion that he came to be called 'Kauṭilya' because of his Kuṭila (crooked) tactics ; but evidence to establish this view-point is yet to be adduced.

It is his famous Arthaśāstra, which has made Cāṇakya's name a world famous one. The great German thinker Jolly has described the Arthaśāstra as a unique composition in the Sanskrit language. And, Johann Meyer, the great western scholar has the following to say about the book :—

"Kauṭilya's Arthaśāstra is not one single text, it is a collection and collateration of all books in ancient India. To study the greatness of the theories and principles contained in it today requires continuous and constant study at least for twenty years and the unremitting efforts of a scholar with unabounded knowledge are required."

Even his name has not yet been confirmed beyond doubts. Kauṭilya is also called Viṣṇugupta, Cāṇakya, Dramila, and Aṅgula. Modern researches place the date of the Arthaśāstra at near about B.C. 400. In Viśākhadatta's Mudrārākṣasa (drama) the name Kauṭilya is used.

The Authors of Nītiśāstra maintain that the name of the author of Arthaśāstra was Viṣṇugupta. It may be gathered from the Mudrārākṣasa that he became famous as Cāṇakya as he was the son of Caṇaka, and that he possessed deep erudition in Nītiśāstra, Dharmaśāstra and astrology. There is another legend to the effect that this brahmin (Cāṇakya) belonged to Kāñcīpura and that he migrated to Pāṭalīputra, the seat of learning and scholarship. As Kāmandaka, who lived in the fourth century B.C. has eulogised Cāṇakya in his nītiśāstra it may be surmised that Cāṇakya lived sometime near about that. Candragupta and Cāṇakya are referred to in the Viṣṇu and the Vāmana Purāṇas.

Kauṭilya was keen-eyed and scholar par excellence. "Arthaśāstra" is a great book written by him after thoroughly examining the viewpoints of previous scholars, and then establishing his own views and theories. From the Daśakumāracarita of Daṇḍī (A.D. 700) it may be seen that there are 6000 verses in the Anuṣṭup metre (eight letters in one line) in the Arthaśāstra composed by Viṣṇugupta for the use of Candragupta Maurya. The Arthaśāstra has been held in praise by Bāṇabhaṭṭa who lived in the 7th Century, Somadevasūri, who lived in the 10th century and also by Hemacandra, the author of Kāvyānuśāsana, who lived in the 12th century. The book is a discourse on the principles and practices that are necessary to establish a strong government of an ideal empire. Cāṇakya has mentioned in his book with respect the old scholars like Manu, Śukra, Bṛhaspati, Nārāyaṇa, Kātyāyana and Govinda dīkṣita. (For the purāṇic story about Cāṇakya see Vararuci, Para 6).

CAÑCALĀKṢĪ. A notorious harlot who lived in dvāpara yuga. When one day at midnight she came to the appointed place to meet a paramour the latter had not arrived. While waiting impatiently there she was attacked and killed by a leopard. Emissaries of Viṣṇu as also of Yama arrived to carry away the soul of Cañcalākṣī. Yama's men argued that she had sinned throughout her life, and therefore claimed the harlot's soul. But the emissaries of Viṣṇu countered the argument thus : "once on her way to conduct her trade Cañcalākṣī got into a temple and munched tāmbūla in the course of which she rubbed some lime on the walls of the temple. Taking into consideration this fact of her having spent sometime thus to clean the temple wall her soul deserves to be led to Viṣṇuloka".

In the argument the emissaries of Yama were defeated and the soul of Cañcalākṣī was taken to Vaikuṇṭha by the emissaries of Viṣṇu. (Padma Purāṇa, Chapter 6).

CAÑCALĀKṢĪ II. A vidyādhara girl. Once while she was concentrating her mind in prayer over Mahālakṣmī, Rāvaṇa, King of the Rākṣasas, committed rape on her, and she cursed him that he should die on account of Mahālakṣmī herself and accordingly at last he was killed by Rāma on account of Sītā, the incarnation of Mahālakṣmī. (Kampa Rāmāyaṇa).

CAṆḌA. (See Caṇḍamuṇḍās).

CAṆḌABALA. A prominent monkey. In the Rāma-Rāvaṇa war this monkey caused much trouble to Kumbhakarṇa. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 287, Verse 6).

CAṆḌABHĀRGAVA. A maharṣi born in the dynasty of Cyavana Muni. A very erudite scholar and deeply versed in the Vedas, it was this maharṣi, who performed Janamejaya's famous Sarpa sattra. (M.B., Ādi Parva, Chapter 58, Verse 4).

CAṆḌAKA. A forest hunter who attained salvation by the worship of Śivaliṅga. (Phallus of Śiva).

While once hunting in the woods Caṇḍaka saw a Śiva temple in ruins, and the Śivaliṅga lying on the ground uncared for. This sight greatly grieved him, and he told Siṁhaketu, son of the Pāñcāla Rāja who happened to come that way all about the temple and the liṅga. To his query as to whether the śāstra permitted a hunter like himself to worship Śivaliṅga, Siṁhaketu answered there were injunctions in the Śāstras for people like him (Caṇḍakas) to instal Śivaliṅga on rock and then worship it daily, the worshipper wearing ashes from the burning ghāṭ on his body. Accordingly Caṇḍaka installed the liṅga on a rock and began worshipping it daily along with his wife, Pulindī. But after sometime there was left no ashes in the burning ghāṭ and Caṇḍaka and Pulindī discussed between them the means to get ashes for the next day. Then Pulindī suggested that she should burn herself to ashes and that Caṇḍaka should continue worshipping the Śivaliṅga wearing on his body the ashes. Very unwillingly Caṇḍaka agreed with the sad proposal of his wife, and the next day he worshipped the Śivaliṅga wearing on his body the ashes of Pulindī. And, at the close of the worship he called aloud for Pulindī, and lo! wonder of wonders ! she stood there before him more healthy than formerly. Moreover a vimāna descended from the skies and conducted both Caṇḍaka and Pulindī to Śivaloka. (Śiva Purāṇa, Śambaramāhātyma).

CAṆḌAKAUŚIKA. A muni, son of Kakṣīvān, the son of Gautama. Bṛhadratha, King of Magadha, was having no issues when, one day, Caṇḍakauśika went to the palace and blessed the King as a result of which a son called Jarāsandha was born to him. Caṇḍakauśika continued to live at Magadha for long as the preceptor of the kings of that land. (See Jarāsandha).

CAṆḌĀLA. (See Cāturvarṇya).

CAṆḌAMAHĀSENA.

1) General. A very prominent and reputed king of Ujjayini. Vāsavadattā, wife of Udayana was his daughter.

2) The name Caṇḍamahāsena. His real name was Mahāsena. After ascending the throne he began doing tapas to get a noble wife and a good sword. When he cut his own flesh and made an offering of the same to the sacred fire after a long period of tapas the Devī became pleased, and offered him a sword of exceptional excellence and said that as long as he had that sword with him no enemy would defeat him. The Devī also assured him that ere long Aṅgāravatī, daughter of the asura called Aṅgāraka and the fairest damsel in the three worlds would become his wife. Since he (Mahāsena) did the most austere rites and rituals, the Devī said, he would come to be called Caṇḍamahāsena. Afterwards the sword given by the Devī and the elephant called naḍāgiri proved as successful and effective to him as were Vajrāyudha and his elephant Airāvata to Indra.

3) Marriage. One day, during a hunting expedition a boar escaped unhurt by the king's arrows and after turning turtle his chariot it went into a cave. The king in great anger followed the pig into the cave, and going forward some distance he saw a beautiful animal whereupon he seated himself on the side of a tank. There he saw, amidst a number of women an exceptionally beautiful woman moving about. Casting her charming eyes glistering with love the woman approached the King. During their conversation, when the king told her about himself she began crying. To the query as to the reason for her crying she answered as follows :— "The boar you saw is my father, Aṅgārakāsura. His body is harder than even diamond, and none can inflict any injury on it. The women you see around are princesses captured by my father from various palaces for my help, and my name is Aṅgāravatī. My father became a Rākṣasa as the result of a curse ; he is now asleep in the assumed form of a boar. On awaking he is sure to eat you for food, and it was that thought which brought tears to my eyes". To these words of Aṅgāravatī, the king replied as follows :—"If you have any love for me you would go to your father and begin crying when he wakes up, and to his question as to why you are crying you should reply that thoughts about your future in the event of your fathers's death brought tears in your eyes."

Aṅgāravatī agreed to the above proposal of the King. She hid the King in a safe place and went and stood by the side of her father. Everything happened as was anticipated and Aṅgāraka consoled his daughter by saying that none would be able to kill him whose body was as hard and strong as diamond, there being only one opening through which he might be struck on the left wrist which might be concealed by the bow. Caṇḍamahāsena who heard the above talk came out of his hiding place and challenged the asura to war. He raised his left hand to show the sign, "just coming, please wait", and the king then shot his arrow through the opening on his left wrist. The asura fell dead.

4) Birth of Vāsavadattā : And, now Caṇḍamahāsena married Aṅgāravatī and returned to his kingdom with his wife. Two sons, Gopālaka and Pālaka were born to the royal couple, and the King celebrated an Indrotsava for the welfare and prosperity of the children. Pleased at the utsava Indra appeared to the king in sleep and blessed him saying that a daughter would be born to him and that her son would be crowned emperor of the Vidyādharas. Accordingly a daughter was born to the King, and she was called Vāsavadattā. (given by Vāsava, i.e. Indra). Udayana married Vāsavadattā. (See Udayana).

CAṆḌAMUṆḌAS. Two brothers born in the Asura dynasty, the elder brother being called Caṇḍa and the younger Muṇḍa. These brothers collected, like the other asura leaders Dhūmrākṣa, and Raktabīja, thousands of soldiers and lived in all pomp and glory.

During this period two asura brothers called Śumbha and Niśumbha had returned from the Himālayas after securing from Brahman a boon that they would meet with their death only at the hands of a woman. Caṇḍa and Muṇḍa became their friends and attendants. Śumbha and Niśumbha set out on a triumphal tour and conquered heaven, earth and pātāla. The Devas took refuge in a forest. After wandering in the forest for a long time, at the instance of Bṛhaspati they sought asylum with Pārvatī. Pārvatī stood for sometime in deep concentration, and there emerged from her divine body Kauṣikī or Kālī. Pārvatī assured the Devas that she would kill Śumbha and Niśumbha. And, then Kālī sat alone on a rock in the thick Forest. Caṇḍa and Muṇḍa, who happened to pass that way were attracted by the great beauty of Pārvatī and imparted the news to Śumbha and Niśumbha, and they deputed Dhūmrākṣa and 60,000 soldiers to bring Pārvatī over to them ; but by one huṁkāra (sound 'hum') she reduced them to ashes. Ultimately she killed Śumbha and Niśumbha also. (Devī Bhāgavata, Pañcama Skandha).

CAṆḌATUṆḌAKA(S). A son of Garuḍa. (Udyoga Parva, Chapter 101, Verse 9).

CAṆḌAVEGA. A gandharva. (See Purañjana).

CAṆḌIKĀ. A terrific form of Pārvatī, who is worshipped in temples under the name Caṇḍikādevī. The Devī's idol has twenty hands. In the hands on the right side are held Śūla (three-pronged weapons) sword, Vela (rod), Cakra, pāśa (rope), parigha (shield), āyudha, abhaya, ḍamaru and Śakti, while the hands on the left side hold nāgapāśa, small parigha, axe, Aṅkuśa (a long-hooked rod), pāśa, maṇi, flag, gadā, mirror and an iron cylindrical rod. There are also idols of Caṇḍikā with ten hands. At the feet of the Devī lies Mahiṣāsura with his head severed from body. There will also be standing near the idol a puruṣa (man) born from the neck of the Māhiṣa brandishing his weapon, and with the Śūla in his hand in all rage and womitting blood and with red hairs and eyes. That puruṣa is bound strongly on his neck with rope. The vehicle of the Devī is a lion. The Devī is mounted on the lion with her left leg on the asura lying below. This Caṇḍikādevī thus stands with weapons in the hand, as annihilator of enemies and with three eyes, and she should be worshipped in pūjāmaṇḍala with nine Padmas (tantric divisions) along with her idol. Firstly the Devī should be worshipped in the central padma and Indra and others in the other padmas.

There is also another Caṇḍikādevī (Durgā) with eighteen hands. She holds in her right hand a skull, shield, mirror, broom, bow, flag, ḍamaru and pāśa (cord) and in her left hand rod, iron pounder, Śūla, Vajra, sword, Aṅkuśa (a sticklike weapon with one end bent to hold on to things) Śara (arrow) Cakra and śalākā. There are nine other Durgās having the same weapons as the above except the Ḍamaru and the broom. But, they have only sixteen hands each. These nine Durgās are called Rudracaṇḍā, Pracaṇḍā, Ugracaṇḍā, Caṇḍānāyikā, Aticaṇḍikā, and Caṇḍogrā. The Durgā standing at the centre will have the colour of gorocana (red sandal paste) and the others will have the following colours; aruṇavarṇa (red) Kṛṣṇa varṇa (black), nīla varṇa (blue), śukla varṇa (white), dhūmra varṇa (brown) pīta varṇa (yellow) and śveta varṇa (white). The nava Durgās (nine Durgās) are installed for the prosperity of children etc. And all these are different forms of Pārvatī.

Also, in various aspects or poses, Pārvatī is called by other names. She is called Siddhā when installed in Raṁbhā-vana wearing akṣamālā (garland of beads), kirīṭa (crown) and agni. The same Siddhā without the fire is called Lalitā. Gaurīdevī with one of the hands on the left side placed on the shoulder and the head, and holding the mirror in the other hand, and holding in one of the hands on the right side fruits etc. and the other hand held up is called Saubhāgya gaurī. (For further details see Pārvatī). (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 50).

CANDRA I. A prominent asura, also called Candravarman. It was this asura, as beautiful as Candra (the moon) who was born as the king of Kāmboja under the name Candravarman (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 67, Verse 31).

CANDRA II. A king born in the Solar dynasty and the son of Viśvarandhi and father of Yuvanāśva. See Vaṁśāvalī) CANDRA III. The Purāṇas declare that Candra was one of the invaluable things got at the churning of Kṣīrābdhi (ocean of milk) Candra, Mahālakṣmī, Surā, Uccaiḥśravas, Kaustubha, Pārijāta, Kāmadhenu, Dhanvantari, Amṛtam and Kālakūṭa were the things thus got from the Ocean of Milk. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 18 and Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Part 1, Chapter 9). Also, the evil devatā called Jyeṣṭhā, Airāvata, the gem named Cintāmaṇi and fair damsels like Tārā and Rumā were got from the Kṣīrābdhi, (Kampa Rāmāyaṇa, Yuddhakāṇḍa). For general information about Candra, see Grahas).

CANDRA IV. (CANDRA DEVA).

1) Birth. The child born to Atri by Anasuyā. (See Purūravas). In Skandha 4 of the Devībhāgavata it is stated that it was Brahman who was born as Candra. (See Atri).

2) Candra led married life with the wife of his guru. Tārā, the very beautiful wife of Bṛhaspati, preceptor of the Devas happened to reach Candra's home during her perambulation one day. Candra and Tārā fell in love with each other at first sight and lived in conjugal happiness. And thus days passed by. Bṛhaspati, being informed of the fact on enquiry, deputed his disciples to bring Tārā back, but to no purpose. Bṛhaspati sent his disciples again and again to Tārā, but all to no purpose. Then Bṛhaspati himself went to the house of Candra and invited Tārā, this time also to no purpose. Enraged at this the Deva guru spoke to Candra as follows: "The brahmin-killer, gold-thief, drunkard, he who marries another's wife and he who associates himself with the above three types are responsible for the most terrible five sins, and you, therefore, are not fit enough to reside in Devaloka. Unless you return my wife to me I will curse you." None of the threats of Bṛhaspati could shake Candra. He told the Devaguru that Tārā who had gone to his house on her own accord would also leave him when she was satiated with him. These words of Candra made Bṛhaspati all the more angry. He returned home and waited sometime more for Tārā's return. But, he got disappointed, and getting impatient he started again for Candra's house. But, this time the gatekeepers did not let him in.

Terribly angry at the cruel rebuff Bṛhaspati sought help of Indra. Indra sent word to Candra asking him to send Tārā back home or be prepared for war. Even then Candra refused to yield, and Indra started for war against Candra. But, there was somehow some difference among the devas about all this, and the news reached the asuras. At once Śukra, preceptor of the asuras and an old enemy of Bṛhaspati met Candra and assured him all support in case war broke out between Indra and Candra. He also strongly advised Candra not to return Tārā to Bṛhaspati. And, ultimately a fierce war began between Indra and Candra. All activities in the world were thrown into confusion and chaos. At this Brahmā on his haṁsa (swan) came to the scene and admonished Candra and Śukra. They could not but obey Brahmā and so were forced to stop fighting. Moreover, Candra returned Tārā to Bṛhaspati.

The quarrel and fighting thus ended for the time being, but another problem cropped up. At the time Candra returned Tārā to Bṛhaspati she was carrying, and Bṛhaspati was not aware of the fact. And at last Tārā delivered an exceptionally beautiful male child. The naming ceremony of the child was duly performed, Bṛhaspati himself acting as its father. When the news reached Candra he sent a messenger to Bṛhaspati claiming the child was his. Bṛhaspati too claimed its fatherhood. This controversy developed almost to the brink of a second devāsura war. At this stage Brahmā went to Bṛhaspati's house and questioned Tārā as to who really was her child's father, and she named Candra. Upon this Brahmā asked Bṛhaspati to release the child to Candra. Bṛhaspati did so. (Devī Bhāgavata, Prathama Skandha).

3) Wives of Candra. Candra took twentyseven daughters of Dakṣa as his wives. (Devī Bhāgavata, Saptama Skandha). These twentyseven wives are the twentyseven stars. Candra circumambulates Mahāmeru along with these, his twentyseven wives (Stars). (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 163, Verse 33). The names of the twentyseven wives are given hereunder: Aśvinī, Bharaṇī, Kṛttikā, Rohiṇī, Mṛgaśiras, Ārdrā, Punarvasu, Puṣya, Āśleṣā, Janakaṁ, Phālgunī, Uttaraphālgunī, Hasta, Citrā, Svāti, Viśākhā, Anurādhā, Jyeṣṭhā, Mūlā, Purvāṣāḍhā, Uttarāṣāḍhā, Śroṇā, Śraviṣṭha, Pracetas, Pūrvaproṣṭhapadā, Uttaraproṣṭhapadā, Revatī.

Solar eclipse according to the Purāṇas. The Devas and the asuras jointly churned Kṣīrābdhi wherefrom emerged Dhanvantari with the Amṛtakumbha (pot of nectar). (See Amṛtam).

But an asura māyāvī (magician) called Saiṁhikeya absconded to Pātāla with the Amṛtakumbha which nobody noticed as everybody was busy with dividing other divine objects. Only after the māyāvī's disappearance was it noticed that the Amṛta Kumbha was missing. At once Mahāviṣṇu assumed the figure of a beautiful woman, got back the Kumbha and gave it to the devas. The devas began drinking the amṛtam when, at the instance of some other devas, Saiṁhikeya, the māyāvī assuming the form of an old brahmin reached svarga, got a share of the amṛta and began to drink it. Sūrya and Candra (Sun and Moon) who were on guard at the gates divined the secret of the 'old brahmin' and informed Mahāviṣṇu about it. He cut the throat of the pseudo-brahmin with his Sudarśana Cakra. But, half of the nectar he had drunk stayed above the throat and the other half below it. Therefore, though the head and the trunk were severed they remained alive. These two parts, in course of time, evolved as Rāhu and Ketu.

When the throat was cut some blood as well as some amṛta dropped on two places on the ground, and they became the red onion and the white onion respectively. Some vaidika brahmins used to consider the red onion objectionable for consumption as it was evolved from blood, while the white onion was considered usable as it was evolved from amṛtam.

Rāhu and Ketu still maintain their hatred for Sūrya and Candra who had betrayed the asura, who, disguised as brahmin tried to drink the amṛta. Eclipse is the phenomenon of Rāhu and Ketu swallowing Sūrya and Candra as and when opportunity presents itself for it. But, since the throat is severed from the body, Sūrya and Candra thus swallowed get out through the throat. That is the reason why Sūrya and Candra become visible after the eclipse in over. (Kampa Rāmāyaṇa, Yuddha Kāṇḍa and Bhāgavata Aṣṭama Skandha).

5) Candra became Calf. Once emperor Pṛthu transformed Bhūmidevī into a cow and milked from her all things and provisions. On that occasion it was Brahmā, who acted as Calf. And, following Pṛthu when the Ṛṣis milked the cow Candra served as Calf. (For details see Pṛthu).

6) Waxing and waning of Candra, the purāṇic story regarding it. Of the twentyseven daughters of Dakṣa whom Candra had married he loved Rohiṇī much more than the other twentysix wives, and so kept her always with him. This annoyed the twentysix wives, who complained about it to Dakṣa. Dakṣa's advice to Candra to treat all the wives on an equal footing had no effect on him. So, the twentysix neglected wives again complained to Dakṣa as follows : "We shall stay in the āśrama and serve you. Soma (Candra) does not associate with us, he will not accept your advice."

Though Dakṣa warned Candra a second time, that too had no effect on him. So the twentysix wives, for the third time, complained to Dakṣa. Dakṣa got angry at this and cursed that Candra should suffer from tuberculosis. Thus Candra was afflicted by consumption. Though Candra performed many a yajña to get cured of the fell disease, they did not produce the desired effect. Candra remaining a tubercular patient, the growth of medicinal plants stopped with the result that all living things contracted consumption. When people began becoming thinner, the devas asked Candra for an explanation, and he told them all the details. They then sought the help of Dakṣa, who gave Candra redemption from the curse by ordaining that if he dived in the Sarasvatī tīrtha in the western sea he would be free from consumption for half of every month. Thenceforth Candra made it a practice to dive in the Sarasvatī tīrtha and that is the reason why Candra is exempted from Kṣayaroga for fifteen days. (M.B. Śalya Parva, Chapter 35).

7) Candra—King of stars and of medicines. During the reign of emperor Pṛthu, he changed Bhūmidevī into a cow. Later the Ṛṣis also changed bhūmidevī into a cow and milked her. It was Candra who served as calf then. Pleased at this Brahman crowned Candra as king of the stars and medicines. (Harivaṁśa, Chapter 4, Verse 2).

8) Other information about Candra

(1) Candra is 11,000 sq. yojanas in area, 33,000 yojanas in circumference and a volume of 5,900 cubic yojanas. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 12).

(2) Candra presented two attendants called Maṇi and Sumati to Subrahmaṇya (Śalya Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 32).

(3) Candra once made a discourse on the superior qualities of brahmins to Śambarāsura. (Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 36, Verse 13, Southern Text).

(4) All welfare and prosperity accrue to him, who on full-moon day at moon-rise tenders offerings to Candra of bread in copper vessels with honey poured into it. (Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 36, Verse, 13, Southern Text).

(5) Candra is one of the aṣṭa-vasus. Candra had four sons, Varcas, Śiśira, Prāṇa and Ramaṇa by his wife named Manoharā. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 66, Verse 18).

(6) Abhimanyu was Candra's son, Varcas, reborn as the son of Arjuna. (See Abhimanyu).

CANDRĀ. An important river in ancient India. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 9, Verse 29).

CANDRAGUPTA I. Second son of Rāvaṇa. Once when Śrī Rāma was King, Candragupta abducted the daughter of Sugrīva and the daughter-in-law of Vibhīṣaṇa. Hanumān released them both as ordered by Śrī Rāma. (Kampa Rāmāyaṇa Uttara Kāṇḍa ; also see Sahasramukha Rāvaṇa).

CANDRAGUPTA II. A minister of Kārtavīryārjuna. Kārtavīryārjuna was once fed sumptuously by Jamadagni at his āśrama with the help of Suśīlā, the devasurabhi (divine cow). Candragupta, at the instance of Kārtavīryārjuna tried to capture Suśīlā by force, which disappeared immediately in the sky. Kārtavīryārjuna's servants then forcibly took away its calf. Candragupta thrashed to death Jamadagni, who tried to obstruct their action. (See Kārtavīrya, Para 9).

CANDRAHANTĀ. An asura, who was reborn as King Śunaka. (M.B., Ādi Parva, Chapter 677, Verse 37).

CANDRAHARTĀ. A son born to Kaṣyapa prajāpati of Siṁhikā, daughter of Dakṣa. (M.B., Ādi Parva, Chapter 65, Verse 31).

CANDRAHĀSA. Son of King Sudhārmika of Kerala. The following story about him is told in Jaimini Aśvamedha Parva.

Candrahāsa, born under the star Mūlam had a sixth finger on the left foot indicative of poverty and of all other evils. And, therefore, on his birth enemies killed Sudhārmika and his wife followed him soon to the other world. The child thus left an orphan was taken to Kauṇḍalakapurī by a female inmate of the palace. But unfortunately the woman died within three years of the above incident. The child, just for very existence, took to begging. After sometime some women jointly took up charge of the boy. Once he went to the house of Dhṛṣṭabuddhi, minister of Kauṇḍala where a feast was in progress. The munis present there were impressed by Candrahāsa and prophesied that he would become a King. To Dhṛṣṭabuddhi, the munis said that the child would guard his wealth. Angry and suspicious at the prophesy of the munis Dhṛṣṭabuddhi asked his men to kill the boy. They led him to the forest. On the way Candrahāsa got a Śālagrāma (a small sacred stone which represented some upadevatā) which he applied very devotedly to his face. They did not in fact kill the boy, but cut off his sixth finger on the left foot and showed it to their master.

Thus left alive in the forest by the murderers the boy was roaming about when the King af Kalinda on a hunting expedition saw the destitute boy, and taking pity on him took him back with him to the palace. The boy was put under the care of Medhāvatī, the King's consort. The king named him Candrahāsa. Since the King took a special interest in the education of the child he became adept in all arts and sciences. At the age of twelve Candrahāsa, with the permission of the king, set out on a triumphal tour, and the king welcomed Candrahāsa on his return after his glorious victory that brought him wealth.

At the instance of the Kalinda king, Candrahāsa, sent by his messengers tribute to the Kauṇḍala king, who, understanding from them that so much of wealth had been brought to the Kalinda king by Candrahāsa started at once for the Kalinda palace. On being told the whole story about Candrahāsa, Dhṛṣṭabuddhi, the minister of the King of Kauṇḍala made up his mind to do away with him somehow or other for which he despatched a letter to his son, Madana, through Candrahāsa.

Candrahāsa on his way to Kauṇḍala slept on the banks of a river. Campakamālinī, the daughter of the King of Kauṇḍala and Viṣayā, daughter of Dhṛṣṭabuddhi happened to go to the river bank where Candrahāsa was sleeping. Campakamālinī, who became subject to great love for Candrahāsa removed the anklets on her feet and approached him slowly, and when she took up and read a letter she found lying beside him, she felt awe and sorrow to find therein a suggestion to poison him to death. Without wasting much time in thought she changed the word 'viṣamasmai' (give him poison) to 'Viṣayāsmai' (give him Viṣayā) and put it in its former place. After some time when Candrahāsa awoke from sleep and reached Kauṇḍala city and delivered the letter to Madana its content pleased him very much. As for Viṣayā, she was spending her days in constant prayer that Candrahāsa should marry her. In the circumstances the marriage of Candrahāsa and Viṣayā was solemnised on the earliest auspicious day.

In due course Dhṛṣṭabuddhi returned to Kauṇḍala with all the wealth he could lay his hands upon after capturing Kalinda. He seethed with grief and rage at the news that Viṣayā had been married to Candrahāsa. All the explanations offered by Madana did not satisfy him. He persisted in his determination to kill Candrahāsa.

The evil-minded Dhṛṣṭabuddhi one day asked Candrahāsa to go and worship at the Devī temple after having made arrangements for his murder there. But, as fate would have it, it was Madana who, instead of Candrahāsa, was killed. Even before the above incident had happened the Kauṇḍala King had married his daughter Candramālinī to Candrahāsa, and after relinquishing the kingdom also in his favour the King took to the forest to lead a hermit's life.

The above developments added fuel to the fire of anger in respect of Dhṛṣṭabuddhi, and when he saw in the temple precincts, his son's corpse he became well-nigh mad. Crying out that all this was the result of his having troubled the Vaiṣṇava Candrahāsa he dashed his head against the pillars of the temple and died.

Candrahāsa was grieved over the death of Dhṛṣṭabuddhi. He worshipped Devī offering his flesh in the sacrificial fire. Devī appeared and granted him two boons which helped him to bring Dhṛṣṭabuddhi and Madana back to life. And, when the Kalinda king and his wife, fearing the wicked Dhṛṣṭabuddhi were about to end their lives in flaming fire, Dhṛṣṭabuddhi went to them and imparted to them the secrets about the life of Candrahāsa. The Kalinda king and his wife dropped their former decision to end their life, and Candrahāsa took up the reins of government at the behest of the King. Candrahāsa, who won repute as a very powerful and effective ruler, during the Aśvamedha sacrifice of Yudhiṣṭhira captured the sacrificial horse, and Arjuna, at the instance of Kṛṣṇa had to enter into a pact with Candrahāsa, who promised him help for the success of the sacrifice. Candrahāsa had a son called Makarākṣa by Viṣayā and another son, Padmākṣa by Campakamālinī.

CANDRAHĀSA (M). Rāvaṇa's sword. Rāvaṇa, in the course of his triumphal tour after receiving the boons from Brahman, subjugated kings, and marching northward reached the valleys of Mount Kailāsa. But, Nandikeśvara stopped him there, and Rāvaṇa, threatening to throw away Śiva, master of Nandikeśvara along with Kailāsa, put his twenty hands under it to pull it out, and the great mountain shook violently. Pārvatī got frightened and running upto Śiva embraced him. Śiva, who divined the reason for all these with his eye of supreme knowledge grounded the mountain firmly on earth, crushing Rāvaṇa's hands under it. Unable to take away his arms from under the mountain, Rāvaṇa remained there for about thousand years singing the praises of the Lord. At last Śiva appeared to Rāvaṇa and presented him with a sword called Candrahāsa. It was this sword which won victories for Rāvaṇa in future wars. (Uttara Rāmāyaṇa).

CANDRAKETU I. A son of Śatrughna, brother of Śrī Rāma. Śatrughna had two sons, Aṅgada and Candraketu by his wife Śrutakīrti (Uttara Rāmāyaṇa).

CANDRAKETU II. A vidyādhara King. See Muktāphalaketu).

CANDRAMAS. A ṛṣi who imparted spiritual knowledge to Sampāti and advised Jaṭāyu to give directions about the way to the monkeys in their search for Sītādevī. (Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa).

CĀNDRAMASĪ. Tārā, the wife of Bṛhaspati. She fell in love with Candra and lived with him for sometime, and came to be called Cāndramasī. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 219; see also Tārā).

CANDRAMATĪ I. Wife of king Hariścandra reputed for his unique honesty and integrity. (See Hariścandra).

CANDRAMATĪ II. A city. Two sons, Takṣaka and Citraketu were born to Lakṣmaṇa of Ūrmilā. Takṣaka was crowned King of Agati, a city built on the eastern coast of the sea after annihilating the hunter tribe there, and Citraketu was crowned king of Candramatī, a city built on the western coast of the sea after killing all the Mlecchas there. (Uttara Rāmāyaṇa).

CANDRĀṄGADA. Grandson of Nala. He married Sīmantinī, daughter of Citravarman, a king of Āryāvarta. Sīmantinī, hearing about Candrāṅgada fell in love with him, and it was with the help of Maitreyī, wife of Yājñavalkya, that she was wedded to him.

While once Candrāṅgada was enjoying a boat-race in Kālindī (river) with his friends a storm upset the boat and most of them were drowned to death. The servants of Takṣaka saw Candrāṅgada sinking to the bottom of the river and carried him to Pātāla and he stayed there for sometime in the midst of amorous nāga damsels. Candrāṅgada's people, under the impression that he had died, performed his funeral rites, and Sīmantinī took to widow's life. Enemies captured his kingdom and imprisoned his father, Indrasena. When once the nāga King asked Candrāṅgada to marry nāga girls and settle down in Pātāla he told the King that he was already married and that his wife Sīmantinī was brooding over him, and he had, therefore, to return to her. Accordingly the nāga king sent him back with presents of a white horse, a Rākṣasa and an infant serpent.

Candrāṅgada, with his presents, came up in Kālindī where Sīmantinī, grief-stricken was spending her days in penance, and they recognised each other. Informed about the return of Candrāṅgada the enemy kings released his father from captivity and apologised to him. And he pardoned them.

Candrāṅgada and Sīmantinī took great interest in observing somavāravrata (fasting etc. on Mondays) and pleased at the vrata of the latter Śrī Pārvatī blessed her. Two brahmins called Devamitra and Sārasvata were living there at the time. Three sons called Sumedha, Sārasvata and Sāmavān were born to Devamitra. The sons also turned out to be great scholars but they were poor. They could not get brides as they were poor. In the hope that they would get some money if they approached Candrāṅgada and Sīmantinī the brahmins went to them. After hearing their story the king and his queen conducted them in a procession in the precincts of the palace, Sumedha dressed as husband and Sāmavān as his wife. But, lo ! when the procession was over Sāmavān could not be divested of his womanhood, and Sīmantinī named her Sāmavatī. Being told that his son had turned woman Sārasvata sought the advice of some munis to remedy the situation. But, all the attempts of the munis to change the woman to man failed, and they opined that only Pārvatī, who had been pleased by the Somavāravrata, would be able to find a solution to the problem. From that day onwards the brahmin youths lived as husband and wife. (Śiva Purāṇa, Somavāravratam).

CANDRĀPĪḌA. A son of Janamejaya. Parīkṣit was the son of Abhimanyu (Arjuna's son). Janamejaya was Parīkṣit's son. Janamejaya married princess Vapuṣṭamā of Kāśi. Two sons called Candrāpīḍa and Sūryāpīḍa were born to the couple. Candrāpīḍa had hundred sons, who distinguished themselves as great heroes in archery. Satyakarṇa was the eldest among the sons. Śvetakarṇa, son of Satyakarṇa, married Yādavī, the daughter of Sucāru. (Bhaviṣya Purāṇa).

CANDRAPRABHA. (See Sūryaprabhā).

CANDRAPRABHĀ. Mother of the wonderful girl, Somaprabhā. (See Somaprabhā).

CANDRAŚARMĀ I. A great sinner, who killed his preceptor. The Padma Purāṇa relates the story of four sinners named Vidura, Candraśarman, Vedaśarman and Vañjula, who shed their sin by bathing in the Gaṅgā. The sins committed by the four were respectively Brahmahatyā (killing of brahmin), Guruhatyā (killing of the preceptor), Agamyāgamana (having sexual contact with women like the wife of guru which is debarred) and Govadha (killing of cow) respectively. The leader of the above four sinners was one Vidura of the Pāñcāla deśa. He was begging in the streets without the tuft of hair, the sacred thread and tilaka (mark of sandal paste etc. on the forehead). He went from house to house begging for alms crying thus: "Here is come the man (himself) who committed Brahmahatyā. Please give alms to the brahmin-killer who is a drunkard also." During his begging tour he visited all the tīrthas also, yet brahmahatyā stuck on to him.

While this sinner Vidura, his heart rent with sorrow and remorse, was sitting under a tree, a Māgadha brahmin called Candraśarman happened to come there. This brahmin had committed the sin of guruhatyā (killing the preceptor). He told Vidura:—"While residing with the guru, blinded by desire, I killed the guru, and am now burning myself in the fire of repentance."

While they were engaged thus in conversation a third person, called Vedaśarman also came there in an absolutely tired condition. He told Vidura and Candraśarman that his relatives and others had cast him out as he once did the sin of agamyāgamana, and by the time he had finished telling his story a Vaiśya called Vañjula came there. Besides drinking liquor he had committed govadha (killing of cow) also. Though these four sinners assembled at the same place, they only talked, but did not touch one another, take food together, rest on the same seat or lie on the same bedsheet.

According to the advice of a Siddha (an evolved soul) the four sinners dived in the holy waters of Gaṅgā and came out redeemed of their sins. (Padma Purāṇa, Chapter 91).

CANDRAŚARMĀ II. A brahmin of Agni gotra from Māyāpura, he was the disciple and son-in-law of Devāśarman. Both of them were killed by a Rākṣasa while they were gathering darbha (a particular variety of grass used in religious ceremonies) in the forest. Candraśarmā attained Vaikuṇṭha as he was a very righteous person. During Kṛṣṇāvatāra (incarnation of Viṣṇu as Śrī Kṛṣṇa) he was born as Acrūra. (Padma Purāṇa).

CANDRAŚEKHARA. A King (son of Pauṣya). The following story about his birth is told in the Padma Purāṇa.

Though married for a long time Pauṣya did not have an issue. He began worshipping Śiva to be blessed with a son. Śiva was pleased at this and he gave him a fruit which he divided equally among his three wives. In due course the three wives delivered. But, to get the full and complete form of a child the three children had to be joined together, and so the parts were unified. This boy was Candraśekhara. Thus Candraśekhara acquired the name Tryaṁbaka.

Candraśekhara married Tārāvatī, daughter of Kakutstha, a King of the solar dynasty. On account of the curse of Kapotamuni two sons, Bhṛṅgi and Mahākāla were born to Tārāvatī in Vetāla yoni and Bhairava yoni respectively. Dama, Uparicara and Alarka were sons born to Candraśekhara himself. (Aurasaputras).

CANDRASENA I. A king of Siṁhala deśa (Ceylon). Candrasena had two daughters, Mandodarī and Indumatī by his wife Guṇavatī. Kambugrīva, son of Sudhanvā, the chief of Mādra desired to marry Mandodarī. But, since she preferred unmarried life Kambugrīva's desire did not fructify. Some time later she refused to marry another suitor also, King Vīrasena of Kosala. Meanwhile the marriage of her younger sister, Indumatī was celebrated, herself having selected Sudeṣṇa, the Mādra prince at the Svayaṁvara as husband. Though a handsome person Sudeṣṇa was a philanderer, and one day Indumatī saw him in bed with her maid-servant. From that day onwards, cutting asunder all marital relationship with Sudeṣṇa, Indumatī went and stayed with her father. This story told by Mahiṣāsura to show that women possess only very little discretion occurs in the Pañcama Skandha of Devībhāgavata.

CANDRASENA II. A king of Ujjayanī and a great devotee of Śiva. As he performed great sacrifices and gave away money and materials in gift to those who prayed for them, an attendant of Śiva called Maṇibhadra once gave him a gem, which possessed supernatural powers. Attracted by the lustre and glare of the gem many kings wanted to purchase it. But Candrasena refused to sell it. Much incensed at the refusal, the enemy kings set out to fight Candrasena, who then took refuge in the Mahākāla temple in Ujjayanī the idol installed in which was Śivaliṅga. Lord Śiva then appeared to him and granted him salvation. (Śiva Purāṇa, Śanipradoṣamāhātmyam).

CANDRASENA III. The Mahābhārata refers to another Candrasena, son of Samudrasena, King of Bengal. He was present at the svayaṁvara of Pāñcālī. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 185, Verse 11). Bhīmasena once defeated Candrasena and his father in fight. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 30, Verse 24). After that Candrasena became a supporter of the Pāṇḍavas. It is stated in Droṇa Parva that in the great war Candrasena fought from a chariot drawn by horses as white as Candra (moon) and got killed by Aśvatthāmā.

CANDRASENA IV. Another Candrasena, a partisan of the Kauravas, is referred to in the Bhārata as having fought against the Pāṇḍavas. His duty was to guard the chariot wheels of Śalya; he was killed by Yudhiṣṭhira. (Śalya Parva, Chapter 12, Verse 52).

CANDRASĪTĀ. A female attendant of Skandadeva. (M.B. Śalya Parva, Chapter 46, Verse 11).

CANDRAŚRĪ. A woman, who, though actually in love with her husband enjoyed life with her paramour. Candraśrī is the heroine of a story narrated in the Kathāsaritsāgara to prove that the interest married women take in clandestine relationship is only due to fleeting temptations. Candraśrī was the wife of a vaiśya called Bālavarman, who lived in the city of Pratiṣṭhāna. One day, looking out through the windows in her house she saw the very handsome vaiśya youth called Śīlahāra and felt great desire for him. She brought him secretly to the house of her companion and satisfied her desire. When their meeting became a routine affair her relations and servants knew about it. And, her husband alone was unaware of it. Once he became ill with severe fever. Even while he was in his death-bed Candraśrī continued her affair with the paramour. When one day she was with her paramour thus, she was told that her husband was no more. At once she took leave of him, returned home and committed suicide by jumping into the funeral pyre of the husband. (Kathāsaritsāgara, Śaktiyaśolambaka, Taraṅga 2).

CANDRĀŚVA (M). Son of King Kuvalayāśva of the Ikṣvāku dynasty. He had two brothers called Dṛḍhāśva and Kapilāśva. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 24).

CANDRASVĀMĪ. A brahmin, who got back his life by worshipping Sūrya. He stayed with his wife, Devamatī in Kamalapura ruled by King Kamalavarman. A son called Mahīpāla was born to him, and at the time of the birth of the child a celestial voice declared that Mahīpāla would become King. A few years later a daughter called Candramatī also was born to Candrasvāmī.
During this period, rains having failed, very severe famine stalked Kamalapura. Even the king unmindful of justice and righteousness began extracting from the people whatever they possessed. Finding the situation deteriorated so much Candrasvāmī set out for his father-in-law's house with Mahīpāla and Candramatī, and on the way they had to cross what was once a wild forest, but which had by then been denuded of green trees or other foliage due to the failure of the rains. The children were severely afflicted by thirst, and so the father, after leaving them at the foot of a tree went in search of water when he was caught by the people of the forest king and taken before him. When he knew that he was about to be given in sacrifice to Devī the brahmin folded his hands and prayed to Sūryadeva, who appeared before him and assured him that not only will death not visit him, but also he would be united with his wife and children.
The children left under the tree began crying, their father having not returned to them, and a Vaiśya called Sārthadhāra who came that way felt pity for the crying children and took them to his house. One day Anantasvāmī, a brahmin and a minister of King Tārānātha of Tārāpura happened to visit Sārthadhāra. Anantasvāmī, who had no children of his own took away with him the children from Sārthadhāra.
One day Sūryadeva appeared to the forest king in his sleep and asked him not to kill the brahmin (Candrasvāmī) held captive by him. The very next morning Candrasvāmī was released from captivity. Roaming about in quest of his children, Candrasvāmī reached the city called Jalapura where he was put up as the guest of a house-holder. One day the host told Candrasvāmī that a vaiśya called Kanakavarman had, a few days back, told him that he (Kanakavarman) had got two children, one male and the other female from the forest, and taken them to the Nālikera island. The very next day Candrasvāmī, along with a vaiśya called Viṣṇuvarman arrived at the Nālikera island, and on enquiry they were told that Kanakavarman, with the children had left for Kaṭāha island. They then went to Kaṭāha island only to be told that Kanakavarman had gone to Karpūra island. With another Vaiśya Candrasvāmi landed on the Karpūra island to no purpose. After thus going to the Suvarṇa and Siṁhala islands too Candrasvāmi met Kanakavarman at Citrakūṭapura. Kanakavarman showed the children to Candrasvāmi, but they were not his. He burst into tears, and returned from Citrakūṭapura. He passed on his way back many a temple and city and at dusk reached a big forest. He satisfied his hunger by eating some roots and fruits, and got upon a tree and sat on the top of it. It was mid-night, yet sleep did not oblige him. Then he saw a mātṛsaṅgha (a group of women) consisting of Nārāyaṇī and others come and dance at the foot of the tree. Nārāyaṇī saw Candrasvāmī and after the dance was over and her companions had left the place Nārāyaṇī called him down from the tree and gave him a flower. And, according to the advice of Nārāyaṇī the next day morning Candrasvāmī went to Tārāpura where, accidentally he got into the house of Anantasvāmī, minister of the kingdom, and, for food, repeated vedic hymns. The minister invited him for meals, and there he saw Mahīpāla and Candrāvatī. He placed the flower presented by Nārāyaṇī on Mahīpāla's nose whereupon the children recognised him, their father. The people celebrated it as a happy day. King Tārāvarman gave his daughter, Vasumatī, in marriage to Mahīpāla along with half his kingdom. They went to Kamalapura and returned with their mother. All of them spent their days very happily at Tārāpura. (Kathāsaritsāgara, Alaṅkāravatī Laṁbaka, Taraṅga 6).

CANDRĀVALOKA. A King of Citrakūṭanagara. When once the King in the course of a hunting expedition came to the bank of a river tired and done up he saw there the very beautiful lady, Indīvaraprabhā, daughter of Maharṣi Kaṇva by Menakā. Having fallen in love with each other they went to the āśrama of the maharṣi where, at his instance, Candrāvaloka took the pledge not to kill animals in future, and Kaṇva married his daughter to the King. On their way back to the palace the couple went to sleep on the banks of a pool which belonged to a Brahmarakṣas, who caught hold of them, but released them on condition that they gave him in their stead a brahmin boy aged seven. Thus they returned to Citrakūṭa and told about the incident to minister Sumati. As advised by Sumati an idol in gold equal in size to a brahmin boy aged seven was made and a proclamation was issued that the golden idol would be given to him who, in return, give a brahmin boy seven years old. A brahmin boy was got, and he was given to the Brahmarakṣas. (Kathāsaritsāgara Śaśāṅkavatī Laṁbaka, Taraṅga 27).

CANDRAVAMŚA. A royal dynasty the kings of which ruled India for a long time. Since the founding father of the dynasty was Candra all the kings in the dynasty came to be called Candravaṁśarāja. (For Candra's birth see Purūravas). A chronological list of the kings of this dynasty is given infra.

Descended from Candra thus, Budha—Purūravas—Āyus—Nahuṣa. Nahuṣa had two sons, Āyati and Yayāti. Yayāti had three sons: Druhyu, Anudruhyu and Pūru by his wife Śarmiṣṭhā, and two sons, Yadu and Turvasu by his wife Devayānī. The genealogy of each of them is given below.

1) Druhyu :—Descended from Druhyu thus:—Babhru—Setu—Āraṇya—Gandharva—Dharma—Ghṛta—Durdama—Pracetas—Mlecchas.

2) Anudruhyu :—Three sons, Sabhānara, Cakṣuṣ and Parokṣa were born to Anudruhyu. Sabhānara begot Kālanara, and he Sṛñjaya. Sṛñjaya had four sons : (a) Janamejaya, (b) Mahāmanas, (c) Uśīnara and (d) Titikṣa. Uśīnara and Titikṣa proved to be family progenitors. Their genealogy is given below :—

c) Uśīnara. Uśīnara had five sons : Śibi, Vena, Kṛmi, Uśi and Darpa of whom Śibi begot five sons: Bhadra—Suvīra—Kekaya—Vṛṣadarpa and Kapotaromā, and from Kekaya was born the Kīcakas.

d) Titikṣa. Descended from Titikṣa were : Kṛśadratha—Homa—Sutapas and Bali, and Bali had seven sons : Anaghābhū—Aṅga—Kaliṅga—Suhva—Puṇḍra—Vaṅga and Adrūpa. Of the seven sons Aṅga turned out to be the family progenitor, and thenceforth the Aṅga royal dynasty starts its course. To Aṅga were born the following sons : Dadhivāhana—Raviratha—Dharmaratha—Citraratha—Satyaratha—Lomapāda—Caturaṅga—Pṛthu—Campa—Haryaṅga and Bhadraratha, and to Bhadraratha were born three sons viz. Bṛhadratha—Bṛhatkarmā and Bṛhadbhānu. And Bṛhadratha had the following sons : Bṛhanmanas, Jayadratha—Vijaya—Dhṛtavrata—Satyakarman and Atiratha. Karṇa was Atiratha's foster son and father of Vṛṣasena.

3) Pūru. Descended from Pūru were:—Janamejaya—Prācinvān—Pravīra—Namasyu—Vītabhaya—Śuṇḍu—Bahuvidha—Saṁyāti—Rahovādi and Raudrāśva. Raudrāśva married Miśrakeśī. They had ten sons, viz. Ṛkṣāyu—Kṛṣāyu—Sannatāyu—Ghṛtāyu—Citāyu—Sthaṇḍilāyu—Dharmāyu—Sammitāyu—Ṛtāyu and Matināra. Matināra begot two sons (a) Pratiratha and (b) Sindhuratha.

a) Pratiratha. From Pratiratha was born Kaṇva and from him Medhātithi.

b) Sindhuratha. He had three sons, Duṣyanta—Pravīra and Sāmanta, and Bharata (Vitatha) was born to Duṣyanta of Śakuntalā. From Bharata were descended the following :—Suhotra—Suhotā—Gala—Garda—Suketu and Bṛhatkṣatra, who had four sons: Nara—Mahāvīra—Garga and Hasti. And, Nara begot Saṁkṛti and he begot Rantideva and Kuru. A son called Pāpakṣaya was born to Mahāvīra. Garga begot Śani. And it was Hasti who founded Hasthināpura. He became the family progenitor. Hasti had three sons, Purumīḍha—Ajamīḍha and Dvimīḍha. The King called Vipra was the son of Purumīḍha.

Ajamīḍha, the second son of Hasti had three sons, (a) Ṛkṣa (b) Bṛhadiṣu and (c) Nīla. Their descendants are mentioned below.

a) Ṛkṣa. Ṛkṣa begot Saṁvaraṇa and from Saṁvaraṇa was born Kuru. From Kuru originated the Kuru dynasty. Kuru had four sons : (A1) Parīkṣit, (A2) Sudhanus, (A3) Jahnu and (A4) Niṣāda. Out of the four Sudhanus and Jahnu became family progenitors.

(A2) Sudhanus. The following were descended from him in order :— Suhotra—Cyavana—Kṛti—Uparicaravasu—Bṛhadratha and Jarāsandha. Jarāsandha had four sons : Soma—Sahadeva—Turya and Śrutaśru.

(A3) Jahnu. From Jahnu were descended - : Suratha—Vidūratha—Sārvabhauma—Jayatsena—Ravaya—Bhāvuka—Cakroddhata—Devātithi—Ṛkṣa—Bhīma and Pratīci. Pratīci had three sons : Devāpi, Śantanu and Bālhīka. Śantanu was also called Mahābhiṣak. And, he had two wives, Gaṅgā and Satyavatī. From Gaṅgā was born Bhīṣma; of Satyavatī, before her marriage, was born Vyāsa by Parāśara. Satyavatī had two sons, Citrāṅgada and Vicitravīrya by Śantanu. From Vyāsa were born Dhṛtarāṣṭra, Pāṇḍu, and Vidura, and from Dhṛtarāṣṭra the Kauravas. Kunti and Mādrī, wives of Pāṇḍu, together got from the devas five sons, viz. Dharmaputra, Bhīma, Arjuna, Nakula and Sahadeva. Dharmaputra had two sons, Devaka and Prativindhya. To Bhīma was born of Hidimbi Ghaṭotkaca. Śatānīka was born of Reṇumatī to Nakula. Arjuna's descendants were : Abhimanyu—Parīkṣit—Candrāpīḍa—Satyakarṇa Śvetakarṇa—Ajapārśva—Janamejaya—Śatānīka—Sahasrānīka—Aśvamedha—Aśvinīkṛṣṇa—Gupta—Citraratha—Śuciratha—Dhṛtimān—Suṣeṇa—Sunīta—Sucakṣus—Nala—Uparipalva—Medhāvī—Mṛtyuñjaya—Duṣya—Nimi—Bṛhadratha—Śatānīka—Durdama—Vibhīnara—Daṇḍapāṇi—Kṣemaka.

B) Bṛhadiṣu. Descended from Bṛhadiṣu were : Bṛhaddhanu—Bṛhatkāya—Jayadratha—Viśada—Senacitta—Rucirāśva. Rucirāśva had three sons : Dṛḍhahanu—Kāśya and Vatsa.

C) Nīla. Descended from Nīla were : Śānti—Suśānti—Puruja—Arka—Bharmyāśva and Pāñcāla. Pāñcāla had five sons : Mudgala, Yavīnara, Kāmpilya, Bṛhadiṣu and Sañjaya. Mudgala had two children : Divodāsa and Ahalyā. Gautama married Ahalyā. To Gautama was born Śatānanda, to Śatānanda Satyavratī and from Satyavratī was born Śaradvān. And from Divodāsa, brother of Ahalyā were descended : Mitrāyu—Puṣya—Sudāsa—Sahadeva—Somaka and Drupada. Drupada became King of Pāñcāla and to him were born Dhṛṣṭadyumna and Pāñcālī (Kṛṣṇā). Dhṛṣṭaketu and Dhṛtaketu were the sons of Dhṛṣṭadyumna.

4) Yadu. The Yadu dynasty owes its origin to Yadu who had four sons : Sahasrajit, Kroṣṭā, Nala and Ripu. Śatajit, the son of Sahasrajit begot three sons : Mahāhaya, Veṇuhaya and Hehaya (Ekavīra). Dharma was Hehaya's son, and Kaṇi was the son of Dharma. Kaṇi had four sons : Sadājit, Mahiṣmān, Bhadrāsana and Durdama. Bhadrāsana begot Dhanaka and he Kṛtavīrya, Kṛtāgni, Kṛtavarman and Kṛtaujas. Kārtavīryārjuna was Kṛtavīrya's son, and Kārtavīryārjuna had hundred sons, Jayadhvaja, Śūrasena, Vṛṣabha, Madhu, Maurjjita and others. Vṛṣṇi with whom the Vṛṣṇi dynasty begins was Madhu's son. From Jayadhvaja the eldest son of Kārtavīrya were descended in order : Tālajaṅgha—Vītihotra—Ananta—Durjaya.

The Vṛṣṇi dynasty. Vṛṣṇi, son of Madhu and grandson of Kārtavīryārjuna had four sons : Sumitra, Yudhājit, Vasu and Sārvabhauma. Śini and Nimna were the sons of Yudhājit. From Śini came in order : Satyaka—Sātyaki (Yuyudhāna)—Jaya—Kaṇi — Amitra — Pṛśni. Pṛśni had two sons, (1) Citraratha and (2) Śvaphalka.

1) Citraratha. Two sons (1A) Viḍūratha and (1B) Kukura were born to Citraratha.

(1*A*) Viḍūratha. From Viḍūratha was born Śūra, and from Śūra was born Śini. Bhoja was Śini's son and from Bhoja, Hṛdīka was born. Hṛdīka had four sons : Devavāha, Gadādhanvā, Kṛtaparvan and Śūra and one daughter Pṛthā (Kuntī). And ten sons were born to Śūra by Māriṣā : Vasu, Devabhāga, Devaśravas, Ānaka, Sṛñjaya, Kākānīka, Śyāmaka, Vatsa, Kavūka and Vasudeva. Vasudeva married Devakī. Śrī Kṛṣṇa was born as the son of Vasudeva and Devakī, and Pradyumna was Śrī Kṛṣṇa's son. Aniruddha was the son of Pradyumna, and Vajra of Aniruddha.

(1*B*) Kukura. The descendants of Kukura were : Vahni—Viloman—Kapotaromā—Tumburudundubhi—Daridra—Vasu—Nāhuka—Āhuka. Āhuka had two sons : Ugrasena and Devaka. Kaṁsa was Ugrasena's son and Devakī his daughter. Devaka had three sons : Devāpa, Upadeva and Sudeva. Devāpa had seven daughters, Śrutadevā, Śāntidevā, Upadevā, Śrīdevā, Devarakṣitā, Sahadevā and Devakī.

2) Śvaphalka. Son of Pṛśni and brother of Citraratha. Śvaphalka, had twelve sons called Akrūra, Āsaṅga, Sārameya, Mṛdura, Mṛduvadgiri, Dharmavṛddha, Sukarman, Kṣatropekṣa, Arimardana, Śatrughna, Gandhamādana and Pratibāhu. Of them Akrūra had two sons : Devaka and Upadevaka.

5) Turvasu. From Turvasu were descended in order : Vahni—Bharga—Bhānu — Tribhānu — Karandhama — Marutta. (As Marutta had no sons Duṣyanta was adopted ; this Duṣyanta is not the famous Duṣyanta, husband of Śakuntalā). Duṣyanta—Varūtha—Gāṇḍīra. Gāṇḍīra had four sons, Gāndhāra, Kerala, Cola and Pāṇḍya. From Gāndhāra came in order, Kola, Druhyu, Babhrusetu, Purovasu — Gāndhārigharman—Ghṛta—Viduṣa—Pracetas. Pracetas had four sons—Aṇibhra, Sabhānara, Cākṣuṣa and Parameṣu. From Sabhānara came in order Kālanara—Sṛñjaya—Purañjaya—Janamejaya—Mahāsāla—Mahāmanas.

All the above royal dynasties belong to Candra vaṁśa. (Agni Purāṇa, Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Bhāgavata and Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa).

CANDRAVARMAN. A king of Kamboja. As handsome as Candra, he was born in the dynasty of the asura called Candra (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 67, Verse 31). Dhṛṣṭadyumna killed him in the great war. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 32, Verse 62).

CANDRĀVATĪ. Daughter of Sunābha, the asura. Pradyumna, son born to Śrī Kṛṣṇa of Rukmiṇī, married Prabhāvatī, daughter of the asura called Vajranābha. Sunābha was the younger brother of Vajranābha. Sunābha had two daughters called Candrāvatī and Guṇavatī. These girls once saw Pradyumna and Prabhāvatī engaged in love-talk and they were attracted by Pradyumna. They requested Prabhāvatī to select husbands for them also from among the Yādavas. Prabhāvatī, in her childhood had learnt from Durvāsas a mantra, the repetition of which by a woman thinking in mind of any male would help to secure that male as the husband for her. Prabhāvatī taught that mantra to Candrāvatī and Guṇavatī. They thought respectively of Gada and Sāmba and repeated the mantra with the result that Gada married Candrāvatī and Sāmba married Guṇavatī.

CANDRĀVATĪ. A wife of Hariścandra in his former birth. (See Hariścandra).

CANDRAVATSAM. A Kṣatriya dynasty which originated from king Candravatsa. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 74, Verse 16).

CANDRAVINĀŚANA. An asura, who descended on earth as a reputed king under the name Jānakī. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 67, Verse 37).

CĀNDRAVRATA. A penance performed for the attainment of beauty, happiness and popularity among the people. It is practised during the full-moon day in Dhanu (December-January). (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 110).

CĀNDRĀYAṆA. A penance. (See Vrata).

CANDRODAYA. A brother of the Virāṭa King. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 158, Verse 42).

CĀṆŪRA I. A Kṣatriya king, who served Dharmaputra at the council hall built by Maya. (M.B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 4, Verse 26).

CĀṆŪRA II. An asura, one of the attendants of Kaṁsa. Kaṁsa had employed as his body-guards many pugilists—Pralaṁbaka, Cāṇūra, Tṛṇāvarta, Muṣṭika, Ariṣṭaka, Keśi, Dhenuka, Agha and Vivida and these pugilists were sent with Pūtanā to Gokula to kill Śrī Kṛṣṇa. On the death of Pūtanā they returned to Mathurā. When Kaṁsa invited Kṛṣṇa to Mathurā Cāṇūra and Muṣṭika were the chief pugilists entrusted with the duty of killing Kṛṣṇa. Kṛṣṇa fought with Cāṇūra and Balabhadra with Muṣṭika. Both Cāṇūra and Muṣṭika were killed. (Bhāgavata Daśama Skandha).

CAPALA. A king in ancient India. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 1, Verse 238).

CĀPAYAJÑA. A programme of worshipping the bow. Kaṁsa did this yajña for fourteen days, and Kṛṣṇa was invited to witness it. And Kṛṣṇa killed Kaṁsa, (Bhāgavata, Daśama Skandha).

CARAKA. Author of Carakasaṁhitā.

CARMAMAṆḌALA. A village in ancient India. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 9, Verse 47).

CARMAVĀN. Son of King Subala. He was the brother of Śakuni. Irāvān, son of Arjuna killed him in the great war. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 90).

CARMAṆVATĪ. A river in north India, now known as river Campā.

1) General. King Śaśabindu, who ruled northern India in olden days once performed a yajña. The skins (carmans) of animals killed in the yajña lay there in a heap like a hill. When rain fell there flowed from the 'skin-hill' a river and it was called Carmaṇvatī. (Devībhāgavata, Prathama Skandha).

2) Other details. (1) River Carmaṇvatī serves Varuṇa in his assembly. (M.B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 9, Verse 21).

(2) Once on the bank of this river Sahadeva defeated the son of Jaṁbhaka in fight. (M.B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 31, Verse 7).

(3) He who bathes in this river will get the same result as from the Agniṣṭoma yajña. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 82, Verse 54).

(4) Carmaṇvatī is one of the rivers responsible for the origin of Agni. (M.B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 222, Verse 23).

CĀRU (CĀRUCITRA). A son of Dhṛtarāṣṭra, killed in war by Bhīmasena. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 136).

CĀRUBHADRA. (See Cārugupta).

CĀRUCANDRA. (See Cārugupta).

CĀRUDEHA. (See Cārugupta).

CĀRUDEṢṆA. I. A son of Śrī Kṛṣṇa by Rukmiṇī. (See Cārugupta). He was present at the wedding of Draupadī. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 185). The chief incident in his life was his killing Vivindhya. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 16, Verse 26).

CĀRUDEṢṆA II. (See Candrasena).

CĀRUDHĪ. A mountain near the Mahāmeru. There are twenty mountains around the Meru, viz., Kāṅga, Kuraga, Kuśumbha, Vikaṅkata, Trikūṭa, Śiśira, Pataṅka, Rucaka, Nīla, Niṣadha, Śitivāsa, Kapila, Śaṅkha, Vaiḍūrya, Cārudhi, Haṁsa, Ṛṣabha, Nāga, Kālañjara and Nārada. (Devībhāgavata, Aṣṭama Skandha).

CĀRUGUPTA. Son of Śrī Kṛṣṇa by Rukmiṇī. Pradyumna, Cārudeṣṇa, Sudeṣṇa, Cārudeha, Sucāru, Cārugupta, Bhadracāru, Cārucandra, Aticāru and Cāru were the ten sons of Rukmiṇī. She had also a daughter called Cārumatī. (Bhāgavata Daśama Skandha). As distinct from the Bhāgavata the Mahābhārata, speaks of three more sons to Rukmiṇī, viz., Cāruyaśas, Cāruveṣa and Cāruśravas. (Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 4, Verse 59.).

CĀRUMATĪ. (See Cārugupta).

CĀRUMATSYA. A brahmavādī son of Viśvāmitra. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 4, Verse 59).

CĀRUNETRĀ. A celestial woman, who spent her time in Kubera's assembly. (M.B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 10, Verse 10).

CĀRUŚĪRṢA. A maharṣi, who belonged to Ālaṁbagotra. A friend of Indra, the maharṣi once spoke to Dharmaputra about the greatness of Śiva. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 18, Verse 5).

CĀRUŚRAVAS. (See Cārugupta).

CĀRUVAKTRA. An attendant of Subrahmaṇya. He was much devoted to brahmins. (M.B. Śalya Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 71).

CĀRUVEṢA. (See Cārugupta).

CĀRUYAŚAS. (See Cārugupta).

CĀRVĀKA I. A Rākṣasa, who was a close friend of Duryodhana. The following story is told about how he happened to become Duryodhana's friend.

In the Kṛtayuga this Rākṣasa did tapas to please Brahmā at Badaryāśrama, and Brahmā gave him the boon that he would be safe from all beings. Then he went round the world troubling brahmins, who, at last sought refuge in Brahmā, and he pacified them with the assurance that Cārvāka would become a friend of Duryodhana when he would insult Brahmins and be reduced to ashes in the fire of their anger.

Accordingly Cārvāka became a friend of Duryodhana. When, after the great war, Dharmaputra entered Hastināpura with his followers thousands of brahmins gathered around and blessed him. Cārvāka also disguised as a brahmin came there and condemning Dharmaputra as an enemy of his own people cursed him. The brahmins recognised him and cursed him to ashes. (M.B. Śānti Parva, Chapters 38, 39).

CĀRVĀKA II. Certain Sanskrit texts refer to another Cārvāka, a philosopher in ancient India. He was an atheist. He controverted in a powerful manner the belief in the existence of heaven and hell after death.

CĀRVĀṄGĪ. Wife of King Bhadraśreṇya and daughter of Kuśāmba. (Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa, Chapter 2).

CĀṢAVAKTRA. An attendant of Subrahmaṇya. He had deep love for brahmins. (M.B. Śalya Parva, Chapter 45).

CATURAṄGA. A king of the Aṅga dynasty. He was the son of Hemapāda and father of Pṛthulākṣa. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 277).

CATURAŚVA. A Rajarṣi. He was a prominent member is Yama's assembly. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 11).

CATURĀSYA. A heroic asura. Once he fell in love with Rambhā, and on his request Svayamprabhā, Rambhā's attendant, won over her mistress to the asura. The asura, Rambhā and Svayamprabhā then shifted their residence to a beautiful palace built in south India by Maya for Caturāsya. But, Indra who felt Rambhā's absence badly came down to earth, killed Caturāsya and took Rambhā back with him. Indra cursed Svayamprabhā to remain on earth. And, he told her that she should welcome and treat well the monkeys who would be arriving there in their quest of Sītā, and then she would get redemption from the curse. The above facts were revealed by Svayamprabhā herself while welcoming the monkeys. (Kampa Rāmāyaṇa).

CATURDAŚĪMĀHĀTMYA. The purāṇas declare that worshipping Śiva on Caturdaśī day will satisfy all desires. There is a story in one of the purāṇas supporting this claim. (See Kumudvatī).

CATURDAṀṢṬRA. An attendant of Subrahmaṇya. He always showed great devotion towards Brahmins. (M.B. Śalya Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 62).

CATURIKĀ. A harlot about whom the following story is told in Kathāsaritsāgara.

Once a poor Brahmin got a piece of gold as Pratigraha (fee or dakṣiṇā for performing a religious rite). While he was perplexed not knowing what to do with the gold, a Viṭa advised him to go on tour with the money got by selling the gold. The poor Brahmin did not even know how to go on tour. Then the Viṭa advised him to visit a harlot called Caturikā, who lived close by and who, the Viṭa said, would teach him how to go on tour.

Brahmin:—What shall I do first after going to the harlot's house?

Viṭa:—Caturikā will become friendly if you would give her the gold. Then you should use sweet and charming words, and that is all.

The Brahmin went immediately to Caturikā's house and he was received honourably by her. Then giving the gold to her he requested her to instruct him about going on tour. This request of his evoked laughter from people around him. Then the Brahmin who was versed in the Śrutis began reciting the Sāman with his palm formed in the shape of the ears of the cow. All those who were present there wildly laughed at him, and somehow or other he escaped from the none too pleasant scene, and reported his experience at the harlot's to the Viṭa. He very easily understood that the reason for the Brahmin being ridiculed was that misreading his advice to use 'sāma' (sweet words) the Brahmin recited the sāmaveda. He took the brahmin back to Caturikā and asked her to return the 'grass' (gold given her by the brahmin) to 'the cow', the Brahmin who was as simple as the cow. Laughingly Caturikā returned the gold to him. (Kathāsaritsāgara, Kathāpīṭha Laṁbakam, Taraṅga 6).

CĀTURMĀSYA. A penance (Vrata) which continues for four months. During this period, the Vedas are to be studied with pure heart. The Pāṇḍavas did this penance at Gayā. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 95).

CATURMUKHALIṄGA. A Brahma liṅga installed on the northern bank of Sarasvatī by Brahmā. Brahmā, to start with, created animate and inanimate objects, and was thinking about further creation when a beautiful girl, born of herself appeared before him. Brahmā became enamoured of that girl and showed an unbecoming passion. As a punishment for this sin one of his heads broke. Thus broken-headed Brahmā, went to the Sthāṇutīrtha, which washes off all sins, on the northern bank of Sarasvatī and installed his own liṅga, known as the Caturmukhaliṅga. This installation of liṅga redeemed him from sins. (Vāmana Purāṇa, Chapter 49).

CATURTHĪVRATA. A fast undertaken so that one may be happy for one year, may achieve all desires and attain Śivaloka. While observing this fast one should worship Gaṇapati on the fourth day after New Moon (Caturthī) in the month of Makara (February-March). Next day the fast should be broken by eating cooked rice and oil seeds. The Mūlamantra of Gaṇapati is 'gaṁ svāhā'; hṛdayādiṣaḍaṅgas beginning with 'gam'. 'Āgacchātikāya' is the āvāhana mantra and 'Gacchātikāya' the visarjana mantra. Gaṇapati should be worshipped with mantras ending with 'tuṅkāya' and beginning with 'gakāra' as also with offering of sandal paste, rice balls etc. "Oṁ Mahotkāyāya vidmahe vakratuṇḍāya dhīmahi tanno dantī pracodayāt" is the Gaṇeśa gāyatrī mantra. He or she who performs the Caturthī vrata will attain Śivaloka. If Gaṇapati is worshipped on a Tuesday which is also Caturthī the devotee will get all his desires satisfied. Caturthī occurring in Mīna (March-April) is called Avighnacaturthī, and that day fasting should be in the night. On Caturthī in April-May Gaṇapati should be worshipped with damanaka flowers, and then the worshipper will become very happy. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 179). Also see Vināyaka Caturthī.

CATURUPĀYAM. The four means used by Kings in olden times to achieve their objects are called Caturupāyam. Sāma, dāna, bheda and daṇḍa are the Caturupāyas (four tactics). There are three other upāyas also, almost equally important as the first four, and the seven upāyas are collectively called Saptopāyas. There are also yet other upāyas, but they are not important enough to merit special mention.

1) Sāma. It is the best means to attract and convert others to one's side. It consists in winning people with sweet words and looks. People who are friendly by temperament and straightforward may be brought round by sāma. Sāma is employed in dealing with sons, brothers and other relatives.

2) Dāna. There are five kinds or varieties of dāna (gift) viz. prītidāna, dravyadāna, svayaṁgrāha, deya and pratimokṣa. If a person gets help from another and acknowledges help by reward that reward is called prītidāna. The miser and the poor should be brought round by prītidāna. Military captains, heroes and citizens should be won over by this dāna. Those who fall at feet should be honoured by dāna.

3) Bheda. Bhedopāya is of three kinds: to destroy or end the friendship subsisting between people, to create dissension and to make the parties quarrel with each other. He who is falsely praised, he who does not desire wealth or welfare, he who has been invited to come and then insulted, traitor to king, he who has been exorbitantly taxed, the angry one, the honourable one, the insulted, the unreasonably forsaken one, he who harbours hatred in his mind, the pacified one, one whose wealth and wife have been taken away or stolen, he who has not been respected though deserving of respect—if such people are in one's opposite camp, suspicion should be raked up among them and thus division created in their ranks. If subordinate chieftains, and forest tribes commit offences they should be brought round by the use of sāma and bheda upāyas.

4) Daṇḍa. Daṇḍopāya is of three kinds, viz, killing, denuding of wealth, and inflicting pain on the body or torture. Daṇḍa has two other forms, prakāśa (open) and aprakāśa (secret). Those who have become objects of hatred to all people should be subjected to prakāśadaṇḍa. People, whose killing the world will detest, should not be killed openly, but only secretly. Enemies should be killed with weapons etc. Brahmins should not be killed. Friends and allies should not be subjected to daṇḍa; friends, who are made objects of daṇḍa will wither away like worm-eaten trees. The King, who possesses the three powers (of wealth, army and people's support) and is fully conscious of the time and environmental factors should annihilate enemies by the instrument of daṇḍa. Evil people should be defeated by daṇḍa itself.

The upāya māyā consists in practising deception by magic or other yogic powers. The powers can be acquired by the worship of the idols of certain Devatās. People who employ go about at night in various disguises. They disguise themselves as beautiful women or even as animals. They also deceive people by creating illusions of clouds, fire or lightning. For instance, Bhīma killed Kīcaka by going to him in the guise of a woman.

Not to dissuade people who indulge in unjustifiable grief, war etc. is the principal aim of the upāya called upekṣā. Hiḍimbī gave up his brother Hiḍimba by practising Upekṣā. Next is the Indrajālopāya (magic). For example, to create illusions of clouds, darkness, rain, fire, and other magic in order to instil fear among troops of the enemy etc. To scare the enemy is the aim of Indrajāla. (For details of Caturupāyas see Kaṇika). (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 241).

CĀTURVARṆYAM. (The four Castes, Classes).

1) General. The purāṇas tell that Brahmā created the four castes like Brahmins, Kṣatriyas, Vaiśyas and Śūdras and assigned to them duties and rules of procedure.

2) Origin. Brahmā got ready for the work of Creation, concentrating his mind on the universal soul, the embodiment of Truth. And, the first to be born from his face were people with sublime qualities, and them he called Brahmins. Then emerged from his chest people in whom the heroic or militant qualities preponderated. (Rājasa). Them the Creator named Kṣatriyas. Then from his thighs were born people in whom rajas and tamas preponderated, and they were called Vaiśyas. And, lastly Brahmā brought forth from his feet another sect of people, and as tamas (darkness, cultural darkness) preponderated in them they were named Śūdras. The system of four castes is called Cāturvarṇyam. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Part 1, Chapter 6).

3) Code of conduct. Ahiṁsā (non-violence), Satyavāda (speaking truth), Bhūtadāya (love for all living beings), Tīrthasevā (resort to holy places), Dāna (gifts), Brahmacarya (celibacy), Vimatsaratva (absence of malice), Service of Devas, Brahmins and Gurus (elders), to attend to all dharmas (duties), Pitṛpūjā (worship of elders) eternal loyalty to King, to accomplish objects in conformity with the injunction of the Śāstras, not to commit cruel deeds, Titikṣā (forbearance, to put up with equanimity the pair of opposites such as pleasure and pain, heat and cold), belief in God—these codes of conduct are common to all Castes and in all the four stations in life. Now, the special codes for each of the four castes.

1) Brahmins. To perform and get performed Yajñas, to study and to teach the Vedas, to give gifts and to receive gifts—these form the dharma (duties) of the Brahmin. Brahmins take their second birth (dvija) on the upanayana (wearing of the sacred thread). The caste of the mother is the caste of the child. But children born to Brahmins of their non-Brahmin wives are not Brahmins. Children born of a Brahmin woman to a Śūdrā are called Caṇḍālas. Sons born of Brahmin women to Kṣatriyas are called Sūtas, and sons born of a Brahmin woman to a Vaiśya are called Vaidehikas. The Brahmin shall not adopt the profession of the other castes. The twice-born are, however, allowed in certain circumstances, the profession of agriculture, protection of cows, commerce and kusīda (to lend money on interest). But, he shall not trade in gorasa (milk and other cow products) lavaṇa (salt) and flesh. If he be an agriculturist, the Brahmin may till the earth, cut medicinal plants and destroy pests. But, he must purify the soul by performing yajñas and worshipping Devas. The soil should be ploughed with eight oxen attached to the plough. He may sustain himself either with Ṛta (food got by begging) or Amṛta (food got not by begging). The suffix "Śarmā" should be added to the names of Brahmin children. Upanayana (wearing of the sacred thread) should be done when the child is eight years old. The mauñji (girdle around the waist) to be worn after upanayana should be made either of muñja grass or of the bark of trees. Brahmin brahmacārins should wear hides, and when they beg for alms the sentence should commence with the word 'Bhavati', e.g. "Bhavati, bhikṣāṁ dehi). The Brahmin can marry in all the castes, but he shall perform ritual only along with the wife of his own caste.

ii) Kṣatriya. To give gifts according to rules, study Vedas and perform yajñas form the duty of the Kṣatriya. To look after and take care of good people and to punish evil-doers are his especial duties. Names of Kṣatriya children should take the suffix "Varmā". After upanayana the child should wear tiger skin. He should carry a daṇḍa (rod) of the Arayāl (peepal) tree. When the Kṣatriya brahmacārin begs for alms the word 'bhavati' should be used in the middle of the sentence, e.g."Bhikṣāṁ bhavati dehi". The Kṣatriya can marry in the other castes, except the Brahmin. At the time of wedding the Kṣatriya woman should hold an arrow in her hand.

iii) Vaiśya. Agriculture, protection of cows and trade are the special duties of the Vaiśya. Children born of Brahmin women to Vaiśyas are called Vaidehikas. Names of Vaiśya children should have the suffix 'gupta' after them. After upanayana the Vaiśya brahmacārin should wear sheep's skin. He should carry a daṇḍa made of a branch of the Kūvala tree. The Vaiśya may have a wife of his own caste and one of the Śūdra caste. At the time of wedding the Vaiśya woman should hold a cane in her hand.

iv) Śūdra. Service to the Brahmin and architecture form the duties of the Śūdra. Children born to Kṣatriya women by Śūdras are called Pulkasas. Children born to Brahmin women by Śūdras are called Caṇḍālas, and sons born to Śūdras by Vaiśya women are called Āyogavas.

The Caṇḍāla's profession is to hang criminals sentenced to death, and to live by women. The Pulkasa must live by hunting. Āyogava is to act on the stage and live by architecture. The Caṇḍāla should live outside the village. The Caṇḍāla has a right to take the clothes on corpses. He shall not have any physical contacts with the others. He will attain salvation if he died in the course of protecting others. The suffix 'dāsa' should be added to his name. He shall marry only from his own caste. (Agni Purāṇa, 4 Chapters from 151).

CATURVEDA. One of the Saptapitṛs (seven manes). Vairājas, agniṣvāttas, gārhapatyas, somapās, Ekaśṛṅgas, Caturvedas and Kālas are the seven manes. (M. B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 11, Verse 47).

CATURYUGA. (See Manvantara).

CATUṢKARṆĪ. One of the female attendants of Skandadeva. (M.B. Śalya Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 25).

CATUṢPATHARATĀ. A female attendant of Skanda. (M.B. Śalya Parva, Chapter 46, Verse 27).

CATVARAVĀSINĪ. A woman attendant of Skanda. (M.B. Śalya Parva, Chapter 46, Verse 12).

CĀVEṬṬUPAṬA. (CĀVERU). (Paṭa = army). A particular division of the army which in olden days used to come forward to lay down their lives in the service of the country. When defeat in war was almost certain for their king an army division under royal leadership was formed of heroes, who took their last leave of their homes and people. The soldiers left their homes with their head and eyebrows shaved, and people gave them a hearty send-off. Either victory or death in battlefield was their slogan. This system originated in Kerala. Imitating Kerala, Turkey and Egypt formed their own division of Cāveṭṭupaṭa in the 15th century. The Cāveṭṭupaṭa of Turkey called the Janissary was formed out of poor Christians captured in war, and that of Egypt called Mamaluk was formed out of slaves. But, the Cāveṭṭupaṭa of ancient Kerala was self-organised out of burning love for their king and country. The families of those warriors of the paṭa who died in fight were allotted royal favours. Even before, in the 14th century A.D. there existed in Kerala this system of Cāveṭṭupaṭa. From A.D. 1090 to 1111 A.D. many fierce wars were fought between Kerala and the Cola country, and it was perhaps during this period that this system of fighting came into vogue. Certain inscriptions of the period go to prove that Rāmavarmakulaśekhara Cakravarti who ruled Kerala during the above period drove out the Colas from Quilon and captured places up to Koṭṭar.

Foreign writers have also referred to the Cāveṭṭupaṭa. "Amouces" and "Amochi" used in the 'Rise of Portuguese power in India' indicate the Cāveṭṭupaṭa. "In the war between Cochin and Calicut in 1504 three princes of Cochin were killed, one of them being the nephew of the ruling monarch. On his death 200 Cāveṭṭu warriors who formed the body-guard of the nephew rushed to the field after shaving their heads and eyebrows and killed all the enemies they saw."

CEDI. A king of the Yaduvaṁśa.

1) Genealogy. Descending in order from Viṣṇu:—Brahmā-Atri—Candra—Budha—Purūravas—Āyus—Nahuṣa—Yayāti — Yadu — Kroṣṭhā — Vrajīnavān — Śvāhi—Ruśeka — Citraratha — Śaśabindu — Pṛthuśravas — Dharma—Rucaka - Jyāmagha- Vidarbha—Romapāda—Bhadru—Kṛta—Uśika—Cedi. The Cedi dynasty begins from Cedi and the land ruled over by Cedi came to be known as Cedirājya.

2) Other details regarding King Cedi.

1) Once Uparicaravasu conqueredt his land. (Śloka 2, Chapter 63, Ādi Parva).

2) Kareṇumatī, wife of Nakula, was a princess of Cedi rājya. (Śloka 79, Chapter 95, Ādi Parva).

3) Once Śiśupāla reigned over this country. After his death his son Dhṛṣṭaketu was crowned king. (Śloka 36, Chapter 45, Sabhā Parva).

4) During the period of Nala, Cedirājya was ruled by king Subāhu. Damayantī lived in his palace very comfortably. (Śloka 44, Chapter 65, Vana Parva).

5) Dhṛṣṭaketu, a king of Cedi, came to the help of the Pāṇḍavas with an akṣauhiṇī (an army of 21870 chariots, equal number of elephants, 65610 horses and 10930 infantry men.). (Śloka 7, Chapter 19, Udyoga Parva).

6) The Kṣatriya warriors of this state helped Śrī Kṛṣṇa in many ways. (Śloka 11, Chapter 28, Udyoga Parva).

7) Cedi was counted as one of the prominent kingdoms of ancient Bhārata. (Śloka 40, Chapter 9, Bhīṣma Parva).

CEKITĀNA. (SĀTVATA, VĀRṢṆEYA).

1) General information. An archer of the Vṛṣṇi dynasty. He lived for the Pāṇḍavas and attained Vīra Svarga (Heaven for the brave) in the great battle.

2) Important events. (1) Cekitāna was present at the svayaṁvara of Draupadī. (Chapter 171, Śloka 18, Udyoga Parva).

2) When the Pāṇḍavas entered the hall constructed by Maya for the first time Cekitāna was with them. (Śloka 27, Chapter 4, Sabhā Parva).

3) At the time of the Rājasūya he approached Dharmaputra and presented him with an arrow-holder. (Śloka 9, Chapter 53, Sabhā Parva).

4) On the first day of the great battle this great archer wrestled with Suśarmā. (Śloka 60, Chapter 45, Bhīṣma Parva).

5) At the Kurukṣetra in the combat with Kṛpācārya both of them fainted. (Śloka 31, Chapter 84, Bhīṣma Parva).

6) He wrestled with Citrasena. (Śloka 8, Chapter 110, Bhīṣma Parva).

7) Cekitāna fought with Anuvinda in the Kurukṣetra battle. (Śloka 48, Chapter 14, Droṇa Parva).

8) Droṇācārya defeated Cekitāna in the great battle. (Śloka 68, Chapter 125, Droṇa Parva).

9) Duryodhana killed Cekitāna in the great battle. (Śloka 31, Chapter 12, Śalya Parva).

10) When Vyāsa by his yogic powers invited the spirits of all the dead warriors on the banks of the Gaṅgā the spirit of Cekitāna was also there. (Śloka 12, Chapter 32, Āśramavāsika Parva).

CEṀB (U). (COPPER). The sperm of Lord Śiva which was dropped into the river Gaṅgā developed into form and gave birth to Subrahmaṇya. Along with Subrahmaṇya came out from Gaṅgā gold and silver and from its heat steel and copper. From the dirt came out tin. (Sarga 37, Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa).

CENKAṆṆARĀJA. See Jambukeśvara.

CENNĀSU NAMBŪTIRI. Cennās Nārāyaṇan Nambūtirippād was born and bred up in Kerala. He was born in Vanneri in Ponnāni Taluk in the year 1428 A.D. His father was Ravi Nambūtirippād of Bhārgava gotra. Besides his book 'Tantrasamuccaya' he has written a book 'Mānavavāstulakṣaṇa'. This book is called 'Manuṣyālayacandrikā' also.

CERA. (A king of serpents). See under Ruru.

CERIPPU. (FOOTWEAR). There is a story in Mahābhārata of how Cerippu and Kuṭa (footwear and umbrella) were born. Once the heat of the Sun became unbearable to Jamadagni and enraged at this the sage started sending arrows against the Sun. His wife Reṇukā was supplying him with arrows. When a set of arrows was finished Reṇukā brought another set. This continued without break and the Sun began to feel the attack. Unable to do anything against the sage the Sun heated the head and foot of Reṇukā on her way to supply the arrows so fiercely that Reṇukā fell down under a banyan tree exhausted. When she became well enough to walk she took the arrows to her husband who was very angry for her being late. She then explained to him how because of the extreme heat of the sun she fell down on the way. Jamadagni then started with increased fury his shower of arrows and the Sun in the disguise of a Brahmin approached and advised him that it was not possible to strike down the Sun because he was a swift-mover in the sky and so it was better to withdraw from that attempt. But Jamadagni said the Sun would be stationary for some time at midday and then he would hit the Sun down. When the Sun found that Jamadagni would never drop his attempt he accepted defeat and presented Jamadagni with a pair of sandals and an umbrella to protect against the heat from below and above. From that day onwards footwear and umbrella came into vogue.

The practice of presenting sandals and umbrella is being carried down from generation to generation and even today it is being followed; these two are given as gifts on the 'Śrāddha' day. (Chapters 95 and 96, Anuśāsana Parva, M.B.)

CH. This letter means a cut, amputation severance. (Chapter 348, Agni Purāṇa).

CHĀGAMUKHA. Subrahmaṇya. He is here idolised as one having a face like that of a goat. (Śloka 3, Chapter 228, Vana Parva).

CHANDODEVA. Sage Mataṅga was known in his previous birth by this name. (See Mataṅga).

CHATRAKETU. The second son born to Lakṣmaṇa of his wife Ūrmilā. The eldest son was Takṣaka. Śrī Rāma after his return from the exile established a Kingdom called Agati on the eastern sea-shore and crowned Takṣaka as the King of that place. On the western side after subjugating the mlechhas (low-caste non-Hindu tribe) Śrī Rāma established another kingdom called Candramatī and installed Chatraketu as the King of that country. (Uttara Rāmāyaṇa).

CHATRAVATĪ. There was in ancient Bharata a country called Ahicchatra. Chatravatī was the capital of that State. The country itself is also known as Chatravatī. (Śloka 21, Chapter 165, Ādi Parva).

CHĀYĀ. A substitute of Saṁjñā, daughter of Viśvakarmā. Saṁjñā got from Sūrya three children, Manu, Yama and Yamī . The heat of Sūrya, her husband, became unbearable to her and so she created a substitute in her exact form and leaving her to look after Sūrya, her husband, she left the place and went to her father. Sūrya did not know of this replacement and taking her to be Saṁjñā he produced three children by her, Śani, Sāvarṇamanu and Tapatī. Chāyā loved her sons more and this made Yama angry and he raised his legs to strike her when Chāyā cursed that Yama's legs would fall off from his body. Yama complained to his father and he amended the curse and said that only some flesh from his limbs would fall to the ground and that flesh would serve as food to the germs in the earth. Yama would escape from further injury. After consoling his son he turned towards Chāyā. The anger of Sūrya frightened her and she told him everything. Sūrya then divorced her and brought back Saṁjñā. For details see Saṁjñā. (Chapter 9 of Harivaṁśa; Chapter 2, Aṁśa 3, Viṣṇupurāṇa).

CHĀYĀGRĀHIṆĪ. A demoness who harassed Hanūmān on his flight to Laṅkā from the Bhārata shore. She, by a trick of the shade obstructed his path and Hanūmān realising the danger killed her by a blow with his left foot and sprang forward. (Sundara Kāṇḍa, Kampa Rāmāyaṇa).

CHĀYĀSUTA. Śani (Saturn).

CIBUKA. A low-caste born of Nandinī, the cow, during her fight with Viśvāmitra. (Śloka 38, Chapter 174, Ādi Parva).

CIDAMBARA (SITĀMBARA). A Sanskrit poet of 16th century A.D. He was a poet in the court of emperor Veṅkaṭa who ruled over Vijayanagar during the period 1586 A.D. to 1614 A.D. His one great work is 'Rāghavayādavapāṇḍavīya'. There are three Kāṇḍas in it and one Kāṇḍa each is devoted to the story of Śrī Rāma, Śrī Kṛṣṇa and the Pāṇḍavas.

CIKṢURA. War minister of Mahiṣāsura. Tāmra was his finance minister, Asiloma prime minister, Biḍāla foreign minister, Ubharka Commander-in-chief, Śukra, minister for education and Bāṣkala, Trinetra and Kālabandhaka consulting ministers. (Devī Bhāgavata, Pañcama Skandha).

CIKURA. Son of Āryaka, the serpent king. Cikura had a son called Sumukha. Once Garuḍa ate Cikura for food. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 120, Verse 23).

CĪNAR. People of China. It is believed that the Cīnars were born from the body of Nandinī, the cow, during her fight with Viśvāmitra. (Śloka 38, Chapter 174, Ādi Parva). These low-caste people paid homage to Yudhiṣṭhira and gave him many presents. (Śloka 31, Chapter 51, Sabhā Parva).

CINTĀMAṆI. A diamond. This was salvaged from the ocean of milk along with other precious items like Airāvata, Uccaiḥśravas, Kalpavṛkṣa, Kaustubha, Candra, Apsaras, Mahālakṣmī, Tārā, and Rumā. (Yuddha Kāṇḍa, Kaṁpa Rāmāyaṇa).

CIRADĀTĀ. There was a king called Ciradātā in the country called Cirapura. Though himself a good man he was surrounded by bad advisers. Once a foreigner, Prasaṅga, came along with two friends to the palace to see the King. But due to the bad advice of his courtiers the King did not care to see them even. For five years they stayed there without even getting a look at the King. One day the only son of the King died. All the courtiers gathered round the child and pretended to be greatly grieved. Prasaṅga and his friends also came to the scene. They saw the king and spoke to him thus: "For five years you have not cared either to see or talk to us. We were cherishing a hope that at least your son would give us a better treatment when he grew old and became King. We were living here on that hope and now that hope also has been shattered and so we are leaving the place this instant." The King was surprised to hear that they were prepared even to wait for his son to become the King and gave them very many presents. (Taraṅga 5, Alaṅkāravatī Laṁbaka, Kathāsaritsāgara).

CĪRAKA. A place of habitation in ancient India. Once Karṇa conquered this land and from then onwards they started paying tribute to Duryodhana. (Śloka 19, Chapter 8, Karṇa Parva).

CIRAKĀRĪ. A son of Gautama Maharṣi. He used to think deeply before doing any deed and so he earned the name Cirakārī.

Once the sage Gautama found out proof against the chastity of his own wife and enraged at this commanded his son Cirakārī to chop off the head of the latter's mother. Giving this command Gautama went into the forest and Cirakārī in obedience to his father's order came before his mother, weapon in hand. He did not kill her immediately but pondered over the consequences of the deed. Matricide is a great sin, he mused. Then again who would be there to look after father if mother died. Perhaps his father, when he cools down, might regret his command and come back repentant. Thus he was sitting undecided when Gautama returned full of remorse for his hasty order. On seeing his wife alive he was greatly relieved and immensely happy and he blessed Cirakārī. (Chapter 266, Śānti Parva).

CIRAÑJĪVI. The name of a crow, a character in the 'Pañcatantra'. (See under Meghavarṇa).

CIRANTAKA. A son of Garuḍa. (Śloka 1, Chapter 101, Udyoga Parva).

CĪRAVĀSAS I. A Kṣatriya King born as a rebirth of an asura Krodhavaśa. (Śloka 61, Chapter 67, Ādi Parva).

CĪRAVĀSAS II. A yakṣa. He stayed in the court of Kubera worshipping him. (Śloka 10, Chapter 10, Sabhā Parva).

CIRĀYUS. An ancient King of the country Cirāyu. Nāgārjuna was a minister of this King. Nāgārjuna knew the secret of 'Rasāyanasiddhi'. Once Nāgārjuna prepared a medicine for himself and the King which if taken would keep them eternally young. They took medicine accordingly.

After some days a child of the minister died. Grief-stricken Nāgārjuna decided to prepare Amṛta which would eradicate death from this world. He had prepared it but there remained one more medicine to be added to this. The auspicious moment to add the same was to come only after five days and Nāgārjuna waited. The devas were frightened. If Amṛta was made available on earth men would become Devas. Devas could not bear this and so they sent the Aśvinīkumāras to the earth to persuade Nāgārjuna to desist from his work of preparing Amṛta. Further they informed him that his dead child was living happily in heaven. He agreed to stop his work.

After some time Cirāyus crowned his son Jīvahara as the heir-apparent. Overjoyed Jīvahara ran to his mother Dhanaparā to give her the glad tidings. Dhanaparā told her son thus: "My child, why should you be so happy to think that you have become the heir-apparent. Several sons of your father had already become yuvarājas and died before becoming King. Your father has taken a medicine from Nāgārjuna and that will keep him eternally young. None of his sons can aspire to be the King. Your father is now eight hundred years old and will live long. Many of you will become yuvarājas but not the King. I will therefore suggest a way to tide over this difficulty. Everyday in the afternoon Nāgārjuna would come outside the palace and enquire whether anybody is in need of anything. At that time he would give whatever was asked for. It is an opportunity when you can ask for his head. When Nāgārjuna is dead your father would either die of grief or go to the forests. Then you can become the King."

Jīvahara was pleased to hear this suggestion and he went that after-noon to the palace of Nāgārjuna and when Nāgārjuna as usual came out with his query Jīvahara asked for his head. Most willingly Nāgārjuna offered his head to be chopped off. But the effect of the medicine made even the strongest cut by the sword ineffective. Jīvahara lost many swords without Nāgārjuna getting even a small scratch on his neck. The hubbub brought the King to the scene and he immediately asked Nāgārjuna to withdraw his head but Nāgārjuna refused saying, "Oh, King, in my ninetynine previous births I have offered my head like this and please do not ask me to desist from making this offer for the hundredth time". So saying he embraced the King and taking a powder from his body smeared it on the sword and asked Jīvahara to strike again. This time very easily Jīvahara severed the head from the body of Nāgārjuna. The King was greatly aggrieved and he renounced all and went to the forest and led a pious life.

Cirāyus' son Jīvahara became King. But Nāgārjuna's sons killed him and his mother died of grief. (Taraṅga, Ratnaprabhā Lambaka, Kathāsaritsāgara).

CĪRIṆI. A river. It was on the banks of this river that Vaivasvata Manu clad in bark-skin and with knotted hair did penance. (Śloka 6, Chapter 187, Vana Parva).

CITAL. (Termites). Cital has got its own place in the purāṇas. Devī Bhāgavata has the following story about the origin of it.

Mahāviṣṇu once looking at the face of Lakṣmī laughed without any apparent reason. Lakṣmī, thinking that Viṣṇu was laughing at her and that he had an eye on some other woman more beautiful than her lost her temper and cursed Viṣṇu that his head would be severed from his body.

No sooner was the curse pronounced than the asuras came in batches fully armed and challenged Viṣṇu to war. Single-handed the Lord fought the asuras with one bow. The fight did not end though it continued for thousands of years. Viṣṇu felt tired and decided to rest awhile. He planted one end of the untied bow on the ground, rested his chin on the other and sat in Padmāsana. Being very tired the Lord remained asleep for a long time in this posture.

About this time the devas made preparations to perform a yajña. All the devas except Mahāviṣṇu attended that yajña. Since he was the master of yajñas performed for purposes of the devas they could not begin it in his absence. So, Brahmā and others went in search of Viṣṇu to Vaikuṇṭha. But he was not to be found there. Then Brahmā and others found out with their eyes of knowledge where Viṣṇu was and they went to the place where he was sleeping. They waited there for a long time, yet Viṣṇu did not awake from sleep. Then Brahmā hit at a plan to awaken Viṣṇu. It was to create citals (termites) to eat the end of the bow. When they had eaten away the end of the bow planted on the ground the cord binding the two ends of it would break, the bow would straighten up and the speedy movement of it would awaken Viṣṇu.

According to this plan Brahmā created citals, but his other plans were not acceptable to the citals. They argued that the advantage of awakening the Lord from sleep would go only to the devas, while its sin would fall upon them.

They argued,

Nidrābhaṅgaḥ kathāchedo
Dampatyoḥ prītibhedanam /
Śiśumātṛvibhedaśca
Brahmahatyāsamaṁ smṛtam //*

Brahmā conceded the justness of this argument and agreed that, in future, a part of the result of yajñas shall go to citals. It was after this that havis (sacrificial offering) which, in the course of being submitted to the fire falls on the sides of the pit of fire became the share of citals (termites). This promise of Brahmā pleased the the citals, and they did as was bidden by Brahmā and the bow of Viṣṇu straightened up with a terrific sound. The devas were terror-stricken, the whole universe shook, the earth experienced a convulsion and the oceans too were shaken. Moreover, the head of Viṣṇu was severed from the body, rose high up in the sky and fell into the sea. Brahmā, Śiva and others opened their eyes only to find the body of Viṣṇu lying thus without the head.

*To disturb one in sleep, to interrupt a story, to separate husband and wife as also mother and child from each other—these things are tantamount to Brahmahatyā (killing of the brahmin).

This loss of Viṣṇu's head proved to be useful in another way. Now, Hayagrīva, after securing the boon from Brahmā that he would be killed only by one with horse's head, was running rough-shod over the whole earth. The devas cut off the head of a horse and attached it to the trunk of Viṣṇu. Thus Viṣṇu came to life again, and according to his orders the citals gnawed away the cord of Hayagrīva's bow as a result of which he was killed. (Devīmāhātmya, Prathma Skandha).

CITĀYU. A king of the Pūru dynasty. He was the son of Bhadrāśva, who had ten sons called Ṛkṣāyu, Kṛṣāyu, Sannatāyu, Ghṛtāyu, Citāyu, Sthaṇḍilāyu, Dharmāyu, Sammitāyu, Kṛtāyu and Matināra. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 278).

CITRA I. A son of Dhṛtarāṣṭra killed in war by Bhīmasena. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 136, Verse 20).

CITRA II. A gajarāja (king elephant) with whom Subrahmaṇya, as a child, used to play. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 225, Verse 23).

CITRA III. A hero who fought on the Kaurava side against the Pāṇḍavas. He was killed by Prativindhya. (M.B. Karṇa Parva, Chapter 14, Verse 32).

CITRA IV. A hero from the Cedi Kingdom who fought on the Pāṇḍava side against the Kauravas. Karṇa killed him. (M.B. Karṇa Parva, Chapter 56, Verse 46).

CITRĀ. A celestial maiden. When once Aṣṭāvakra went to the court of Kubera this maiden gave a dance in honour of his visit. (Śloka 44, Chapter 14, Anuśāsana Parva).

CITRABĀHU (CITRĀYUDHA). A son of Dhṛtarāṣṭra. He was killed in war by Bhīma. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 136, Verse 20).

CITRABĀṆA. (CITRA, CITRAKA). A son of Dhṛtarāṣṭra. Bhīma killed him in war. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 137, Verse 27).

CITRABARHA. A son of Garuḍa. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 101, Verse 12).

CITRACĀPA. (CITRAŚARĀSANA, ŚARĀSANA). One of the hundred sons of Dhṛtarāṣṭra. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 67).

CITRADEVA. An attendant of Subrahmaṇya. He loved brahmins deeply. (M.B. Śalya Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 71).

CITRADHARMĀ. A king in ancient India. The asura called Virūpākṣa was born again as Citradharman. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 67). The Pāṇḍavas invited him to come and help them in the war. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 4, Verse 13).

CITRAGUPTA. A minister of Kāla. (God of death). His duty is to examine, after the death of men, a list of the good and evil actions they had done while living. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 130).

CITRAKA (CITRA, CITRABĀṆA). A son of Dhṛtarāṣṭra. Bhīma killed him in the great war. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 137).

CITRAKETU I. An emperor, who remained childless for a long time. At last a son was born to him owing to the blessings of Sage Aṅgiras. But, ere long the child was dead and gone, and its parents, immersed in sorrow took the dead child to Aṅgiras. Nārada also happened to be there on the occasion. Aṅgiras restored the dead child to life and asked him to live with the parents. The boy immediately stood up and told Aṅgiras that he had many parents in his many previous lives, and requested to be enlightened as to which of those parents he was to live with. Brahmā and Nārada felt confused. In the end they disappeared after imparting spiritual wisdom to Citraketu. And, Citraketu, who, for eight days immersed himself in concentrating the mind on God was turned into a Gandharva; his wife too turned Gandharva.

And, both of them rose up in the sky and flying over Mount Kailāsa looked down to the mountain. There they saw Pārvatī being seated on the thighs of Śiva at which sight Citraketu laughed. Enraged by the laughter Pārvatī cursed him to be born as an asura, and he was born as such. Vṛtrāsura was Citraketu born as asura. (Bhāgavata, Saṣṭha Skandha).

CITRAKETU II. A son of Garuḍa. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 101, Verse 12).

CITRAKETU III. A Pāñcāla prince who fought on the side of the Pāṇḍavas. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 95, Verse 41).

CITRAKETU IV. A son of Śiśupāla. (Bhāgavata, Navama Skandha).

CITRAKEŚĪ. An Apsarā woman. King Vatsa begot sons like Vṛṣa of her. (Bhāgavata, Navama Skandha).

CITRĀKṢA. One of the hundred sons of Dhṛtarāṣṭra. Bhīmasena killed him in the great battle. (Droṇa Parva, Chapter 136).

CITRAKUṆḌAKA. (DĪRGHALOCANA). One of the Kauravas killed by Bhīma. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 96, Verse 27).

CITRAKŪṬA. A mountain.

Renowned in the purāṇas, this mountain is on the banks of the river, Mandākinī. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 85). It was here, at Citrakūṭa that Śrī Rāma, Sītā and others lived for a period of time. It is said that Rājalakṣmī (royal wealth and welfare) will embrace those who fast on the Citrakūṭa after a bath in the Mandākinī. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 26, Verse 29). This mountain is in Bāndā Zilla of the U.P. in modern India.

Citrakūṭa is described in Cantos 56 and 94 of Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa.

CITRALEKHĀ I. A celestial maiden. This maiden came and danced in the assembly of the Pāṇḍavas once. (Śloka 34, Chapter 9, Vana Parva, M.B.).

CITRALEKHĀ II. A companion of Uṣā , daughter of the demon, Bāṇa. She was a beautiful portrait painter. Uṣā once dreamt of Aniruddha, grandson of Kṛṣṇa. Even before knowing the identity of the idol of her dream Uṣā fell in love with him. Next day morning Citralekhā gathered from the gloomy Uṣā details of her dream and Citralekhā started making portraits of many known charming princes but Uṣā was not satisfied. She then drew in her imagination a figure which was exactly like that of Aniruddha, the man of her dream. Uṣā was satisfied and it was through the cleverness of Chitralekhā that Aniruddha was brought to Uṣā's room and Uṣā was able to marry Aniruddha. (See under 'Aniruddha').

CITRAMUKHA. A sage. Though he was born a Vaiśya, he became a brahmin and from there gradually rose to the status of a brahmarṣi. (Chapter 56, Anuśāsana Parva, M.B.)

CITRĀṄGA I. (CITRĀṄGADA, ŚRUTĀNTAKA). One of the hundred sons of Dhṛtarāṣṭra. In the great battle Bhīmasena killed him. (Śloka 11, Chapter 26, Śalya Parva).

CITRĀṄGA II. A warrior. In the Aśvamedhayajña performed by Śrī Rāma Śatrughna followed the sacrificial horse and Citrāṅga blocked them on their way. Śatrughna killed him. (Chapter 27, Pātāla Kāṇḍa, Padma Purāṇa).

CITRĀṄGADA I. (CITRĀṄGA). See under Citrāṅga I.

CITRĀṄGADA II. A son of the Mahārāja Śantanu. King Śantanu of the Candra dynasty had two wives, Gaṅgā and Satyavatī. Bhīṣma is the son born of Gaṅgā; of Satyavatī were born two sons, Citrāṅgada and Vicitravīrya. They were very brave and learned. After ruling his kingdom for a long period, living with Satyavatī and the three children Śantanu passed away. Because Bhīṣma dedicated himself to a life of unbroken chastity Citrāṅgada was crowned King. Once when he went to the forest for hunting he met with a gandharva of the same name. Both did not like the other to keep the same name and so a fight ensued. It was fought in Kurukṣetra and lasted for three years. In the end Citrāṅgada was killed. Bhīṣma felt very sorry and after asking Vicitravīrya to perform the funeral rites crowned him as King. (Devī Bhāgavata, Prathama Skandha).

CITRĀṄGADA III. A gandharva. See under Citrāṅgada II.

CITRĀṄGADA IV. One of the Kings who attended the svayaṁvara of Draupadī. He might have been the King of either Kaliṅga or Daśārṇa because both these states were then ruled by a Citrāṅgada, (Śloka 22, Chapter 185, Ādi Parva).

CITRĀṄGADA V. A king of Kaliṅga. Almost all the Kings of Bhārata attended a svayaṁvara once held at the palace of this King. (Śloka 2, Chapter 4, Śānti Parva).

CITRĀṄGADA VI. A king of Daśārṇa. He blocked the sacrificial horse sent out by Dharmaputra during the Aśvamedhayajña and Arjuna killed him. (Aśvamedha Parva, Chapter 83, Śloka 7).

CITRĀṄGADA VII. A deer. A character in the stories in the book 'Pañcatantra Stories' (See B-2 in Pañcatantra).

CITRĀṄGADĀ I. A celestial maiden. Once this girl gave a dance in the court of Kubera in honour of Aṣṭāvakra. (Śloka 44, Chapter 19, Anuśāsana Parva).

CITRĀṄGADĀ II. A wife of Arjuna.

General information. When once Dharmaputra was closeted with Pāñcālī in amorous talks Arjuna by mistake entered the room and was thus compelled as per a previous mutual agreement to go on a pilgrimage for a year. During this exile he married the serpent girl Ulūpī. After that he proceeded again on his pilgrimage and reached a state called Maṇalūr. Maṇalūr was then reigned by a King called Citravāhana. Citrāṅgadā was the daughter of Citravāhana.

An ancestor of Citravāhana greatly grieved by the lack of a son, did great penance to propitiate Śiva and Śiva blessed him and said that in future he and his successors would get a son to keep their line unbroken. Accordingly all the forefathers of Citravāhana got a son each but when it came to the turn of the latter he got a girl instead.

Arjuna accidentally saw Citrāṅgadā and fell in love with her, and knowing that, the king received Arjuna in his palace and requested Arjuna to marry his daughter. Arjuna married her and the couple got a son named Babhruvāhana. Promising them that he would come back and take them to Hastināpura Arjuna continued his pilgrimage. (Chapters 219, 220, and 221, Ādi Parva).

2) How Citrāṅgadā came to Hastināpura. When after the great epic battle Dharmaputra conducted an Aśvamedhayajña it was Arjuna who led the sacrificial horse to the south. When Arjuna came to Maṇalūr he came against Babhruvāhana who challenged him for a fight. In the grim battle that ensued Arjuna fell dead by the piercing arrows of Babhruvāhana, his own son. At that time Ulūpī and Citrāṅgadā came to the scene and seeing Arjuna lying dead, Ulūpī brought the diamond, Mṛtasañjīvanī, and placing it on Arjuna's face brought him back to life. (See Babhruvāhana for details). After this incident all of them, Citrāṅgadā, Ulūpī and Babhruvāhana went to Hastināpura along with Arjuna. (Chapters 79 to 81, Aśvamedha Parva).

3) Other details

(1) Citrāṅgadā on reaching Hastināpura bowed down before Kuntī and Pāñcālī touching their feet and lived amicably with others like Subhadrā. (Śloka 2, Chapter 88, Aśvamedha Parva).

(2) Kuntī, Subhadrā and Pāñcālī gave Citrāṅgadā many diamonds as present. (Śloka 3, Chapter 88, Aśvamedha Parva).

(3) Citrāṅgadā looked to the comforts of Gāndhārī as a servant-maid. (Śloka 23, Chapter 1, Āśramavāsika Parva).

(4) Citrāṅgadā was one among the women who wept when at the fag end of their life Dhṛtarāṣṭra, Gāndhārī and Kuntī started for Vanavāsa (life in the forest). (Śloka 10, Chapter 15, Āśramavāsika Parva).

(5) Citrāṅgadā was a beautiful woman having an enchanting figure as that of a Madhūka flower. (Śloka 11, Chapter 25, Āśramavāsika Parva).

(6) After the Mahāprasthāna of the Pāṇḍavas Citrāṅgadā left for Maṇipur. (Śloka 18, Chapter 1, Mahāprasthānika Parva).

CITRĀṄGADĀ III. Daughter of Viśvakarmā. Once while she was bathing in a pond along with her companions in the forest of Naimiśa Prince Suratha, son of Sudeva, came that way. Seeing him Citrāṅgadā told her companions "This beautiful young man is in love. I must give myself to him". Though her companions objected to her doing this, waving aside the objections Citrāṅgadā approached Suratha.

When Viśvakarmā knew about this he was extremely angry and cursed her saying that she would never have a marriage. Citrāṅgadā fainted when she heard the curse and her companions tried their best to wake her up, but failed. They then took her to be dead and left the place in search of firewood and other things to conduct a funeral.

When Citrāṅgadā woke up she looked around for her companions and finding none including her lover, the prince, she ran and threw herself into the river, Sarasvatī.

That river pushed her down to river Gomatī and that river in turn washed her ashore a huge forest. There she was met by the sage Ṛtadhvaja. Knowing her sad tale the sage felt compassion for her and cursed Viśvakarmā to be born as a monkey. Then he let her marry her lover and blessed them. (Chapters 63 and 64, Vāmana Purāṇa).

CITRĀṄGĪ. Daughter of Bhadraśreṇya, a king of Hehaya. She was the wife of Durmada. (See under Durmada).

CITRAPUṢPAM. A garden where peculiar kinds of flowers grow. This garden is on the higher planes of Mount Sukakṣa to the west of Dvārakā. (M.B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 38).

CITRARATHA I. (AṄGĀRAPARṆA). A devagandharva.

1) Birth. Citraratha was the gandharva son of Kaśyapaprajāpati of his wife Muni. (Śloka 43, Chapter 65, Ādi Parva).

2) Citraratha and Arjuna. The greatest event in the life of Citraratha alias Aṅgāraparṇa was the defeat he suffered at the hands of Arjuna. The Pāṇḍavas after their escape from the lac palace (Lākṣāgṛha) through a tunnel arrived in a forest and there they killed the demons Hiḍimba and Baka. One night they were walking along the shores of the river Gaṅgā when they heard a sound of somebody bathing in the river. Arjuna who was walking ahead waving a country torch went to see who was bathing at that time of the night. Arjuna then saw Citraratha enjoying a bath with his wife Kumbhīnasī. That period of the night was allotted to the gandharvas, and human beings were not expected to be out walking at that time. Citraratha felt it impertinent that Arjuna a human being should be out walking at night and peep into the privacy of the gandharvas. The gandharva and Arjuna so entered into a combat. Citraratha who was a great fighter was, after a grim battle, subdued, bound hand and foot, and brought before his brothers by Arjuna. Kumbhīnasī followed her exhausted, powerless and spiritless husband and pleaded to Dharmaputra to release him. Dharmaputra advised Arjuna to do so and on getting his release he taught Arjuna the famous Cākṣuṣīvidyā—the magic art of seeing by one's own eyes anything and everything in the three worlds : Heaven, Earth and the netherworld. Manu was the author of this magic art and from him Soma learnt it and from Soma Viśvāvasu, from Viśvāvasu, Citraratha and from Citraratha, Arjuna. Besides this Citraratha gave Arjuna many chariots and horses.

In return Arjuna taught him the secret of the missile Agniśira. Exchanging faith and affection thus Citraratha and the Pāṇḍavas became friends. He then narrated to the Pāṇḍavas many interesting stories, of which the following are a few. The story of the feud between Vasiṣṭha and Viśvāmitra, story of Tapatīsaṁvaraṇa and tales about the sage Parāśara, Kalmāṣapāda, Adṛśyantī, Bhārgavas, Kṛtavīrya and Aurva. Citraratha advised the Pāṇḍavas to have a priest for the sacrificial rites and it was thus that they engaged Dhaumya as their family priest.

Since Arjuna had destroyed all the chariots belonging to Citraratha, the latter got a name 'Bhagnaratha' (devoid of chariots). Citraratha admitted that Arjuna could conquer him because of his vow of celibacy. (Chapters 165 to 183, Ādi Parva, M.B.).

3) Other details.

(1) Citraratha attended one of the birthday festivals of Arjuna. (Śloka 52, Chapter 122, Ādi Parva, M.B.).

(2) Citraratha worshipped Kubera sitting in the latter's council. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 10, Śloka 26).

(3) He offered as a gift to Dharmaputra four hundred excellent horses which could fly like wind. (Chapter 52, Śloka 23, Vana Parva).

(4) When the gandharvas milked the earth during the time of the emperor, Pṛthu, Citraratha acted as the calf. (Śloka 39, Chapter 6, Harivaṁśa).

(5) Śiva once sent Citraratha as a messenger to Asura Śaṁkhacūḍa, with a message that Śaṁkhacūḍa should abandon his satanic activities. (Devī Bhāgavata, Navama Skandha).

CITRARATHA II. One of the ministers of Daśaratha. He belonged to the Sūta dynasty. (Śloka 17, Ayodhyā Kāṇḍa, Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa).

CITRARATHA III. A king of Sālva. Once Reṇukā, wife of Jamadagni, after her bath in the river stayed ashore watching this king and his queen bathe in the river with erotic plays. Reṇukā thus reached the āśrama a bit late and Jamadagni enraged at this commanded his son Paraśurāma to chop the head of his own mother. (Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa, Chapter 59).

CITRARATHA IV. A king of the dynasty of Bharata. He was the son of King Gaya. Citraratha had a sister named Sugati and a brother Avarodhana. (Pañcama Skandha, Bhāgavata).

CITRARATHA V. A prince of Pāñcāla. He was killed in the battle of Mahābhārata by Droṇācārya. (Śloka 43, Chapter 122, Droṇa Parva).

CITRARATHA VI. A king of the Aṅga country. He married Prabhāvatī, sister of Ruci, wife of Devaśarmā. (Śloka 8, Chapter 42, Anuśāsana Parva, M.B.).

CITRARATHA VII. A king of the Yādava dynasty. He was the son of Uśaṅku and father of Śūra. (Śloka 29, Chapter 147, Anuśāsana Parva).

CITRARATHA VIII. Son of Vīrabāhu and a friend of Śrī Rāma. In the Rājya Kāṇḍa of Ānanda Rāmāyaṇa there is the following story about him.

Citraratha was also one among those assembled for the svayaṁvara of Hemā, daughter of Kuśa. He sent an anaesthetic missile to the assemblage and made them all fall down senseless. He then took Hemā out from the marriage hall. But on reaching outside he felt he had done a very unjust thing and so withdrew the missile and stood outside ready to fight. A fight ensued in which Citraratha defeated all. But Lava alone continued to fight with him. Vīrabāhu, father of Citraratha, who was closely watching the fight came to the help of Citraratha and engaging Lava in a fight struck him down. Kuśa seeing this attacked Vīrabāhu and bound him hand and foot. At that time Śrī Rāma came to the scene and told Kuśa that Vīrabāhu was a friend of his and set Vīrabāhu free. Hemā was then married to Citraratha and Vīrabāhu was sent away with due respect.

CITRARATHA. An Indian river of purāṇic fame. (Chapter 9, Bhīṣma Parva, M.B.).

CITRARŪPA. An attendant of Śiva. When by a curse of Mahāviṣṇu Mahālakṣmī was changed into a mare, it was through this attendant that Śiva sent a message to Viṣṇu. (Devī Bhāgavata, Skandha 6).

CITRAŚARĀSANA. (ŚARĀSANA, CITRACĀPA). One of the sons of Dhṛtarāṣṭra. In the great battle he was killed by Bhīmasena. (Śloka 20, Chapter 136, Droṇa Parva).

CITRASENA I. A gandharva. There is reference to this gandharva in many places in the purāṇas. He had two wives Sandhyāvalī and Ratnāvalī.

1) How Arjuna saved him. Once when Citrasena with his wives was travelling in the aerial car the spittings of Citrasena fell upon the sage Gālava who was doing his sandhyā rites then. The sage complained about the incident to Śrī Kṛṣṇa who promised to bring to him the head of Citrasena before sun-set. Sage Nārada informed Citrasena of this vow of Kṛṣṇa. The gandharva was taken aback and did not know what to do. But Sandhyāvalī and Ratnāvalī went and sought the help of Subhadrā. They made a fire pit in front of her house and decided to end their lives along with Citrasena by jumping into the fire. While Citrasena was circling the fire-pit before jumping into it his wives wept loudly and hearing the noise Subhadrā came out and saw what was happening. They then took from Subhadrā a boon to the effect that they should be allowed to live with their husband. It was only after granting them the boon that Subhadrā understood the whole situation. Subhadrā was in a fix but Arjuna assured her that Citrasena would be protected at any cost. Arjuna very cleverly shielded all the arrows sent against the gandharva by Kṛṣṇa and gradually the fight came to be one between Arjuna and Śrī Kṛṣṇa. Subhadrā came between them and it was found difficult to continue the fight. Śrī Kṛṣṇa advised Citrasena to bow down and touch the feet of Gālava. Citrasena obeyed and the issue settled without harm to both the parties.

2) Arjuna defeats Citrasena. While the Pāṇḍavas were in exile, Duryodhana knew through a spy that they were camping in the Dvaitavana forest. Prompted by Karṇa Duryodhana programmed to go to Dvaitavana with his retinue to enjoy the sight of the suffering Pāṇḍavas. So they started to the forests under a pretext of an annual stock-taking of the cows. They reached Dvaitavana with a huge army. There they split into parties and roamed about making merry by themselves. Soon one of the parties reached a pond near the hermitage of the Pāṇḍavas. They saw a few gandharvas making merry in the pond. With the usual haughtiness they commanded the gandharvas to leave the pond and make room for Duryodhana to come and bathe. The gandharvas did not pay heed to their words and on being informed of this Duryodhana went to fight with the gandharvas. It was Citrasena who led the gandharvas and by his incessant shower of piercing arrows split the Kaurava forces and made them flee for life. Duryodhana was isolated from his army, was bound hand and foot and taken a prisoner. In their sheer helplessness they approached Dharmaputra in his hermitage and acquainted him with the pitiable plight of Duryodhana. Dharmaputra asked Arjuna to go to the help of the Kauravas. Arjuna faced Citrasena in a grim combat. Citrasena then appeared in his real form and Arjuna knew that he was fighting a friend. Then at the request of Arjuna Citraratha released Duryodhana. (Chapters 239 to 243, Vana Parva).

3) Other details. (1) This gandharva occupied a seat in the court of Yudhiṣṭhira along with twentyseven other gandharvas and a few Apsarā maidens. (Śloka 32, Chapter 4, Sabhā Parva).

(2) Citrasena is a member of the court of Kubera also. (Śloka 26, Chapter 10, Sabhā Parva).

(3) Citrasena used to attend the court of Indra also at times. (Śloka 22, Chapter 7, Sabhā Parva).

(4) At the invitation of Indra Arjuna went to devaloka and Citrasena taught him dance and music. It was during this visit that Arjuna threw a cold blanket on the amorous approaches of Urvaśī and was consequently cursed by her to be an eunuch. It was through Citrasena that Indra sent word to Urvaśī to console Arjuna and give relief from the curse. (Chapters 45 and 46, Vana Parva).

CITRASENA II (UGRASENA). One of the hundred sons of Dhṛtarāṣṭra.

2) Other details.

(1) Citrasena was present for the svayaṁvara of Pāñcālī. (Śloka 3, Chapter 185, Ādi Parva, M.B.).

(2) Citrasena was among those who accompanied Duryodhana when he went to play the historical game of dice with Dharmaputra. (Śloka 13, Chapter 58, Sabhā Parva).

(3) In the great Mahābhārata battle he fought against Bhīmasena, Suśarmā, Sātyaki and Śatānīka. Bhīma killed him. (Chapter 137, Droṇa Parva).

CITRASENA III. A prince of the Pūru line, son of Parīkṣit and grandson of Avikṣit. (Śloka 54, Chapter 94, Ādi Parva).

CITRASENA IV. A minister of Jarāsandha. He was known as Ḍiṁbhaka also. (Śloka 32, Chapter 22, Sabhā Parva).

CITRASENA V. A king of the country of Abhisāra. He fought on the side of the Kauravas against the Pāṇḍavas and was killed by Śrutakarmā. (Śloka 14, Chapter 14, Karṇa Parva).

CITRASENA VI. (ŚRUTASENA). Brother of Suśarmā, the king of Trigarta. These two brothers jointly by an incessant downpour of arrows suffocated Arjuna in the battle-field. (Chapter 27, Karṇa Parva, M.B.).

CITRASENA VII. A warrior of Pāñcāla. Karṇa killed him in the great battle. (Śloka 15, Chapter 48, Karṇa Parva).

CITRASENA VIII. A son of Karṇa. Nakula killed him in the great battle. (Śalya Parva, Chapter 10).

CITRASENA IX. A brother of Karṇa. In the great battle Yudhāmanyu killed him. (Śloka 39, Chapter 83, Karṇa Parva).

CITRASENA X. One of the kings on the sea-shore. Along with his son he fought on the side of the Pāṇḍavas against the Kauravas and was killed by Samudrasena. (Śloka 16, Chapter 6, Karṇa Parva).

CITRASENA XI. A serpent. This serpent joined hands with Arjuna during the Kṛṣṇārjuna battle. (Śloka 43, Chapter 87, Karṇa Parva).

CITRASENA XII. A king of the dynasty of Vaivasvatamanu. (Navama Skandha, Bhāgavata).

CITRASENA XIII. A Mahārāja who obtained salvation by observing the Aṣṭamīrohiṇī Vrata. This king was a great sinner having committed such sins as Agamyāgamana (Incest), Brahmasvāpaharaṇa (stealing things belonging to Brahmins), Surāpāna (drinking) and Prāṇihiṁsā (causing injury to living beings). One day while hunting he followed a tiger and at dusk exhausted with thirst and hunger he reached the banks of the river Yamunā. It was the day of Aṣṭamīrohiṇī and many maidens were observing the Aṣṭamīrohiṇī Vrata there. Before them was a heap of rice and other eatables which was given as an offering to Kṛṣṇa and seeing the lot the King begged for something to eat and drink. The maidens replied that it was a sin to take food on that day of Vrata and then there came a change in the mind of the King and he readily agreed to observe the Aṣṭamīrohiṇī vrata and did so. Because of this when the king died, though a great sinner he was, he was taken to heaven by the servants of Viṣṇu. This story was told by Vasiṣṭha to Dilīpa to impress upon him the greatness of observing the Aṣṭamīrohiṇī Vrata. (Chapter 13, Padma Purāṇa).

CITRASENĀ I. An Apsaras. This celestial maiden was a dancer in the court of Kubera. (Śloka 10, Chapter 10, Sabhā Parva). When Arjuna went to the land of Indra this maiden gave a dance in honour of Arjuna. (Śloka 30, Chapter 43, Vana Parva).

CITRASENĀ II. A prominent river. The people of ancient Bharatā used to drink the water of this river. (Śloka 17, Chapter 9, Bhīṣma Parva)

CITRASENĀ III. A follower of Subrahmaṇya. (Śloka 14, Chapter 40, Śalya Parva, M.B.).

CITRAŚIKHAṆḌĪ. Saptarṣis (The seven saints) Marīci, Aṅgiras, Atri, Pulastya, Pulaha, Kṛtu and Vasiṣṭha. These saints are called by the name Citraśikhaṇḍīs also. (Śloka 29, Chapter 336, Śānti Parva).

CITRAŚILĀ. A purāṇic river. The water of this river is used by the Indians for drinking. (Śloka 30, Chapter 9, Bhīṣma Parva).

CITRĀŚVĀ. Another name of Satyavān. He used to make the figure of horses using clay and people therefore gave him this name of Citrāśvan. (Śloka 13, Chapter 294, Vana Parva).

CITRAVĀHĀ. A purāṇic river of Bhārata. (Śloka 17, Chapter 9, Bhīṣma Parva).

CITRAVĀHANA. A king who ruled Maṇipur during purāṇic times. (See Citrāṅgada).

CITRAVARMĀ I. One of the hundred sons of Dhṛtarāṣṭra. He was killed in the great battle by Bhīmasena. (Chapter 136, Droṇa Parva, M.B.).

CITRAVARMĀ II. A prince of the country of Pāñcāla. He was the son of ā king called Sucitra. He had four brothers : Citraketu, Sudhanvā, Citraratha, and Vīraketu. When Vīraketu was killed in the great battle all the brothers attacked Droṇa who killed them all. (Ślokas 43 to 49, Chapter 122, Droṇa Parva, M.B.).

CITRAVARMĀ III. Father of Sīmantinī, wife of King Candrāṅgada. (See Candrāṅgada).

CITRAVEGIKA. A serpent of the family of Dhṛtarāṣṭra. This serpent was burnt to death at the sarpa sattra of Janamejaya. (Śloka 8, Chapter 57, Ādi Parva).

CITRĀYUDHA I. (CITRABĀHU). One of the hundred sons of Dhṛtarāṣṭra. He was slain by Bhīmasena in the great battle. (Śloka 20, Chapter 136, Droṇa Parva).

CITRĀYUDHA II. (DṚḌHĀYUDHA). One of the sons of Dhṛtarāṣṭra. He was slain by Bhīmasena. (Śloka 29, Chapter 137, Droṇa Parva).

CITRĀYUDHA III. A King of Siṁhapura. During the victory march of the Pāṇḍavas Arjuna conquered this King. (Śloka 20, Chapter 27, Sabhā Parva).

CITRĀYUDHA IV. A warrior of the state of Cedi. He fought on the side of the Pāṇḍavas. The horse of this warrior was blood-coloured and his weapons were of a peculiar type. Karṇa killed him in the great battle. (Chapter 23, Droṇa Parva and Chapter 56, Karṇa Parva).

CITROPACITRA. One of the hundred sons of Dhṛtarāṣṭra. In the great battle Bhīmasena killed him. (Śloka 18, Chapter 111, Droṇa Parva).

CITROPALA. A river of purāṇic fame. (Śloka 34, Chapter 9, Bhīṣma Parva).

CITTĀVASTHĀS. States of the mind. (See under Pattu).

CIYYĀLI. A holy place in South-India. (See under Agastya).

COLA. A very righteous emperor of Kāñcīpura. Because of the virtuous rule of this emperor his country got the name Cola. There is an interesting story in Padma Purāṇa of how the emperor attained Vaikuṇṭhaloka (The abode of Mahāviṣṇu).

Once Cola went to Vaikuṇṭha to worship Mahāviṣṇu. As he was worshipping him with pearls and flowers of gold a brahmin subject of his came there to worship him with water and Tulasī leaves. The simple offering of Tulasī leaves and flowers by this brahmarṣi, Viṣṇudāsa, eclipsed the expensive one by the King and the latter was greatly offended and he rebuked the Brahmin saying that he was a poor man who did not know what devotion to Viṣṇu was. But Viṣṇudāsa did not take the taunt unchallenged. He asked the king to wait and see who would merge with the glowing entity of the Lord earlier.

The King on returning to his palace started a Vaiṣṇavasattra. (An almonry dedicated to Mahāviṣṇu). This almshouse was as comfortable and luxurious as the one once started by Brahmā in the temple of Gaya. Viṣṇudāsa on the other hand spent his life in a Viṣṇu temple leading a celibate life and observing rites pleasing to Viṣṇu.

One day after finishing his daily morning rites Viṣṇudāsa cooked his food as usual and kept it in its place to be taken later. But on returning to it after some time he found his food eaten by someone else. He went without food that day and it happened the next day also. It continued to happen thus for a week and all these days Viṣṇudāsa went fasting. Viṣṇudāsa then decided to watch and see who the thief was. On keeping a vigil he found a Caṇḍāla (a harijan of the lowest Cadre) timidly coming and grabbing at the food with gluttonous greed to appease his hunger. Seeing the famished skeletonous body of the thief Viṣṇudāsa felt compassion rather than resentment and calling him back to take the food went after him crying "Hi, come here and take this ghee also with you. That food has no fat in it." But the Caṇḍāla frightened at the sight of the owner of the food ran away as fast as his legs could carry him, Viṣṇudāsa following him. But soon the Caṇḍāla fell fainting on the road exhausted and tired. Viṣṇudāsa reaching his side started fanning him with his cloth. Very soon the Caṇḍāla changed himself into Mahāviṣṇu adorned with Śaṁkha, Cakra and Gadā and Viṣṇu embracing his devotee took him to Vaikuṇṭha.

Hearing this Cola called Mudgala the priest of the Vaiṣṇavasattra, to his side and lamented "I started this sattra to spite Viṣṇudāsa and now he has gone to Vaikuṇṭha. It was due to his true devotion to God that he has attained salvation. What we have done is of no use." So saying he crowned his nephew as King. Even while young he had become an ascetic and as such had no sons. From that time the crowning of the nephew as King became a precedent in Cola. Renouncing the kingdom Cola went to the sacrificial hall and circling the sacrificial fire stood before it and addressing Mukunda said "Oh Viṣṇu, grant me unwavering devotion to you in thought, speech and deed." Repeating this three times the king jumped into the fire. At this Mudgala, the priest, burst into anger and tore off the lock of hair on his head. So even today the decendants of Mudgala do not have hair-locks. Viṣṇu who is always affectionate to his devotees graciously appeared from the sacrificial fire and embraced the King. The King was then taken to Vaikuṇṭha. (Chapters 110, 111, Padma Purāṇa).

COLA (M). The three celebrated kingdoms of South-India of old were Cola, Pāṇḍya and Cera. References to these will be found in many places in the Purāṇas and a few are given below :—

1) Among those present for the svayaṁvara of Rukmiṇī were the Kings of Cola, Pāṇḍya and Kerala.

2) Descending in order from Turvasu were Varga—Gobhānu — Traiśāni — Karandhama — Marutta — Duṣyanta — Varūtha — Gāṇḍīra. From Gāṇḍīra were born the people of Kerala, Pāṇḍya and Cola. (Chapter 277, Agni Purāṇa).

3) Arjuna conquered the army of the King of Cola. (Śloka 21, Chapter 27, Sabhā Parva).

4) The King of Cola gave gifts to Dharmaputra. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 52, Śloka 35).

5)When during the great battle Dhṛṣṭadyumna formed the Krauñcavyūha the soldiers from Cola guarded the southern wing. (Śloka 60, Chapter 9, Bhīṣma Parva).

6) Śrī Kṛṣṇa once conquered the land of Cola. (Śloka 17, Chapter 11, Droṇa Parva).

COURAS. A set of Kṣatriyas who became Śūdras by a curse of the brahmins.

Pāṇḍyas, Kāṇḍvas, Sirākhyas, Lāṭas, Drāviḍas, Keralas, Couras, Darvas, Daradas, Śauṇḍis, Śabaras, Arbaras, Kirātas and Yavanas were all Kṣatriyas but were turned into Śūdras by a curse of the brahmins.

CUCUKA. A low-caste tribe of south India. They were aborigines older than the Mahābhārata in origin. (Śloka 42, Chapter 207, Śānti Parva).

CUCUKA (M). A place in ancient south India. (Śloka 26, Chapter 110, Udyoga Parva).

CŪDĀKARṆA. The character of a Sannyāsī in a tale in Pañcatantra.

CUDĀLĀ. The saintly wife of King Śikhidhvaja. When once Śikhidhvaja renounced his kingdom and went to the forests, his wife gave him instruction in Ātmajñāna and brought him back to his country. (Chapter 77, Yogavāsiṣṭha).

CŪDĀMA. I. See under Sitā.

CŪLI. A sage. Once Somadā, daughter of a gandharva women Ūrmilā, looked after this sage and well pleased with her service he asked her what she wanted and Somadā asked for a son by him. Cūli gave her a spiritual son of his and the boy was named Brahmadatta. This Brahmadatta married the hundred hunch-backed daughters of Kuśanābha. (Bāla Kāṇḍa, Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa).

CULUKA. A river. People of ancient Bhārata used to drink the water of this river. (Śloka 20, Chapter 9, Bhīṣma Parva).

CUÑCU. A King of the Hehaya line of kings. He was the grandson of Rohitāśva and son of Hārīta. King Vijaya is the son of Cuñcu. (Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa, Chapter 16.)

CURAYKKĀ. While emperor Pṛthu was ruling the earth it was once transformed into a cow and milked. Each got a different substance and what the Nāgas got was poison. They milked the poison into a pot-like Curaykkā.

CŪṬU. (Dice). It is an imaginative paurāṇic assumption that there is a satanic force latent in dice, hunting, wine and women. There is a story to support the presence of this evil power within the above four. Indra once turned the Aśvinīdevas out of his court labelling them as outcastes and banned wine to them. Discontented at this the Aśvinīdevas approached Cyavana and the latter performing a yāga invited the Aśvinīdevas and gave them the yāga wine, 'Soma'. Infuriated at this Indra raised his celebrated Vajrāyudha (Weapon of thunder) to kill Cyavana. But the sage by his yogic powers paralysed the hands of Indra and instantly from the sacrificial fire there arose Mada a genie to kill Indra. Frightened by this sight Indra fell at the feet of Cyavana and craved for pardon. The sage then tore the genie into four pieces and threw one each into dice, hunting, wine and women. That is why all the four are as alluring as destructive. (Saptama Skandha, Devī Bhāgavata).

CYAVANA. A celebrated sage of the Bhārgava dynasty.

1) Genealogy. Descending in order from Brahmā—Bhṛgu—Cyavana.

2) Birth. Bhṛgu is the son of Brahmā born of Agni at the Brahmayajña conducted by Varuṇa. The beautiful and virtuous lady Pulomā was the wife of Bhṛgu. Even before Bhṛgu married her she was being loved by the demon Pulomā and her marriage with Bhṛgu embittered him and he waited for an opportunity to kidnap Pulomā.

One day when Bhṛgu went to the river for his bath Pulomā entered the āśrama and there he found his love Pulomā being watched over by Agni. Pulomā compelled Agni to tell him the truth whether Bhṛgu had married Pulomā according to the rites enjoined by the scriptures. Agni confessed that it was not so and then Pulomā taking the shape of a hog carried away Pulomā who was then in a stage of advanced pregnancy. On the way the wife of the sage delivered and the babe dropped to the ground. Because the babe was born with a fall (Cyavana) from the womb the boy was named Cyavana. The radiance of the boy burnt the demon into ashes. Pulomā weeping profusely with tears rolling down her cheeks returned to the āśrama. Her tears ran into a river and the river got the name Vadhūsarā Bhṛgu on knowing how all happened cursed Agni saying that Agni would thereafter be an all-round eater. (eating anything and everything). (Chapters 5 and 6, Ādi Parva).

3) Penance and marriage. Even when he was very young Cyavana commenced practising austerities. He went to the forests and sat in meditation without food or sleep, oblivious to what happened outside. Years went by and Cyavana did not stir from his place. Gradually earth began to cover him and soon he was completely enveloped by earth. Creepers grew on it and birds made rests; Cyavana did not know anything about it.

One day Śaryāti with his wives and children came to that forest for a picnic. Sukanyā, daughter of King Śaryāti, along with her companions separated from the King and roamed about in the forest making merry. They soon came to the place where Cyavana sat doing penance. There was an unusual radiance around the heap of earth they saw there and Sukanyā out of curiosity started striking down the earth. Then from inside came Cyavana's voice advising her not to crumble down the earth as she was doing. Sukanyā ignored the advice and searched for the source of the voice. She then saw two points of glow and taking a thorn gave two pricks at those points and left the place with her companions.

Those glow-points were the eyes of Cyavana and Cyavana felt insufferable pain when his eyes were thus pierced through. But he neither became angry nor cursed the girl who did this havoc. Cyavana went on with his penance. But soon the country of Śaryāti began to experience the bad effects of this evil-deed. People one by one in the beginning and then the whole lot were disabled from passing either urine or faeces. From men and women the disease spread to the animals also. The country was in a chaos and the subjects flocked to the palace to complain to the King. Śaryāti knew that somebody must have in a some way tormented Cyavana and enquired of each and everyone of his subjects. Whether anybody had knowingly or unknowingly given pain to Cyavana. Nobody had done so and the King was worried. Then Sukanyā ran to her father and confessed what she had done. The King ran immediately to the place where Cyavana was doing penance and striking down the earth prostrated before the sage who was sitting there sad and miserable. The King apologised to Cyavana and requested him to pardon his daughter.

Cyavana then told the King that it was enough if he gave his daughter in marriage to him in expiation of the harm done. The King was shocked to hear this for Cyavana was not only ugly but now blind also. The King returned to the palace sad and worried and there was gloom over the whole palace. But Sukanyā approached her father and agreed to be the wife of Cyavana. The problem was solved and the King with great reluctance took his daughter to the forests and gave her in marriage to Cyavana.

4) Cyavana attains eternal youth. It was the time when Indra had banned Somapāna (drinking of the yāga wine) to the Aśvinīdevas. Discontented at this they roamed about in the forests and soon came to the neighbourhood of the āśrama of Cyavana.

Sukanyā after becoming the wife of Cyavana did all she could to make her husband comfortable and happy. She would collect very sweet and tasty fruit from the forests and give him. She would bathe him in hot water. After arranging all the materials needed for the morning rites like yava, sesame, darbha and water, she would take her husband to the place of the pūjā leading him by hand. When the morning pūjā was over she would seat him in a suitable place and give him rice and fruits. After the meals she would give him pan to chew. Only after doing all these would she go to do her daily rites and that too only after obtaining her husband's permission. She would finish her routine in no time to come back to her husband to see whether he was in need of anything. Then she would make arrangements for the evening pūjā and after the pūjā was over she would give him his dinner. She would eat only what was left by her husband. At night she would spread a soft bedding and lull him to sleep. Then she would take a nap lying at the foot of her husband. During summer she would fan him and during winter she would make fire to give him heat. Early morning she would take him to a distant place for his excretion and after washing him would seat him in a suitable place for cleaning his teeth and face. Then the routine would start with great devotion again.

One day Sukanyā was returning from the river after her bath and on the way she came across the Aśvinīdevas. They were astounded to see such a beautiful damsel in the forest and they accosted her and requested her to select one of them as her husband. Knowing her identity they advised her to forsake her old and blind husband and come and live with one of them. She flew into a fury when she heard her husband spoken of so slightingly and by logical argument convinced them the error of their request. Then they told her thus: "You are aware we are the physicians of the devas. We can give back eyesight to your husband and make him as beautiful as one of us. We will then appear before you as three lovely young men identical in appearance and then you must select one among the three as your husband."

Sukanyā was immensely pleased as well as surprised to hear the offer and was eager to see her husband young and beautiful. But the last condition frightened her. Anyhow she promised to give a reply after consulting her husband and ran to the āśrama to tell her husband the news. Cyavana advised her to accept the offer of the Aśvinīdevas and Sukanyā ran back to the Aśvinīdevas and brought them to her husband accepting their terms. The Aśvinīdevas took the aged and blind Cyavana along with them to the river nearby and the three plunged into the river. When they rose up after a dip the three emerged as young, lovely and charming triplets difficult to be distinguished from one another. When Sukanyā stood before the three to select her real husband she prayed to her goddess and the Devī gave her the power to identify Cyavana and so she correctly chose him from the three. (Saptama Skandha, Devī Bhāgavata).

5) Cyavana defeated Indra. Immensely pleased at regaining his eyesight and youth Cyavana asked the Aśvinīdevas what they wanted. The Aśvinīdevas replied that Indra had banned wine to them and they would like to have the ban lifted. Cyavana Maharṣi immediately commenced a Somayāga to which were invited all the devas and the Aśvinīdevas also. When Indra saw the Aśvinīdevas standing to partake of the Soma wine he was furious and objected to the wine being given to them. Cyavana dissented and a fight ensued between Indra and Cyavana. Indra raised his weapon 'Vajrāyudha' to strike at Cyavana and then Cyavana made all his limbs go stiff. He then raised from the sacrificial fire a fiendish demon called Mada to kill the devas. All those present were frightened by this demon and they ran away. But Indra could not run for his limbs were stiff. Standing there he prayed to his preceptor Bṛhaspati for help and Bṛhaspati advised Indra to surrender to Cyavana. Indra bowed his head before Cyavana and prayed to be excused. Cyavana was pleased and withdrawing the demon tore him into four pieces and threw one each into Dice, Hunting, Wine and Women. The devas and Aśvinīdevas then went back to heaven. (Saptama Skandha, Devī Bhāgavata. Ṛgveda, Maṇḍala 1, Anuvāka 17, Sūkta 116; Chapter 123, Vana Parva).

6) Other details.

(1) Paraśurāma once came and stayed at the āśrama of Cyavana. At that time Bhṛgu and Cyavana were in the āśrama. They blessed him and advised him to go to Kailāsa and do penance there to propitiate Śiva. It was thus that Paraśurāma happened to go to Kailāsa to do penance there. (Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa, Chapter 62).

(2) Cyavana got a son named Pramati. This Pramati was the father of Ruru and the grandfather of Śunaka. (Chapter 5, Ādi Parva).

(3) Cyavana married Āruṣi daughter of Manu. Aurva was the son born to Āruṣi from her thigh. In descending order from Aurva were born Ṛcīka—Jamadagni—Paraśurāma. (Chapter 66, Ādi Parva).

(4) Āstīka learnt Sāṅga Vedas from the āśrama of Cyavana. (Chapter 48, Ādi Parva).

(5) Cyavana was the guru of Bhīṣma. (Śloka 11, Chapter 37, Śānti Parva).

(6) King Yuvanāśva once went to the āśrama of Cyavana greatly worried over the lack of a descendant. Cyavana prepared some sacred water made potent with the recital of mantras to induce gestation and kept it there. Accidentally the King drank that water and got pregnant. The pregnancy developed without miscarriage and in due time the King gave birth to a child, the left side of his stomach bursting forth to push out the child. It was this child who became Māndhātā. (Chapter 126, Vana Parva).

(7) Cyavana was a brilliant member of the court of Brahmā. (Śloka 11, Chapter 22, Śānti Parva).

(8) Cyavana went to Pātāla (nether-world). (See under Kekaralohita).

(9) Once the august Vedaśarmā of Kauśikagotra went to the āśrama of Cyavana lost in thought. Cyavana received him with due respect and enquired about the reason for his sorrow. Vedaśarmā then told him that the lack of a son worried him much. Cyavana then blessed him and assured him of a child soon. (Chapter 14, Padma Purāṇa).

(10) Cyavana had a daughter named Sumanas and she was married to a sage called Somaśarmā. (Chapter 14, Padma Purāṇa).

CYAVANĀŚRAMA. A sacred place. Aṁbā, daughter of Kāśirāja, used to bathe in a pond nearby. (Śloka 26, Chapter 186, Udyoga Parva).

CYAVANASAROVARAM. A sacred place. It is believed that this is the best place for worshipping Pitṛs (spirits of the dead). (Śloka 11, Chapter 125, Vana Parva).

D

D. (ड) This letter means (1) Rudra and (2) tremor or fear (trāsa).

DA. This syllable means ruin. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 348).

DABHĪTI. A hermit who is praised much in the Ṛgveda. It is mentioned in Ṛgveda, Maṇḍala 1, Anuvāka 16, Sūkta 112, that the Aśvinīdevas had saved Turvīti, Dabhīti, Dhvasanti and Puruṣanti, the sons of Indra, from a danger.

DADHĪCA. (DADHĪCI).

1) Birth. A famous hermit. Mention is made in Mahābhārata, Śalya Parva, Chapter 51, Stanza 83, that this hermit was the son of the great hermit Bhṛgu, and that he was made of the essences of the world, with a huge body.

2) The birth of the hermit Sārasvata. Dadhīca erected his hermitage on the bank of the river Sarasvatī and began to do penance. The power of penance increased daily. Seeing this Indra was flurried. So he sent the celestial maid Alaṁbuṣā to break the penance of Dadhīca somehow or other. Alaṁbuṣā came to the hermitage of Dadhīca and began to dance and sing. When the hermit saw her he grew lustful and seminal discharge occurred to him. The semen fell in the river Sarasvatī, who became pregnant and in due course gave birth to a child. She took the child to the hermit Dadhīca and told him the story of the child. The hermit was much pleased. He took the child and embraced it and blessed the river Sarasvatī thus :—

"Brahmā, the gods and the celestial maids will be pleased if your water is offered as oblation."

Dadhīci then said that the child should be named Sārasvata. He also added that when there was a drought continuously for twelve years, Sārasvata would have the power to bring rain. Then Sarasvatī took the child to her abode and brought it up.

3) How he destroyed the asuras with the head of a horse. Once Dadhīci went to the world of the devas (gods). From there he looked down and saw the earth filled with the asuras. Indra went to destroy them. But he could not. So he made a search for anything left behind by Dadhīca. He understood that Dadhīca had with him the head of a horse. It was found in a lake in the country of Śaraṇya. With the bones taken from that head Indra and Dadhīca destroyed a large number of asuras. (Ṛgveda, Maṇḍala 1, Anuvāka 13, Sūkta 84).

4) The weapon (Vajra) of Indra was made from a bone. A story occurs in the Mahābhārata, which says that the Diamond-weapon of Indra was made of a bone of Dadhīci. The asuras went to fight with Indra under the leadership of Vṛttrāsura. Indra tried his utmost to kill Vṛttrāsura, but he could not. At last Indra approached Brahmā, who told Indra that if a bone of the hermit, called Dadhīca was obtained it could effectively be used against Vṛtra. Accordingly Indra went with Nara and Nārāyaṇa to the banks of the river Sarasvatī and entered the hermitage and bowed before the shining hermit Dadhīca and informed him of their errand. The hermit replied that he had no objection in giving his bone to save the gods. Saying thus the hermit discarded his life. Indra took the bone of Dadhīci and made his weapon of Diamond (Vajra) with which he killed Vṛtra and his followers. (Mahābhārata, Chapter 100).

5) Other information

(1) At the sacrifice of Dakṣa, Dadhīci got angry because Śiva was not given his dues of the sacrifice. (M.B. Śānti Parva, Chapter 284).

(2) Once Dadhīci talked to a Brāhmin called Karuṇa about the importance of the ashes dedicated to Śiva. (Padma Purāṇa, Chapter 101).

(3) See Dhanañjaya V to know how this hermit gave absolution from curse to a fly.

DADHĪCA (M). A holy place in Kurukṣetra. Aṅgiras the son of Sarasvatī was born in this place. From that day onwards this place became a holy place. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 83, Stanza 186 that he who bathes in this holy place will obtain the fruits of performing the sacrifice Aśvamedha, and enter the world of Sarasvatī.

DADHIMAṆḌODAKA. An ocean. This ocean is near the ocean Ghṛtoda samudra (Mahābhārata, Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 12, Stanza 2).

DADHIMUKHA I. A famous serpent, born to Kaśyapa prajāpati by his wife Kadrū. (Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 35, Stanza 8).

DADHIMUKHA II. A famous monkey. This old monkey was the general of a huge monkey-army. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 283, Stanza 7 that this general approached Śrī Rāma once, with his army.

DADHIVĀHANA. An ancient king of Bhārata. The hermit Gautama saved the son of this King from the attack of Paraśurāma (Mahābhārata, Śānti Parva, Chapter 49, Stanza 8).

DADHIVAKTRA. A monkey who helped Śrī Rāma. It is seen in Adhyātma Rāmāyaṇa, Sundara Kāṇḍa, Sarga 5, as follows :—

"Dadhimukhaḥ Kruddhasugrīvasya mātulaḥ". From this it is understood that Dadhimukha or Dadhivaktra was the uncle of Sugrīva. (For further information see Madhuvana).

DADHYAÑ.[1] A hermit. Once Indra taught this hermit Madhuvidyā (the art of mead) Indra told the hermit that his head would be cut off if he taught anybody this art. The Aśvinīdevas approached Dadhyañ to learn this art. Fearing Indra the hermit refused to teach them the art. Aśvinīdevas cut off his head and buried it in a place. Then they cut off the head of a horse and fixed it on the neck of Dadhyañ. Having the head of the horse he taught the art to the Aśvinīdevas. When Dadhyañ had finished teaching, they took away the head of the horse and fixed his own head in place. (Ṛgveda, Maṇḍala 1, Anuvāka, 17, Sūkta 166).

DAHA I. One of the eleven Rudras. He was the grandson of Brahmā and the son of Sthāṇu. (Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 66, Stanza 3).

DAHA II. An attendant given to Subrahmaṇya by Aṁśa, a god. (Mahābhārata, Śalya Parva, Chapter 45, Stanza 34).

DAHADAHĀ. An attendant of Subrahmaṇya. (Mahābhārata, Śalya Parva, Chapter 46, Stanza 20).

DAHATI. A warrior given to Subrahmaṇya by god Aṁśa. Mention is made about this warrior in Mahābhārata, Śalya Parva, Chapter 45, Stanza 34.

DAIVA I. Almighty God. (See Īśvara).

DAIVA II. A kind of marriage. The form of marriage by which one gives his daughter to a priest. (See Vivāha).

DAIVĀLĪKA. A country. Mention is made in Mahābhārata, Sabhā Parva, Chapter 52, Stanza 18, that the King and the people of Daivālīka were present on the occasion of the sacrifice of Rājasūya (imperial consecration) of Yudhiṣṭhira.

DAIVASAṀPATTI. The virtues of those who are born of a noble family.

"He Bharata ! Security, knowledge of tattvas the desire to attain harmony with the Supreme Being by the knowledge of Brahman, alms-giving, self restraint, performing sacrifice, self-study, penance, sincerity, truth, liberality, continence, kindness, mildness, modesty, resolution, cleanliness, forgiveness, brightness, abstaining from committing murder and getting angry, having no malignity, covetousness, fickleness and pride and not injuring others are the Daivasaṁpatti or good qualities of a noble man." (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 40).

DAITYADĪPA. One of the sons of Garuḍa. Mention is made about Daityadīpa in Mahābhārata, Udyoga Parva, Chapter 101, Stanza 11.

DAITYASENĀ. Sister of Devasenā, the wife of Subrahmaṇya. Keśi, an asura, married her. (For detailed story, see Devasenā).

ḌĀKINI. A class of women supposed to be proficient in magic and the performance of feats with the help of mantras. (See Kṣuraka).

DAKṢA.

1) Two Dakṣas. In most of the Purāṇas references about two Dakṣas occur. In some purāṇas both are referred to as one and the same person, whereas in some others both are considered as separate persons, so much so the stories concerning both are interlocked and entangled very often. The fact is that there was only one Dakṣa, whose life was of two stages. The first Dakṣa was killed at the sacrifice of Dakṣa, at which point, ends the first stage, or the first Dakṣa. The second stage was the rebirth of the same Dakṣa. A short biography of Dakṣa including both stages is given below :—

Brahmā created by his mind, the seven great hermits, Marīci, Aṅgiras, Atri, Pulastya, Vasiṣṭha, Pulaha and Kratu. So these seven hermits are called the Mānasaputras (sons born from mind) of Brahmā. After this, from the anger of Brahmā, Rudra was born, and from his lap Nārada, from his right thumb Dakṣa, from his mind the Sanakas and from his left thumb a daughter named Vīraṇī were born.

Vīraṇī nāma tasyā stu
asiknītyāpi sattamā

From this passage which occurs in Kālikā Purāṇa it may be assumed that 'Asiknī' was another name of Vīraṇī. Dakṣa did penance in the mountain of Vindhya for a long time. It is mentioned in Bhāgavata, Skandha 8, that Mahāviṣṇu appeared before Dakṣa and gave him Asiknī as his wife.

Several sons were born to Dakṣa by his wife Asiknī. The last one was a daughter named Satī who became the wife of Śiva. At this time Dakṣa performed a sacrifice. As he was not invited to that sacrifice, Śiva sent Vīrabhadra and Bhadrakālī and killed Dakṣa. Though the devas put the head of a goat in place of the lost head and brought Dakṣa to life again, no reference is made about the life of Dakṣa after the sacrifice. Thus the first stage of the life of Dakṣa ends. (Devī Bhāgavata, Skandha 7).

After this, once the Pracetases (the ten sons of Barhis) were engaged in penance and the earth was not properly cultivated in consequence of which big trees grew up and the whole of the earth was changed into a big forest. The sky was covered with tree tops. It was difficult even for the wind to pass through them and thus the forest thrived for ten thousand years. The pracetases got out of the sea after penance and entered the shore. When they saw the big forest they got angry and the ten of them discharged fire and wind from their faces. The wind up-rooted the trees and the fire dried them. Thus almost the whole of the trees were consumed. Then Candra, the King of the medicinal herbs came there and told the Pracetases "Oh, Kings, hold your anger. I will make the trees conclude a treaty with you. The beautiful Māriṣā who was born to the trees is my foster-daughter. I give her to you as your wife. From half the portion of your minds and half the portion of my mind the great and wise prajāpati Dakṣa is going to take birth in her womb". The Pracetases controlled their anger and accepted Māriṣā as their wife, at the words of Somadeva (Candra) and as the son of the ten pracetases the Prajāpati Dakṣa was born. With this the second stage of the life of Dakṣa begins. The important occurrences in the two stages of the life of Dakṣa are given below in their order.

[1]The stories regarding the two hermits Dadhīci and Dadhyañ in the Purāṇas are not very clear. In Mahā bhārata Dadhīca is mentioned as the son of Bhṛgu, and in Ṛgveda it occurs that Dadhīca was the son of Hermit Atharva who was the son of Vasiṣṭha. Moreover the story of Dadhyañ teaching the Aśvinīdevas the 'Madhuvidyā' is connected with Dadhīci in some other purāṇas Some statements in the Ṛgveda make it difficult to assume that both Dadhyañ and Dadhīci are one and the same person. So relying on the majority of statements in the various purāṇas this book has accepted the fact that these hermits are separate persons and that Dadhīci was the son of Bhṛgu whereas the hermit who taught Madhuvidyā to the Aśvinīdevas was Dadhyañ.

2) Dakṣa's creation of the prajas or subjects. Once Brahmā called Dakṣa and ordered him to create prajās or subjects. Accordingly Dakṣa created the gods, the hermits, the Gandharvas (Demi-gods),the Asuras, the serpents etc. Seeing that the subjects he created were not proliferating as required he thought of creating subjects by coition of male and female; and he begot by his wife Asiknī five thousand sons, and they were called Haryaśvas. They in their turn were about to create subjects when Nārada appeared before them and said "Oh, Haryaśvas, you are mere children and ignorant of the secrets of this world. How do you intend to create subjects ? You fools, since you have the power to go up and down and lengthwise and breadthwise, why don't you try to find out the extremities of the earth ?" Hearing the words of Nārada, they all ran in different directions and have not returned since. Thus Dakṣa lost the Haryaśvas. Dakṣa again begot thousand sons by Asiknī and they were called Śabalāśvas. Seeing that they also were about to create subjects Nārada scattered them also, by some tricks. The Śabalāśvas who had gone to see the end of the earth have not yet returned.

Dakṣa got angry with Nārada and cursed him thus : "You also, like my children shall wander from place to place all over the earth". From that dry onwards Nārada became a wanderer, without a fixed dwelling place. The wise Prajāpati Dakṣa again begot sixty damsels by Asiknī. Ten of the girls were given to Dharmadeva, thirteen of them to Kaśyapa, twentyseven of them to Soma, and four of them to Ariṣṭanemi. Of the rest two were given to Bāhuputra, two to Aṅgiras and two to the wise Kṛśāśva. The names of the wives of each are given below :—

(1) Kaśyapa. Aditi, Diti, Danu, Ariṣṭā, Surasā, Khasā, Surabhi, Vinatā, Tāmrā, Krodhavaśā, Irā, Kadrū, Muni.

(2) Dharmadeva. Arundhatī, Vasu, Yamī, Laṁbā, Bhānu, Marutvatī, Saṅkalpā, Muhūrtā, Sādhyā, Viśvā.

(3) Soma. Aśvayuk, Bharaṇi, Kṛttikā, Rohiṇī, Mṛgaśiras, Tārakam (Ardrā), Punarvasu, Puṣyam, Āśleṣam, Janakam, Phālgunī, Uttaraphālgunam, Hastam, Citrā, Svātī, Viśākham, Anurādhā, Jyeṣṭhā, Mūlam, Purvāṣāḍham, Uttarāṣāḍham, Śroṇa, Śraviṣṭhā, Pracetas, Purvaproṣṭhapadam, Uttaraproṣṭhapadam, Revatī.

The names of the wives given to Aṅgiras, Ariṣṭanemi, Bāhuputra and Kṛśāśva are not mentioned.

Besides these damsels, twentyfour daughters were born to Dakṣa of his wife Prasūti who was the sister of Uttānapāda. Dharmadeva married thirteen of them also, named Śraddhā, Lakṣmī, Dhṛti, Tuṣṭi, Medhā, Puṣṭi, Kriyā, Buddhi, Lajjā, Vapus, Śānti, Siddhi, Kīrti. Of the rest, Khyāti was given to Bhṛgu, Satī to Śiva, Saṁbhūti to Marīci, Smṛti to Aṅgiras, Prīti to Pulastya, Kṣamā to Pulaha, Santati to Kratu, Anasūyā to Atri, Ūrjā to Vasiṣṭha, Svāhā to Agnideva and Svadhā to the Manes. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Aṁśa 1, Chapter 15).

3) Sacrifice of Dakṣa. Once Dakṣa performed a sacrifice called Bṛhaspatisavana. To this sacrifice he did not invite his daughter Satī or her husband Śiva. Dakṣa did not invite them because of three reasons according to the Purāṇas.

(1) Once Durvāsas, the son of Atri, went to Jambūnada and meditated with the mantra or spell of 'Māyābīja' and worshipped Jagadambikā (mother of the world) the goddess there. The goddess was much pleased and gave him as a token of her pleasure the garland of flowers she wore from which nectar was oozing. Durvāsas wore it on his head and went to the palace of Dakṣa, the Prajāpati. When he saw such a wonderful garland which was not of this world, he wanted to have it and Durvāsas instantly gave it to Dakṣa. He placed it in a prominent place in his bedroom and enjoying the wonderful fragrance of it he conjugated with his wife, and polluted that pure garland by his lust. Śiva and his wife came to know of this and they scolded Dakṣa, who kept this bitterness in his heart and when the sacrifice was performed, he decided not to invite them. (Devī Bhāgavata, Skandha 7).

(2) Śiva was considered as a polluted man by Dakṣa as he had always been carrying with him the skull of Brahmā and so he thought it wrong on his part to admit his daughter and son-in-law to the sacrificial hall. The story of how Śiva came to have the skull, is given below.

In days of old when the whole world was under the single ocean (of the great flood) the sun, the moon, the fire, air everything was destroyed and darkness prevailed. All the vegetations were destroyed. All the emotions and non-emotions disappeared. The supreme Lord was sleeping for so many thousands of nights together. At the end of the night he assumed the attribute of 'Rajoguṇa' (activity) and got ready to create the universe. From the face of the Supreme Lord and creator of the universes came out Brahmā with five faces. In the same way, Śiva with three eyes and matted hair, and trident and rosary of beads (Elaeo carpus) and with attribute of 'Tamas' (darkness—destruction) also came out. Both Brahmā and Śiva were filled with egoism and both began to quarrel with each other. It was a contest as to who was greater. The contest ended in attack. Śiva plucked off the fifth head of Brahmā, when the same face, flushed with anger, scolded Śiva. The head fell into the hands of Śiva, who could not throw it down as it didn't come off from his hand. Brahmā cursed Śiva and made him polluted. Since Śiva became polluted, his wife Satī also was considered as polluted by Dakṣa. (Vāmana Purāṇa, Chapter 2).

(3) Once the prajāpatis performed a sacrifice. Brahmā, Viṣṇu and Śiva were present there. Dakṣa, who had been invited by the prajāpatis also was present. When Dakṣa entered the hall his son-in-law Śiva did not rise up. This arrogance of Śiva made Dakṣa angry. Dakṣa made up his mind to take vengeance on Śiva, and performed a sacrifice known as Bṛhaspatisavana. To that sacrifice he did not invite Śiva or Satī.

Hearing that her father was conducting a sacrifice Satī came uninvited. But Dakṣa did not even look at her. Satīdevi whose heart was broken at this treatment made a fire and jumped into it and died. Śiva became furious when he came to know of this. Being overwhelmed with sorrow and anger he beat his matted hair on the ground, from which two monsters, Vīrabhadra and Bhadrakālī, came out. They ran to Dakṣa's sacrificial hall and destroyed everything they saw, killed everybody, caught hold of Dakṣa and cut off his head. Then they began to create havoc in the whole world. The hermits and sages began to take to flight. Men and animals shivered. Thus the three worlds began to tremble with fear. The gods approached Śiva with supplication to curb his anger. The gracious Śaṅkara was pleased to recall the monsters. After that everybody requested him to bring Dakṣa back to life. But the search made for the head of Dakṣa was futile. At last Brahmā took the head of a goat and joined it to the headless trunk of Dakṣa. Thus he was brought to life again.[1] (Devī Bhāgavata, Skandha 7).

4) Cursing Candra. Candra had married twentyseven daughters of Dakṣa. But he showed particular attachment to Rohiṇī. The other twentysix wives could not bear this. They made a complaint to their father Dakṣa. Dakṣa called Candra and advised him to show equal attachment to all his wives and not to show any partiality to anyone. Candra did not gainsay his father-in-law, but he did not make any change in his disposition. After a few days all the daughters except Rohiṇi went to the palace of Dakṣa and told him that they were going to stay with him. This time Dakṣa got angry and called Candra and cursed him to become a sick man (of consumption).

From that day onwards Candra became a patient affected with consumption. All the vegetations in the world began to weaken. It appeared that the world was about to be destroyed. So the gods approached Dakṣa and requested him to show some leniency towards Candra. Dakṣa accordingly called Candra and told him that he would be affected by consumption only for a fortnight and after that he would recover gradually. Candra went to Prabhāsa tīrtha and Sarasvatī tīrtha and dipped in water. He began to recover from that day. It is according to the curse of Dakṣa that Candra (Moon) waxes and wanes. (M.B. Śalya Parva, Chapter 35).

5) Other information.

(1) Dakṣa has another name 'Kan'.

"Dakṣa the Prajāpati is a son of ten fathers. He has two names. They are Dakṣa and Kan." (M.B. Śānti Parva, Chapter 208, Stanza 7).

(2) When the emperor Pṛthu milked the earth, Dakṣa was crowned as the King of the subjects. (See under Pṛthu).

(3) It occurs in Mahābhārata, Sabhā Parva, Chapter 11, Stanza 18, that Dakṣa was a member of the assembly of Brahmā.

(4) Dakṣa was one of those who visited Bhīṣma in his bed of arrows. (M.B. Śānti Parva, Chapter 47).

(5) Mention is made in Mahābhārata, Śānti Parva, Chapter 166 that the devas, the manes, the gandharvas, the celestial maids, the Rākṣasas, animals and birds, fishes and all living creatures were born from the daughters of Dakṣa.

DAKSASĀVARṆI. The name of the ninth Manu. During the regime of this Manu, there will be three classes of devas (gods) called the Parṇas, the Marīcigarbhas and the Sudharmans. Each of these gaṇas or classes will consist of twelve devas or gods. Indra, their King will be known as Adbhuta. He will be mighty and powerful. In that Manvantara (age of the Manu) Savana, Dyutimān, Bhavya, Vasu, Medhātithi, Jyotiṣmān and Satya will be the Saptarṣis (the seven hermits) and Dhṛtaketu, Dīptiketu, Pañcahasta, Nirāmaya, Pṛthuśrava and others will be the sons of Manu, Dakṣasāvarṇi. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Aṁśa 1, Chapter 2).

DĀKṢĀYAṆĪ. Daughter of Dakṣa. This name is generally used for all the daughters of Dakṣa. Occasionally this name is used for the grand daughters of Dakṣa also.

DAKṢIṆĀ. A daughter, born to Prajāpati Ruci, by his wife Ākūti. The first Manu was Svāyambhuva, the son of Brahmā. He accepted Śatarūpā, his sister who became sinless by penance, as his wife. Śatarūpā gave birth to two sons Priyavrata and Uttānapāda, and two daughters, Prasūti and Ākūti. Of these two daughters, Prasūtī was given to Prajāpati Dakṣa and Ākūti to Prajāpati Ruci. Ākūti gave birth to twins, a son named Yajña and a daughter named Dakṣiṇā. To Yajña twelve sons were born by Dakṣiṇā. They were a class of devas (gods) called the Yāmas in the regime of Manu Svāyambhuva (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Aṁśa 1, Chapter 7). Now Dakṣiṇā is worshipped as a goddess. The same Dakṣiṇā was reborn in the Goloka under the name Suśīlā. At that time she was a cowherd woman and friend of Rādhā. She liked to talk with Śrī Kṛṣṇa. One day Rādhā saw her sitting in the lap of Śrī Kṛṣṇa, engaged in sexual sports, in a secluded place. When Suśīlā saw that Rādhā had found them out, she became dumbfounded with shame, and sat with bowed head. Śrī Kṛṣṇa slowly placed Suśīlā devi down and instantly vanished. The angry Rādhā cursed Suśīlā to become ashes if ever she entered the Goloka again. Then Rādhā ran about everywhere in search of Śrī Kṛṣṇa, but he could not be found.

Immediately after the curse, Suśīlā got down from the Goloka and began to worship Mahālakṣmī with devotion and meditation and very severe fast and vow. After a long time Mahālakṣmī appeared to her and blessed her, and Suśīlā became absorbed in Mahālakṣmī. Since the absorption of Suśīlā devī, who was the rebirth of Dakṣiṇādevī, in Mahālakṣmī, the sacrifice of the devas (gods) became fruitless. They were much grieved. They all went to Brahmā to find a solution. As the matter was serious Brahmā meditated upon Viṣṇu, who became pleased with Brahmā and to save the devas, he attracted Dakṣiṇādevī from the body of Mahālakṣmī and gave her as a present to Brahmā. Brahmā gave that devī (goddess) to Yajñapuruṣa (the god of sacrifice) so that the sacrifices of gods might become fruitful. When Yajñapuruṣa saw that supernatural beauty he was overpowered by lust and swooned. The couple spent a hundred divine years in seclusion enjoying the company of each other, as a result of which devī became pregnant. The pregnancy matured in twelve divine years and she gave birth to a child which was named Phalada. It is this same Phalada, the son of Yajñapuruṣa and Dakṣiṇā who awards fruits to all actions. The learned men say that Yajñapuruṣa, Dakṣiṇādevī and Phalada divide the fruits of actions among the doers. (Devī Bhāgavata, Skandha 9).

1. Though Dakṣa was brought to life again with the head of a goat there is no mention of him again in the Purāṇas. We hear of Dakṣa again as the son of Māriṣā.

DAKṢIṆĀGNI. A strong wind born from the fire Pāñcajanya. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 229, Stanza 6).

DAKṢIṆAKAILĀSA. Kālahasti, Triśivaperoor and Trikoṇamala are known by the name Dakṣiṇakailāsa.

DAKṢIṆAMALLA. A country in ancient India. This country is called Mallarājya. Its capital was Kuśīnagara or Kuśīnara. In Mahābhārata mention is made that Bhīmasena, during his conquest brought this country under control. (M.B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 30).

DAKṢIṆAPĀÑCĀLA. A place famous in the Purāṇas. This place lies to the south of the Ganges up to the river Campat. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata Sabhā Parva, Chapter 14, Stanza 27, that the King of this country fled to the south fearing Jarāsandha. Pāñcāla lies to the south and north of the Ganges. But the country was divided into two when Droṇa defeated Drupada the King of Pāñcāla, and took away from him the part of the country north of the Ganges. After that, the part taken by Droṇa was called Uttarapāñcāla and the part south of the Ganges was called Dakṣiṇapāñcāla. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 137).

DAKṢIṆASINDHU. A holy place. This place is on the shore of the southern sea. If one visits this place and takes bath there he will get the fruits of performing the sacrifice of Agniṣṭoma, and the opportunity of travelling by the aeroplane of the gods. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 82, Stanza 53).

DĀKṢIṆĀTYAS. The people of South India. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Udyoga Parva, Chapter 158, Stanza 2, that at the time of the composing of the Mahābhārata, the leader of the Dākṣiṇātyas was the emperor Bhīṣmaka.

DALA. The son of King Parīkṣit of the dynasty of Ikṣvāku. The mother of Dala was Suśobhanā, the daughter of the King of Maṇḍūka. Dala had an elder brother called Śala. Dala became king when Śala was killed. Hermit Vāmadeva was the priest of this King. (MB. Vana Parva, Chapter 192). See Parīkṣit II.

DĀLBHYA (BAKADĀLBHYA). A Maharṣi of Naimiśāraṇya. In Vāmana Purāṇa, there is a story of how this sage once performed a homa and burnt Dhṛtarāṣṭra's kingdom in the sacrificial fire.

Long ago some of the sages of Naimiśāraṇya approached Dhṛtarāṣṭra with a request for some money. Their leader was the sage Dālbhya (Baka). It was he who begged Dhṛtarāṣṭra for money. The king not only refused to give money, but also insulted the sage. Provoked at this, Dālbhya began performing a homa in which Dhṛtarāṣṭra's kingdom was the havis in the form of sliced meat. This homa was performed in Avakīrṇamahātīrtha at Pṛthūdaka. As a result of it the kingdom began to decline. The King was alarmed and consulted great scholars and astrologers about the cause of the country's decline. They told him that the cause of the disaster was Dālbhya's homa. Dhṛtarāṣṭra at once proceeded with rich presents to propitiate Dālbhya at Avakīrṇamahātīrtha. Dālbhya was pleased and as desired by the King, performed homa with milk and honey and revived all those who had died. (Vāmana Purāṇa, Chapter 39).

Mahābhārata, Sabhā Parva, Chapter 4, Verse 11 says that this Maharṣi flourished in Yudhiṣṭhira's assembly. On another occasion, he is referred to, as coming to Dyumatsena, the father of Satyavān. At that time, he comforted Dyumatsena by saying that Satyavān would be blessed with longevity. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 298, Verse 17).

DĀLBHYAM. A holy place in North India. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 58, Verse 12).

DĀLBHYAGHOṢA. Another name for the holy āśrama, Dālbhyam.

DAMA I. The brother of Damayantī. No other information about Dama is available in the Purāṇas.

DAMA II. A hermit. He was one of the hermits who came to visit Bhīṣma when he was lying on the bed of arrows. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 26, Stanza 4).

DAMA. See Śaṁbara.

DAMĀ. A female attendant of Subrahmaṇya. (M.B. Śalya Parva, Chapter 46, Verse 5).

DĀMACANDRA. A King. He was a mighty hero and a friend of Dharmaputra. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 158, Verse 40).

DAMAGHOṢA. The father of Śiśupāla, the King of Cedi. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 186, Stanza 86).

DAMANA I. A brother of Damayantī. In Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 53, Stanza 8 it is mentioned that King Bhīma had a daughter named Damayantī, and three sons named Dama, Dānta and Damana.

DAMANA II. A hermit. Bhīma the King of Vidarbha pleased this hermit, who blessed the King and said that he would get children. Accordingly the king got Damayantī as his daughter and Dama, Dānta and Damana as his sons. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 53).

DAMANA III. The son of the King Paurava. Dhṛṣṭadyumna killed Damana in the battle of Bhārata. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 61, Stanza 20).

DAMANA IV. A son of Bharadvāja. After the investiture with the Brahma string (upanayana) Damana started on a travel. On the way near Amarakaṇṭaka he met with the hermit Garga who talked to him about the glory of Kāśi. Damana who was a seeker of spiritual knowledge, stopped his travel and sat down to do penance and thus leaving his body he attained heaven. (Skanda Purāṇa, Chapter 2, 4, 74).

DAMANAKA I. One of characters in a story, of Pañcatantra. (See Mitrabhedam).

DAMANAKA II. A daitya (asura) Mahāviṣṇu in his incarnation as Matsya (Matsyāvatāra), killed this asura who was a dweller of the sea. Viṣṇu threw the body of the asura into the earth. By the touch of the Lord the body became fragrant and it was changed to a plant which is known as (Kozhunnu or Kozhuntu) Damanakam. (Skanda Purāṇa).

DAMANAKAM. The Tātiri tree (Grislea Tomentosa). The ceremony of worshipping this tree is called Damanakārohaṇavidhi. The Grislea tree is supposed to be Bhairava, who had been changed to a tree by the curse of Śiva. A story to this effect occurs in the Purāṇas.

Bhairava was formed from the anger of Śiva. Bhairava, against the will of Śiva, destroyed the devas, and so Śiva cursed him and turned him to a Tātiri tree. It is called Damanaka because Bhairava tried to do 'damana' (restraint or punishment) to the gods.

Bhairava felt sorry at the curse of Śiva. He requested Śiva to withdraw the curse. At last Śiva had pity on him and said that all would worship Damanaka tree. The method of that worship is called Damanakārohaṇavidhi. It is given below:

This tree should be worshipped on the seventh or thirteenth lunar day. The worshipper should go to the tree, with those who recite mantras and spells. After the worship is over the worshipper should say, "O, Tree, which has originated by the power of Hari, you come to my presence. On behalf of Śiva, and by his order, I have to take you home." Saying thus the tree should be taken home and consecrated in the evening in accordance with the rituals. In the house, the Sun, Śiva and Agni should be evoked and worshipped and then the root of the tree should be planted in the Īśāna (N.E. point) corner of the house and when it is planted, the spell or incantation of Vāmadeva Mantra or Śiromantra should be recited. In the same way the trunk with the branches of the tree is planted on the Northern part. The fallen leaves and flowers should be placed on the eastern side. When the root is planted the following prayer should be uttered:

> Āmantritosi deveśa
> prātaḥ kāle mayā prabho/
> Kartavyastapaso lābhāḥ
> Pūrṇaṁ sarvaṁ tavājñayā.//

After that at dawn he should take bath and with oblations of sweet-smelling flowers etc. should worship Śiva. This is Damanakārohaṇavidhi. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 80).

DAMAYANTĪ Daughter of Bhīma the King of Vidarbha. The most noble of all the Indian heroines, Damayantī has secured a place in the literatures of almost all the languages in the world. The famous hero Nala is her huband.

1) The background of the story of Nala. During the time of the forest life of the Pāṇḍavas, Arjuna had gone to Kailāsa to do penance before Śiva for getting divine weapons. The rest of the Pāṇḍavas spent the time till the arrival of Arjuna, in sorrow and sadness. They spent miserable days one by one. At that time the hermit Bṛhadaśva visited them. They welcomed the hermit. In the midst of their conversation Dharmaputra told the hermit with tears that he was the most unhappy man in the world. Hearing this the hermit told them the story of Nala, to console the Pāṇḍavas.

2) The birth of Damayantī. The King Bhīma of Vidarbha was childless for a long time. While the King was spending sorrowful days, as he had no children, a hermit named Dama reached his palace. The King welcomed the hermit. Seeing the sorrow of the King the hermit blessed the King and the queen, and as a result a daughter named Damayantī and as her brothers three sons Dama, Dānta and Damana were born to them.

3) The Svayaṁvara (marriage) of Damayantī. During this period a son named Nala was born to Vīrasena the King of Niṣadha. The child was an expert in the game of dice and he would speak only truth. He grew up and became a youth.

Once the swans which came to the palace of Damayantī from Nala, began to praise Nala. They sang about the glory of Nala. Nala also knew about the beauty and the other good qualities of Damayantī. Thus they fell in love with each other. Nala also started for Kuṇḍinapurī, the capital city of Vidarbha, to marry Damayantī. The devas (gods) Indra, Agni, Varuṇa and Yama, having heard of the beauty of Damayantī from Nārada, had gone Kuṇḍinapurī, to take part in the marriage. On the way they met Nala. They were aware of the fact that Damayantī was in love with Nala. So they called Nala and sent him to Damayantī with a message that Damayantī should accept one of the four gods as her husband. By the boon of invisibility, given by the Gods, Nala entered the room of Damayantī unseen by others and gave the message to Damayantī. But Damayantī did not agree to it. The Gods also entered the nuptial hall and took their seats in the shape of four Nalas. Damayantī entered the hall with the nuptial garland in her hands. She saw five Nalas including the real Nala, and prayed to the gods to show her the real Nala her lover. So the devas assumed their real forms and Damayantī put the garland on the neck of the real Nala and accepted him as her husband. Being much pleased with the behaviour and character of both Nala and Damayantī, the four gods blessed them. Agni promised to be near Nala whenever he thought of him. Yama said that Nala would always be righteous. Varuṇa said that Nala would obtain water at the thought of it. Indra blessed him saying that he would get mokṣa immediately after the completion of a yāga. The gods remained till the end of the marriage ceremony and then they departed. Nala and Damayantī lived in Kuṇḍinapurī.

4) The hatred between Kali and Dvāpara. Hearing about the Svayaṁvara of Damayantī Kali and Dvāpara started for Kuṇḍinapurī. On the way they met Indra and the other gods, who were returning from the marriage of Damayantī. They told Kali and Dvāpara that Damayantī had accepted Nala as her husband. Kali and Dvāpara got angry at this and returned saying that they would destroy the kingdom of Nala. After that Kali waited for a chance to enter the body of Nala. After twelve years, once Nala, after passing urine, without washing his legs performed his evening worship. At that moment Kali entered the body of Nala. With that Nala became bereft of all senses of righteousness and duty, and challenged his younger brother Puṣkara to a game of dice. Puṣkara engaged Nala in the game of dice. Kali stood in the shape of an ox as helper of Nala. Nala lost his kingdom in the game. Seeing that her husband was being defeated continuously, Damayantī sent for the charioteer Vārṣṇeya and sent her son Indrasena and daughter Indrasenā to Kuṇḍinapurī. After leaving the children at Kuṇḍinapurī Vārṣṇeya engaged himself in a travel. After visiting several countries he reached Ayodhyā and became the charioteer of King Ṛtuparṇa.

5) Nala and Damayantī to the forest. Puṣkara got the kingdom, wealth and everything that his elder brother, Nala, had possessed. The miserable Nala left everything he had and clad in only one cloth got out of the palace. His wife Damayantī followed him. They stayed outside the city for three days. Puṣkara made a proclamation that if anybody rendered any help to Nala he would be ruthlessly put to death. After that Nala stayed there for three more days, with only water for food and drink. Then he went to the forest. His wife followed him. They were hungry. Nala saw some golden birds. Nala wanted to catch them for food. So he took his only cloth and spread it on the ground. The birds took that cloth and flew away. Those birds were the dices used in the game. They were influenced by Kali. The miserable and hungerstricken Nala asked his wife Damayantī to go with the caravan traders who were going to Avanti and save herself. But she did not consent to go away from him.

They spent that night in an inn. They both fell asleep because of weakness. After a time Nala woke up. He thought that his wife would somehow or other get to some country closeby and save herself, if he left her there. So he decided to take half of her cloth. How to do it without her knowledge ? Thinking so he walked round the inn. He saw a good sword. He took the sword, and cut half of the cloth of Damayantī and leaving her in the inn he went away.

In a short while she woke up and missing her husband she cried aloud and ran here and there in search of him. Then she went into the forest crying. A big snake caught hold of her and began to swallow her. She cried aloud. Hearing the cry, a forester came there. He cut the snake open and saved Damayantī. But when he saw her he became overpowered by libido and tried to make her his wife. She got angry and cursed him and he instantly fell down dead. After this she began to wander in the forest aimlessly, often seeing wild animals and fearing them. At last she got on a rock and sat there and began to wail thinking of Nala.

6) Damayantī in the kingdom of Cedi. While she was sitting on the rock wailing, a caravan of traders came by that way. They had been attacked by a herd of elephants and were running away from them. They saw Damayantī. She told them her story. They brought her to the kingdom of Cedi. She wandered through the country for a while and finally reached the palace of the King Subāhu. Thinking her to be a mad woman the street boys were following her. The queen saw the woman surrounded by street boys and felt pity for her. She sent her maid and brought her to the palace. Without revealing that she was the queen of King Nala, she told everything else to the queen. The queen consoled her and said that she would get her husband back. She invited Damayantī to stay in the palace till she got her husband back. Damayantī replied as follows : "Mother, I shall stay here. But there are certain conditions. I won't eat remains and offals of victuals, I won't make others to wash my legs. I won't talk with men who are not related to me. If anybody hankers after me you must order him to be killed. Brāhmaṇas may come and see me only in connection with the search for my husband. This is my vow." The queen agreed to her conditions and made her the attendant of her daughter Sunandā.

7) Nala in Ayodhyā. Nala filled with sorrow was walking along the forest when he saw a wild fire. From the midst of the fire somebody was calling Nala by name and crying. When Nala approached the fire, he saw the great and famous serpent Karkoṭaka lying entwined in the flames. Karkoṭaka the King of the Nāgas had once deceived Nārada, who then cursed him that he would become stationary in a place like an immovable thing till Nala came and rescued him. From that day onwards, Karkoṭaka was remaining in that forest without moving. Then the forest caught fire. Karkoṭaka being unable to move had to remain in the fire. Nala immediately saved Karkoṭaka from the fire and with that he was absolved from the curse of Nārada. Karkoṭaka asked Nala to walk forward, counting the steps. When Nala counted ten, Karkoṭaka bit on the leg of Nala and he became ugly. Then the serpent said to the flurried Nala, "Don't fear. I have made you ugly so that others may not recognize you. Now you are ugly because of my poison. But my poison has affected Kali who is in your body. Because he had harmed you who are blameless, he has to suffer for it. So long as this poison is in you, nobody will harm you. You must go to Ṛtuparṇa the King of Ayodhyā and tell him that you are Bāhuka a charioteer. You must give Ṛtuparṇa the spell 'Aśvahṛdaya mantra' and get from him the spell 'Akṣahṛdayamantra'. After that you will have reunion with your wife and children. Here are two cloths for you. Whenever you want to get your original form you need only wear them." Saying these words Karkoṭaka gave Nala two divine garments and then disappeared.

Nala started for Ayodhyā. He reached the palace on the tenth day. There he was employed as the horse keeper of Ṛtuparṇa on a pay of hundred pieces of gold. Thus he stayed there under the name Bāhuka. Vārṣṇeya and Jīvala who were the horse-keepers of Ṛtuparṇa upto that time, were placed under Bāhuka.

Bāhuka used to recite a poem every evening when he returned from his work.

Weary and worn of hunger and thirst,
That poor woman, where might she be ?
Serving whom will she be now.
Thinking of the unlucky fool ?

Hearing this song of lamentation everyday, once his assistant Jīvala asked Bāhuka, whom he was reciting the poem about. Bāhuka replied : "Once there was a man who was a fool. He got a good wife. For some reason they were separated. The fool is still wandering about weary and sad in search of his wife.".

8) Damayantī in Kuṇḍinapura. At this time Damayantī was living in the palace of the King of Cedi, as the maid of princess Sunandā. King Bhīma became very sorry not knowing where Nala and Damayantī had gone. He sent men in all directions to search for them. The King proclaimed that those who found them would be awarded thousand cows, lands assigned to Brahmins, and villages. He proclaimed that so many cows would be given even to those who could give any information about them. Hearing this Brāhmaṇas went in all directions and Sudeva, one of them, reached the Kingdom of Cedi. He recognized Damayantī who was like fire inside the cover of smoke. When Damayantī was alone Sudeva approached her and said that he had come from Vidarbha and that he was a friend of Damayantī's brother. Damayantī recognized Sudeva and she cried aloud. Sunandā who saw this scene, told her mother about it. The queen sent for Sudeva and asked him what the matter was. He revealed everything about Damayantī, to the queen. When they heard the story all the women in the harem cried. Then with tears the queen said, "Hear this, Damayantī, your mother and myself are the two daughters of Sudama the King of Daśārṇa. Father gave your mother to Bhīma the King of Vidarbha and me to Vīrabāhu the King of Cedi. I have seen you when you were an infant."

When the King of Cedi knew everything he sent Damayantī in a palanquin to Vidarbha.

9) The search for Nala. Damayantī told her father that she didn't want to live any longer unless Nala was brought to her. Bhīma had been trying hard to find out Nala. One day Parṇāda one of the numerous Brahmins who were engaged in the search for Nala, came to Bhīma and said, "while I was wandering from place to place, I happened to reach the palace of Ṛtuparṇa the King of Ayodhyā. There I made enquiries about Nala the husband of Damayantī, in the presence of the King. But nobody gave me any answer. When I returned Bāhuka the charioteer of Ṛtuparṇa followed me. An ugly man with short hands, an expert in driving horses, and an excellent cook, he asked me several questions about Damayantī."

When Damayantī heard this she had horripilation. She secretly went to her mother and compelled her to send Sudeva the Brāhmaṇa to Ayodhyā. Her mother consented. She called Sudeva, in the presence of her mother and told him to go to Ayodhyā and tell Ṛtuparṇa that the second svayaṁvara (marriage) of Damayantī would take place before sunrise next day and that he should come earlier. Sudeva instantly went to Ayodhyā.

Ṛtuparṇa, hearing the words of Sudeva, wanted Bāhuka to take him in the chariot to Vidarbha within the period of a day time for the second svayaṁvara of Damayantī. Nala consented with a breaking heart. Immediately they started. Vārṣṇeya also got into the chariot. The chariot flew through the sky with tremendous speed, to Vidarbha. On the way the upper garment of the King fell on the ground. He ordered the chariot to be stopped for taking his upper garment. Nala said that within that winking time the chariot had travelled a yojana (league) and gloried in his power of driving horses. Then they saw in the forest a Tanni tree (Terminalia bellerica) with fruits. Seeing the Tanni tree the King said, "O Bāhuka, if you are an expert in horse-driving I am an expert in reckoning. I will tell you how many leaves and nuts there are in that Tanni Tree. There are five crores of leaves in both the branches together and two thousand and ninetyfive nuts. They stopped the chariot and checked the tree and found the reckoning of the King correct. The King had the knowledge of the art called 'Akṣahṛdaya'. It was with this art that the king calculated the number of leaves in the tree, at one look. Bāhuka drove the chariot with the speed of wind because he had known the art called 'Aśvahṛdaya'. Then and there, Bāhuka taught the King the art of 'Aśvahṛdaya' and the King taught Bāhuka the art of 'Akṣahṛdaya'. The moment Nala learned Akṣahṛdaya Kali vomitted the poison of Karkoṭaka and got out of the body of Nala. Long ago, the mother of Indrasena, a god, had cursed Kali and drove him out. Since then Kali had been living in the body of Nala. As soon as he came out Kali begged Nala for pardon. Nala curbed his anger. But Kali was afraid of Nala. So he made the Tanni tree his abode. Because of that Tanni became detestable.

Ṛtuparṇa, Vārṣṇeya and Bāhuka reached Kuṇḍinapura in the evening. When the sound of the chariot of Nala reached the ears of Damayantī her heart bumped with joy. The chariot was stopped and Ṛtuparṇa entered the palace. The King Bhīma welcomed Ṛtuparṇa heartily. As there was no sign of any preparation for the svayaṁvara (marriage) Ṛtuparṇa understood that some sort of trick had been played on him.

10) Test of Nala. Damayantī sent her maid Keśinī to Bāhuka to watch him. Keśinī had a secret talk with Bāhuka. Though Nala did not reveal himself, he cried when she talked about Damayantī. Keśinī returned to Damayantī and told her what she had heard and seen. Damayantī became more and more convinced that Bāhuka was Nala himself So she sent Keśinī again to Nala. She discovered the following facts about Bāhuka, after a keen observation, and made a report of them.

(1) Bāhuka does not stop to pass through even a small door. The upper sill lifts by itself for him to pass through.

(2) He gets enough room for him to pass through even a big crowd.

(3) Empty pots are filled with water at a look from him.

(4) When he stretches out a grass to the sun, it catches fire.

(5) Fire does not burn him even if he touches it.

(6) When he crushes a flower, it blooms more beautiful and fragrant than before.

When Keśinī said all these facts to Damayantī, she became fully convinced that Bāhuka was none other than Nala himself. Damayantī sent Keśinī again to Bāhuka to get some meat cooked by him. Damayantī tested the taste of the meat brought by Keśinī and she knew that the food was cooked by Nala. She sent Keśinī again to Bāhuka with her children. Seeing Indrasena and Indrasenā coming to him, Bāhuka ran to them, gathered them and embraced them and cried aloud. Then he told Keśinī that he had done so because the children were just like his two children.

11) Reunion. After having tested Bāhuka so far Damayantī sent Keśinī to her mother to tell her everything, and to say that she was convinced of the fact that Bāhuka was none other than Nala and that the difference was only in shape and to request that she may be permitted to see Bāhuka in person. The queen informed the King of all these facts. With the permission of her parents Bāhuka was brought to the room of Damayantī. The moment Bāhuka saw Damayantī he began to shed tears. Damayantī also was filled with emotion. But she told him thus :—

"Bāhuka, have you seen a man who had left his sleeping wife in the forest ? Who else, but Nala the famous and the righteous would discard his blameless and loving wife who had been sleeping, with fatigue and hunger in a lonely place ? Have I done anything wrong to him in my younger days so that he should leave me in the forest when I was sleeping ? Leaving aside real gods I married him. I worshipped, him. I had children from his blood and now he has abandoned me. In the presence of Gods and with fire as witness, holding my hands he had taken a vow that he would support and protect me. Where has that vow gone ?" At these words Bāhuka shed tears for a long time. Then he told her all that had happened to him since their separation. Damayantī requested Nala, not to have any misconception regarding the idea of a second svayaṁvara; she said to him that she committed no wrong and that her fidelity and loyalty had undergone no change. At that time Vāyu (the wind-god) in an etherial voice said "Damayantī has committed no sin". Immediately Nala put on the divine clothes given by Karkoṭaka and regained his original form. Damayantī embraced Nala and cried aloud. The king her father, mother and the people of the city all ran to them.

Next day Ṛtuparṇa returned. After a few days Nala collected an army consisting of three hundred soldiers, sixteen elephants, fifty horses and a white chariot only, from Vidarbha and went to the kingdom of Niṣadha. Reaching there Nala challenged Puṣkara for a game of dice. Puṣkara refused the challenge. Nala took his sword to cut Puṣkara into two. Finally Puṣkara agreed to play. At the first cast of the dice the life and the Kingdom of Puṣkara fell into the hands of Nala. But Nala did not kill Puṣkara; instead, he embraced him. Nala became King. Damayantī and the children reached Niṣadha. Nala ruled the country with more happiness and prosperity than before. (Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapters 52 to 79).

DAMAYANTĪ II. The daughter of Pramloca. See Viśvakarmā, 2nd para.

ḌAMBARA. One of the two attendants given by Brahmā to Subrahmaṇya. The other attendant's name is Āḍaṁbara. (M.B. Śalya Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 39).

DAṀBHA. A dānava or asura. Daṁbha was the son of Vipracitti an asura born to Kaśyapa by his wife Danu. This Daṁbha is the father of Śaṅkhacūḍa, an asura. Daṁbha received from their teacher Śukra, the spell known as the famous Viṣṇumantra and went to Puṣkaratīrtha and did penance there for one lac of years. It was due to this penance that the son Śaṅkhacūḍa was born to him. (Devī Bhāgavata, Skandha 9).

DAMBHODBHAVA. See Paraśurāma, Para 10, subsection 2.

DAṀBHODBHAVA. An ancient emperor. He was a mighty warrior prince. He brought the whole world under control. At last there was nobody left to fight with. So he walked about challenging everybody he met with. But none dared to fight with him. Then Brahmā advised him to challenge Nara Nārāyaṇas who were doing penance on the northern-most point of the earth. So the emperor went with his mighty army to Gandhamādana and informed Nara and Nārāyaṇa of his desire to fight. They said that they were mere hermits and that they had no power to fight. But Daṁbhodbhava was not satisfied. Finally Nara and Nārāyaṇa took some iṣīkā grass and began to fight the emperor with it. Though the army of the emperor was mighty and vast it could not stand against the grass in the hands of the hermits. Finally the emperor admitted failure and bowed before the hermits. They advised him not to be arrogant in future and to lead a pure life. Hearing the exhortations of the hermits the emperor became a devoted man. He returned to his palace and led a life of righteousness. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 96).

DAMI. A famous holy place. Brahmā usually sits in this place and worships Maheśvara. In Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 82, Stanza 72, it is mentioned that all the sins of those who bathe in this place will be washed away.

DAṀŚA. The giant who took birth as the worm 'Alarkkaṁ'. This giant came in the shape of a beetle and pierced the leg of Karṇa, the disciple of Paraśurāma. Daṁśa once kidnapped the wife of Bhṛgu, and the hermit cursed the giant and turned him to a beetle. He also said that Parameśvara would absolve him from the curse. (See Karṇa, Para 4).

DĀMODARA. Śrī Kṛṣṇa. When Śrī Kṛṣṇa was a small boy, Yaśodā tied him to a mortar-stone. The boy ran about, dragging the heavy stone with him and the rope snapped. Part of the rope still remained round his abdomen. From that he got the name Dāmodara. "Dama" means rope and "Udara" means abdomen. (See Kṛṣṇa).

DĀMO[illegible].I. A sage in the assembly of Yudhiṣṭhira. Once he met Śrī Kṛṣṇa who was on his way to Hastināpura. (M.B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 4, Verse 13).

DĀNADĀRI. A town in ancient India. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 50, Verse 52).

DĀNAM. Gift. In ancient India a spiritual significance was attached to dānam. (offering of a free gift). One who gave water was said to achieve contentment; one who gave food, eternal happiness; one who gave land, government of the country; one who gave gold would attain longevity; one who gave a house would get domestic felicity; one who gave silver would get physical beauty; one who gave clothes would reach candraloka; one who gave a horse would attain the world of the Aśvinīdevas; one who gave bulls would get prosperity; one who gave cows would reach sūryaloka; according to Manusmṛti.

(Manusmṛti, Chapter 4).

According to Manu, the Ācārya, the rewards obtained by offering the following articles as "Dānam" are as follows:—

Articles offered as Dānam	Reward obtained by dātā (giver).
Vehicle—bed	Virtuous wife.
Refuge (shelter)	Prosperity.
Corn	Eternal happiness.
Brahmajñāna	Brahmasāyujya.

(See also Nakṣatrayoga and Merudāna).

DĀNAVA. Dānavas are the sons born to Kaśyapa Prajāpati by his wife Danu and their descendants. (See under Danu).

DANĀYUS. A daughter of Dakṣaprajāpati. Kaśyapaprajāpati married Danāyus. Four sons Vikṣara, Bala, Vīra and Vrata were born to her. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 65).

DAṆḌA I. A king who was the son of Ikṣvāku. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 67, Stanza 45, that this King was the rebirth of Krodhahantā, an asura.

1) Birth. Ikṣvāku had one hundred sons. Of them Vikukṣi, Nimi and Daṇḍa were famous. Daṇḍa became a famous archer when he grew up. In the Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa mention is made that this King Daṇḍa took part in the Devāsura battle (Battle between the gods and the demons) and killed several thousand asuras (demons).

2) Administration. The king Ikṣvāku gave his son Daṇḍa the country between the mountains Himālaya and Vindhya and anointed him the King of that country. Daṇḍa built a capital city known as Madhumatta and began to rule the country. He had an army of Caturaṅga (four parts, elephant, chariot, horse and infantry). The hermit Śamana was the priest of King Daṇḍa. (Uttararāmāyaṇa).

3) The origin of Daṇḍakāraṇya (the forest of Daṇḍaka). Daṇḍa once raped Arā, the daughter of hermit Śukra, who had been doing penance in a forest in the middle of the country of Daṇḍa. Śukra the hermit got angry and destroyed the country of Daṇḍa by a shower of fire. From that day onwards that country was known as Daṇḍakāraṇya. (For further information see under Arā).

DAṆḌA II.

1) General information. Another Kṣatriya King of ancient India. He was the son of the King Vidaṇḍa. In Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 185, it is mentioned that Vidaṇḍa and Daṇḍa had attended Draupadī Svayaṁvara (the marriage of Draupadī).

2) Other information. (1) Bhīmasena defeated the King Daṇḍa. (M.B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 307, Stanza 177).

(2) This King Daṇḍa was the brother of Daṇḍadhara, the king of Magadha. Daṇḍadhara and Daṇḍa were killed by Arjuna in battle. (M.B. Karṇa Parva, Chapter 18, Stanza 16).

DAṆḌA III. An attendant of the Sun. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 3, Stanza 68).

DAṆḌA IV. A warrior of the kingdom of Cedi. He fought on the side of the Pāṇḍavas against the Kauravas and was killed by Karṇa. (M.B. Karṇa Parva, Chapter 56, Stanza 49).

DAṆḌA V. A synonym of Mahāviṣṇu. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 149, Stanza 105).

DAṆḌA VI (DAṆḌAKA). A thief who had made the world tremble in the Dvāpara yuga. This wicked Daṇḍaka used to steal the wealth of the Brāhmaṇas, kill those who trusted him, speak lies, rape the women of others, drink liquor, eat the flesh of cows, mingle with wicked people and do various other sinful deeds daily. Daṇḍa once went to a Vaiṣṇavite temple to commit robbery. When he reached the steps of the temple he wiped his legs which were wet, on the ground and a small depression that was there, was levelled by the drawing of his legs. He broke the lock with an iron rod and entered the temple. Inside the temple he saw Kṛṣṇa, clad in yellow robes lying on a beautiful cot, with his spouse Rādhā. The thief instantly bowed before the spouse of Rādhā. By this act his sins were washed away. Still impelled by his evil nature, he took the silk garment of Kṛṣṇa, spread it on the ground, collected as many things as he could take, placed them in the garment and making them into a bundle, got out of the temple with shaky feet. The bundle fell on the ground with a loud noise. Hearing the noise the neighbours woke up and looked out. The thief began to run and was bitten by a poisonous snake and fell down dead. The men of Yama (God of death) tied the spirit of the thief with a rope and took him before Yama. Citragupta looked into his accounts and informed Yama that he had committed all the sins. Yama asked if there was any good deed to his account. Then Citragupta said "When this great sinner was going to commit theft in a Vaiṣṇavite temple, at the steps of the temple, he levelled a pit by the mud on his leg, and that single good deed on his part has wiped out all his sins." Hearing this Yama gave him a golden seat and showed hospitality and then bowed before him and said "By the soil on your legs you have purified my abode today. I am grateful to you. Now you may go to the blissful world of Viṣṇu where there are no deaths or births or sorrow". Hearing this Daṇḍa entered Vaikuṇṭha. (Padma Purāṇa, Chapter 1).

DAṆḌA VII. A giant (Rākṣasa). This giant Daṇḍa was born to the giant Sumāli, by his wife Ketumatī. The nine ministers of Rāvaṇa, named Prahasta, Akampana, Vikaṭa, Kālakāmukha, Dhūmrākṣa, Supārśva, Saṁhrāda, Prākvāṭa and Bhāsakarṇa were brothers of this Daṇḍa. (Uttara Rāmāyaṇa).

DAṆḌAM I. A divine weapon of Kāla (Yama). It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 41, Stanza 26 that King Yama had presented this weapon to Arjuna.

DAṆḌAM II. A holy place on the bank of river Pampā. Those who bathe in this holy place will get the fruits of giving a thousand cows as Gift. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 85, Stanza 15).

DAṆḌAM III. One of the four expedients. The four expedients are Sāma, Dāna, Bheda and Daṇḍa. A king should subdue an enemy by resorting to these four expedients. Of the four expedients, sāma and daṇḍa are considered to be the best.

Sāmādīnāmupāyānāṁ
Caturṇāmapi paṇḍitāḥ /
Sāmadaṇḍau praśaṁsanti
Nityaṁ rāṣṭrābhivṛddhaye. //

(Manusmṛti, Stanza 109).

Wise people say that, of the four expedients Sāma and Daṇḍa are the most effective for the prosperity of the country.

DAṆḌABĀHU. A warrior of Subrahmaṇya (M.B. Śalya Parva, Chapter 45, Stanza 73).

DAṆḌADHARA I. A Kṣatriya King of Magadha. The following information about this King is available from the Mahābhārata.

1) Daṇḍadhara was born as the rebirth of a giant known as Krodhavardhana. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 67, Stanza 46).

2) Bhīmasena, during his conquest of the countries, overcame King Daṇḍadhara and his brother Daṇḍa.

(M.B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 30, Stanza 17).

3) In the battle between the Pāṇḍavas and the Kauravas, Daṇḍadhara fought from the back of an elephant against the Pāṇḍavas. When Daṇḍadhara began to exterminate the army of the Pāṇḍavas, Śrī Kṛṣṇa persuaded Arjuna to fight against Daṇḍadhara, who was killed in the fight. (M.B. Karṇa Parva, Chapter 8, Stanzas 1 to 13).

DAṆḌADHARA II. One of the hundred sons of Dhṛtarāṣṭra. Bhīmasena killed this Daṇḍadhara in the battle of Kurukṣetra. (M.B. Karṇa Parva, Chapter 84, Stanza 5).

DAṆḌADHARA III. A king who helped the Pāṇḍavas. Very often the name Maṇimān also occurs along with the name of Daṇḍadhara. They might have been brothers or sons of the same father by separate mothers. In the Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 186, Stanza 7, mention is made that these two had been present at the marriage of Draupadī. Droṇācārya killed both of them in the battle of Bhārata. (M.B. Karṇa Parva, Chapter 6, Stanza 13).

DAṆḌADHARA IV. A warrior born and bred in the country of Pāñcāla. He kept the rear of the army of Yudhiṣṭhira in the battle of Bhārata against the Kauravas. He died by an arrow of Karṇa. (M.B. Karṇa Parva, Chapter 49, Stanza 27).

DAṆḌAGAURĪ. A celestial maid. When Arjuna visited devaloka, there was a dance of this woman in honour of him. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 43, Stanza 29).

DAṆḌAKA. See Daṇḍa VI.

DAṆḌAKARA. A Śūdra who had saved himself from going to hell by taking the vow called Viṣṇupañcaka. This Śūdra who lived in the tretāyuga had done a good deal of wicked deeds. Finally he accepted the advice of Brāhmaṇas and performed the vow of Viṣṇupañcaka and because of the vow he attained heaven. (Padma Purāṇa, Chapter 23).

DAṆḌAKĀRAṆYA. A forest in the Indo-Gangetic Valley. For the story of how this place became a great forest see under Arā.

Other information. (1) This is a holy place. He who takes bath in this place would get the fruits of giving a thousand cows as gift. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 85, Stanza 41).

(2) During the time of the forest life of Śrī Rāma he made his cottage in this forest and stayed there for a while. It was in this forest that a part of the body of Śūrpaṇakhā was cut off and the infantry of fourteen thousand giants who came under the leadership of Khara, Dūṣaṇa and Triśira was completely destroyed. Sītā was stolen, Mārīca was killed by Śrī Rāma, and Jaṭāyu died by the sword of Rāvaṇa in this forest of Daṇḍakāraṇya. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapters 277 to 279.)

DAṆḌAKETU. A warrior who fought on the side of the Pāṇḍavas. Daṇḍaketu fought on the back of an attractive horse. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 23, Stanza 68).

DAṆḌANĪTI. (The laws of chastisement). Daṇḍanīti is the law of punishment given to the subjects by Kings of ancient India. According to the criminal laws of ancient India, fining a man upto two hundred and fifty paṇas (a coin) was called Prathama Śāhasa daṇḍa (first degree of punishment) and fining up to five hundred paṇas was called Madhyama Sāhasa daṇḍa (medium punishment) and fining upto thousand paṇas was called Uttama Sāhasa daṇḍa (highest degree of punishment). If a man complains to the King that his property is stolen, when actually it is not stolen, the man will be fined the amount that is said to have been stolen. There was another law, that the owner of the stolen property and the thief would have to pay double the amount they admit, if the amount shown in the complaint differed from the actual amount stolen. For appearing as false witness, the three classes of non-Brahmins were punished with fine and if he was a Brahmin he would have to be cast out of the society. The King ordered that if one spent the property entrusted with him for keeping, the owner of the property would have to be paid double the amount. If one says that he has given the property for keeping when actually it is not, the person will have to be punished as if he were a thief. If a man spends an amount without knowing that it was the property of others, the man will have to be acquitted of the charge.

If an artisan has received money in advance for a particular product and fails to give the thing at the stipulated time the King will fine the artisan one svarṇa. If a man received money in advance on a promise to do a particular work and if he fails to do the work he will be fined one Kṛṣṇala of gold. (One Kṛṣṇala weighs three yavagrains). If a man conceals his diseases and marries a damsel, she will be considered as a spinster and the man will be fined two hundred paṇas. If a cowherd agrees to look after the cows of another receiving pay and food and refuses to return the cow to the owner the King will fine him hundred paṇas. If a Kṣatriya scoffed a Brāhmaṇa the fine imposed would be hundred paṇas. If it is a Vaiśya the fine will be two hundred paṇas. If it is a Śūdra he will be put to death. If a Brahmin scoffs a Kṣatriya the fine is fifty paṇas. If a Śūdra scoffs a Vaiśya the fine is twenty-five paṇas. If a Brahmin scoffs a Śūdra the fine is only twelve paṇas. If a Śūdra scoffs a Kṣatriya his tongue should be cut off. If a Śūdra advises a Brahmin, he may inflict any punishment on the Śūdra.

If a Śūdra wronged a Brahmin, the Śūdra might be punished by cutting off the organ which was employed in the crime. If one spat at a Brahmin, the two lips of the culprit might be cut off. If a man passed urine on a Brahmin the culprit would have his penis cut off. If a Śūdra sits on the seats of the upper classes his buttock will have to be cut off. If one slays cow, elephant, camel or horse half of his limbs will have to be cut off. Cutting across a road, changing of boundaries, making the water of pools and ponds impure etc. will have to be punished with a fine of two suvarṇas. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 227).

DAṆḌAPĀṆI I. A king of the family of Yayāti. This King was the son of Vibhīnara and the father of Nimi. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 10).

DAṆḌAPĀṆI II. The son of Pauṇḍraka, the King of Kāśi. Śrī Kṛṣṇa killed Pauṇḍraka. As his son Daṇḍapāṇi was not powerful enough to kill Śrī Kṛṣṇa, he performed the sacrifice of Maheśvara yajña. Being pleased at the sacrifice Śiva created Kṛtyā in the sacrificial fire and sent her to Dvārakā to destroy Śrī Kṛṣṇa, who aimed his Sudarśana cakra (wheel-weapon) at her. She ran to Vārāṇasī, where the wheel turned Kṛtyā and everybody with her to ashes. (Padma-Purāṇa, Uttara Kāṇḍa, Chapter 278).

DANDAŚŪKA. A hell. See the para Naraka under Kāla.

DAṆḌI I. A son of Dhṛtarāṣṭra. Mention is made about him in Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 67, Stanza 103.

DAṆḌĪ II. A god. This god is worshipped as a waiter of the Sun. The sun is consecrated in a chariot of one wheel, yoked with seven horses, and wearing two lotus flowers. On the rightside of the Sun his waiter Daṇḍī will be standing as door-keeper with ink and pen in his hand, and on the left his waiter Piṅgala will be standing with a stick in his hand. These two gate-keepers are the two gaṇas of the Sun. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 51).

DAṆḌĪ III. A famous critic and writer of Sanskrit literature. He lived in the 6th century B.C. His critical work Kāvyādarśa made him famous. There are three chapters in this book. The first chapter is about criticism of poetry and the use of idioms. The second chapter deals with figurative language. The third chapter deals with alliteration and rhyme and the flaws in poetry.

'Daśakumāracarita', is supposed to be another work of Daṇḍī. (History of Classical Sanskrit Literature).

DĀNTA. Son of Bhīma, King of Vidarbha. This prince was the brother of Damayantī. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 53, Verse 9).

DĀNTĀ. An apsaras of Alakāpurī. Once she danced in honour of the sage Aṣṭāvakra. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 19, Verse 45).

DANTADHVAJA. The son of Manu Tāmasa. Once Daṇḍadhvaja gave as oblation his flesh and blood in fire, to get children. But it was of no use. So he put his hair of the body, of the head, his sinews, the marrow of the bones, and liver and sperm in the fire. When the sperm was put in the fire there was a voice 'Don't' and with that the king fell dead. And instantly seven luminous children came out from the fire. They began to cry aloud. Hearing their cry Brahmā came there and anointed them as the Maruts (wind gods). They were the maruts of Tāmasamanvantara. (Vāmana Purāṇa, Chapter 72).

DANTAVAKTRA I. A Kṣatriya king of Kārūṣa. He was the rebirth of the daitya (asura) Krodhavaśa. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 67, Stanza 62).

DANTAVAKTRA II. He was the rebirth of Vijaya, one of the two door-keepers of Mahāviṣṇu, Jaya and Vijaya. (For full particulars see under Jaya).

Dantavaktra was a contemporary king of Śrī Kṛṣṇa. Dantavaktra died in a battle with Śrī Kṛṣṇa and returned to Vaikuṇṭha (the abode of Viṣṇu).

DANTIMUKHA. An asura (demon). This asura was killed in a fight with Subrahmaṇya. (Skanda Purāṇa, Asura Kāṇḍa).

DANU I.

1) General information. Danu, the daughter of Dakṣa was married to Kaśyapa Prajāpati. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata that the Dānavas (demons) were born from Danu.

2) Sons. One hundred sons were born to Danu. The following are the important among them.

1. Vipracitti
2. Śibara
3. Namuci
4. Pulomā
5. Asilomā
6. Keśi
7. Durjaya
8. Ayaśśiras
9. Aśvaśiras
10. Aśvaśaṅku
11. Garga
12. Amūrdhā
13. Vegavān
14. Ketumān
15. Svarbhānu
16. Aśva
17. Aśvapati
18. Vṛṣaparvan
19. Ajaka
20. Aśvagrīvan
21. Sūkṣma
22. Tuhuṇḍa
23. Ekapād
24. Ekacakra
25. Virūpākṣa
26. Harihara
27. Nicandra
28. Nikumbha
29. Kapaṭa
30. Śarabha
31. Śalabha
32. Sūrya
33. Candra.

(This sun and the moon (Sūrya and Candra) are not the planets).

From the sons named above ten families of Dānavas (asuras) arose. The founders of the families are mentioned below :

1. Ekākṣa
2. Amṛtapa
3. Pralamba
4. Naraka
5. Vātāpi
6. Tapana
7. Śara
8. Mahāhanu
9. Garviṣṭha
10. Dīrghajihva

All the dānavas or Asuras belong to one of these ten families. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 65).

DANU II. A King. Two sons Rambha and Karambha were born to this king. (See Karambha).

DARADA I. King of an ancient country known as Bālhīka. It is stated in Mahābhārata Ādi Parva, Chapter 67, Stanza 58 that this King was the incarnation of a portion of the asura named Sūrya. At the time of his birth the earth was cleaved because of his weight.

DARADA II. An ancient country in North East India. The people of this country were called the Daradas. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Sabhā Parva, Chapter 27, that Arjuna conquered this country during his conquest of countries. The Daradas paid tribute to Yudhiṣṭhira. During their forest-life the Pāṇḍavas had passed through the country of the Daradas. At the beginning of the Bhārata-battle, the Pāṇḍavas had sent invitation to the Daradas also. But they fought on the side of the Kauravas. Mention is made in Mahābhārata, Droṇa Parva, Chapter 70, Stanza 11 that Śrī Kṛṣṇa had conquered the Darada country. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Droṇa Parva, Chapter 121, that in the battle of Bhārata the Daradas attacked Sātyaki and that Sātyaki killed them.

DARADA III. A tribe. At first they were Kṣatriyas. They grew jealous of the Brāhmaṇas and so they were changed to Śūdras. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 35, Stanza 17).

DĀRADAM. A place in ancient India. There is a reference to this place in Mahābhārata, Śalya Parva, Chapter 50, Verse 50.

DARBHI. An ancient hermit. This hermit built a tīrtha (bath) named Ardhakīla in Kurukṣetra. It is believed that anybody who bathed in this place and fasted could learn the mantras (spells and incantations) and become a Brāhmaṇa. It occurs in the Purāṇas that the hermit Darbhi has brought the four oceans to this bath. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 83, Stanza 54).

DARDDURA. A mountain. The deity of this mountain is said to be sitting in the council hall of Kubera (the god of wealth) and worshipping him, according to Mahābhārata, Sabhā Parva, Chapter 1, Stanza 35.

DĀRI. A serpent born in the family of Dhṛtarāṣṭra. This serpent fell into the sacrificial fire of Janamejaya and was burnt to death. (Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 57, Stanza 16).

DARIDRA. A king born in the family of Yayāti. He was the son of Dundubhi and father of Vasu. (Bhāgavata, Navama Skandha).

DARPA. A king of the family of Yayāti. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 9).

DARŚAKA. A country in ancient India. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 9, Stanza 53).

DĀRUKA I.

1) Śrī Kṛṣṇa's charioteer. In the Mahābhārata, we come across few persons who excel Dāruka in their skill as charioteers. We find the following details about him in the Mahābhārata :—

1) When Śrī Kṛṣṇa fought against King Śālva, Dāruka was over-whelmed by Śālva's arrows. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 21, Verse 5).

2) At the time of the battle at Kurukṣetra, hearing the sound of Śrī Kṛṣṇa's conch-shell, Dāruka drove his chariot and brought it before Śrī Kṛṣṇa. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 147, Verse 45).

3) When Sātyaki fought with Karṇa, Dāruka drove Sātyaki's chariot. At that time he proved his extraordinary skill in charioteering. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 147, Verse 54).

4) After being attended by Dāruka, Śrī Kṛṣṇa's chariot horses flew up into the Heavens. (M.B. Mausala Parva, Chapter 3, Verse 5).

5) It was Dāruka who informed the Pāṇḍavas that the Yaduvaṁśa had perished. On his return, he accompanied Arjuna in his journey to Dvārakā. (M.B. Mausala Parva, Chapter 5).

DĀRUKA II. A charioteer of Mahiṣāsura. (Devī Bhāgavata, Pañcama Skandha). For further details about this Dāruka, see under Ghaṇṭākarṇa.

DĀRUKA III. A son of Garuḍa. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 101, Verse 9 contains a reference to this Dāruka).

DĀRUṆAM. A naraka (hell). See under Naraka.

DĀRVA. A Kṣatriya king of the land called Dārvam. Opinion is divided as to whether Dārvam is the name of a land or of a caste. (M.B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 27, Verse 18).

DĀRVA. A country in Ancient India. Mention is made about this country in Mahābhārata, Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 9, Stanza 54.

DĀRVĀDHISĀRA(S). A low class people. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 93, Verse 44).

DĀRVAṀ. The word Darvas indicates a particular class of Kṣatriyas. In Mahābhārata, Sabhā Parva, Chapter 52, Stanza 13, it is said that the Kṣatriyas of this family had presented Dharmaputra with a large quantity of wealth.

DĀRVĪ. An ancient town in India. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 9, Verse 54).

DARVĪSAṄKRAMAṆA. A holy place. Those who visit this place will get the fruits of performing the sacrifice of Aśvamedha and will attain heaven. (Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 84, Stanza 45).

DĀŚA. A country in Ancient India. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 9, Stanza 56).

DĀSA. A term used as a suffix to the name of a Śūdra. In ancient India the rule was that the proper suffix for a Brahmin's name should be 'Śarmā', for a Kṣatriya's name, 'Varmā', for a Vaiśya's name, 'Gupta' and for a Śūdra's name, 'Dāsa'. (See under Cāturvarṇya).

DAŚADRYU. A hermit. It is mentioned in Ṛgveda, Maṇḍala 1, Anuvāka 7, Sūkta 33 that Daśadryu was a valiant hermit.

DAŚAGRĪVA. Rāvaṇa. (See under Rāvaṇa).

DAŚAJYOTI. A son of the King Subhrāṭ. Mention is made about him in Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 1, Stanza 44.

DAŚAMĀLIKA. A country in Bhārata. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 9, Stanza 66).

DAŚAMUKHA RĀVAṆA. Rāvaṇa, the enemy of Śrī Rāma. (See under Rāvaṇa).

DAŚĀNANA. See under Rāvaṇa.

DĀŚARĀJA. Foster-father of Śantanu's wife, Satyavatī. His actual name was Uccaiḥśravas. For detailed story see under Satyavatī.

DĀŚARĀJÑA. A great war which took place in India in ancient times. It was a terrible clash between the Āryans who lived in Pañcanada and the primitive inhabitants of India, before the Ṛgveda period. Sudās, the king was the adversary of the Āryans. Among the relatives of Sudās were Āryans and non-Āryans. It was the people under Sudās who got victory in this war. Anyway, with this war, (Dāśarājña), a new mixed race of people came into being in North India, which was composed of the Āryans and the primitive inhabitants of the country. The Hindus are the descendants of this mixed race. (Ṛgveda).

DAŚARATHA. (Nemi). A famous king of the Ikṣvāku dynasty. He was the father of Śrī Rāma.

1) Genealogy. Descended from Viṣṇu in the following order. Brahmā — Marīci — Kaśyapa — Vivasvān—Vaivasvata Manu—Ikṣvāku—Vikukṣi—Śaśāda— Kakutstha — Anenas—Pṛthulāśva—Prasenajit—Yuvanāśva—Māndhātā—Purukutsa—Trasadasyu—Anaraṇya—Haryaśva—Vasumanas—Sudhanvā--Traiyyāruṇa--Satyavrata (Triśaṅku) Hariścandra—Rohitāśva—Hārīta—Cuñcu — Sudeva—Bharuka—Bāhuka—Sagara—Asamañjas — Aṁśumān—Bhagīratha— Sṛtanābha — Sindhudvīpa — Ayutāyus—Ṛtuparṇa—Sarvakāma—Sudās— Mitrasaha — (Kalmāṣapāda) — Aśmaka — Mūlaka — Khaṭvaṅga (Dilīpa; Dīrgha bāhu)— Raghu—Aja—Daaśratha.

2) Birth. Daśaratha was the son of Aja, of the family of Ikṣvāku, born of his wife Indumatī.[1]

3) Daśaratha's hunt. Once during the early part of his life Daśaratha was walking through a forest engaged in hunting. He reached the bank of the river Sarayū. It was evening and the forest was thick. He walked in search of wild animals. The night was advancing and darkness getting thicker. Then he heard a sound from the river as if an elephant was drinking water. Thinking it to be an elephant Daśaratha sent an arrow in the direction from which the sound came. Instantly he heard a man crying with pain. The king was disappointed. He ran to the spot and saw a hermit boy lying in a pool of blood beating his limbs on the ground and crying. The waterpot he had been dipping in the water lay close by. In answer to the questions of the King, the

1. It is stated in Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 274, Stanza 6 that 'Ilabilā, was the name of the mother of Daśaratha.

hermit boy whose name was Śravaṇa,[1] said, "Oh King! What wrong have I done? My parents are sitting thirsty and blind with age, in the hermitage close-by. I, their only son, was dipping the pot to take water to them, when you sent the arrow at me. So, please take some water to them in this pot and console them."

Hearing this, with tears the King drew out the fatal arrow from the body of the boy and with that the boy Śravaṇa said good bye to the world. Daśaratha took water in the pot and went in search of the hermitage in the darkness. With difficulty he found out the hermitage and as he drew near, the aged parents of the boy heard his footsteps and called him eagerly. The King, with tearful eyes told them what had happened. There was loud wailing and crying in the hermitage. According to their wish the King took them to where their son lay. Then the King made a fire and placed the dead body of the boy in it. The aged and blind parents cursed Daśaratha, "You also will die of loss of children". Then they also entered the fire and were burnt along with their son's dead body. (Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa, Ayodhyā Kāṇḍa, Sarga 63).

4) Marriage. Daśaratha had three wives, named Kauśalyā, Kaikeyī and Sumitrā.

5) Kaikeyī given a boon. There was a great battle in the world of the gods between the asuras and the gods. According to the request of the devas, Daśaratha went to the world of the devas to help them. Kaikeyī also went with Daśaratha. In a severe fight with Śambara, an asura, Daśaratha fell down unconscious. Kaikeyī took him away from the battle-field. When he recovered the King got into the chariot and fought more fiercely than before. This time the wheel-bolt of one of the wheels of the chariot of Daśaratha slipped away. Without informing her husband of this danger, Kaikeyī inserted her finger into the bolt-hole and prevented the wheel from sliding away. The King won the battle. After the battle, when the King came to know of the services rendered by Kaikeyī, he promised her two boons. Kaikeyī told the King that she would ask for them later, when she needed them. Then they returned to Ayodhyā. (Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa, Sarga 9, Kaṁpa Rāmāyaṇa, Bāla Kāṇḍa).

6) Administration of Daśaratha. The capital of Daśaratha's kingdom of Kosala, was Ayodhyā. This city was situated on the bank of river Sarayū. Daśaratha was as famous in Ayodhyā as Indra was in the realm of the gods. There were palaces in Ayodhyā for the kings who brought tribute to stay. In short, as mentioned in Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa, Bāla Kāṇḍa, Sarga 5, Ayodhyā was the heaven on earth.

7) Ministers. Daśaratha had eight ministers, Sṛṣṭi, Jayanta, Vijaya, Siddhārtha, Rāṣṭravardhana, Aśoka, Dharmapāla, and Sumantra. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 6).

8) The name Daśaratha. The real name of Daśaratha was Nemi. Once the unattackable and invincible asura Śaṁbara conquered the throne of Indra. At the request of Brahmā and the gods, this King reached heaven and destroyed the armies of the asuras very easily. Śaṁbara got angry, assumed ten shapes and attacked the King from ten points at the same time. The king confronted the ten Śaṁbaras at ten points, at the same time, and killed all of them at the same moment. Because he faced his chariot to ten points at the same time and fought with enemies on those ten points Brahmā appreciated his valiant fighting and charioteeering and gave him the name 'Daśaratha' (one who is capable of driving the chariot to ten points at the same time). Thus his original name was forgotten and he came to be known only by the name given him later. (Kaṁpa Rāmāyaṇa, Yuddha Kāṇḍa).

9) Birth of Sons. Kausalyā was the first wife of Daśaratha. She was the daughter of the King of Uttara Kosala. A daughter named Śāntā was born to Daś aratha by Kausalyā. After this, no sons or daughters were born to Daśaratha for a long time.

At this juncture Lomapāda, the king of Aṅga who was the class-mate and a great friend of Daśaratha, came to Ayodhyā on a friendly visit. He also had no children. So he entreated Daśaratha to give Śāntā to him as a foster-daughter. Thus he took away Śāntā to Aṅga. Lomapāda gave Śāntā in marriage to Ṛsyaṣṛṅga a hermit. (See under Ṛsyaśṛṅga).

As Kausalyā was childless Daśaratha brought as his wife Kaikeyī the daughter of the King of Kekaya and sister of Yudhājit. Still no children were born to them. He was much disappointed. At last he married again and brought Sumitrā the princess of Kāśi. Of these three, Kausalyā was the chief wife.

Though he had three wives, Daśaratha still remained childless. The King and his queens spent their days in sorrow for a long time. The King remembered the curse he had incurred when he was young. The curse was that as they had died with sorrow at the death of their son Śravaṇa, the same thing would happen to me. So he believed that sons would be born to him.

He performed several devotional acts to get children. Finally he gave up all kingly pleasures and began to lead an ascetic life. He built a temple for his own use and consecrated the idol of Mahāviṣṇu in it. Then entrusting the administration of the Kingdom to his ministers he and his wives engaged themselves in daily devotion and meditation in the temple. Then the King decided to perform the sacrifice of Putrakāmeṣṭi (sacrifice for getting children) by the hermit Ṛsyaśṛṅga under the guidance of Vasiṣṭha. The King informed Ṛsyaśṛṅga of his decision. Ṛsyaśṛṅga could not refuse the King's request as the king was his father-in-law. Moreover Lomapāda and Śāntā also requested the hermit to comply with the desire of Daśaratha. So Ṛsyaśṛṅga came to Ayodhyā and the sacrifice of Putrakāmeṣṭi was begun. The air vibrated with the recitation of mantras (spells and incantations) and the Veda Sūktas. The hermit uttered the divine spell of Putrakāmeṣṭi and offered oblations in the sacrificial fire. Then a wonderful and luminous figure came out of the fire with a pot containing a pudding of ambrosia, and placed the pot before Ṛsyaṣṛṅga and then disappeared in the sacrificial fire. When the wonderful figure disappeared, Ṛsyaśṛṅga took the pot of pudding and gave it to Daśaratha with prayer and incantations. Daśaratha received the golden pot and in accordance with the instruction of the hermit, divided the pudding between his first wife Kauśalyā and second wife Kaikeyī, both of whom gave half of their share to Sumitrā. Thus the three wives ate the divine pudding and by and by all of them became pregnant. Kauśalyā and Kaikeyī gave birth to a son each and Sumitrā gave birth to two sons. The son of Kauśalyā was called Rāma, the son of Kaikeyī was named Bharata and the sons of Sumitrā were called Lakṣmaṇa and Śatrughna. (Kampa Rāmāyaṇa, Bāla Kāṇḍa).

1. In Agnipurāṇa Chapter 6, it is stated that the name of this hermit boy was Yajñadatta.

10) The boon of Śani (Saturn). Astronomers are of opinion that famine will occur in the world for the period of twelve years, when the planet Śani (Saturn) comes into the orbit of Rohiṇī (a star). But now the planet Saturn does not come into the orbit of the star Rohiṇī. There is a story in the Padma Purāṇa, which states that this happened so because of a boon Śani had given to Daśaratha.

During the regime of Daśaratha the planet Śani approached the orbit of Rohiṇī. Experts in astronomy said that the earth would be ruined by famine etc. if Śani cleft the star Rohiṇī. Hearing this Daśaratha took his bow and arrows, got into his chariot, and started for the firmament. He travelled for one lac and a quarter of yojanas (leagues) and reached the hind part of Rohiṇī, which is beyond the sun. Adorned with golden garments and a golden crown studded with jewels, seated on a golden chariot decorated with precious stones, and a lofty flagpost and yoked with horses of the colour of swan, the king shone in the sky as a second sun. He drew the bow-string right upto his ear and placed in it the arrow of destruction. When the devas and the asuras saw the arrow of destruction they began to tremble with fear. Śani came to Daśaratha and fell before him and said that he would grant any boon to the King, and requested him to recall the arrow of destruction. Daśaratha told Śani that he only wanted Śani not to come to the orbit of Rohiṇī. Śani agreed. From that day onwards Śani has never entered the orbit of Rohiṇī. (Padma Purāṇa, Uttara Kāṇḍa, Chapter 34).

11) Death. Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa with Sītā went to live in the forest. Sumantra who accompanied them up to the river Ganges, returned to the palace. By then Daśaratha had fallen down filled with grief. He had never recovered from that state of unconsciousness. At the time of his death Bharata and Śatrughna had been away in the kingdom of Kekaya and Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa in the forest. Thus the curse he incurred in his younger days from the aged hermit, the father of Śravaṇa, was fully realized.

12) Daśaratha appears again. Rāvaṇa was killed in the battle. Sītā was tested in fire and found sinless. Rāma accepted her, seeing that her conjugal fidelity was not marred. At this time Śiva appeared before Rāma in a divine aeroplane. Daśaratha was seated in that plane clad in pure garments. He took Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa into his lap and embraced them. He blessed them and Sītā who was standing with folded hands. Then Daśaratha disappeared. (Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa, Yuddha Kāṇḍa, Sarga 122).

DAŚĀRHA. A king of the Yadu family. He was so famous that his descendants were called the Daśārhas. As Śrī Kṛṣṇa was born as a descendant in the line of Daśārha, Śrī Kṛṣṇa is sometimes called Dāśārha, in certain places. For genealogy see under Yaduvaṁśa.

DĀŚĀRHĪ I. A woman belonging to Dāśārha's family. Vijayā, the wife of Drumanyu, Sudevā, the wife of Vikaṇṭhana, Śubhāṁgī, the wife of Kuru, Kuntī, the wife of Pāṇḍu—all these Yādava women are entitled to the name Dāśārhī. (M.B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 38).

DĀŚĀRHĪ II. In Mahābhārata, Sabhā Parva, Dākṣiṇātyapāṭha, Chapter 38 we find that the assembly of the Yādava leaders was known by the name of Dāśārhī.

DĀŚĀRṆA. An inhabitant of the Dāśārṇa country. This name is also used for addressing King Dāśārṇa. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 50, Verse 47).

DAŚĀRṆA (M). An ancient country, famous in the Purāṇas.

1) General information. This country had been divided into two, Eastern Daśārṇa and Western Daśārṇa. The modern Patna and the surrounding places comprised Eastern Daśārṇa and the places of Malva, the Western Daśārṇa. Some are of opinion that Daśārṇa comprises the South-East part of the Vindhya mountain. It is mentioned in 'Meghadūta' that Vidiśā was the capital of Daśārṇa. The modern name of Vidiśā is Bhilsā.

(2) Other information regarding Daśārṇa.

(1) Mention is made in Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 112, Stanza 25, that once Pāṇḍu brought the country of Vidiśā under subjugation.

(2) At another time Bhīmasena conquered the country of Daśārṇa. (Mahābhārata, Sabhā Parva, Chapter 29, Stanza 5).

(3) Nakula once conquered this country. (M.B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 32, Stanza 7).

(4) King Sudāmā ruled over the country of Daśārṇa. He had two daughters. Bhīma, the king of Vidarbha married the first one and Vīrabāhu the king of Cedi married the second daughter. Damayantī was the daughter of Bhīma. A daughter named Sunandā was born to Vīrabāhu. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 69).

(5) Before the battle of Bhārata, Hiraṇyavarmā was the King of Daśārṇa. Śikhaṇḍinī the daughter of Drupada went in the guise of a male and married the daughter of Hiraṇyavarmā. The king of Daśārṇa who had been deceived thus, attacked Drupada. But the problem was solved because Śikhaṇḍinī actually became a male. (See the word Ambā). (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 9, Stanza 41).

(6) The king of Daśārṇa took the side of the Kauravas in the battle of Bhārata. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 51, Stanza 12).

(7) Citrāṅgada was the king of Daśārṇa at the time of the Aśvamedha sacrifice of Yudhiṣṭhira. In Mahābhārata, Aśvamedha Parva, Chapter 83, it is stated that Arjuna defeated Citrāṅgada.

DAŚĀŚVA. Tenth son of Ikṣvāku. He ruled over the city of Māhiṣmatī. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 2, Stanza 6, that Daśāśva had a son named Madirāśva.

DAŚĀŚVAMEDHA. A holy place situated in Kurukṣetra. It is stated in Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 83, Stanza 14, that those who bathe in this holy place will obtain the fruits of giving a gift of thousand cows.

DAŚĀŚVAMEDHIKA (M). A holy place in Kurukṣetra. Those who bathe here will attain Supreme Bliss. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 83, Stanza 64).

DAŚĀVARA. An asura. Mention is made in Mahābhārata, Sabhā Parva, Chapter 9, Stanza 14 that this asura (demon) serves Varuṇa and stays in his palace.

DĀSERAKA (S). Members of a Kṣatriya tribe. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 50, Verse 47).

DĀŚERAKA (M). A place-name. It is by observing Śrāvaṇa Dvādaśī at a spot to the west of this place that a Vaiśya attained mokṣa (salvation). (See under Śrāvaṇadvādaśī).

DĀŚŪRA. A sage. For further details see under Śaralomā.

DĀSĪ. An important river in India. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 9, Verse 31).

DASRA. The first of the gods called the Aśvinīdevas. The two gods Dasra and Nāsatya are known by the collective name Aśvinīdevas. (M.B. Śānti Parva, Chapter 208, Stanza 17).

DASYU. The ancient dwellers of North India. What we see in Ṛgveda is mostly a history of the Āryans from the period of their exodus from the plateau Kumbha till they reached the banks of the Yamunā. The plateau of Kumbha is Kabul. The Dasyus were the first people the Aryans had to confront with after passing the Indus. Ṛgveda bears testimony to the fact that the civilization of the Dasyus was far advanced than that of the Āryans. Śaṁbara, King of the Dasyus, was the ruler of hundred cities. All the cities were fortified with strong walls and fortresses, which are described as 'aśvamayī', 'āyasī', 'śatabhujī' etc. The greatest enemies of the Āryans were the 'Paṇis' of these cities. They were a particular class of people of these cities. In the 'Nirukta of Yāska' it is mentioned that paṇis were traders. Names of many of the Kings of the Dasyus occur in the Ṛgveda. Dhuni, Cumuri, Pipru, Varcas, Śaṁbara and such others are the most valiant and mighty among them. The most important of the several tribes of the Dasyus were the Śimyus, the Kīkaṭas, Śigrus and the Yakṣus. They are mentioned as the Anāsas in the Ṛgveda. (Anāsas—without nose). Perhaps their nose was flat; more over they are stated as having dark complexion. So it may be assumed that the Dasyus were Dravidians. They talked a primitive language, and they despised sacrificial religion. They did not worship Gods like Indra and others. They possibly worshipped the Phallus, Śiva, Devi and the like.

DĀTAKACCHA. An ancient country on the bank of the river, Narmadā. (Kathāsaritsāgara).

DATTA (DATTAKA). See under Dattātreya.

DATTAMITRA. This is another name of Sumitra the King of Sauvīra. Arjuna, during his conquest of the countries, defeated this King. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 188, Stanza 20).

DATTĀTMAN. A Viśvadeva. (A class of gods concerned with sacrifice to the manes). (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 91, Stanza 34).

DATTĀTREYA. (DATTA). A hermit famous in the purāṇas.

1) Birth. Anasūyā, the wife of hermit Atri gave birth to Dattātreya. But Dattātreya was the incarnation of Mahāviṣṇu.

There is a story in Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa how Mahāviṣṇu came to incarnate as Dattātreya.

Once there was a hermit called Aṇimāṇḍavya (Māṇḍavya). While the hermit was engaged in silent meditation, some robbers passed by that way. The King's men who were chasing the robbers, came to the hermit and asked him about the robbers. The hermit did not break the silence. The King's men, thinking the hermit to be the thief bound his hands and legs and took him to the palace. The King ordered Māṇḍavya to be killed by piercing his body with a trident. Accordingly a trident was posted on a hill far away and Māṇḍavya was seated on the tip of it. Māṇḍavya lay there in agony.

It was at this time that Śīlavatī, famous for her conjugal fidelity, went to the house of a harlot, carrying her husband Ugraśravas on her shoulder. When they passed by that way Ugraśravas scolded Aṇimāṇḍavya; getting angry at this Aṇimāṇḍavya cursed Ugraśravas that he would get his head broken and die before the sun-rise. Śīlavatī became very sorry when she heard the curse and she also cursed. "Let the sun not rise tomorrow". The sun did not rise next day. Everything in the world was in chaos. The devas were flurried. They went to Brahmā. Brahmā took them to Śiva. They could not find a solution. So all of them approached Mahāviṣṇu. The Trimūrtis (three gods) told the devas that the problem would be solved, and the devas returned. Brahmā, Viṣṇu and Maheśvara went to Śīlavatī. Before seeing Śīlavatī, they went to Anasūyā the wife of Atri and sought her help to persuade Śīlavatī to recall her curse. Thus Anasūyā and the Trimūrtis approached Śīlavatī and spoke compassionate and consolatory words. At last Śīlavatī recalled the curse. The Trimūrtis convinced Śīlavatī, that Ugraśravas would not die. The pleased Trimūrtis asked Anasūyā to ask for any boon. She replied that she did not want any boon except that the Trimūrtis should take birth as her sons. Accordingly Mahāviṣṇu took birth as Dattātreya, Śiva as Durvāsas and Brahmā as Candra, in the womb of Anasūyā. This is how Dattātreya was born.[1] Dattātreya did penance from his childhood and became a hermit. (Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa, Chapters 39 to 44).

2) Kārtavīryārjuna and Dattātreya. When Kārtavīryārjuna became King Dattātreya had become very famous. Kārtavīryārjuna wanted to obtain supernatural powers. So he called the hermit Garga and asked for his advice. Garga advised him that Dattātreya was the incarnation of Viṣṇu and that he would grant his wishes. So Kārtavīryārjuna and his wife came to the river Narmadā, and taking bath in the river, began to worship Dattātreya, who was doing penance closeby. Dattātreya was pleased and went to Kārtavīryārjuna and asked him what his desire was. He requested for thousand hands and to be a youth for ever, and such other things. Dattātreya granted his wishes. After that Kārtavīryārjuna would very often go to the hermit Dattātreya for his advice. (Brahma Purāṇa, Chapter 44).

3) Cursing Rāvaṇa. Once Rāvaṇa went to the hermitage of Dattātreya. The hermit had placed a waterpot purified by reciting spells and incantations. Rāvaṇa stole that waterpot. When the hermit knew this, he cursed Rāvaṇa saying, "Since the water, which was evoked by spells and incantations, has fallen on your head, Monkeys will pollute your head by treading on it." (Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa, Yuddha Kāṇḍa).

4) Exhortation to the Sādhyas. Mention is made in Mahābhārata, Udyoga Parva, Chapter 36, Stanza 4, that the hermit Dattātreya gave exhortations to the Sādhyas (the sons of Dharmadeva by his wife Sādhyā).

5) A boon for the birth of Nahuṣa. See Nahuṣa.

DATTOLI. A son born to hermit Pulastya by his wife Prīti. This Dattoli was in his previous birth, Agastya of the Svāyaṁbhuva manvantara. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Aṁśa 1, Chapter 10).

DĀYAKRAMA. (INHERITANCE). Dāyakrama is

1. Dattātreya is known by the name 'Datta' also in the Purāṇas.

the system by which the wealth of parents is received by the heirs. The system of inheritance as described by Manu is as follows :—

1) After the death of the parents, all the children should divide their wealth among themselves. When either the father or the mother is alive, the sons should not take their wealth.

2) If the wealth is not divided, the eldest brother should keep the whole of it in his custody and maintain his brothers and sisters like a father.

3) Of the entire wealth, the eldest brother may take one-twentieth part, the second brother, one-fortieth part and the third brother, one-eghtieth part and the balance is to be divided equally among all of them.

4) If there are more than three sons, the eldest and the youngest may take one-twentieth and one-eightieth (of the entire wealth) respectively, and each of the other brothers may take one-fortieth. The rest of the property must be divided equally among all of them.

5) After dividing like this, if there are unmarried sisters, each of the brothers should give one-fourth of his share for their marriage.

6) The ornaments which the mother had received by way of her dowry etc. may be taken after her death by her unmarried daughters.

7) If, after his marriage, one of the brothers dies, the brother who keeps his movable and immovable properties, must beget children by the brother's wife and hand over the above properties to her issue. (See under Manusmṛti).

ḌAYĀNĀKṢETRA. A famous temple of Goddess Diana in Epheseus. In Greek mythology Diana (Dayānā) is the goddess of hunting. She is also identified with the Moon Goddess. Being a virgin goddess, she came to be worshipped by virgins who regarded her as their patron. Dayānā (Diana) is one of the beautiful daughters of the supreme God, Zeus. Her idol was worshipped in many places in Greece. There was a famous temple of this goddess in the town of Epheseus. This temple was destroyed in the 3rd Century B.C. by enemies.

DEVA (S). Gods or deities.

1) General information. From time immemorial belief in Devas has existed in every country and all religions have lauded their superior nature and power. It was the Hindus and the Buddhists who first applied the term 'Deva' to certain very subtle beings recognised in all religions. The Pārsi religion (Zaratuṣṭra) has spoken about seven Devarājans and their attendants. 'Ameṣ pentas' is the actual term used for the Devarāja. The Christian religion refers to nine sects of Devas like Srāfi, Kherubi, Dominion, Angel etc. Islam refers to four chief Devas viz. Gabriel, the presiding Deva over revelations, Mikhayel of protection, Asriyal of death and Israfin of resurruction. An important section of the Ṛgveda is Sūktas about Devās like Indra, Mitra, Varuṇa, Agni etc. In Yajñas etc. Devas occupy a very important place. The Kenopaniṣad states that the conceited and haughty Devas were taught a lesson by God. The subject matter of the Kaṭhopaniṣad is the advice given by Yama to Naciketas. The Muṇḍakopaniṣad says that the Devas, man and birds originated from God.[1] There are referenees about Deva worship in the Smṛtis. The Purāṇas and Upapurāṇas contain scientific discussions, about the origin, work or functions, classes,etc. of Devas. The Mantraśāstra and Tantraśāstra deal also about the various sects and class of Devas, their nature, and the worship to be offered to them etc.

2) Christian Devas, Satan and devils. Christian religious books commonly use the term Mālākhas for Devas. Greek mythology contains a story about the Mālākhas, who did not obey the orders of Jehovah and how He cursed them, turned them into devils and flung them into hell. And, in hell they organised a revolutionary party to fight Jehovah. Many leaders talked on the subject of how to take vengeance on Jehovah. It was nearabout this period that Jehovah created with the dust on earth Adam as his beloved son and settled him in the garden of Aden. God created from the ribs of Adam the woman called Eve, and they lived in Eden quite happily.

Satan and other leaders in hell decided that the greatest revenge that could be taken upon Jehovah was to create troubles for his dear son, Adam in Eden. Accordingly Satan went to Eden and made Adam and Eve eat the forbidden fruit with the result that Jehovah cursed and turned them into human beings and turned them out of Eden. Milton in his reputed poem Paradise Lost has told the above story in inimitable language.

3) Indian Devas. Most of the Indian Devas are the sons of Kaśyapa Prajāpati by Aditi, daughter of Dakṣa Prajāpati. The total number of Devas is 33 crores. The Devas are divided into many classes or sections like Ādityas, Viśvadevatas, Vasus, Tuṣitas, Ābhāsvaras, Anilas, Mahārājikas, Sādhyas, Rudras, Vidyādharas, Pitṛdevas etc. There are further divisions like Apsaras, Virūpākṣas, Bhadras, Gandharvas, Kumbhāṇḍas, Rākṣasas, Nāgas, Aśvinīs, Kinnaras, Kiṁpuruṣas, Piśācas, Guhyakas, Siddhas, Cāraṇas, Matṛs, Kūśmāṇḍas, Bhūtas, Vetālas, etc. Yet another division is into Lokapālas, Lipikas etc. The Devas are classified with special reference to bhūtagaṇas like Pṛthvī etc. and are, therefore, referred to as Bhūdevatās, Agnidevatās, Vāyudevatās, etc. The presiding spirit of Bhūdevatās is Kubera, that of the Jaladevatās is Varuṇa, that of the Agnidevatās, Vāyubhagavān and that of the Ākāśadevatas, Indra. And, under them there are various sets of Devas in charge of different departments. Sādhyas, Vasus, Ādityas, Apsaras etc. are Ākāśadevas, Maruttas and Gandharvas, Vāyudevas. Yakṣas and Yakṣīs are servants of Kubera. Virūpākṣa, Bhadra etc. are Bhūdevas. Virūpākṣa supports the earth according to the Vālmīki Purāṇa. Those who protect nidhis (treasures) may also be considered Bhūmidevas.

There are 33 bosses or presiding spirits for the 33 crores of Devas. Dvādaśādityas (12) Ekādaśarudras (11) Aṣṭavasus (8) and Aśvinīdevas (2) are the 33 chiefs of Devas. Indra is the chief of all of them.

4) The term Deva. The word Deva means light and also play. Devas shine forth, they are also playful. Thus the name is quite apt for them. (See Grāmadevatā).

DEVABHĀGA. A king of the Yayāti dynasty. (Bhāgavata Navama Skandha).

DEVABHĀGAŚRAUTĀRṢA. A ṛṣi, the son of Śruta and learned in yajñas. He had accurate knowledge as to which parts of the yajña-cow should be distributed to whom, and till death he did not impart this knowledge to anyone. But, sometime afterwards a non-human individual taught the subject to Girija, son of Babhru. (Aitareya Brāhmaṇa).

1. Tasmācca devāḥ bahudhā samprasūtāḥ sādhyāḥ manuṣyāḥ paśavo vayāṁsah.

At the time when the Sṛñjayas and the Kuru kings were living in amity consequent upon the dākṣāyaṇa yajña it was this Devabhāga who acted as the priest of both the parties. His theories on Sāvitrāgni are quoted in Taittirīya Brāhmaṇa.

DEVABHRĀṬ. An effulgent Devatā who was the son of Ravi and father of Subhrāṭ. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 1, Verse 42).

DEVĀDARŚA. An ācārya in the line of Vyāsa's disciples. He was the disciple of Kabandha, and he had many disciples. Medhā, Brahmabali, Sautāyana and Pippalāda were chief among those disciples. (See genealogy of Gurus).

DEVADĀRUVANA. A holy centre. A dip in the tīrtha here is productive of very good results. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 25, Verse 27).

DEVADĀSA. A rich Vaiśya extolled much in the Kathāsaritsāgara. He lived in Pātaliputra and had married the daughter of a very rich Vaiśya of Pauṇḍravardhana. After his father's death Devadāsa lost all his wealth in gambling, and his wife foresook her impecunious husband and returned home.

After roaming about for some time the helpless Devadāsa decided to go to his wife's house, and one mid-night he went there. While hiding himself there in the darkness he heard his wife telling her paramour the following: "In the four corners of Devadāsa's house are hidden four treasures. But he does not know about the treasures hidden thus by one of his fore-fathers. I got the information from his mother. You should purchase the property for a small price."

No sooner did Devadāsa hear the above than he hurried back to his house and dug up the treasure and thus became wealthy again. The paramour of his wife went to him a few days later and purchased the property at a heavy price. But, when he dug up the place no treasure was found. Then he wanted to sell back the property to Devadāsa himself, but he refused to purchase it. The case was taken before the King when Devadāsa detailed the whole story. And, as ordered by the King, Devadāsa disfigured his wife and wedded another wife. (Kathāsaritsāgara, Lāvāṇakalaṁbakam, Taraṅga 5).

DEVADATTA I. A famous brahmin boy whose story is described in the Kathāsaritsāgara.

Devadatta was the son of the Brahmin, Haridatta of Kambukapura. Though as a boy Devadatta learnt all the arts and sciences when he grew up to be a youth he became a very wayward fellow. Dice-play became his main job. One day in a game of dice he lost even his clothes, and being afraid of his father, he left the place without returning home.

Devadatta roamed about, and during one such trip he saw a deserted temple, and a muni called Jālapāda engaged in reciting mantras. Devadatta prostrated before the muni and told him all the details about himself. The muni accepted Devadatta as his śiṣya and promised to secure vidyādharahood for him.

Next night Jālapāda led Devadatta to a burning ghat, nearby the temple. After conducting Pūjā in the shade of a fig tree with offerings of Pāyasa and Vaiśvadevabali the muni told Devadatta thus: "You should come here daily and perform pūjā like this, and pray at the close of it, 'Oh ! Vidyutprabhā ! please accept my pūjā.'

Devadatta acted according to the above advice of the muni, and one day, at the close of his pūjā the tree broke open into two and a beautiful female who appeared from it took him with her saying that her mistress wanted him. He was thus taken to a house studded with gems wherein he saw a noble lady seated on a cot. She caught Devadatta by his hands and after seating him alongside said to him: "I am Vidyutprabhā, daughter of the Yakṣa king Ratnavarṣa. I am a virgin girl. Muni Jālapāda has worshipped me so much that I have decided to fulfil his desire. I am in love with you and you will please wed me."

Accordingly Devadatta married Vidyutprabhā and lived there with her. In due course she conceived, and Devadatta met Jālapāda and told him about the whole affair, and the muni, to achieve his personal object asked Devadatta to cut open the abdomen of Vidyutprabhā and take to him the child found therein. Devadatta did not at all relish the idea. Yet reluctant to disobey his preceptor he returned to his wife. She permitted him to carry out the directions of the muni, yet his mind did not approve of the action. Then Vidyutprabhā herself cut open her abdomen, took the child out of it and placing it before her husband told him thus:— "He who eats the child will become a Vidyādhara. Take it. I was a Vidyādharī turned into a Yakṣī by a curse, and to cut open my abdomen and take out the child like this was the redemption promised me from the curse, and now I go to the Vidyādhara world; we shall meet there." And she disappeared.

In great sorrow Devadatta brought the child to Jālapāda who, after sending him out on the pretext of his (Jālapāda's) performing Bhairavapūja, ate up the child. Devadatta returned and when he knew of the action of his preceptor he was overcome with rage. But the latter rose up to the skies assuming the form of a Vidyādhara. Devadatta made up his mind to anyhow take revenge upon Jālapāda, and he also went to Vidyādharaloka with the help of a Vetāla whom he befriended by offering human flesh. And, there he saw Jālapāda drunk with pride at his Vidyādharahood sitting on a throne of gems in a mansion. Meanwhile Vidyutprabhā who was now once more a Vidyādharī had turned down the advances made by the erstwhile Jālapāda for her love. But, at the sight of Devadatta her face flushed with love for him while, in fear, the sword fell down from the hands of Jālapāda who now fainted. Devadatta prevented the Vetāla from killing Jālapāda and he (Vetāla) at the instance of Devadatta took Jālapāda to the burning ghat and cremated him there.

Kātyāyanīdevī at this time appeared before Devadatta and pleased with his courage appointed him as chief of the Vidyādharas. He wedded Vidyutprabhā and lived happily. (Kathāsaritsāgara, Caturdārikālaṁbakaṁ, Taraṅga 3).

DEVADATTA II. A king of ancient India, son of King Jayadatta. Jayadatta wanted to marry his son Devadatta to the daughter of a Vaiśya in Pāṭalīputra. Though it was a far cry from Pāṭalīputra to Jayadatta's court the Vaiśya married his daughter to the prince as he attached much importance to such an alliance with the King. From the dowry given by the Vaiśya to his daughter the resources of her father appeared to be very meagre to Devadatta.

After some time Devadatta's wife returned to her house with the permission of her husband. During her absence Jayadatta expired, enemies attacked his kingdom and Devadatta with his mother ran away from his kingdom. Sometime after that he started for his wife's house. But, feeling that it would not be proper for him to personally tell his father-in-law about what had happened to him he waited outside an inn near his wife's house, and he had not waited there for long when he saw a woman descending by a cord from the other door of the house. He felt deeply mortified to detect that it was his wife who was thus descending. And, when she, not recognising Devadatta in his dirty clothes, asked him who he was, he answered a 'traveller'. Taking no notice of this 'traveller' she got into the inn, and Devadatta followed her. Inside the inn she was met by a man who beat her for being late to go to him; but, in spite of the beating she pleased him with coy words. Then and there Devadatta divorced her in his mind, but remained there observing their love-making. In the course of their love-play an ear-ring studded with costly gems rolled down the floor from her ears, but she did not notice it. She parted from her paramour before dawn. Devadatta went to Kānyakubja with the ear-ring, and there he pledged it for one lakh sovereigns with which money he collected an army and conquered back his lost kingdom. Then he redeemed the pledge and sent the ear-ring to his father-in-law. The whole incident became public. When she realised the fact that the stranger whom she had met at the inn was her own husband, Devadatta's wife felt so deeply hurt and humiliated that her heart was broken and she died. (Kathāsaritsāgara, Naravāhanadatta Janana, Taraṅga 1).

DEVADATTA III. Father of the reputed muni Utatthya. (Satyatapas). (See Satyatapas.)

DEVADATTA (M). The divine conch of Arjuna. Maya got this conch from Varuṇa and he kept it in the sabhā of Vṛṣaparvan, which was in Bindusaras on Mount Maināka to the south of Mount Kailāsa. When Maya built the palace at Indraprastha for the Pāṇḍavas he went to Bindusaras and brought for Arjuna that conch called Devadattam, and a club for Bhīmasena. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 3).

In the battle of Kurukṣetra Arjuna mounted a white horse and blew his conch Devadattam. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 25, Verse 14).

DEVĀDHIPA. A king who in his previous life was an asura. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 67, Verse 26).

DEVADŪTA. A messenger of the Devas. When Dharmaputra refused to live in heaven without his brothers like Karṇa it was this Devadūta with whom Indra sent Dharmaputra to Karṇa and others. (M.B. Svargārohaṇa Parva, Chapter 2, Verse 14). This Devadūta is to be meditated upon at dawn and before sun-set everyday. (Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 165, Verse 14).

DEVADYUMNA. A king of the dynasty of Bharata. From Bharata, son of Ṛṣabha, was born Sumati, from Sumati Devajit and from him Devadyumna was born. Devadyumna was the grand-father of King Pratīpa and father of King Parameṣṭhi. (Bhāgavata Pañcama Skandha).

DEVADYUTI. A Ṛṣi who dwelt in his āśrama on the banks of river Sarasvatī. Owing to the blessing of Viṣṇu a son called Sumitra was born to him. As a result of his doing rigorous tapas for 1000 years he shone with a rare effulgence. Though Viṣṇu appeared to him one day in the month of Vaiśākha and asked him to choose any boon he wanted, he, who was so much detached in life prayed only for devotion to God. (Padma Purāṇa, Uttara Khaṇḍa, Chapter 212).

DEVAGAṆA. See Manvantara.

DEVAGARBHA. A Ṛṣi. He too was present as one of the hotṛs (Priests) at the yajña conducted by Brahmā at the Puṣkara temple. (Padma Purāṇa, Sṛṣṭi Khaṇḍa, Chapter 34).

DEVAGRAHA. An evil planet. Devagraha darśana (seeing this planet) will lead to insanity. (Vana Parva, Chapter 23, Verse 47).

DEVAHAVYA. A sage, a member of Indra's assembly. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 7).

DEVAHOTRA. A maharṣi, who was an honoured member at the yajña performed by Uparicaravasu. (Śānti Parva, Chapter 336, Verse 9).

DEVAHRADA (M). A tīrtha centre on the heights of Mount Kālañjara. A dip in its holy waters will bring the same result as the dāna (gift) of a thousand cows. (Vana Parva, Chapter 85, Verse 56).

DEVAHŪTĪ. A daughter of Svāyambhuva Manu, the son of Brahmā. The Manu had two sons called Priyavrata and Uttānapāda and three daughters named Ākūti, Devahūti and Prasūti. Ākūti was married by Ruciprajāpati and Devahūti by Kardamaprajāpati and Prasūti to Dakṣprajāpati. Kapila, the mighty exponent of the Sāṅkhya system of philosophy and great ascetic was the son born to Kardama by Devahūti. Kapila taught his mother the world famous Kapila Śāstra, (Devibhāgavata, Aṣṭama Skandha) and when the teaching was over he bade farewell to her and took to forest life. And, his mother performed a yajña on the lines advised by her son, on the banks of river Sarasvatī. Because she took three baths daily her hairs became a mixture of black and blue in colour and she got emaciated due to fasting. She wore the bark of trees. Devahūti, who realised all the principles and the truth became blind to all external objects like gardens, maids, mansions etc. Thus immersed in meditation she in course of time attained siddhi (realisation). The particular spot on the banks of Sarasvatī where she attained Siddhi is called Siddhapada.

DEVĀHVAYA. A king in ancient India. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 1, Verse 235).

DEVAKA I. A king in ancient India. Born in the Yayāti dynasty he shone like Indra (Ādi Parva, Chapter 67). He was the brother of Ugrasena, father of Kaṁsa, and the father of Devakī, the mother of Kṛṣṇa. (Sabhā Parva, Southern Text, Chapter 22).

DEVAKA II. A king in ancient India. He fostered a girl born to a brahmin by a Śūdra woman. It was this girl whom Vidura married. (Adi Parva, Chapter 113, Verse 12).

DEVAKA III. A king, a contemporary of the Pāṇḍavas. (Udyoga Parva, Chapter 41, Verse 17).

DEVAKĪ. Mother of Śrī Kṛṣṇa.

1) Genealogy. Descended from Viṣṇu thus :—Brahmā

—Atri—Candra — Budha — Purūravas — Āyus— Nahuṣa — Yayāti — Yadu — Sahasrajit — Śatajit— Hehaya — Dharman — Kuṇi — Bhadrasena —Dhanaka —Kṛtavīrya — Kārtavīryārjuna — Madhu — Vṛṣṇi— Yudhājit — Śini — Satyaka — Sātyaki — Yuyudhāna— Jaya — Kuṇi — Anamitra — Pṛśni — Citraratha— Kukura — Vahni — Vilomā — Kapotaromā —Tumburu — Dundubhi — Daridra — Vasu — Nāhuka— Āhuka — Devaka — Devāpa — Devakī.

Devāpa had seven daughters, viz. Śrutadevā, Śāntidevā, Upadevā, Śrīdevā, Devarakṣitā, Sahadevā and Devakī. Devakī was married to Vasudeva. The statement that Devakī and Kaṁsa were sister and brother is not fully correct. Kaṁsa was the son of Ugrasena, the brother of Devaka. Devakī was the grand-daughter of Devaka. Certain Purāṇas refer to Devakī as the daughter of Devaka. According to them Kaṁsa and Devakī were children of the elder and the younger brothers respectively. According to the Agni Purāṇa Devakī was the niece of Kaṁsa. Thus it is equally correct to say that between Kaṁsa and Devakī there was brother-sister relationship as also uncle-niece relationship.

2) Devakī in previous birth. Devakī in her previous birth was Aditi, the daughter of Dakṣa and wife of Kaśyapaprajāpati. (See Aditi, Parva 3).

3) Marriage and children. Vasudeva, the Yādava married Devakī. Śrī Kṛṣṇa was their eighth child. Six sons of theirs born elder to Kṛṣṇa were killed by Kaṁsa. (See Kaṁsa, Para 2). The seventh child, from the very womb itself of Devakī was passed on to the womb of Rohiṇī, who was another wife of Vasudeva. Balabhadra was the child thus born to Rohiṇī. The eighth child was Kṛṣṇa. (For details see Kṛṣṇa, Para 3-8).

4) Other information relating to Devakī. (1) Many Kṣatriya kings attended the svayaṁvara of Devakī. (Droṇa Parva, Chapter 144, Verse 9).

(2) Following Kṛṣṇa's giving up of his body and the destruction, due to mutual fights, of the Yādavas, Vasudeva, Rohiṇī and Devakī also gave up their lives.[1] (Bhāgavata, Ekādaśa Skandha, Chapter 31, Verses 18, 19).

DEVAKṢATRA. A king of the Yayāti dynasty. (Bhāgavata, Navama Skandha).

DEVAKULYĀ. Grand-daughter of Marīci maharṣi, who lived in the Svāyambhuva Manvantara. As she washed in her previous life the holy feet of Mahāviṣṇu, in the next birth she was born as river Gaṅgā. (Bhāgavata, Caturtha Skandha).

DEVAKUṆḌAM I. (DEVAHRADAM). A sacred place. A dip in the holy waters there is productive of results equal to that of an Aśvamedha yajña. (Vana Parva, Chapter 85, Verse 20).

DEVAKUṆḌAM II. A particular part of Kṛṣṇaveṇā river. It is known as Jātismaraṇa hradam also. A bath in the holy waters here will evoke memories of previous life. (Vana Parva, Chapter 85, Verse 37).

DEVAKŪṬA I. A mountain 18,000 miles in extent and 2000 miles in height. Devakūṭa is on the eastern side of Mahāmeru. There is another mountain called Jaṭhara near this mountain. (Devī Bhāgavata, Aṣṭama Skandha).

1. Devakī Rohiṇī caiva Vasudevastathā sutau / Kṛṣṇarāmāvapaśyantaḥ śokārtā vi jahuḥ smṛtim // Prāṇāṁśca vijahustatra bhagavadvirahāturāḥ.

DEVAKŪṬA II. A holy place. A dip in the sacred waters at this place is equal in its effects to that of an Aśvamedha yajña. Moreover the family of such persons also will prosper. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 84, Verse 14).

DEVALA I. A famous muni, the son of Pratyūṣa, one of the aṣṭavasus. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 66, Verse 26). Devala muni is a character in the well-known story of Gajendramokṣa. (For details see Indradyumna).

DEVALA II. A muni, a very erudite scholar in the Vedas. He was the elder brother of Dhaumya maharṣi, and was present at the sarpa-satra (serpent yajña) of King Janamejaya. Once Śrī Kṛṣṇa on his way from Dvārakā to Hastināpura met Devala. After the great war was over he visited Yudhiṣṭhira.

Devala had a daughter called Suvarcalā. In the svayaṁvara ceremony he held for his daughter to which sons of munis were invited she chose Śvetaketu as her husband. (Śānti Parva, Southern Text, Chapter 22).

Devala had two very intelligent and forebearing sons. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Part 1, Chapter 15).

DEVALA III. A disciple of Vyāsa. Asita, Devala, Vaiśampāyana, Sumantu and Jaimini were some of the disciples of Vyāsa. (M.B. Prathama Skandha).

Brahmavaivarta Purāṇa contains the following story about Devala. Devala was the son born to Asitamuni as the result of a boon granted by Śiva. Rambhā, the heavenly dancer fell in love with him. But, Devala did not reciprocrate her love. So, she cursed him to become crooked in body. When he became crooked thus he came to be called Aṣṭāvakra. For six thousand years he did penance after which Kṛṣṇa and Rādhā appeared to him. Rādhā laughed at the uncouth form of Aṣṭāvakra. But, Kṛṣṇa admonished her and embraced him. At once his bodily crookedness disappeared and he became very handsome. A vimāna then descended from heaven, and Rādhā, Kṛṣṇa and muni together disappeared in it.

Ekaparṇā, daughter of Himavān was this Devala's wife. (Harivaṁśa, Chapter 18).

DEVAMATA. An ancient ṛṣi in India. Once he had a talk with Nārada about the Ātman (soul). (Ādi Parva, Chapter 22).

DEVAMĪḌHA. A reputed Yādava born in the family of Yadu, son of Yayāti. He was the grandfather of Vasudeva and father of King Śūrasena. (Droṇa Parva, Chapter 144, Verse 6).

DEVAMITRĀ. A female attendant of Subrahmaṇya. (Śalya Parva, Chapter 14, Verse 14).

DEVAMITRAŚĀKALYA. Son of Māṇḍukeya muni. A great Vedic scholar, he taught the five Saṁhitās to his five disciples, Mudgala, Gokala, Matsya, Khālīya and Śaiśireya. (See Yājñavalkya).

DEVANADĪ. A river described as existing in the assembly of Varuṇa. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 9, Verse 19).

DEVĀNĪKA. A king born in Śrī Rāma's dynasty. (Solar). Kuśa was Śrī Rāma's son, Aditi the son of Kuśa, Niṣadha the son of Aditi, Nabhas Niṣadha's son, Puṇḍarīka the son of Nabhas, Kṣemadhanvā the son of Puṇḍarika and Devānīka the son of Kṣemadhanvā. In the navama skandha of Bhāgavata it is said that Devānīka was the grandfather of Pāriyātra and father of Ṛkṣa.

DEVĀNTAKA. A Rākṣasa, the son of Rudraketu. When the people of the three worlds could no longer stand his depredations Gaṇapati incarnated in Kaśyapa's house and killed Devāntaka. (Padma Purāṇa, Sṛṣṭi Khaṇḍa).

DEVĀPA. A king born in the Yayāti dynasty. (Bhāgavata, Navama Skandha).

DEVAPATHA (M). A holy centre. To stay there bathing in the holy waters is as productive of results as conducting a Devasattra (Yajña). (Vana Parva, Chapter 85, Verse 45).

DEVĀPI I. A king born in the lunar dynasty.

Genealogy. Descended from Viṣṇu thus :—Atri—Candra—Budha—Purūravas—Āyus—Nahuṣa — Yayāti — Pūru—Janame jaya—Prācinvān — Pravīra — Namasyu — Vītabhaya — Śuṇḍu — Bahuvidha— Saṁyāti — Rahovādi—Raudrāśva—Matināra—Santurodha—Duṣyanta—Bharata—Suhotra—Suhotā—Gala — Garda — Suketu—Bṛhatkṣetra—-Hasti—-Ajamīḍha—Ṛkṣa— Saṁvaraṇa—Kuru — Jahnu—Suratha — Vidūratha — Śārvabhauma—Jayatsena—Avyaya— Bhāvuka — Cakroddhata—Devātithi—Ṛkṣa—Bhīma—Pratīca—Pratīpa—Devāpi.

Pratīpa had three sons named Devāpi, Śantanu and Bālhīka. Śantanu succeeded Pratīpa as king as his elder brother had taken to sannyāsa as a boy. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 94, Verse 61).

2) Devāpi resorted to the forest. Devāpi was the best loved by his father and was the apple of the eyes of his subjects. But he was suffering from skin disease. So, when Pratīpa wanted to crown him king the people objected. Their argument was that God would not be pleased if a man with skin disease became king. The king yielded to their wishes and crowned Śantanu as his successor. The youngest brother Bālhīka went and stayed in his mother's house. Devāpi who was disappoint ed that he was denied the crown, left for the forest and spent the rest of his life in penance. (Udyoga Parva, Chapter 149).

His end. Devāpi did tapas at the Pṛthūdaka tīrtha in the interior of Kurukṣetra and ultimately attained salvation. (Śalya Parva, Chapter 39, Verse 37).

DEVĀPI II. A warrior who fought on the Pāṇḍava side in the great war. He hailed from Cedi. Karṇa killed him. (Karṇa Parva, Chapter 56, Verse 48).

DEVAPRASTHAM. A city in the northern borders of ancient India. King Senābindu had his capital there. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 27, Verse 13)

DEVAPRATHA. A king of the Yayāti dynasty. (Bhāgavata, Navama Skandha).

DEVAPRATIṢṬHĀ. The sacred rite of installation of Devas (idols) in temples for which definite rules have been laid down by great ācāryas. According to the rules Vāsudevamūrti is to be installed in the centre of the pañcāyatanas. (the Śrī kovil—the sanctum sanctorium and the four paths used for the procession of the deity, around it). The mūrtis Vāmana, Narasiṁha, Hayagrīva and Varāha are to be installed in the zones (corners) dominated by Agni, Nirṛti, Vāyu and Īśāna respectively. Nārāyaṇamūrti should be installed at the centre of the prāsāda. Ambikā should be installed in Agni's corner, Āditya in Nirṛti's corner, Brahmā in Vāyu's corner and Śivaliṅga in the Īśāna corner. Liṅga in the form of Rudra should also be installed in the Īśāna corner; or it may be installed in all the nine corners or zones. In that case Vāsudevamūrti should be installed at the centre. All the Devas bearing the name Rāma must be installed to the east of the Prāsāda. Lokapālakas like Indra should be installed at the eight places starting with the east. In Pañcāyatana pratiṣṭhā Puruṣottama should be installed at the centre. Mahālakṣmī and Vaiśravaṇa are to be installed to the east of the Prāsāda, and the Mātṛs in the south. Subrahmaṇya, Gaṇapati, Īśāna and the planets (grahaṣ) like Sun should be installed in the west. Daśāvatāramūrtis (ten incarnations of Viṣṇu) should be installed in the North. Caṇḍikā should be installed in Agni's zone, Sarasvatī in Vāyu's zone, Ambīkā in Nirṛti's zone and Śrī Bhagavatī in Īśāna zone. In temples with thirteen Ālayas Viṣṇu should be installed at the centre. Mūrtis like Keśava should be in the east.

Devapratimās (idols) are of seven varieties like those made of earth, of wood, of metals, of gems, of sandal wood, of stone and of flowers. Of the above, idols made of earth, sandalwood and of flowers are meant only for temporary use, but they also grant all the desires of the devotees.

Stone for idols should be got from mountains. Pāṇḍura (white), Aruṇa (red), Pīta (yellow) and Kṛṣṇa (black)-rocks having any one of these four colours may be selected. If no such stone is available any other stone may be used, but by doing homa and reciting Narasiṁha mantra the attributes of any of the specified varṇas should be transferred to it. It is best to have white markings on the stone selected for the idol. There are the three genders, masculine, feminine and neuter with reference to stones. Stone which produces the sound of bell metal on being hit and gives out sparks of fire on being cut is of the masculine gender. Stone which possesses these attributes to a lesser degree is of the feminine gender. Stone with no shape is of neuter gender. Beside these three varieties there are the sagarbha (pregnant) stones also, viz. stones with round markings on them, and they should not be used for making idols. Once it is decided to make an idol, Vanayajña should be performed first. To worship the forest from which the stone for the idol was to be obtained is vanayajña. A specified place in the forest should be dug up, the pit treated with cow-dung and a small platform raised and Viṣṇu worshipped thereon. After sacrificial offerings etc. instruments for the construction of the idol like ṭaṅka (chisel) should be worshipped. To sprinkle on the stone śālitoya (water in which paddy grains are put) purified with the chanting of astramantra is the next step. After that bhūtabali (offerings to the spirits of the stone) should be performed upon which the bhūtas residing inside the stone will quit. Then the ācārya should go to sleep repeating the svapna mantra.[1]

1. Svapnamantra:
Oṁ namaḥ sakalalokāya Viṣṇave prabhaviṣṇave /
Viśvāya viśvarūpāya svapnādhipataye namaḥ //
Ācakṣva devadeveśa prasuptosmi tavāntikam /
Svapne sarvāṇi kāryāṇi hṛdistāni tu yāni me //
Om Om hum phaṭ viṣṇave svāhā.

If he dreams good dreams everything is quite right; if bad dreams are dreamt, the next morning narasiṁhahoma should be performed, the stone given offerings with chanting of astramantra. The edge of the instruments used for sculpturing the idol should be firstly smeared with ghee, honey etc. The architect should be one who has gained mastery over the senses. He should first cut the stone into a square, and then it should be placed on a chariot, covered with cloth and taken to his house. Then after performing a pūjā the work on the idol should be started. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 43).

DEVAPUṢKARIṆĪ. A very ancient tīrtha in India a dip in which is as efficacious as performing an Aśvamedha yajña. (Vana Parva, Chapter 85, Verse 45).

DEVARĀJA I. A king in ancient India who spent his days in the assembly of Yama worshipping him. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 4, Verse 26).

DEVARĀJA II. An immoral brahmin who had been a trader in Kirātanagara. Once he met a whore at the bathing pool and got so inextricably tied up with her that he killed his parents and wife for her sake. Then one day he had to go to Pratiṣṭhānanagara on business where he heard sacred stories being read. He had also a glimpse of the divine. A month after that he died. Though an evil fellow, because of his having worshipped Śiva for a month he had the good fortune to go to Mount Kailāsa after his death. (Śiva Purāṇa Māhātmyam).

DEVARAKṢITĀ. Sister of Devakī, mother of Śrī Kṛṣṇa. (See Devakī).

DEVĀRAṆYA (M). A holy centre. It was here where Ambā, daughter of the Kāśi king did tapas. (Udyoga Parva, Chapter 186, Verse 27).

DEVARĀTA I. A king who flourished in Dharmaputra's assembly. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 4, Verse 26).

DEVARĀTA II. (Śunaśśepha).

General. A king of Mithilā. The kings of Mithilā were commonly called Janaka. Devarāta was called Devarāta Janaka. (See Janaka).

2) Genealogy. From Viṣṇu descended thus:—Brahmā,—Bhṛgu—Cyavana—Ūrva—Ṛcīka—Devarāta (Śunaśśepha). (For details see Śunaśśepha).

DEVARĀTA III. A house-holder whose daughter Kalā was married by Śoṇa. Kalā was killed by Mārīca. Devarāta and Śoṇa along with Viśvāmitra went to Śivaloka in search of Kalā. As Kalā had, at the time of her death, uttered the word 'Hara' (Śiva) she had gone to Mount Kailāsa and was spending her days in the service of Pārvatī who, after making Kalā and Śoṇa participate in Somavāravrata sent them back to earth. (Padma Purāṇa, Pātāla Khaṇḍa, Chapter 112).

DEVASAMAM. A mountain. Here lived Agastya in his āśrama for some time. (M.B. Chapter 88, Verse 17).

DEVAŚARMĀ I. A very reputed muni. He had a wife called Ruci and a disciple called Vipula. (See Vipula III).

DEVAŚARMĀ II. A Brahmin, an erudite scholar in the Vedas. His story was once told to Pārvatī by Śiva as follows :—

Devaśarman, the very erudite brahmin scholar in the Vedas came to be much respected by the people of the four varṇas (Castes) because of his constant and unfailing performance of the various religious duties and rites like the Agnihotra etc. He had sons, relations and cows in abundance. But, he did not observe the śuklapañcamī in Proṣṭhapada (Bhādrapada) which is one of the dvādaśacāndra māsas (the 12 solar months). That day was his father's death anniversary (Śrāddha day) for which he would invite Brahmins on the previous evening. And, in the morning he would get cooked rice by his wife in 18 different ways for the gratification of the departed soul. Then will he feed the Brāhmins. On one such day he duly treated a Brāhmin versed in the Vedas. In the evening when he was washing his feet with water brought by his wife he heard the following conversation between a dog and an ox.

Dog :—Please attend to my words about what my daughter-in-law did. One day, as fate would have it, I went to my son's house, where a snake was drinking milk, and I drank the whole of the milk which was left over by it. My daughter-in-law saw me drinking it and I was absolutely crest-fallen. I don't feel any yearning even for food.

Ox:—Now dog, please attend to my sorrow and grief. Today my son feasted the Brahmins, but he did not even think of me. Nobody gave me even a blade of grass or a drop of water. I have not tasted anything today. Moreover I am a captive also. All this must be the result of some sin committed by me in my past life ; no doubt about it."

The very learned and intelligent brahmin inferred from the above talk that the dog and ox were his mother and his father respectively. He thought to himself : they have been born as animals in my house. What remedy shall I find out therefor ?

On account of such painful thoughts the Brahmin could not sleep in the night. Early in the morning he went to sage Vasiṣṭha and unburdened his heart to him and requested him to find a solution to the low and mean birth which had become his parents' fate. After meditating for some time the great sage told the brahmin as follows :—

"Look here, the ox was, in its previous birth, a great brahmin in Kuṇḍinanagara. He did not observe the Śukla-pañcamī in the month of Proṣṭhapada, the day being the death anniversary of his father. His wife had menstruation on the same day, but she herself feasted the Brahmins. A woman is impure during the four days of menstruation. Because of having feasted the Brahmins on the first day of her monthly period the Brahmin's wife was born as a dog. As for the husband, he was born an ox as he not only did not observe the Śukla-pañcamī day, but also shared the sin of his wife. Further questioned by the brahmin as to what he should do for the salvation of his parents, Vasiṣṭha advised him to observe the Ṛṣi pañcamī in the month of Proṣṭhapada (Bhādrapada). He did so and his parents blessed him and attained salvation. (Padma Purāṇa, Chapter 78).

DEVAŚARMĀ III. (See Mitrabheda).

DEVAŚARMĀ IV. The hero of a story told by Viṣṇuśarman.

Viṣṇuśarman, the intelligent preceptor, told five stories based on five tactics to educate the five dull sons of emperor Sudarśana. The fifth tactics is called asaṁprekṣyakāritva. He told two important stories to illustrate the dangers, which would happen to those who act in haste and in anger, without patiently attempting to find out the truth. Devaśarman is the hero of one of the stories.

Story one. Once upon a time there lived in Gauḍadeśa a brahmin called Devaśarman with his wife Yajñasenā. When his wife got pregnant Devaśarman told her that a good and lucky son would be born to them to which she replied as follows :—"On no account build castles in the air and brood over things. I shall tell you a story about a danger which happened to one who built castles in the air. A brahmacārī was carrying home in a pot on his head some rice flour. On the way he thought thus : "I will purchase a she-goat with the money I get out of the sale of this rice powder, and it will deliver two kids every year. I will sell all the kids and with the sale proceeds purchase a cow and when it multiplies I will have the wherewithals for cultivation and then I will do cultivation in a good field and produce much paddy. And when I have thus money in hand I will renovate my house and marry. We will then have a good son whom I will name Somaśarman, and if my wife, without caring for the boy, goes to milk the cow I will go to the cow shed and give her a good beating. "When his imagination reached this point the pot on his head received, without his knowing, a blow with the stick in his hand and it fell down on the ground and was broken to pieces."

Five or six days after telling the above story to her husband Yajñasenā gave birth to a child. One day she went to the river to take her bath leaving the child to the care of her husband. Soon after a messenger came from the palace to invite Devaśarman for food, the day being Amāvasī when Brahmins were fed well and also given dakṣiṇā, (presents of money). He could not wait till his wife arrived; the child became a problem to him.

The brahmin had a beloved Mongoose. After entrusting the child to the care of it the Brahmin went to the palace. Within a short time a serpent was seen crawling towards the child and the Mongoose attacked it and bit it into pieces. Naturally the Mongoose got itself smeared all over with the blood of the serpent, and the brahmin on returning home finding the Mongoose bathed in blood thought it might have eaten the child and in a rage he killed the poor Mongoose. But, when he entered the room and found pieces of the killed serpent strayed all over there truth and light dawned on him. Yajñasenā, who had returned after bath by now also found fault with him.

The second story. Once there was a Brahmin in very indigent circumstances. He was an orphan from his very childhood. One day while he was asleep quite weary and tired as he had no food that day some one appeared and told him in a dream that three sannyāsins would come to his house that noon and that if beaten to death they would turn into three pot-fulls of treasure with which he could live comfortably well.

His dream came true, and he locked up the treasure in his room after sending away a barber who had witnessed the incident with a piece of gold. The barber returned home cherishing in his mind the false belief that sannyāsins beaten to death would turn into pot-fulls of treasure. And, one day some sannyāsins came to his house and he began beating them and they ran out crying aloud. Their cries attracted the attention of the servants of the King. The barber's limbs were cut off and he was killed on Śūla (a three-pronged weapon).

DEVAŚARMĀ V. A Brahmin, who used to perform rites for the dead at the confluence of the sea every fortnight. On every such occasion souls of the departed used to appear and bless him. Once Devaśarman went to Pitṛloka with his pitṛs, and he got restless and sorry to find other pitṛs living there in greater comfort than the pitṛs of his parents. When he was told that the better fate of the other pitṛs was due to their sons performing Śrāddha at Mahīsāgarasaṅgama he returned to earth and with the help of other people did Śrāddha at the saṅgamaand thus raised the condition of his pitṛs. (Skandha Purāṇa. Skandhas 1, 2 and 3).

DEVAŚARMĀ VI. A Brahmin who lived on the northern side of river Kāverī. The following story about him is told in chapters 2, 4 and 12 of the Skanda Purāṇa.

One day in the month of Kārttika he asked his son to bathe. The son refused to obey his father, who got angry at the disobedience of the son and cursed him to be turned into a rat. But, when the son begged his pardon he said that the boy would resume his old form when he heard about the greatness of Kārttika.

While the Brahmin, thus turned into rat, was roaming about in the forest it saw Viśvāmitra maharṣi seated under a tree with his disciples. The maharṣi was telling the disciples about the greatness of Kārttika. The Brahmin boy—turned cat—heard the story and reverted to its old form as the Brahmin boy.

DEVAŚARMĀ VII. See Māyā Śiva.

DEVASATTRA(M). A yajña. (See Vana Parva, Chapter 84, Verse 68).

DEVASENA I. A very intelligent king who ruled his country with Śrāvastī as his capital. (See Unmādinī).

DEVASENA. II. Husband of Kīrtisenā. (See Kīrtisenā).

DEVASENĀ. Dakṣa's daughter and wife of Subrahmaṇya and a woman of rare beauty and purity. Daityasenā and Devasenā, daughters of Dakṣa, used to enjoy themselves at Mānasa saras. One day Keśī, the asura saw them and craved for their love. Daityasenā agreed to become his wife, but Devasenā refused, and she prayed for the help of Indra, who happened to come there at the moment. Indra and Keśī fought with each other. Keśī used the club against Indra, who broke it into two with his vajrāyudha. Then Keśī hurled a mountain at Indra, who cut it also. Frightened to death Keśī then ran away with Daityasenā to safety, and Devasenā expressed her desire to Indra to have one who could defeat the Devas, Dānavas and Yakṣas as her husband. But, Indra could not find such a one in the whole universe. Indra told Brahmā about it. The Devas put their heads together and brought forth Subrahmaṇya from Śiva to be her husband. In the war between the Devas and the asuras Devasenā helped Subrahmaṇya, and the asuras were completely destroyed. (Vana Parva, Chapters 223, 224).

DEVAŚĪLĀ. See Gayātīrtha.

DEVASMITĀ. A Gem of a woman who was much devoted to her husband. The story of Devasmitā has been so often quoted in ancient Indian literature. She was the daughter of a Vaiśya called Dharmagupta and was married to Guhasena, son of a Vaiśya called Dhanadatta, who belonged to Tāmraliptinagara.

After the death of his father Guhasena decided to go to Kaṭāhadvīpa for trade, and Devasmitā, a very suspicious wife, objected to it. When his other relations began pressing him to go to the dvīpa for trade and his wife not to go, Guhasena could not take a decision on the called Kubera. (See Kubera).

DEVAVATĪ I. Daughter of the Gandharva called Maṇimaya. Sukeśa, the Rākṣasa married Devavatī, and three sons Mālyavān, Sumāli and Māli were born to them who lived as dependants of Rāvaṇa. (Uttara Rāmāyaṇa).

DEVAVATĪ II. Sītā, wife of Rāma was Devavatī in her previous birth. (See Sītā for information for Devavatī's death in fire and rebirth as Sītā).

DEVAVATĪ III. Daughter of the daitya called Mandāramālī. (See Viśvakarman, Para 2).

DEVAVĪTI. Daughter-in-law of king Agnīdhra. Pūrvacitti, the apsarā woman was the king's wife and they had nine sons called Nābhi, Kiṁpuruṣa, Hari, Ilāvṛta, Ramuka, Hirañjaya, Kuru, Bhadrāśva and Ketumāla, and these sons married the following daughters of Meru, viz. Merudevī, Pratirūpā, Ugradaṁṣṭrī, Latā, Ramyā, Syāmā, Nārī, Bhadrā and Devavīti. Thus Devavīti became the wife of Ketumāla. (Bhāgavata, Pañcama Skandha).

DEVAVRATA I. Bhīṣma (See Bhīṣma for details).

DEVAVRATA II. A brahmin who believed in yajñas. He once received without due regard and with indifference the tīrtha water given to him by a devotee of Kṛṣṇa after worship of the Lord, as a result of which, in the next birth, he was born as a bamboo stem. And, as he did, consciously or otherwise some good deeds Śrī Kṛṣṇa made a flute out of that bamboo stem, and Devavrata thus attained redemption. (Padma Purāṇa, Pātāla Khaṇḍa, Chapter 73).

DEVĀVṚDHA I. A warrior, who fought against the Pāṇḍavas in the Kurukṣetra war (Karṇa Parva, Chapter 85, Verse 3).

DEVĀVṚDHA II. A king who, along with his subjects attained heaven as he had made a gift of a golden umbrella. (Śānti Parva, Chapter 234, Verse 21).

DEVAYAJANAM. The place called Prayāga which is considered to be the yājñic centre of the Devas. Ambā, daughter of the King of Kāśī did rigorous tapas here. (Udyoga Parva, Chapter 186, Verse 27).

DEVAYĀJĪ. A warrior of Subrahmaṇya. (Śalya Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 7).

DEVAYĀNĪ. Sukrācārya's daughter.

1) Birth. Svāyambhuvamanu, son of Brahmā had two sons: Priyavrata and Uttānapāda. Priyavrata wedded Surūpā and Barhiṣmatī, two very beautiful daughters of Viśvakarmaprajāpati, and he had by Surūpā ten sons called Agnīdhra, Idhmajihvā, Yajñabāhu, Mahāvīra, Rukmaśukra, Ghṛtapṛṣṭha, Savana, Medhātithi, Vītihotra and Kavi as also a daughter called Ūrjasvatī who was the youngest of the whole lot. Of the above ten sons Kavi, Savana and Mahāvīra were spiritual giants and great sages. Uttama, Tāpasa and Raivata, the three sons of Priyavrata by his second wife Barhiṣmatī turned out to be manvantarādhipatis. Ūrjasvatī, the only daughter of Priyavrata was married to Śukrācārya, preceptor of the asuras. Devayānī was Śukrācārya's daughter by Ūrjasvatī. (Devībhāgavata, Aṣṭama Skandha).

2) Curse by Kaca. Kaca, son of Bṛhaspati became Śukrācārya's disciple to learn Mṛtasañjīvanī vidyā (the science to ward off death for ever). Devayānī fell madly in love with Kaca. But, after his studies under her father were over Kaca returned to devaloka without marrying Devayānī, who cursed that Kaca's learning should prove useless. And, Kaca cursed her in return that nobody from devaloka should marry her. (For details see Kaca).

3) Devayānī in a neglected well. Once Vṛṣaparvan was the king of the asuras, and Śukrācārya lived in his palace. Śarmiṣṭhā, the daughter of the king and Devayānī, the daughter of Śukrācārya became thick friends. While one day these two friends with their companions were engaged in water sports Indra came that way. Very much interested in seeing the deva damsels thus engaged in water sports Indra assumed the form of air and blew off the dresses of the damsels from the shore while they were playing in the river. The damsels hurriedly got out of water, ran after the fleeing garments and put on whatever came to their hands. In the confusion what Śarmiṣṭhā got and wore was Devayānī's clothes. Devayānī ran after Śarmiṣṭhā and caught hold of the clothes, but the latter did not yield them to her. Both of them indulged in hot words against each other, Śarmiṣṭhā calling Śukrācārya a beggar living in her father's palace for his food. Not only that, she pushed Devayānī into a neglected well and went her way.

At that time prince Yayāti, son of Nahuṣa, was hunting in that forest. Feeling very thirsty he came to the well for a drink and therein saw Devayānī in tears. He brought her out from the well and leaving her there went on his way.

Śukrācārya and his wife actually got anxious and upset that their daughter had not returned even after the lapse of so much time and deputed their servant Gurṇikā to seek for Devayānī. She found her out in the forest. But, Devayānī refused to return home as she did not want to continue as the daughter of one who lived on the charity of Śarmiṣṭhā and her father. Gurṇikā carried back this news to Śukrācārya, who then went himself to the forest and met his daughter. He felt deeply wounded to hear about the insults heaped on his daughter by Śarmiṣṭhā, and sent word to Vṛṣaparvan that they were not returning to the palace. Vṛṣaparvan realised that if Śukrācārya quarrelled with him the whole asura world also would become divided. He, therefore, tried his best to pacify the ācārya and his daughter. At last Devayānī agreed to return to the palace in case Śarmiṣṭhā went to her with one thousand of her maids to serve as her (Devayānī's) maids. Vṛṣaparvan acted accordingly and Devayānī was satisfied and returned to the palace with her father. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 78 onwards.)

4) Wedding of Devayānī. Some time afterwards when Devayānī was sporting in the forest with Śarmiṣṭhā and others, King Yayāti happened to pass that way. They recognised each other and Devayānī requested Yayāti to marry her as she had mentally chosen him as her husband on the very same day on which he had saved her from the well.

Yayāti realised only too well that it was really dangerous to marry the daughter of Śukrācārya in the forest secretly and he, therefore, rejected Devayānī's request. But, she got down her father there and with his permission Yayāti married her. He also got much wealth by way of dowry. Śarmiṣṭhā and her maids accompanied Devayānī but Sukrācārya warned Yayāti that on no account should he touch Śarmiṣṭhā.

With his wife and her attendants Yayāti returned to his palace; but he put Śarmiṣṭhā and her maids in a place newly built for the purpose. Devayānī delivered a child in due course and it was named Yadu. Śarmiṣṭhā one day met Yayāti in the forest and requested for a child by him. Though at first he was reluctant to oblige remembering only too well the injunction of Śukrācārya, he at last succumbed to the eloquence of Śarmiṣṭhā. She got pregnant by him and the child she delivered was called Druhyu.

Devayānī was alarmed at the birth of a child to Śarmiṣṭha, who was unmarried, and questioned her about it. Śarmiṣṭhā's answer that a brahmin stranger, who came that way was the father of her child satisfied Devayānī.

Ere long another son, Turvasu, was born to Devayānī, and Śarmiṣṭhā too delivered two children called Anudruhyu and Pūru. Thus the mistress (Devayānī) had two sons and her servant, Śarmiṣṭhā three sons.

While Yayāti and Devayānī were one day strolling in the garden the sons of Śarmiṣṭhā came there. She noticed the close resemblance of those boys to her husband (Yayāti) and it kindled her wrath. Though Yayāti did not, because of the presence of Devayānī, notice the children, when she asked them who their father was, they answered "Yayāti", whereupon in great rage she ran up to her father. Yayāti too followed her. Devayānī told her father about the infidelity of Yayāti and he (Śukra) cursed that Yayāti be afflicted with old age. When Yayāti asked for redumption from the curse Śukrācārya told him that he could exchange his old age for the youth of somebody else.

Yayāti then called together all his five sons and asked them whether anyone of them was prepared to exchange his (son's) youth for his (Yayāti's) old age for one thousand years. The three elder sons refused to agree to the proposal, but the fourth son Pūru gladly exchanged his youth with his father's old age. After spending his life in youthful enjoyment for one thousand years Yayāti returned his youth to Pūru, and Pūru assumed Kingship of the country. (Ādi Parva, Chapters 81-83).

5) Synonyms for Devayānī. Auśanasī, Śukratanayā and Bhārgavī.

DEVĪ. (Mahāmāyā). Though Devī is without a beginning it is told how she became first visible to living beings.

1) Beginning: While Mahāviṣṇu was resting on a fig leaf in the assumed form of a child he began thinking as to who he was, who created him and how he should act. And then a celestial voice announced as follows:

Sarvaṁ khalvidamevāham
Nānyadasti sanātanam.

(All that is, I am. There is nothing eternal but me.). This declaration astonished Viṣṇu, but he could not understand who made it. While he was meditating upon it, Devī appeared to him in the following manner. Devī[1] held in her four sacred hands weapons like the conch, the disc, the club and the lotus flower and was clad in divine clothes and wore divine ornaments and was attended upon by powers[1] like Rati (the erotic), Bhūti (riches and prosperity), Buddhi (intelligence), Mati (intellect), Kīrti (reputation), Dhṛti (understanding capacity), Smṛti (ability to remember), Śraddhā (attention, concentration), Medhā (intellect), Svadhā, Svāhā, Kṣudhā (thirst), Nidrā (sleep), Dayā (compassion), Gati, (momentum), Tuṣṭi (pleasure, happiness) Puṣṭi (growth, progress), Kṣamā (patience, forberance), Lajjā (sense of shame), Jṛmbhā and Tandrā (laziness).

And, the Devī spoke to Mahāviṣṇu as follows:—After all, what is there to be wondered at. Whenever the world faced the phenomenon of Sṛṣṭisthitilaya (creation, existence and absorption into the primordial force) you too have come up due to the power of Mahāśakti. As for Parāśakti (the ultimate, universal force) it is above and beyond all attributes. We, all of us, possess attributes. From the nābhi (navel) of yourself in whom sattvaguṇa (gentle attributes) predominates will be born Brahmā in whom rajoguṇa (active attributes) will predominate, and from the centre of his brows will be born Rudra with tamoguṇa (black, destructive attributes). Brahmā, by the force of his tapas will earn powers of creation and will with his rajoguṇa create the world blood-red in colour, and you will be the sustainer and guardian of that world. The very same world will be annihilated by Rudra at the end of the Kalpa era. You please do know that I am the sāttvic force which depend on you for the purpose of creation. All creations of worlds have been made according to the suggestions of Devī.

2) Origin of Devī. Once King Janamejaya questioned Vyāsa about the birth of Devī to which he replied as follows:—

Even Brahmāviṣṇumaheśvaras (Brahmā, Viṣṇu and Śiva—the Hindu trinity) are not capable of thinking about the origin of Devī. Then, what about me? Yet let me make an attempt. All the forces—everything—which appear in various names and forms are in fact Devī herself, her different manifestations. Just as a master actor appears on the stage in different roles for the delectation of the audience the formless Devī, on behalf of the Devas, assumes many forms and imposes upon herself attributes though in fact she is without any attribute whatsoever. Thus, depending on her various forms, actions etc. she is addressed by different names. (Devī Bhāgavata, Pañcama Skandha).

3) Five forms of Devī. When primordial nature (Mūlaprakṛti) incarnated or manifested in the form of Viṣṇu the desire for creation raised its head in him. And, at once the Devī—female—aspects in Viṣṇu manifested in five forms like Durgā, Lakṣmī, Sarasvatī, Sāvitrī and Rādhā. These five forms are designated as the Pañcadevīs. Brief notes on the five Devīs are given below.

(1) Durgādevī. Mother of Gaṇeśa bhagavān. (God with the elephant's head). She is the consort of Śiva. Nārāyaṇī, the Viṣṇumāyā, is none else than Durgā. She is also perfect Brahma, the one and the only one with no second to it. She is worshipped by Devas like Brahmā and by sages and maharṣis. She is the basis, the root and root cause of everything. She is eternal, upholder of dharma, truth itself and the giver and promoter of happiness, reputation, welfare, salvation etc. as also of sorrow, grief, pain etc. She takes great pleasure in removing the worries and sorrows of devotees who seek refuge in her. She is all-power, achievements and assets personified. All imaginable permutations and combinations of every attribute comprise in her and she it is who activates the universal soul.

2) Lakṣmī. This Devī is the most sublime form of the universal soul, nay, the universal soul itself. She is all wealth and riches personified, and she is the very seat of beauty, compassion, welfare, peace, all goodness etc. Evil traits like anger, avarice, haughtiness etc. are miles away from her. She is all sympathy and kindness towards her devotees. In Vaikuṇṭha, as Mahālakṣmī she is ever engaged in the service of her husband, Viṣṇu. In heaven she is the very glory of it. In houses she appears as the welfare and prosperity of the inmates. She is in fact beauty itself and is the essence of beauty everywhere. She is all-merciful, and worshipped by all.

(3) Sarasvatī. She is very base and fountain head of and the presiding deity of the word, intellect, knowledge, the arts etc. She also is of the form of the universal soul and liberally grants intellect, poetical skill, reason and logic, understanding capacity etc. to her devotees. The finest music with all its beauties originates from her. Yes, she is the goddess of all learning, fine arts and every branch of knowledge. Like the ice piece, the Jasmine flower etc. she is beautiful in her white cover. She recited the holy names of Śrī Kṛṣṇa. She is of the form of tapas and blesses those who perform it. In fact, she it is who grants all gifts and powers of understanding. She is the goddess of language and learning (Vāṇīmātā) and without her human beings would lose their capacity to speak.

(4) Sāvitrīdevī. She is mother of the four varṇas (castes, classes) Vedāṅgas, the tāntric science etc. She is of the form of Japa (chanting of holy names and mantras), tapas, the effulgence of Brahman, the very essence of truth and existence and supreme bliss. She is eternal and grants salvation. She forms the very basis and pith and core of the glowing presence of the universal soul. This world is pure, and has been purified by the touch of the sacred feet of this Devī.

(5) Rādhādevī. Rādhikādevī, fifth of the pañcaprakṛtis is the presiding deity over the five prāṇas and She is of the form of those prāṇas. She is exceptionally beautiful endowed with all fortunes and happiness, sublime and serious, and the consort of Śrī Kṛṣṇa and as eternal and equally endowed with divine attributes as the lord. She is formless also, above and beyond attributes, unattached and detached, and not visible even to the great Devas and munis by the naked eye. Her clothes even Agni would not burn. She was born, in Vārāha Kalpa as the daughter of Vṛṣabhānu, and because her sacred feet trod over this land, Bhārata (India) became holy. Once Brahmā did tapas for 60,000 years to have a glimpse of the Devī's lotus feet, but could not. People were able to see her only after she, in unbounded compassion for the world, incarnated herself in Vṛndāvana (See Prakṛti).

4) Aṁśarūpa(s) —partial manifestations of Devī. The above discussion was concerned with the five forms of the Devī in her full and complete forms. Now, there are six other Devīs, who are partial manifestations or born from certain parts of the Devī.

(1) Gaṅgādevī. This Devī who flows in the form of water and washes off men's sins takes her origin from the body of Mahāviṣṇu. (There is another story which traces Gaṅgā's origin to the Aṇḍa (egg or seed) of Brahmā). (See Gaṅgā).

(2) Tulasī. She is the lover and also the servant at the feet of Viṣṇu. She also washes off men's sins and promotes their welfare. (See Tulasī).

(3) Manasādevī Manasādevī, who was born as a daughter of Kaśyapa is another partial incarnation of Mahāmāyā. She is a great tapasvinī, a favourite disciple of Śaṅkara, unique in learning and erudition, sister of Ananta (the king of Serpents), the presiding deity of Mantras, wife of Jaratkāru muni and mother of Āstīka muni. (See Manasādevī).

(4) Devasenādevī. Since this Devī has been born out of a sixth part of Mahāmāyā she is called Ṣaṣṭhīdevī also. It is this Devī, who gives children to living beings and also protects them. For one year from the birth of a child this Devī should be worshipped. Those who cannot afford it should worship Devī on the 6th or 21st day after a child is born. (See Devasenā).

(5) Maṅgalacaṇḍikā. She is born from the face of Mūlaprakṛti. Anybody who propitiates and pleases her will be the recipient of all good things like sons and grandsons, wealth, reputation, welfare etc. (See Maṅgalacaṇḍikā).

(6) Bhūmidevī. She is the basis for all things, soil for the origin of the vegetable kingdom, the treasure house of all gems and the very incarnation of compassion and sympathy. (See Bhūmidevī).

5) Aṁśakalādevī(s). Another class of devīs who are also partial manifestations of the Supreme Devī. They are born out of the parts of Mahādevī. The following are the Aṁśakalādevīs.

(1) Svāhādevī. Consort of Agni Bhagavān (Fire God). Svāhā is worshipped in all the worlds. If havis (oblation) is offered without repeating her name the Devas will not accept it.

(2) Dakṣiṇādevī. Wife of Yajñadeva, this Devī is worshipped by all. Without this Devī all Karmans (actions) in the world will become futile.

(3) Dīkṣādevī. Wife of Yajñadeva, this Devī is worshipped by all.

Dīyate vimalaṁ jñānam
Kṣīyate karmavāsanā /
Tena dīkṣeti sā proktā.

The Devī grants pure knowledge.

(4) Svadhādevī. Wife of the Pitṛs, worshipped by manes and men. Offerings made to the Pitṛs without honouring this Devī will prove to be futile.

(5) Svastidevī. Consort of the Vāyu. When offering Dakṣiṇā and making divya-dāna (divine gifts) if 'Svasti' (may good happen) is not uttered the gifts will be of no use.

(6) Puṣṭidevī. Wife of Gaṇapati. If this Devī ceased to exist men and women would become feeble, because she is the source of all strength.

(7) Tuṣṭidevī. Consort of Ananta worshipped by everybody. If the Devī ceased to exist there would be no happiness in the world.

(8) Sampatti devī. Wife of Īśāna. Worshipped by Devas and men. If the Devī ceased to exist the whole world would become poor and indigent.

(9) Dhṛti. Consort of Kapila. Everybody worships her all the time. If the Devī ceased to exist the whole world would become timid and cowardly.

(10) Satīdevī. Wife of Satya. Well-wisher of all, this Devī is worshipped by muktas. (people released from worldly attachments). If the Devī ceased to exist there would be no friendship and amity between people.

(11) Dayādevī. Wife of Moha. If the Devī ceased to exist the world would become hellish and a fierce battle field.

(12) Pratiṣṭhādevī. Wife of Puṇya. In the absence of this Devī, who grants good and happy results to people's actions the whole world would become as though it were dead.

(13) Siddhadevī.

(14) Kīrtidevī. Both the Devīs, Siddhā and Kīrti are wives of Sukarmā. If they ceased to exist the whole world would be bereft of reputation and become lifeless like a dead body.

(15) Kriyādevī. Wife of Udyoga. If she ceased to exist the whole world would become inactive and cease to function.

(16) Mithyādevī. Wife of Adharma. Wayward and characterless people worship this Devī. If the Devī ceased to exist the whole world as evolved by Brahmā would cease to exist. This Devī was not seen anywhere in the world during Kṛtayuga. She began to appear in a subtle form here and there during Tretāyuga. In dvāparayuga she attained more growth and then her limbs and organs became doubly strong. In Kaliyuga she developed to her full stature and growth and goes about everywhere with her brother, Cheat (Kapaṭa).

(17) Śāntidevī. (see below).

(18) Lajjādevī. Both the Devīs, Śānti and Lajjā are good-natured wives. If they ceased to exist the world would become dull and sleepy.

(19-20-21) Buddhidevī, Medhādevī and Dhṛtidevī. These three Devīs are wives of Jñāna. If they ceased to exist the world would become steeped in ignorance and foolishness.

(22) Mūrti. Wife of Dharma. She is very beautiful and effulgent. In her absence the universal soul would become devoid of vitality, helpless and meaningless.

(23) Śrīdevī. Wife of Mālī. Her absence will make the world lifeless.

(24) Nidrādevī. Wife of Kālāgni. The Devī, a sage who has attained realisation, affects everybody in the world during night and makes them lose consciousness and plunges them in sleep. In the absence of this Devī the world will become a lunatic asylum.

(25-26-27) Rātrī, Sandhyā and Divasā. These three are the wives of Time (Kāla). In their absence nobody would have any sense of time and none would be able to calculate and fix time.

(28-29) Viśappu and Dāham. Viśappu = hunger. Dāham = thirst. These two Devīs are the wives of greed (Lobha). They go about the world affecting people and thus making them worried and miserable.

(30-31) Prabhādevī and Dāhikā devī are the wives of Tejas (Vitality). Without them Īśvara will find it impossible to continue the function of creation.

(32-33) Mṛtyu and Jarā are the consorts of Prakṛṣṭajvara and daughters of Kāla. And, if they cease to exist, Brahmā's creation would also cease. (For Brahmā's creation individual souls with the will for action are necessary. He cannot create a soul of his own. So death is a pre-condition of creation, birth. If there is no death there is no birth also. There is a school of thought which maintains that if there is no death but only birth there will not be space on earth for the living, and therefore birth will stop if there is no death.).

(34-35) Tandrā and Prīti are the daughters of Nidrā and consorts of Sukha (pleasure, happiness). These Devīs go around the world on the orders of Brahmā.

(36-37) Śraddhā and Bhakti are the consorts of Vairāgya (aversion to worldly comforts, renunciation) and they give salvation to the souls of the people in the world.

Aditi, mother of the Devas, Diti, mother of the Asuras, Surabhi, mother of cows, Kadrū, mother of serpents and Vinatā, mother of Garuḍas are also involved in the process of creation, and they are born out of parts of Devī.

6) Idol of Devī. There are special injunctions for making idols of the Devī for installation in temples. Caṇḍikādevī should have twenty hands. The hands on the right side should hold Śūla, sword, disc, cord, ḍamaru, śakti etc. and the hands on the left side should hold nāgapāśa, flag, club, mirror etc. (There are also idols with slight differences from the above).

Lakṣmīdevī would hold in her right hand the lotus flower and a Kūvala fruit in the left. Sarasvatīdevī will have in her hands books, akṣamālā and vīṇā. Gaṅgādevī rides on a makaramatsya (fish) holding in her hands a pot and lotus flowers. Yamunādevī rides the turtle with a pot in hand and she is blue in colour.

Now, about the saptamātṛs. Tumburu, white in colour, and mounted on an ox rests on a śūla with vīṇā in hand before the Mātṛs. Among the Mātṛs Brāhmī has four faces, wears the akṣamālā and holds the akṣapātra etc. in her left hand. She is seated on a swan. Śaṅkarī (Māheśvarī) is white in colour. She has in her right hand bow and arrows, and the disc and bow in her left hand. The ox is her vehicle. Kaumārī is seated on the peacock. She has two hands in one of which is held Śakti (Vel). Lakṣmī has in her right hand the conch and disc, and the club and the lotus flower in her left hand. Vārāhī rides the buffalo with staff, sword, club and conch in her hands. Indrāṇī is seated on the club, holding diamond in her hands. She has a thousand eyes. Cāmuṇḍī has three eyes and is without flesh in the body. Her hairs are raised above. She holds in her left hand elephant's skin and śūla in the right hand. At times she is seated on a corpse also.

Now, about the idols of the eight Aṁbās. Rudra Carccikā holds a skull, Śūla and cord in her hands. She wears elephant's skin, her legs slightly held up. She becomes Rudracāmuṇḍā when she assumes eight hands, and holds the skull and the ḍamaru. And in dancing pose she is called Naṭeśvarī, and with four faces Mahālakṣmī. She is called Siddhacāmuṇḍā when she assumes the form with ten hands and three eyes, and when she eats men, horses and buffaloes. In this form she holds in her right hand the sword, ḍamaru etc. and in her left hand the Triśūla, bell etc. Since the Devī is sarvasiddhipradāyikā (giver of all divine attainments or assets) she is Siddhayogeśvarī also. There is also another Devī in this very form who holds the pāśa and Aṁkuśa in her hand and who is slightly red in colour. She is called Bhairavī. When Bhairavī assumes the form with twelve hands she is called Rūpavidyā. All the above eight Devīs were born in burial grounds and are Raudramūrtis. They are known as the Aṣṭāmbās.

DEVĪBHĀGAVATA. The Śaivas venerate this book as one of the eighteen Purāṇas. But according to the Vaiṣṇavites, this is an authoritative book of a loftier level than the eighteen Purāṇas. (See under Purāṇa).

DEVIKĀ I. (VEDIKĀ). Daughter of Govāsa, the Śaibya King. She was wedded by Yudhiṣṭhira in Svayaṁvara, and to them were born a son called Yaudheya. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 95, Verse 76).

DEVIKĀ II. A holy centre. A dip in the tīrtha there will give the same result as that of a yajña. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 82, Verse 102).

DEVĪPĪṬHA. The dead body of Satīdevī crumbled into small pieces and fell in different places in Bhārata. Each place where a piece of the dead body fell, is known by the name Devīpīṭha. There is a reason why the dead body crumbled into pieces.

Dakṣa performed a sacrifice to which Śiva was not invited and Satīdevī came to the sacrifice, and committed suicide by jumping into the fire. Śiva who became furious, killed Dakṣa and carrying the dead body of his wife on his shoulder, walked the length and breadth of Bhārata like a mad man. It seemed that he was not going to recover from this mania, and the devas (gods) were worried at this. To rescue Śiva from this mental disposition, Mahāviṣṇu, unseen by others, followed Śiva with a bow and arrow. Whenever it was convenient Mahāviṣṇu sent an arrow at the body of Satīdevī, on the shoulder of Śiva. By the hitting of the arrows the body was crumbled into pieces and fell here and there. Thus within a few days the body of Satīdevī came to an end and Śiva walked to Kailāsa. The pieces of the dead body fell in 108 places, and thus 108 Devīpīṭhas came into existence. The names of the places and the names by which the Devī is known in such places are given below.

	Devīpīṭha	Name of Devī
1.	Vārāṇasī	Viśālākṣī
2.	Naimiṣāraṇya	Liṅgadhāriṇī

107.	Citta	Brahmakalā
108.	Jīvaśarīra	Śakti

DEVĪSTHĀNA. A holy place, dedicated to Śākambharī Devī. It is stated in Mahābhārata (Vana Parva, Chapter 84, Stanza 13) that one who stays in this holy place and eats greens (cira or kira) for three days will get the fruits of eating greens for twelve years.

DEVĪTĪRTHA(M). The common name of three holy centres (Śaṅkhinī, Madhuvaṭī, Mṛgadhūmā) in Kurukṣetra. Those who bathe in Śankhinī will become beautiful in appearance, while those who bathe in Madhuvaṭī and Mṛgadhūmā will get the benefits of performing a thousand godānas (gifts of cows).

DHA. This letter means dhāraṇa, Śobhana, Dhātā, dhattūra (umma plant). (Chapter 348, Agni Purāṇa).

DHĀMĀ. A hermit who protected Gaṅgā-Mahādvāra. (Mahābhārata, Udyoga Parva, Chapter 111, Stanza 17).

DHAMADHAMA. A follower of Subrahmaṇya. (Śloka 27, Chapter 46, Śalya Parva).

DHANAKA. A king of the Yayāti dynasty. (Navama Skandha, Bhāgavata).

DHANAPĀLA. A Vaiśya who lived in the city of Ayodhyā. He built in Ayodhyā a temple for the Sun-god and appointed, for a year, paying his wages in advance, a scholar well versed in Purāṇas to read aloud the Purāṇas in the temple. After six months Dhanapāla died and as a result of the goodness accrued to him by his worthy deeds the Sun-god came to him with his chariot and took him to his place and seating him on his seat paid respects to him. Later he was taken to Brahmaloka. (Bhaviṣya Purāṇa, Brahma Kāṇḍa, Chapter 94).

DHANAŚARMĀ. A brahmin belonging to Madhyadeśa. Once when Dhanaśarmā went to the forest to get darbha he confronted three fierce evil spirits and getting frightened ran away from them. But the spirits followed him and the Brahmin then cried and said "Oh, please do not harm me. Mahāviṣṇu will bless you."

The moment they heard the name of Viṣṇu there came a change in them. They reiterated their story to Dhanaśarmā. Their names were Vaiśākha, Sudāsa and Advaita. Because of the ingratitude of Vaiśākha he got a nick-name 'Kṛtaghna' (ungrateful man) also. All the three were human beings in their previous birth. Not only that, Advaita was a king called Harivīra. All the three became evil spirits because of their sins.

From the conversation Dhanaśarmā understood that Vaiśākha was his father and they then knew each other. The son then anxiously enquired what he should do to absolve his father of his sins and save him from hell. Vaiśākha then told him observe the vrata, Vaiśākhapūrṇimā. He did that and all the spirits went to heaven. (Chapter 94, Padma Purāṇa).

DHANAVARDHANA. A virtuous Vaiśya who lived in the island of Puṣkara in the Kṛtayuga. Once Dhanavardhana after having performed Vaiśvadeva sat for his food. At that time he heard a cry from outside "Annaṁ dehi (give me food)". Dhanavardhana immediately came out to see who the visitor was but seeing none went in and started taking his food. Because he ate his food once left aside, his body was torn to hundred pieces. (Bhaviṣya, Brahma Kāṇḍa).

DHANAVATĪ. See Sūryaprabhā.

DHANAÑJAYA I. A famous serpent. This serpent was born to Kaśyapaprajāpati of his wife Kadrū. (Śloka 5, Chapter 35, Ādi Parva). This serpent served as a rope to bind the horses to the chariot of Śiva during the time of burning to death the Tripuras. (Śloka 29, Chapter 34, Karṇa Parva). This serpent sits in the court of Varuṇa and worships him. (Śloka 9, Chapter 9, Sabhā parva).

DHANAÑJAYA II. Another name for Arjuna. (See under Arjuna).

DHANAÑJAYA III. The army given to Subrahmaṇya by Śiva. (Śloka 17, Chapter 46, Śalya Parva).

DHANAÑJAYA IV. A Sanskrit critic who lived during the period between 11th and 12th century A.D. He was a member of the court of King Muñja. His important work is 'Daśarūpaka'. This work contains three hundred ślokas divided in four separate divisions. After the death of Muñja, Dhanika, brother of Dhanañjaya, wrote a commentary on this work. The treatise is named 'Daśarūpāvaloka'. There are several quotations in this from the Sanskrit dramas 'Veṇīsaṁhāra' and 'Ratnāvalī'. He has in this work discussed Drama and Poetry in general giving prominence to the emotional side of it. The critical work, Daśarūpāvaloka, contains quotations from a book 'Kāvyanirṇaya' by Dhanika himself. But the work 'Kāvyanirṇaya' has not yet been made available. Even in composing poetry Dhanañjaya was well versed. He is the author of the well-known epic 'Rāghavapāṇḍavīya'. It is known as 'Dvisandhāna Kāvya' also. This is based on the lives of Pāṇḍavas and Śrī Rāma.

Dhanañjaya bears the name of Śrutakīrti also. It is stated by scholars that Rāghavapāṇḍavīya was written during the period 1123 to 1140 A.D. (History of classical Sanskrit Literature).

DHANAÑJAYA V. There was once a brahmin ascetic called Dhanañjaya in the gotra of Vasiṣṭha. This hermit had hundred wives and got hundred sons, one by each of his wives. The son born of his wife Śābhāka (Śalāka) was named Karuṇa. The father divided his assets equally among his sons and yet they quarrelled with each other.

Once Karuṇamuni went to the shores of Bhavanāśinī along with a few other munis to worship Narasiṁha. There a brahmin had brought a lovely lime as an offering to the deity. Karuṇa took the lime from him and smelt it. At this the brahmin got angry and cursed him. "Sinner, may you live as a fly for a hundred years. Then Mahātmā Dadhīca will give you back your original form." Karuṇa instantly became a fly and he pleaded to his wife thus "Beloved, I have become a fly. Please do protect me." Karuṇa started flying hither and thither and his cruel brothers made the fly fall in oil and killed it. Śucismitā, wife of Karuṇa, started weeping laying the dead fly in her lap. Arundhatīdevī passing that way saw her and consoled her thus: 'Śucismitā, stop lamenting. I shall bring it to life this instant by sacred ashes.' So saying the Devī took some ashes from the fire-pit and reciting the powerful Mṛtyuñjaya mantra sprinkled it on the dead body of the fly. Śucismitā fanned the fly. The potency of the ashes brought the fly back to life.

After a hundred years one of his relatives killed it again. Śucismitā grief-stricken, took the dead fly to the Maharṣi, Dadhīca. The sage told her thus: "It was bhasma (sacred ashes) that gave life three times to Jamadagni, Kaśyapa, the devas and myself. I will, therefore, give life to thy husband by bhasma itself." Dadhīca took some ashes and meditating on Maheśvara recited a mantra and sprinkled it on the dead fly and brought it back to life. By the touch of Dadhīca, the fly, husband of Śucismitā, became Karuṇa again and both of them went back to their hermitage. (Chapter 101, Padma Purāṇa).

DHANAÑJAYA VI. A brahmin devotee of Mahāviṣṇu who lived in the Tretā yuga. Once, in winter, when for want of proper clothing he could bear the biting cold no longer, he broke some twigs of the Aśvattha tree (poplar leafed fig tree) and made fire to warm him. When Dhanañjaya broke the twigs it gave reflective pain on the body of Mahāviṣṇu. But Mahāviṣṇu who was aware of the unflinching devotion of Dhanañjaya to himself was not displeased but appeared before Dhanañjaya with wounds all over the body. The Brahmin enquired how Viṣṇu got the wounds and on knowing that it was the consequence of his breaking the twigs of Aśvattha Dhanañjaya in utter grief started to cut his own head off. Greatly pleased Viṣṇu stopped him from his attempt and asked him to name a boon. Very modestly he replied that he would be satisfied if he was given the strength to continue as a devotee of Viṣṇu. (Padma Purāṇa, Kriyā Kāṇḍa).

DHANEŚVARA. A Brahmin born in the city of Avanti. Abandoning the duties enjoined by scriptures to a Brahmin he strayed away from the Brahmin fold doing all sorts of sins. He became a store-house of sins. He was engaged in commerce and once while travelling he reached the city of Māhiṣmatī. There he met many people from several adjoining villages who had come there to observe the Kārttika Vrata. Later Dhaneśvara was bitten by a cobra there and fell down fainting. Very soon he died.

When he died the messengers of Yama came and took him bound to Kālapurī. There, Citragupta read out to Yama all the sins Dhaneśvara had committed from boyhood till his death. Citragupta added "Even from boyhood there is no record of any good deed done by him. On the other hand the sins he has committed could not be told in a year. He is an incarnation of evil. He must be roasted in hell till the end of the world." On hearing this the body of Yama blazed like flame with anger and calling aside an attendant he ordered, "Hi, Pretapālaka, take this sinner away, beat him with spiked clubs and throw him into Kumbhīpāka". Pretapālaka instantly took him away and breaking his head with a thorn-spiked club threw him into a copper vessel containing burning oil. But to his great amazement the burning oil became cold as soon as the body of Dhaneśvara came into contact with it just as it happened once before in the case of Prahlāda. The perplexed attendant ran to Yama and told him of this strange incident. Yama was also surprised at this novelty in hell and called back Dhaneśvara and started enquiring about his life once again. Nārada came there at that time. Both of them then talked about Dhaneśvara. Nārada told Yama how the unanticipated thing so happened because Dhaneśvara on the eve of his death spent some time with people who were observing the Kārttika Vrata washing away thus all the sins accumulated so far in his life. Hearing that Yama took Dhaneśvara round hell and giving Dhaneśvara, the position of a Yakṣa sent him to Kuberapurī. (Chapter 115, Padma Purāṇa).

DHANI. A messenger of the asuras called Kapas. The Kapas once sent Dhani to preach moral code among the Brahmins. (Chapter 157, Anuśāsana Parva, M.B.)

DHANIKA. A Sanskrit poet. (See Dhanañjaya IV).

DHANUGṚHA. (DHANUGRAHA, DHANURDHARA). One of the hundred sons of Dhṛtarāṣṭra. He was killed in the great battle by Bhīmasena. (Śloka 62, Chapter 84, Karṇa Parva, M.B.).

DHANUVAKTRA. A soldier of Subrahmaṇya. (Śloka 62, Chapter 45, Śalya Parva, M.B.).

DHANURVEDA.

General information. A scientific treatise on the art of warfare in ancient Bhārata. Because of the undue importance of the science the treatise is deemed and respected as a Veda. There have been innumerable books on the subject to teach Dhanurveda to the Kṣatriya youths. In the book 'Prasthānabheda' by Madhusūdana Sarasvatī he states that Dhanurveda is a branch of Yajurveda. A Sanskrit book called Dhanurvedasaṁhitā is now available. Some scholars are of opinion that not much antiquity can be attributed to this work. Many books relating to Dhanurveda have been lost to us. What details are there in Agni Purāṇa are given below :

2) Divisions of Dhanurveda. This is known as Catuṣpāda (four-footed) also because of the fact that the four main constituents of an army are the chariots, elephants, horses and men. Dhanurveda has been divided into five parts (1) Yantramukta, (2) Pāṇimukta, (3) Muktasandhārita, (4) Amukta and (5) Bāhuyuddha. There is another division according to Astra and Śastra. There is yet another division of the science into two by some scholars from a different viewpoint calling them Māyā and Ṛju.

Yantramukta (Yantra = machine). This means a warfare where machines are used. Kṣepiṇī (sling) bow and arrow and other such machines are included in this.

Pāṇimukta. (Pāṇi = hand). This is where the hand is used mainly. Stone, mace etc. are used in this.

Muktasandhārita. This includes the use of weapons like a spear.

Amukta. The use of a weapon like a sword which never leaves your hand.

Bāhuyuddha. (Bāhu = head). The fight with only bare hands without the use of a weapon. One who wishes to fight should make ready his own weapons. He should be one who will never get tired even after exertion. A war with bows and arrows is considered the best and most manly, that with a spear ranks next, a fight with a sword is bad and a fight with hands, the most mean.

3) The Trainees. Only a brahmin is entitled to be a preceptor in Dhanurveda. The Kṣatriya and Vaiśya should learn from him. The Śūdra can fight of his own in danger. He is not allowed to learn military science from a preceptor. Those mixed-born are to help the king during a war.

4) Various postures. There are nine different ways of standing when you give a fight, classified according to the different positions of one's foot, heel and knee.

Samapāda. When you stand with your Aṅguṣṭha, Nariyāṇi (Gulpha), Pāṇi and Pāda closely joined together, it is termed Samapāda.

Vaiśākha. Keep your legs twentyseven inches apart and without bending your knees stand erect throwing your weight on the fingers of the foot. This stand is called Vaiśākha.

Maṇḍala. Keep your knees thirtysix inches apart and stand in the shape of a haṁsapaṅkti and this position is called Maṇḍala.

Ālīḍha. Bend your right knee and thigh in the shape of a plough and without any movement to that posture draw your left leg fortyfive inches apart. This stand is called Ālīḍha.

Pratyālīḍha. If you bend your left knee and thigh and stand like above it is called Pratyālīḍha.

Jāta. Place your right foot straight and place the left one perpendicular to the right one with the heels and the ankles of the feet five fingers apart. The whole length of the posture should not exceed twelve fingers. This stand is called Jāta.

Daṇḍayāta. Keep the right knee bent and the left leg straight or vice versa. This posture is called Daṇḍāyata.

Vikaṭa. If for the above posture the distance between the two legs is two palm-length it is Vikaṭa.

Svapuṭa. Keep the knees viguṇas and the feet Uttāyanas for the posture of Svapuṭa.

Svastika. Keep your legs sixteen fingers apart and raise your feet a little keeping the level of both the feet equal. This is Svastika.

5) Use of arrows. Before a man is to make use of a bow and arrow he should first take the posture of Svastika and bow down. He should take the bow by the left hand, take the arrow by the right hand. He then should adopt a posture of either Vaiśākha or Jāta and taking the bow should sink into the earth one end of the bow and draw the bow-string up to the other end and see whether there is sufficient length for the string. He should take an arrow from his sheath and thrust the arrow-head into the ground near the bow. He should place his elbow on the top of the arrow with his forearm bent and fist clenched. If the clenched fist touches the top of the bow that bow and arrow is superior to any other. He should tie the bow-string in a way that the distance between the tied bow-string and the bow is twelve fingers. He should place the bow in front of his navel and the arrows in a quiver on his hip. Taking an arrow he should raise the bow and fix the arrow at a point on the bow-tring between his eye and ear. He should take the arrow by his left fist and fix it so that the fist touches the left nipple. The bow should not change position horizontally, vertically, laterally, face downwards or upwards. Then taking an arrow from the sheath by the thumb and forefinger fix it on the bow-string and stretch it well before sending the shot. The clue to correct aim is this. Anything that one can see with one's eyes but can be covered by his fist is within the arrow-shot. When one arrow is sent another should be taken immediately from the sheath and sent in quick succession. This is called Upaccheda.

6) Operations with a sword and a carma (shield). There are thirtytwo different ways of putting into use a sword or a 'carma' (shield). Bhrānta, Udbhrānta, Āviddha, Āpluta, Vipluta, Sṛta, Saṁpāta, Samudīrṇa, Śvetapāta, Ākula, Savyoddhūta, Savyāvadhūta, Dakṣiṇoddhūta, Dakṣiṇavadhūta, Anālakṣita, Visphoṭa, Karāla, Indramahāsakha, Vikarāla, Nipāta, Vibhīṣaṇa, Bhayānaka, Samagrapāda, Arddhapāda, Tṛtīyāṁśapāda, Pāda, Ardhavārija, Vārija, Pratyālīḍha, Ālīḍha, Varāha and Lalita.

7) Operations with ropes. There are eleven different ways of using a rope in a war. Parāvṛtta, Aparāvṛtta, Gṛhīta, Laghugṛhīta, Ūrdhvakṣipta, Adhaḥkṣipta, Sandhārita, Śyenapāta, Gajapāta and Grāhagrāhya. Adepts in this art have stated that there are five acts in the rope-operation. They are : Ṛju, Āyata, Viśāla, Tiryak and Bhrāmita.

8) Mode of using the weapons. (1) Deeds with a wheel are : Chedana, Bhedana, Pātana, Bhramaṇa, Śayana and Vikartana.

(2) Śūla (spear). Deeds with this are : Āsphoṭana, Kṣolana, Bhedana, Trāsana, Āndolana and Āghāta.

(3) Tomara (iron club). Deeds with this are : Dṛṣṭighāta Pārśvāghāta, Ṛjupakṣa and Iṣṭaprāpta.

(4) Gada (Mace). Deeds with this are : Gomūtra, Āhata, Prabhūta, Kamalāsana, Tata, Ūrdhvagātra, Vāmanamita, Dakṣiṇamita, Āvṛtta, Parāvṛtta, Pādoddhūta, and Avapluta Haṁsamarda.

(5) Paraśu (axe). Deeds with this are : Karāla, Avaghāta, Daṁśa, Upapluta, Kṣiptahasta, Sthita and Śūnya,

(6) Mudgara (hammer). Deeds with this are : Tāḍana. Chedana, Cūrṇana, Plavana and Ghātana.

(7) Bhindipāla. Deeds with this are : Saṁśrānta, Viśrānta, Govisarga and Sudurdhara. Deeds with the Laguḍa are the same as these.

(8) Vajra. Deeds with this are: Antya, Madhya, Pārāvṛtta, and Nideśānta. The deeds with Paṭṭiśa are the same as there.

(9) Kṛpāṇa (Churikā—small dagger). Deeds with these are : Haraṇa, Chedana, Ghātana, Bhedana, Mṛṁkṣaṇa, Pātana and Sphoṭana.

(10) Kṣepiṇī (Kaviṇa—Sling). Deeds are Trāsana, Rakṣaṇa, Ghātana, Baloddharaṇa and Āyata.

The feats of one who fights a bludgeon or cudgel are the following:

Santyāga, Avadaṁśa, Varāhoddhūtaka, Hastāvahasta, Ālīna, Ekahasta, Avahasta, Dvihasta, Bāhupāśa, Kaṭirecitaka, Utgata, Uroghāta, Lalāṭaghāta, Bhujavidhamana, Karoddhūta, Vimāna, Pādāhati, Vipādika Gātrasaṁśleṣaṇa, Sānta, Gātraviparyaya, Ūrdhaprahāra, Ghāta, Gomūtra, Savya, Bhakṣiṇa. Pāraka, Tāraka, Daṇḍa, Ākula, Kabarībandha, Tiryagbandha, Apāmārga, Bhīmavega, Sudarśana, Siṁhākrānta, Gajākrānta and Garbhākrānta. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapters 249-252).

9) Dhanurveda in Mahābhārata. Some references to Dhanurveda in Mahāhārata are given below:

(1) A sage named Śaradvān was a noted preceptor in Dhanurveda. Kṛpācārya learnt Dhanurveda from him and taught many others of his disciples. (Chaptar 129, Ādi Parva, M.B.).

(2) Droṇācārya learnt Dhanurveda from Paraśurāma and imparted it to many other disciples of his including the Kauravas and Pāṇḍavas. (Chapter 129, Ādi Parva, M.B.).

(3) Agniveśa, a sage, learnt Dhanurveda from sage Agastya. (Śloka 9, Chapter 133, Ādi Parva, M.B.).

(4) Dhanurveda has got ten aṅgas and four caraṇas. (Chapters 6 and 41, Śalya Parva, M.B.).

(5) Four-footed Dhanurveda worshipped Subrahmaṇya. (Śloka 22, Chapter 44, Śalya Parva, M.B.).

DHANUṢA. An ancient sage. He was a priest in the yāga of Uparicaravasu. (Śloka 7, Chapter 336, Śānti Parva).

DHANUṢĀKṢA. An ancient sage. He killed Medhāvī, son of the sage Bāladhi, accusing Medhāvi of having mocked other sages (Śloka 50, Chapter 135, Vana Parva, M.B.).

DHANVA. One of the Kings of Kāśi. Dhanvantari was born as his son. (For details see under Dhanvantari).

DHANVANTARI I. A deva who was a preceptor in Āyurveda.

1) Origin. The devas and asuras together churned the milky ocean, Kṣīrābdhi, to salvage Amṛta (Nectar) from it. After thousand years there arose from the ocean a deva with a Kamaṇḍalu (water-pot of ascetics) in one hand and a daṇḍa in the other. That deva was Dhanvantari, (Śloka 31, Sarga 45, Bāla Kāṇḍa, Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa).

The birth of Dhanvantari from the ocean of Milk is described in Chapter 29 of Harivaṁśa thus :

Prosperous-looking Dhanvantari rising above the water-level of Kṣīrābdhi stood worshipping Mahāviṣṇu. Viṣṇu gave him the name of Abja. Dhanvantari is thus known by the name of Abja also. Dhanvantari bowing to Viṣṇu said "Prabho, I am your son. Allot to me yajñabhāga".

Vtṣṇu replied thus : "Portions of yajña have already been allotted. Because you were born after the devas you cannot be considered as one among them. You will be born again in the world for a second time and then you will be a celebrity. In your second life even from while in the womb you will have knowledge of Aṇimā and Garimā. Therefore you will be born as a deva incarnate. You will write in eight divisions a book on Āyurveda ; your second life will be in Dvāpara yuga." After having said so much Viṣṇu disappeared.

2) Rebirth of Dhanvantari. Suhotra, King of Kāśi, in the second Dvāpara yuga had two sons, Śala and Gṛtsamada. Śunaka was the son of Gṛtsamada. Śala got a son, Ārṣṭiṣeṇa. Kāśa was born to Ārṣṭiṣeṇa. To Kāśa was born Dīrghatapas (Dhanvā). For a long time Dhanvā did not have any children and so he went and did penance to propitiate Abjadeva. Abjadeva (Dhanvantari) was pleased and was born as a son to Dhanvā. Dhanvā named the boy as Dhanvantari and the latter taught his disciples Āyurveda, by parts, eight in number. From Dhanvantari in order were born Ketumān—Bhīmaratha—Divodāsa. (Chapter 29, Harivaṁśa).

3) Dhanvantari and Parīkṣit. There is a story in the purāṇas that when Takṣaka went and bit Parīkṣit to kill him, a Viṣahāri (one who cures those infected with snake venom) rushed to save the king but was bribed and sent back by Takṣaka. There are indications in the Purāṇas to show that the Viṣahāri under reference was Dhanvantari though it is stated that Kaśyapa was the person involved. (See under Takṣaka).

4) Dhanvantari and Manasādevī. In the Kṛṣṇajanma Khaṇḍa of Brahmavaivarta Purāṇa there is a story connecting Dhanvantari with Manasādevī, a serpent-goddess.

Once Dhanvantari with his disciples was going to Kailāsa. On the way Takṣaka made a venom-spitting hiss. At once one of the disciples of Dhanvantari boldly went and plucked the diamond on the head of Takṣaka and threw it to the ground. Hearing this Vāsuki, King of serpents, sent to Dhanvantari thousands of serpents under the leadership of Droṇa, Puṇḍarīka and Dhanañjaya. The poisonous breath of all these serpents joined together made the disciples of Dhanvantari swoon. Immediately Dhanvantari by a medicine made from vanaspati made all his disciples recover and then sent all the serpents to a swoon. When Vāsuki heard this he sent the serpent-maid, Manasādevī, a disciple of Śiva, to face Dhanvantari. Manasādevī and Gaḍūra were both disciples of Śiva. But Dhanvantari was a follower of Gaḍūra. Manasādevī made all the disciples of Dhanvantari swoon but the latter because of his great proficiency is Viṣavidyā soon brought back his disciples to normal. When Manasādevī found that it was impossible to defeat Dhanvantari or his disciples by using poison Manasādevī took the triśūla given to her by Śiva and aimed it at Dhanvantari. Seeing this Śiva and Brahmā appeared before them and pacifying them sent them all their way.

DHANVANTARI II. (Amṛtācārya). An eminent medical scientist born in the ambaṣṭha caste. There is no reference anywhere in the Purāṇas regarding any relationship between the two Dhanvantaris. There is the following story about Amṛtācārya in Ambaṣṭhācāracandrikā.

Once Gālava Maharṣi went to the forest to collect darbha and firewood. He walked for long and felt thirsty and hungry. Then he saw a girl coming that way with water and Gālava quenched his thirst taking water from her. Pleased with her the Maharṣi blessed her saying "May you get a good son." The girl replied that she was still unmarried. Gālava then made a figure of a male with darbha and told her to get a child from that figure. She was a Vaiśya girl named Vīrabhadrā and she got a beautiful child of that darbha male. Because the boy was born to a Vaiśya of a brahmin male he belonged to the Ambaṣṭha caste. The boy was named Amṛtācārya.

DHANYAMĀLĀ. The foster-mother of Atikāya. (See Atikāya).

DHARĀ. Wife of a Vasu named Droṇa (see under Nandagopa).

DHARA I. He is the first Vasu born to Dharma of his wife Dhūmrā. (Śloka 19, Chapter 66, Ādi Parva).

DHARA II. A king who was a friend of Yudhiṣṭhira. (Śloka 39, Chapter 158, Droṇa Parva, M.B.).

DHĀRA. A holy place. If one bathes in this holy place (Bath) his sorrows will be at an end. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 84, Stanza 25).

DHĀRAṆĀ. One of the eight means of Rājayoga (One of the ways of union with the supreme Spirit). Yama, Niyama, Āsana, Prāṇāyāma, Pratyāhāra, Dhāraṇā, Dhyāna and Samādhi are the eight means (See under Rājayoga).

DHĀRAṆA I. A king born in the family of Candravatsa. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 7, Stanza 16).

DHĀRAṆA II. A nāga (serpent) of the family of Kaśyapa. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 103, Stanza 16).

DHARAṆA (M). A measure. In ancient times a dharaṇa was made up of ten palas. (Manusmṛti).

DHARĀPĀLA. A king of ancient times. He ruled over a country named Vidiśā. There is a holy place where the rivers Vetasī and Vetravatī meet. Dharāpāla constructed a temple at the confluence. There is a story also for his doing so.

Once a Śiva-pārṣada brought to Śiva a woman at a time when Pārvatī was away from the place. Śiva and the woman were enjoying each other when Pārvatī came to the place. Getting angry she cursed the Pārṣada and made him into a fox. The fox came to the place where the rivers Vetasī and Vetravatī meet and did penance there and attained Mokṣa. Dharāpāla saw the divine plane coming down to take the Pārṣada away and he, therefore, constructed a temple at the place where the plane landed. He then arranged scholars well versed in Vedas and śāstras to read Padma Purāṇa there. He himself read Padma Purāṇa and attained mokṣa. (Chapter 29, Padma Purāṇa).

DHĀREŚVARĪ. A goddess living in the tīrtha (holy bath) of Jambunada. This goddess is another form of Pārvatī. (Devī Bhāgavata, Skandha 8).

DHĀRIṆĪ. A daughter born to the Manes (Pitṛs) created by Brahmā, by their wife Svadhā. Dhāriṇī had an elder sister named Menā. Both were expounders of the Vedas and of good qualities. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Aṁśa 1, Chapter 10).

DHARMA. A deva who is the abode of all luxuries in life.

1) Birth. This deva broke the right nipple of Brahmā and came out in the form of a human being. Three sons were born to him: Śama, Kāma and Harṣa. Kāma married Rati, Śama, Prāpti and Harṣa, Nandā.[1]

2) Marriage and family life. The Bhāgavata states that Dharma married the thirteen daughters of Dakṣaprajāpati named Śraddhā, Maitrī, Dayā, Śānti, Puṣṭi, Tuṣṭi, Kriyā, Unnati, Buddhi, Medhā, Titikṣā, Hrī and Mūrti. Besides them he married ten other girls named Bhānu, Lambā, Kukubh, Jāmi, Viśvā, Sādhyā, Marutvatī, Vasu, Muhūrtā and Saṅkalpā and also a woman named Sunṛtā. According to Mahābhārata Dharma married the following daughters of Dakṣa: Kīrti, Lakṣmī, Dhṛti, Medhā, Puṣṭi, Śraddhā, Kriyā, Buddhi and Lajjā.

From each of his wives there originated a family. The son born to each is given below Śraddhā—Śubha; Maitrī—Prasāda; Dayā—Abhaya; Śānti--Sukha; Tuṣṭi—Moda; Unnati — Darpa; Buddhi — Artha; Medhā—Sukṛti; Titikṣā — Śama; Hrī — Praśraya. Mūrti gave birth to the virtuous Naranārāyaṇas. Sunṛtā became the mother of the devas, Satyavrata and Satyasena. Satyasena became famous by slaying many cruel and evil-natured Yakṣas, demons and spirits. Lambā gave birth to Ṛṣabha and Vidyotana. Ṛṣabha got a son, Indrasena. Vidyotana became the father of stanayitnu. Kukubh delivered Saṅkaṭa and Saṅkaṭa became the father of Kīkaṭa and Durgadeva. Jāmi got a son Svarga and of him was born Nandī. Viśvā gave birth to Viśvadevas and Sādhyā to Sādhyas. These Sādhyas are different from those born of Brahmā. Sādhyas became the father of Arthasiddhi. Marutvatī gave birth to Marutvat and Jayanta. Vasu gave birth to eight sons and they were known as Aṣṭavasus. Droṇa, the first of the Aṣṭavasus, married Abhimati. Abhimati is known as Dharā also. It was Droṇa and Dharā who were born as Nandagopa and Yaśodā later. Prāṇa, second of the Aṣṭavasus, married Ūrjasvatī, daughter of Priyavrata. (Navama Skandha, Bhāgavata).

3) Prominent sons. Four sons of Dharma, Hari, Kṛṣṇa, Nara and Nārāyaṇa became prominent. Hari and Kṛṣṇa were great yogis while Nara and Nārāyaṇa were great ascetics. (See under Naranārāyaṇa).

4) The daughter named Dharmavratā. Dharmadeva got a daughter named Dharmavratā of his wife Dharmavatī. Dharmavratā was an ascetic and she was married to Marīci, son of Brahmā. One day Marīci came back from the forest after getting darbha and flowers extremely tired and so after food lay down to rest. His wife sitting by his side massaged his legs. The sage fell asleep. Then Brahmā came there and Dharmavratā attended on him and worshipped him. Marīci, when he woke up, finding Dharmavratā attending on another man cursed her and made her into stone. Dharmavratā pleaded not guilty and standing inside a fire-pit did penance for ten thousand years. Brahmā and other devas appeared before her and consoled her by assuring that though she would be a stone devas would take their abode in it and that she would be worshipped by all. From that day onwards that stone was known as Devaśilā and even now it is believed that Brahmā and other devas live therein. (Chapter 114, Agni Purāṇa).

5) Dharma was cursed and made Vidura by Aṇimāṇḍavya. (See Aṇimāṇḍavyā).

Other details. (1) A portion of Dharma took life as Yudhiṣṭhira in Kuntī. (See Dharmaputra).

(2) Dharma did penance in Dharmatīrtha for a very long time. (Śloka 1, Chapter 84, Vana Parva).

(3) The abode of Dharma was Dharmaprastha. (Śloka 1, Chapter 84, Vana Parva).

(4) Dharma did penance on the banks of the river Vaitaraṇī for a long time. (Śloka 4, Chapter 114, Vana Parva).

(5) While the Pāṇḍavas were in exile in the forest Dharma in the form of a deer came to the hut of a Brahmin and carried away by its horns the Araṇi stick which the Brahmin owned for making fire by attrition. (Chapter 311, Vana Parva).

(6) Dharma appeared in the form of a Yakṣa and made all the Pāṇḍavas swoon except Yudhiṣṭhira, on the shores of a pond in the forest and later got them back to normal. (See under Dharmaputra).

(7) Dharmadeva went to Viśvāmitra in the guise of Vasiṣṭha to test him. (See para 3 of Gālava).

(8) Following a directive from Brahmā, Dharmadeva once brought before Varuṇa all the daityadānavas bound by ropes. (Chapter 128, Udyoga Parva).

(9) Mahāviṣṇu was born as a son of Dharmadeva. (See under Naranārāyaṇa).

1. Sthānaṁ tu dakṣiṇaṁ bhitvā Brahmaṇo naravigrahaḥ /
Niḥsṛto bhagavān dharmaḥ sarvalokasukhāvahaḥ //
Trayastasyavarāḥ putrāḥ sarvabhūtamanoharāḥ /
Śamaḥ Kāmaśca Harṣaśca tejasā lokadhāriṇaḥ //
(M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 65).

(10) Dharma worshipped a brahmin named Satya taking the form of a deer. (Śloka 17, Chapter 272, Śānti Parva).

(11) Dharma tested Sudarśana taking the form of a brahmin. (Śloka 79, Chapter 2, Anuśāsana Parva).

(12) Dharma saved a sage named Vatsanābha from a great downpour taking the shape of a buffalo. (Chapter 12, Anuśāsana Parva).

(13) Dharma disguised as a brahmin, went and imparted advice to Janaka, father of Sītā. (Chapter 32, Aśvamedha Parva).

(14) To test Jamadagni, Dharma went to his āśrama taking the form of Anger. Jamadagni had just milked Kāmadhenu and kept the milk in a pot. Dharma as Anger crept into the milk. Jamadagni drank it and yet remained calm. Seeing this Dharma appeared before him in the form of a Brahmin and blessed him assuring Jamadagni that in future he would be obedient to Dharma (Chapter 91, Aśvamedha Parva).

(15) When at the fag end of their life the Pāṇḍavas started on their Mahāprasthāna, Dharma as a dog accompanied them up to the gates of heaven. (Śloka 22, Chapter 5, Svargārohaṇa Parva).

7) Dharma and Kāla. There is a misunderstanding found even in some Purāṇas that Kāla, the chief of Kālapurī, and Dharma are one and the same person. But if the stories around each are examined it is easy to deduce that they are two different devas. The father and mother of Dharmadeva is Brahmā. The father of Kāla is Sūrya and mother Saṁjñā, daughter of Viśvakarmā. This itself is a sufficient evidence to show that the two are different persons. Further, Kāla or Yama is the sixth descendant of Viṣṇu.

But scholars are misled to think that the two are identical. There is a reason for it.

Dharmarājaḥ Pitṛpatiḥ
Samavarttī Paretarāṭ /
Kṛtānto Yamunābhrātā
Śamano Yamarāḍ Yamaḥ //
Kālo Daṇḍadharaḥ Srāddha-
Devo Vaivasvatontakaḥ. / (Amara).

The above are the synonyms of Kāla. Vyāsa has used as synonyms for Dharmadeva in the Mahābhārata the words Dharmarāja, Vṛṣa and Yama. Now among the synonyms for the two there are two words in common—Dharmarāja and Yama. This has led to this misunderstanding. Because Kāla weighs the evil and good in man he got the name Dharmarāja. Dharmadeva got that name because he is the incarnation of Dharma. The real name of Kāla is Yama. Dharmadeva got the name Yama because he possesses 'Yama' (control of the self for moral conduct). Kāla has no sons; Vidura and Yudhiṣṭhira are the sons of Dharmadeva.

DHARMABHṚT. A maharṣi who was an inhabitant of Daṇḍakāraṇya. This sage narrated to Śrī Rāma the story of the pond 'Pañcāpsara' and the gānadhārā that rises from it. (Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa, Araṇya, Sarga 11).

DHARMABUDDHI. See under Mitrabheda.

DHARMADA. A follower of Subrahmaṇya. (Śloka 72, Chapter 45, Śalya Parva).

DHARMADATTA I. A king of Kosala. He had a wife named Nāgaśrī. By her chastity she became a celebrity and got the name of Arundhatī of the earth. They got a daughter named Tārādattā. Once when Dharmadatta and Nāgaśrī were engaged in conversation both remembered their lives in their previous births. It was not allowed to speak about previous births in open and if anybody did so death was the penalty. But Nāgaśrī could not control herself and prepared to accept the worst. Nāgaśrī told her husband thus: "I am just reminded of my life in my previous birth. I will tell you my story. I was the servant maid of a brahmin named Mādhava in this same place. I had a husband named Devadāsa then. My husband was the son of a merchant. We made a small house of our own and lived there peacefully. Each of us would bring food from where we worked and everyday we used to set apart a portion of what we got for guests and the pitṛs. We were satisfied with what was left after that. If we got more than one set of clothes we would give it to the poor. Then there came a famine in the country. Our earning also was reduced daily. We lived in hunger. One day a hungry and tired sannyāsī came to our place and we gave him the whole of our food. My husband died that day and I gave away my life jumping into the funeral pyre of my husband. Then I was born in the family of a King and became your wife."

Dharmadatta also got back the memory of his previous birth. He said he was the Devadāsa of Nāgaśrī's previous life.

The moment they finished talking about their previous births both fell down dead. Orphaned Tārādattā then lived under the care of her mother's younger sister. After some time a Maharṣi came to their house and by his blessing Tārādattā got a husband named Kaliṅgasena. Kaliṅgasena was a brave and daring Prince. Very soon they got a daughter and she was named Kaliṅgasenā. (Kathāsaritsāgara, Madanamañjukā laṁbaka, Taraṅga 2).

DHARMADATTA II. A Brahmin who lived in the city of Karavīra. One day while Dharmadatta was going to the temple with material for pūjā he came across a demoness named Kalahā on the way. The brahmin threw the pūjā materials in his hand on to the face of the demoness. When a tulasī leaf touched the demoness she got back the memory of her previous birth.

Kalahā then abandoned her cruel nature and begged Dharmadatta to advise her as to how she should get a release from her demonaic life. Taking pity on her Dharmadatta gave her all the 'puṇya' he had obtained by observing Kārttikavrata. (Chapters 106, 107, Uttara Khaṇḍa, Padma Purāṇa and Chapters 2, 4, 24, 25 Skanda Purāṇa).

Dharmadatta and Kalahā were born as Daśaratha and Kaikeyī in their next births as a result of the accumulated Puṇya obtained by observing Kārttikavrata. (Sāra khaṇḍa, Ānanda Rāmāyaṇa).

DHARMADHVAJA. See under Tulasī.

DHARMAGUPTA I. A prince who obtained blessings from Śiva by observing the Pradoṣavrata. (For detailed story see Aṁśumatī).

DHARMAGUPTA II. A Nandarājakumāra belonging to the Lunar dynasty. Chapters 1, 2 and 13 of Skanda Purāṇa gives the following story about him.

Once Dharmagupta went to the forests, hunting. Deeply interested in the game he never knew when it became dusk. It was late to go back to the palace and so deciding to stay in the forest for the night he climbed upon a tree and made a seat there to rest. After some time a bear followed by a lion came running and took refuge on the top of the same tree. The lion stood growling below. Seeing a man on the same tree the bear said "Oh, Prince, we are both in the same sad plight now. Believe me as a friend. We can spend the night on this tree safe. Therefore, go to sleep till midnight and I will keep watch over. After that I will go to sleep and you keep watch". Gladly accepting the proposal the prince went to sleep and the bear kept vigil. Then the lion suggested to the bear to push down the prince. The bear replied that he would never cheat a friend and that it was a great sin also to do so. After midnight the bear slept and the prince kept watchover. The lion then suggested to the prince to push down the bear. Thinking that he would be saved if the bear is given to the lion the unfaithful prince pushed the bear down. But the bear escaped catching hold of the branches lower down. Embittered at this the bear cursed Dharmagupta and made him mad.

Then addressing Dharmagupta first and the lion next the bear said thus : "I am Dhyānakāṣṭha a sage of the Bhṛgu family. I can take any form I like. I cursed you, Dharmagupta, because you cheated a friend. This lion is Bhadra, one of the ministers of Kubera. Once he entered into sexual act with a bear in front of the āśrama of Gautama at midday and the sage cursed him and made him into a lion. The sage as a relief from the curse had further decreed that he would get his original form when he entered into a conversation with me." When Dhyānakāṣṭha finished speaking the lion changed itself into the form of Bhadra.

Dharmagupta remained mad and his father, the King, approached Jaimini for help. The sage said that the prince would be cured of his madness if he bathed in the Puṣkariṇī tīrtha. The king did as was suggested and Dharmagupta was cured.

DHARMĀKARA. A righteous house-holder. Once a prince entrusted his beautiful wife with Dharmākara and went away. Though she lived with him for six months he did not have any kind of contact with her. The prince returned. Wicked people tried to arouse doubts about the chastity of his wife and the householder. But it was futile. Still fearing calumny Dharmākara entered fire. In that test by fire he came out victorious. Not only did his body remain unscorched, but also that the faces of the wicked people who blamed him were filled with leprosy and became ugly. (Padma Purāṇa, Sṛṣṭi khaṇḍa, Chapter 50).

DHARMAKETU. A king of Bhārgava gotra. He was the son of Suketu and father of Satyaketu. (Navama Skandha, Bhāgavata).

DHARMANANDANA. A king of the family of Bhārgava. (Navama Skandha, Bhāgavata).

DHARMĀṄGADA. A Brahmin who became a deep meditator on Viṣṇu, because of his habits in his previous life. Dharmāṅgada was the son of Rukmāṅgada by his wife Sandhyāvalī. Rukmāṅgada was the son of Ṛtadhvaja who lived in the city of Vidiśā. He was a man of good personality, who lived with his father and being a generous man he did not hesitate to give his head to Mohinī for the pleasure of his father. God Viṣṇu was pleased with him because of his love of his father and of his loyalty to Vaiṣṇavite deity and took him bodily to heaven (Vaikuṇṭha). Dharmāṅgada lived there for many thousands of years enjoying heavenly pleasures. Then he went astray from divine life and had to take life again as Suvrata the son of a Brahmin named Somaśarmā.

The wise Suvrata discarded the passions of Kāma (desire), Krodha (anger) etc. and controlled his senses and engaged himself in penance in Vaiḍūryamahādri. For hundred years he sat in meditation and Mahāviṣṇu was pleased with him and took him and his father to Vaikuṇṭha. At the instruction of Mahāviṣṇu, Suvrata took life again in the house of Kaśyapa. When he died he went to Vaikuṇṭha. In every successive birth he had the remembrance of his previous birth. (Padma Purāṇa, Chapter 21).

DHARMANETRA I. A king of the Hehaya family. He was the son of Hehaya and father of Kṛti. (Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa, Chapter 2).

DHARMANETRA II. A son of Dhṛtarāṣṭra. (Śloka 60, Chapter 94, Ādi Parva).

DHARMAPĀLA. A minister of Daśaratha. There were eight ministers for Daśaratha: Sṛṣṭi, Jayanta, Vijaya, Siddhārtha, Rāṣṭravardhana, Aśoka, Dharmapāla and Sumantra. (Chapter 6, Agni Purāṇa).

DHARMAPRASTHA. A sacred place. It is believed to be the abode of Dharmarāja. There is a general assumption that anybody who touches the water in a well there will be absolved of all sins. (Śloka 99, Chapter 94, Vana Parva).

DHARMAPUTRA. The eldest of the Pāṇḍavas, the others being Bhīmasena, Arjuna, Nakula and Sahadeva.

1) Genealogy. See under Arjuna.

2) Birth. Pāṇḍu, brother of Dhṛtarāṣṭra, had two wives, Kuntī and Mādrī. There was a curse for Pāṇḍu that he would die the moment he touched his wife. (See under Pāṇḍu). Kuntī, the first wife of Pāṇḍu, had obtained from Durvāsas five mantras. The mantras were very potent. If she called upon any god reciting the mantra that God would manifest himself to her and bless her with a son. When Kuntī found that Gāndhārī was pregnant and was about to deliver she became anxious and meditating on Dharmadeva recited one of the mantras given by Durvāsas and got a child from him. The boy was born at midday on the eighth Jyeṣṭha day of the year on Pañcamī and at the auspicious hour, Abhijit. At the time of his birth there was a celestial voice which said "This boy will become a very righteous and bold King, best among the virtuous. He will be known as Yudhiṣṭhira". Obeying the dictate of the mysterious voice he was named Yudhiṣṭhira. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 123).

3) Boyhood. When he had five sons Pāṇḍu went to the forest of Śataśṛṅga together with his family to spend the spring time there. The sages residing in that forest conducted the christening ceremony of Dharmaputra. Kaśyapa, priest of Vāsudeva, performed the Upanayana ceremony (thread-wearing) of Dharmaputra (Chapter 123, Dākṣiṇātyapāṭha) Ādi Parva, M.B.). Rājarṣi Śuka imparted instructions to Dharmaputra on spear-warfare. Pāṇḍu died during their stay there. Mādrī abandoned her life by jumping into her husband's funeral pyre. Before doing so she called Dharmaputra to her side and joining her hands together said "Son, you are now the father to your brothers." When Pāṇḍu and Mādrī were dead the sages of the forest took Kuntī and the children to Hastināpura and entrusted them to the care of Bhīṣma detailing to him all that had happened in the forest. (Chapter 125, Ādi Parva, M.B.).

4) Kaumāra(youth). Dharmaputra and his brothers spent their boyhood in Hastināpura along with Duryodhana and his brothers. Bhīmasena became a great foe of Duryodhana and his brothers and Duryodhana always nurtured a desire to kill Bhīmasena. Once Duryodhana invited Dharmaputra and his brothers to have aquatic games in the Gaṅgā. Accepting the invitation Dharmaputra participated in the games along with his brothers. One night Duryodhana caught hold of Bhīma alone and tied him with ropes and threw him into the river. When in the morning Dharmaputra found his brother missing he ran to his mother to inform her of the loss. Kuntī asked him to start a search and while he was on it Bhīmasena appeared before him and told him how he was thrown into the river by Duryodhana and how he went to Nāgaloka and was brought to earth with great acquisitions from there. Dharmaputra advised them not to make the incident public. They received training in warfare in Hastināpura under Droṇācārya. Dharmaputra got great proficiency in chariot-fighting. As Gurudakṣiṇā (fee for the preceptor) Dharmaputra agreed to bring Drupada bound before the preceptor. But Arjuna stopped him and himself undertook the task (Chapters 127 to 136, Ādi Parva, M.B.).

5) Becomes heir-apparent and goes to the forest. Dhṛtarāṣṭra, crowned Dharmaputra as the heir-apparent when the latter had successfully completed his course of study in warfare. By his good conduct, righteousness and administrative efficiency Dharmaputra excelled his father and became very popular among his subjects. Jealous of this Duryodhana decided to destroy the Pāṇḍavas somehow. With the permission of his father, Duryodhana constructed a palace at Vāraṇāvata for the Pāṇḍavas to reside there. That palace was built of Lākṣā (See under Arakkillam). The entire population resented this act of Duryodhana and rebuked him. They tried to follow Dharmaputra to Vāraṇāvata and stay there. But by tactful words he made them abandon that idea. Still many brahmins followed Dharmaputra. After some days Duryodhana set fire to the palace. But the Pāṇḍavas escaped through a tunnel from the house which had been constructed without the knowledge of Duryodhana just at the time of construction of the building. Escaping from there the Pāṇḍavas reached the forests and travelling farther came to the shore of the Gaṅgā. (Ślokas 138 to 148, Ādi Parva, M.B.).

6) Story up to the life incognito.

(1) When the palace was burnt to ashes it was presumed that they were dead and by the instructions of Dhṛtarāṣṭra the funeral rites of the Pāṇḍavas were conducted at Hastināpura. But Vidura informed Bhīṣma that the Pāṇḍavas were alive. (Chapter 149, Dākṣiṇātyapāṭha, Ādi Parva, M.B.).

(2) Dharmaputra gave permission to Bhīma to marry Hiḍimbā while they were in the forest. (Chapter 154, Dākṣiṇātyapāṭha, Ādi Parva).

(3) Dharmaputra counselled Arjuna to release Citraratha Yakṣa who was defeated by Arjuna in a battle. (Śloka 39, Chapter 169, Ādi Parva).

(4) After the svayaṁvara of Pāñcālī, Dharmaputra narrated to Drupada the story of their escape from the palace. (Chapter 194, Ādi Parva).

(5) After svayaṁvara of Pāñcālī the Pāṇḍavas returned to their country and Dharmaputra was crowned king of half of the country. He started his rule at Khāṇḍavaprastha, his capital. (Chapter 206, Ādi Parva).

(6) Nārada went to Khāṇḍavaprastha and advised them, how to avoid unpleasantness accruing from their having one wife in common. His advice was that Pāñcālī should spend one year with each of the five in turn. (Chapter 207, Ādi Parva).

(7) When Abhimanyu was born to Arjuna, Dharmaputra gave ten thousand cows to brahmins as gifts. (Śloka 69, Chapter 22, Ādi Parva).

(8) Yudhiṣṭhira got a son Prativindhya of Pāñcāli. (Śloka 79, Chapter 220, Ādi Parva).

(9) Yudhiṣṭhira got a son Yaudheya of Devikā, daughter of King Śibi (Śloka 76, Chapter 95, Ādi Parva).

(10) When Śrī Kṛṣṇa went to Dvārakā from Indraprastha Dharmaputra drove the chariot in the place of Dāruka, charioteer of Kṛṣṇa. (Śloka 16, Chapter 2, Sabhā Parva).

(11) Mayāsura constructed a beautiful palace in Indraprastha and gave it to Dharmaputra. (Śloka 37, Chapter 3, Sabhā Parva).

(12) Yudhiṣṭhira decided to perform a Rajasūya at Indraprastha. Even before the Rājasūya Śrī Kṛṣṇa, Arjuna and Bhīmasena together killed Jarāsandha. After that Yudhiṣṭhira sent Arjuna to the northern side and the other brothers to the southern side for Digvijaya (conquest of countries). When he established his autocracy he performed the Rājasūya. (Chapter 45, Sabhā Parva).

(13) Yudhiṣṭhira used to give free sumptuous food to thousands of brahmins in golden pots daily. (Chapter 49, Sabhā Parva).

(14) Envious Duryodhana sent Vidura to bring Dharmaputra to Hastināpura and defeated him foully in a game of dice. Though Dharmaputra lost everything Dhṛtarāṣṭra gave him back everything. (Chapter 72, Sabhā Parva, M.B.).

(15) Before Dharmaputra went back to his place, with the permission of Dhṛtarāṣṭra, Duryodhana called him back again for another game of dice. Despite protests from all sides Dharmaputra went again for a game of dice with Duryodhana and lost again all he possessed. Then he left the country with his brothers and wife to spend twelve years in exile in the forests and another year incognito. (Chapter 79, Sabhā Parva).

(16) Sūrya gave the Akṣayapātra (a pot which is never emptied) to the Pāṇḍavas. (Śloka 72, Chapter 3, Vana Parva).

(17) At first the Pāṇḍavas stayed in Dvaitavana and later on the advice of Vyāsa they went to Kāmyakavana. (Śloka 41, Chapter 36, Vana Parva).

(18) He advised Bhīmasena to remain quiet for thirteen years. (Chapter 52, Vana Parva).

(19) Bṛhadaśva, the sage, narrated the story of Nala to Dharmaputra while they were in the forest. (Chapter 43, Vana Parva).

(20) The sage Lomaśa imparted instructions on philosophy to Dharmaputra while they were in the forest. (Chapter 94, Vana Parva).

(21) Yudhiṣṭhira met and conversed with Paraśurāma at the mountain Mahendra. (Chapter 117, Vana Parva).

(22) The Pāṇḍavas then travelled in north India. On their way to the mountain of Gandhamādana Pāñcālī fainted and Yudhiṣṭhira wept bitterly. (Chapter 145, Vana Parva).

(23) From Gandhamādana Dharmaputra with his wife and brothers reached Badarikāśrama and from there they returned to Dvaitavana.

(24) When they went to Kāmyaka vana Śrī Kṛṣṇa visited Dharmaputra there. (Chapter 153. Vana Parva).

(25)Duryodhana and his followers made a grand march to Kāmyaka vana to see the Pāṇḍavas in sad plight and there the Gandharva Citrasena bound them all by ropes. Arjuna on the orders of Dharmaputra got them all released. (Chapter 246, Vana Parva).

(26) While the Pāṇḍavas were in exile in the forest Duśśāsana went and invited Yudhiṣṭhira to attend a Vaiṣṇava sacrifice conducted by Duryodhana. But Dharmaputra sent him away saying that it was not proper to come to the country before the expiry of the period of exile. (Chapter 256, Vana Parva).

(27) Yudhiṣṭhira received the sage Durvāsas with respect and after offering homage sent him away contented. (Chapter 262, Vana Parva).

(28) Jayadratha kidnapped Pāñcālī and in the battle that ensued Dharmaputra slew the King of Trigartta but left free Jayadratha. (Chapter 272, Vana Parva).

(29) At a time when Yudhiṣṭhira was plunged in sorrow the sage Mārkaṇḍeya narrated the story of Śrī Rāma to console him. (Chapters 273 to 291, Vana Parva).

7) How Dharmadeva tested Yudhiṣṭhira. The Pāṇḍavas travelling through the forests reached Dvaitavana. A brahmin among their group was making fire by the araṇi sticks when a deer rushed at him and took the araṇi sticks away, carrying them on its horns. The Pāṇḍavas ran after the deer and they travelled far away from their place, still not getting scent of it. They were all tired and thirsty. Yudhiṣṭhira directed Nakula to climb on the top of a tree and investigate whether there was any water anywhere nearby. Nakula did so and reported that he could see a pond not far from the place where they were sitting. Yudhiṣṭhira asked Nakula to go and fetch water. Nakula did not return for a long time and Sahadeva was asked to go and enquire. Sahadeva also did not return and Arjuna was sent in search of them. When Arjuna did not return Bhīmasena went to enquire. Bhīmasena also did not return and finally Yudhiṣṭhira himself set out in search of them. On reaching the pond Yudhiṣṭhira was dumbfounded to see his brothers lying dead on the banks of the pond. Weeping bitterly Yudhiṣṭhira entered the pond and to his surprise he heard a voice from the air addressed to him thus: "Ho, Yudhiṣṭhira, I am a stork living on the small fishes of this pond. This pond is my hereditary property. It was I who killed your brothers. I will ask you certain questions. If you answer them correctly you can drink from this pond. If not, you will also die.

Dharmaputra:—"I do not believe that you are simply a bird. My brothers are renowned for their valour and have defeated not only the devas, dānavas, gandharvas and rākṣasas but also the four huge mountains like Himālaya Pāriyātra, Vindhya and Malaya. I am eager to know your true self who have slain such brave brothers of mine."

Yakṣa:—"I am a Yakṣa and not merely a bird. I objected to your brothers' taking water from the pond. But waving aside my objections they started taking water from the pond and then I slew them. Now, hear my questions: Who carries the Sun? Who are his followers? Who makes the sun set? On whom does the sun exist?"

Dharmaputra:—It is Brahman who carries the Sun. Devas are his followers. Dharma makes him set. He exists on Satya.

Yakṣa:—How does Mahāsiddhi come to he Śrotriyas? (those who study the Vedas).

Yudhiṣṭhira:—It happens by deep penance.

Yakṣa:—What is the reason for a brahmin getting divinity? What deed is equal to good conduct? What makes a brahmin mortal and what makes him evil?

Yudhiṣṭhira:—The Brahmin gets divinity by meditation. Austerity is equal to good conduct. Death makes a brahmin mortal and abusive words make him evil.

Yakṣa:—What is the divinity of Kṣatriyas? What is equal to good nature? What makes them mortal and what makes them evil?

Dharmaputra:—The divinity of a Kṣatriya is weapon. Sacrifice is equal to good conduct. Fear makes him mortal and non-sacrifice makes him evil.

Yakṣa:—What is the best thing for agriculture? What is the most important thing for agriculture? What are the installations of the atmosphere and child-birth?

Dharmaputra:—The best thing for agriculture is rain. The important thing for agriculture is seed. The installation of atmosphere is rays and that of child-birth is child.

Yakṣa:—Who is lifeless even though he breathes?

Dharmaputra:—He who never offers oblations to a deva, a guest or a servant is like the dead even though he breathes.

Yakṣa:—What is bigger than the earth? What is higher than the sky? What is swifter than the wind? What are greater in number than grass?

Dharmaputra:—Mother is bigger than the earth. Father is taller than the sky. Mind is swifter than the wind. Thoughts are greater in number than grass.

Yakṣa:—What is it that does not shut its eyes when asleep? What is it that does not grow after birth? What is heartless? What grows very quickly?

Dharmaputra:—A fish does not shut its eyes when asleep. An egg does not grow after its birth. A stone is heartless. A river grows very quickly.

Yakṣa:—Who is a friend to one who lives outside his country? Who is a friend to a householder, to a patient and to one dead?

Dharmaputra:—For one who leaves his country the friend he gets on his way is the best friend. To a householder his wife is his friend, to a patient his doctor and to one dead, charity.

Yakṣa:—Who is a guest of all? What is Nectar? What is spread throughout the world?

Dharmaputra:—Agni (fire) is the guest of all. Moon (Candra) is the nectar. Air is that which is spread throughout the world.

Yakṣa:—Who circles around solo? Who is born again? What is the remedy for cold? What gives the maximum yield?

Dharmaputra:—The Sun circles solo. Candra is born again. Fire is the remedy for cold. Earth gives the maximum yield.

Yakṣa:—What is the soul of Man? Who is the companion given by God? What is Upajīvana?
Dharmaputra:—The soul of Man is his son. The companion given by God is wife. Cloud is Upajīvana.
Yakṣa:—How do you become rich? How do you become happy ?
Dharmaputra:—If you abandon lust you will be rich. If you abandon desire you will be happy.
Yakṣa:—By what is this world covered? By what does the world become clear? By what does one lose his friend? What is the obstacle for an entry into heaven?
Dharmaputra:—Dullness covers the world. World becomes clear by intelligence. A friend is lost by desire. Domestic ties stand in the way of getting into heaven.
Yakṣa:—Who are those equal to the dead? Which country is dead?
Dharmaputra:—A poor penniless man is equal to the dead. The country where there is mob-rule is dead.
Yakṣa:—Who is a pandit? Who is an atheist? Who is wicked? What are lust and jealousy?
Dharmaputra:—A righteous man is a pandit. An atheist is wicked. Lust is the cause of worldly life. Jealousy is the cause of worry.
Yakṣa:—Though charity, wealth and lust are incompatible with each other when do they unite together ?
Dharmaputra:—When charity and wife compromise the above three blend together harmoniously.
The Yakṣa was highly pleased with the replies given by Dharmaputra. He then offered to revive one of his brothers and asked Dharmaputra to name whom he should do so. Then Yudhiṣṭhira named Nakula. Yakṣa then enquired why he had named Nakula leaving aside Arjuna and Bhīma. Dharmaputra replied that though Kuntī and Mādrī were two wives of Pāṇḍu they were both mothers to them and so he wanted to see one of the sons of Mādrī alive. He therefore pressed the name of Nakula again. The Yakṣa who was none other than Dharmadeva was immensely happy to hear that reply and gave life to all his brothers. He confessed to Yudhiṣṭhira that it was he who in the form of a deer came and ran away with the araṇi sticks. He returned the araṇi sticks also. Dharmadeva then advised them to go and spend their life incognito at the court of King Virāṭa blessing them with the assurance that they would never be found out during their life in disguise. Dharmadeva disappeared after this and the Pāṇḍavas returned to their āśrama. (Chapters 312 and 313 of Vana Parva, M.B.).

8) Ajñātavāsa (Life incognito). See under Arjuna.

9) Dharmaputra aad the great battle. Events relating to or involving Dharmaputra from the end of his life in disguise up to the end of the Mahābhārata battle are given below:

(1) Yudhiṣṭhira tried utmost to avoid war but when it was made clear that the Pāṇḍavas would not be given even an inch of land, he decided to fight. So Yudhiṣṭhira prepared for a war and camped on one side of the Kurukṣetra with his army. (Chapter 196, Udyoga Parva)

(2) Dharmaputra gave instructions to Arjuna to keep his army in vyūhas. (Śloka 6, Chapter 19, Bhīṣma Parva).

(3) Dharmaputra was sorry when he looked at the Kaurava army. (Śloka 3, Chapter 21, Bhīṣma Parva).

(4) Yudhiṣṭhira blew his conch Anantavijaya to announce the war. (Śloka 16, Chapter 25, Bhīṣma Parva).

(5) Yudhiṣṭhira sought permission from Bhīṣma to fight against the Kauravas. (Śloka 35, Chapter 43, Bhīṣma Parva).

(6) Yudhiṣṭhira bowed before Droṇācārya and sought permission to conduct the war. (Śloka 52, Chapter 43, Bhīṣma Parva).

(7) He sought permission from Kṛpācārya to fight the war. (Śloka 69, Chapter 43, Bhīṣma Parva)

(8) Yudhiṣṭhira went to Śalya and obtained his permission to conduct the war. (Śloka 78, Chapter 43, Bhīṣma Parva).

(9) Yudhiṣṭhira appealed to the warriors on the Kaurava side to join his army. Only Yuyutsu, responded to that beckoning and joined the Pāṇḍava's side. (Śloka 94, Chapter 43, Bhīṣma Parva).

(10) On the first day of the battle Dharmaputra fought a duel with Śalya. (Śloka 28, Chapter 45, Bhīṣma Parva).

(11) Yudhiṣṭhira constructed a Vajra Vyūha (an array in the shape of a diamond) with his army. (Śloka 22, Chapter 81, Bhīṣma Parva)

(12) Yudhiṣṭhira fought with fury and defeated Śrutāyus. (Śloka 8, Chapter 84, Bhīṣma Parva).

(13) Yudhiṣṭhira got defeated by Bhīṣma. (Śloka 2, Chapter 86, Bhīṣma Parva).

(14 Bhagadatta attacked Yudhiṣṭhira. (Śloka 84, Chapter 96, Bhīṣma Parva).

(15) He fought against Śakuni. (Śloka 11, Chapter 105, Bhīṣma Parva)

(16) Yudhiṣṭhira sought permission from Śrī Kṛṣṇa to kill Bhīṣma and he went straight to Bhīṣma himself and asked him how he should be killed. Yudhiṣṭhira attacked Bhīṣma as per the latter's instructions. (Chapter 107 to 115, Bhīṣma Parva).

(17) In the meantime Droṇācārya made a vow that he would capture Yudhiṣṭhira. So Yudhiṣṭhira thereafter, always kept Arjuna near at hand. (Śloka 3, Chapter 13, Droṇa Parva).

(18) Yudhiṣṭhira consoled his own army when Abhimanyu was slain. (Śloka 35, Chapter 49, Droṇa Parva).

(19) Yudhiṣṭhira attacked Śalya and Kṛtavarmā. (Chapters 95 and 97, Bhīṣma Parva).

(20) Yudhiṣṭhira was defeated in a fight with Droṇa. (Śloka 18, Chapter 106, Droṇa Parva).

(21) He fought against Duryodhana. (Śloka 15, Chapter 124, Droṇa Parva).

(22) He defeated Droṇācārya in another battle. (Śloka 27, Chapter 157, Droṇa Parva).

(23) He became moody when Ghaṭotkaca was killed. (Śloka 27, Chapter 183, Droṇa Parva).

(24) He made Karṇa swoon in a fight. (Śloka 21, Chapter 49, Karṇa Parva).

(25) He withdrew from the battlefield after having been defeated by Aśvatthāmā. (Śloka 38, Chapter 35, Karṇa Parva).

(26) Karṇa wounded Yudhiṣṭhira. (Śloka 33, Chapter 63, Karṇa Parva).

(27) Once Yudhiṣṭhira scolded Arjuna and the latter greatly offended started to go to the forests and then Yudhiṣṭhira himself appeased him. (Chapters 63, 70 and 71, Karṇa Parva).

(28) Yudhiṣṭhira slew Candrasena and Drumasena who were the guardians of Salya's Cakravyūha. (Śloka 52, Chapter 12, Śalya Parva).

(29) He slew Śalya (Śloka 51, Chapter, 17, Śalya Parva).

(30) He killed the younger brother of Śalya. (Śloka 64, Chapter 17, Śalya Parva).

(31) Duryodhana at this time went to a lake in Dvaipāyana and lay there immersed under water. Yudhiṣṭhira went there with an army and challenged him for a fight. (Śloka 18, Chapter 61, Śalya Parva).

(32) When Yudhiṣṭhira won the war he sent Śrī Kṛṣṇa to Hastināpura to console Gāndhārī. (Śloka 40, Chapter 62, Śalya Parva).

10) Yudhiṣṭhira is crowned King. When Yudhiṣṭhira won the war he sent Nakula to bring Pāñcālī. He went round the Kurukṣetra battle ground and saw his own kith and kin lying dead and the sight made him faint. After that he went to Dhṛtarāṣṭra. Gāndhārī cursed him for killing her sons. Gāndhārī gave a piercing look at the nails on the foot of Dharmaputra when he stood before Gāndhārī bowing down, Instantly the nails turned black. Yudhiṣṭhira gave Dhṛtarāṣṭra the names of all the prominent persons who were killed in the war. Dhṛtarāṣṭra ordered Yudhiṣṭhira to perform the obsequies of the dead. It was at this stage that Yudhiṣṭhira came to know from Kuntī that Karṇa was his brother. Yudhiṣṭhira wept bitterly when he knew the secret from his mother and cursed womankind as a whole stating that woman would thereafter be incapable of keeping a secret to herself. The news of the death of Karṇa gave a sudden mental turn-back to Yudhiṣṭhira and he decided to renounce all and go to the forest. He called aside his followers and announced his decision to them. At that time Vyāsa came there and preached to him about the perishable nature of life. Yudhiṣṭhira then asked him what he should do for the atonement of the sins committed. Though he strongly desired to go to the forest Vyāsa and Śrī Kṛṣṇa did not allow him to do so and sent them all to Hastināpura. When the Pāṇḍavas entered the city the people gave them a rousing reception and Yudhiṣṭhira was crowned King. (Chapters 10 to 17 of Sauptika Parva, Chapters 12 to 27 Strī Parva, Chapters 1 to 40 Śānti Parva).

11) Administration. When Yudhiṣṭhira became King, with the permission of Dhṛtarāṣṭra, he distributed the various administrative responsibilities among his brothers. He took for himself the task of taking care of their kith and kin and friends. He gave many gifts to the brahmins and other dependants. He once went to Śrī Kṛṣṇa to express his gratitude for him. He visited Bhīṣma lying on his bed of arrows accompanied by Śrī Kṛṣṇa and his brothers. Bhīṣma revealed to him the inner import of Rājadharma, Āpaddharma and Mokṣadharma. Receiving the blessings of Bhīṣma Yudhiṣṭhira and his brothers returned to Hastināpura. Yudhiṣṭhira went to the Himālayas to get riches from Marutta before performing an Aśvamedha Sacrifice. While on his way to the Himālayas he fasted for a night and worshipped Śiva. People like Vyāsa and Śrī Kṛṣṇa partook in the sacrifice. After the sacrifice was over Dhṛtarāṣṭra desired to go to forest and sought the approval of Yudhiṣṭhira to do so. On hearing that Yudhiṣṭhira wept. But on the advice of Vyāsa he gave his approval for Dhṛtarāṣṭra to go to forest. Dhṛtarāṣṭra appealed to him through Vidura for funds to perform the obsequies of the dead. Bhīma objected to this but Yudhiṣṭhira reprimanded him and silenced him and gave Dhṛtarāṣṭra enough funds for his purposes. Kuntī and Gāndhārī accompanied Dhṛtarāṣṭra to the forest. Yudhiṣṭhira accompanied by Pāñcālī and Sahadeva went and saw them in the forests after a few days. (Chapters 41 to 55, Śānti Parva, Chapters 92 from Anuśāsana Parva and Aśvamedha Parva and Chapter 26 from Āśramavāsika Parva).

12) Vidura merges into Dharmaputra. When Dhṛtarāṣṭra, Gāndhārī and Kuntī went to forest Vidura also accepted sannyāsa and left for the forest. There sitting under a tree he started doing penance. After a few days Yudhiṣṭhira came to the forest to see his mother and others. After spending some time with Dhṛtarāṣṭra, Gāndhārī and Kuntī he went to the place where Vidura was doing penance. Vidura started running the moment he set eyes on Yudhiṣṭhira and the latter ran after him. After some time Vidura turned back and stood staring at Yudhiṣṭhira. At that time the soul of Vidura escaping from his body merged with that of Yudhiṣṭhira. The body of Vidura stood stiff and leaned against a tree. Taking him to be dead Yudhiṣṭhira started to do the funeral rites and then there resounded a voice from heaven saying that Vidura was not dead. The unknown voice was from Dharmadeva. When the voice subsided Vidura became his old self again. Yudhiṣṭhira went back. (Chapter 26, Āśramavāsika Parva).

13) The end of Dharmaputra. Soon after his return from the forest Nārada came to Hastināpura and told him of the death of Dhṛtarāṣṭra, Kuntī and Gāndhārī in a wild fire in the forest. Lamenting deeply Yudhiṣṭhira performed the obsequies at Hastināpura. It was at this time that the Yādava dynasty perished and Dvārakā was sunk into the ocean. The Pāṇḍavas then crowned Parīkṣit as their successor and entrusted Yuyutsu with the administration of the State till Parīkṣit came of age. Vajra was appointed as chief of Indraprastha. The obsequies of Vāsudeva, Balarāma and Kṛṣṇa were performed at Hastināpura. Kṛpācārya was appointed as preceptor to Parīkṣit. After having made all such arrangements the Pāṇḍavas commenced their Mahāprasthāna. The five Pāṇḍavas and Pāñcālī started from Hastināpura. A dog also followed them. Yudhiṣṭhira walked ahead. On the way, one by one, Pāñcālī Sahadeva, Nakula, Arjuna and Bhīmasena fell dead. Alone with a dog to keep company, Yudhiṣṭhira reached a plateau on the top of the Himālayas and there Indra was waiting for him with a chariot. But Yudhiṣṭhira said that he would not come to heaven without his wife and brothers. He was then informed that they had already reached heaven. Yudhiṣṭhira insisted that the dog also should be taken to heaven which Indra blankly refused. But Yudhiṣṭhira refused to ascend the chariot without the dog which, he said, had given him company from the start to the finish. The dog then changed itself into Dharmadeva and he complimented him on his sense of justice. When Yudhiṣṭhira entered heaven he saw Duryodhana sitting in all luxury and glory. Yudhiṣṭhira did not like it, but Nārada pacified him. Yudhiṣṭhira saw all his relatives sitting there. A devadūta took him round hell also. When he heard the pitiable groans from there Yudhiṣṭhira thought his right place was with them. But Indra and Dharmadeva again consoled him. He was given a bath in Ākāśagaṅgā. He then lost his mortal form and his soul entered Divyaloka.

Standing in the form of Dharmadeva he saw all his relatives including Kṛṣṇa. (Chapters 38 and 39, Āśramavāsika Parva, Chapter 1, Mausala Parva; Mahāprasthānika Parva, Svargārohaṇa Parva).

14) Synonyms of Yudhiṣṭhira. Ājamīḍha, Ajātaśatru, Bhārata, Bhārataśārdūla, Bhāratapravara, Bharatarṣabha, Bhāratasattama, Bhāratasiṁha, Bhīmapūrvaja, Dharma, Dharmaja, Dharmanandana, Dharmaprabhava Dharmaputra, Dharmarāṭ, Dharmarāja, Dharmasuta, Kaunteya, Kaurava, Kauravaśreṣṭha, Kauravanandana, Kauravya, Kauravanātha, Kuntīnandana, Kuruśārdūla, Kuruśreṣṭha, Kurūdvaha, Kurukulodvaha, Kurumukhya, Kurunandana, Kurupāṇḍavāgrya, Kurupati, Kurupravīra, Kurupuṅgava, Kururāja, Kurusattama, Kurūttama, Kuruvardhana, Kuruvīra, Kuruvṛṣabha, Mṛdaṅgaketu, Pāṇḍava, Pāṇḍavaśreṣṭha, Pāṇḍavanandana, Pāṇḍaveya, Pāṇḍuputra, Pārtha and Yādavīmātā. All these words have been used to identify Yudhiṣṭhira in the Mahābhārata.

DHARMARĀJA. A king of Gauḍadeśa. He became King at a time when Jainism was getting more and more hold on the people and the Hindu Vedic rites were getting less and less popular among the people. The King thought it was his duty to revive the interest in the Vedic rites and so became a priest himself and did much propaganda on the superiority of the same, writing several books on the subject for the benefit of the people. (Bhaviṣyapurāṇa, Pratisarga Parva).

DHARMĀRAṆYA. A Brahmin. He had many children. The major portion of his life was spent in hard work to support his large family. After that he went in search of means to attain heaven. In his quest, he happened to reach the realm of Nāgas (serpents). He entered the house of a Nāga named Padmanābha. When he reached the house Padmanābha had been away carrying the chariot of the Sun. Dharmāraṇya sat outside the house and spent a few days in vow and meditation. Then Padmanābha returned. The Brāhmaṇa asked Padmanābha about the ways of attaining heaven. The Nāga replied that there was none superior to the Sun. The Brahmin accepted penance and lived in the hermitage of Cyavana for a few days. (M.B. Śānti Parva, 4 Chapters from 361).

DHARMĀRAṆYA(M). A forest which is a holy place. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Vana Parva Chapter 82 Stanza 46, that the moment one enters this forest one would become sinless. This place was once the capital of the King named Asūtarajasa. See under Kuśa I).

DHARMARATHA. A king of the family of Aṅgarāja. He was the great grandfather of Lomapāda and the son of Draviratha. (Chapter 277, Agni Purāṇa).

DHARMASAKHA. A king of the Kekaya line of Kings. He had a hundred wives but no children. At last, at an old age, he got a son of Sucandrā, wife of his elder brother. But the hunderd wives of Dharmasakha were pining for having a son and so the king consulted his ministers and on their advice conducted a Putrakāmeṣṭi yajña (a sacred sacrificial ceremony for obtaining children) at Hanūmatkuṇḍa near the southern sea-coast. As a result of that each of his hundred wives got a child. (Skanda Purāṇa, Chapter 15).

DHARMAŚARMĀ I. A brahmin who was born a parrot named Kañjala in his rebirth. Dharmaśarmā was one of the three sons of an eminent Brahmin called Vidyādhara. His other two sons were Vasuśarmā and Nāmaśarmā. While both his brothers became great scholars Dharmaśarmā never studied anything and became a muff. His father was greatly worried on account of this. Dharmaśarmā never heeded the advice of his father and went about in bad company ruining himself. Years went by and Dharmaśarmā became old.

One day Dharmaśarmā was sitting repentant in a temple sadly pondering over his past when a siddha came to the temple. Watching him Dharmaśarmā saw him go and sit in a lonely place for meditation with his eyes shut. Dharmaśarmā went and stood near him very respectfully. When the Siddha opened his eyes after some time he saw Dharmaśarmā standing before him and then the Siddha made enquiries about Dharmaśarmā. The latter then requested the Siddha to give him instructions to acquire the supreme knowledge. The Siddha then gave him Jñānopadeśa (advice on knowledge) and Dharmaśarmā soon became a Siddha himself. He then started on a pilgrimage and on the way he got a parrot. He took care of the bird just like his son and loved it very affectionately. One day when Dharmaśarmā was away from the place to collect fruits for his food a cat caught and ate the parrot. Greatly grief-stricken Dharmaśarmā wept bitterly and ran about like a mad man. After some days he died and because at the time of death he was thinking about the parrot he was born a parrot in his next birth. The jñānopadeśa of the siddha was still lingering in him while he died and so even in his life as a parro the never lost the jñāna he had acquired in his previous life. (Chapter 122, Padma Purāṇa).

DHARMAŚARMĀ II. See under Śivaśarmā.

DHARMASĀVARṆI. The eleventh Manu. (See under Manvantara).

DHARMASVA. A Brahmin. Once this Brahmin was coming home with water from the Ganges. On the way he saw Kāpakalpa, the servant of merchant Ratnākara, being killed by an ox. Though Kāpakalpa was a sinner, his end aroused pity in the heart of the Brahmin. So he sprinkled the Ganges-water on the body of Kāpakalpa, who instantly regained life and energy. The Brahmin who saw the power of Ganges-water began to worship the Ganges from that day onwards. It is mentioned in Padma Purāṇa, Kriyā Khaṇḍa, Chapter 7, that finally the Brahmin got a boon from the Ganges that only uttering the name of the Ganges should he meet with death.

DHARMATĪRTHA I. A holy place of ancient Bhārata. If a man bathes in a pond there, he would be absolved of all sins. (Śloka 1, Chapter 84, Vana Parva).

DHARMATĪRTHA II. Another holy place of ancient Bhārata. If a person bathes in a pond there he would get the benefit of performing a Vājapeya Sacrifice (Śloka 162, Chapter 84, Vana Parva).

DHARMAVARṆA. A Brahmin who lived in the country of Ānarta at the end of Kaliyuga. Once when he went to the land of the dead, he saw his fathers hanging by the end of darbha. They requested Dharmavarṇa to marry and obtain sons who would get them relief from their plight. Dharmavarṇa married and as soon as he got a son he went to the forest of Gandhamādana to practise penance there. (Chapters 2, 17 and 22, Skanda Purāṇa).

DHARMAVATĪ. A wife of Dharmadeva. He got of Dharmavatī a daughter Dharmavṛtā. Dharmavṛtā was married to Marīci, son of Brahmā. (See under Gayātīrtha).

DHARMAVṚTĀ. A daughter of Dharmadeva. (See under Gayātīrtha).

DHARMAVYĀDHA. Though he was born in the caste of foresters he became a saint by following the path of duty and righteousness. In his previous birth he was a Brahmin. He was a friend of a king who was an adept in archery. Once both went on hunting expedition to the forest. The brahmin sent an arrow at a wild animal but the arrow went and struck a sage who was doing penance under a tree. When the sage was rolling on the arrow he said: "Oh, evil-natured Brāhmaṇa, may you be born as a hunter selling flesh in your next life." The Brahmin went and apologised to the sage and craved for pardon. Taking pity on him the sage consoled him by saying that though he would be born as such, he would be a great scholar and attain mokṣa by doing his duty without even once wavering from it.

The Brahmin was born a hunter in the country of Mithilā. He took to looking after his parents as a vow and soon became a top-ranking righteous man. He did his duty to which he was born. He sold meat and earned a living. He never killed or butchered an animal. One day a Brahmin named Kauśika was doing penance sitting under a tree when a crane perched on the top of its branches defiled the Brahmin's head with its droppings. The Brahmin in rage looked up and his powerful stare burnt the crane and it fell down dead. Leaving that place some time later he went to a house to beg. The house-wife informed him that he would be given alms only after attending to her husband. The Brahmin was not pleased with her reply. Seeing that she added "Please do not look at me like that. I am no crane. To me my husband is supreme."

The Brahmin was taken aback when he heard the lady mention the incident of the crane. The lady explained to him that all her powers were due to her devotion to her husband and advised the Brahmin to go and meet Dharmavyādha of Mithilā to remove the egoism in him. Obeying her instructions Kauśika went and accepted Dharmavyādha as his guru. The learned hunter then spoke to Kauśika about Varṇadharmas, Śiṣṭācāras, hiṁsā and ahiṁsā, Mīmāṁsā relating to dharma and karma, the importance and glory of Brahmavidyā, the significance of the control of the senses, Triguṇas, Prāṇavāyu, service to father and mother and many such other things. The egoism of Kauśika was removed and he returned home. Devoted to his parents he attained heaven. (Chapters 27 to 33, Vana Parva).

DHARMĀYU. A king of the Pūru family. His father was Raudrāśva, the son of Pūru and his mother was a celestial woman Miśrakeśī. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 94, Stanza 11).

DHĀRṢṬAVAṀŚA. A particular family of kings of the Ikṣvāku Dynasty. This family originated from Dhṛṣṭa the brother of Ikṣvāku. So this family is called Dhārṣṭavaṁśa (Devī Bhāgavata, Skandha 7).

DHĀTĀ I.

1) General information. One of the twelve Ādityas. (See Dvādaśādityas and Āditya).

2) Other details: (1) At the burning of Khāṇḍava forest among the gods who came against Śrī Kṛṣṇa and Arjuna, there was Dhātā also. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 266, Stanza 34).

(2) Dhātā gave Subrahmaṇya five followers named Kunda, Kusuma, Kumuda, Ḍaṁbara and Āḍaṁbara as gift. (M.B. Śalya Parva, Chapter 45 Stanza 39).

DHĀTĀ II. It is seen in Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Aṁśa 1, Chapter 10, that two sons named Dhātā and Vidhātā and a daughter Lakṣmī were born to Bhṛgu, the son of Brahmā, by his wife Khyāti. Of them Dhātā and Vidhātā married Āyati and Niyati, the daughters of Meru. Lakṣmī became the wife of Mahāviṣṇu.

DHĀTREYIKĀ. A maid of Pāñcālī during the time of the forest life of the Pāṇḍavas. It was this maid who informed the Pāṇḍavas that Jayadratha had kidnapped Pāñcālī. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 269, Stanza 16).

DHĀTU(S). (Minerals). To understand the Purāṇic stories regarding the origin of iron, copper, tin etc. see under Irump (iron).

DHAUMRA. An ancient hermit. He was one of the hermits who visited Bhīṣma in his bed of arrows. (M.B. Śānti Parva, Chapter 47, Stanza 11).

DHAUMYA I. A hermit.

1) General information. This hermit was the younger brother of Devala, a hermit. The Pāṇḍavas, who escaped from burning in the Lākṣā house, reached the banks of the Ganges when this hermit was performing penance in the holy tīrtha of Utkoca. Arjuna defeated Citraratha, a Gandharva. After that Citraratha and Arjuna became friends. The gandharva advised him that a priest was unavoidable and that the Pāṇḍavas should accept the hermit Dhaumya who was doing penance in the Utkocatīrtha as their priest. Accordingly the Pāṇḍavas accepted Dhaumya as their priest. From that day onwards in everything the Pāṇḍavas did, Dhaumya was their priest. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 182).

2) Other details. (1) After the Svayaṁvara of Pāñcālī, Dhaumya performed the marriage ceremony for each of the Pāṇḍavas from Dharmaputra to Sahadeva separately with Pāñcālī. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 197).

(2) When sons were born to the Pāṇḍavas, Dhaumya performed the rites of investiture etc. with the Brahma string etc. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 220, Stanza 87).

(3) Dhaumya was the chief priest who performed the rites of sacrifice at the Rājasūya of Yudhiṣṭhira. He anointed Yudhiṣṭhira as King. (M.B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 53, Stanza 10).

(4) When the Pāṇḍavas started for forest life, Dhaumya walked in front of them with Kuśa grass in his hands, singing Yamasāma and Rudrasāma songs. (M.B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 80, Stanza 8).

(5) Once Dhaumya talked about the attributes of the Sun and advised Dharmaputra to worship the Sun. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 3).

(6) In the forest Dhaumya rendered powerless the illusive and magical arts of Kirmīra, an asura (demon). (Mahābhārata, Vana parva, Chapter 11, Stanza 20).

(7) Dhaumya described to Dharmaputra the importance of several holy tīrthas or Baths. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapters 87 to 90).

(8) On another occasion Dhaumya described to Dharmaputra the motions of the Sun and the Moon and the positions of Viṣṇu and Brahmā. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 163).

(9) When Jayadratha had stolen Pāñcālī, Dhaumya blamed him and tried to recover Pāñcālī. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 238, Stanza 26).

(10) Dhaumya advised the Pāṇḍavas how to preserve pseudonymity in the capital of Virāṭa. (M.B. Virāṭa Parva, Chapter 4).

(11) When the Pāṇḍavas started their life incognito Dhaumya performed the rite of Agniṣṭoma and uttered the Veda mantras for their prosperity, recovery of kingdom and victory in the world etc. When they started Dhaumya took the fire with oblations and went to the country of Pāñcāla. (M.B. Virāṭa Parva, Chapter 4, Stanza 54).

(12) After the bhārata battle, Dhaumya performed the funeral ceremonies, offerings etc. of the relatives of the Pāṇḍavas. (M.B. Strī Parva, Chapter 24).

(13) After Dharmaputra was anointed King, Dhaumya disclosed to him the secrets of righteousness. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 127, Stanza 15).

DHAUMYA II. In the Purāṇas we see another hermit with the name Dhaumya. In Mahābhārata, Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 14, Stanza 112, it is mentioned that this hermit was the brother and teacher of hermit Upamanyu. He had been keeping contact with Dyumatsena, the father of Satyavān. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 298, Stanza 19). Other names such as Ayodha Dhaumya, Āyodha Dhaumya, Apodhadhaumya, Āpodhadhaumya etc. are used for this Dhaumya, (For details see under Ayodhadhaumya).

DHAUTAMŪLAKA. A king born of a dynasty of China. (Mahābhārata, Udyoga Parva, Chapter 74, Stanza 14).

DHAVALAGIRI. (ŚVETA PARVATA). A mountain. Arjuna once encamped in this mountain. (Mahābhārata, Sabhā Parva, Chapter 27, Stanza 29).

DHENU. See under Surabhi.

DHENUKA.

1) General information. A fierce Rākṣasa (giant) with the figure of a donkey. He lived in the forest of Kālī (Tāla). People did not dare to pass by that way fearing this giant. Hearing about him, Śrī Kṛṣṇa and his elder brother Balabhadra Rāma went to the forest. There were several palm trees in the forest, the fruits of which they shook with force. Hearing the noise Dhenuka ran to them. Balabhadra and Śrī Kṛṣṇa beat the giant to death.

2) Other details. (1) In Bhāgavata, Skandha 10, it is stated that Pralambaka, Cāṇūra, Tṛṇāvarta, Muṣṭika, Ariṣṭaka, Keśi, Dhenuka and others were the followers of Kaṁsa.

(2) In Bhāgavata, Skandha 10, there is another story that while Balabhadra Rāma, Śrī Kṛṣṇa and the other cowherds were looking after the cows an asura entered into the midst of the flock, in the shape of a cow (Dhenu). Rāma and Kṛṣṇa saw him, struck him against a tree and killed him.

DHENUKAM. An ancient country in Bhārata. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 50, Stanza 51).

DHENUKĀŚRAMA. A holy place. Once the god of Death Yama took the shape of a man and did penance in this place. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 54, Stanza 8).

DHENUTĪRTHA. A holy place. If gingelly (tila) is offered as gift in this holy place, one would get redemption from all sins. (Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 84, Stanza 87)

DHĪMĀN. Second son of Purūravas. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 75, Stanza 24).

DHĪRADHĪ. A brahmin devotee of Śiva. He lived in Kāśī. Because he meditated on Śiva alone, Śiva was pleased with him and helped him in various ways. The gaṇas of Śiva were amazed at Śiva's partiality for Dhīradhī. Paramaśiva told them the story of the former birth of Dhīradhī. "This Brahmin was a swan in his former life. Once he was flying over a lake when he became tired and fell down. His colour became black. Then Kamalinī, another swan who dwelt in the same lake told him to recite the tenth Chapter of Gītā, and to meditate on Śiva. Because the swan did that holy act, he was born a Brahmin in his next birth. Though he was a Brahmin in his previous birth, he kicked his teacher and for that fault he had to take birth as a swan. Later, because of the love of Śiva, Dhīradhī attained heaven. (Padma Purāṇa, Uttara Khaṇḍa, Chapter 184).

DHĪROṢṆI. A god concerned with Śrāddha (offering to the manes). (Mahābhārata, Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 9, Stanza 32).

DHIṢAṆĀ. The wife of Havirdhāna born in the dynasty of the emperor Pṛthu. Dhiṣaṇā was born from fire. (Six sons, Prācīnabarhis, Śukra, Gaya, Kṛṣṇa, Vraja and Ajina, were born to Havirdhāna by his wife Dhiṣaṇā born of fire. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 18).

DHṚṢṬA. A son of Vaivasvata Manu. Ikṣvāku, Nabhāga, Dhṛṣṭa, Śaryāti, Nariṣyanta, Prāṁśu. Nṛga, Diṣṭa, Karūṣa and Pṛṣadhra were the sons of Vaivasvata Manu. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 8).

DHṚṢṬABUDDHI. A Vaiśya who attained heaven by performing the fast of Vaiśākha Vrata. He lived in the country of Bhadrāvatī, on the bank of the River Sarasvatī. The name of the king of the country was Dhṛtimān. Dhanapāla, a Vaiśya of that country had five sons: Sumanas, Dyutimān, Medhāvī, Sukṛta and Dhṛṣṭabuddhi. The last of them turned out to be a wicked man. Going after many women, keeping company with wicked people, gambling, wandering about in search of harlots, not venerating Gods, Manes or Brāhmaṇas, wasting the money of his father, eating untouchable food, drinking liquor and such other acts, he indulged in. Once he was seen walking in the street with his hand on the shoulder of a harlot. So his father turned him out of the house. He was discarded by his relatives too. He sold the ornaments he had on his body. When that was finished the harlots also evaded him. He became a destitute having no money or clothes. When he became tired with hunger and thirst he began stealing in that city. The King's men caught him. They chained him and scourged him. Finally, he went to the forest and with a bow and arrows he lived by hunting.

Dhṛṣṭabuddhi happened to reach the hermitage of Kauṇḍinya. It was the month of Vaiśākha. While Kauṇḍinya was coming from the Ganges, having taken bath, a drop of water fell on Dhṛṣṭabuddhi from the wet cloth of the hermit, and consequently his sins were washed off. He fell before the hermit and requested him to instruct him in the way of attaining heaven.

The hermit advised him to observe the fast of Vaiśākhaśuklaikādaśī known as Mohinī. Accordingly he observed the fast and became sinless. Invested with a divine form he entered the realm of Viṣṇu. (Padma Purāṇa, Uttara Khaṇḍa, Chapter 51).

DHṚṢṬADYUMNA. The son of King Drupada. He was brother of Pāñcālī.

1) Birth. Drupada and Droṇa were fellow students. After finishing his education Drupada became King. When Droṇa came to his palace Drupada did not honour him. Droṇa got angry, went to Hastināpura and began to teach the Pāṇḍava and the Kaurava princes in archery and other weapons. When the weapon-training was over, Arjuna, at the instruction of Droṇa, defeated and captured Drupada. Droṇa seized half of his kingdom from him.

As Drupada was not powerful to wreak vengeance on Droṇa, he performed a sacrifice to obtain a son who could take revenge on Droṇa and regain his lost prestige. A son and a daughter were born from the sacrificial fire. The son was named Dhṛṣṭadyumna. The daughter grew up and became the famous Pāñcālī. The Pāṇḍavas married her.

At the time of birth, Dhṛṣṭadyumna had a crown on his head, and armour on his body, bow, arrows and sword in his hands. He ran out of the fire into a chariot and sat in it as if he were about to begin a travel of conquest. Seeing this the Pāñcālas were filled with joy. There was a celestial voice: "This boy will destroy the fear of the Pāñcālas. He is born to slay Droṇa." At this time the queen approached the sacrificing priest with a request that the children born of the sacrificial fire should consider her as their mother. Accordingly the children accepted the wife of Drupada as their mother. Brāhmaṇas named the boy Dhṛṣṭadyumna and the girl Kṛṣṇā.[2] (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 166). (For more particulars see under 'Pāñcālī' Para 2).

2) Till the battle of Bhārata. The history of Dhṛṣṭadyumna till the battle between the Pāṇḍavas and the Kauravas, is given below.

The news that Dhṛṣṭadyumna was born to kill Droṇa spread everywhere. The Broad-minded Droṇa did not seem to mind this news. Droṇa took Dhṛṣṭadyumna to his house, with the permission of Drupada and gave him training in the wielding of weapons. He believed that God's will could not be thwarted. After he had learned archery Dhṛṣṭadyumna returned to his kingdom. Next, we see Dhṛṣṭadyumna at the svayaṁvara (marriage) of Pāñcāli. Several kings arrived from various countries on that occasion. When the auspicious moment came, Dhṛṣṭadyumna brought Pāñcālī to the nuptial dais. He proclaimed the rules and conditions that the competitors of Svayaṁvara had to observe. After that he conversed with each king who was present. In the Svayaṁvara Pāñcālī accepted Arjuna. The Pāṇḍavas and Pāñcālī were given the Kumbhakāra mandira (the Palace of Kumbhakāra) which stood in the city of Drupada, to stay for that night. Though the Pāṇḍavas were in the guise of Brāhmaṇas, Dhṛṣṭadyumna had his own doubts about their identity. So he hid himself somehwere in the Palace and kept an eye on them. This shows his peculiar trait of observation. After this he returned to his Palace and pacified his father who had been much worried about his daughter's selection.

Next, we see Dhṛṣṭadyumna, during the time of the forest life of the Pāṇḍavas. He consoled Pāñcālī, who was miserable. After that he took the sons of Pāñcālī, to his house. While the Pāṇḍavas were living in the forest 'Kāmyaka', Dhṛṣṭadyumna visited them. The forest life of the Pāṇḍavas came to an end. A battle between the Pāṇḍavas and the Kauravas became inevitable. Then the Pāṇḍavas selected Dhṛṣṭadyumna, as the commander-in-general of their army. He ordered for a general parade of the army and gave them instructions. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapters 166 to 195; the whole of Sabhā Parva; Vana Parva, Chapters, 12, 22 and 51; Virāṭa Parva, Chapter 72; Udyoga Parva, Chapters 50, 157, 163 and 164).

3) Dhṛṣṭadyumna in the Bhārata-battle The part played by Dhṛṣṭadyumna in the battle is given below:

(1) In the first day's battle Dhṛṣṭadyumna confronted Droṇa. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 45, Stanza 31).
(2) Fought with Bhīṣma. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 47, Stanza 31).
(3) On the second day of the battle he formed the disposition of the army called the 'Krauñcāruṇavyūha' (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 50, Stanza 42).
(4) A terrible fight ensued between Droṇa and Dhṛṣṭadyumna (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 53).
(5) He fought with Aśvatthāmā (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 61, Stanza 19).
(6) He killed Damana the son of Paurava. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 61, Stanza 20).
(7) He killed the son of Śalya. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 61, Stanza 29).
(8) He fought with Śalya and was wounded. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 62, Stanza 8).
(9) He formed the disposition called the 'Makara Vyūha'. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 75, Stanza 4).
(10) He shot the missile called Pramohana (the arrow of fainting) and the Kauravas swooned. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 77, Stanza 45).
(11) He was defeated by Droṇa (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 77, Stanza 69).
(12) He defeated Duryodhana. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 82, Stanza 53).
(13) He fought with Vinda and Aravinda. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 86, Stanza 61).
(14) He fought with Kṛtavarmā. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 110, Stanza 9).
(15) He again fought with Bhīṣma. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 114, Stanza 39).
(16) There was a combat with Droṇa again. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 7, Stanza 48).
(17) He fought with Suśarmā. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 14, Stanza 37).
(18) He fought with Durmukha. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 23, Stanza 4).
(19) He killed Candravarmā and Bṛhatkṣatra, King of Niṣadha. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 35, Stanza 65).

1. The fast taken on the eleventh day of the bright lunar fortnight in the month of Vaiśākha.

2. Because he was born with Dhṛṣṭatva (boldness) amarṣatva (impatience) and dyumna (vigour) the son of Drupada was called Dhṛṣṭadyumna. Draupadi was called Kṛṣṇa as she was of Kṛṣṇa varṇa (dark complexion. Thus Drupada got two children from 'Makha' (sacrifice).

(20) He made Droṇa swoon by shooting arrows at him and got into his chariot and sat there. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 122, Stanza 56).
(21) In the fight which continued Droṇa defeated Dhṛṣṭadyumna. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 122, Stanza 71).
(22) In the fight with Aśvatthāmā, Dhṛṣṭadyumna was defeated. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 160, Stanza 41).
(23) He killed Drumasena. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 170, Stanza 22).
(24) He was defeated by Karṇa. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 173, Stanza 7).
(25) He vowed that he would kill Droṇa, (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 186, Stanza 46).
(26) In the fight that followed he cut off the head of Droṇa. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 192, Stanza 62).
(27) Following this, he annihilated the elephants of the Kauravas and made Kṛtavarmā swoon. (M.B. Karṇa Parva, Chapter 22).
(28) He fought with Karṇa. (M.B. Karṇa Parva, Chapter 59, Stanza 7).
(29) In the fight with Aśvatthāmā, the Kauravas caught Dhṛṣṭadyumna alive. (M.B. Karṇa Parva, Chapter 59, Stanza 39).
(30) He happened to enter the camp of Duśśāsana but escaped. (M.B. Karṇa Parva, Chapter 61, Stanza 33).
(31) In the night, while Dhṛṣṭadyumna was sleeping Aśvatthāmā kicked him to death. (M.B. Sauptika Parva, Stanza 26).
(32) The funeral of Dhṛṣṭadyumna was conducted according to rites. (M.B. Strī Parva, Chapter 26, Stanza 34).
(33) The Pāṇḍavas conducted mourning and offering to the deified ancestors for Dhṛṣṭadyumna (M.B. Strī Parva, Chapter 42, Stanza 4).
(34) After death the spirit of Dhṛṣṭadyumna was absorbed in the Fire-God. (M.B. Svargārohaṇa Parva, Chapter 5, Stanza 21).

4) Names. In Bhārata, the names, Draupada, Droṇahantā, Pāñcāla, Pāñcāladāyāda, Pāñcālakulavardhana, Pāñcālamukhya, Pāñcālaputra, Pāñcālarāṭ, Pāñcālarāja, Pāñcālya, Pārṣada, Yajñasenāsuta, Yājñaseni etc. are used as synonyms of Dhṛṣṭadyumna.

DHṚṢṬAKARMĀ. A king of the Yayāti family, (Bhāgavata, Skandha 9).

DHṚṢṬAKETU I. A prince who was the son of Dhṛṣṭadyumna and the grandson of King Drupada. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 278).

DHṚṢṬAKETU II. A king of the family of Yayāti. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 9).

DHṚṢṬAKETU III. The son of Śiśupāla, the King of Cedi. The details obtained from Mahābhārata about this King are given below.
(1) Dhṛṣṭaketu was the rebirth of Anuhlāda, the son of Hiraṇyakaśipu. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 67, Stanza 7).
(2) Dhṛṣṭaketu was anointed as King after the death of Śiśupāla. (M.B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 45, Stanza 36).
(3) After the death of his father, Dhṛṣṭaketu became a tributary King of the Pāṇḍavas (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 12, Stanza 2).
(4) Dhṛṣṭaketu had a sister named Kareṇumatī. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 22, Stanza 40).
(5) During the Bhārata-battle, Dhṛṣṭaketu supplied the Pāṇḍavas with an akṣauhiṇī (21870 elephants, 21870 chariots, 65610 horses and 109350 infantry). (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 19, Stanza 7).

(7) On the first day of the battle of Bhārata, Dhṛṣṭaketu, confronted Bāhlika. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 45)
(8) He fought with Bhūriśravas. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 84).
(9) Dhṛṣṭaketu fought with Paurava. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 116, Stanza 13).
(10) Dhṛṣṭaketu fought with the teacher Kṛpa. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 14, Stanza 33).
(11) He fought with Ambaṣṭha. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 25).
(12) He killed Vīradhanvā. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 107, Stanza 17).
(13 He fought with the teacher Droṇa and was killed in the fight. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 125, Stanza 23).
(14) Among the spirits of those relatives of the Kauravas, who died in the Bhārata-battle, which were evoked to the surface of the Ganges, by Vyāsa, the spirit of Dhṛṣṭaketu also appeared. (M.B. Āśramavāsika Parva, Chapter 33, Stanza 11).
(15) After his death Dhṛṣṭaketu became a Viśvadeva in heaven. (M.B. Svargārohaṇa Parva, Chapter 5, Stanza 15).
(16) Vyāsa has used the following names in his Bhārata for Dhṛṣṭaketu: Caidya, Cedija, Cedipati, Cedipuṅgava, Cedirāṭ, Śaiśupāli, Śiśupālātmaja.

DHṚṢṆU I. The second son of Vaivasvata Manu. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 75, Stanza 15).

DHṚṢṆU II. A Prajāpati who was the son of Kavi. He was learned in Vedas. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 85, Stanza 133).

DHṚṢṬI. One of the eight ministers of Daśaratha. Jayanta, Dhṛṣṭi, Vijaya, Asiddhārtha, Arthasādhaka, Aśoka, Mantrapāla and Sumantra were the eight ministers of Daśaratha. (Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa, Sarga 7).

DHṚTADEVĀ. Daughter of King Devaka. Vasudeva married this princess. Viprṣṭha was the son born to the couple. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 9).

DHṚTAKETU. A king of the Bhṛgu family. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 9).

DHṚTARĀṢṬRA. I. Father of the Kauravas.
1) Genealogy. (See the genealogy of Arjuna).
2) Birth. Śantanu, a king of the Lunar dynasty, had two wives Gaṅgā and Satyavatī. Gāṅgā gave birth to eight sons. But seven of them were thrown into the river Gaṅgā. Giving the eighth son Bhīṣma to Śantanu Gaṅgā disappeared. Śantanu then married Satyavatī, a fisher-woman. Satyavatī gave birth to two sons, Citrāṅgada and Vicitravīrya. When Śantanu grew old, Citrāṅgada was anointed as King, as Bhīṣma had taken Brahmavrata (vow of celibacy). Once when Citrāṅgada went to the forest for hunting, a Gandharva of the name Citrāṅgada killed him. So Vicitravīrya became the King of Hastināpura. Bhīṣma took the three daughters of the King of Kāśi, Ambā, Ambikā and Ambālikā by force into his chariot and brought the last two, to Hastināpura to be given as wives to Vicitravīrya. On the way he sent Ambā back. Vicitravīrya married Ambikā and Ambālikā. But shortly after that he also died, before any children were born to him. Fearing that the Lunar dynasty would come to an end, Satyavatī brought her son Vedavyāsa, who was born to her from hermit Parāśara, before her marriage, to Hastināpura. In the night Satyavatī sent Ambikā adorned with ornaments and costly garments, to the bedroom of Vyāsa. But she could not bear to lie with Vyāsa who was clad in barks of the tree and wearing matted hair. Still thinking that it was not right on her part to stand against the wish of her mother, she approached Vyāsa and lay with him with closed eyes. Ambikā became pregnant. The child she gave birth to, was blind. That child was Dhṛtarāṣṭra. Next night Ambālikā approached Vyāsa. When she saw Vyāsa she turned pale at his uncouth figure and her face became bloodless. So the child born to her was pale and was called Pāṇḍu. Next night the maid of the queen approached Vyāsa with a joyful heart and so she got Vidura as son, who was extremely wise and intelligent. Thus Dhṛtarāṣṭra, Pāṇḍu and Vidura became sons of the same father.[1] (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapters, 63 and 105).

3) Up to marriage. After the birth of Dhṛtarāṣṭra Vyāsa returned to forest and since then Bhīṣma stood in place of father to the children. Bhīṣma performed 'Upanayana' (investiture with Brahma-string) and other rites of the children. Dhṛtarāṣṭra, Pāṇḍu and Vidura had their education in Hastināpura. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 108).

"Dhṛtarāṣṭra, Pāṇḍu and the wise Vidura
The three were brought up as sons by Bhīṣma,
They became well educated, cultured aud devotional, Respectful towards vows and fasts, and of good physique, earnest in work
And they became valiant youths.
Learned the Vedas and Veda of archery,
Clubbing, shield and swords play,
Elephant-keeping, laws of chastisement,
Veda śāstras, allied works and epics and the Purāṇas,
Pāṇḍu came out expert archer,
Dhṛtarāṣṭra the strongest of all.
None in the three worlds was equal to Vidura,
In wisdom and knowledge and righteousness."
(M.B.Ādi Parva, Chapter 109).

Because of his blindness Dhṛtarāṣṭra was not anointed as King. It is stated in M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 108 Stanza 25, that in the place of Dhṛtarāṣṭra, Pāṇḍu was anointed the King.

4) Marriage and birth of children. Dhṛtarāṣṭra came of marriageable age. Bhīṣma had heard about Gāndhārī, daughter of Subala, the King of Gāndhāra, as a beautiful damsel of good qualities. Moreover she had acquired a boon from Śiva that hundred sons would be born to her. Bhīṣma sent a messenger to Subala with a request to give Gāndhārī as wife to Dhṛtarāṣṭra. Subala was not much pleased at the aspect of getting a blind man as son-in-law. Still he thought of the prestige his family would get by a marriage alliance with the kings of the Pūru Dynasty, and finally agreed. Gāndhārī submitted to the will of her father, and to live with a husband who was blind. She tied her eyes with a cloth. Śakuni the son of Subala brought Gāndhārī to Hastināpura, and gave her to Dhṛtarāṣṭra. With the sanction of Bhīṣma their marriage took place.

Once Gāndhārī feasted Vyāsa who came tired with hunger and thirst. The hermit was pleased with her and blessed her to have hundred sons. Gāndhārī became pregnant. But even after two years no delivery took place. She crushed her womb by force and a lump of flesh came out. At that time Vyāsa came there. He cut the lump into hundred pieces and kept them in ghee-pots. Gandhārī had a desire to get a daughter also. Vyāsa who had known it had cut the lump in such a way that there was a small piece in excess. The pots broke by themselves in due course and hundred sons and a daughter were born. The daughter was named Duśśalā. A son named Yuyutsu also was born to Dhṛtarāṣṭra of a Vaiśya woman. Duryodhana was the eldest of the hundred sons. The children grew up. Duśśalā was given in marriage to Jayadratha, the King of Sindhu. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapters 109 to 116).

5) Till Bhārata-battle. At this juncture Pāṇḍu incurred a curse from a hermit that he would die if his wife touched him. With that Pāṇḍu retired to forest with his wives. Dhṛtarāṣṭra was grieved at the separation of his brother. Pāṇḍu died in the forest and Mādrī jumped into fire and died with her husband. Dhṛtarāṣṭra asked Vidura to perform their cremation rites. After that Yudhiṣṭhira became King. The Pāṇḍavas became more and more prosperous. This made the heart of Dhṛtarāṣṭra cloudy. He gave sanction to Duryodhana to transfer the Pāṇḍavas to the lac house in Vāraṇāvata. The lac house caught fire and it was rumoured that the Pāṇḍavas died in the lac house fire, and Dhṛtarāṣṭra shed crocodile tears, and ordered for the mourning and oblations to be performed. After the marriage of Pāñcālī, it came to be known that the Pāṇḍavas were alive and that they were living with Drupada. Dhṛtarāṣṭra recalled them and gave them half of the country. The Pāṇḍavas made Indraprastha their capital and began to rule the kingdom. Yudhiṣṭhira performed the sacrifice of Rājasūya (royal consecration). Dhṛtarāṣṭra also took part in the sacrifice.

Duryodhana wanted to challenge Yudhiṣṭhira to a game of dice. Dhṛtarāṣṭra agreed but advised Duryodhana not to live in enmity with the Pāṇḍavas. The game of dice was played, and Yudhiṣṭhira lost everything the Pāṇḍavas had. Dhṛtarāṣṭra called Pāñcālī and told her that she might ask any boon. She requested that her husband Dharmaputra might be exempted from servitude and the Pāṇḍavas made free. Dhṛtarāṣṭra compelled her to ask for more boons. She replied that according to law Vaiśyas were eligible for one boon, Kṣatriya women two boons, Kings three boons and Brāhmaṇas hundred boons, and since she had already taken two boons, she wanted no more. Dhṛtarāṣṭra who was pleased at this reply gave the Pāṇḍavas freedom and returned all their lost wealth.

Duryodhana wanted to challenge the Pāṇḍavas for a game of dice again. Dhṛtarāṣṭra agreed. This time also Yudhiṣṭhira lost the game. The Pāṇḍavas who had lost everything, were ordered to go to forest for twelve years and to live incognito for one year. The Pāṇḍavas went to the forest with Pāñcālī. Dhṛtarāṣṭra was grieved. After thirteen years the Pāṇḍavas returned. Duryodhana said that not an inch of land would be given to the Pāṇḍavas. Dhṛtarāṣṭra felt sorry at this. Śrī Kṛṣṇa came to talk about conciliation. Duryodhana wanted to take him a prisoner. But Dhṛtarāṣṭra opposed it. Śrī Kṛṣṇa showed Dhṛtarāṣṭra his Viśvarūpa (cosmic form) to see which, Kṛṣṇa gave him sight for the time being for which Dhṛtarāṣṭra was very thankful. The Pāṇḍavas and the Kauravas came to Kurukṣetra for Bhārata-battle. Dhṛtarāṣṭra called Sañjaya to him and asked him about the preparations the parties had made for war. Sañjaya gave a true description of the battle arrays of both parties. (M.B. Ādi Parva. Sabhā Parva, Vana Parva, and Udyoga Parva).

1. It is stated in M.B. Āśramavāsika Parva, Chapter 31, Stanza 7 that Dhṛtarāṣṭra was born as the incarnation of a Gandharva having the name Dhṛtarāṣṭra. (See under Dhṛtarāṣṭra III).

(6) Dhṛtarāṣṭra and the battle of Bhārata. The terrible battle began. The heart of Dhṛtarāṣṭra was grieved with sorrow. When Arjuna vowed that he would kill Jayadratha, Dhṛtarāṣṭra cried aloud. When he knew that Sātyaki had destroyed the army of the Kauravas he became dumb with grief. He praised Bhīma's valour and blamed his sons. When Sañjaya told him about the fall of Karṇa, Dhṛtarāṣṭra fell down unconscious. He rose up again and attended to the noises from the battlefield. He fell down again when he knew that Śalya and Duryodhana were killed. He rose again and cried for a long time. He gathered the women-folk, his people and went to the battlefield. He broke the metal statue of Bhīma and embraced the Pāṇḍavas. He asked Yudhiṣṭhira to do the mourning and offerings for the dead. It was done accordingly. The Pāṇḍavas respected Dhṛtarāṣṭra. But Bhīma scolded them. Dhṛtarāṣṭra and Gāndhārī were greatly depressed and asked Yudhiṣṭhira to permit them to live in forest. Yudhiṣṭhira tried to prevent it. He kissed on the head of Yudhiṣṭhira. Seeing that they did not eat food he asked them to eat. Yudhiṣṭhira saw that they would eat only if he permitted them to live in forest. At last Yudhiṣṭhira agreed. Dhṛtarāṣṭra accepted money from Dharmaputra and performed mourning and offerings for the dead on a large scale (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Karṇa Parva, Strī Parva, Śānti Parva and Āśramavāsika Parva).

7) Journey to forest and death. Afterwards Dhṛtarāṣṭra and Gāndharī went to forest. Kunti followed them. All the subjects followed them a long way, crying. Dhṛtarāṣṭra sent them back and entrusted the teacher Kṛpa and Yuyutsu with the Pāṇḍavas. Dhṛtarāṣṭra, Gāndhārī and Kuntī lived on the Ganges. From there they came to Kurukṣetra and lived in the hermitage of Śatayūpā for a time. During that period Nārada visited them. The Pāṇḍavas and the subjects visited them again. Vyāsa also came there. He took Dhṛtarāṣṭra and the rest of them to the river Ganges and evoked the spirits of those who died in the battle. Vyāsa gave Dhṛtarāṣṭra divine eye to see the departed spirits. After this, at the request of Vyāsa they all returned. Dhṛtarāṣṭra, Gāndhārī and Kuntī went to Gaṅgādvāra and performed severe penance and were burnt to death in a wild fire. The relatives put their remains in the Ganges. The spirits of the three—Dhṛtarāṣṭra, Gāndhārī and Kuntī entered the realm of Kubera. (M.B. Āśramavāsika Parva, Svargārohaṇa Parva).

8) The names of Dhṛtarāṣṭra. Ājamīḍha, Ambikāsuta, Āmbikeya, Bhārata, Bharataśārdūla, Bharataśreṣṭha, Bharatarṣabha, Bharatasattama, Kaurava, Kauravaśreṣṭha, Kauravarāja, Kauravendra, Kauravya, Kuruśārdūla, Kuruśreṣṭha, Kurūdvaha, Kurunandana, Kururāja, Kuruvaṁśavardhana, Kuruvṛddha, Vaicitravīrya, Prajñācakṣus etc. have been used as synonyms of Dhṛtarāṣṭra.

DHṚTARĀṢṬRA II. A serpent born to Kaśyapa Prajāpati by his wife Kadrū. It is stated in Mahābhārata, Sabhā Parva, Chapter 9, Stanza 9, that this serpent sits in the Durbar of Varuṇa and worships him. During the time of emperor Pṛthu, devas (gods), asuras (demons) and Nāgas (serpents) milked the earth, and the person who milked for the Nāgas was the serpent Dhṛtarāṣṭra (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 69). It is stated in Mahābhārata, Karṇa Parva, Chapter 34, Stanza 28, that once this Nāga was admitted into the chariot of Śiva. When Balabhadra Rāma, discarded his body and went to Pātāla (nether world, several serpents came to greet him. Dhṛtarāṣṭra was one of them. (M.B. Mausala Parva, Chapter 4, Stanza 15).

DHṚTARĀṢṬRA III. A deva gandharva,. (Semi-god). Some information. (1) This deva gandharva was the son of the hermit Kaśyapa by his wife Muni. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 65, Stanza 15).

(2) He took part in the birth-celebration of Arjuna. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 122, Stanza 55).

(3) He went to the presence of King Marutta as a messenger of Indra. (M.B. Aśvamedha Parva, Chapter 107, Stanza 2).

(4) It was this Gandharva who had taken birth as Dhṛtarāṣṭra, the father of Duryodhana. (M.B. Svargārohaṇa Parva, Chapter 4, Stanza 15).

DHṚTARĀṢṬRA IV. A king who was the son of Janamejaya and the grandson of Kuru, a king of the Lunar dynasty. He had eleven sons: Kuṇḍika and others. (M.B. Chapter 94, Stanza 58.)

DHṚTARĀṢṬRA V. One of the famous sons of Vāsuki. There is a story about this nāga (serpent) in Jaimini, Āśvamedha Parva, Chapter 39.

After the Bhārata-battle, Yudhiṣṭhira performed horse-sacrifice. Arjuna led the sacrificial horse. He travelled far and wide and reached Manalūr. At the instruction of Ulūpī, Babhruvāhana confronted his father. A terrible fight ensued and Babhruvāhana cut off the head of Arjuna. Citrāṅgadā sent Babhruvāhana to the 'Nāgaloka' (the world of serpents) to bring the jewel 'Mṛtasañjīvinī' to restore her husband to life. The keeper of this jewel, which was under the custody of serpent Śeṣa was Dhṛtarāṣṭra, the son of Vāsuki.

Knowing that it was not easy to get the jewel, Babhruvāhana fought with Dhṛtarāṣṭra. After a terrible fight he got the jewel. But Dhṛtarāṣṭra, who did not want Arjuna to come to life again, stole the head of Arjuna, by the help of his sons and threw it into the hermitage of Dālbhya.

DHṚTARĀṢṬRĪ. A daughter born from Tāmrā the wife of Kaśyapa Prajāpati. Tāmrā had five daughters : Krauñcī, Bhāsī, Śyenī, Dhṛtarāṣṭrī and Śukī. Of these, from Krauñcī, the owls, the Bhāsas from Bhāsī, the eagle and vulture from Śyenī, the swans and the ruddy goose from Dhṛtarāṣṭrī were born in the world. (This occurs in Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa, Araṇya Kāṇḍa, Sarga 14).

DHṚTASENA. A king who took the side of the Kauravas. (M.B. Śalya Parva, Chapter 6, Stanza 3).

DHṚTAVARMĀ. The brother of Suvarmā, the king of Trigarta, and Ketuvarmā. Arjuna led the sacrificial horse of Aśvamedha performed by Yudhiṣṭhira after the Bhārata war. Sūryavarmā the king of Trigartta, confronted Arjuna and was defeated. Ketuvarmā who came next was also killed. Dhṛtavarmā came next. He showered arrows on Arjuna and inflicted wound on his hand, and the famous bow, Gāṇḍīva fell from his hand. Arjuna grew angry and fought so fiercely that eighteen famous and mighty Trigartta warriors fell. At last Dhṛtavarmā fell at the feet of Arjuna and begged for pardon and accepted the supremacy of Yudhiṣṭhira. (M.B. Aśvamedha Parva, Chapter 74).

DHṚTAVATĪ. (GHṚTAVATĪ). A famous river. M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 9).

DHṚTAVRATA. A king of the family of Yayāti. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 9).

DHṚTI I. A daughter of Prajāpati Dakṣa. She was one of the wives of Dharmadeva. Mādrī, the mother of Nakula and Sahadeva, was the rebirth of Dhṛtī. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 67). Dhṛti had given birth to Niyama when she was the wife of Dharmadeva, who had married Śraddhā, Lakṣmī, Dhṛti, Tuṣṭi, Medhā, Puṣṭi, Kriyā, Buddhī, Lajjā, Vapus, Śānti, Siddhi and Kīrti, thirteen of the daughters of Dakṣa. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Aṁśa I, Chapter 7).

DHṚTI II. A Viśvadeva (god). (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 91).

DHṚTI III. The son of Vītahavya, the king of Videha. He was a contemporary of Vyāsa and Vicitravīrya the king of the Kurus. Bahulāśva was the son of this Dhṛti. (M.B. Ādi Parva).

DHṚTIMĀN I. A king of the family of Yayāti. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 9).

DHṚTIMĀN II. An ancient country in Kuśadvīpa (the island of Kuśa). (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 12, Stanza 13).

DHṚTIMĀN III. See under Dhṛṣṭabuddhi.

DHRUVA I.

1) Birth and childhood. Manu Svāyambhuva the son of Brahmā, had two sons named Priyavrata and Uttānapāda. They were mighty heroes and of righteous character. Uttānapāda had two wives, Suruci and Sunīti. Suruci gave birth to Uttama and Sunīti to Dhruva. Uttānapāda showed more favour towards Uttama and Suruci. But he looked upon Dhruva and his mother with disfavour.

Once Uttama sat on the lap of his father when the latter was sitting on the throne. Seeing this, Dhruva wanted to sit along with his brother. But fearing the displeasure of Suruci, who was also there, the King did not take Dhruva on to his lap. Seeing the endeavour of Dhruva, Suruci said to him, "Child, if you wish to sit on the lap of your father, you ought to have been born in my womb. You cherish high ambition which you do not deserve." These words of Suruci were not palatable to Dhruva who ran to his mother and sat on her lap. When Sunīti knew what had happened she shed tears. After a few moments Dhruva stood up and made a vow. "I will get a position unattainable even for my father, by my own endeavour." He then started for the forest. He attained self-renunciation even in childhood becoming a disciple of hermits and performing severe penance.

Dhruva began penance in the forest of Madhuvana on the river Jamunā. Sunīti came and tried to take him to the palace. But he did not return. He intensified his penance more and more. At last Mahāviṣṇu appeared before him. Dhruva requested for a lofty and eternal place which would become a prop of the world. Accordingly, Viṣṇu pointed out to Dhruva, a noble place, higher than the planets, stars Saptarṣis (Ursa Major) and the devas who travelled in aeroplanes. Mahāviṣṇu said that Dhruva would live in a lofty place as a star till the end of the Kalpa and his mother Sunīti would also remain as a star near Śiva as long as Dhruva lived (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Aṁśa 1, Chapters 11 and 12).

2) The previous birth of Dhruva. Mahāviṣṇu appeared before Dhruva and revealed his previous birth.

Dhruva was a Brahmin in his previous birth. He used to meditate on Viṣṇu with concentration of mind. In course of time he befriended a prince who was a youth, of beautiful and bright complexion, enjoying all the pleasures of the world. Attracted by the position and status of the prince, the Brahmin wanted to become a prince. Mahāviṣṇu granted his wish. Accordingly Dhruva took his next birth as the son of Uttānapāda. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Aṁśa 1, Chapter 12).

3) The reign and end of Dhruva. After receiving the boon from Mahāviṣṇu, Dhruva returned. All who were there embraced Dhruva. Years passed by. Uttānapāda left his kingdom to Dhruva and became a forest householder. Dhruva became King. The King Dhruva married Brāhmī, the daughter of Śiśumāra a Prajāpati. The queen gave birth to two sons Kalpa and Vatsara. Dhruva married Ilā the daughter of Vāyu (wind). She gave birth to a son named Utkala.

Uttama remained unmarried. While he was hunting in the forest a Yakṣa (a demi-god) killed him. Suruci was caught in wild fire and died. Hearing about the death of Uttama, Dhruva took his weapons and reached the realm of the Yakṣas. He stood at their gate and challenged them for battle. One lac and thirty thousand Yakṣa warriors fought with Dhruva. Dhruva destroyed the entire army. The Yakṣas began illusive and magical arts. Dhruva overcame that also. At last Kubera himself appeared before Dhruva and blessed him. They got him into a plane and placed him in a place higher than all the planets. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Bhāgavata).

4) The descendants of Dhruva. Two sons named Śiṣṭi and Bhavya were born to Dhruva by his wife Śambhu. Succhāyā the wife of Śiṣṭi gave birth to five sinless sons named Ripu, Ripuñjaya, Vipra, Vṛkala and Vṛkatejas. Bṛhatī the wife of Ripu gave birth to Cākṣuṣa of extreme bright complexion. Manu was born to Cākṣuṣa by his wife Puṣkaraṇī the daughter of Vīraṇaprajāpati and included in the children of Varuṇa. Ten sons were born to the bright Manu by his wife Naḍvalā, daughter of Prajāpati Vairāja. These ten bright sons were Kuru, Pūru, Śatadyumna Tapasvī, Satyavān, Śuci, Agniṣṭomā, Atirātra, Sudyumna, and Abhimanyu. Āgneyī, the wife of Kuru gave birth to six children. They were Aṅga, Sumanas, Khyāti, Kratu, Aṅgiras and Śibi. A son named Vena was born to Aṅga by his wife Sunīthā. Hermits churned the right hand of Vena to obtain children. As a result of churning Vaineya was born from the right hand of Vena. That King is the famous Pṛthu. This Pṛthu milked the earth for the prosperity of his subjects. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Aṁśa 1, Chapter 13).

5) The place of Dhruva. The origin of the river Gaṅgā was through the hole at the top of the shell of the mundane egg. It flowed down and fell on the highest part of heaven. That place is called Viṣṇupāda. Sitting in this Viṣṇupāda, Dhruva does penance to Viṣṇu. So this place got the name Dhruvamaṇḍala. (Devī Bhāgavata, Skandha 8).

DHRUVA II. He was the son of Nahuṣa and the brother of Yayāti. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 75, Stanza 30)

DHRUVA III. A king. He sits in the council of Yama and serves him. (M.B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 8, Stanza 10)

DHRUVA IV. A warrior who fought on the side of the Kauravas against the Pāṇḍavas. He was killed by Bhīmasena (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 155, Stanza 27)

DHRUVA V. A king who supported Yudhiṣṭhira. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 158, Verse 39).

DHRUVA VI. A son born to Dharmadeva by his wife Dhūmrā. He was one of the aṣṭa Vasus (eight Vasus). (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 66, Stanza 19).

DHRUVAKA. A warrior of Subrahmaṇya. (M.B. Śalya Parva, Chapter 45, Stanza 75).

DHRUVARATNA. An attendant of Subrahmaṇya. (M.B. Śalya Parva, Chapter 46, Stanza 4).

DHRUVASANDHI. A king of Kosala. During the reign of this King there was prosperity in Ayodhyā and the people were virtuous. This king had two wives Manoramā and Līlāvatī. A son named Sudarśana was born to Manoramā. After a month the second wife also gave birth to a son named Śatrujit. The King was much pleased and both sons were brought up alike. As Śatrujit was cleverer than Sudarśana people loved Śatrujit more.

Once Dhruvasandhi went to the forest for hunting and was killed by a lion in the forest. According to the custom Sudarśana became King. Līlāvatī, the mother of Śatrujit was the daughter of the King of Ujjayinī. Her desire was to make Śatrujit the King. Manoramā the mother of Sudarśana was the daughter of the King of Kaliṅga. Hearing about the death of Dhruvasandhi, the kings of Ujjayinī and Kaliṅga arrived at Ayodhyā. The King of Ujjayinī got angry because Sudarśana was made king and began war. The King of Kaliṅga took the side of Sudarśana. A terrible battle was fought in Ayodhyā as to who should be the heir to the throne. In the battle Yudhājit, the King of Ujjayinī, killed Vīrasena, the king of Kaliṅga. Sudarśana and his mother Manoramā were in a sorry plight. According to the advice of minister Vidulla, Manoramā and Sudarśana fled from the capital. Vidulla and the maid of Manoramā accompanied them. In two days they reached Gaṅgātaṭa. They were caught by fishermen thieves and they lost everything they had. At last with the help of a boat they crossed the Ganges and reached Trikūṭa. They went to the hermitage of Bharadvāja who was doing penance there. He gave them protection.

After making Śatrujjit King, Yudhājit began to search for Manoramā and Sudarśana. He got news that they lived in Citrakūṭa. Yudhājit went there with an army. But he could not get them out of the hermitage of Bharadvāja. Manoramā and Sudarśana lived safely in the hermitage.

Once Vidulla came to the hermitage of Bharadvāja to enquire about Manoramā. Seeing the old man the hermit boys called out "Klība Klība." Prince Sudarśana heard only "Klī". The syllable 'Klī' is the spell called 'Kāmarāja bījamantra'. Without knowing its meaning Sudarśana called out 'Klī' several times. With that the prince got a special power.

Six more years passed. The prince became eleven years old. By this time Bharadvāja had taught the prince Vedas, Śāstras, etc. The prince was a devotee of Devī. Devī appeared before him and gave him a bow and a quiver which would never become empty, and an impenetrable armour. Sudarśana married Śaśikalā the daughter of the King of Kāśī. Niṣāda, the King of Śṛṅgiverapura, was a friend of Dhruvasandhi. He gave Sudarśana a chariot which Sudarśana rode through the forest. With the help of the King of Kāśī and others Sudarśana recaptured Ayodhyā. He made Vidulla his minister and ruled over the country for a long time. (Devī Bhāgavata, Skandha 3).

DHŪMAPA. A set of deified manes (Pitṛs) who form a gaṇa (Śiva's hosts of deities). This Gaṇa is seen to have attended the sacrifice of Dakṣa. (M.B. Śānti Parva, Chapter 284, Stanza 8.)

DHŪMAPĀLĀ. A river. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 9, Stanza 18).

DHŪMĀVATĪ. A holy place. The wishes of those who take three days' fast in this holy place are realised. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 84, Stanza 22).

DHŪMINĪ. The wife of King Ajamīḍha of Puru dynasty. By this wife, a son named Ṛkṣa was born to Ajamīḍha. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 94, Stanza 32).

DHŪMORṆĀ I. The wife of King Yama (God of Death). (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 117, Stanza 9).

DHŪMORṆĀ II. The wife of hermit Mārkaṇḍeya. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 146, Stanza 4).

DHŪMRA I. A hermit. This hermit was a luminary in the Durbar of Indra. (M.B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 7).

DHŪMRA II. A warrior of Subrahmaṇya. (M.B. Śalya Parva, Chapter 45, Stanza 64).

DHŪMRĀ. A daughter of Prajāpati Dakṣa. She became the wife of Dharmadeva. Two sons, Dhruva and Dhara were born to the couple. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 66, Stanza 19).

DHŪMRAKEŚA I. A Pracetas (Bhāgavata, Skandha 4).

DHŪMRAKEŚA II. The third son of Pṛthu, the son of Vena. Five sons were born to Pṛthu by his wife Arcis. On the death of Pṛthu, his elder brother's son Vijitāśva appointed Dhūmrakeśa as the governor of southern countries. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 4).

DHŪMRAKETU. A son of Bharata. Five sons named Sumati, Rāṣṭrabhṛt, Sudarśana, Varaṇa and Dhūmraketu were born to Bharata by his wife Pañcajanī. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 5).

DHŪMRĀKṢA I. A king of the Ikṣvāku dynasty.

DHŪMRĀKṢA II. A minister of Rāvaṇa.

Genealogy. Brahmā created the Rākṣasa (giant) Heti. The son Vidyutkeśa was born to him of his wife Bhayā. Sukeśa was born to Vidyutkeśa by his wife Sālakaṭaṅkā. Sukeśa married Devavatī. Three sons, Mālyavān, Sumālī and Mālī were born to the couple. To Sumālī, by his wife Ketumatī, fourteen children were born: Prahasta, Akampana, Vikaṭa, Kālakāmukha, Dhūmrākṣa, Daṇḍa, Supārśvā, Saṁhrāda, Prākvāda, Bhāsakarṇa, Veka, Puṣpotkaṭa, Kaikasi, and Kumbhīnasi; most of them were ministers of Rāvaṇa. (Uttara Rāmāyaṇa).

2) Work and death. Dhūmrākṣa was one who worked in all the branches of administration of the state. In all the battles fought by the Rākṣasas Dhūmrākṣa was present. He was also called Dhūmralocana. He was killed in the battle of Rāma and Rāvaṇa at the hands of Hanūmān. (Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa, Yuddha Kāṇḍa, Chapter 51).

DHŪMRĀŚVA. A king of the Ikṣvāku dynasty. He was the son of Sucandra and the father of Sañjaya. (Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa, Bāla Kāṇḍa, Sarga 47).

DHUNDHU I. A notorious Asura. He was the son of the Madhu Kaiṭabhas.

Brahmā was born in the lotus from the navel of Viṣṇu, who was lying in meditation on the surface of water. From the ear-wax of Viṣṇu two asuras—Madhu and Kaiṭabha sprang up. They terrified Brahmā by shaking the stalk of the lotus. Brahmā became terribly afraid of the asuras and ran about on the surface of water. Hearing the cry of Brahmā Viṣṇu awoke, but he could not defeat the asuras. Viṣṇu decided to employ 'Sāma' (conciliation) the first expedient. The arrogant demons ordered Viṣṇu to ask of them any boon. Viṣṇu replied. "If it is so, you must be killed by me." They could not but give the boon. They agreed to the request of Viṣṇu and said: "But we must be killed in an atmosphere, which is not cloudy." Viṣṇu killed them when the atmosphere was clear.

A son named Dhundhu had been born to Madhu and Kaiṭabha. Because Viṣṇu had killed his fathers Dhundhu decided to take revenge on Viṣṇu and the Gods. With this idea in view Dhundhu began to do penance in the sandy desert of Ujjālaka in Marudhanva. Standing on one leg he did penance for thousands of years. Then Brahmā appeared before him and gave the boon that he would not be killed by Devas, Dānavas (asuras), Gandharvas (Demi-gods), Rākṣasas (demons), Yakṣas (paragods) and Uragas (serpents). Having got this boon, he lived under sand in the desert of Ujjālaka. His idea was to destroy the gods.

A hermit named Uttaṅka had erected his hermitage in another part of Marudhanva and began penance. By his penance he made Viṣṇu appear before him and then made a request that Dhundhu's activities be put a stop to. Viṣṇu replied "Uttaṅka! Dhundhu has become a curse to the three worlds. There is a king named Kuvalāśva, born of the dynasty of Ikṣvāku. He will kill Dhundhu." Saying these words, Viṣṇu disappeared.

Uttaṅka went to the palace of Kuvalāśva and told him what Viṣṇu had said. Kuvalāśva and his sons went to the forest and killed Dhundhu in a fight. From that day Kuvalāśva came to be known by the name Dhundhumāra,[1] which meant 'the killer of Dhundhu. (M.B. Vana Parva, 4 Chapters from 201).

DHUNDHU II. An ancient King who lived on vegetable food only. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 115, Stanza 66).

DHUNDHUKĀRI. See under Gokarṇa.

DHUNDHULI. See under Gokarṇa.

DHUNDHUMĀRA. A king of the Ikṣvāku dynasty. (See under Kuvalāśva). He was also called Kuvalayāśva

DHUNDHUMŪKA. A wicked King. Viśalyā was his wife. Even at the marriage of his son this wicked King remained indifferent. He indulged in sexual activities with a Śūdra woman. Not much later he killed her. As soon as her brother knew about this he ran to the palace and killed the King Dhundhumūka along with his wife. Because he was killed by a Śūdra, the family of the King faced destruction. His son was also wicked like his father. But on the advice of a sage he begant o utter (the five-syllabled and six-syllabled mantras of Śiva) in consequence of which, his parents were redeemed. (Liṅga Purāṇa).

DHUNDHURA. An Asura. It is stated in Gaṇeśa Purāṇa that this asura went to the house of Kaśyapa in the shape of a parrot and tried to kill Gaṇeśa who had incarnated in the house of Kaśyapa, but was killed by him.

DHURANDHARAM. A country in ancient India. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 9, Stanza 18).

DHŪRTA. A King of ancient India. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 1, Stanza 238).

DHŪRTAKA. A serpent born in the family of Kaurava. He fell in the sacrificial fire of King Janamejaya and was burnt to death. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 57, Stanza 13).

DHVAJAVATĪ. The daughter of the hermit Harimedha, who lived in the sky, according to the order of the Sun. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 110, Stanza 13).

DHVAJINĪ. A country in ancient India. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 83).

DHVANI. The son of Āpa who is one of the eight Vasus. Āpa had four sons called Vaitaṇḍa, Śrama, Śānta and Dhvani. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Aṁśa 1, Chapter 15).

DHVANYA. A king. He was the son of Lakṣmaṇa. (See Ṛgveda Index).

DHVASANTI. A hermit of the period of the Ṛgveda. Aśvinīdevas rescued the hermits Turvīti, Dabhīti, Dhvasanti and Puruṣanti from danger. Ṛgveda, Maṇḍala 1, Anuvāka 16, Sūkta 112).

DHYĀNA. (Meditation). Even from ancient times the people of Bhārata believed that heaven could be attained by meditation. There are scientific methods of meditating upon God. They are described below:

The root "dhyai", means "to think". Dhyāna (meditation) means thinking of God with concentration. God is invisible and figureless. We can meditate only upon some material that contains the attributes of God. So dhyāna (meditation) is to fix the mind on the object of meditation, and to imagine that particular object in a particular place and to concentrate the mind upon it. One who casts off his body, while engaged in meditation attains 'Sāyujya' (oneness with God).

1. Dhundhu was the son of Kaśyapa, born of Danu. It was to kill Dhundhu that Viṣṇu incarnated a Vāmana, Vāmanapurāṇa Chapter 8.

He who can meditate upon God, with concentration of mind even for a moment or two can attain heaven. The fruits he attains are far greater than the fruits attained by performing great sacrifices and offerings. For meditation, there are four factors : Dhyātā (the meditator), Dhyāna (the act of meditation) Dhyeya (the object meditated upon) and Dhyānaprayojana (the attainment by meditation). He who indulges in meditation is the meditator. The act done by him is meditation. That which is meditated upon is the object of meditation. What the meditator obtains as a result of his meditation is the attainment. A meditator should be wise and virtuous, should have attention and patience, devoted to Viṣṇu and always energetic.

We can meditate upon God, walking, standing, sleeping and awake. God should be consecrated in the centre of the lotus chair of the heart and be worshipped with devotional meditation. It is to give practice in fixing the mind firmly on a particular object, that the sages say that some visible material object should be given to meditate upon, in the early stage of meditation. When concentration of mind is obtained by meditating upon a visible object, it will be possible for us to meditate upon an object which is not amenable to our senses. When engaged in meditation we should be thinking "Ahaṁ Brahmā jyotirātmā vāsudevo vimukta Oṁ". (I am Brahmā,the light, the Spirit, Vāsudeva, and Vimukta (having no connection with anything), OM). (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 374).

ḌIBHAKA. A prince who, puffed up by the power of boons and blessings from the gods, tried to harm sage Durvāsas. Balabhadrarāma killed him. The following account occurs in the Bhaviṣya Purāṇa.

Brahmadatta, King of Sālva, had two wives. No children were born to them for several years. Brahmadatta's minister, Mitrasaha, also had no children. Mitrasaha was a brahmin and a scholar. On his advice, Brahmadatta, with his wives, went to Kailāsa and performed tapas to please Śiva to get children. As a result of ten years' rigorous tapas Śiva was pleased and blessed him that two sons would be born to him. Later his wives gave birth to two sons. The son of the eldest queen was named Haṁsa and that of the second queen was named Ḍibhaka. At this time a son was also born to Mitrasaha, the minister by the blessing of Viṣṇu. That child was named Janārdana.

Haṁsa and Ḍibhaka were spoilt, but Janārdana was a bhakta of Viṣṇu. Haṁsa and Ḍibhaka performed tapas in their childhood to please Śiva and got invincible power and arrows. After that they became lokakaṇṭakas (torturers) and went round the world. Once they went to Kaśyapa's āśrama and destroyed the place of worship. After that they went to the āśrama of Durvāsas. There they tortured the sages and made the sages naked who were wearing only loin cloth. Then they returned.

Enraged by these, sage Durvāsas went to Dvārakā taking the destroyed loin-cloth and other articles. Śrī Kṛṣṇa and his courtiers stood up and saluted him when they saw Durvāsas coming like saṁhārarudra. On hearing the news, Śrī Kṛṣṇa assured him that he would kill Haṁsa and Ḍibhaka and sent him back pacified.

Haṁsa and Ḍibhaka began a rājasūya. They sent Janārdana to Śrī Kṛṣṇa with the message that he should either fight with them or give them tribute (in the form of money). Janārdana went to Dvārakā, just as Akrūra, a devotee of Viṣṇu, went to Ambāḍi with the message of Kaṁsa. Immediately Kṛṣṇa and Balabhadra with the chief Ministers like Sātyaki went to Sālva. In the war that followed Śrī Kṛṣṇa killed Haṁsa and Bala. Bhadrarāma killed Ḍibhaka. (M.B. Bhaviṣya Parva, Chapter 103-129).

DIGVIJAYAPARVA. A sub-division of the Sabhā Parva of Mahābhārata. It comprises of Chapters 25 to 32 of Sabhā Parva.

DIK. A river. The Mahābhārata, (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 9, Verse 18) states that the water of this river was used for drinking by the people in India.

DĪKṢĀ. Dīkṣā is the vrata that expels sin and increases Jñāna (wisdom). Those who are to be blessed fall into three categories. The person who belongs to the first category is called Vijñānakala; the second is Pralayakala; and the third is Sakala. Vijñānakala is free from sin alone. Pralayakala is free from sins and Karmans. Sakala has everything from Kalā to the earth. The Dīkṣās to be practised by the three classes of persons are of different kinds. Dīkṣā is classified into two: "Nirādhāra and Sādhāra.

Nirādhāra Dīkṣā is performed for the sake of Vijñānakala and Pralayakala. Sādhāra Dīkṣā is prescribed for the third class of people, the Sakaias.

DILĪPA I. (Khaṭvāṅga). A mighty king of the Ikṣvāku dynasty.

(1) Genealogy. See Daśaratha's Genealogy.

2)Reign and Birth of Son. Dilīpa is counted as one of the noblest kings. His reign was extremely popular. But even after a long period of married life, he had no issue. His queen was Sudakṣiṇā, the princess of Magadha. In order to get Vasiṣṭha's advice, Dilīpa and Sudakṣiṇā went to the sage's āśrama. After hearing about their grievance, Vasiṣṭha meditated for a little while and described why the royal couple were not blessed with children:—"Long ago, Dilīpa had paid a visit to Indra. While returning after the visit, he passed by Kāmadhenu who was lying under the shade of Kalpavṛkṣa. He paid no heed to her, as he did not see her. The divine cow (Kāmadhenu) took this as a personal slight to her and cursed the King that he would not have children until he served and propitiated her daughter, Nandinī. Neither the King nor his charioteer was aware of the curse. Kāmadhenu has now gone to Pātāla (underworld) to attend a sacrifice of Varuṇa. Therefore Dilīpa and his queen should attend on and propitiate her daughter, Nandinī."

From the next morning the King and queen began to offer their services to Nandinī. The King followed her as her shadow. After twentyone days, one morning Nandinī went to graze in a dense forest. As usual, the King also followed her. As they reached the middle of the woods, the King was enchanted for a moment by the charm of the Sylvan scenery. Just then, on turning round he saw a lion springing towards Nandinī to prey upon her. Suddenly he took up his bow and aimed an arrow at the lion, but to his great amazement, his hands were paralysed. The lion spoke to him as follows:—"O King, you need not exert yourself in vain. I am the servant of Lord Śiva. This holy deodar tree which you see in front of us, was planted and tended by Pārvatī. My task is to protect this tree. Pārvatī and lord Śiva have authorized me to kill and eat the animals which come this way. Therefore this cow is my food."

The king was in a fix. He begged the lion to spare Nandinī and to eat his (king's) body instead. The lion agreed. The King put down his arms and stood bowing down in front of the lion. Hearing the words, "Beloved child, arise" he looked up, and the lion had vanished. Just then Nandinī told him that it was she herself who had done this to test him. The King and Nandinī then returned to the Āśrama. As a result of Nandinī's blessing, the King's wife bore a son who later became the celebrated emperor Raghu. (Padma Purāṇa, Uttara Khaṇḍa, Chapter 198).

(3) Killing of the Asura, Vīrasena. Once a powerful Asura named Vīrasena attacked Vaiśravaṇa. When lord Śiva came to know of it he tried to defeat Vīrasena, but in vain. At Śiva's request, Mahāviṣṇu entered the scene. He was also unable to subdue the Asura. Viṣṇu advised Vaiśravaṇa to seek the help of Dilīpa. Dilīpa went to Alakāpurī and encountered Vīrasena. Under the shower of arrows fram Dilīpa, blood began to flow from the body of Vīrasena. But each drop of his blood came to life as a new Vīrasena and all those Vīrasenas continued a ceaseless battle with Dilīpa. At last Dilīpa prayed to Rakteśvarī who suddenly appeared and drank all the blood. In this way the king managed to kill Vīrasena. (Kampa Rāmāyaṇa, Yuddha Kāṇḍa).

(4) Dilīpa and the Holy Waters. Once king Dilīpa led a saintly life on the bank of Gaṅgā, the sacred place worshipped by Devas, Ṛṣis and Gandharvas. With religious practices and offering pūjā to Devas, Ṛṣis and Pitṛs, he spent time in prayer and meditation. One day he happened to meet Vasiṣṭha, and paid homage to him. The sage Vasiṣṭha described to him all the places of sacred waters and explained the greatness of each. (See under Khaṭvāṅga). (Padma Purāṇa, Chapter 10).

DILĪPA II. A serpent born in Kaśyapa family. There is a reference to this serpent in Mahābhārata, Udyoga Parva, Chapter 103, Verse 15.

DILĪPĀŚRAMA. A sacred place. It was at this place that Ambā, the daughter of the King of Kāśī performed austere tapas (Penance). (See under Ambā).

ḌIMḌIKA. A rat who played a part in Biḍālopākhyāna. The story runs as follows:

Once a cat performed tapas, holding his hands up, on the banks of the Ganges, when the found no way to get food. Seeing the devotion of that cat all living beings birds and animals began to worship him. Once the cat called all rats and told them: "One cannot do spiritual and physical deeds at the same time. So I will look after your spiritual affairs. You should attend to my physical needs. That is, bring me food, bathe me in the Ganges, all these are your duties."

The rats agreed to do so. They took him to the Ganges, bathed him and gave him food. But, the cat, whenever he got a chance caught a rat and ate it up The cat's health improved day-by-day and the number of rat's began to decrease. Among them, there was a clever rat named Ḍimḍika. He called all the other rats and organized a secret conference. The subject of discussion was the cruel deeds done by the cat to the rats.

The next day Ḍiṁḍika went secretly to examine the ways of living of the cat. The cat ate Ḍiṁḍika. After 40 days the rats came to know that Ḍiṁḍika was missing. They assembled secretly. They elected a rat named Kokila as their leader. Under his leadership the rats declared independence and left the place. The cat also went his own way finding no means to get food. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 160).

DIṄNĀGA. A Sanskrit dramatist who lived between the second and fifth centuries A.D. "Dhīranāga" was his other name. The Sanskrit drama "KUNDAMĀLĀ" which is based on Uttara Rāmāyaṇa and has six acts, was composed by Diṅnāga. Diṅnāga, the Buddhist preacher and this Diṅnāga are two different persons. Vināyaka and Śiva are praised in the introductory stanzas of Kundamālā (A.B. Keith: Classical Sanskrit literature).

DĪNANĀTHA. A King who lived in Dvāpara Age. He was a mighty and famous Vaiṣṇava. But his childless life distressed him very much. Once he consulted Gālava about his plight. Gālava assured him that if he performed a human sacrifice, a son would be born to him. A handsome, scholarly and highly-born man was to be sacrificed into the fire, A cripple, a dark-skinned man or a crude fellow was unsuitable for the purpose. The King's servants scoured the villages and towns looking for such a perfect man, but in vain. At last they reached a country called Daśapura, inhabited by noble Brāhmaṇas. The women of that place were reputed for their charming eyes. No man could resist their fascination. In that lovely city there lived a Brāhmaṇa named Kṛṣṇadeva with his virtuous wife and three sons. The King's servants requested Kṛṣṇadeva to give one of his sons to be sacrificed. They offered four lakhs of gold coins as price. The Brāhmaṇa and his wife cried bitterly and Kṛṣṇadeva offered himself instead of his sons. The royal servants seized one of his sons after throwing gold coins in the house and prepared to take him away. At this stage the second son of Kṛṣṇadeva came forward and volunteered himself. They agreed and he accompanied them to the palace. On their way they met the sage Viśvāmitra. He asked them to release the boy but they refused to set him free. The sage followed them to the palace and undertook to perform a sacrifice which would bless the King with progeny without a human sacrifice. The King accepted the offer and thus the boy was saved. (Padma Purāṇa, Chapter 12).

DĪPAKARṆI. A character in Guṇāḍhya's Bṛhatkathā. Dīpakarṇi was a King. He had a wife named Śaktimatī. One day while she was sleeping in the garden she was bitten by a snake and she died. Distressed by her departure, Dīpakarṇi accepted Brahmacarya. He was deeply grieved because he had no son to succeed to his throne. One day Śiva appeared to him in a dream and told him thus:- "When you pass through the forest, you will come across a youth riding a lion. Take him to your palace; he will be your son." Dīpakarṇi woke up happily. He had faith in his dream. One day he went to a distant forest for hunting. There he saw a very handsome boy riding on a lion. He was reminded of his dream when the boy dismounted and the lion walked away slowly to a nearby stream to drink water. At once Dīpakarṇi shot an arrow at the lion. Suddenly the lion gave up its animal shape and transformed itself into a man and spoke to the King as follows:—

I am a Yakṣa named Sāta and a friend of Vaiśravaṇa. Once when I went to bathe in the river Gaṅgā, I happened to see a Ṛṣi virgin and I fell in love with her. I married her according to the Gāndharva rules. The Ṛṣis who came to know of it turned us into a lion couple by their curse. When we fell at their feet and begged pardon, they gave her a blessing that a son would be born to her and that I would fall under your arrow. After that we were wandering about as a lion-couple and in due course she became pregnant. In the fullness of time she gave birth to this boy and then was liberated from the curse. I have been bringing him up by giving the milk of lionesses. Now, by being hit by your arrow, I am also released from the curse. From this time kindly receive this mighty youth as your own."

After saying this, the Yakṣa vanished. Dīpakarṇi returned to the palace, taking the boy with him. Since he was carried by Sāta, the boy was named "Sātavāhana". When he grew up into a youth, Dīpakarṇi handed over the rule of the kingdom to him and entered into Vānaprastha. In course of time Sātavāhana became an emperor. (Kathāsaritsāgara, Kathāpīṭha lambaka, 6th Taraṅga.).

DĪPTA Son of Manu Uttama. Uttama was the third Manu. He had three sons—Aja, Parāsu and Dīpta. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Part 3, Chapter 1).

DĪPTAKETU. A King of olden times. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 1, verse 237).

DĪPTĀKṢA. A Kṣatriya tribe. Purūravas, the renowned King was born in this family. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 74).

DĪPTAROMĀ. A Viśvadeva. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 91, verse 31).

DĪPTI. A Viśvadeva. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 91, Verse 34).

DĪRGHA. A king of Magadha. He was killed by Pāṇḍu. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 112, Verse 27).

DĪRGHABĀHU I. One of the hundred sons of Dhṛtarāṣṭra. Bhīmasena killed him in Bhārata War. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, chapter 96, Verse 26).

DĪRGHABĀHU II. A pious King. There are conflicting versions about him in the Purāṇas.

DĪRGHAJAṀGHA. A Yakṣa who was the elder brother of the Yakṣa Puṣpadatta. (Kathāsaritsāgara, (Kathāpīṭhalambaka, 2nd Taraṅga).

DĪRGHAJIHVA. A dānava (asura) born to Kaśyapa by his wife Danu. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 65, Verse 30).

DĪRGHAKARṆA. A rabbit. A character in one of the stories of the Pañcatantra illustrating the dangers of trusting mean or wicked people. (See under Pañcatantra).

DĪRGHALOCANA. One of the hundred sons of Dhṛtarāṣṭra.

DĪRGHAPRAJÑA. A Kṣatriya King. He traces his ancestry from a part of the Asura, Vṛṣā Parva. Mahābhārata (Udyoga Parva, Chapter 4, Verse 12) states that the Pāṇḍavas had sent an invitation to him at the time of the Kurukṣetra battle.

DĪRGHAROMĀ. (DĪRGHALOCANA). One of the hundred sons of Dhṛtarāṣṭra. He was killed by Bhīmasena in the Bhārata War. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 127).

DĪRGHASATTRA. A holy place. He who visits this holy place will derive the blessings of having performed the Aśvamedha and Rājasūya sacrifices. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 82).

DĪRGHAŚRAVAS. A son of Dīrghatamas. (Ṛgveda, Maṇḍala 1, Anuvāka 112, Sūkta 117).

DĪRGHATAMAS. A great Muni.

1) Birth. Aṅgiras, the son of Brahmā, had two sons, Utathya and Bṛhaspati. One day when Utathya was away from home, Bṛhaspati approached his elder brother's wife, Mamatā, who was pregnant at the time, and tried to have sexual union with her. But she tried to dissuade him and said—"The child in my womb, born from Utathya's semen has already mastered Vedas and Vedāṅgas. Your semen is also equally powerful. How can my womb bear the combined force of the two semens? So please refrain from this attempt of yours." But even after hearing these words of his sister-in-law, Bṛhaspati was not able to control his passions. At the time of the intercourse, when the semen of Bṛhaspati entered the womb, the child within it cried out—"Father ! this passion is improper. Two persons have no place here. So withdraw your semen." Bṛhaspati did not heed the request. The child in the womb repelled the semen that entered the womb with his foot and it dropped on the floor. Bṛhaspati who became angry, cursed the child. As a result, the boy was born blind. He got the name "Dīrghatamas" because he was born blind. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 104).

2) Family Life. In brilliance of parts, Dīrghatamas[1] equalled Bṛhaspati. Dīrghatamas, who was born blind, married Pradveṣi, a Brāhmaṇī. The couple had many children, chief of whom was Gautama. But after the birth of the children, Dīrghatmas fell into evil ways and became an object of hatred and contempt. The inmates of āśramas dubbed him a sinner. His wife, was disgusted with him. One day, the enraged Dīrghatamas, in his fury cursed women as a whole and Pradveṣī could not control her anger. She, with the help of Gautama and other sons made a raft and placing Dīrghatamas on it, floated it down the river Gaṅgā. The King Bali happened to see the raft floating down the river. He sent men to bring the boat to the bank. The King recognized Dīrghatamas and asked the Muni to beget brilliant and intelligent children by his queen. Dīrghatamas agreed and the King sent the queen Sudeṣṇā to him. The queen who did not find pleasure in the company of the blind and decrepit Muni sent a nurse to him. The nurse bore to him Kakṣīvān and ten other sons all of whom became great scholars. After some years the King came to know that the mother of those boys was the nurse. Then he sent Sudeṣṇā again to the Muni. Dīrghatamas, after touching her body blessed her and five sons, Aṅga,

1. The story of Bṛhaspati's union with Mamatā is given in Bhāgavata Purāṇa. According to this story the child in her womb was Bharadvāja. The Mahābhārata states that the child born to Mamatā was Dīrghatamas.

Vaṅga, Kaliṅga, Puṇḍra and Śuṅga were born to her. They founded five Kingdoms which were known by their names respectively. They are known by their modern names: Bhāgalpura, Bengāl, Āndhra, Rājasāhi and Tāmravika.

3) Other details. (1) Dīrghatamas had another wife named Uśik. (Ṛgveda, 1st Maṇḍala, 16th Anuvāka, 112th Sūkta.)

(2) Dīrghatamas continues to be in the assembly of Indra offering worship to him (Indra). (M.B. Śabhā Parva, Chapter 7, Verse 11).

DĪRGHATAPAS I. Father of Dhanvantari. (See under Dhanvantari).

DĪRGHATAPAS II. See under Puṇya.

DĪRGHAYAJÑA. A King of Ayodhyā. Bhīmasena had once won him over to his side by persuasive speech. (M.B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 30, verse 2).

DĪRGHĀYUS. Brother of Śrutāyus, the King of Kaliṅga. Arjuna killed him in the war. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 94, Verse 29).

DĪRGHIKĀ A daughter of Viśvakarman. She was abnormally tall, and since there was the Śāstric injunction that he who married such women would die within six months none came forward to wed her.

Dīrghikā began a penance for a good husband. As it continued for years together symptoms of old age began to appear in her. At this juncture an old and ailing householder came there. On certain conditions he married Dīrghikā. After sometime, in obedience to the husband's wish Dīrghikā set out on a tour carrying him on her shoulders. Though Māṇḍavya cursed her husband on their way, due to the chastity of Dīrghikā the curse proved to be ineffective. The similarity in the stories of Śāṇḍilī and this Dīrghikā leads us to think that they might have been one and the same person.

DIŚĀCAKṢU. One of the prominent off-springs of Garuḍa. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 101, Verse 10).

DITI.

1) General. A daughter of Dakṣa Prajāpati. She was married to Kaśyapa, grandson of Brahmā and son of Marīci. She had many sisters, chief among whom were Aditi, Kālā, Danāyus, Danu, Siṁhikā, Krodhā, Pṛthā, Viśvā, Vinatā, Kapilā, Muni and Kadrū. Kaśyapa's sons by Aditi became Devas (Āditeyas) and his sons by Diti became Asuras (Daityas). (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 65).

2) Indra cut Diti's embryo to pieces. Devas and Asuras agreed to churn the ocean of milk as a joint endeavour. But when Amṛta rose up to the surface, they began to quarrel over it. In the battle between Devas and Asuras for the possession of Amṛta, Diti's sons were killed.

In her inconsolable grief at the death of her sons, Diti prayed to her husband Kaśyapa that she should be blessed with a brave and heroic son who would be capable of killing Indra. The sage granted her the boon and told her that by worshipping the lord with a pure mind and body for a hundred years, she would bear a son who would be mighty enough to kill Indra. In due course Diti became pregnant and following her husband's advice, she fervently worshipped the Lord and remained pure in mind and body. When Indra came to know that the child in Diti's womb was to be his slayer, he approached her under the disguise of an attendant, offering to serve her. He waited for an opportunity to get access to her and before the expiry of a hundred years he got a chance. One day, Diti went to bed without washing her feet and fell asleep. Indra took his Vajra and gaining access to her womb cut the embryo within it into seven pieces. The child in the womb began to cry loudly. Indra asked it "MĀ RUDA" (Do not cry). Then he proceeded to cut each of the seven pieces again into seven and finally there were fortynine pieces in all. They subsequently became Devas known as "Maruts." They got the name Maruts because Indra told them "Mā Ruda." All the fortynine Maruts later on became the helpers of Indra. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Part 1, Chapter 21).

3) Diti's sons. Asuras were Diti's sons. Chief among them were Hiraṇyakaśipu and Hiraṇyākṣa. They had a sister named Siṁhikā. Hiraṇyakaśipu had four sons—Anuhlāda, Hlāda, Prahlāda and Saṁhlāda who were famous for their glory and might. Śūrapadma, Siṁhavaktra, Tārakāsura, Gomukha and Ajāmukha were also Diti's sons. Of them, Śūrapadma had four sons by his wife Mayasutā, who were Bhānukopa, Agnimukha, Vajrabāhu and Hiraṇya. An asura named Mahāśūra was born to Siṁhavaktra by his wife, Vibhūti. The Asuras, Śambara, Śakuni, Dvimūrdhā, Śaṅku, Aśva, were the sons of Hiraṇyākṣa. Siṁhikā married Vipracitti; Rāhu and Ketu were born to them. Saṁhlāda, the son of Hiraṇyakaśipu had three sons, Āyuṣmān, Śibi and Bāṣkala. Virocana was the son of Prahlāda; Mahābali was the son of Virocana; Bāṇa was born to Mahābali and to Bāṇa were born four crores of Nivātakavacas. All these were the prominent children of Diti. Besides them, Diti had crores of other Asuras born to her. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Part 1, Chapter 3; Harivaṁśa, Chapter 3).

4) Birth of Hiraṇyakaśipu and Hiraṇyākṣa. Hiraṇyakaśipu and Hiraṇyākṣa were the rebirth of Jaya and Vijaya, the two gate-keepers of Mahāviṣṇu. (See under Jaya). There is a story as to how they were born as the sons of Diti.

Diti was one of the wives of Kaśyapa. She had no children while the other wives of Kaśyapa had children. Jealousy and grief rankled in her mind. One day she approached Kaśyapa and pressed him to beget a son for her. It was the time of dusk when Kaśyapa was deeply absorbed in his day's devotional worship. She disturbed his "Dhyāna" (devotional concentration) by her importunity, but he was reluctant to yield to her wishes at such an inauspicious time. It is at dusk that Śiva goes about with his attendant hordes of spirits, wearing the crown of his matted hair covered with the dust carried by the whirlwinds from cremation grounds and keeping his three eyes wide open. Kaśyapa asked Diti to wait for a few minutes, until that terrible time was over, but she did not heed his advice. In the fury of her passion she sprang towards him and stripped him of his clothes and in the end Kaśyapa yielded to her carnal desires. But after the act he in a repentant mood told her that she had defiled her mind by having sexual union in that unholy hour and by doing so had sinned against the gods. As a result, twin sons will be born in her womb. They would persecute and torture the three worlds. Mahāviṣṇu would incarnate to destroy them. But since she also felt a little regret in her act, a grandson of her (Prahlāda) will become a devotee of Viṣṇu.

Twin sons, Hiraṇyakaśipu and Hiraṇyākṣa were born to Diti. For the rest of the story, see under Hiraṇyakaśipu and Hiraṇyākṣa. (Bhāgavata, Prathama Skandha).

5) Diti flourishes in the assembly of Brahmā. (M.B Sabhā Parva, Chapter 11, verse 39.)

DIVAḤPUTRA. One of the twelve sūryas who were born in the form of the Sun. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 1, Verse 42).

DIVĀKARA I. A synonym of Sūrya (Sun).

DIVĀKARA II. A son of Garuḍa. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 101).

DIVĀKARA III. See under Niśākara II.

DIVĀKARA IV. A king. During the reign of this king the Matsya Purāṇa was composed.

DIVIRATHA I. A King born in Bharata's dynasty. He was the grandson of Bharata and the son of Bhumanya. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 94, Verse 24).

DIVIRATHA II. A king. He was the son of Dadhivāhana. In the course of Paraśurāma's extermination of Kṣatriyas, the sage Gautama rescued a son of Diviratha and gave shelter to him. (M.B. Śānti Parva, Chapter 49, Verse 80

DIVODĀSA. (ATITHIGVA). A king of Kāśī.

1) Genealogy. From Viṣṇu descended in the following order:—Brahmā - Atri - Candra - Budha - Purūravas - Āyus - Anenas - Pratikṣatra - Sṛñjaya - Jaya - Vijaya - Kṛti-Haryaśva-Sahadeva - Nadina - Jayatsena - Saṁkṛti-Kṣatradharmā-Śuhotra-Śala - Ārṣṭiṣeṇa-Kāśa - Dīrghatapas - Dhanvantari - Ketumān - Bhīmaratha - Divodāsa.

Divodāsa's great grandfather's father, Kāśa had many sons. They were called the Kāśis. It was from Kāśa's reign that Vārāṇasī came to be called Kāśī. (Hari Vaṁśa, Chapter 29).

2) Divodāsa's Reign. When Divodāsa began his rule in Vārāṇasī, there was a Rākṣasa named Kṣemaka. Divodāsa killed him and extended his kingdom. At that stage, Bhadraśreṇya, King of Hehayas invaded Divodāsa. Divodāsa killed the hundred sons of Bhadraśreṇya. At that time the sage Kumbhaka (Nikumbha) came to Kāśī. His practice was to live for a thousand years at any place where he reached at the time of dusk. Since he had reached Vārāṇasī at dusk, he set up an āśrama and lived there for a thousand years. At that time there was a famine in Vārāṇasī. The whole land was in the grip of a severe drought. Kumbhaka's āśrama and its surroundings alone remained green and cool. Herdsmen used to take cattle to graze in the neighbourhood of the āśrama. Once when they returned in the evening, they took with their cows, the sacrificial cow of Kumbhaka. It was dark and the sage searched for the cow everywhere but could not trace its whereabouts At last he came to know by intuition that his cow was taken away by the herdsmen. In his rage he cursed that Vārāṇasī should be ruined and left the place with his disciples. (See under Kumbhaka).

The story of the ruin of Vārāṇasī in Harivaṁśa is different. It was the time when Śiva had married Pārvatī, the daughter of Himavān. After marriage Śiva shifted his residence to his wife's house. Śiva whose task was to look after the affairs of the world, was never available for the purpose at Kailāsa, his own seat. The gods were in a helpless condition. They approached Pārvatī's mother, Menā and requested her to persuade Śiva to return to his own place by any means. Menā called her daughter and ridiculed her husband as a vagabond who had no place to lay his head on. Pārvatī could not bear this insult. Her mother's stinging remarks got circulation in Devaloka. So she urged Śiva to settle down somewhere on earth with her. Śiva agreed and promised to take up residence at Kāśī.

The ruler of Kāśī in those days was Divodāsa. It was a prosperous period in the country. As a rule, man turns to God only when faced with misfortunes. So Śiva decided to bring about a famine among the people of the country by ruining it. For that he sent sage Kumbhaka to Vārāṇasī. Kumbhaka arrived in Kāśī and appeared to the barber Karṇaka to whom he communicated Śiva's intentions. The barber cheerfully fell in with the proposal and built a temple on the next day for the residence of Kumbhaka. Living in the temple, Kumbhaka began to participate in the spiritual matters of the people. His blessings were much sought after and people came to have deep faith in him.

Divodāsa had no children. He had made many pious offerings to gods and performed many holy rites for removing his wife's sterility, but it was all in vain. At last, at the King's suggestion, she began to offer pūjā to Kumbhaka praying for issue. But even after a long period of devoted worship, she received no blessing or boon from the sage. Moved by the pathetic condition of his queen, Suyaśas, Divodāsa reproached Kumbhaka very severely. He reprimanded him for denying his blessings to the queen while he was showering them on all and sundry in the country. Provoked at the King's rebuke, Kumbhaka pronounced a curse that the country should be ruined. As a result of it the country began to decline. (Harivaṁśa, Chapter 29).

Śiva and Pārvatī came and settled down in Vārāṇasī. After some years, Pārvatī began to press her husband to leave the place and to go somewhere else. Śiva was not inclined to do so. He said the place was "Avimukta" and therefore insisted that he would not leave it. From that time the place came to be called "Avimukta."

3) Other details.

(1) Towards the end of his life Divodāsa became a Rājarṣi (Royal Saint). There are numerous references to this Rājarṣi in the Ṛgveda. Since Divodāsa was of a very hospitable nature he was known by another name, "Atithigva". In Ṛgveda, 1st Maṇḍala, 16th Anuvāka, 127th Sūkta, we read that once he hid himself under water to escape from an Asura called Śambara.

(2) Divodāsa had a son named "Parucchepa", who was a Ṛṣi. Ṛgveda 1st Maṇḍala 19th Anuvāka, 127th Sūkta relates to Parucchepa.

(3) Bhīmaratha, the father of Divodāsa, had two other names, Bhīmasena, and Sudeva. Divodāsa purchased Mādhavī, the daughter of Yayāti after paying two hundred Śyāmakarṇāśvas (beautiful horses with dark-coloured ears) to Gālava, so that he might have children. After the birth of his children, he returned Mādhavī to her father. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 117).

(4) He sits in Yama's assembly and offers Pūjā to Yama. (M.B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 8, Verse 12).

(5) Divodāsa once plundered the accessories of his enemies. Agnihotra vanished after it. (M.B. Śānti Parva, Chapter 96, Verse 21).

(6) It was at the behest of Indra that Divodāsa built the city of Vāraṇasī (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 30, Verse 16).

(7) Once Divodāsa fought with the King of Hehaya for one thousand days. After having lost his army he went to the sage Bharadvāja and performed Putrakāmeṣṭi sacrifice. As a result of it a son Pratardana was born to him. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 30).

(8) Other names for Divodāsa used in the Mahābhārata are—Bhaimaseni, Kāśīśa, Saudeva, Sudevatanaya etc.

DIVYĀDEVĪ. Daughter of Divodāsa, King of Plakṣadvīpa. There is a story about this princess in Padma Purāṇa, Bhūmikhaṇḍa, Chapters 85, 88.

Divodāsa decided to give his daughter Divyā in marriage to Citrasena, King of Rūpadeśa. But just before the day fixed for the marriage Citrasena died prematurely. So, as advised by the Brāhmaṇas who had come there she was married to Rūpasena. He also died soon after. She was subsequently married to 21 persons in turn, and all of them died one by one.

Everyone took pity on her for her ill-fate. At last, at the suggestion of the ministers, preparations were made for her svayaṁvara. Here also ill-luck pursued her. All the princes who arrived to take part in the svayaṁvara killed each other in mutual fight. Depressed and embittered by all this, Divyā decided torenounce all worldly pleasures and proceeded to the forest.

Once Śuka named Ujjvala came to Plakṣadvīpa. Moved to pity at the grief-stricken Divyā he taught her "Aśūnyaśayana" vrata. When she practised this vrata with devotion for about four years, Mahāviṣṇu appeared before her and took her with him to Viṣṇuloka.

DIVYAKAṬAM. A city situated in Western India in ancient times. According to Mahābhārata this city was conquered by Nakula.—Sabhā Parva, Chapter 32.

DIVYAKARMAKṚT. A Viśvadeva. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 91, Verse 35).

DIVYASĀNU. A Viśvadeva. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 91, Verse 30).

DIVYAVARṢA(M). 365 days make one year for human beings. One year for human beings is one day for the gods. 365 such days of the gods make one year for the gods. This means that 365 years for human beings are equal to one year for the gods. The year for the gods is known as "Divyavarṣa" or "Divyavatsara". Kṛtayuga is made up of 4,800 Divyavatsaras. Tretāyuga has 3,600 Divyavatsaras. 2,400 Divyavatsaras make up one Dvāparayuga. Kaliyuga has 1,200 Divyavatsaras. 12,000 Divyavarṣas of this kind make up one "caturyuga". 71 Caturyugas are the period of one Manu. After the end of the period of one Manu, the gods complete their term of existence. The total period of 14 Manus is called a Kalpa. At the end of every Kalpa there is a deluge. One Kalpa is one day time for Brahmā. After the deluge, until the time of one Kalpa, is Brahmā's night. There is no universe at that time. At the end of that Kalpa, the next Kalpa begins and Brahmā starts his work of creation. In this way when 360 days and nights of Brahmā are completed, it is one Brahmā Varṣa. One Brahmā life-span is 120 such years. After that there is nothing for a Brahmā's life-span. Then Brahmā is re-born and resumes creation. (Bhāgavata, Daśama Skandha).

DRAUPADĪ. Pāñcālī, the wife of the Pāṇḍavas. (See under Pāñcālī).

DRAUPADĪHARAṆA PARVA. A sub section of Vana Parva in the Mahābhārata. This covers Chapters 262 to 271 of Vana Parva.

DRAUPADĪSATYABHĀMĀSAṀVĀDA PARVA. A sub section of Vana Parva, in the Mahābhārata. This comprises Chapters 233 to 235 of Vana Parva.

DRAVIḌA I. A King of the family of Priyavrata who was the son of Manu. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 5).

DRAVIḌA II. A gandharva who was the father of Kaṁsa. (See under Kaṁsa) Aṁśumatī was the daughter of this gandharva. (See under Aṁśumatī).

DRAVIḌA(M). (DRĀVIḌA). In ancient days the whole of South India was known by the name Tamilaka, as Tamil was the language used throughout South India. Strictly speaking, all the languages used in South India were given the name Tamil. The word 'Tamil' underwent changes in the language of North India and took the form 'Drāvida'. Etymologists are of opinion that the changes that took place in the word Tamil were are follows :- Tamil — Damil — Damiḍ- — Dramiḍ — Draviḍ — Drāviḍ. Reference to the Drāviḍa country occurs in most of the Purāṇas. Mahābhārata states that Sahadeva, one of the Pāṇḍavas, sent a note for collecting taxes from the people of Drāvida. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 31, Stanza 71.

"There are other countries also in the southern Bhārata such as Dravida, Kerala, Prācya, Mūṣika, Vanavāsīka Karṇāṭaka, Mahiṣaka, Vikalpa and Mūṣaka." This statement (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 9) throws light on the various countries which existed in South India at the time of Mahābhārata. In Bhāgavata, Skandha 10, it is mentioned that Kaṁsa, the uncle of Śrī Kṛṣṇa, was the son of Dramila, a gandharva. (See under Kaṁsa).

DRĀVIDAS. It is stated in Mahābhārata (Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 33, Stanza 22) that the drāvidas were originally Kṣatriyas and that they became Śūdras by the curse of Brāhmaṇas.

DRĀVIḌA BHĀṢĀ. (Dravidian Language). Linguists have classified the languages of the world under certain groups. Important among them are the Indo-European group, the semitic group, the Hamitic group, the Ural Altaic group, the South East Asiatic group, the Dravidian group, Austric group, the Bantu group and the Chinese group.

Almost all the languages in South India belong to the Dravidian group. The languages of this group are Tamil, Telugu, Kannaḍa, Malayālam, Tulu, Kuṭaku, Toṭa, Koṭa, Baḍaka, Kuruk and Brāhūī. Of these Brāhūī alone is used in the mountain regions of Balucisthan. Linguists like Smīmud and others have stated that there is a close relation between the Australian and Dravidian languages. The Āryan language has influenceed the Dravidian languages to a great extent. But Tamil has not been so much influenced as Telugu, Kannaḍa and Malayālam. It is because Tamil had a great wealth of literature of its own from ancient times.

The Dravidian group is again divided into four sections: Eastern, Western, Northern and Southern. Brāhūī is the only language in the Northern section. Its Etymology, grammar etc. are like that of the Dravidian group. But it had been influenced to a large extent by the Iranian language. Still it keeps its Dravidian character.

Telugu, Goṇḍi, Kuruk, Kolāmi, Mālṭa etc. come under the Eastern group. Of these only Telugu has grown as a literary language. Telugu is in use from Madras to Mahendragiri. But it has various sub-divisions and local differences. The Telugu used in the Districts of Kṛṣṇā and Godāvarī is considered to be the purest form. Golari, Sālevāri, Kāmāri, Vāsari, Dāsari etc. are its local sub-divisions. Over modern Telugu, Sanskrit has its full sway.

Kannaḍa, Kuṭaku, Toṭa, Koḍa, etc. come under the western group. Kannaḍa is used in Mysore and the vicinity of the Districts of Coimbatore, Salem, Bellary, Anantapore etc. Baḍaka used in the Nilgiris, Kurumpa, used in the vicinity of Nilgiris, Kuṭaku used in Coorg, are the sub divisions of Kannaḍa. In edicts from the 5th century Kannaḍa could be seen in its ancient form. The modern Kannaḍa has been used from 16th century onwards. Tulu is in use in places between the rivers Candragiri in the south of Southern Canara and Kalyāṇapurī. Only a few ancient songs could be included in Tulu literature. The Malayālam script is used to write Tulu. But now certain books in Tulu have been published using Kannaḍa script.

Tamil and Malayālam are the languages of the Southern section. The oldest literature in the Dravidian group is in Tamil. The most ancient form of Tamil is seen in the edicts and stone tables of the 30th century B.C. The most important among them are the Saṅga works. The grammatical work 'Tolkāppiyam, is the literary grammar of Centamil. Malayālam became an independent language only by the 8th century A.D.The close relation that exists between Tamil and Malayālam is not visible in any other language of the Dravidian group. By examining the inter-relations of the various languages in the Dravidian group, and noting how close or distant the relation is, we can ascertain which languages separated themselves first from the original Dravida language.

DRAVIṆASA. A Pracetas. (One of the ten sons of the Prācīna Barhis). (Bhāgavata, Skandha 4).

DRAVIRATHA. A King of the family of Aṅga. He was the son of Dadhivāhanà and the father of Dharmaratha (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 277).

DRAVYAŚUDDHI. Purifying impure things, The mode of purification of impure things, in ancient India, was known as dravyaśuddhi. The procedure of purification was as follows :

If earthern-wares became impure by coming into contact with urine or excreta, they should be burnt in fire. Golden or copper vessels may be remoulded or filled with or dipped in tamarind water. Things made of iron or bronze may be washed in ash-water. Things made of glass or pearl need only be washed in pure water. Things born in water such as lotus etc. could be purified by dipping them in water. If cloth is made impure rub it with soil and dip it in water. If it is a large quantity of cloth, a mixture of soil and water may be sprinkled on it. Wooden things will become pure by planing. Cot, chair, fan, cart etc. need only be washed. Pots used for cooking meat may be touched with cow's milk. Things made of ivory may be washed in mustard-water. Jaggery, salt etc. need only be dried. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 156).

DṚḌHA I. (DṚḌHAVARMAN). One of the hundred sons of Dhṛtarāṣṭra. Bhīmasena killed him in the great war. (Droṇa Parva, Chapter 137).

DṚḌHA II. (DṚḌHAKṢATRA). One of the hundred sons of Dhṛtarāṣṭra. Bhīmasena killed him. (Droṇa Parva. Chapter 157).

DṚḌHADHANVĀ. A King of the Pūru dynasty. He was present on the occasion of Pāñcālī's svayaṁvara. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 105. Verse 15).

DṚḌHAHASTA. One of the hundred sons of Dhṛtarāṣṭra. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 67, Verse 102).

DṚḌHAKṢATRA. See Dṛḍha II.

DṚḌHANEMI. A King of the Pūru dynasty. He was the son of Satyahṛdi and father of Supārśva. (Bhāgavata, Daśama Skandha).

DṚḌHARATHA I. (Dṛḍharathāśraya). One of the 100 sons of Dhṛtarāṣṭra killed in the great war by Bhīma. (Droṇa Parva, Chapter 157).

DṚḌHARATHA II. One of the kings, who should be remembered both at dawn and before sun-set. (Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 165, Verse 52).

DṚḌHARATHĀŚRAYA. See Dṛḍharatha I.

DṚḌHASANDHA. (ŚATRUÑJAYA). One of the 100 sons of Dhṛtarāṣṭra. He was killed in the great war by Bhīma. (Droṇa Parva Chapter 137, Verse 20).

DṚḌHASENA. A King of the Yayāti dynasty. He fought in the great war on the side of the Pāṇḍavas and was killed by Droṇa. (Droṇa Parva, Chapter 21, Verse 52).

DṚḌHĀŚVA. A famous king of the Ikṣvāku dynasty. He was the son of Kuvalayāśva who had 21,000 sons. All those sons but three were killed in the fight with an asura called Dhundhu. The three sons who survived the killing were Dṛḍhāśva, Kapilāśva and Candrāśva. (Vana Parva, Chapter 204).

DṚḌHASYU. A son born to Agastya maharṣi by Lopāmudrā. He was born only after remaining in the mother's womb for seven years. He was a very great scholar and tapasvī. He began studying the Vedas from the very time of his birth. He is called Idhmavāha also. (See Idhmavāha).

DṚḌHAVARMĀ I. See Dṛḍha I.

DṚḌHAVARMĀ. II. A King. Kadalīgarbhā was the name of his wife. (See under Kadalīgarbhā).

DṚḌHAVYA. A maharṣi. He was one of the seven Ṛtviks of Dharamarāja. Unmucu, Pramucu, Ātreya, Dṛḍhavya, Ūrdhvabāhu, Tṛṇasoma and Aṅgiras were the seven Ṛtviks. (Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 150, Verse 34).

DṚḌHAVRATA. A brahmarṣi who lived in South India. (Śānti Parva, Chapter 208, Verse 28).

DṚḌHĀYU I. Son born to King Purūravas by Urvaśī. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 75, Verse 25).

DṚḌHĀYU II. A King who lived in North India during the time of the great war. (Udyoga Parva, Chapter 4, Verse 23).

DṚḌHĀYU III. A brahmarṣi of South India. He is known as Dṛḍhavya and Dṛḍhavrata also (Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 65, Verse 40).

DṚḌHĀYUDHA. (CITRĀYUDHA). One of the 100 sons of Dhṛtarāṣṭra killed in the great war. (Droṇa Parva, Chapter 136, Verse 20).

DṚḌHEYU. A maharṣi who lived in the western part of India. (Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 150, Verse 36).

DṚḌHEṢṬADHĪ. A King in ancient India. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 1, Verse 238).

DROṆA I. The teacher in archery of the Pāṇḍavas and the Kauravas.

1) Birth. Droṇa was the son of Bharadvāja who had his hermitage erected on the bank of the Ganges. Once Bharadvāja went to bathe in the river. When he got into the river he saw the celestial maid Ghṛtācī. The celestial maid ran away as soon as she saw the hermit. But her cloth was caught in grass and slipped off her body. When the hermit saw the complete form of her body which was bright and beautiful, he had seminal discharge. The discharged semen was kept in a Droṇa (trough). A child was born from that and he was named Droṇa, who was brought up in the hermitage. (M. B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 13).

2) Education and Marriage. Droṇa learned the art of using weapons from his father and the hermit Agniveśa. Drupada the prince of Pāñcāla was the fellow student of Droṇa. They became great friends. On completion of education Drupada returned to Pāñcāla. Droṇa married Kṛpī the daughter of Śaradvān. A son was born to them. At his birth the child neighed like the horse Uccaiḥśravas ; so his parents named him Aśvatthāmā. Hearing that Paraśurāma was giving Brāhmaṇas free gift of wealth and property, Droṇa reached there. Droṇa's desire was to get Dhanurveda (the art of archery). Droṇa with his disciples went to Mahendragiri and saw Paraśurāma, who was about to enter forest giving away everything he had. Paraśurāma said, "I have given away to the Brāhmaṇas gold and everything I had. The land I had conquered is given to Kaśyapa. Now there remains only my body and some weapons. You can have one of them."

Droṇa preferred the weapons. Thus Droṇa got the entire armoury of Paraśurāma. (M. B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 13).

3) He became the teacher of the Pāṇḍavas and the Kauravas. After receiving dhanurveda from Paraśurāma Droṇa went to Pāñcāla. Drupada who had been a fellow student of Droṇa was the King of Uttarapāñcāla. then. Though Droṇa had become proficient in archery, he was very poor.

He had no money even to buy milk for his child. Once the playmates of Aśvatthāmā made him drink a mixture of water and flour saying that it was milk. So Droṇa approached Drupada for financial help. But Drupada shunned his fellow student, scolded him and sent him away without giving any help. Droṇa vowed that he would, somehow or other, take revenge upon Drupada and departed from Pāñcāla.

The aim of Droṇa was to get some capable disciples. He reached Hastināpura and stayed in disguise with Gautama for a while. Once the Pāṇḍavas and the Kauravas who were boys were engaged in the game of Kāra (a kind of cricket play) outside the palace premises. The ball fell in a well by chance. The princess stood round the well and began to ponder how to get the 'ball' out of the well. They tried all means but in vain. At that time a Brāhmaṇa of dark complexion, short and aged, came by that way. It was Droṇa. The boys gathered round the old man. Droṇa threw his ring also into the well and said : "Your kingly qualities are very poor. Your education in using weapons is not complete. If you give me a meal I will get both the ring and the ball together" The boys agreed to the conditions. Droṇa took a grass and evoked arrow into it by mantra (spell) and shot it at the 'Kāra'. The next grass was shot at the first grass. It struck the first grass. Thus he shot grasses one after another till the grass reached the brink of the well and by pulling the grass he took the ball out. In the same way he took the ring also out of the well. When they got the 'Kāra' the boys stood round Droṇa and asked him what he would like as the reward for his deed. Droṇa said that they need only tell Bhīṣma how a short man of dark complexion took the ball out of the well. Accordingly the boys went to Bhīṣma and told him everything. Immediately Bhīṣma understood that it was Droṇa. Bhīṣma thought that Droṇa was the best person to teach the princes. So Droṇa was brought to the palace and was engaged as the teacher in archery. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapters 130 and 131).

4) Education in Archery of the Kauravas and reward.

(a) First vow. Droṇa asked the Pāṇḍavas and the Kauravas to sit together and then told them. "There is one thing that you should do for me when your education is over". Hearing this they all kept silent. But Arjuna came forward and took the vow that he would achieve that task according to the wish of the teacher.

(b) The disciple who is second to none. The training in weapons commenced. Hearing of the fame of Droṇa, disciples came from places far and near. Arjuna was the first of all the students. Sending all the students to fetch water Droṇa taught his son Aśvatthāmā certain special lessons.[1] Arjuna secretly knew this. So he brought water as quickly as possible before the others. As Droṇa loved his brilliant student Arjuna, he taught both his son and Arjuna alike the secrets. Seeing the brilliance of Arjuna Droṇa ordered the cook not to seat Arjuna in a dark place for meals. Yet it happened once that the light was extinguished by wind while the princes were having their meals. All sat still, without eating, while Arjuna alone ate his food. From this Arjuna discovered that without seeing the object one could hit the target by constant practice. Droṇa was greatly pleased at this and embracing him promised to try to make him such an expert that there would be none equal to him in archery.

(c) Ekalavya. Once Arjuna and the other disciples went to the forest for a hunt and there they met Ekalavya who was superior to Arjuna in archery. This Ekalavya had once approached Droṇa to learn archery from him. But it was against the rule for a Brahmin to teach a forester the art of fighting. So Ekalavya returned to the forest and making an earthen image of Droṇa worshipped it and began self-learning in archery. Now he had become superior to Arjuna in archery. The teacher had said that none would be equal to Arjuna in archery. Arjuna told Droṇa about Ekalavya. The teacher went to the forest and got the thumb of Ekalavya as the reward due to the teacher. Since then Ekalavya became a great archer though only of a lower level than Arjuna (See under Ekalavya).

d) Expert disciple. The education in archery and the use of weapons was nearing completion. In archery Arjuna was second to none. Duryodhana and Bhīma became expert club-men. Aśvatthāmā was the first in the secrets of archery. Nakula and Sahadeva became expert swordsmen. Arjuna was expert in all branches of weapon-training. Bhīma had bodily strength and Arjuna had the strength of learning. Yudhiṣṭhira was the foremost in chariot-fighting.

1. To take revenge on Drupada was the thought that was uppermost in the mind of Droṇa.

e) Artificial bird. Once Droṇa placed an artificial bird on the branch of a tree without the knowledge of the princes, to test their practice in archery. Then he placed his disciples with their bows, around the tree, and told them to shoot the bird down at his command. Droṇa first called Dharmaputra and told him to look at the bird. Then he asked him what he saw. Dharmaputra said that he saw the bird, the tree, the teacher and the students. He tested one by one. All gave the same reply, that Dharmaputra gave. At last he asked Arjuna. Arjuna stood for a while, taking aim and said that he saw a bird only. The teacher commanded to shoot and Arjuna sent an arrow. At the first shot the bird fell down headless. With this test Droṇa understood that Arjuna could defeat Drupada and embraced his disciple.

f) Droṇa caught by a crocodile. Once Droṇa and his disciples went to bathe in the Ganges. While they were dipping and splashing in the water a crocodile caught Droṇa by the leg. Droṇa was unable to extricate himself from the grip of the crocodile. So he asked his disciples to shoot the crocodile and kill it. All stood agape. Arjuna at once took bow and arrows and sent five arrows one after another at the crocodile, which died instantly and came afloat. The teacher, who was much pleased, got out of the water and embraced Arjuna and taught him 'Brahma Śirāstra', a divine weapon. After imparting this knowledge Droṇa told Arjuna not to operate this weapon on man. But if an enemy superior to man attacked him, then only, he should send this missile at him to kill him.

Giving due respect to the advice of the teacher, Arjuna received the Brahmaśirāstra. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 133).

g) Demonstration by the pupils. When the training of the princes terminated, Dhṛtarāṣṭra accorded sanction to hold a demonstration of weapon-play, by the princes. An arena was got ready. Droṇa entered the arena. As a preliminary rite Droṇa worshipped the gods. Then he invited Brāhmaṇas to bless his pupils. After that the pupils gave the teacher, gold, precious stones, cloths, and other costly things. The princes paid homage to to their teacher. The teacher gave his blessings to them. With this the demonstration commenced. Clubbing between Duryodhana and Bhīma was a terrible one. But the mock fighting changed to a serious fight. Droṇa sent Aśvatthāmā who separated them. The audience applauded their performance. The performance of Arjuna was of the most superior type and the audience and the teacher were struck with wonder at his extraordinary capability. Karṇa also showed his performance. (For details see under Arjuna, Para 1 and Karṇa, Para 4). (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapters 133 and 134).

5) Revenge upon Drupada. When demonstration came to an end it was the time for giving the teacher the gift due to him. The teacher had, at the beginning, told his pupils that on completion of the training they should give him a gift. Accordingly he demanded that Drupada, the King of Pāñcāla, should be brought before him with his hands tied. As soon as Duryodhana and Karṇa heard this they rapidly marched to Pāñcāla and engaged Drupada in a fight but were defeated by Drupada. After that Arjuna entered the battle-field, defeated and tied Drupada and brought him before Droṇa who was kind enough not to kill Drupada. The Kingdom of Pāñcāla was divided into two. Drupada was given Uttara-Pāñcāla and Droṇa took Dakṣiṇa Pāñcāla. Then Drupada was released. (M. B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 137).

6) Arjuna is accorded sanction to fight with his teacher. One year after the revenge on Drupada Yudhiṣṭhira was anointed as heir-apparent, by Dhṛtarāṣṭra. Once, in the council of the king, Droṇa called Arjuna to him and said: "Oh, Arjuna ! you must take an oath to do a particular thing in the presence of your relatives. If it happens that I oppose you in battle you should fight against me without thinking that I am your teacher. This oath is your gift to your teacher." Arjuna agreed and took the oath in the presence of the people. Because there was such an oath Arjuna's conscience did not prick him when he had to fight against his teacher Droṇa in the battle of Bhārata between the Pāṇḍavas and Kauravas. (M. B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 139).

7) Part played by Droṇa up to the battle of Bhārata.

(1) Duryodhana and his party came to know only at the time of the svayaṁvara (marriage) of Pāñcālī that the Pāṇḍavas were not killed in the lac house burning. When Arjuna won the test and got Pāñcālī, the Kauravas became furious and began to plot against the Pāṇḍavas. At that time Droṇa came to the council-hall of the Kauravas and said that the Kauravas should go to Pāñcāla and greet the Pāṇḍavas, bring them back and give them half of the kingdom. (M. B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 203).

(2) Droṇa was present at the sacrifice of Rājasūya (imperial consecration) performed by Yudhiṣṭhira. (M. B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 34, Stanza 8).

(3) When the game of dice was going on between Śakuni and Yudhiṣṭhira Droṇa came with Dhṛtarāṣṭra to the place to witness the game. (M. B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 60, Stanza 2).

(4) Droṇa declared that the game of dice between Śakuni and Yudhiṣṭhira was not fair (M. B. Vana Parva, Chapter 9, Stanza 2).

(5) Droṇa was well-versed in archery. (M. B. Vana Parva, Chapter 37, Stanza 4).

(6) While the Pāṇḍavas were living in the country of Virāṭa, Arjuna in the guise of Bṛhannala, fought with the Kauravas. Droṇa was the first to recognize Bṛhannala as Arjuna at the sound of his conch. (M. B. Virāṭa Parva, Chapter 46, Stanza 24).

(7) In that fight Droṇa fought with Arjuna whose arrows wounded Droṇa and he ran away from the battlefield. (M. B. Virāṭa Parva, Chapter 58).

(8) When Śrī Kṛṣṇa came to the council-hall of the Kauravas to plead for a treaty on behalf of the Pāṇḍavas who had returned after forest life and pseudonymity, Droṇa took the side of the Pāṇḍavas and argued with Duryodhana. (M. B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 126).

(9) Droṇa advised Dhṛtarāṣṭra to see that a battle between the Kauravas and the Pāṇḍavas was avoided. (M. B. Udyoga Parva, two Chapters from 138).

(10) When it was almost decided that the battle was inevitable Droṇa boasted to Duryodhana that he would annihilate the army of the Pāṇḍavas within a month. (M. B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 193, Stanza 18).

8) Why Droṇa, whose leaning was towards the Pāṇḍavas, took the side of the Kauravas in the battle of Bhārata. At heart Droṇa was on the side of the Pāṇḍavas. But he fought against them, taking the side of the Kauravas. Even at that time he ardently wished the Pāṇḍavas to win the battle. What is the reason for it? An answer to this question is found in Mahābhārata, Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 43.

The battle was about to begin. Dharmaputra went to Droṇa and bowed before him and requested to bless him so that he might win the battle against the Kauravas. Droṇa said, "It is good on your part to have come and seen me before the battle is begun. If you had not seen me I would have cursed you to lose the battle. But today I am honoured since you have come. You fight the battle. Victory is yours. But I have to stand with the Kauravas, and there is a reason for it. Man is a slave of money and money is not the slave of Man. The Kauravas have tied me with money[1]. Śrī Kṛṣṇa will be on the side of the righteous. Where Śrī Kṛṣṇa is, there will be victory. But so long as I fight it is difficult for you to win. So try to kill me at the beginning of the battle. You need not feel sorry for killing your teacher. Because when I shower arrows and fight vehemently I won't look to see which enemy has struck me down. Enemies could kill me only when I am lying on darbha grass leaving fighting in disappointment. I will put down my weapons in battle only when I hear words which I dislike to hear."

After having revealed these secrets of his own he sent Yudhiṣṭhira back. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 43).

9) Droṇa in the battle of Bhārata. (1) On the first day of the battle Droṇa fought in a combat with Dhṛṣṭadyumna, who was defeated. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 77, Stanza 69).

(2) Droṇa killed Śaṅkha the son of King Virāṭa. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 82, Stanza 23).

(3) Droṇa became unconscious by the clubbing of Bhīmasena. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 94, Stanza 19).

(4) Droṇa fought with Arjuna. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 102, Stanza 6).

(5) Droṇa defeated Drupada. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 104, Stanza 24).

(6) There was a fight between Droṇa and Yudhiṣṭhira (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 110, Stanza 17).

(7) Droṇa combated with Dhṛṣṭadyumna. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 116, Stanza 45).

(8) He became the commander-in-general after the fall of Bhīṣma. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 7, Stanza 5).

(9) He gave Duryodhana a boon to catch Yudhiṣṭhira alive. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 12, Stanza 20).

(10) He killed Yugandhara. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 16, Stanza 31).

(11) Vyāghradatta and Siṁhasena were killed by Droṇa. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter, 16, Stanza 37).

(12) In the fight which followed Arjuna and his army were driven back by Droṇa. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 16, Stanza 50).

(13) Droṇa advised Duryodhana to try to get Arjuna away from the battlefield. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 17, Stanza 3).

(14) He killed Baka. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 21, Stanza 16).

(15) He killed Sātyaki. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 21, Stanza 21).

(16) He killed Śatānīka. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 21 Stanza 28).

(17) Dṛḍhasena was killed by Droṇa. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 21, Stanza 52).

(18) Droṇa killed Kṣema. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 21, Stanza 53).

(19) He killed Vasudāna and Kṣatradeva. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 21, Stanzas 55, 56).

(20) He fought again with Dhṛṣṭadyumna. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 31, Stanza 8).

(21) He annihilated the army of the Pāṇḍavas. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 32, Stanza 42).

(22) He made a Cakravyūha. (Strategical formation of the army in the shape of a wheel). (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 34, Stanza 13).

(23) He broke the sword of Abhimanyu (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 48, Stanza 37).

(24) By forming cakraśakaṭavyūha he saved Jayadratha. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 87, Stanza 22).

(25) He fought with Arjuna again. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 91, Stanza 11).

(26) He put the divine armour on Duryodhana. (M.B, Droṇa Parva, Chapter 94, Stanza 39).

(27) A fierce fight ensued between Droṇa and Dhṛṣṭadyumna. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapters 95 to 97).

(28) He wounded Sātyaki. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 11).

(29) Sātyaki defeated Droṇa. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 117, Stanza 30).

(30) Droṇa scolded Duśśāsana who ran away defeated by Sātyaki. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 122).

(31) He killed Vīraketu. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 122, Stanza 41).

(32) He killed Citraketu, Sudhanvā, Citravarmā and Citraratha. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 122, stanza 43).

(33) He fell unconscious, hit by Dhṛṣṭadyumna. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 122, Stanza 56).

(34) He defeated Dhṛṣṭadyumna. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 122, Stanza 71).

(35) He killed Bṛhatkṣatra. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 125, Stanza 22).

(36) He killed Dhṛṣṭaketu for his son. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 125, Stanza 39).

(37) Sahadeva, the son of Jarāsandha, was killed by Droṇa. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 125, Stanza 45).

(38) He killed Kṣatradharmā the son of Dhṛṣṭadyumna. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 125, Stanza 66).

(39) Bhīmasena defeated Droṇa. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 127, Stanza 53).

(40) Bhīmasena threw away the chariot with Droṇa in it eight times. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 128, Stanza 13).

1. "Man is slave to wealth, wealth is slave to none. This is true oh King. The Kauravas have bound me with wealth. I am telling you this without shame. You only require battle. I will fight for the Kauravas and wish for your victory,"

(41) Droṇa killed the King of Hehaya, all the sons of Dhṛṣṭadyumna, and the King Śibi. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 155, Stanza 14).

(42) He became unconscious in the fight with Yudhiṣṭhira. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 162, Stanza 49).

(43) He killed Drupada and Virāṭa, the grandsons of Drupada. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 186, Stanza 33).

(44) Hearing that Aśvatthāmā had been killed he was filled with grief. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 190, Stanza 57).

(45) After that throwing away the weapons, he immersed in a deep meditation and attained harmony with the Supreme Being and his spirit entered the realm of Brahmā. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 192, Stanza 43).

(46) Thus by the power of meditation his spirit went to heaven and the body without spirit sat motionless in meditation. Dhṛṣṭadyumna cut off his head and thus killed Droṇa. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 193, Stanza 62).

10) Other details. (1) Vyāsa evoked the spirits of those who died in the battle of Bhārata to the surface of the Ganges. The spirit of Droṇa was one of them. (M.B. Āśramavāsika Parva, Chapter 32, Stanza 7).

(2) Offerings were given to the manes for Droṇa. (M.B. Śānti Parva, Chapter 296, Stanza 15).

(3) Droṇa attained heaven after his death, and was absorbed in Bṛhaspati (M.B. Svargārohaṇa Parva, Chapter 4, Stanza 21).

(4) He was the man who took birth through Bharadvāja from a portion of Bṛhaspati. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 67, Stanza 69).

(5) Ācārya (teacher), Ācārya-mukhya (chief teacher) Bhāradvāja, Bharadvājasuta, Bharadvājātmaja, Bharatācārya, Śoṇāśva, Śoṇāśvavāha, Śoṇahaya, Guru and Rukmaratha are used as synonyms of Droṇa by Vyāsa in Mahābhārata.

DROṆA II. A bird. A son born to the hermit Mandapāla of Jaritā, a bird. (See under Khāṇḍavadāha, Para 8).

DROṆAM. A medicinal herb. (See under Maruttvāmala).

DROṆĀBHIṢEKAPARVA. Asubsection of DroṇaParva : Chapters 1 to 16.

DROṆA PARVA. An important Parva (section) in the Mahābhārata.

DROṆAVADHA PARVA. A sub section of Droṇa Parva: Chapters 154 to 192.

DROṆAŚARMAPADA. A holy bath (tīrtha). (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 25, Stanza 28).

DṚṢADVĀN. Father-in-law of King Saṁyāti of Pūru dynasty. Varāṅgī was the name of Saṁyāti's wife. (See Saṁyāti).

DṚṢADVATĪ. A river to the south of Kurukṣetra. During their exile in the forest the Pāṇḍavas drank water from it. (Vana Parva, Chapter 5, Verse 2). It was on the delta of this river that Śiva imparted advice to Yudhiṣṭhira. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 78, Verse 15). Living on the northern bank of this river is equal to living in Svarga. (Vana Parva, Chapter 88). To perform bali and other rites for the souls of the dead after bathing in the river is as efficacious as performing the Agniṣṭoma Yajña. (Vana Parva, Chapter 88).

DṚṢṬAKETU. A dānava. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 67, Verse 8).

DRUPADA. (Saumaki,[1] Yajñasena). Father of Pāñcālī.

1) Genealogy. Descended from Viṣṇu in the following order:—Brahmā—Atri—Candra—Budha—Purūravas—Āyus — Nahuṣa — Yayāti—Pūru—Janamejaya—Prāciuvān—Pravīra—Namasyu—Vītabhaya—Śuṇḍu—Bahuvidha — Saṁyāti—Rahovādi—Raudrāśva—Matināra—Santurodha—Duṣyanta—Bharata—Suhottra—Suhotā—Gala—Gardda—Suketu—Bṛhatkṣatra—Hasti — Ajamīdhā — Nīla — Śānti—Suśānti—Puruja—Arka—Bharmyāśva—Pāñcāla— Mudgala — Divodāsa — Mitreyu — Pṛṣata — Sudāsa — Sahadeva — Somaka—Yajñasena (Drupada).

2) Education and kingship. Yajñasena went to the hermitage of Bharadvāja for education. Droṇa, who became a great teacher in archery later, was also a student and disciple of Bharadvāja at that time. Thus during the time of education both Drupada and Droṇa became fast friends. After receiving education Drupada returned to his country. At that time Pāñcāla was ruled by Pṛṣata. When Yajñasena returned on completion of his education, Pṛṣata died and Yajñasena was anointed as King of Uttara-Pāñcāla. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 129).

3) Yajñasena reproaches Droṇa. It has already been said that during the period of education Droṇa and Yajñasena were fast friends. Once Drupada said to Droṇa: "My dear friend. My father has told me that I would be made the King of Uttara Pāñcāla on completing my education. Thus if I become a King, the treasury of the King will be at your disposal."

After the education both returned to their places. Not much later Droṇa got married. A son born to him was named Aśvatthāmā. Droṇa was so poor that he could not even buy milk for his child. Once the friends of Aśvatthāmā mixed flour in water and made him drink it saying that it was milk. Aśvatthāmā drank it without knowing that it was not milk. Thinking that he had become energetic by drinking milk he began to run with the other boys. At last they told him the truth and teased him.

With his wife and child Droṇa went to Drupada who did not care to recognize him as a friend. Droṇa tried to remind him of their former friendship. But Drupada shunned him and said, "If I had friendship with you, it was to achieve certain ends. There is no friendship between the rich and the poor, the learned and the illiterate, the brave and the coward. So if there was any friendship at all it was not real. You, who are slow of brain! Kings of high status cannot have friendship with such people especially the poor. A Brahmin learned in Vedas won't befriend a Brahmin who is not learned in Vedas, a man seated in a chariot cannot befriend a man who is not seated in a chariot and a King cannot befriend one who is not a King. So a friendship of bygone days is no friendship at all".

Drupada's reproaches aroused a storm of anger in Droṇa. He vowed that he would avenge the insult. With his wife and child he got out of the palace. He wandered about in search of disciples who were capable of confronting with Drupada. At last he came to Hastināpura and became the teacher of the Pāṇḍavas and the Kauravas. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 130).

1. Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 66. Stanza 68 states that the original name of Drupada was Yajñasena. Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 120, Stanza 41, states that Drupada was the son of Pṛṣata. But according to other purāṇas Pṛṣata was the father of Drupada's great grandfather. In Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 131, Stanza 6, Drupada is addressed as 'Saumaki; the son of Somaka.

4) The revenge of Droṇa. Droṇa told Bhīṣma about his dealings with Drupada. Bhīṣma consoled Droṇa. Before the commencement of the training in archery, Droṇa told his disciples : "When your training in archery is completed you will have to do a favour to your teacher". All stood agape. But Arjuna came forward and said: "I will do". Droṇa embraced Arjuna. The training commenced. The Andhakas, Vṛṣṇis and others joined his school of archery.

The training in archery came to an end. Droṇa called his disciples and told them that Drupada should be tied with a rope and placed before him. When they heard the words of the teacher, Duryodhana, Karṇa, Yuyutsu, Duśśāsana, Vikarṇa, Jarāsandha and Sulocana led the Kauravas to Pāñcāla. Arjuna knew that the Kauravas would not be able to defeat Drupada. He told the teacher that when the Kauravas returned without achieving the task, he himself would go and bring Drupada. After a terrible battle the Kauravas were defeated by the Pāñcālas. After that Arjuna confronted Drupada. Nakula and Sahadeva stood as guards of the wheels. Bhīmasena with his club stood in front of the army. Arjuna drove the chariot right in the midst of the Pāñcāla army. Bhīma took his club and a terrible battle ensued. Arjuna shattered the Pāñcāla army, bound Drupada and took him to Droṇa. The teacher looked at Drupada and reproached him with scornful word: "I have destroyed your country. Now you are at my mercy. Is not the former friendship a friendship?" Drupada requested that they should be friends in future. Accordingly Drupada was set free. The country of Pāñcāla was divided into two, and giving Uttara Pāñcāla to Drupada, Droṇa took Dakṣiṇa Pāñcāla. Thus because of the revenge of Droṇa, Drupada lost half of his kingdom. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 137).

5) Birth of Children. Though Droṇa and Drupada were on friendly terms Drupada did not forget the defeat he had incurred at the hands of Droṇa. So, Drupada desired to have a son who would become powerful enough to take revenge on Droṇa. He began to think of ways and means. He consulted several learned Brahmins. At that time two hermit brothers yāja and Upayāja lived on the bank of the Ganges. The King approached them and requested their help to obtain a son, who would kill Droṇa, and promised to give them cows and other precious things in return. At first they refused to help him. The King served Upayāja for a year, and pleased him. He sent the King to the hermitage of Yāja. They accepted the request of the King. Both the hermits performed a sacrifice for Drupada. A boy and a girl arose from the sacrificial fire. The boy was named Dhṛṣṭadyumna and the girl was named Kṛṣṇā (Pāñcālī). There was a celestial voice that the boy would kill Droṇa when he grew up. (M.B. Ādi parva, Chapter 167).

6) The marriage of Pāñcālī. Pāñcālī grew up. Drupada desired to give her in marriage to Arjuna. But at that time the lac-house caught fire and the Pāṇḍavas disappeared. Drupada set certain tests in the Svayaṁvara of Pāñcālī with a view to ascertain if Arjuna was alive. The Pāṇḍavas came to the svayaṁvara and Drupada found out Arjuna. But Drupada did not like the idea of his daughter becoming the wife of more than one husband. Then Vyāsa appeared there and informed Drupada of the previous births of the Pāṇḍavas and Pāñcālī. Drupada was much pleased and he gave the Pāṇḍavas a good deal of wealth and sent Pāñcālī with them. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 196).

7) Other details (1) Drupada was present at the marriage of Abhimanyu, celebrated at the city of Upaplavya (M.B. Virāṭa Parva, Chapter 72, Stanza 17).

(2) Drupada gave the Pāṇḍavas an akṣauhiṇī, (division 21870 elephants, 21870 chariots, 65610 horses, 109350 footmen) of army for the battle of Bhārata. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 57).

(3) At the battle of Bhārata, Drupada was anointed as one of the seven commanders on the side of the Pāṇḍavas. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 157, Stanza 11).

(4) Drupada fought with Jayadratha on the first day of the battle of Kurukṣetra. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 45, Stanza 55).

(5) Drupada was defeated in a combat with Droṇa the teacher. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 7, Stanza 48).

(6) Drupada combated with Aśvatthāmā. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 110, Stanza 16).

(7) He fought with Bhagadatta. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 14, Stanza 40).

(8) He fought with Bālhīka. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 25, Stanza 18).

(9) He was defeated by Pṛṣata. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 138, Stanza 24).

(10) Droṇa the teacher killed Drupada. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 186, Stanza 43).

(11) The Pāṇḍavas gave offerings to the manes for Drupada. (M.B. Śānti Parva, Chapter 42, Stanza 5).

(12) Vyāsa evoked the spirits of the dead to the surface of the Ganges, after the Battle of Bhārata came to an end. Drupada also was there among the spirits which appeared on the Ganges. (M.B. Āśramavāsika Parva, Chapter 32, Stanza 8).

(13) After death Drupada entered heaven and was absorbed in Viśvadevas. (M.B. Svargārohaṇa Parva, Chapter 5, Stanza 15).

(14) It is stated in Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 67, Stanza 68, that Drupada was born from a portion of the Marudgaṇas.

8) Synonyms of Drupada. Pāñcāla, Pāñcālya, Pāñcālarāja, Pārṣata, Pṛṣatātmaja, Saumaki, Yajñasena, Drupada are his synonyms.

DRUMA I. A King in ancient Bhārata. Mention is made about him in Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 1, Stanza 233.

DRUMA II. In Mahābhārata, Chapter 67, Stanza 8, King Druma, who was the rebirth of the asura Śibi, is mentioned.

DRUMA III. The leader of the Kinnaras (heavenly musicians). (M.B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 10, Stanza 29). He sits in the Durbar of Kubera (God of wealth) and sings. He was the teacher of Rukmin, the son of Bhīṣmaka and he gave a bow to his pupil Rukmin. (Mahābhārata, Udyoga Parva, Chapter 158.)

DRUMASENA I. A Kṣatriya King. He was born from a portion of an Asura called Garviṣṭha. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 66, Stanza 55). He stood as guard of the wheel of Śalya and was killed by Yudhiṣṭhira in the battle of Bhārata. (M.B.Śalya Parva, Chapter 12, Stanza 53.)

DRUMASENA II. A warrior who fought on the side of the Kauravas against the Pāṇḍavas. He was killed by Dhṛṣṭadyumna the son of Drupada. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 170, Stanza 22).

DRUHYU I. A son of King Yayāti. Two sons, Yadu and Turvasu were born to Yayāti, the son of Nahuṣa, by his wife Devayānī and three sons Druhyu, Anudruhyu and Pūru by his wife Śarmiṣṭhā. Druhyu was cursed by his father because he did not comply with the request of his father to exchange his old age with the youth of his son. The curse was that his desires would not be realized, that he would stay in places where he would not like to stay, that his kingdom would be lost and that he would be called Bhoja. (See under Yayāti).

DRUHYU II. A son of Matināra, a King of the Pūru dynasty. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 94, Stanza 14).

DUḤKHA (M). Agni Purāṇa tells the following about the origin of Duḥkham.

Hiṁsā (violence) is the wife of Adharma (unrighteousness). To the couple were born two daughters called Anṛta (falsehood) and Nikṛta (fraud) and from them were born the daughters Bhayā (fear) Naraka (hell) Māyā (illusion) and Vedanā (pain). Māyā brought forth Mṛtyu (death), the annihilator of all living objects, and Vedanā, from Raurava (a particular hell) brought forth Duḥkha (sorrow, grief). From Mṛtyu were born Jāti (caste), Jarā (wrinkles), Śoka (sorrow), Tṛṣṇā (covetouseness) and Krodha (anger). (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 19).

DULIDUHA. A King in ancient India. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 1, Verse 233).

ḌUMḌUBHA. A snake. Sage Sahasrapāda became the snake as a result of a curse. For details see under Sahasrapāda.

DUNDUBHI I. A terrible asura, son of Maya and brother of Māyāvī.

1) Birth. Dānavas were the offsprings of Kaśyapa, grandson of Brahmā and son of Marīci by his wife Danu, daughter of Dakṣaprajāpati. Maya, chief among the Dānavas earned great reputation as a unique architect. Once Maya attended a dance programme in devaloka where he fell in love with Hemā dancing with the deva-women. When the dance was over Maya told Hemā about his love for her. Hemā too had fallen in love with Maya. And they left the place in secret and reached the southern slope of the Himālayas where they built a beautiful city called Hemapura and they lived there. Ere long they had two sons, Dundubhi and Māyāvī, both of them equally distinguished in prowess. Uttararāmāyaṇa).

2) Dundubhi's relati nship with Rāvaṇa. Maya did tapas for a daughter in the western plains of Mount Kailāsa. One of those days Pārvatī went out of Kailāsa to feed brahmins in celebration of the birthday of Subrahmaṇya. In the absence of Pārvatī a deva woman called Madhurā who had observed the Somavāravrata came to Kailāsa to salute Mahādeva (Śiva) who enjoyed her for some time. On her return to Śiva Pārvatī noticed ashes worn by him transferred to the breasts of Madhurā. Drawing the natural inference from this Pārvatī got angry and cursed Madhurā to be transformed into a frog. Then Śiva blessed her that she would regain her former self after twelve years and have a heroic husband. Madhurā who was thus turned into a frog fell into a well close to where Maya was engaged in tapas. And, after twelve years, the frog regained its former form and became Madhurā again. Maya, who saw her adopted her as daughter and brought her up as such calling her Mandodarī. Mandodarī became Rāvaṇa' wife and thus Dundubhi became the brother-in-law of Rāvaṇa.

3) Dundubhi grew up. The following is told about Dundubhi in Canto 11, Kiṣkindhā Kāṇḍa of Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa.

As beautiful and majestic as the peak of Mount Kailāsa, the heroic Dundubhi possessed the form of the buffalo. And, he had the strength of a thousand elephants. Proud and haughty over his own prowess and losing his head over the boon he had received from God, Dundubhi went to fight with the ocean, the lord of rivers. (It was Śiva who gave him boons. See M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 11).

4) Fight with Bāli and death. Haughty almost to madness over the unrivalled strength and prowess he got as the result of the boon, Dundubhi went about challenging whomsoever he met for a fight. But none dared to accept the challenge. Then he went to the sea-shore and challenged Varuṇa, who, appearing on the crest of the waves said: "I am not strong and powerful enough to fight with you. Only Himavān can do that. So, please go north."

Accordingly Dundubhi went north to Himavān and challenged him in great rage. Himavān clad in his neat and white apparel appeared and spoke in humble tones: "Oh mighty Dānava: I am not accustomed to fighting war. My job is only to arrange necessary convenience to saints and sages. But, there is in southern India a very powerful monkey called Bāli, who is the King of Kiṣkindhā, and Bāli alone can combat with you.

And, Dundubhi accordingly went southward to Kiṣkindhā and challenged Bāli. Terrible as the dark clouds in the sky the dānava who possessed the body and horns of the buffalo—began roaring like hell at the tower gates of Kiṣkindhā, uprooting trees with his horn and tearing the earth with his hoofs. Disturbed by the noise Bāli along with his wife Tārā came out of the palace, and said to Dundubhi : "Look here, please, I am only a King of the monkeys. Why should you, who are so very strong smash my tower?" but, these soft words of Bāli only kindled Dundubhi's anger all the more and his challenges became the fiercer. Then did Bāli, wearing the golden chain given by Indra, rush forth to engage Dundubhi in mortal duel in which the former began gaining more and more strength while the latter got weaker and weaker. Dundubhi took to flight in the skies to save his life. But, the moon dawned then and in the moonlight Bāli and his brother Sugrīva followed Dundubhi, who entered a terrible cave covered by something like a forest of grass. After stationing Sugrīva at the opening of the cave Bāli followed Dundubhi into the cave. Sugrīva waited there one year for the return of Bāli from the cave when one day he witnessed foaming blood flow out of the mouth of the cave, and mistakenly believing that Bāli was dead he closed the mouth of the cave with a huge stone and returned home. But, Bāli, who had by then killed Dundubhi kicked off the stone and came out of the cave and followed Sugrīva in a rage. From that day onwards Sugrīva lived at the Ṛṣyamūka mountain where Bāli had no admission. (Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa, Kiṣkindhā Kāṇḍa, Cantos 9, 11, 46).

5) Curse on Bāli due to the blood of Dundubhi. During Bāli's duel with Dundubhi blood from the body of the latter spurted out to the skies, and it also fell in the hermitage of Mataṅga at Ṛṣyamūka where the sage Mataṅga was performing tapas. Angered at this the sage cursed him whoever he might be, who was responsible for blood falling in his āśrama, with death by his head getting broken if he mounted Ṛṣyamūka. Sugrīva took shelter there because of this curse on Bāli. (Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa, Kiṣkindhā Kāṇḍa, Canto 11)

DUNDUBHI II. See under Mantharā.

DUNDUBHINIHRĀDA. A powerful Rākṣasa, who was the son of Diti and the uncle of Prahlāda. When, in the fierce fight between the devas and the asuras the latter got absolutely defeated this Rākṣasa ascribed the reson for the failure to the brahmins and began killing them. He captured the Kāśī temple and many other temples like it. In the circumstances Śiva gave refuge to the brahmins of Kāśī, and the Rākṣasa was destroyed by Śivaśakti. (Śivarudrasaṁhitā, Yuddha Kāṇḍa, Chapter 58).

DUNDUBHISVANA(M). A particular Place in Kuśa island. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 12, Verse 13).

DURĀDHA (DURĀDHĀRA, DURDHARA). One of the hundred sons of Dhṛtarāṣṭra. He was killed by Bhīma. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 135, Verse 36).

DURĀDHĀRA. See under Durādha.

DURĀSADA. A son of Bhasmāsura. He learned Pañcākṣarī vidyā from Śiva and used to repeat it. Pleased at this Śiva gave him all the boons he wanted with the result that he lost his head and began troubling everybody. When thus unrest and injustices increased in the world Ḍhuṁḍhi, the son of Śakti killed him. (Gaṇeśa Purāṇa, Chapter 38, 42).

DURDAMA. Son of a Gandharva called Viśvāvasu. The following story about him is told in the Skanda Purāṇa. Chapters 1, 3 and 4).

While maharṣis like Vasiṣṭha and Atri were once engaged in the worship of Lord Śiva at Mount Kailāsa, Durdama, with his thousands of wives came there. In the Hālāsyatīrtha near-by they got engaged in water sports with their bodies stark naked. On seeing their naked sports Vasiṣṭha cursed Durdama to be turned into a Rākṣasa. When his wives begged of Vasiṣṭha for redemption from the curse he told them that seventeen years thence Durdama would regain his old form. Durdama thus turned Rākṣasa tried once to devour sage Gālava when the Sudarśana Cakra of Viṣṇu killed him. He regained his old form and returned to Gandharvaloka.

DURDHARṢAṆA. (Durmada). One of the hundred sons of Dhṛtarāṣṭra. He was killed by Bhīma. (Droṇa Parva, Chapter 155, Verse 40).

DURGĀ I. The goddess of the universe, Durgā possesses different forms and aspects. Pārvatī, spouse of Śiva is a form of Durgā. According to the prayer of devotees this Devī assumes diverse forms. She is worshipped in 64 forms as Āryadurgā, Vedagarbhā, Ambikā, Bhadrakālī, Bhadrā, Kṣemākṣemakarī, Naikabāhu, Devī etc. In south India she is worshipped more in her fierce and terrible forms. Devī in her gentle aspects and moods assumes the forms of Kanyā, Kāmākṣī and Mūkāmbā. In Kerala the Devī is called Bhagavatī also, in Andhra Jokulāmbikā and in Tamilnadu Kaṇṇakī. Worship of the Devī is supposed to be more than 4000 years old in India. In religious literature from Vedic times up to date Devī occupies an important place. In modern India Śrī Rāmakṛṣṇa Paramahaṁsa, guru of Svāmī Vivekānanda, was a great devotee of Durgā.

In the Mahābhārata there are various references to the Devī. When the Pāṇḍavas entered the capital of Virāṭa for their life incognito they worshiped Durgā, who appeared to them and granted them certain boons. (Virāṭa Parva, Chapter 6). At the commencement of the great war Arjuna, at the instance of Kṛṣṇa prayed to Durgā, who appeared in the sky and granted him boons, for victory in War. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 23). See Pañcadevīs and Prakṛti).

DURGĀ II. A river famous in ancient India. The Pāṇḍavas drank water from this river. (Bhīṣma Parva. Chapter 9, Verse 33).

DURGA(M). Fort. There are six kinds of forts, viz. Marudurgam, Jaladurgam, Pṛthvīdurgam Vanadurgam, Parvatadurgam, and Manuṣy adurgam. Among the above six Manuṣya durga is the most important (M.B. Śānti Parva, Chapter 56, 35).

DURGAJAM. A city in ancient India. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 9, Verse 52).

DURGAMA. An asura chief born in the dynasty of Hiraṇyākṣa and son of Taru, Durgama was an enemy of the Devas from his very birth. He argued to himself thus: "the very strength and power of the Devas depend on the Vedas; if there is no Veda there is no yajña, if there is no yajña the Devas do not get their share of the havis, if they do not get the havis they will lose all their strength and prowess, and, therefore, the best means to teach the Devas a lesson is to destroy the Vedas." Durgama decided that the surest means to achieve that was to perform penance. Accordingly he went to the Himālayas and began doing penance abstaining from food and drink. After a thousand years Brahmā appeared to him and asked him what boon he wanted. Durgama said "I must get the Vedas; I should get all the mantras known to brahmins and Devas in the three worlds, and all the presiding deities of those mantras should come and stand before me and be subject to my control; I must also get the strength to defeat all the Devas." Brahmā granted Durgama all the boons. And, thenceforth the brahmins could not recollect the Vedas or the mantras. No bathing, no homas, no daily rites, no rites for the dead, no yajñas, no japa (repeating divine names) and no tapas. Symptoms of old age caught the Devas in its grips. Durgama drove them out of Devaloka and they hid in mountain caves. Within a hundred years the world reached the rock bottom of destruction. Water disappeared from the world. Alarmed beyond measure at these developments the brahmins went to the Himālayas and prayed to Jagadambikā (mother of the universe). Ambikā appeared to them, and their lamentations brought tears to the eyes of Ambikā, and thus water scarcity came to an end. Ambikā gave them Śāka (a vegetable) fruits and roots to eat. Because she protected her devotees by supplying Śāka to them she came to be known as Śākambharī, thenceforward. Also because she shed tears from her eyes, thenceforth she came to be addressed as Śatākṣī also.

Being told about the above developments Durgama, with his army attacked Devī. The fight became fierce and furious. From Devī's body emerged numerous Śaktis fully armed. Dhāriṇī, Bālā, Tripurā, Bhairavī and Kālī with 10,000 hands were some of the prominent and powerful Śaktis which thus emerged. The army of Durgama was annihilated. Then the fight commenced directly between Devī and Durgama. Fifteen arrows of Devī hit the asura at the very same time and he was killed. (Devī Bhāgavata, Saptama Skandha).

DURGĀPŪJĀ. See under Navarātri.

DURGAŚAILA. A mountain in Śāka island. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 11, Verse 23).

DURITAKṢAYA. A son of King Mahāvīrya. Duritakṣaya had three sons, Traiyyāruṇi, Kavi and Puṣkarāruṇi. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 9, Verse 19 and 21).

DURJAYA I. An absolutely cruel King. Owing to the number of adharmas (evil actions he had committed) Kāla ordained him to be born and reborn twentyone times as various animals and as a Brahmarākṣasa he roamed about forests. One of those days he caught hold of a Śivayogī called Mahādeva whose body was smeared with Vibhūti (the sacred ash), but as soon as the Vibhūti from the body of the Śivayogī got smeared on his body also, Durjaya got back his former form and he was lifted upto Svarga. (Śiva Purāṇa, Bhasma Māhātmya).

DURJAYA II. A dānava born to Kaśyapa prajāpati by Danu, his wife. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 65, Verse 23).

DURJAYA III. (Duṣparājaya). One of the hundred sons of Dhṛtarāṣṭra (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 116, Verse 9).

DURJAYA IV. A King. Drupada advised the Pāṇḍavas to invite this King to the great war. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 4, Verse, 16).

DURJAYA V. Son of King Suvīra of the Ikṣvāku dynasty. (Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 2, Verse 11).

DURJAYA VI. A synonym of Mahāviṣṇu. (Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 144, Verse 86).

DURJAYA VII. A powerful son of Supratīka. While he was living as the lord over the country, having conquered the various Kingdoms he was told that Gauramukha Muni had in his possession the famous gem called Cintāmaṇi. He fought to gain that gem and died. The place where he met with death came to be known as Naimiśāraṇya in after years. (Varāha Purāṇa, Chapter 17).

DURJAYA. Short form of Durjaymaṇimatinagara referred to in laudatory terms in the Mahābhārata. Some scholars hold that Durjaya is the Ellora caves of modern India, seven miles off Daulatabad. (Vana Parva, Chapter 96, Verse 1).

DURMADA I. See Durdharṣaṇa.

DURMADA II. A son of Haṁsa, the Gandharva King. Himself and Unmadā, the apsarā woman impersonated themselves and cheated Purūravas and Urvaśī (See Unmadā). Enraged at the deception Urvaśī cursed that Durmada be born as a Rākṣasa and Unmadā a princess. Also, Unmadā as princess would have to marry not the person she really loved but some one else. Both Durmada and Unmadā then begged Urvaśī for redemption from the curse and the latter said thus: "This Durmada will be born as son of Unmadā, and on seeing her son and husband die, she will end her life by burning herself, and her soul will attain Svarga". As a result of the above curse Unmadā was born as the daughter of the King of Videha and Durmada as the son of the Rākṣasa called Dīrghajaṁgha. As Rākṣasa, Durmada was called Piṅgalākṣa. The King of Videha named Unmadā as Hariṇī.

While Hariṇī was once walking in the garden with her companions Piṅgalākṣa abducted her and flew off in the sky, and put her in a great forest. A prince called Vasumanas, who happened to come that way on his fast-riding horse Jīmūta heard the lamentations of Hariṇī, and after killing Piṅgalākṣa he took her with him to her palace. The King of Videha and his subjects, who were in great anxiety and distress at the disappearance of Hariṇī felt really happy to have her back. And, all of them opined that Hariṇī should be married to Vasumanas. Accordingly the date for her Svayaṁvara was announced. But, on the day of the svayaṁvara Bhadraśreṇya, King of Hehaya who, along with other Kings was also present on the occasion, forcibly took Hariṇī and rode off with her. According to the condition laid down by Urvaśī for redemption from her curse Durmada was born as son of Hariṇī and he was named Durmada.

Bhadraśreṇya, Hariṇī and Durmada lived very happily in the Hehaya palace. When Durmada came of age he married Citrāṅgī, his uncle's daughter on the advice of sage Garga. Soon war broke out between Bhadraśreṇya, and Divodāsa, King of Kāśi in which Bhadraśreṇya was killed. Hariṇī courted death by fire, regained her former life and under the name Unmadā returned to the world of the Apsaras.

DURMADA III. Son of Asura Maya. Conceited and haughty over his strength Durmada once challenged Bāli to fight, and defeated by Bāli he ran away from battlefield and hid in a cave. (Ānanda Rāmāyaṇa Sārakāṇḍa).

DURMARṢA. An asura, he clashed with the Devas at the churning of the sea of milk. (Bhāgavata daśamaskandha).

DURMARṢAṆA I. One of the 100 sons of Dhṛtarāṣṭra. In the great war Arjuna destroyed his Gajasenā and Sātyaki wounded him. Finally he was killed by Bhīma. After the war was over Nakula occupied his palace. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 113, Droṇa Parva, 88, 89, 116 and 135).

DURMARṢAṆA II. A son born to Sṛñjaya by Rāṣṭrapālī. He was a relation of Vasudeva. (Bhāgavata navamaskandha).

DURMUKHA I. A minister of Mahiṣāsura. Once he was sent to Bhadrakālī with a message by his master. (Devī Bhāgavata, Pañcama Skandha).

DURMUKHA II. One of the hundred sons of Dhṛtarāṣṭra. The following information about him is gathered from the Mahābhārata.

(1) He was present at the Svayaṁvara of Draupadī. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 185, Verse 1).

(2) During the procession to Dvaitavana, Gandharvas took him captive. (Vana Parva, Chapter 242, Verse 12).

(3) In the great war he fought with Sahadeva. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 85, Verse 25).

(4) He killed Arjuna's charioteer. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 47, Verse 12).

(5) He defeated Śrutakarman. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 79, Verse 35).

(6) He was defeated by Abhimanyu. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 84, Verse 42).

(7) A duel was fought between Durmukha and Ghaṭotkaca. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 110, Verse 13).

(8) Duel fought between Durmukha and Dhṛṣṭadyumna. (Droṇa Parva, Chapter 20, Verse 26).

(9) He fought with Purujit. (Droṇa Parva, Chapter 106, Verse 13).

(10) He was defeated in fight with Sahadeva. (Droṇa Parva, Chapter 107, Verse 25).

(11) Bhīmasena killed him in war. (Droṇa Parva, Chapter 134, Verse 20).

(12) After the war his beautiful palace was occupied by Sahadeva. (Śānti Parva, Chapter 44, Verse 12).

DURMUKHA III. A King who flourished in the assembly of Yudhiṣṭhira. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 4, Verse 21).

DURMUKHA IV. A Rākṣasa, who was a member in Rāvaṇa's assembly. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter, 9, Verse 13). According to the Uttararāmāyaṇa he was the son of a Rākṣasa called Mālyavān by his wife Sundarī, and he had Vajramuṣṭi, Virūpākṣa, Suptaghna, Yajñakośa, Matta and Unmatta as brothers and Nalā and Ketumatī as sisters.

DURMUKHA V. A serpent. It was also present among the serpents, which had come to Prabhāsakṣetra to receive Balarāma who, after death, went to Pātālaloka. (Mausala Parva, Chapter, 4, Verse 16).

DURMUKHA VI. An asura on the side of Mahiṣāsura. Tāmra, finance minister of Mahiṣāsura sent Durmukha with Bāṣkala to fight against Devī, who killed him. (Devībhāgavata, Skandhas 5, 13). In his previous life he was one of the Paulastyas. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 61).

DURMUKHĪ. A companion of the Rākṣasa woman called Ajamukhī. See Ajamukhī.

DURVĀRA. Son of King Suratha of Kuṇḍalanagara. When Suratha captured the yajñāśva (sacrificial horse) of Śrī Rāma Śātrughna clashed with him. Durvāra also was present on the occasion. (Padma Purāṇa, Pātāla khaṇḍa, Chapter 49).

DURVĀRAṆA I. An army chieftain of the King of Kamboja. He was killed in the great war by Sātyaki. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 112, Verse 42).

DURVĀRAṆA II. A messenger of the very powerful Jalandhara. When the Devas and the Asuras churned Kṣīrābdhi (ocean of milk), many excellent things emerged out of it. When those things were divided among them all, Devendra took possession of 14 gems in an unauthorised manner. When Jalandhara, through his messenger Durvāraṇa, demanded Devendra to return the gems, not only did he not return them but he also declared war against Jalandhara. When war broke out Jalandhara hesitated as to whether he should fight with Viṣṇu or with Śiva. Durvāraṇa advised him first to fight with Śiva. (Padma Purāṇa, Uttarakhaṇḍa, Chapter 16).

DURVĀSAS

1) Genealogy. A sage, who used to lose his temper very easily. He is believed to have been born from an aṁśa (part, aspect) of Śiva.

2) Birth. Three different stories are told in the Purāṇas relating to his birth.

(1) Once a quarrel, arose between Brahmā and Śiva which developed into fighting, At the sight of Śiva seething with rage the Devas ran off frightened, and Pārvatī also got frightened. She told him 'Durvāsam bhavati me'. (It has become impossible for me to live happily with you). Realising that it was his momentary anger which made life miserable for Pārvatī Śiva decided to transfer that trait of his character to someone else.

The incident took place during the life period of Śīlavatī, who was very much reputed for her chastity. While Śīlavatī was carrying her husband Ugraśravas (who though a leper yet desired to visit brothels) to the house of a prostitute the muni Aṇumāṇḍavya cursed Ugraśravas to die before sunrise the next day with his head broken. (See under Aṇumāṇḍavya). Śīlavatī made the counter curse, let not the sun rise the next day, to the muni's curse. Accordingly the sun did not rise the next day, and confusion prevailed everywhere, whereupon the Trimūrtis and the Devas, through Anasūyā, the wife of Atrimaharṣi, got the curse of Śīlavatī withdrawn. Pleased at this the Trimūrtis asked Anasūyā to choose any boon she desired, and she prayed that Brahmā, Viṣṇu and Maheśvara take their partial incarnations through her. Accordingly Brahmā as Candra and Mahāviṣṇu as Dattātreya were born as sons of Anasūyā. And, Śiva deposited his anger, which had caused unhappiness to Pārvatī, in Anasūyā. The child born out of that aspect of Śiva to Anasūyā was Durvāsas. The name Durvāsas was very apt as the child was born out of the anger of Śiva which had made life miserable (durvāsa) for Pārvatī. (Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa, Chapter 44).

(2) Once defeated in his fight with Brahmā Śiva took refuge with the Naranārāyaṇas who were doing penance in the plains of the Himālayas. Śiva told sage Nārāyaṇa everything about his plight and he asked the former to pierce his left hand with the Śūla. Śiva did so and three streams of blood flowed out of the wound made on the hand of the Ṛṣi, one stream towards the sphere of the stars, another into the skull in Śiva's hand and from the third stream Durvāsas was born. Brahmā, who witnessed this miracle withdrew from war and returned to his abode. (Vāmana Purāṇa, Chapter 2).

(3) In the fierce fight with the Tripuras Śiva, in great rage, ultimately shot an arrow against them, and that arrow, after killing the Tripuras, assumed the form of a child and returned to the lap of Śiva, and the child was named Durvāsas. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 160, Verses 14, 15).

3) Kuntī granted boon. Once while Kuntī was living in the palace of Kuntibhoja Durvāsas came there, and pleased with Kuntī, he granted her five mantras. It was with the aid of those mantras that Kunti became mother of Karṇa and others. (For details see under Kunti Para 2).

4) Śrī Kṛṣṇa bathed in pāyasa (pudding). Once Durvāsas came to Dvārakā where Kṛṣṇa and Rukmiṇī looked after him to his heart's content. Though, at times he took only meagre food, at other times he destroyed everything he saw and created trouble. Kṛṣṇa and Rukmiṇī served him according to schedule. One day the sage asked Kṛṣṇa to cook some pudding and it was got ready. Then the sage asked Kṛṣṇa to smear his (Kṛṣṇa) body with pudding. Kṛṣṇa did so except on his feet. After that Durvāsas got down the chariot and making Kṛṣṇa and Rukmiṇī serve as horses himself got into it and drove away in great speed into the forest. On the way he thrashed the 'horses' one ofter the other. Neither Kṛṣṇa nor Rukmiṇī felt sorry about this action of the sage. On reaching the forest he halted the chariot and blessed Śrī Kṛṣṇa that arrows would not hit the parts of Kṛṣṇa's body which were smeared with the pāyasa. The spot at which the sage blessed Kṛṣṇa became famous as Varadānatīrtha in after years. It may be noted that Kṛṣṇa died by an arrow hitting his foot which was not smeared with the pāyasa. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 160).

5) Conducted yajña for Śvetaki. There once was a King called Śvetaki equal to Indra. He conducted a yajña of a hundred years' duration. Innumerable brahmins were engaged in the successful conduct of the yajña. Some years after the yajña began the brahmins went their own way leaving it unfinished as the clouds of fume all the twentyfour hours in the yajñaśālā irked and affected their eyes. When Śvetaki requested them to further cooperate to complete the yajña they insultingly asked him to invite Śūdras for it. Then the King went to the Himālayas and did tapas for Śiva, who at last deputed Durvāsas to complete the yajña, and under the maharṣi's aegis it was completed within twelve years. On account of the constant offerings of havis in Agni (fire) during the period Agni fell a prey to indigestion, which was cured only after it ate up the Khāṇḍava forest. (See Khāṇḍava dahana). (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 235).

6) Mudgala granted salvation. Once Durvāsas went to sage Mudgala who was doing tapas in Kurukṣetra taking food only rarely and demanded some food with the object of testing his dharmavṛtti (righteousness). The sage gave Durvāsas all the food he had with him, himself starving, and Durvāsas left the āśrama after eating a part of the food and smearing his body with the rest of it. This process was repeated by Durvāsas for six days, but Mudgala never felt or showed any offence. Greatly pleased at the firm righteousness of the King. Durvāsas blessed him to bodily ascend to heaven. Immediately a vimāna (aeroplane) descended from Viṣṇuloka and carried Mudgala in it to heaven. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 260).

7) Other information. (1) Durvāsas ran away in fear of the Pāṇḍavas. (See under Duryodhana, Para 12).

(2) He suffered at the hands of Haṁsa and Ḍibhaka. (See under Ḍibhaka).

(3) He advised Śaivapañcākṣara to the woman called Kalāvatī. (See under Kalāvatī).

(4) Durvāsas and Kṣīrābdhi-mathanam. (See under Amṛtam).

(5) Durvāsas and Dakṣayajña. (See under Dakṣa).

(6) Terrified Durvāsas ran helter-skelter in the three worlds. (See under Aṁbarīṣa, Para 3).

(7) He was responsible for the death of Lakṣmaṇa. (See Lakṣmaṇa).

(8) He cursed Śakuntalā. (See Śakuntalā).

(9) He spent his time in Indra's assembly. (M.B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 11, Verse 23: For another story see under Pitṛtīrtha).

DURVIBHĀGA. A particular area in ancient India. The Kṣatriya kings of the area presented a lot of money and foodgrains to Yudhiṣṭhira at the Rājasūya yajña. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 52, Verse 11).

DURVIGĀHA (DURVIṢAHA). One of the hundred sons of Dhṛtarāṣṭra. He was killed in the great war by Bhīmasena. (M.B. Śalya Parva, Chapter 26, Verse 20).

DURVIMOCANA. One of the hundred sons of Dhṛtarāṣṭra killed by Bhīmasena. (Droṇa Parva, Chapter 127, Verse 62).

DURVIROCANA. One of the hundred sons of Dhṛtarāṣṭra killed by Bhīmasena (Droṇa Parva, Chapter 127, Verse 62).

DURVIṢAHA (DURVIGĀHA). One of the 100 sons or Dhṛtarāṣṭra. He attended the svayaṁvara of Pāñcālī, On the occasion of the procession of Duryodhana and others, Durviṣaha was put in prison. (Vana Parva, Chapter 242, Verse 12). He was killed by Bhīmasena in the great war. (Śalya Parva, Chapter 26, Verse 20).

DURYODHANA I. Villain in the Mahābhārata story; the eldest and greatest of the Kauravas.

(1) Genealogy. See under Kauravas.

(2) Birth. Dhṛtarāṣṭra born blind married Gāndhārī. Hungry and thirsty, Vyāsa once came to Dhṛtarāṣṭra's palace where Gāndhārī treated him sumptuously, and he blessed her to have hundred sons by her husband. Ere long Gāndhārī conceived, but even after two years she did not deliver. Grief-stricken at this she got herself aborted in secret as the result of which she 'delivered' a mass of flesh, and hearing about it Vyāsa visited her. As instructed by him hundred pots were filled with ghee, and the mass of flesh was sprayed with cold water as a result of which it got divided into hundred pieces, each the size of a thumb. Also a smaller piece of flesh remained. Those pieces of flesh were deposited in the pots filled with ghee and the pots kept in a secret place. Vyāsa departed for the Himālayas for tapas.

In course of time the pots burst open one by one and from each pot emerged a boy. From the 101st pot a girl was born. Eldest among the boys was named Duryodhana, and the girl called Duśśalā. (For other names see under Kauravas).

Duryodhana, at the time of his birth cried in the voice of an ass on hearing which the asses kept in their shed also cried. Also, such evil omens as the jackal howling, birds like crows, vultures etc. crying and storms breaking out were witnessed on the occasion. Alarmed by such evil omens Dhṛtarāṣṭra sent for the brahmins and his other friends and well-wishers like Bhīṣma and Vidura and enquired of them whether, after the death of Dharmaputra, Duryodhana would be able to become King. As soon as Dhṛtarāṣṭra had asked the question, evil omens like the world becoming dim, jackals howling etc. were witnessed again. Scholars like Vidura did their best to divine what the future of Duryodhana would be, and after mature consideration Vidura and the brahmin pandits opined that because of Duryodhana's birth the country and people would be ruined, and they, therefore advised that he should be cast away and forsaken. But, paternal affection did not permit Dhṛtarāṣṭra to accept the advice.

During this period Gāndhārī was laid up for a few days with stomach trouble, and a vaiśya woman was engaged to look after Dhṛtarāṣṭra, who begot of her a son called Yuyutsu.[1] Thus with 100 sons and Duśśalā for daughter Dhṛtarāṣṭra became rich in the matter of children[2] (M. B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 114).

(2) Duryodhana harms Bhīmasena. Now, Pāṇḍu was dead and Mādrī also died in the funeral pyre of her husband. Forlorn and helpless Kuntī and her five sons came to Hastināpura, and Dhṛtarāṣṭra welcomed them to the palace. Thus arose the occasion for the Pāṇḍavas and the Kauravas to live together in the Hastināpura palace. And, naturally there used to be petty differences and quarrels between the Pāṇḍava and Kaurava princes. Bhīma being in every way a giant the Kauravas had often to suffer at his hands. To collect all the hundred Kaurava brothers together and throw them away in one lump to push them to the ground, to suffocate them by holding their heads under water etc—these were some of the childish pranks played by Bhīma on the Kauravas. The constant repetition of such pranks and mischiefs on the part of Bhīma rendered him an object of hatred for the Kauravas among whom the common conviction grew that it was essential to put an end to Bhīma's life for their safety, nay even their very existence.

One day, the Kauravas, with the object of doing away with Bhīma, escorted the Pāṇḍavas to Pramāṇakoṭi on the banks of the Gaṅgā for water sports. There all of them ate sumptuous meals and took various drinks. But, Duryodhana had secretly mixed Kālakūṭa poison in the food of Bhīma. After taking meals they began playing water-sports. After the sports were over they returned to their tents and slept. Owing to the effects of the poison and the overexertion during the day Bhīma slept stone dead. While all were asleep during the night Duryodhana bound the hands and legs of Bhīma with cords and threw him into the depths of the Gāṅgā. Bhīma who was still unconscious sank down to the very bottom of the river where the denizens of nāgaloka saw him and the nāgas bit him in anger. The poison of the nāgas neutralised the effects of Kālakūṭa poison in Bhīma, though their bite could not make even a scratch on his skin. Freed thus from the effects of poison Bhīma shook himself up from sleep and drove off the nāgas. Alarmed at these developments the nāgas called Vāsuki up to the scene, and he, recognising Bhīma held him in embrace and gave him much money and costly gems etc. Bhīma refused the gifts, but asked Vāsuki for nāgarasa, which would impart the strength of thousand nāgas to those who used it. Vāsuki gave Bhīma eight potfuls of nāgarasa, which the latter drank to the last dregs and thus gained immeasurable strength.

When next morning after the water-sports the Pāṇḍavas and the Kauravas awoke from sleep Bhīma was found missing. Duryodhana said that Bhīma had returned earlier to Hastināpura, but this did not satisfy the Pāṇḍavas. Kuntī lamented over the absence of Bhīma.

Bhīma, who drank the nāga rasa lay on the veranda of Vāsuki for eight days in the manner of one who had lost consciousness. By the time he woke up on the eighth day the body had almost fully assimilated the rasa. Vāsuki told Bhīma that eight potfuls of nāgarasa would impart the strength of 10,000 elephants. And then at the instance of Vāsuki Bhīma took his bath in holy waters and wore new clothes and fragrant garland. He ate the pudding offered by Vāsuki, and taking leave of him and followed by nāgas he came up from the water to the bank of the Gaṅgā. Bhīma gave a detailed description to his mother and brothers of all that had happened to him. Dharmaputra advised him to keep the secret. After the incident, once again was Kālakūṭa poison mixed in the food of Bhīma. But, Yuyutsu born of the vaiśya woman to Dhṛtarāṣṭra gave the Pāṇḍavas confidential report about it. Because of the powerful effect of nāga rasa, the Kālakūṭa consumed by Bhīma did no harm to him but it only got assimilated in his body. On another occasion Duryodhana killed the charioteer of Bhīma. (Bhāṣā Bhārata, Chapter 127 and 129).

3) Karṇa crowned king of Aṅga. The Kauravas and the Pāṇḍavas learnt the use of weapons of war at the feet of Droṇācārya, and when the studies were over arrangements were made for a rehearsal, and at the rehearsal Bhīma and Duryodhana were the first to clash with each other. When the encounter reached its climax both of them pointed the club at each other. But, Aśvatthāmā intervened and pacified them. Next Karṇa entered the stage for a trial of strength with Arjuna, and at once arose from the Pāṇḍava side questions about Karṇa's nobility and aristocracy of birth etc. Karṇa stood there stunned, not knowing what to say or how to repel the attack. Then it was Duryodhana who rose up to announce that he was, that very moment, crowning Karṇa King of Aṅga. This ended the scene. (Bhārata (Malayālam), Ādi Parva, Chapters 134, 135 and 136).

4) Pāṇḍavas trapped in palace built of lac. The above incident confirmed and completed the cleavage of the Pāṇḍavas and the Kauravas into two hostile camps. Meantime another event happened. Droṇācārya demanded of his pupils to bring before him King Drupada by way of gurudakṣiṇā (tuition fee), for the ācārya had to wreak vengeance upon Drupada (See under Droṇa). Though Duryodhana tried his best he could not capture Drupada. Not only that, Drupada defeated him also in fight. At this junture it was Arjuna who presented Drupada as captive to Droṇa by way of gurudakṣiṇā. The incident proved to be another provocation for Duryodhana to hate the Pāṇḍavas.

Now, Duryodhana made up his mind to destroy the Pāṇḍavas somehow or other. With this end in view he went to his father, posing himself to be a great well-wisher of the Pāṇḍavas, and obtained his permission to transfer their (Pāṇḍavas') residence to another palace. Accordingly Duryodhana deputed his minister Purocana to get built at Vāraṇāvata a palace of lac. Vidura came to know of the intended mischief and gave advance notice of it to the Pāṇḍavas through a messenger Kanaka. The architect built the 'lac palace' but built a tunnel also attached to it. A year after the Pāṇḍavas shifted the residence to the new 'palace' Duryodhana set fire to it, and the Pāṇḍavas escaped unscathed through this tunnel. (Bhārata (Malayālam) Ādi Parva, Chapters 141-151).

1. Vyāsa blessed Gāndhārī to have 100 sons. Then how was it that she got a daughter too? On being questioned thus by King Janamejaya Vaiśampāyana replied "when Vyāsa was dividing the mass of flesh a desire to have a daughter entered the heart of Gāndhārī and divining that desire Vyāsa cut the flesh in such a manner as to have one more piece, viz. 101.

2. Duryodhana was born as a part of Kali. (M.B. Āśrama- vāsika Parva, Chapter 1).

5) Duryodhana invited the Pāṇḍavas back to Hastināpura. Duryodhana and his brothers were living very happily under the impression that the Pāṇḍavas had been burnt to ashes along with the 'lac Palace'. Then it was that the Pāṇḍavas, disguised as brahmins and in the presence of all the Kings, won Pāñcālī, the daughter of King Drupada, in svayaṁvara, for their wife. After the marriage the Pāṇḍavas stayed in Drupada's palace and the Kauravas returned to Hastināpura. Duryodhana and others felt all the more jealous at the Pāṇḍavas' becoming more powerful as a result of their marriage. Again it was decided that the Pāṇḍavas should be destroyed anyhow and at any cost. But, how to effect the destruction? Duryodhana wanted to attract the Pāṇḍavas to destruction through women and to create differences and divisions among them. But, Karṇa attacked the plan as impracticable, and instead he wanted to defeat Drupada and render the Pāṇḍavas impotent. At this stage Bhīṣma and Droṇa argued that it was most preferable to give half the Kingdom to the Pāṇḍavas and receive them with grace. Dhṛtarāṣṭra supported the proposal as a result of which the Kauravas went to Pāñcāla and escorted the Pāṇḍavas back to Hastināpura. Dhṛtarāṣṭra partitioned the country between the Kauravas and the Pāṇḍavas and the latter shifted their residence to their part of the country with Khāṇḍavaprastha (Indraprastha) as its capital. When the Pāṇḍavas went to Indraprastha Maya built for them an exceptionally beautiful palace where King Dharmaputra performed rājasūya. Duryodhana and others earnestly participated in it. After the rājasūya the Kauravas wanted to have a look at the palace and in the course of surveying it they placed themselves in ridiculous situations due to visual illusions. Taking the bright floors of glass for watery tanks they pulled up their clothings and measured with caution every foot of theirs. Then they mistook actual pools for floor and fell into them and got wet. At the consequent discomfiture of the Kauravas Bhīma clapped his hands and roared with laughter. Draupadī hid her face with hands and smiled. Altogether the Kauravas cut a very ridiculous figure, and they returned to Hastināpura. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 202, Sabhā Parva, Chapters 35, 85).

6) Dharmaputra's first defeat in the game of dice. The sight of the great wealth including costly stones and gems presented by various kings to Dharmaputra at the Rājasūya and the humiliation experienced while surveying the palace made Duryodhana all the more mad with anger and hatred towards the Pāṇḍavas. He now came to the decision either to defeat the Pāṇḍavas once for all or to commit suicide by taking poison. He held secret consultations on the topic with Śakuni whose efforts at first to pacify him (Duryodhana) failed. Ultimately Śakuni, an expert in the game of dice, advised Duryodhana to invite Dharmaputra to a game, assuring him that the rest he would take care of. Dhṛtarāṣṭra and Vidura advised Duryodhana against the move, but he did not yield. Finally Dhṛtarāṣṭra, saying to himself that nobody would change fate, agreed to Duryodhana's proposal, and deputed Vidura to Dharmaputra to invite him for the game.

Dharmaputra, in fact, did not like the game, but he succumbed to the eloquence and persuasive powers of Śakuni and at last agreed to play. Kings lined up the royal hall to witness the game. First gems were staked. and Duryodhana won the game. Then 1000 golden niṣkas[1] and treasuries were offered to the winner. Duryodhana won that game also. Next chariot with horses and next to that 1000 maid-servants were staked and Duryodhana won those games too. 1000 horses, 1000 golden chariots with their horses, the horse decorated with gold presented by Citraratha to Arjuna, 6000 soldiers with their arms and armaments—these formed the next successive bets, and each game Dharmaputra lost. The next bet was 400 copper vessels each filled with pure gold, and Duryodhana won that game also. And, now Vidura tried to dissuade Yudhiṣṭhira from playing the game; but neither he nor Duryodhana heeded the advice. And, Duryodhana by foul play snatched from Dharmaputra all his wealth, his kingdom and his brothers. Now, Pāñcālī alone remained, and Dharmaputra bet her too and played the last game and lost..

1. 108 suvarṇa weight, an ornament worn on the chest.

Duryodhana deputed his Sūta, Prātikāmi, to Indraprastha, to fetch Draupadī but she sent him back. Next Duśśāsana was deputed and he brought Pāñcālī to the sabhā dragging her by the hair. She was proclaimed to be the maid-servant of the Kauravas. At last Dhṛtarāṣṭra intervened and sent back the Pāṇḍavas along with Draupadī to Indraprastha.

7) Second game and exile in the forest. Duryodhana and others did not appreciate the intervention of their father. He again conspired with Śakuni and it was decided to challenge Dharmaputra to one more game. The conditions to be stipulated were that the vanquished in the game should stay in exile for twelve years in the forest and live incognito during the thirteenth year, and if found out and recognised during this period the whole process of exile and life incognito would have to be repeated. Duryodhana and Śukuni approached Dhṛtarāṣṭra and said to him thus: "Dear father, the desire for revenge at their defeat in the game of dice gnaws at the Pāṇḍavas' heart like poison. Also, they will never forget our having dragged Draupadī by her hair. When a suitable occasion arises they will take revenge on the whole lot of us. Therefore, we want to challenge Dharmaputra to a final game of dice, the condition being that he who gets defeated should go in exile into the forest for twelve years and then to live incognito for one year. If we get defeated we will simply carry out the condition on our part.

This request of Duryodhana appealed to his father, who invited Dharmaputra once again for a game of dice. Dharmaputra accepted the invitation, in fact, in spite of himself. This time too Duryodhana won the stake and the Pāṇḍavas set out to the forest. Even at the time of parting Duśśāsana insulted Bhīma who retorted thus: "You, mean fellows, you cheated my brother by foul play. If I fail to tear your heart open in fight and drink blood I do not want heaven. Moreover I will kill Duryodhana, and Arjuna will kill Karṇa. Śakuni, the expert in foul play in dice will be killed by Sahadeva. We will meet in the 14th year from today at the battlefield. Adieu."

Thus did the Pāṇḍavas depart for the forest. Kuntī being too old Vidura took her to his house, and he consoled her, lamenting over the separation from her children. (M.B. Sabhā Parva).

8) Curse of Maitreya. The Pāṇḍavas entered the Kāmyaka forest where they were welcomed by the sages. Among them Maitreya whom the misfortune of the Pāṇḍavas affected much started for Hastināpura for peace parleys. Vidura advised Dhṛtarāṣṭra that Maitreya's proposals should be respected lest he should curse the King. Dhṛtarāṣṭra and Duryodhana received the sage with respect. And, the sage asked them to recall the Pāṇḍavas from the forest and live on friendly terms with them. Duryodhana did not in any manner respond to the advice of the sage, but stood there absolutely mum tapping his thigh with his fingers and making drawings with the fingers of his feet on the ground. This the sage interpreted as an insult to him. He stood up ablaze with anger and cursed Duryodhana thus: "You will, sooner than later reap the consequences of your false pride; your cruelty will invite terrible war, and in the fight Bhīma will rend asunder your thigh, which you struck with your fingers just now."

Greatly agitated over the curse Dhṛtarāṣṭra prayed the sage for redemption and the sage said: "if only your son resorts to forebearance and peace the curse will not take effect, otherwise it will come true." And after making this announcement the sage returned to the forest. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 10).

9) The procession. While the Pāṇḍavas were staying in the Kāmyaka forest Duryodhana and others went there on the pretext of looking after the cows. The Gandharvas took them captive; but the Pāṇḍavas intervened and set them free. Feeling humiliated at the mishap Duryodhana decided to end his life after crowning Duśśāsana as King. But Duśśāsana did not agree to the proposal. (For details see Ghoṣayātrā).

10) Duryodhana's attempt at death and his trip to Pātāla. Humiliated at the procession thus and turning down the advice of friends to return to the palace, Duryodhana spread grass on the ground and lay down there to die. As his death would spell disaster to the Dānavas they decided to send him back to his palace for which purpose they performed the Vaitāna sacrifice in Pātāla. While offering milk in the sacrificial fire a Rākṣasa woman, Kṛtyā, arose therefrom, and at the instance of the Dānavas she carried Duryodhana over to Pātāla. There they told him thus: "Oh Duryodhana, a part of your body has been earned by us from Śiva by our penance. That part of your body above the waist is made of diamond. Therefore, arrows will not pierce your body. Grieve not. Bhagadatta and other heroes have been born to help you. Your great supporter Karṇa is possessed of the soul of Narakāsura." These words of the Dānavas instilled fresh hope in Duryodhana, and he was taken back to his Kingdom by Kṛtyā. This incident appeared as a dream to Duryodhana. Bucking up confidence and courage again he returned to Hastināpura and continued to rule (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 252).

11) Duryodhana's Viṣṇu yajña. At this juncture Duryodhana thought of performing a Rājasūya for which he invited brahmins to the palace. After bestowing much thought on the subject the brahmins pointed out that there was no sanction for Duryodhana to conduct a Rājasūya as his elders, Dhṛtarāṣṭra and Dharmaputra were still alive. At the same time they pointed out that there was another Yajña called Viṣṇu Yajña as efficacious as Rājasūya which Duryodhana was competent to perform. Accordingly Duryodhana performed the Viṣṇu yajña and earned reputation among evil monarchs. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapters 256, 257).

12) Boon from Durvāsas. Once Durvāsas accompanied by his disciples, came to Duryodhana's palace, and Duryodhana decided somehow or other to befriend and use the maharṣi as a weapon against the Pāṇḍavas. He housed the maharṣi and his disciples in the palace for a few days and pleased them by careful service at which the maharṣi asked Duryodhana to request for any boon he desired. And, Duryodhana asked the maharṣi to visit the Pāṇḍavas one day in the forest with his disciples when they had finished taking their meals. The maharṣi agreed. And, this was the period of time when Pāñcālī had received the akṣayapātra from Sūrya. Everyday the pātra would produce enough food for the Pāṇḍavas and the other people with them, but it would become empty for the day after Pāñcālī had eaten her food. This was the nature of the akṣayapātra.

Pāñcālī had finished her meals one day when Durvāsas and his disciples came to the Pāṇḍavas. Not knowing that Pāñcālī had already finished her food Dharmaputra welcomed the maharṣi and his disciples and requested them to take bath in the Gaṅgā and return for their meals. Pāñcālī was in a fix. The akṣayapātra would not produce any more food for the day, and if not duly fed the maharṣi would get angry and curse them. In this painful dilemma she prayed to Śrī Kṛṣṇa for succour, and lo! he appeared and asked Pāñcālī for some food. She replied that the akṣayapātra was quite empty. But, Kṛṣṇa got from her the pātra and ate one particle of Kīra (a leafy vegetable) which had stuck on its side. That leafy substance fully satisfied his hunger and thirst whereupon the hunger and thirst of Durvāsas and his disciples were also quenched. Then Kṛṣṇa asked Sahadeva to bring back the maharṣi and his disciples from the bank of the Gaṅgā and accordingly he went there and invited them. Only a few minutes had passed since the maharṣi and his disciples had felt the satisfaction of a sumptuous meal. They were also astonished to think how in such a short time food for so many people could be cooked by Pāñcālī. They felt rather anxious about the reaction which Dharmaputra would evince in case they returned to him to say that they required no food. Durvāsas realised only too well that to quarrel with the Pāṇḍavas, who enjoyed the friendship and support of Kṛṣṇa was like playing with fire. Therefore, the maharṣi with his disciples ran away from the place secretly. Pāṇḍavas waited long for the maharṣi and his disciples to return fearing that the object of Durvāsas might be to return at the untimely hour and curse them. But, Śrī Kṛṣṇa told them the details about the maharṣi's departure and assured Dharmaputra that he and his disciples would not return. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 263).

13) War against Virāṭa. After twelve years' exile in the forest the Pāṇḍavas began their life incogni to at Virāṭa nagara. Kīcaka, brother-in-law of Mātsya, the Virāṭa King, was killed secretly by Bhīmasena, and news was spread that Kīcaka was killed by a Gandharva.

None of the spies deputed by Duryodhana to spot out the Pāṇḍavas during their life incognito could gather any information about them. One of those days Suśarman, King of Trigarta, told Duryodhana that the Virāṭa King had lost his power and spirits due to the death of Kīcaka and it was, therefore, the proper time to attack the Virāṭa country and subjugate it thoroughly. The idea appealed to Karṇa, who prompted Duryodhana to war against Virāṭa. The army was fully mobilised. As an excuse for the war, at the instance of Duryodhana, Suśarman, King of Trigarta lifted innumerable cows of the Virāṭa King. This happened on the day on which the life incognito of the Pāṇḍavas was to have ended. And war started thus. The Virāṭa prince Uttara who spent his time in the zenana in the palace appeared in the field of war. Arjuna, under the assumed name of Bṛhannala took up the charioteership of Uttara. But, at the sight of the vast Kaurava army Uttara fainted, and Arjuna hurriedly drove the chariot over to where his bow gāṇḍīva was kept hidden, and with the bow in his hands Arjuna jumped into the thick of the fight. A fierce war ensued in which the Kaurava army was completely routed. The life incognito of the Pāṇḍavas was also over, and Duryodhana became naturally anxious about the future of things. (M.B. Virāṭa Parva, Chapter 65).

14) Preparation for war. Duryodhana refused to give the Pāṇḍavas, even after their return from twelve years' exile in forest and one year's life incognito, even 'as much land as would hold a pin', and war became inevitable. The Pāṇḍavas and Kauravas fought the great war which lasted for eighteen days on the field of Kurukṣetra.

(1) Duryodhana went to invite Śrī Kṛṣṇa. Preparations for the war were gathering speed and momentum. Both the sides were on the look out for more friends and allies. Being told that Arjuna had gone to Dvārakā to seek Kṛṣṇa's support Duryodhana rushed to the place. Seeing Duryodhana from a distance Kṛṣṇa lay on his bed in a false sleep, and Duryodhana took his seat on a stool at the head of the bed awaiting Kṛṣṇa to awake from sleep. Soon after, Arjuna came there and he stood at the feet of Kṛṣṇa with head bowed down. When Kṛṣṇa awoke from sleep it was Arjuna whom he saw first, and while exchanging greetings with Arjuna he was told that it was Duryodhana, who had come first. But when Duryodhana and Arjuna explained the object of their visit he told them thus:—

"No doubt it was Duryodhana who came first. But, it was Arjuna whom I met first. Since Duryodhana came first and I saw Arjuna first I shall help both of you in war. There is the adage that youngsters should be given priority of consideration. So, Arjuna may indicate his preference first. I shall give one of you an army of 10 lakhs of warriors as strong in body as myself, and I shall stand by the other without arms and without fighting. Arjuna may make his choice first. And, he chose Kṛṣṇa for his side in the war while Duryodhana was happy to get Kṛṣṇa's mighty army. (M.B. Udyoga-Parva, Chapter 7).

(2) Duryodhana sought Balabhadra's help but Balabhadra told him frankly that since he could not forsake Kṛṣṇa he would remain neutral in the war. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 7, Verse 25).

(3) Duryodhana got an akṣauhiṇī (a specific division of army) from Kṛtavarman. (Udyoga Parva, Chapter 7, Verse 32).

(4) Śalya promised to captain the Kaurava army. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 8, Verse 18).

(5) Duryodhana could collect a total of eleven akṣauhiṇīs. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 19, Verse 27).

(6) He assured Dhṛtarāṣṭra that the Kaurava army would easily defeat the Pāṇḍava army. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 57).

(7) He declared that war was a yajña. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 58).

(8) At the instance of Dhṛtarāṣṭra a rest house was built for Śrī Kṛṣṇa on his way to the Kauravas for compromise talks on behalf of the Pāṇḍavas. (Udyoga Parva, Chapter 85).

(9) Duryodhana opined that Kṛṣṇa be taken captive when he came to plead for compromise and peace, but the others did not support him. (Udyoga Parva, Chapter 83, Verse 13).

(10) Duryodhana worshipped Kṛṣṇa with rare and excellent things and invited him for meals, but Kṛṣṇa did not accept any. (Udyoga Parva, Chapter 91, Verse 13).

(11) Duryodhana rejected the advice of sage Kaṇva to come to terms with the Pāṇḍavas. (Udyoga Parva, Chapters 97-105).

(12) He emphatically announced in the Kaurava assembly that even as much land as may be required to hold a pin would not be given to the Pāṇḍavas. (Udyoga Parva, Chapter 127, Verse 26).

(13) Kṛṣṇa's pleadings in the Kaurava assembly for peace and amity on behalf of the Pāṇḍavas failed to have any effect. On the occasion Duryodhana, Śakuni, Karṇa and Duśśāsana conspired to take Kṛṣṇa captive. Sātyaki informed Kṛṣṇa secretly about the conspiracy and Kṛṣṇa informed Dhṛtarāṣṭra about it, and he warned the conspirators against their wicked plan. (Udyoga Parva, Chapter 13, Verse 4).

(14) Duryodhana appointed Kṛpa, Droṇa, Śalya, Jayadratha, Hārdika, Aśvatthāmā, Karṇa, Śakuni, Bālhīka and Kāmboja as commanders of the army. (Udyoga Parva, Chapter 155).

(15) Duryodhana appointed Bhīṣma as the Commander in-Chief of the army. (Udyoga Parva, Chapter 156 verse 26).

(16) He appointed Ulūka as messenger and warned Śrī Kṛṣṇa, the Pāṇḍavas, Drupada, Virāṭa, Śikhaṇḍī, Dhṛṣṭadyumna and others. (Udyoga Parva, Chapter 10).

(17) He ordered the army to the Kurukṣetra field. (Udyoga Parva, Chapter 195).

(18) He appointed Duśśāsana as Bhīṣma's body-guard. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 15).

(19) On the flag staff of Duryodhana studded with gems his flag with the serpent's emblem flew high in the air. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 17, Verse 25).

(20) He learnt from Droṇa the names of heroes on both sides before the fighting started. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 25).

15) Duryodhana in battlefield. The following incidents relating to Duryodhana in actual war have been noted.

(1) In the first day's fighting he fainted, hit by the arrows of Bhīma. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 58, Verse 17).

(2) He attacked Bhīma with the support of the elephant division (Gajasenā) and the latter fainted. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 64, Verse 14).

(3) Bhīmasena again confronted him, and again he fell down fainted. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 80, Verse 4).

(4) Dhṛṣṭadyumna defeated him. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 82, Verse 53).
(5) Bhīma killed eight brothers of Duryodhana at one stretch, and Duryodhana cried before Bhīṣma. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 88, Verse 37).
(6) He fought against Ghaṭotkaca and killed four Rākṣasa attendants of the latter. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 91, Verse 20).
(7) He fell down at the blows delivered by Ghaṭotkaca. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 92, Verse 14).
(8) He thrashed Bhīma to unconsciousness. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 94, Verse 5).
(9) Overpowered by Ghaṭotkaca, he gave expression to his sorrows before Bhīṣma. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 95, Verse 8).
(10) He directed Śalya to fight against Yudhiṣṭhira. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 105, Verse 26).
(11) Grieved at the death of the warriors in his army he went to Bhīṣma in great anguish. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 109, Verse 16).
(12) Duryodhana and Sātyaki fought against each other. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 111, Verse 14).
(13) He fought with Abhimanyu. (Bhīsma Parva, Chapter 116. Verse 1).
(14) He appointed Droṇa as chief of the army. (Bhīṣma Parva Chapter 6, Verse 2).
(15) He prayed for Droṇa's blessings to capture Yudhiṣṭhira alive. (Droṇa Parva Chapter 12. Verse 6).
(16) He embraced Droṇa at the sight of the latter disintegrating the fighting forces of the Pāṇḍavas. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 23, Verse 7).
(17) He accorded sanction to his warriors to kill Abhimanyu. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 39 Verse 16).
(18) He prompted Karṇa to fight Abhimanyu. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 40, Verse 23).
(19) He ran off at the blows of Abhimanyu. (Bhīṣma Parva. Chapter 45. Verse 30).
(20) He consoled Jayadratha who ran away in fear of Arjuna. (Bhīṣma Parva. Chapter 74, Verse 14).
(21) When he admitted that he was not efficient to fight Arjuna, Droṇa tied a divine talisman on his body. (Bhīṣma Parva. Chapter 94, Verse 73).
(22) Defeated by Arjuna he ran away with the talisman on him. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 103, Verse 32).
(23) Sātyaki defeated Duryodhana. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 120 Verse 40).
(24) He got defeated by Yudhāmanyu and Uttamaujas (Bhīṣma Parva Chapter 102 Verse 30).
(25) He incited Karṇa to kill Arjuna. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 145, Verse 12).
(26) He lost his enthusiasm with the death of Jayadratha (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 150).
(27) He made allegations against Droṇa. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 152, Verse 2).
(28) He fought with Yudhiṣṭhira and got defeated. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 153, Verse 23).
(29) Aśvatthāmā got ready to kill Karṇa, but Duryodhana pacified him. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 150, Verse 13).
(30) He fought with Bhīma and got defeated. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 166, Verse 30).
(31) He deputed Śakuni to kill the Pāṇḍavas. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 170, Verse 60).
(32) He got defeated in fight with Sātyaki. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 171, Verse 23).
(33) He prompted Alambuṣa, son of Jaṭāsura to fight with Ghaṭotkaca. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 174, Verse 9).
(34) He fought with Nakula and got defeated. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 187, Verse 50).
(35) On the death of Droṇa he ran away from the battlefield. (Droṇa Parva, Chapter 193, Verse 17).
(36) After the death of Droṇa he appointed Karṇa chief of the army. (Karṇa Parva, Chapter 10, Verse 43).
(37) He fought against Yudhiṣṭhira and got defeated (Karṇa Parva, Chapter 29, Verse 32).
(38) He requested Śalya to act as Karṇa's charioteer. The request so enraged Śalya that he rose from his seat at once. But, Duryodhana brought him round with praises. (Karṇa Parva, Chapter 32).
(39) He created so much troubles and difficulties for Nakula and Sahadeva in fight with them. (Karṇa Parva, Chapter 56).
(40) In further fighting he got defeated by Bhīma. (Karṇa Parva, Chapter 61, Verse 51).
(41) He killed the Kulinda prince. (Karṇa Parva, Chapter 85, Verse 19).
(42) When Aśvatthāmā put forward certain compromise proposals he rejected them. (Karṇa Parva, Chapter 88, Verse 30).
(43) Karṇa was killed and Duryodhana was immersed in grief. [Karṇa Parva, Chapter 92, Verse 15).
(44) He rejected peace proposals made by Kṛpa, and reaffirmed the decision to fight. (Śalya Parva, Chapter 5).
(45) He appointed Śalya as chief of the army. (Śalya Parva, Chapter 7, Verse 6).
(46) He was again defeated by Bhīma. (Śalya Parva, Chapter 16, Verse 42).
(47) He was defeated by Dhṛṣṭadyumna. (Śalya Parva, Chapter 25, Verse 23).
(48) After the defeat he ran away from the battlefield, entered a pool rendering the water motionless by magical power and stayed under water. (Śalya Parva, Chapter 29, Verse 54).
(49) Kṛpācārya, Aśvatthāmā and Kṛtavarman went to his hiding place and tried to arouse him for war but he expressed disinclination for war. (Śalya Parva, Chapter, 30, Verse 14).
(50) Yudhiṣṭhira visited Duryodhana in the latter's hiding place, but he answered Yudhiṣṭhira from under water. (Śalya Parva, Chapter 31, Verse 33).
(51) On the urging of Yudhiṣṭhira he came out of the pool. (Śalya Parva, Chapter 32, Verse 33).
(52) He got prepared for club fight with Bhīma. (Śalya Parva, Chapter 33, Verse 52).
(53) Ill omens like storms, dust fall, thunder and lightning, followed his preparations for fight with Bhīma. (Śalya Parva, Chapter 56, Verse 8).
(54) He fell down at the blows of Bhīma with his thigh broken. (Śalya Parva, Chapter 58, Verse 47).
(55) Śrī Kṛṣṇa spoke harsh words to him and he replied to them all. (Śalya Parva, Chapter 61, Verse 27).
(56) He shed tears before Śalya. (Śalya Parva, Chapter 61, Verse 7).
(57) He appointed Aśvatthāmā chief of the army. (Śalya Parva, Chapter 65, Verse 41).
(58) Congratulating Aśvatthāmā he cast away his mortal coils. (Sauptika Parva, Chapter 9, Verse 56).

16) Other information.
(1) Duryodhana was one of the eleven mahārathas on the Kaurava side, others being Yuyutsu, Duśśāsana, Dussaha, Durmeṣaṇa, Vikarṇa, Citrasena, Jaya, Kurumitra, Karṇa and Satyavrata (all of them, sons of Dhṛtarāṣṭra). (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 63, Verse 18).
(2) With the help of Karṇa he abducted the daughter of the King of Kāśī. (Śānti Parva, Chapter, 4, Verse 13).
(3) After his death his splendid palace was occupied by Bhīma. (Śānti Parva, Chapter 44, Verse 6).
(4) Vyāsa brought by his esoteric powers to the surface of the Gaṅgā the souls of the heroes who were killed in the battle. Amongst them was the soul of Duryodhana also. (Āśramavāsika Parva, Chapter 32, Verse 9).
(5) Yudhiṣṭhira saw Duryodhana, after his death, living in heaven, resplendent as Sūrya in the company of holy devatās. (Svargārohaṇa Parva, Chapter 1, Verse 4).
17) Synonyms of Duryodhana. Ājamīḍha, Bhārata, Bhāratasārdūla, Bhāratasreṣṭha, Bhāratāgrya, Bharatarṣabha, Bhāratasattama, Dhārtarāṣṭra, Dhṛtarāṣṭraja, Gāndhārīputra, Kaurava, Kauravanandanā, Kauravendra, Kauravya, Kauraveya, Kurukuladhāma, Kurumukhya, Kurunandana, Kurupati, Kurupravīra, Kurupuṅgava, Kurusattama, Kururāja, Kurusiṁha, Kurūttama, Suyodhana.

DURYODHANA II. The Mahābhārata refers to another Duryodhana, grandson of Suvīra, and son of Durjaya. (Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 2, Verse 18). A daughter called Sudarśanā was born to him by his wife Narmadā. Duryodhana married Sudarśanā to Agnideva.

DŪṢAṆA. A Rākṣasa. Dūṣaṇa, who came along with Khara to fight, was killed by Śrī Rāma. (See Khara).

DUṢKARṆA. One of the hundred sons of Dhṛtarāṣṭra. He was defeated in fighting in the great war by Śatānīka. (Droṇa Parva, Chapter 155).

DUṢPAṆYA. Last son of a merchant in Pāṭalīputra. Short-tempered and haughty, this Duṣpaṇya killed many children. The King outlawed him. He went into the forest where he drowned the child of maharṣi Ugraśravas The maharṣi cursed him that he also should end his life by drowning and his soul roam about in unsupportable distress. The curse came true. After roaming about for many years he approached Agastya and prayed for redemption from the curse. The sage directed his disciple, Sutīkṣṇa to get holy water from Agnitīrtha in Mount Gandhamādana and sprinkle it on the sinful soul of Duṣpaṇya. Sutīkṣṇa did as he was asked by the guru, and the soul of Duṣpaṇya attained salvation. (Setumāhātmyam).

DUṢPARĀJAYA (DURJAYA). One of the hundred sons of Dhṛtarāṣṭra. On the occasion of Duryodhana's journey to Dvaitavana Duṣparājaya was taken captive by the Gandharvas. In the war with the Gandharvas he clashed with Nīla. (Droṇa Parva, Chapter 25). He was killed by Bhīma. (Śalya Parva, Chapter 26).

DUṢPRADHARṢAṆA. (DUṢPRAHARṢA). One of the hundred sons of Dhṛtarāṣṭra. Bhīma killed him in fighting. (Śalya Parva, Chapter 26).

DUSSAHA. A son of Dhṛtarāṣṭra. He was wounded by the arrows of Sātyaki and killed by Bhīma. (Droṇa Parva, Chapter 135).

DUŚŚALA. One of the hundred sons of Dhṛtarāṣṭra who was killed in war by Bhīma. (Droṇa Parva, Chapter 129, Verse 39).

DUŚŚALĀ. The only daughter of Dhṛtarāṣṭra by Gāndhārī.
(1) She was married to Jayadratha the Rājā of Sindhu.
(2) Her birth. See under Kauravas.
(3) Yudhiṣṭhira did not permit Jayadratha to be killed when he abducted Pāñcālī as he was the husband of Duśśalā. (Vana Parva, Chapter 271, Verse 43).
(4) When Arjuna reached Vidarbha attending the Aśvamedha yajña the archers obstructed his progress, and he killed them all. Suratha, son of Duśśalā, was also among those killed, and she came to the battlefield with her infant child crying, whereupon Arjuna stopped the fighting and in remorse crowned the son of Suratha as the King of Sindhu. (Aśvamedha Parva, Chapters 78 and 89).

DUŚŚĀSANA I. A son of Dhṛtarāṣṭra.
1) His birth. See under Kauravas.
2) Other information. (1) He, along with his brothers, was present at the svayaṁvara of Pāñcālī. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 185, Verse 1).
(3) He kept store and served food to the guests at the Rājasūya of Yudhiṣṭhira. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 35, Verse 5).
(3) He dragged Pāñcālī and stripped her of her clothes in the assembly hall of the Kauravas. (For details see under Pāñcālī).
(4) Gandharvas took him captive in Dvaitavana. (See under Kauravas).
(5) The Pāṇḍavas released the Kauravas from captivity, and Duryodhana laden with this humiliation did not desire to return to Hastināpura. He asked Duśśāsana to assume kingship and rule the subjects well. Duśśāsana rejected the offer and wept. This was a good trait in the vicious character of Duśśāsana like lightning in the midst of dark and thick clouds. (Vana Parva, Chapter 249).
3) Duśśāsana in the great war. (1) During the first day of the war he fought a duel with Nakula. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 22).
(2) He got defeated in the duel with Arjuna. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 110, Verse 23).
(3) He promised Duryodhana that he would kill Abhimanyu. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 89, Verse 24).
(4) Abhimanyu rendered him unconscious with his arrows. (Droṇa Parva, Chapter 40, Verse 13).
(5) He got defeated by Arjuna and ran away from the battlefield. (Droṇa Parva, Chapter 10).
(6) He fought with Sātyaki. (Droṇa Parva, Chapter 96, Verse 14).
(7) He got defeated by Sātyaki and ran off. (Droṇa Parva, Chapter 121, Verse 29).
(8) He defeated Prativindhya. (Droṇa Parva, Chapter 168, Verse 43).
(9) Sahadeva defeated him in fighting. (Droṇa Parva, Chapter 188, Verse 5).
(10) He fought with Dhṛṣṭadyumna and got defeated. (Droṇa Parva, Chapter 189, Verse 5).
(11) On the death of Droṇa he ran away from the battle-field. (Droṇa Parva, Chapter 193, Verse 15).
(12) Sahadeva defeated him. (Karṇa Parva, Chapter 23, Verse 18).
(13) Duśśāsana put Dhṛṣṭadyumna in prison. (Karṇa Parva, Chapter 61. Verse 33).
(14) He fought with Bhīma. (Karṇa Parva, Chapter 82).

4) Death of Duśśāsana. In the fierce fight between Bhīma and Duśśāsana at Kurukṣetra Bhīma felled him with his club and sat on his chest asking him with which hand of his he pulled Draupadī by hair, Raising his right hand Duśśāsana cried out, "This is the hand you seek for". At this reply of his Bhīma pulled out Duśśāsana's right hand and thrashed him with it. He cut asunder Duśśāsana's chest and drank the blood which gushed out of it (Karṇa Parva, Chapter 83, Verse 8).

5) After his death. (1) After Duśśāsana's death Arjuna occupied his palace. (Śānti Parva, Chapter 44, Verse 8).

(2) Vyāsa evoked the souls of the heroes who died in war and sprinkled Gaṅges water on them. Duśśāsana was one among those thus treated. (Āśramavāsika Parva, Chapter 32, Verse 9).

(3) After death he attained heaven. (Svargārohaṇa Parva, Chapter 5, Verse 21)

6) Synonyms of Duśśāsana. Bharata, Bharataśreṣṭha, Bharatāpasada, Dhṛtarāṣṭraja, Kaurava, Kauravya, Kuruśārdūla etc.

DUŚŚĀSANA II. Another Duśśāsana, servant of the son of King Khaḍgabāhu of Saurāṣṭra is also mentioned in the Purāṇas.

Khaḍgabāhu had a famous elephant, which one night broke its chains and escaped, and all the mahouts could not chain it again. People in terror of the elephant ran helter-skelter. Now, a brahmin was going that way chanting verses of the 16th Chapter of the Gītā, and even though the mahouts warned him he did not change his path. Instead he saluted the elephant by touching its cheeks and proceeded on his way unhurt by the animal. The King felt great respect for the brahmin when he was told that he owed his miraculous powers to the 16th chapter of the Gītā, and he took the brahmin with him to his palace. The King gave him 100,000 golden coins and received from him the Gītā mantra. He began reciting daily certain verses in the 16th Chapter of the Bhagavadgītā.

Some time afterwards the King one day went to an open ground near his palace accompanied by soldiers and set the elephant free from its chain. Then, unheeding the entreaties of the frightened people he approached the elephant, saluted it by touching its cheeks and came away unhurt. He could act in this fashion because of his firm faith in the efficacy of the Bhagavadgītā. And afterwards he placed his son, on the throne and himself led a life of recluse repeating the Bhagavadgītā.

Some Purāṇas have another version of this episode. Duśśāsana was a servant of Khaḍgabāhu's son and he attempted to catch the elephant but was killed by it. He attained salvation by hearing the 17th Chapter of the Bhagavadgītā.

Duśśāsana, an idiot, betting a huge sum of money with the junior mahouts of the elephant and unheeding the warnings of several people once mounted the elephant. Children agitated the animal and Duśśāsana fell down from its back. The angry animal stamped the fool to death, and its rage having not yet subsided it threw around his bones. Duśśāsana, who ended his life thus was reborn as an elephant and was owned by King Jayadeva of Ceylon for a long time. A great friend of King Khaḍgabāhu, Jayadeva presented the elephant to him. At the sight of its brothers and other relations memory about its previous birth dawned on the elephant. And, it lived in great grief. After some days the King presented the animal to a poet pleased at his samasyāpūraṇa (filling the three lines of a stanza in tune with the fourth line given). The poet sold the elephant to the King of Mālava as it got ill with fever. In spite of the best treatment administered to it the elephant seemed to be nearing its end. Without either eating or drinking or sleeping the animal stood motionless shedding tears day and night. One day, the Mālava King visited the elephant when, to the surprise of all assembled there, the elephant spoke to the King thus: "Oh, King: if a brahmin recites the 17th Chapter of the Bhagavadgītā I will be completely cured of my illness."

Accordingly a brahmin was brought. As soon as he chanted the Gītā and sprinkled water on its head it got rid of its animalhood, ascended the divine aeroplane and shone forth like Indra. The Mālava King also began daily reciting the Bhagavadgītā and within a short time afterwards attained salvation. (Padma Purāṇa, Chapter 8).

DUŚŚĪLĀ. A harlot who lived in Pratiṣṭhāna. One Devadāsa was her husband. When Devadāsa had once gone to the palace on some business Duśśīlā hid her paramour, with the object of doing away with her husband, on top of the ceiling of her room. He killed Devadāsa while the latter was sleeping in the night. Next day when people gathered at her house she gave out the story that her husband was murdered by thieves. But the people got the true story about the death of Devadāsa from his four-year-old son and beat Duśśīlā to death. (Kathāsaritsāgara, Śaktiyaśolaṁbaka, Taraṅga 2).

DUṢṬABUDDHI. See Mitrabheda.

DUṢYANTA I. A reputed King of the Lunar dynasty.

2) Genealogy. Descended from Viṣṇu thus:—Brahmā—Atri—Candra—Budha—Purūravas—Āyus — Nahuṣa — Yayāti — Pūru—Janamejaya—Pracinvān—Namasyu—Vītabhaya — Śuṇḍu—Bahugava—Saṁyāti — Rahovādī Raudrāśva— Matināra — Santurodha—Duṣyanta.

Matināra had two sons: Santurodha and Pratiratha, and Santurodha had three sons: Duṣyanta[1] Pravīra and Sumanta. Pratiratha begot Kaṇva and he, Medhātithi.

His reign. Within a short period of time Duṣyanta bacame the emperor of India. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 68, Verse 3). His empire extended up to the sea, and he became an object of envy for other rulers. Under his rule the four castes flourished in affluence. None was threatened with illness or by thieves. The seasons marched in due order, the clouds raining at the proper time etc. "Like the ocean not getting agitated, and putting up with everything with unique patience like the earth, Duṣyanta ruled the country" (Ādi Parva, Chapter 68).

1. The genealogy given above has been taken jointly from Agnipurāṇa, Bhāgavata and Viṣṇupurāṇa. But the Mahābhārata (Ādi Parva, Chapter 94, Verse 17) gives Ilin as the name of Duṣyanta's father and Rathantī as that of his mother. It may be surmised that Santurodha and Ilin were one and the same individual.

3) Marriage and birth of son. Once Duṣyanta set out to a forest to hunt. Seated in his chariot, which moved with the speed of Garuḍa he came to a beautiful forest. Weary with hunger and thirst the King, leaving the attendants behind walked into the hermitage of the sage Kaṇva. Proceeding along the sand on the banks of Mālinī river and drinking with his eyes the beauties of the hermitage he reached Kaṇva's āśrama. 'Who is there in the āśrama?' queried the King, whereupon Śakuntalā, the foster daughter of Kaṇva came out, and in the absence of her father welcomed the guest. Enchanted by the beauty of Śakuntalā, the King questioned her about her lineage and she told him the story about Viśvāmitra's love for Menakā, and Kaṇva bringing up their daughter. Duṣyanta felt deep love for her, and in accordance with rules prescribed in Dharma śāstras married her in the Gāndharva way. He also accepted her stipulation that the son born to her should become the next monarch. Śakuntalā got pregnant, and after promising that she would duly be conducted to the palace Duṣyanta returned.

No sooner had Duṣyanta left the āśrama than Kaṇva, who had been out returned to the āśrama. With his divine eyes he understood what had happened in his absence. Kaṇva blessed Śakuntalā that she would have an excellent son, who would become an excellent ruler of the world surrounded by the sea.

In due course of time Śakuntalā delivered a son. Kaṇva did the rites pertaining to the birth of the child, and named the child Sarvadamana. The child grew up to become six years old, and Kaṇva realising that the further stay of Śakuntalā and her son at the āśrama would stand in the way of the child's welfare and progress sent the mother and the child to Hastināpura, the capital of Duṣyanta, attended by his disciples. When they reached Duṣyanta's palace and sent word to him about their arrival he, pleading ignorance about his marriage with Śakuntalā, refused to receive her and the child. Duṣyanta and Śakuntalā hotly argued the question. At last, when Śakuntalā, with swelling emotions was about to leave the palace, a celestial voice announced that Duṣyanta had, in fact, married Śakuntalā, that Sarvadamana was his son and that he (Sarvadamana) would become a great ruler under the name Bharata. (Ādi Parva, Chapters 69-74).

4) Other information. (1) Duṣyanta did not eat flesh. (Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 115, Verse 64).

(2) After his death Duṣyanta stayed in Yama's assembly worshipping him. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 8, Verse 15).

DUṢYANTA II. A son born to King Ajamīḍha of the Pūru dynasty by his wife called Nīlī. He had a brother called Parameṣṭhī. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 94, Verse 33). Both the Kings, Duṣyanta and Parameṣṭhī are referred to as Pāñcālas also. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 94, Verse 33).

DŪTALAKṢAṆA (M). The word 'dūta' has a special meaning in Viṣavidyā. If a man is bitten by a snake, the man who goes to the Viṣavaidya to speak to him about it and bring him if necessary is called 'dūta'. From the external signs and symbols of the dūta and from words spoken by him the viṣavaidya understands whether the person bitten by the snake would die or survive. These signs and words of the 'dūta' are called lakṣaṇas. The following are some of the important dūtalakṣaṇas.

(1) The caste of the person bitten by the snake and the caste of the dūta.

(2) The first word uttered by the dūta. If it is the name of the patient, it has a special significance.

(3) If the dūta makes an incomplete sentence, it is a significant lakṣaṇa.

(4) The things carried by the dūta such as stick, rope, knife.

(5) The colour of the clothes worn by the dūta.

(6) The tone in which the dūta speaks. These are the lakṣaṇas from which the doctor knows whether the patient can be cured. (Bhaviṣya Purāṇa, Brahma Parva, Chapter 35, Verses 19,20).

DVĀDAŚABHUJA. A warrior of Subrahmaṇya. (M.B. Śalya Parva, Chapter 45, Stanza 57).

DVĀDAŚĀDITYA (S). The twelve sons born to Kaśyapa by his wife Aditi are called Dvādaśādityas (Twelve Ādityas) The word Āditya means 'born of Aditi'. As it occurs in Agni Purāṇa (Ch. 51) a table, showing the names of the twelve Ādityas and the sign of the Zodiac over which each Āditya predominates and the colour of it, is given below.

Dvādaśādityas.	Sign of the Zodiac.	Colour
1 Varuṇa.	Meṣa (Aries)	Black.
2 Sūrya (Sun)	Ṛṣabha (Taurus)	Blood-colour.
3 Sahasrāṁśu	Mithuna (Gemini)	Slightly redcolour.
4 Dhātā	Karkaṭaka (Cancer)	Yellow.
5 Tapana	Siṁha (Leo)	White.
6 Savitā	Kanyā (Virgo)	Pure white.
7 Gabhasti	Tulā (Libra)	tawny colour.
8 Ravi	Vṛścika (Scorpio)	Yellow.
9 Parjanya	Dhanu (Sagittarius)	Parrot-colour.
10 Tvaṣṭā	Makara (Capricorn)	Snow-white.
11 Mitra	Kumbha (Aquarius)	Smoky hue.
12 Viṣṇu[2]	Mīna (Pisces)	Blue.

DVĀDAŚĀKṢA. A warrior of Subrahmaṇya. (M.B. Śalya Parva, Chapter 45, Stanza 88).

DVĀDAŚĪVRATA. A fast ordained in accordance with the Hindu religion to make an end of the sorrow and misery in life. There is a history behind this fast or vow which is performed in the bright lunar fortnight in the month of Phālguna (Mīna). It is given below.

Once King Mahābali, with a vast army of Asuras, went to the realm of the gods and drove them out of heaven. Aditi was much grieved at the misfortune that befell her sons. Kaśyapa her husband asked her the cause of her grief. She told him about the fall of gods, and asked him for a remedy. Kaśyapa told her to observe Dvādaśīvrata. Aditi took Dvādaśīvrata and Mahābali was pushed down to Pātāla by Mahāviṣṇu who incarnated as Vāmana. From that day onwards Dvādaśīvrata is considered to be holy fast. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 8).

DVAIDHĪBHĀVA. One of the six qualities, others being Sandhi, Vigraha, Yāna, Āsana, and Saṁśraya. Sandhi is to make peace with the enemy. Vigraha is war. The journey to battle is Yāna. Āsana is, not going for war. Dvaidhībhāva is dividing his army into two, i.e. if the

1. This version of the episode is found in Mahābhārata. The poet Kālidāsa has made variations, suitable to his work, the Abhijñāna-Śākuntala. Some deviations from the Mahābhārata story may be noticed in the works of some other poets also.
2. Different names of Ādityas occur in different Purāṇas. The names given here are based on the Agni Purāṇa.

army rose against the King, he should bring one party on his side and make the two parties fight with each other. Saṁśraya is to yield to the powerful. (Manusmṛti, Chapter 7, Stanza 160).

DVAIPĀYANA. A synonym of Vyāsa. He who is born in an island, i.e. Vyāsa. (See under Vyāsa).

DVAIPĀYANAM. A lake in Kurukṣetra. During the battle of Bhārata, Duryodhana ran away from the battlefield and hid himself in this lake. (M.B. Śalya Parva, Chapter 80, Stanza 47).

DVAITAVANA. A forest in which the Pāṇḍavas lived during their forest life. (M.B. Vana Parva).

DVĀPARA I. A friend of Kali, who went to the Svayaṁvara of Damayantī accompanied by Dvāpara. (See under Kali).

DVĀPARA II. The deity of Dvāpara Yuga (the age of Dvāpara). (See under Yuga).

DVĀPARA YUGA. See under Yuga.

DVĀRAKĀ. (DVĀRAVATĪ; DVĀRĀVATĪ). The place where the capital of Śrī Kṛṣṇa stood.

1) General information. The King Jarāsandha was the enemy of the Yādavas. To save themselves from the attack of Jarāsandha, the Yādavas united themselves under Śrī Kṛṣṇa, and built a strong city in the western islands. That beautiful city was called Dvārakā. Kuśasthalī, is another name of this city. The beautiful mountain Raivataka stood as a fortress round the city which was so strongly built that it was not possible even for the gods to enter it. Even women could fight sitting inside the forts. The fortress Raivataka was three yojanas long. In each yojana three divisions of the army were camped. In each yojana there were hundred doors, with a strong army to guard each of them. (M.B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 14).

2) Śrī Kṛṣṇa in Dvārakā. Dvārakā was the abode of Śrī Kṛṣṇa. It excelled even Amarāvatī in beauty. There was an efficient council of the leaders of the Yādavas. Dāśārhī was the name of that council. Many Yādava leaders Śrī Kṛṣṇa, Balabhadra and other luminaries attended the council. The royal palace was as luminous as the Sun and the Moon. Dvārakā was built by Viśvakarmā. There were ditches on the four sides of Dvārakā. There were four beautiful parks called Nandana, Miśraka Caitraratha and Vaibhrāja. The mountain Raivata acted as the eastern rampart of the city. Three other mountains, Veṇumanda on the North, Sukakṣa on the west and Latāveṣṭa on the south acted as natural forts. On the east of the city there was a beautiful lake. The city had fifty main gates to which sharp machine rockets, big iron wheels etc. were fitted for protection. It had an area of 96 yojanas (leagues). (M.B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 38, Dākṣiṇātya pāṭha).

3) Other details. (1) Arjuna visited Dvārakā in the course of his pilgrimage. It was then and there that he married Subhadrā. (M.B. Ādi Parva, 3 Chapters from 217).

(2) The King of Sālva attacked Dvārakā. The Yādavas drove him back. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 15).

(3) Dvārakā is a city, procuring beatitude. There is a bath known as Piṇḍāraka which is pure and divine. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 82, Stanza 65).

(4) It was at Piṇḍāraka that Nṛga, a chameleon attained beatitude. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 70, Stanza 7).

(5) It was here that the pestle of iron, which proved the cause of destruction of the Yādavas, came out of the stomach of Sāmba. (M.B. Mausala Parva, Chapter 1).

(6) After the death of Śrī Kṛṣṇa this city was swept over by the sea. (M.B. Mausala Parva, Chapter 7, Stanza 41).

4) Modern view. According to the modern researchers Dvārakā was situated in the sea to the west of Gujarat. There is a small locality near the sea, still called Dvārakā, and the principal occupation of the people of this place still is cattle-rearing, and trading in milk. They claim to be the descendants of the family of Śrī Kṛṣṇa.

DVĀRAPĀLAPURA. An ancient city of Bhārata. Nakula subjugated this city. (Mahābhārata, Sabhā Parva, Chapter 32, Stanza 11).

DVĀRAVATĪ. See under Dvārakā.

DVAYĀKṢA. An ancient Kingdom in Bhārata. The King of this country brought gifts to the palace of Yudhiṣṭhira. (Mahābhārata, Sabhā Parva, Chapter 51, Stanza 17).

DVIMĪḌHA. A King of the Pūru dynasty. He was the brother of Ajamīḍha and Purumīḍha. (Agni Purāṇa, Stanza 278).

DVIMŪRDHAN. A son of Hiraṇyākṣa. Śambara, Śakuni, Dvimūrdhan, Śaṅku and Ārya were the sons of Hiraṇyākṣa. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 19).

DVITA. An ancient hermit. He was the son of Gautama. It is stated in Mahābhārata, Śalya Parva, Chapter 37, that by the curse of his brother he became a wolf and begot monkey, scorpion, etc.

DVIVIDA. A monkey. He was a warrior in the army of Śrī Rāma.

DYAU (DYU). One of the Aṣṭavasus (eight Vasus). (For particulars see under Aṣṭavasus).

DYU (DYAU). One of the Aṣṭa Vasus (eight Vasus). This Vasu has another name Āpa. (For details see under Aṣṭavasus).

DYUMĀN. A King of the dynasty of Bhārgava. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 9).

DYUMATSENA I. A King. He was the father of Satyavān. He ruled over the Sālva country. Śaibyā was his wife. By and by he lost his eye-sight. Then another King conquered his country. Dyumatsena who lost everything went to the forest with his wife Śaibyā and child, Satyavān. (For particulars of how Satyavān married Sāvitrī and how Dyumatsena regained his lost kingdom, see under Satyavān).

DYUMATSENA II. A King who fought with Śrī Kṛṣṇa. (M.B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 38).He used to attend the council of Yudhiṣṭhira. (M.B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 4).

DYŪTAPARVA. A subsection of Sabhā Parva, (Chapters 46 to 73), in the Mahābhārata.

DYUTI. A goddess who protected Arjuna. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 37, Stanza 38)

DYUTIMĀN I. A King of the Madra country. Vijayā the daughter of this King was the wife of Sahadeva, one of the Pāṇḍavas. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 95, Stanza 80).

DYUTIMĀN II. A King of the Sālva country. He gave his country to Ṛcīka and attained heaven. (M.B, Śānti Parva, Chapter 234, Stanza 33).

DYUTIMĀN. III. Son of the King Madirāśva born in the Ikṣvāku dynasty. He was a mighty and bright hero. The King Suvīra was the son of Dyutimān. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 2, Stanza 9).

DYUTIMĀN IV. A hermit of the family of Bhṛgu. A daughter named Lakṣmī and sons named Dhātā and Vidhātā were born to Bhṛgu by his wife Khyāti. Dhātā and Vidhātā married the daughters of Meru named Āyati and Niyati. Prāṇa and Mṛkaṇḍu were born to the couple. Mārkaṇḍeya was born from Mṛkaṇḍu and Vedaśiras from Mārkaṇḍeya. A son named Dyutimān was born to Prāṇa and Rājapāla was born to Dyutimān. The family of Bhṛgu owes its expansion to Rājapāla. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Aṁśa 1, Chapter 10).

E

E. (ए). This sound means 'Devī'.

EḌĪ. A follower of Skandadeva. (Śloka 13, Chapter 46, Śalya Parva).

EKACAKRA. A village where the Pāṇḍavas lived for some time during their exile. Bhīma killed Baka during their stay in a brahmin-house in the village. (See under Baka).

EKACAKRA. A famous demon born to Kaśyapaprajāpati of his wife Danu. Demons Śaṁbara, Vipracitti, Namuci, Pulomā, Viśruta, Durjaya, Ayaśśiras, Aśvaśiras, Ketu, Vṛṣaparvā, Aśvagrīva, Virūpākṣa, Nikuṁbha, Kapaṭa and Ekapāt are brothers of Ekacakra and are equally famous. (Chapter 65, Ādi Parva, M.B.).

EKACANDRA. A follower of Skandadeva. (Śloka 30, Chapter 46, Śalya Parva).

EKACŪḌA. A follower of Skandadeva. (Śloka 5, Chapter 46, Śalya Parva).

EKĀDAŚĀDHIPATIS. Eleven adhipatis. For Devas the adhipati (ruling power) is Indra; for the stars, Candra; for Prajāpatis, Dakṣa; for wealth and Yakṣarakṣas, Kubera; for men Manu; for ṛṣis, Vasiṣṭha; for Grahajyotis, the Sun; for exudations, Varuṇa; for rivers, the Ocean; for Bhūtagaṇas, Śiva; and for the birds, Garuḍa.

EKĀDAŚAMĀNUṢADHARMA. The eleven dharmas of men are: Svādhyāya, Brahmacarya, Dāna, Yajña, free from Kṛpaṇatva, Dayā, Ahiṁsā, Kṣamā, Jitendriyatva, Śauca and Daiva Bhakti. (Tarkadīpikā).

EKĀDAŚASAṄKARAVARṆA (S). (1) Karaṇa (one born to a Vaiśya of a Śūdra woman). (2) Ambaṣṭha (one born to a brahmin of a Vaiśya woman). (3) Ugra (one born to a Kṣatriya of a Śūdra woman). (4) Māgadha (one born to a Vaiśya of a Kṣatriya woman). (5) Māhiṣya (one born to a Kṣatriya of a Vaiśya woman). (6) Kṣattā (one born to a Śūdra of a Kṣatriya woman). (7) Sūta (one born to a Kṣatriya of a brahmin woman). (8) Vaidehaka (one born to a Vaiśya of a brahmin woman). (9) Rathakāra (one born to a Māhiṣya of a Karaṇa woman) (10). Pāraśava (one born to a brahmin of a Śūdra woman). (11) Caṇḍāla (one born to a Śūdra of a brahmin woman). (See under Puṁ, Put, Putra).

EKĀDAŚAPŪJĀSTHĀNA (S). The eleven pūjāsthānas are Sūrya, Agni, Vipra, Gau, Vaiṣṇava, Ākāśa, Vāyu, Jala, Bhūmi, Ātmā and Sarvabhūtas. (Tarkadīpikā).

EKĀDAŚARUDRAS. Ajaikapāt, Ahirbudhnya, Virūpākṣa, Sureśvara, Jayanta, Bahurūpa, Aparājita, Sāvitra, Tryaṁbaka, Vaivasvata and Hara are the eleven Rudras. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Chapter 15, Aṁśa 1)[1]

EKĀDAŚATATTVA (S). Five Jñānendriyas, five Karmendriyas and mind constitute the Ekādaśatattvas (eleven tattvas).

EKĀDAŚATEJOGUṆA (S). Sparśa, Saṁkhyā, Pariṇāma, Pṛthaktva, Saṁyoga, Vibhāga, Paratva, Aparatva, Vega, Rūpa and Dravatva. (Tarkadīpikā) are the eleven tejoguṇas.

EKĀDAŚĪ. The eleventh day after a new moon or full moon day. The vrata observed on this day is called the Ekādaśī vrata. King Ambarīṣa observed very strictly and continuously the Ekādaśī Vrata to obtain the status of Indra. (See under Ambarīṣa). (Navama Skandha, Bhāgavata). This vrata would fetch food for the hungry and salvation for those who are in search of it. (Agni Purāṇa). The method of observing this vrata is detailed below:

Those who observe the Ekādaśī vrata should be on a regulated diet excluding meat and avoid sexual acts on the Daśamī day, the day preceding Ekādaśī. On both the Ekādaśī days in a month one should not take any food at all. The period which combines Ekādaśī with Dvādaśī (the twelfth day) is called Harivāsara because of the presence of Viṣṇu at that time. That is a good time for doing sacred yajñas. That day where there is only a small portion of Ekādaśī and the rest Dvādasī is the best day for yajñas. Trayodaśī (the thirteenth day) is good for breaking the fast. The day which merges Dvādaśī into Trayodaśī is the best day for breaking the fast. Do not observe the Vrata on a day which combines Daśamī with Ekādaśī. Hell is the result if one does so.

Completely abstaining from food on the Ekādaśī day you should take food on the Dvādaśī day. As you take your food you should pray like this: "Bhuṅkṣyehaṁ Puṇḍarīkākṣa śaraṇaṁ me bhavācyuta". (Oh, Puṇḍarīkākṣa, I am going to break my fast. Oh, Bhagavan, let you be my heaven). If an Ekādaśī comes on a Pūyaṁ—Puṣya—day in the bright half of the month that day should on any account be observed. That day would give the observer unlimited good result and that Ekādaśī is qualified as Pāpanāśinī (destroyer of all evils). When Ekādaśī and Dvādaśī happen to combine on a Tiruvoṇam (Śrāvaṇa) day the Ekādaśī is qualified as Vijayā. That day gives prosperity to devotees. It is also called Vijayā if an Ekādaśī comes in the month of Phālguna (March) on a Pūyaṁ (Puṣya) day. The wise extol this day as one promising crores of good effects. On the Ekādaśī day you should do Viṣṇu Pūjā which is productive of universal happiness. He who does so will acquire children and wealth in this world and attain Viṣṇuloka on death. (Chapter 178, Agni Purāṇa)

EKĀDAŚENDRIYA (S). Śrotra, Tvak, Cakṣus, Jihvā, Ghrāṇa, Vāk, Pāṇi, Pāda, Pāyu (anus) Upastha and mind are the eleven sense-organs.

EKAHAṀSATĪRTHA. An ancient holy place of north India. If a man bathes in a sacred pond he will get the benefit of giving away as charity a thousand cows.
(Śloka 20, Chapter 83, Vana Parva).

EKAJAṬĀ. A demoness of the castle of Rāvaṇa. This demoness talked very enticingly to coax Sītā to surrender herself to Rāvaṇa. (Sarga 23, Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa, Sundara Kāṇḍa).

1. The names of Ekādaśarudras are found differently in different Purāṇas.

EKAJAṬA. A warrior of Skandadeva. (Śloka 53, Chapter 45, Śalya Parva).

EKĀKṢA I. A demon born to Kaśyapaprajāpati of his wife Danu. (Śloka 29, Chapter 65, Ādi Parva, M.B.).

EKĀKṢA II. A soldier of Skandadeva. (Śloka 58, Chapter 45, Śalya Parva, M.B.).

EKĀKṢARAKOŚA. Each and every letter has got a separate meaning. The dictionary describing this meaning is known as Ekākṣarakośa. (Chapter 348, Agni Purāṇa).

EKALAVYA I. Son of Hiraṇyadhanus, a King of the foresters. He went to Droṇācārya to learn archery. Droṇācārya refused to accept him as a disciple because he was a Śūdra. Undaunted he went to the forests, made a replica of the preceptor in clay and standing before it started practising archery. Soon he became a matchless archer.

Some time later the Pāṇḍavas went to the forests for hunting. One of the hunting dogs wandering saw Ekalavya and started barking. Ekalavya sent seven arrows to its mouth and kept it open. When the dog returned to Arjuna he was dumbfounded at the skill of the archer and when he came to know the archer was an unknown disciple of Droṇa his disappointment knew no bounds. Droṇa had once declared that Arjuna was the best and topmost of his disciples. Arjuna went and complained to Droṇācārya. Droṇācārya called Ekalavya to his side and asked him to give him as 'Gurudakṣiṇā' (fee to the preceptor) his right-hand thumb. Without the least hesitation Ekalavya offered his thumb to the guru and from that day onwards his skill faded and he became inferior to Arjuna. (Chapter 132, Ādi Parva). Ekalavya was killed by Śrī Kṛṣṇa. (Śloka 77, Chapter 48, Udyoga Parva, M.B.).

A son of Ekalavya seized the sacrificial horse of Arjuna and was killed by Arjuna (Chapter 83, Āśvamedhika Parva, M.B.).

EKALAVYA II. A King who was a rebirth of an asura, Krodhavaśa. He participated in the great war on the side of the Pāṇḍavas. (Chapter 4, Udyoga Parva, M.B.).

EKĀNAṄGĀ. A daughter of Yaśodā and hence a sister of Śrī Kṛṣṇa. It was because of her that Kṛṣṇa could slay Kaṁsa. (Chapter 38, Sabhā Parva, M.B.).

EKAPADA. A country of ancient Bhārata. The King and the people of this country came to the Rājasūya of Yudhiṣṭhira but were prevented from entering inside because of the uncontrollable crowd inside. (Śloka 17, Chapter 51, Sabhā Parva, M.B.).

EKAPARṆĀ. Sister of Durgā. Ekaparṇā, Ekapāṭalā and Aparṇā were the three daughters of Himavān born of his wife Menā. Ekaparṇā ate only one leaf and Ekapāṭalā ate a bunch of leaves. Aparṇā did not eat even a leaf. Ekaparṇā was married to a sage called Devala and Ekapāṭalā to a sage called Jaigīṣavya. (Chapter 18, Hari Vaṁśa). (See under Himavān).

EKAPĀṬALĀ. See under Ekaparṇā.

EKAPĀT I. See under Ekacakra.

EKAPĀT II. A synonym of Bhagavān Viṣṇu. (Śloka 95, Chapter 149, Anuśāsana Parva, M.B.).

EKAPIṄGA (EKAPIṄGALA). Another name of Vaiśravaṇa. Once Vaiśravaṇa looked jealously at Pārvatī seated on the left side of Parameśvara and instantly his one eye burst. When Pārvatī regained her peace of mind that one eye of Vaiśravaṇa was changed into piṅgala colour. (See under Kubera).

EKARĀTRATĪRTHA. A sacred place. If one stays at this place righteously for one day one would attain Brahmaloka. (Śloka 182, Chapter 83. Vana Parva, M.B.).

EKAŚṚṄGA. One of the Saptapitṛs. Vairāja, Agniṣvātta, Gārhapati, Somapa, Ekaśṛṅga, Caturveda and Kāla are the seven pitṛs. All these seven stayed in Brahmasabhā worshipping him. (Ślokas 47 and 48, Chapter 11, Sabhā Parva).

EKAŚṚTA. See under Vararuci.

EKATA.

1) General information. An ancient sage. He was the son of the Maharṣi Gautama. He had two brothers, Dvita and Trita.

2) How Ekata became a wolf by a curse. There is a story of how Ekata and Dvita duped Trita in the Mahābhārata. When Gautama died Trita became the chief of the three. Dvita and Ekata did not like this. Once all the three were passing by a forest with a herd of cows for a yāga. Trita was walking ahead and the other two were following him with the cows. At a strategic point on the way the brothers carried away the cows by a separate route without the knowledge of Trita. When Trita came to know of the loss he was greatly distressed. On reaching the shores of the river Sarasvatī, he was frightened by a wolf and running to escape from the animal fell into a dilapidated well. He performed a yāga from where he lay. Assuming a creeper inside the well to be Somalatā, Trita recited the Ṛks and the devas responded to his prayer. Devas like Bṛhaspati graciously appeared before him and asked him to demand a boon from them. Trita replied that his desire was to worship the gods standing on the waves of the river Sarasvatī. Accordingly the river was made to flow that way and standing on the waves Trita worshipped the gods. After that he went home and cursed his brothers and made Ekata and Dvita into wolves.

3) Other details.

i) Ekata was a sage much banked on by the people of western Bhārata. (Śloka 31, Chapter 208, Śānti Parva).
ii) Ekata attended a yajña conducted by Uparicaravasu (Chapter 336, Śānti Parva).

iii) Ekata accompanied by Dvita and Trita once went to Śvetadvīpa to visit Nārāyaṇa. (Śloka 12, Chapter 39, Śānti Parva).

iv) Ekata and his two brothers were among the sages who visited Bhīṣma while he was lying on his bed of arrows. (Śloka 7, Chapter 26, Anuśāsana Parva, M.B.)
v) All these three sages lived on the west coast as Ṛtviks of Varuṇa. (Chapter 15, Anuśāsana Parva, M.B.).
vi) Sūkta 150 in Maṇḍala 1 of Ṛgveda contains the eulogistic songs of Trita, one among the trio. (See under Trita).

EKATVACĀ. A follower of Skandadeva. (Śloka 24, Chapter 46, Śalya Parva).

EKĀVALĪ. Wife of Ekavīra, founder of the Hehaya dynasty. (For details see under Ekavīra).

EKAVĪRA[1] (HEHAYA). A founder of the Hehaya line of kings.

1) Genealogy. Descending in order from Viṣṇu: Atri—Candra—Budha — Purūravas—Āyus—Yayāti—Yadu—Sahasrajit—Śatajit—Ekavīra (Hehaya).

2) Birth of Ekavīra. Once there was a King called Revanta who was an intimate friend of Indra. One day riding on Uccaiḥśravas, Indra's horse, he went to Vaikuṇṭha. Fascinated by the arresting beauty of Revanta, Mahālakṣmī sat gaping for a while and did not hear what Viṣṇu talked to her. Viṣṇu was offended and lost his temper. Lakṣmī was looking with interest alternatively at Revanta and the horse when Viṣṇu cursed her to be born as a mare on earth. Horrified, shedding tears, Lakṣmī begged for relief. Viṣṇu decreed that she would return to Vaikuṇṭha after giving birth to a son who would be equal in glory to Viṣṇu himself. Mahālakṣmī came to Earth taking the shape of a mare and lived in a forest situated at a point where the rivers Kālindī and Tamasā meet and where once Sūryapatnī stayed and did penance. Meditating on Śiva she lived there for a thousand divine years and then one day Śiva and Pārvatī appeared before her and asked her what she wanted. She then said "Oh, Bhagavan, Mahāviṣṇu cursed me and made me into a mare. He has decreed that I would go back after bringing forth a son as glorious as Viṣṇu. From whom am I to bear a son like this?" Śiva promised to find a solution and going to Vaikuṇṭha sent Viṣṇu to earth in the form of a horse. Viṣṇu came to Lakṣmī and they lived together for some time and soon a son was born to Lakṣmī. Leaving the child in the forest both of them went back to Vaikuṇṭha. It is this child who later on became the famous King, Ekavīra. It was because he was born of a horse that he got the names, Hehaya and Haihaya. (Skandha 6, Devī Bhāgavata).

3) How Ekavīra came to the palace. It was at this time that Śatajit, son of the grandson of Yayāti was doing penance to obtain a son. He was also doing penance in the forest situated at a point where the rivers Kālindī and Tamasā meet. One night a Vidyādhara named Campaka came with a Vidyādharī named Madālasā and seeing the infant lying helpless in the forest took it to Devaloka. Indra recognised it as the child born to Viṣṇu and Lakṣmī on earth while they were living as horse and mare and so the Vidyādhara put it back on earth in the same place as before. Immediately Lakṣmī-Nārāyaṇas appeared before Śatajit doing penance there and asking him to take care of a child lying helpless in another side of the forest disappeared. Immensely pleased at this Śatajit took the child to his palace and brought him forth as his own son giving the child the name Ekavīra. When the boy became a prince, Śatajit crowned Ekavīra King and went to the forest with his queen and after doing penance there for sometime attained Viṣṇuloka. (Skandha 6, Devī Bhāgavata).

4) Ekavīra marries Ekāvalī. Once Prince Ekavīra accompanied by the son of the minister went for a pleasure trip to the banks of the river Gaṅgā. It was spring and the prince wandering about enjoying the sight of a flowery forest was soon arrested by the sight of a sweet smelling lotus with a hundred petals blooming in the river. By the side of the lotus was standing a beautiful damsel weeping. The prince went to her and asked her the reason for her weeping. After great persuasion she replied thus: "Oh, Prince, there is a country not far from yours which is now being ruled over by a very righteous King called Raibhya. His queen is called Rukmarekhā. They had no children for a very long time and so Raibhya conducted a Putrakāmeṣṭi yāga. When ghee was poured profusely into the sacrificial fire the flames rose up to great heights and from inside the flames came out a lovely maiden. The King named her Ekāvalī and bought her forth as his daughter. I am Yaśovatī the daughter of the minister there. We were of the same age and so I was asked to live with her as her companion. She was very fond of lotuses and the King constructed big ponds with lotuses in them for her recreation. Yet she used to go to other ponds also in search of lotuses.

One day we came to this side of the river Gaṅgā to play. Then a demon of name Kālaketu came and kidnapped her. I followed her. She never surrendered to the enticements and persuasions of Kālaketu. Her father wanted her to be married to Ekavīra, King of Hehaya. Kālaketu sent her to prison. Without knowing what to do next I am standing here weeping.

Hearing this Ekavīra went to Pātāla and defeating Kālaketu released Ekāvalī and brought both Ekāvalī and Yaśovatī to the palace of Raibhya. Pleased at this Raibhya gave his daughter in marriage to Ekavīra. Kārtavīryārjuna was born in the family of Ekavīra. (Skandha 6, Devī Bhāgavata).

ELĀPUTRA. A serpent born to Kaśyapa of his wife Kadrū. This serpent was very intelligent. Once there arose a dispute between Vinatā and Kadrū over the colour of the tail of the horse of Indra, Uccaiḥśravas. Kadrū argued that there were black hairs in the tail while Vinatā held there were none. Really there were no black hairs and Kadrū to win the argument wanted her sons to go and hang on the hairs to create a black colour. The serpents like Vāsuki and others refused to do so and Kadrū then cursed them saying that they would all be burnt to death at the Sarpasatra of Janamejaya. To take measures to get free from this curse a meeting of the serpents under the leadership of Śeṣa and Vāsuki was held and in that assembly Elāputra made a stirring speech. (Chapter 38, Ādi Parva, M.B.).

ELI AND PŪCCA. (Eli=rat, Pūcca=Cat).

The story of the cat and the rat described by the poet Kuñjan Nambiār is from Kathāsaritsāgara. The story in original is the following.

Once there lived on a big banyan tree near the city of Vidiśā a mongoose, an owl, a cat and a rat. The mongoose and the rat lived in two separate hollows at the foot of the tree, the cat in a cavity in the centre of the tree and the owl on the branches at the top. Of these the rat could be eaten by all the other three and the cat could kill all the rest. The rat and the mongoose afraid of the cat did stir out only during night time and the cat moved about day and night afraid of none wishing to catch hold of the rat and eat it. Their common place of activity was a rice-field nearby.

1. The genealogy of Ekavīra is stated differently in different Purāṇas. Devī Bhāgavata states that Ekavīra is the son of Turvasu, son of Yayāti and that he is the father of Kārtavīryārjuna. It is not correct. The genealogy chronicled here is based on Agni and Viṣṇu Purāṇas. According to that Yadu, son of Yayāti is the father of the grandfather of Ekavīra: Yadu—Sahasrajit—Satajit—Hehaya (Ekavīra). Descending from Ekavīra—Dharma—Kuṇi—Bhadrasena—Dhanaka—Kṛtavīra—Kārtavīryārjuna. From the grandson of Kārtavīryārjuna, Vṛṣṇi, starts the Vṛṣṇi dynasty.

Once a forester laid a net to catch the cat and the cat fell into the trap and lay there hanging inside the net. The rat coming that way saw the plight of the cat and jumped with joy. But soon the owl and the mongoose came to the spot and seeing their enemy, the cat, imprisoned rushed to catch hold of the rat. The rat then did a very clever thing. It went and tore open the net imprisoning the cat and when the cat jumped out of the net the owl and the mongoose ran away and disappeared. The rat went to its hole. This is a story to demonstrate the fact that with a change in the situation an enemy may turn out to be a friend. (Taraṅga 7, Madanamañcukālaṁbaka, Kathāsaritsāgara).

ELLU. An oil seed. (Sesame). Ellu originated from the body of Kaśyapa. Because Ellu is born of the body of Kaśyapa, King of Ṛṣis, it is considered as divine to offer Ellu to anybody. (Śloka 10, Chapter 66, Anuśāsana Parva).

ELU. This word in Malayālam means 'Seven'.

(1) The seven qualities which would enhance prosperity are the following: Dhairya (courage), Śama (forbearance), Dama (control of the sense), Śucitva (cleanliness), Dayā (compassion), Mṛduvāk (geniality of speech) and Ahiṁsā (not giving injury to your friends).

(2) The seven divisions of Kerala are Venāṭ, Pūlināṭ, Karkanāṭ, Cītanāṭ, Kuṭṭanāṭ, Kuṭanāṭ and Malayamanāṭ.

(20) Seven doṣas (defects) : Laziness, arrogance, ignorance, profligacy, Hauteur, pride and selfishness.

(21) Seven vices : Hunting, dice, womanising, drinking squandering, harshness of speech and cruelty.

(22) Seven seas : Lavaṇa, Ikṣu, Surā, Sarpiṣ, Dadhi, Kṣīra and Śuddhodaka.

(23) Seven notes : Ṣadja, Ṛṣabha, Gāndhāra, Madhyama, Pañcama, Dhaivata and Niṣāda.

ERAKA. A serpent born in the family of the Kauravas. This serpent was burnt to death at the Sarpasatra of Janamejaya . (Śloka 16, Chapter 57, Ādi Parva).

ETAŚA. A sage who is greatly extolled in the Ṛgveda. The son of King Svaśa fought with this sage and it was Indra who saved Etaśa then. (Sūkta 62, Anuvāka 11, Maṇḍala 1, Ṛgveda.).

ETAŚA. One of the horses of the Sun. (Sūkta 122, Anuvāka 18, Maṇḍala 1, Ṛgveda).

F

There are no words beginning with F. The letter corresponding to F in Indian languages is Ph (फ). So all words beginning with this sound come under the letter P.

G

G (ग) The letter G means both Gandharva and Vināyaka (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 348).

GABHASTIMĀN. An island. Once the valiant Sahasrabāhu conquered and subjugated it. (M. B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 38).

GADĀ. A weapon. An asura called Gada was born to Kaśyapaprajāpati by his wife Diti. Viṣṇu killed Gada, and Viśvakarman made a weapon with his bone. Since the weapon was made from Gada's bone it came to be known as Gadā. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 114).

GADA I. A brother (Yādava) of Balabhadrarāma.

1) General. Vasudeva had, besides Devakī, seven wives called Rohiṇī, Bhadrā, Mālinī, Madirā, Ilā, Rocanā and Pauravī, and out of the seven Rohiṇī had six sons called Balabhadrarāma, Gada, Sāraṇa, Durdama, Vikala and Kṛta. (Bhāgavata, Navama Skandha).

2) Other details.

(1) Gada was present at the svayaṁvara of Draupadī. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 185, Verse 32).

(2) On the marriage of Arjuna with Subhadrā, it was Gada who brought the dowry of Subhadrā from Dvārakā to Indraprastha. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 220, Verse 32).

(3) When Śrī Kṛṣṇa came to Dvārakā Gada received him with embraces. (M. B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 2, Verse 35).

(4) Gada also was present on the occasion when the Pāṇḍavas first stepped into the beautiful palace built for them by Maya at Indraprastha. (M. B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 4, Verse 39).

(5) Along with the other Yādavas Gada too was present at the rājasūya yajña of Yudhiṣṭhira. (M. B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 34, Verse 16).

(6) Gada held a prominent position among the Yādavas deputed to guard Dvārakā against the onslaught of King Sālva. (M. B. Vana Parva, Chapter 15, Verse 9).
(7) Gada also accompanied Śrī Kṛṣṇa to the Aśvamedha yajña performed by Yudhiṣṭhira. (Aśvamedha Parva, Chapter 86, Verse 9).
(8) Śrī Kṛṣṇa felt uncontrollably angry when Gada was attacked during the mutual fighting with iron rods by the Yādavas which climaxed in their total annihilation. (Mausala Parva, Chapter 3, Verse 45).

GADA II. See Gada.

GADĀDHARA. A synonym of Mahāviṣṇu.
There is a place called Gayā to the north of Mount Kālañjara, to the south of Himālayas, to the east of Kuśasthalī and to the west of Vasupura. Once a king called Gaya conducted at Gayā an Aśvamedha, a Naramedha (yajña at which man is offered as sacrifice) and a Mahāmedha and Mahāviṣṇu acted as gate-keeper of Gaya. As Viṣṇu stood guard there holding the gadā (club) in his hands he came to be known as Gadādhara also thenceforth. (Vāmana Purāṇa, Chapter 76).

GADĀPARVA. A sub-parva of Śalya Parva in Mahābhārata. (See Mahābhārata).

GADĀVASĀNA. A particular centre in Madhurāpurī. The name owes its origin to the following reason. When Kṛṣṇa killed Kaṁsa, his father-in-law Jarāsandha got so angry that he hurled his gadā (club) ninetynine times at Madhurāpurī from his capital, Girivraja. The spot where the gadā finally fell came to be called Gadāvasāna in course of time. (M. B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 18, Verses 22-25).

GĀDHI I. Father of Viśvāmitra.
1) Genealogy. Descended from Viṣṇu thus : Brahmā-Atri-Candra-Budha - Purūravas - Āyus - Nahuṣa-Yayāti Pūru - Janamejaya-Prācinvān-Pravīra - Namasyu - Vītabhaya-Suṇḍu-Bahuvidha-Saṁyāti-Rahovādi-Raudrāśva-Matināra-Santurodha - Duṣyanta - Bharata (Vitatha) - Suhotra-Bṛhatputra-Ajamīḍha-Jahnu-Balākāśva-Kuśika (Kuśa)-Gādhi.
2) Birth. Kuśa had by his wife Vaidarbhī four sons called Kuśāmba, Kuśanābha, Asūrtarajas and Vasu. Of the four sons Kuśāmba built a city called Kauśāmbī, Kuśanābha built the city of Mahodayapura, Asūrtarajas the city of Dharmāraṇya and Vasu the city of Girivraja, and they administered their respective cities. Kuśanābha had hundred daughters by his wife Ghṛtācī, an Apsarā woman. He felt very sad that he had no sons. At last he performed the Putrakāmeṣṭi yajña, and Gādhi was born to him.
3) Gādhi's children. A son named Viśvāmitra and a daughter called Satyavatī were born to Gādhi. Satyavatī was married to sage Ṛcīka. After the wedding of his daughter Gādhi crowned Viśvāmitra as the king and left for the forest for tapas. During his stay in the forest Gādhi was put up in the āśrama of Ṛcīka for a long time and he also went on many pilgrimages. (Śānti Parva, Chapter 49). (See also Satyavatī and Viśvāmitra).
4) Death. Gādhi entered mahāsamādhi and went to heaven. (Śalya Parva, Chapter 16).

GĀDHI II. A brahmin who showed Viṣṇu's power of māyā. (See under Māyā).

GAGANAMŪRDHĀ. A reputed asura, son of Kaśyapaprajāpati by Danu. Later on, he was born as one of the five Kekeya kings. Ayaśśiras, Aśvaśiras, Ayaśaṅka, Gaganamūrdhā and Vegavān were the five kings. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 67, Verse 11).

GAJA I. A powerful monkey King who fought on the side of Śrī Rāma against Rāvaṇa. (Vana Parva, Chapter 283, Verse 3).

GAJA II. Younger brother of Śakuni, the son of Subala. He, along with his brother fought in the great war against the Pāṇḍavas and got killed by Irāvān. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 90).

GAJAKARṆA. A yakṣa in Kubera's assembly. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 10, Verse 16).

GAJAŚIRAS. A warrior of Skanda. (Śalya Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 60).

GAJENDRAMOKṢAM. The story about Indradyumna, the Pāṇḍyan King being transformed into an elephant due to the curse of Agastya and his attaining heaven. (See under Indradyumna).

GĀLAVA. A celebrated sage.
1) Birth. He was a son of Viśvāmitra. He was a brahmavādī. (Śloka 52, Chapter 4, Anuśāsana Parva.
2) How he got his name. There is no record of his original name in any of the Purāṇas. He got his name Gālava later. There is a story about this both in Devībhāgavata and Harivaṁśa. It is as follows :
There was once a King called Aruṇa in the family of Māndhātā. Aruṇa got a son and he was named Satyavrata. (It was this Satyavrata who later became the well famed Triśaṅku). When Satyavrata was a youngster he once went inside the marriage hall of a brahmin and kidnapped the bride. Furious at this evil deed of his son the king sent him out from his palace and Satyavrata roamed about aimlessly.
Nature protested against this deed of the King abandoning his heir and there was no rain in the country for twelve years. The people were all put to great trouble. Among those who suffered were the wife and children of Viśvāmitra. Viśvāmitra had at that time gone to the shores of the river Kauśikī, for doing penance. The family of Viśvāmitra was in great distress living without any means for food. The sight of the children crying for food to appease their hunger pained their mother much. So she decided to sell one child and feed the others by what she got from the sale. It was better to be without one child than all the children dying out of hunger.
She made a rope out of darbha leaves and tying it round the neck of one child took it to the market for sale. Both the mother and child were weeping profusely on their way. Satyavrata saw them and took pity on them. When Satyavrata heard their sad story and knew that the woman was the wife of Viśvāmitra he told her thus: "Oh, Venerable Lady, you need not sell this boy. Untie the rope round his neck and throw it away. I will look after your family till the return of your husband. I will daily bring food for you all and hang it on a tree near your āśrama."
The mother was extremely happy to hear this and she at once untied the rope round the neck of the boy and the boy from thence became known as Gālava. (For details see under Triśaṅku).
3) Gurudakṣiṇā of Gālava. Gālava continued his education under his father. At that time Dharmadeva to test Viśvāmitra came to him disguised as Vasiṣṭha. Viśvāmitra came out with rice to receive the guest but by that time the guest had disappeared. But Viśvāmitra remained there with the rice for hundred years till Dharmadeva returned. All these years Gālava looked after Viśvāmitra's comforts. Viśvāmitra was immensely pleased with Gālava and allowed him to go away free without any gurudakṣiṇā when his education was over. Gālava wanted to give some dakṣiṇā but Viśvāmitra refused to accept it. Gālava insisted on giving and then Viśvāmitra asked him to give whatever he liked but Gālava wanted the Dakṣiṇā to be named. Disgusted with this stubbornness Viśvāmitra said "Go and get me eight hundred horses each with one of its ears black". Gālava was shocked to hear the demand and greatly worried roamed about in search of horses of the type specified. Garuḍa taking pity on his sad plight took him to the palace of Yayāti. Hearing the story of Gālava Yayāti sent his daughter Mādhavī with Gālava saying that if she was given in marriage to any king he would give him the eight hundred horses of the type he required.

Gālava took Mādhavī to Haryaśva, a King of the Ikṣvāku line of Kings. Haryaśva was doing penance at that time to obtain a child. Gālava said that Haryaśva would get a son of Mādhavī and he should, therefore, accept Mādhavī and give him in return eight hundred horses each with one ear black. Haryaśva was amenable to the terms but the only difficulty was that he had only two hundred horses of the type specified. Finding this difficulty Mādhavī said "Oh, Gālava please do not worry on that account. I have a boon from a brahmavādī sage that I would remain a maiden even after delivery. So give me in marriage to this King and get two hundred horses. After giving birth to a son to this King take me to another King and get two hundred horses from him and then to another and thus by giving me to four Kings you can get the eight hundred horses you require."

Gālava liked this plan and so when Mādhavī gave birth to a son he took her to Divodāsa, Rājā of Kāśī. When a son was born to him Gālava took her to Uśīnara, King of Bhoja. Gālava thus got six hundred horses but there was nobody else to give him the remaining two hundred. When Gālava was contemplating as to what he should do next Garuḍa came to his rescue. He advised Gālava to give six hundred horses and Mādhavī in lieu of the remaining two hundred horses to Viśvāmitra. Gālava gave Viśvāmitra the horses and Mādhavī and pleased with the gurudakṣiṇā Viśvāmitra blessed Gālava. Viśvāmitra got a son named Aṣṭaka of Madhavī. (See under Aṣṭaka).

4) Gālava and Citrasena. Gālava was once having his evening prayers in the river when the spittings from the mouth of Citrasena who was travelling by air above fell on the pūjā materials of Gālava. Gālava went and complained to Śrī Kṛṣṇa of this and Kṛṣṇa in haste promised to bring before Gālava the head of Citrasena before the sun set. Nārada who heard this went and informed Citrasena of Kṛṣṇa's vow. Citrasena was frightened to death. But Nārada asked him not to lose hope and advised Sandhyā and Valī, wives of Citrasena, to approach Subhadrā, sister of Kṛṣṇa, for protection. Both of them went to Subhadrā and made a grand fire-pit in front of her palace. Citrasena decided to end his life by jumping into the fire and as he was circling the pit his wives wept loudly. Since her husband Arjuna was away from the palace Subhadrā herself ran to the place from where she heard the cries. When they saw Subhadrā they begged for 'Maṅgalyabhikṣā' (a boon to live with one's husband). Subhadrā agreed to give them that. Then she heard their story in full and only then did she realise that she had undertaken to do the impossible. Yet, to help Subhadrā, Arjuna agreed to protect Citrasena. When Śrī Kṛṣṇa attacked Citrasena Arjuna defended. The fight then ensued between Arjuna and Kṛṣṇa. Both had very powerful and divine weapons and the world stood on the verge of a collapse by their fight. Then Subhadrā did a brave thing. She stood between the two and requested for a cease-fire. Then Śrī Kṛṣṇa asked Citrasena to bow down and touch the feet of Gālava. Gālava pardoned him. (Padma Purāṇa).

5) Tapodāna. Gālava once gave Yayāti one eighth portion of the goodness accrued to him by his long penance. (See Yayāti for details).

6) Gālava gets a horse. Pātālaketu, a demon, used to give trouble to Gālava daily while he used to do penance. Once this demon sent a deep hot breath to the sky and then a horse fell from the sky. Soon an unknown voice from air said, "This is a very strong horse and it would travel many a yojana in an hour." Gālava took that horse and gave it to Ṛtadhvaja. (Vāmana Purāṇa, Chapter 59).

7) Other details regarding Gālava.

(i) He was an intimate friend of King Pratīpa. (Śloka 13, Chapter 20, Harivaṁśa).

(ii) He was a shining member of the court of Yudhiṣṭhira. (Śloka 15, Chapter 4, Sabhā Parva).

(iii) He shone in the court of Indra. (Śloka 10, Chapter 7, Sabhā Parva).

(iv) He conducted a discussion with Nārada on the true nature of real prosperity. (Śloka 5, Chapter 287, Śānti Parva).

(v) On another occasion he spoke to Dharmaputra on the glory of the universe. (Śloka 52, Chapter 18, Anuśāsana Parva).

(vi) He swore before God to prove his innocence in the lotus-theft involving Agastya. (Śloka 37, Chapter 94, Anuśāsana Parva).

(vii) Śṛṅgava who married Vṛddhakanyā was a son of Gālava. (Śloka 14, Chapter 52, Śalya Parva). For details see under Viśvakarmā.

GAM. Music. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 348).

GAṆĀ. A female attendant of Skanda. (Śalya Parva, Chapter 46, Verse 3).

GAṆAM. An army division. Three Gulmas form one Gaṇam. (See Akṣauhiṇī).

GAṆAPATI.

1) Genealogy. A son of Śiva with face like that of an elephant. As Śiva has appointed this son as chief of the gaṇas (attendants) he is called Gaṇapati.

2) His birth. While Śiva and Pārvatī assumed the form of monkeys and enjoyed themselves in the forest Pārvatī got pregnant, and Śiva took the semen from the womb and gave it to Vāyu (wind God.) Vāyu deposited it in the womb of Añjanā, who delivered a son named Hanūmān. Śiva assumed the form of an elephant (tusker) and Pārvatī that of a she-elephant. Pārvatī delivered a son in the form of an elephant. That son was named Gaṇapati. (Uttara Rāmāyaṇa).

3) His tusk broken. Once Paraśurāma arrived at Kailāsa to meet Śiva. At that time Śiva was asleep. So Gaṇapati did not allow him to get in. A duel broke out between them. In that duel one of Gaṇapati's tusks was broken. (Padma Purāṇa).

4) Gaṇapati turned into crow. An exceptionally hot summer set in once in South India. The whole land became parched. So Agastya went to Śiva and requested for some holy water, and the Lord put Kāverī who was worshipping him just then, in the Kamaṇḍalu (something like a teapot which sannyāsins carry with them) of Agastya and sent him back. Indra, who did not relish this action of Śiva, asked Gaṇapati to somehow or other upset Agastya's Kamaṇḍalu of holy water, and Gaṇapati, in the guise of a crow went and sat on the brink of the Kamaṇḍalu and thus upset it. Agastya and the crow quarrelled with each other. Then did the crow assume its original form as Gaṇapati and blessed Agastya. Moreover, Gaṇapati filled Agastya's Kamaṇḍalu with holy water, which the latter distributed among devotees in South India, and that is the present Kāverī river.

5) Other stories about Gaṇapati's head. The Purāṇas contain two different stories as to how Gaṇapati happened to have the elephant's head. Once Pārvatī pointed out to Gaṇapati the planet Saturn, and his head got burned down due to the ocular power of Saturn, and according to one story Gaṇapati's head thus lost was replaced with that of an elephant. The other story is more interesting. When once Śiva tried to enter the room where Pārvatī had gone to take her bath clad in a single clothing Gaṇapati prevented Śiva from doing so. Śiva, enraged at the obstruction made by Gaṇapati, cut off his head, and when his anger was cooled down he replaced Gaṇapati's lost head with that of an elephant. (Padma Purāṇa).

6) Wedding of Gaṇapati. Gaṇapati has two wives called Siddhi and Buddhi.

When Gaṇapati and Subrahmaṇya attained the age of marriage they were in a hurry to get married. Śiva conducted a test. Śiva and Pārvatī told them that he who returned first after going round the world would be married first. Accordingly Subrahmaṇya mounted his vehicle (peacock) and set out for a tour round the world. Gaṇapati did nothing of the sort. But after a little time he went round his parents, viz., Śiva and Pārvatī. Asked for an explanation about his action Gaṇapati replied that since the whole universe existed in Śiva and Pārvatī, going around them tantamounted to touring round the world. Pleased at this reply his parents got Gaṇapati married first.

7) Vighneśvaratvam. (Power to remove all obstacles). Gaṇapati is called Vighneśvara because he is the god who removes all obstacles from the paths of men or creates them.

Gaṇapati has the power to get anything done without any obstructions as also the power to put obstacles in the path of anything being got done. Therefore, the custom came into vogue of worshipping Gaṇapati at the very commencement of any action for its completion without any hitch or hindrance. Actions begun with such worship would be duly completed, Indians believe. In support of that belief the following story from the 6th taraṅga of Lāvāṇakalambakam, Kathāsaritsāgara may be quoted.

The Devas decided to appoint Subrahmaṇya as chief of the army to kill Tārakāsura. When Indra took up the pot of water purified by mantras to anoint Subrahmaṇya's head with it, his hands became benumbed, and he stood aghast. Then Śiva said that any action begun without Gaṇapati pūjā would meet with such obstacles. At once Indra worshipped Gaṇapati and his hands recovered from the paralysed condition. And, Subrahmaṇya was duly anointed with the holy water.

8) Gaṇapati wrote the Mahābhārata. After the death of the Kauravas and the Pāṇḍavas sage Vyāsa entered again into meditation. But, the whole story of the Bhārata reflected in the mirror of his mind. He wanted to translate the story into a great poem and requested Brahmā to suggest a suitable person to write the story on his dictation, and Brahmā suggested Gaṇapati's name. Then Vyāsa thought about Gaṇapati and he appeared before the sage. But, Gaṇapati did not appreciate the idea of serving as Vyāsa's scribe. So he stipulated a condition that he would write down the poem provided Vyāsa dictated it in such a manner that he had not to lay down his pen even once before the epic was completed. To this Vyāsa stipulated the counter condition that when he dictated without the least interruption or pause Gaṇapati should not write down the matter without understanding the meaning of it. And, under such conditions the composition of the Mahābhārata was completed within three years. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 1, Verses 74-80).

9) Gaṇapati pūja. Gaṇapati occupies the most prominent place among the Devas connected with Śiva. In South India, Gaṇapati pūjā came into vogue in the 6th century A.D., and idols of Gaṇapati now extant might have been made at that period. In South India, temples dedicated to Gaṇapati are in no way less in number than those to Subrahmaṇya. The idol of Gaṇapati is installed at the gateways of villages and forts, under the fig tree, at the entrance of temples and at the south-western corner of Śiva temples. Two types of idols are important: the Itampiri (the proboscis turned to the left side) and the Valampiri (the proboscis turned to the right side). It is stated that the enormously big belly of Gaṇapati contains in it the whole universe.

10) Synonyms of Gaṇapati.

Vināyako vighnarājo dvaimātura-gaṇādhipaḥ / apyekadanto herambo lambodaragajānanaḥ. (Amarakośa).

(Vināyaka, Vighnarāja, Dvaimātura, Gaṇādhipa, Ekadanta, Heramba, Lambodara, Gajānana).

GAṆḌĀ. A dāsī, who served the saptarṣis. (Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 93).

GAṆḌAKAM. A particular locality on the banks of river Gaṇḍakī. Bhīmasena once conquered this place. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 10, Verse 15).

GAṆḌAKAṆḌU, A Yakṣa of the assembly of Kubera. (M.B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 10).

GAṆḌAKĪ (GAṆḌAKA). A river in northern India which falls into the Gaṅgā.

2) Origin. There arose an argument between the

Devas and the asuras about the Amṛtam (nectar) got from the churning of Kṣīrābdhi (the milk ocean) and Mahāviṣṇu appeared in the form of Mohinī and enticed the asuras away from the subject and gave the nectar to the Devas. Attracted by the great beauty of Mohinī, Śiva made love to her, and the sweet produced at the time of their embrace flowed as river Gaṇḍaki through the earth. (Skandha Purāṇa, Āsura Khaṇḍa).

3) It became a holy river. While the worms on the banks of Gaṇḍakī were once collecting soil they fell into the river, and all at once they attained salvation, the reason being that the water in the river had been formed by the sweet of Viṣṇu and Śiva. And, from that day onwards people began worshipping Gaṇḍakī as a holy river. (Skandha Purāṇa, Āsura Khaṇḍa).

4) Other information.

(i) He who drinks the water of the river is freed from sins. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 169, Verse 20).

(ii) The river is also known as Nārāyaṇī, Śālagrāmī, Hiraṇvatī and Hiraṇyavatī. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 9, Verse 25).

(iii) Śrī Kṛṣṇa Arjuna and Bhīmasena once on their way from Indraprastha to Girivraja crossed this river. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 20, Verse 27).

(iv) The water in Gaṇḍakī is a mixture of the waters of all holy rivers. Therefore, a bath in Gaṇḍakī is of equal value as an Aśvamedha yajña and he who bathes in it will attain Sūryaloka. (Vana Parva, Chapter 84, Verse 113).

(v) Gaṇḍakī is one of the rivers which were responsible for the origin of Agni (fire). (Vana Parva, Chapter 84, Verse 113).

GANDHAKĀLĪ. Another name of Satyavatī. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 95, Verse 48).

GANDHAMĀDANA I. A monkey, who had been helpful to Śrī Rāma, was the son of Kubera. (Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa, Bāla Kāṇḍa, Canto 17, Verse 11). This monkey usually stayed on Mount Gandhamādana. During the Rāma-Rāvaṇa war he led a contingent of monkeys. (Vana Parva, Chapter 283, Verse 5).

GANDHAMĀDANA II. A Rākṣasa King, who stays in Kubera's assembly : (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 10).

GANDHAMĀDANA(M). A mountain famed in the Purāṇas and lying to the east of the Himālayas. (Bhāgavata, Pañcama Skandha). The purānic importance of the mountain may be summarised as follows :—

(1) Kaśyapaprajāpati did tapas at this mountain. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 30, Verse 10).

(2) Ananta (Ādiśeṣa) had once done tapas here. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 36, Verse 3).

(3) Once Pāṇḍu went to the Śataśṛṅga mountain along with his wives Kuntī and Mādrī for doing tapas, and on that occasion they visited Gandhamādana also. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 118, Verse 48).

(4) This mountain assumes the form of a divine person. attends Kubera's assembly and worships him. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 10, Verse 32).

(5) Śrī Kṛṣṇa in the company of Nārāyaṇarṣi spent 10,000 years on this mountain as an anchorite. (Vana Parva, Chapter 12, Verse 11).

(6) Arjuna on his way to Mount Kailāsa to do tapas crossed the Gandhamādana mountain. (Vana Parva, Chapter 37, Verse 41).

(7) Only those who possess power got by tapas will be able to climb this mountain. (Vana Parva, Chapter 140, Verse 22).

(8) There is the Badari tree and under it there is an āśrama of Naranārāyaṇas on the heights of this mountain, and Yakṣas stay there always. (Vana Parva, Chapter 141, Verse 22).

(9) Once the Pāṇḍavas, with the aid of Ghaṭotkaca mounted this mountain. (Vana Parva, Chapter 145).

(10) It was here, at this mountain that Bhīma killed Maṇimān, a friend of Kubera. (Vana Parva, Chapter 160, Verse 76).

(11) Kubera, who was driven out of Laṅkā stayed at this mountain during the initial periods. (Vana Parva, Chapter 275, Verse 33).

GĀNDHĀRA. A stretch of land of ancient Bhārata. It is believed that this land stretched from the shores of river Sindhu to Kābul. Subala was a mighty ruler of this country. His daughter Gāndhārī was the wife of Dhṛtarāṣṭra. (Śloka 11, Chapter 111, Ādi Parva).

Agni Purāṇa points out a relationship between the Gāndhāras and the Drāviḍas. Descending in order from Viṣṇu were Candra—Budha—Purūravas—Āyus—Nahuṣa—Yayāti—Turvasu. In order from Turvasu were Varga—Gobhānu—Traiśāni—Karandhama— Marutta— Duṣyanta—Varūtha—Gāṇḍīra—Gāndhāra. From Gāndhāra arose the five different provincialists: Gāndhāras, Keralas, Colas, Pāṇḍyas and Kolas. (Chapter 277, Agni Purāṇa).

GĀNDHĀRĪ. Wife of Dhṛtarāṣṭra.

1) Birth. There was a King called Subala in the family of Turvasu, brother of Yadu. (For genealogy see under Subala). Subala became the King of the land of Gāndhāra. This land extended from the river Sindhu to Kābul. Gāndhārī was the daughter of Subala. (Chapter 111, Ādi Parva).

2) Marriage. Gāndhārī became a devotee of Śiva even from her childhood. Śiva became pleased with her and blessed her saying that she would bear a hundred sons. Bhīṣma came to know of this and he planned to get her married to Dhṛtarāṣṭra. One day he sent a messenger to Subala making a proposal. Subala knew that Dhṛtarāṣṭra was born blind but considering his lineage and the powerful alliance it would make, consented to the proposal of Bhīṣma. Śakuni, brother of Gāndhārī, then by the order of his father took Gāndhārī to Hastināpura and Dhṛtarāṣṭra accepted her as his wife. Gāndhārī obeying his father's instructions without a demur accepted her blind husband with such devotion that she made herself blind by tightly covering her eyes with a silk shawl. (Chapter 110, Ādi Parva).

3) Birth of Sons. Once Vyāsa came to her exhausted with hunger and thirst. Gāndhārī appeased his hunger and thirst with tasty things to eat and drink. Vyāsa was immensely pleased and he also blessed her and said she would get a hundred sons. Very soon she became pregnant. But even after two years she did not deliver, while Kuntī, wife of Pāṇḍu, gave birth to a son. Grief-stricken, she hit hardly on her womb secretly and then a great mass of flesh came out. Then Vyāsa appeared before her and advised her to cut the lump of flesh into a hundred pieces and deposit one each in a jar of ghee. Vyāsa himself cut it into pieces. Gāndhārī expressed a desire to have a girl also. Vyāsa cut it into hundred and one pieces and put them in hundred and one jars of ghee. In due time the jars broke and a hundred sons and a daughter came out of the jars. The daughter was named Duśśalā. For their name see 'Kauravas'. Dhṛtarāṣṭra got another son named Yuyutsu. (Chapters 115 and 116, Ādi Parva).

4) Gāndhārī faints. When Sañjaya reported about the death of Karṇa at the battle both Dhṛtarāṣṭra and Gāndhārī fainted. (Śloka 55, Chapter 96, Karṇa Parva).

5) Gāndhārī starts to curse the Pāṇḍavas. When the battle was over the sons of Gāndhārī and their followers were killed. Dhṛtarāṣṭra suggested that the Pāṇḍavas should visit Gāndhārī and pay homage to her. The Pāṇḍavas, therefore, went and stood before Gāndhārī very respectfully. Vengeance boiled in her heart and her body shivered. Gāndhārī was about to curse the Pāṇḍavas when Vyāsa, intervened saying "Gāndhārī ! Don't you remember you said that victory would lie on the side of the righteous in this war? Your words are not wasted. The Pāṇḍavas won the battle because right was on their side. So why should you get agitated ?" Gāndhārī became calm on hearing these words and she admitted that the end of the Kuru dynasty came because of the mistakes of Duryodhana, Śakuni, Karṇa and Duśśāsana. She, thereafter, treated the Pāṇḍavas as her own sons. (Chapter 14, Strī Parva, M.B.).

6) Dharmaputra's foot-nails become blue. Following the instructions of Dhṛtarāṣṭra, the Pāṇḍavas, approached and bowed before Gāndhārī. She covered her face with a cloth and wept, tears rolling down her cheeks. When Dharmaputra bent to touch her feet the latter saw through the veil on her face the foot-nails of Dharmaputra. A few drops of the lachrymal water fell on the foot-nails of Dharmaputra making them turn blue instantly. (Chapter 15, Strī Parva).

7) Gāndhārī curses Kṛṣṇa. At the end of the battle the aggrieved Gāndhārī went to Kurukṣetra together with Kṛṣṇa and other relatives. Seeing mighty Kings on the Kaurava side lying dead like huge trees lying truncated Gāndhārī burst into tears. She knew that Śrī Kṛṣṇa was at the root of all this. Embittered she looked at Kṛṣṇa and cursed him. "Ho, Kṛṣṇa, thirtysix years from this day you will lose your sons, ministers, friends and relatives. You will become a lone walker in the forests and be killed by trickery."

It was because of this curse that the Yādava tribe perished and Kṛṣṇa was struck by the arrow of a hunter which made him end his life on earth.

8) The end of Gāndhārī. After the great Kurukṣetra battle heart-broken Dhṛtarāṣṭra and Gāndhārī accompanied by Kuntī, Vidura and Sañjaya went to the forests to spend the rest of their life there. Many people and the Pāṇḍavas accompanied them up to the river Gaṅgā and there near the āśrama of Śatayūpa Dhṛtarāṣṭra made a hut and lived with Gāndhārī and Kuntī.

The Pāṇḍavas felt the separation of their relatives unbearable and lived in grief. After six years one day Dharmaputra saw his mother, Kuntī, in a dream. He told his brothers about this and they all felt a desire to go to the forest and see their mother. The next day they reached the shores of Gaṅgā. Vyāsa also joined them. Gāndhārī and Kuntī expressed a desire to Vyāsa that they would like to see the dead sons and relatives once again. Vyāsa then asked them to go and take a dip in the river. When they rose up after a dip they saw standing on the shores of the river the great warriors Karṇa and Duryodhana and others. By the yogic power of Vyāsa even the blind Dhṛtarāṣṭra could get the vision. Very soon the vision faded and the Pāṇḍavas returned to Hastināpura.

Two days after, fire broke out in the forest where Dhṛtarāṣṭra was staying. Dhṛtarāṣṭra, Kuntī and Gāndhārī were burnt to death in that fire. (Chapter 32, Āśramavāsika Parva).

9) After the death. Dharmaputra performed the obsequies of those who died in the wild fire (Āśramavāsika Parva, Chapter 30). Leaving the mortal bodies the souls of Dhṛtarāṣṭra and Gāndhārī entered Kuberaloka. (Śloka 14, Chapter 5, Svargārohaṇa Parva).

10) Synonyms of Gāndhārī. The following words have been used in the Mahābhārata to denote Gāndhārī: Gāndhārarājaduhitā, Saubaleyī, Saubalī, Subalajā, Subalāputrī and Subalātmajā.

GĀNDHĀRĪ II. Another Gāndhārī, wife of Ajamīḍha, one of the great Kings of the Pūru dynasty. (Śloka 37, Chapter 95, Ādi Parva).

GANDHARVA I. Gandharvas are sons born to the famous Kaśyapaprajāpati of his wife, Ariṣṭhā (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 19). Both belonged to the race of the Devas.

GANDHARVA II. A King born in the dynasty of Janamejaya. (Bhāgavata, Navama Skandha).

GĀNDHARVA. A marriage settled by the boy and the girl of their own accord. A love marriage. There are six different kinds of marriage: Gāndharva, Ārṣa, Prājāpatya, Rākṣasa, Āsura and Paiśāca. (See under Vivāha).

GANDHARVANAGARA. Vyāsa has compared munis disappearing from sight to the fading out of Gandharva nagara.

"After having thus spoken to the Kurus, and while they were looking on, the band of sages disappeared in a trice like the fading out of Gandharvanagara." (Ādi Parva, Chapter 126, Verses 35 and 36).

What is this Gandharvanagara ? The following description occurs in Hindi Śabdasāgara. "Owing to different optical illusions (sight) of man, villages and cities may appear to exist in the sky and also on seas, rivers, etc. When during summer the air on the upper strata of deserts, seas etc. gets heated, expanded, and rises up, the light passing through it becomes multi-coloured and gives reflections in the sky in the form of village parts or cities. Also can be seen therein reflections of trees, boats etc. One such reflection may be cast on earth also. This is a mere optical illusion. This reflection immediately fades out also. This unreal city which is an optical illusion is Gandharvanagara.

GANDHARVASENĀ. Daughter of Dhanavāhana (a gandharva) who lived in Svayamprabhānagara on Mount Kailāsa. She was cured of leprosy by observing somavāravrata. (Skandha Purāṇa).

GANDHARVATĪRTHA. An ancient place of pilgrimage on the banks of Sarasvatī in North India. The gandharva called Vibhāvasu usually dances at this place with his companions. Balabhadra Rāma once visited this holy place. (Śalya Parva, Chapter 37, Verse 9).

GANDHARVĪ. The first mother of horses. Kaśyapaprajāpati had by his wife Krodhavaśā ten daughters: Mṛgī, Mṛgamandā, Harī, Bhadramatā, Mātaṅgī, Śārdūlī, Śvetā, Surabhi, Surasā and Kadrū. Of the ten girls Surabhi in due course of time became mother of two daughters. Rohiṇī and Gandharvī. From Rohiṇī was born the cattlebreed and horses were born from Gandharvī. (Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa, Araṇya Kāṇḍa, Canto 14).

GANDHAVATĪ I. The name Satyavatī (Kālī) was assumed when sage Parāśara had swept away her matsyagandha (fish smell). She got also another name Yojanagandhā. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 63, Verse 80).

GANDHAVATĪ II. The city of Vāyu (the wind God). There are said to be nine cities on top of Mount Mahāmeru: (1) Manovatī of Brahmā at the centre, (2) Just on the eastern side of it Amarāvatī of Indra, (3) Agni's Tejovatī in the south-eastern corner, (4) Maya's Saṁyamanī in the south, 5) Nirṛti's Kṛṣṇāñjanā in the south-western corner, (6) Śraddhāvatī of Varuṇa on the west, (7) Gandhavatī of Vāyu in the northwestern corner, (8) Mahodayā of Kubera on the north, and (9) Yaśovatī of Īśāna in the north-eastern corner. (Devībhāgavata, Aṣṭama Skandha).

GĀNDINĪ. A very beautiful princess of Kāśī. Śvaphalka married Gāndinī. (Daśama Skandha, Bhāgavata).

GĀṆḌĪVA. The famous bow of Arjuna.

1) Make. It was Brahmā who made the bow. 'This terrible bow which can punish the unjust and the wicked has been made by Brahmā'. (Udyoga Parva, Chapter 98, Verse 21).

2) Specialities of Gāṇḍīva. This bow is enough to fight one lakh of people at one and the same time. Both Devas and men could be defeated with it. Chiselled very smooth and shining with many colours it was a very long bow. It was worshipped by Devas, Dānavas and Gandharvas. (Virāṭa Parva, Chapter 43). It gained and also decreased in power as the situation called for. (Udyoga Parva, Chapter 98, Verse 20).

3) History of Gāṇḍīva. Brahmā, who made this bow kept it with him during the first 1000 years. For the next 1000 years Prajāpati kept it with him. Next, Indra got it from Prajāpati and he used it for 3585 years. After that Candra kept it for 500 years with him, and then Varuṇa came in possession of it. After using it for 100 years Varuṇa gave it to Arjuna, who used it for 65 years.

4) Gāṇḍīva and Arjuna. Arjuna agreed to protect the Khāṇḍava forest from rain, if Indra sent rain when Agni began eating the forest. But, realising that Arjuna possessed no weapons to effectively oppose Indra, Agni requested Varuṇa to give the following to Arjuna, viz., the Gāṇḍīva bow and a quiver wherein the arrows will never be exhausted, and the chariot marked with the symbol of monkey and drawn by four white horses —all kept by Candra. Varuṇa at once made a present of the above to Arjuna. And, it was with the aid of this Gāṇḍīva, that Arjuna defeated Indra at the time of Khāṇḍavadāha. (See Khāṇḍavadāha). Arjuna had taken a secret vow to cut off the head of anyone who asked him to give the bow to some one else. (Karṇa Parva, Chapter 69).

In after years Arjuna won many wars with the help of this bow. (See Arjuna).

5) Arjuna gives up Gāṇḍīva. The great Kurukṣetra war, which shook Bhārata, to its very foundation came to an end. Dharmaputra was crowned a King. It was at this juncture that the Yādava dynasty got itself annihilated and Śrī Kṛṣṇa entered mahāsamādhi. Now the Pāṇḍavas lost all interest in mundane life, and they set out for the forest on their great journey after crowning Parīkṣit, the grandson of Arjuna as King. Their great travel took them to the shores of the Red Sea. The Gāṇḍīva was still in Arjuna's hands. On the shores of the Red Sea Agni Deva appeared before the Pāṇḍavas and spoke to them "Well, Pāṇḍavas, I am Agni Deva. Arjuna requires the Gāṇḍīva no more. I got it from Varuṇa for Arjuna. Return it, therefore, to Varuṇa."

No sooner did he hear Agni Deva speak thus than did Arjuna throw it into the depths of the sea and also the quiver which never got exhausted of arrows with it. Agni Deva disappeared, and the Pāṇḍavas continued their journey. (Mahāprasthānika Parva, Chapter 1).

GAṄGĀ. The famous and holy river of India.

1) Origin and general information. Gaṅgā had its origin during the incarnation of Viṣṇu as Vāmana. When Vāmana measured the three worlds in three steps the nails on his left feet were raised high. They caused a pore on the upper side of the universe. Gaṅgā, starting from the finger of Viṣṇu's feet fell in heaven (Bhāgavata).

The famous Viṣṇupadī, the flowing water (tīrtha) of which washes away the sins of the people in the universe is the very same Gaṅgā under discussion. For many yugas (eras) this river confined itself to the heights of the sky, otherwise called Viṣṇupada. This particular spot is known as Dhruvamaṇḍala as it is here that Dhruva, son of King Uttānapāda, does, his penance. The seven sages who constantly go round and round the Dhruvamaṇḍala take their bath in this holy river. The course of the river is thus: starting from Viṣṇupada it falls on devayāna glittering with crores of vimānas and therefrom it descends on Candramaṇḍala which it submerges. It follows its course again from there dividing itself into four tributaries called Sītā, Cakṣus, Alakanandā and Bhadrā and then falls in Brahmaloka wherefrom it flows in all directions. Of the four tributaries Sītā falls on the head of Mount Meru, flows down to Gandhamādana, then circling through Bhadrāśva varṣa falls into the eastern sea. Cakṣus falls on the peaks of mount Mālyavān, flows through Ketumāla and falls into the western sea. Alakanandā falls on mount Hemakūṭa, flows through Bhārata Varṣa and falls into the southern sea. And Bhadrā falls on the head of mount Śṛṅgavān flows through Uttarakuru and falls into the northern sea. Alakanandā flows through Bhārata Varṣa and is regarded as the most sacred of the four tributaries.

Gaṅgā which flowed through heaven fell on the earth after thousands of years of its origin. (Bhāgavata, Pañcama, Skandha, Chapter 17).

2) Why Gaṅgā became Śiva's consort. Mahāviṣṇu was once engaged at Vaikuṇṭha in a pleasant talk with his wives, Lakṣmī, Sarasvatī and Gaṅgā when Gaṅgā cast lustful eyes on Viṣṇu, who, behind the backs of the other two wives returned the lustful glances. Sarasvatī could not put up with that situation for a long time. Therefore, she got up from her seat and beat Gaṅgā. Lakṣmī tried to restrain Sarasvatī lest the quarrel should become fiercer. Angered at this intervention Sarasvatī cursed that Lakṣmī be born on earth. Gaṅgā got angry that innocent Lakṣmī was thus cursed, and she in her turn cursed that Sarasvatī be born as a river on earth. Sarasvatī did not take the curse lying down, but cursed that Gaṅgā also be born as a river on earth and take upon herself the sins of the whole world. When all the three wives of Viṣṇu got themselves thus into trouble he told them as follows : "Everything has happened as it should have happened. Lakṣmī may go to the earth and be born in the home of Dharmadhvaja and grow up as his daughter, but not from the womb of his women. There you will purify the three worlds after which you will be born as the plant called tulasī, and be married by an asura called Śaṅkhacūḍa, who will be born as a part of me. And, after that you will be turned into a sacred river called Padmāvatī, and leaving the river on earth your divine form will return to Vaikuṇṭha." And, to Gaṅgā Viṣṇu said as follows : "You will go to earth as a holy river to wash off the sins of people there. A king called Bhagīratha will be leading you to earth, and you will, therefore, be known as Bhāgīrathī also. And, you remain there on earth as the wife of the ocean of King Śantanu. Your divine form will return to mount Kailāsa as the consort of Śiva." As for Sarasvatī, Víṣṇu asked her to be born as a river on earth, her divine form ultimately returning to Satyaloka and then becoming the consort of Brahmā.

And, thus it was that Lakṣmī became the consort of Mahāviṣṇu, Gaṅgā of Śiva and Sarasvatī of Brahmā. (Devī Bhāgavata, Navama Skandha).

3) Gaṅgā born on earth due to the curse of Brahmā. Mahābhiṣak, an emperor of the Ikṣvāku dynasty, went to Satyaloka after he had attained heaven, to worship Brahmā. Gaṅgā too happened to be there. In the devotional atmosphere at Satyaloka a casual breeze removed Gaṅgā's clothes slightly from position, and Mahābhiṣak then cast a lustful glance at her which she also returned. Brahmā, who was observing this exchange of love got angry and cursed that Mahābhīṣak be born as a King on earth and Gaṅgā as his wife. Gaṅgā prayed for redemption from the curse, and Brahmā told her that she would regain her old status after she had delivered the Aṣṭavasus. As the consequence of Brahmā's cure Mahābhiṣak was born as King Śantanu in the solar dynasty on earth and he married Gaṅgā. (Ādi Parva, Chapters 96 and 97).

4) Bhagīratha brought down Gaṅgā on earth. King Sagara of the solar dynasty had two wives called Sumati (Vaidarbhī) and Keśinī (Śaibyā). A son called Asamañjasa was born to Keśinī, and 60,000 princes were born to Sumati. Sagara drove out of the country Asamajñasaa, who turned out to be an enemy of the people. The 60,000 sons of Sagara also proved to be a menace to the world, and the Devas approached Brahmā for protection from the menace. He assured the Devas that a sage called Kapila will destroy the 60,000 evil fellows.

During the above period of time Sagara performed an Aśvamedha Yajña, and his sons went round the earth with the sacrificial horse. But, when they reached the sea-shore the horse disappeared. When the sons complained about it to their father, Sagara, he asked them to look out for the horse in every part of the world and bring it back. Not finding it anywhere on earth they dug a hole and entered Pātāla, where they saw Sage Kapila absorbed in meditation and the missing horse tied to a pole near the sage. (It was Indra who had carried away the horse and tied it there). The sons of Sagara, believing that it was Kapila who had stolen the horse were about to attack the sage when he opened his eyes, and they were reduced to ashes in the fire of Kapila's eyes.

His sons having not returned even after a long time Sagara asked his grandson Aṁśumān to seek them out, and after an extensive search he saw Kapila at Pātāla. Aṁśumān pleased Kapila with laudatory phrases and the latter returned to him the sacrificial horse. Kapila also pronounced the blessing that the grandson of Aṁśumān would perform the purificatory rites of Sagara's sons by bringing down Gaṅgā to earth from heaven. Aṁśumān returned to the palace with the horse and the aśvamedha was duly concluded.

From Aṁśumān was born Dilīpa and from him Bhagīratha. On becoming King, Bhagīratha handed over the reins of government to his ministers and began efforts to bring down Gaṅgā to earth. He did tapas for thousand years on the slopes of the Himālayas when Gaṅgā asked him to please Śiva first as he alone could face her (Gaṅgā) fall on the earth. Accordingly he pleased Śiva by his penance and Śiva agreed to receive Gaṅgā on his head. With a terrific noise Gaṅgā came down on Śiva's head. The haughty Gaṅgā wanted to carry down Śiva also to Pātāla. Realising this ambition of her Śiva blocked her passage with the result that she wandered about in Śiva's matted hair for many years without finding an outlet. Bhagīratha again did tapas and pleased Śiva who shook his matted head and made fall some water therefrom on earth. The water fell into Bindusaras, and flowed in seven tributaries, the first three, Hlādinī, Pāvanī and Nalinī towards the east, the next three, Sucakṣus, Sītā and Sindhu towards the west and the seventh tributary followed Bhagīratha. In this manner they progressed a great distance till they reached the āśrama of the sage Jahnu, and the haughty Gaṅgā flooded the āśrama. The sage got enraged at this and drank up Gaṅgā. But Bhagīratha pleased the sage who then let out Gaṅgā through his ears. Thenceforth Gaṅgā came to be called Jāhnavī also. Gaṅgā again followed Bhagīratha to Pātāla and made the sons of Sagara attain salvation by purifying them with her waters. (Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa, Bāla Kāṇḍa, Cantos 43 and 44 ; Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa, Chapter 97 ; Devī Purāṇa, Dvitīya Skandha ; Droṇa Parva, Chapter 60 ; Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 4 and Vana Parva, Chapter 109).

5) Gaṅgā flowed into the sea. After the purificatory rites of the sons of Sagara were over, Bhagīratha conducted Gaṅgā to the sea and with its waters the sea became full. (Vana Parva, Chapter 109, Verses 18-21).

6) Gaṅgā set on the thighs of Pratīpa. Gaṅgā once fell in love with Pratīpa, father of Śantanu, and set on his right thigh when he (Pratīpa) was doing penance on the banks of the Gaṅgā for a son. Pratīpa did not agree to Gaṅgā's proposal that he should marry her and told her thus: "the right thigh is for the children and daughters-in-law to sit on and the left thigh for the wife; therefore, you be my son's wife."

Then Pratīpa called his son Śantanu and told him : "Sometime back a divine woman came to me and I promised to wed her to you. Therefore, if any divine woman approaches you for a son you must accept her, and whatever she may do you must not object to that...". Not long after this Pratīpa crowned Śantanu

King and left for the forest, (Ādi Parva, Chapter 97).

7) Aṣṭavasus and Gaṅgā. While the wife of Dyau, one of the Aṣṭavasus (eight Vasus) was roaming about in the forest she saw Nandinī (the divine cow) grazing with her calf near the āśrama of Vasiṣṭha, and she desired to have the cow to be presented to her intimate friend Jitavatī, the daughter of King Uśīnara. She informed her husband, Dyau about this desire of hers, and Dyau told his relations about it. Next day the Aṣṭavasus, in the absence of Vasiṣṭha at the āśrama, stole off Nandinī and her calf. When Vasiṣṭha returned to the āśrama the cow and calf were missing, and he divined the reason for it with his divine eyes. He cursed that the Aṣṭavasus be born as men on earth, and when they prayed for redemption from the curse Vasiṣṭha told them that they would be born as men within one year from that day, die at once and return to heaven. At the same time the sage said that Dyau alone, who took the leading part in stealing the cow, would live on earth for a longer period before he returned to heaven. (The reputed Bhīṣma was this Dyau). The Aṣṭavasus set out for the earth to be born as men and on their way they met Gaṅgā and told her about their curse etc. Gaṅgā also told them about her curse, and permitted them to be born in her womb. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 99).

8) Gaṅgā became the wife of Śantanu and the Aṣṭavasus were born. Once while hunting on the banks of the Gaṅgā Śantanu saw a beautiful maiden and they fell in love with each other. She agreed to become his wife on the condition that he would not oppose whatever she said. Śantanu agreed to it and married her. Soon after a child was born to them and in the very presence of Śantanu, she threw the child into the Gaṅgā. As per previous condition Śantanu kept mum at this. She threw into the river the seven Aṣṭavasus, who were born to her in succession. When she was about to throw the last eighth of the Aṣṭavasus (Dyau) into the river Śantanu prevented her. She got angry at this and disappeared with the child. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 98).

9) Śantanu got back the son. Thirtytwo years after, Śantanu went hunting again on the banks of the Gaṅgā where he saw the river obstructed in its course with arrows by a handsome boy. Śantanu did not recognise that the boy was his son, who had been named Devavrata by Gaṅgā. Devavrata disappeared after throwing Śantanu into an illusion by his magic power. All of a sudden a doubt dawned in his mind whether the boy was his own son, and he called out to Gaṅgā to show him the boy. Gaṅgā appeared with her son with beautiful ornaments on him and spoke to Śantanu thus: "This is Devavrata, the eighth son whom you entrusted to me. He has mastered everything in archery from Vasiṣṭha, and he is Dyau (the vasu) son of Aṅgiras reborn. You may please take charge of him." After saying this she returned to heaven. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 100).

10) Gaṅgā and Subrahmaṇya. (See under Subrahmaṇya).

11) Gaṅgā and Bhīṣma. (See under Bhīṣma).

12) Greatness (divine nature) of Gaṅgā. Mahābhārata has (Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 26), the following on the greatness of Gaṅgā.—

If, after death, the bones of the dead are deposited in Gaṅgā the departed will attain heaven. Even if one had sinned throughout his life he would attain Viṣṇupāda (heaven) if he worshipped Gaṅgā. Bathing in the Gaṅgā is as beneficial as performing hundred yajñas. As long as the bones of one remain in the waters of the Gaṅgā so long will he occupy an honourable seat in heaven. He who has come in contact with its water will shine forth as the sun devoid of all darkness. Places which are not favoured by its waters will become barren like night without the moon and trees without flowers. Gaṅgā water is more than enough to satisfy living things in all the three worlds. He who does penance standing on one leg for thousand years, and he who gives up his body in the waters of the Gaṅgā are on a par with each other. God attaches more importance to him who has fallen into the Gaṅgā than to him, who has performed tapas hanging by his head for a thousand years. He who smears the sand on the banks of the Gaṅgā on his body will get the lustre and glow of the devas, and he, who smears the sand on his head will shine forth like the Sun. All the sins of those on whom has blown the air which had come in contact with Gaṅgā water will be swept away. It should be known that Gaṅgā water can wash off all sins and purify mortals. The Agni Purāṇa (Chapter 110) has the following on this subject.

Through whatever places the Gaṅgā flows those places become sublime and sacred. Gaṅgā is the refuge of all created beings who aspire for the final good. If Gaṅgā is worshipped daily it will save families both on the mother's and the father's side from evil fate. To drink Gaṅgā water is better than the observance of a thousand lunar months. If one worships Gaṅgā for a month one will derive all the benefits of having performed all the yajñas. Even the blind (the ignorant) who worship Gaṅgā, will attain equal status with the devas. The sight of Gaṅgā, contact with its waters and drinking Gaṅgā water will purify people in thousands and lakhs.

13) Gaṅgā and Rādhā. Gaṅgā is Rādhā and Kṛṣṇa liquidified into water. Once in goloka Rādhādevī attempted to drink Gaṅgā dry, who, terror-stricken, hid herself at the feet of Śrī Kṛṣṇa, and the whole world experienced difficulties due to non-availability of water. Śrī Kṛṣṇa came to know of the situation and made Gaṅgā appear again on earth. (Devībhāgavata, Navama Skandha).

14) Symbols and vehicle of Gaṅgā. Gaṅgā, white in colour rests on makaramatsya (a variety of fish) holding in her hands a pot and lotus flowers. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 50).

15) Synonyms of Gaṅgā used in the Mahābhārata. Ākāśagaṅgā, Bhagīrathasutā, Bhāgīrathī, Śailarājasutā, Śaivasutā, Devanadī, Haimavatī, Jāhnavī, Jahnukanyā, Samudramahiṣī, Tripathagā, Tripathagāminī.

16) Synonyms of Gaṅgā.

Gaṅgā viṣṇupadī jahnutanayā suranimnagā /
Bhāgīrathī tripathagā Trisrotā bhīṣmasūrapi //

(Gaṅgā, Viṣṇupadī Jahnutanayā, Suranimnagā, Bhāgīrathī, Tripathagā, Trisrotā, Bhīṣmasū). (Amarakośa).

GAṄGĀDATTA. See Bhīṣma.

GAṄGĀDVĀRA (M). The place or locality in the Indo-Gangetic plane where the river Ganges falls from the Himālayas. This place is known as Haridvāra also. arHidvāra has an epic importance.

(1) It was here that King Pratīpa did tapas. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 97, Verse 1).
(2) Sage Bharadvāja had stayed on the banks of the Gaṅgā, at Haridvāra. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 129, Verse 33).
(3) Arjuna visited Haridvāra during his tour or Pilgrimage. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 213).
(4) This is the entrance to heaven. A bath here in the Koṭitīrtha is as beneficial as the Puṇḍarīka Yajña. (Vana Parva, Chapter 34, Verse 27).
(5) Sage Agastya and his wife Lomapādā once did tapas here. (Vana Parva, Chapter 97, Verse 11).
(6) It was here that Śiva appeared to Jayadratha, who did tapas. (Vana Parva 72, Verse 24).
(7) Dakṣaprajāpati had once performed tapas at Kanakhala in Haridvāra. (Śalya Parva, Chapter 38, Verse 27).
(8) Those who bathe at Kuśāvarta, Vilvaka, Nīlaparvata and Kanakhala in Haridvāra will attain heaven. (Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 25, Verse 13).
(9) Bhīṣma did the funeral rites of his father at the mouth of the Gaṅgā. (Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 34, Verse 11).
(10) Dhṛtarāṣṭra, Gāndhārī, Kuntī and others died in wild fire in the forest at Gaṅgādvāra, and Yudhiṣṭhira conducted their funeral rites there itself. (Āśramavāsika Parva, Chapter 39, Verse 14).

GAṄGĀHRADA (M). A sacred place on the limits of Kurukṣetra. There is a terribly deep whirlpool of the river Ganges here and that depth of the river is considered to be equivalent to three crores of sacred places. (Vana Parva, Chapter 83, and Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 25).

GAṄGĀMAHĀDVĀRA (M). The particular spot on the Himālayan peak wherefrom Gaṅgā starts. Those who go there die in ice-falls. Only Nara and Nārāyaṇa have crossed this place. (Udyoga Parva, Chapter 111, Verse 16).

GAṄGĀSĀGARASAMGAMAM. A sacred tīrtha, a bath in which is as beneficial as the performing of ten Aśvamedha yajñas. (Vana Parva, Chapter 35, Verse 4).

GAṄGĀSARASVATĪSAMGAMA (M). A sacred tīrtha at Prayāga. Those who bathe in this tīrtha will attain heaven. (Vana Parva, Chapter 48, Verse 38).

GAṄGĀYAMUNĀSAMGAMA (M). A sacred tīrtha in Prayāga. Bathing in the tirtha is as beneficial as performing ten Aśvamedha yajñas. (Vana Parva, Chapter 85, Verse 4).

GĀṄGEYA I. See under Bhīṣma.

GĀṄGEYA II. Subrahmaṇya (See under Subrahmaṇya).

GAṄGODBHEDA (M). A sacred place where fasting for three nights will give the results of a Vājapeya yajña, and he who fasts here will become one with the universal soul. (Vana Parva, Chapter 84, Verse 5).

GAṆITA A. Viśvadeva, who used to calculate the course of time and ages. (Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 91, Verse 36).

GARBHA. A son of Bharata, the son of Duṣyanta. Suhotra, Suhotā, Gaya, Garbha and Suketu were the five sons of Bharata. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 278).

GARBHA (M). The Purāṇas have described the views of sages about the origin of ātman in woman's womb. Asitamahāmuni stated the following about the birth of a child to King Janaka. (Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa. Chapter 48). Of the seven elements in the human body, viz., Rasa, Rakta (blood), Māṁsa (flesh), Medas (fost), Asthi (bone), Majjā (marrow) and Śukla (seminal fluid) the last one, Śukla, is the most valuable. Brahmabīja (the seed for production) is contained in Śukla. From the food we consume, blood and the seminal fluid take their nutrition. The Śukla emitted during coitus enters the womb of the woman propelled as it were by Kroṣṭavāyu. It takes only one night for the Śukla to get inextricably mixed with blood in the womb. In that mixing if the proportion of blood is higher, the child born will be girl, and if the proportion of Śukla is higher, the offspring will be boy. If blood and Śukla are mixed exactly in equal proportions the child will be 'neutral', neither girl nor boy. During the first month of pregnancy the child will be in liquid form. In the second, it solidifies due to the mixing and interplay of heat, cold, air, etc. During the third, holes for eye, ear, etc. become ready and the vein system is formed. In the fourth, head, hands and legs of the child are formed, and it is during this period that the prospective mother develops certain desires. If those desires are not satisfied the child may be born with physical deformities. During the fifth month the hips and bones develop. The various organs get firmer and stronger gradually and fingers appear during the sixth month. It is during the sixth month that hairs on the head and body appear and feelings and emotions originate in the mind. During the seventh month the ten vāyus (winds) on the basis of the nervous system are released, and the child experiences glimpses of its previous existence, and ability to feel pain also is there. During the ninth month due to the force of the wind which effects actual delivery the child gets head down in the womb, and during the tenth month it emerges out of the womb. The child loses its memory about the past because of its contact with the female organ and external wind.

According to the Agni Purāṇa the process is a little different :

When Jīva (the soul) has entered the womb for rebirth it remains in fluid form during the first month. During the second month it solidifies; in the third month the organs begin to develop, in the fourth month skin, flesh and bones appear, in the fifth month hairs appear, in the sixth month mind is produced, in the seventh month the child will begin to feel pain. The body is covered by a skin (Garbhacarma) and both hands are held above the head in saluting position. If the child is a female it lies in the left side of the mother's womb, if a male on the right and if 'neutral' in the middle of it. From the seventh month the child begins to experience the taste of foods consumed by the mother. During the eighth and ninth month there would be great emotional excitements and upsurges. If the mother suffered from chronic diseases the child also would inherit it. When pregnancy is matured thus, certain winds lead the child down the womb and it gets out through the female organ.

The child inherits its skin, flesh and heart from the mother. The sex organ, marrow, excretion, sweet and belly are inherited from the father. Head, the nervous system and śukla are the contributions of the ātman. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 369).

GĀRDABHI. A son of Viśvāmitra who was a brahmavādī. (Chapter 4, Anuśāsana Parva, M.B.).

GARGA.

1) Genealogy. Descended from Viṣṇu thus;—Brahmā-Atri-Candra-Budha-Purūravas-Āyus-Nahuṣa-Puru-Janamejaya-Prācīnvān-Pravīra-Namasyu-Vītabhaya -Śuṇḍu-Bahuvidha -Saṁyāti -Rahovādi - Raudrāśva -Matināra-Santurodha -Duṣyanta -Bharata-Suhotra -Suhotā -Gala-Garda-Suketu-Bṛhatkṣatra-Garga.

2) Birth. Bṛhaspati once approached, on the crest of a wave of lust, Mamatā, his brother's wife who was pregnant then. The child from the mother's womb said 'no' to the move. But, Bṛhaspati cursed the child and had his own way with Mamatā. Thus two children developed in her womb. Just after delivering the children the mother went away leaving the child by Bṛhaspati behind. The Devas took charge of the forsaken child and named him Bharadvāja. Ultimately they handed over the child (Bharadvāja) to king Bharata, the famous son of Duṣyanta. Children had already been born to Bharata by his three wives, but as all of them were found to be immoral the mothers themselves killed them. It was at such a juncture that Bharata got Bharadvāja as adopted son. (Bharadvāja is known by another name also, Vitatha). From Vitatha was born Manyu, from Manyu Bṛhatkṣetra from Bṛhatkṣetra Jaya and from Jaya Garga. The famous Rantideva was the grandson of Nara, (the brother of Garga) and son of Saṁkṛti. A son called Śani was born to Garga after which he took to Sannyāsa. (Bhāgavata, Daśama Skandha, Chapters 20 and 21).

3) Yādavaguru. In course of time Garga became preceptor of the Yādavas. Śrī Kṛṣṇa and Balabhadrarāma who had returned to Mathurā from Ambādi were sent to sage Sandīpani in obedience to the advice of Garga. (Bhāgavata, Navama Skandha).

4) Garga and Mucukunda. Garga once visited Mucukunda, son of Māndhātā at his palace, and very much pleased with the devoted reception accorded to him blessed Mucukunda that one day he would see Śrī Kṛṣṇa in person. It was according to this blessing that Mucukunda, while asleep once in a cave had a sight of Kṛṣṇa. (See under Mucukunda).

5) Importance of Garga. A number of reputed sage visited Śrī Rāma on his return to Ayodhyā from the forest. Amongst them were present Kauśika, Yavakrīta, Raibhya, Kaṇva and Garga with their numerous disciples. (Uttara Rāmāyaṇa).

6) Garga, a scholar in astronomy. There is a place called Gargasrota on the banks of river Sarasvatī. Garga did tapas here and discovered some principles of astronomy such as the path of planets, stars etc. He was also the chief astronomer in the assembly of emperor Pṛthu. (Śānti Parva, Chapter 59, Verse 111).

7) Other information. (1) While the great war was raging Garga visited Kurukṣetra and advised Droṇa to end the war. (Droṇa Parva, Chapter 19).

(2) He advised King Viśvāvasu about eternity. (Śānti Parva, Chapter 318, Verse 49).

(3) He spoke about the greatness of the world (Viśvamahimā) to Yudhiṣṭhira. (Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 18).

GĀRGASROTA. See under Garga, Para 6.

GARGĀYANI. See under Guruparaṁparā.

GĀRGĪ. A celebrated brahmavādinī born in the family of Garga.

GĀRGYA I. (TRIJAṬA) GĀRGA. A famous sage.

1) Birth. He was one of the sons of Viśvāmitra. (Śloka 55, Chapter 4, Anuśāsana Parva). (For genealogy see under Viśvāmitra). He became gradually the priest of Gudavas. He has written a famous book called Gargasmṛti. Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa mentions that Gārgya is known as Trijaṭa also.

2) How he became prosperous. Sage Gārgya had many children. It was while he was staying in the forest with his wife and children that Śrī Rāma came to that forest for Vanavāsa. The news of the exile of Śrī Rāma spread like wild-fire and many brahmins flocked to the place and Śrī Rāma gave them immense riches. Wife of Gārgya heard the news only late and as soon as she heard the same she called her husband from the fields where he was working and taking away from him the implements sent him post-haste to the place of Śrī Rāma. Trijaṭa as soon as he came to the presence of Rāma told him the purpose of his visit. Huge herds of cows were then grazing on the banks of the Yamunā river. Śrī Rāma told Gārgya to take a stump and throw it with all his strength. He did so and Śrī Rāma gave him all the cows grazing up to the place where the stump fell. It was a big lot and Gārgya became prosperous from that day onwards. (Sarga 32, Ayodhyā Kāṇḍa, Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa).

3) Gārgya's precepts on Dharma. The following are the precepts laid down by Gārgya on Dharma. (1) Be interested always on entertaining your guests, (2) Do not eat meat, (3) Do not give injury to cows and brahmins, (4) Perform yajña with a pure mind and pure body. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 127).

4) Gārgya's place in the line of preceptors. Vyāsa expounded the Vedas to Vedamitra, Saubhari and Śākalya. Śākalya taught what he learnt to Vātsyāyana, Maudgalya, Śāli, Ādiśiśira, Gokhali and Yātukarṇa. Yātukarṇa taught Nirukta to Bāṣkala, Krauñca, Vaitāla, and Vīraja. Bāṣkala combined all the other branches together and made 'Bālakhilyaśākhā' and taught it to Bālāyini, Gārgya and Saṁsāra. The Ṛgvedācāryas are those from Vyāsa to Saṁsāra. (Bhāgavata, Daśama Skandha).

5) Indrasabhā and Gārgya. Gārgya was a shining member of the Indrasabhā. (Śloka 18, Chapter 7, Sabhā Parva, M.B.).

GĀRGYA II. See under Bālāki.

GĀRGYA(M). A place of habitation of ancient Bhārata. This place was captured by Śrī Kṛṣṇa. (Chapter 11, Droṇa Parva).

GĀRHAPATI I. An agni (fire). (Śloka 6, Chapter 74, Ādi Parva).

GĀRHAPATI II. One of the seven fathers. The seven fathers are: Vairājas, Agniṣvāttas, Gārhapatis, Somapas, Ekaśṛṅgas, Caturvedas and Kalas. (Chapter 11, Sabhā Parva, M.B.).

GĀRHASTYA. The Gṛhasthāśrama a stage in life when you live with your family as a house-holder. The true dharma of a householder is to live with what he gets by doing the duty allotted to him. He should feed pilgrims and should not appropriate to himself what belongs to others unless and until it is given to him. (Śloka 3, Chapter 31, Ādi Parva).

GARIṢṬHA. A sage worshipping Indra in his assembly. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 7, Verse 13).

GARUḌA. King of birds.

1) Genealogy. Descended from Viṣṇu thus:— Brahmā —Marīci—Kaśyapa—Garuḍa.

2) Birth. Kaśyapa, grandson of Brahmā and son of Marīci married the eight daughters of Dakṣa called Aditi, Diti, Danu, Kālikā, Tāmrā, Krodhavaśā, Manu and Analā. And to Tāmrā five daughters were born, viz. Krauñcī, Bhāsī, Śyenī, Dhṛtarāṣṭrī and Śukī. Out of the five women Krauñcī became mother of the owls, Bhāsī delivered the bhāsas (types of birds) and from Śyenī were born vultures and kites. Haṁsa, Kalahaṁsa, Koka etc. are children of Dhṛtarāṣṭrī. From Śukī was born Nalā and from Nalā, Vinatā; Aruṇa and Garuḍa were the two sons born to Vinatā. (Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa, Araṇyakāṇḍa, Canto 15).

There is a story in the Mahābhārata about the birth of Aruṇa and Garuḍa. Kaśyapa who was much pleased with the service of Vinatā and Kadrū asked them to select any boon they desired. Kadrū chose to have a thousand nāgas as her children while Vinatā chose to have two sons more powerful and heroic than the thousand sons of Kadrū. After granting them the boon Kaśyapa retreated into the forest.

After some time Kadrū laid thousand eggs and Vinatā two eggs. Both of them kept their eggs in hot pots. In the 500th year the eggs of Kadrū hatched and thousand serpents of various kinds emerged out of them. But Vinatā's eggs did not hatch yet, and the sight of Kadrū playing with her children pained Vinatā much. She, therefore, broke open one of her eggs in secret, and a half-grown child stepped out of it. That child was Aruṇa. Aruṇa got angry that Vinatā forced open the egg prematurely. He told her that as punishment thereof she would become a slave of Kadrū. But, Aruṇa granted her redemption from the curse thus: After another 500 years the remaining egg of yours will hatch and a son endowed with exceptional power and prowess will be born to you. He will liberate you from slavery." After telling his mother so much Aruṇa rose to the sky where he became the charioteer of the Sun. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 16. See also Para 6 infra).

After 500 years the egg broke itself open and out came Garuḍa with blazing effulgence, and he rose up in the sky. His body glowed like the sun. The Devas who got themselves dimmed by his effulgence asked Agnideva the reason therefor. Agnideva told them about the birth of Garuḍa and also that he was equally effulgent as himself (Agnideva). Then all of them went to Garuḍa and lavished on his head all possible blessings, and Garuḍa, as requested by them, controlled his effulgence and returned to his mother. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 23).

3) Slavery of Vinatā: The churning of the Milk-ocean was done before Garuḍa was born. Indra got a horse named Uccaiḥśravas from the Ocean of Milk. Between Kadrū and Vinatā a dispute arose as regards the colour of the horse's tail, Kadrū saying that it was black while Vinatā asserted that it was white. They further agreed to test the colour the next day, betting that she who was proved to be wrong would become the slave of the victor. As the nāga sons of Kadrū hung on to the tail of the horse the tail appeared to be black and Vinatā lost the bet and became Kadrū's slave.

It was at this juncture that Garuḍa was born, and he felt highly mortified to find his mother working as a slave of Kadrū.

Kadrū and her nāga sons once ordered Vinatā to carry them to the nāga residence in the middle of the ocean, called Rāmaṇīyaka (Ramaṇam). Accordingly Vinatā carrying Kadrū on her shoulders and Garuḍa carrying Kadrū's sons on his shoulders rose up in the sky. But, Garuḍa did not relish the slavish work, and he, carrying with him the nāgas, flew up to the sun's orbit. The nāga children fainted due to the excessive heat. But, on the request of Kadrū Indra sent heavy rain and the nāgas regained consciousness. By then they had reached Rāmaṇīyaka island.

4) Attempt at freeing Vinatā from thraldom. Garuḍa, extremely pained at the pitiable plight of his mother, one day asked Kadrū what price she and her children demanded for freeing Vinatā from slavery, and Kadrū demanded Amṛta from Devaloka as the price. Garuḍa decided to get it and informed his mother about his decision to fly to Devaloka. But, what about food till he reached Devaloka? Vinatā solved the problem by advising Garuḍa to eat the niṣādas he will meet on his way to Devaloka at the island called Niṣādālaya, at the same time specially forbidding him from eating on any account, brahmins who might be there, at Niṣādālaya. How to distinguish brahmins from others, queried Garuḍa, and his mother replied by pointing out that the brahmin will burn the throat of him who tries to eat him, like fire. Then Vinatā blessed her son that his wings would be protected by Vāyu, the lower half of his body by sun and moon, the rest of the body by the Vasus and the head by Agni. She also promised to wait there till her son returned.

5) Garuḍa to Devaloka. After saluting his mother Garuḍa set out on his quest for Amṛta. All the fourteen worlds shook at the lashing of his wings. He reached Niṣādālaya, where while consuming whole lots of Niṣādas a brahmin and his wife also happened to get into his throat. Garuḍa felt their presence immediately in his throat and requested them to get out of his mouth. Accordingly they got out and also blessed Garuḍa, who continued on his journey.

Next Garuḍa reached the forest where his father Kaśyapa was engaged in tapas. He told him about his mission and requested him for something to eat. Kaśyapa replied thus:— "You see a pool wherein an elephant and a tortoise are living for long as enemies. Long ago two brothers Vibhāvasu and Supratīka quarrelled over their paternal wealth and at the height of it Vibhāvasu cursed Supratīka to become an elephant when Supratīka pronounced the counter curse that Vibhāvasu should turn out to be a tortoise. You, my son Garuḍa may eat that elephant and tortoise. May your journey for Amṛta be crowned with success.

Now, Garuḍa after saluting his father, flew up in the sky carrying in his beak the elephant and the tortoise from the pool. As trees were falling uprooted due to the terrific vibrations caused by the lashing of his wings Garuḍa did not find a convenient place to sit down to eat his food. While continuing the journey Garuḍa saw a big tree, its branches spread out in a circumference of a hundred yojanas. But, as soon as Garuḍa set foot on a branch of the tree it (branch) crumbled down. On that broken branch were the sages called Bālakhilyas doing tapas hanging their heads down. Fearing that the sages might fall down Garuḍa continued his flight holding in his beak the torn branch of the tree. But he could not find a safe place to deposit the branch with the sages. So he came again to Mount Gandhamādana and saw Kaśyapa, who apologised to the Bālakhilyas on behalf of his son and also explained to them about his mission. The Bālakhilyas were pleased and they left the place for the Himālayas. As advised by Kaśyapa Garuḍa deposited the branch of the tree on an uninhabited mountain peak. Garuḍa ate the elephant and the tortoise there, and therefrom flew to Devaloka (Ādi Parva, Chapter 29, 30).

6) Bālakhilyas cursed Indra. Even before the arrival of Garuḍa ill omens began appearing in Devaloka. Indra asked Bṛhaspati for explanation about the ill omens. Bṛhaspati with his divine eyes saw Garuḍa approaching Devaloka for Amṛta, and he told Indra about Garuḍa born out of the powers of the tapas of Kaśyapa and the Bālakhilyas. He also told that such a fate as the present one befell Indra due to a curse of the Bālakhilyas. Indra and the other Devas stood guard over the pot of Amṛta ready to repel all possible attacks.

There was a reason for Garuḍa's birth from the powers of the tapas of the Bālakhilyas, and also for Indra to be put into the present predicament due to the curse of the Bālakhilyas. Kaśyapaprajāpati, a long time ago, began a terrific yajña for a son, and Indra and the Bālakhilyas who numbered more than 60,000 were deputed by Kaśyapa to collect firewood for the yajña. The Bālakhilyas were only of the size of a thumb, and Indra who very easily collected all the firewood needed for the yajña laughed at the tiny Bālakhilyas who were carrying small twigs etc. for firewood. Angered at the insult the Bālakhilyas removed themselves to another place nearby and began a yajña directed against Indra who alarmed at it sought the help of Kaśyapa who then held peace talks with the Bālakhilyas. They transferred their yāgaśakti (yājñic powers) also to Kaśyapa and agreed to be satisfied with the condition that as the result of Kaśyapa's yajña a son should be born to him, who (the son) would defeat Indra. Thus, for the time being Indra escaped from the wrath of the Bālakhilyas. After the yajña was over Vinatā came to Kaśyapa and he blessed her with a son wishing that he should become exceptionally strong and powerful, and that was Garuḍa. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 30).

7) Amṛtakalaśāpaharaṇam. (The pot of nectar carried away). Garuḍa approached the pot of nectar, and Viśvakarmā who attacked him first was felled to the ground. The dust storm raised by the waving of Garuḍa's wings blinded everybody. The Devas and Indra, nay, even the sun and the Moon lined up against Garuḍa, but he defeated them all, and entered the particular place where the pot of nectar was kept. Two terrific wheels were rotating round the pot and they would cut into mince-meat anybody who tried to lay hands on the pot and a machine circled the wheels. Below the wheels were two monstrous serpents with glowing eyes and protruding tongues like flashes of fire, and the serpents never closed their eyes. The very look with those eyes was enough to poison anyone to death. Garuḍa blinded those eyes by raising a torrent of dust, pierced them in the middle with his beak and and through the hole, his body reduced to such a tiny shape, went nearer to the pot. He destroyed the wheels and the machine, and carrying the pot of nectar in his beaks rose to the sky shielding the light of the sun by his outspread wings. Mahāviṣṇu, who became so much pleased with the tremendous achievements of Garuḍa asked him to choose any boon. Garuḍa requested Viṣṇu that he should be made his (Viṣṇu's) vehicle and rendered immortal without his tasting amṛta. Both the boons were granted.

8) Garuḍa and Indra became friends. Indra hit with the Vajra (his special weapon) the wings of Garuḍa who was returning from Viṣṇu. It did not wound his body, but a feather of his fell in the atmosphere. Everybody who saw the feather acclaimed Garuḍa as Suparṇa (he with the good wings). Indra was wonder-struck, and he approached Garuḍa and requested that they should be friends in future and the pot of nectar be returned. Garuḍa replied that the nectar would be returned if he was granted the power to make nāgas his food, and Indra blessed him that he would live by consuming nāgas. And then Garuḍa told Indra thus : "I took this pot of amṛta not for my own use. The nāgas cheated my mother and made her a slave, and she will be freed if only this pot of nectar is given to them (nāgas). You may snatch off the pot from the nāgas; I shall not object to it."

Indra and Garuḍa thus became friends and the former followed Garuḍa on his way back home.

9) Garuḍa handed over the pot of amṛta to the nāgas and Indra cheated them of it. Garuḍa handed over the pot of nectar to the nāgas, who on the suggestion of the former placed the pot on darbha grass spread on the ground. Also, in accordance with Garuḍa's advice that they should take a purificatory bath before tasting the amṛta the nāgas went out to have the bath, and in their absence Indra carried off the pot of nectar back to Devaloka. Failing to find the pot of nectar on their return from bath the aggrieved nāgas licked the darbha on which the pot was placed with the result that their tongues were cloven into two. It was from that day onwards that the nāgas became double-tongued (dvijihvas). And, thus Garuḍa redeemed his mother from slavery. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 34).

10) The fig tree which Garuḍa broke with his beaks and Laṅkā. It has been noted above that Garuḍa on his way to Devaloka rested on a fig tree. That fig is called Subhadra in Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa.

Rāvaṇa saw the fig tree around which sages were sitting and which bore marks made by Garuḍa sitting thereon. (Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa, Araṇyakāṇḍa, Canto 35, Verse 26).

There is some connection between this tree and Laṅkā. Garuḍa had, as directed by Kaśyapa, deposited in the sea the branch of the tree on which the Bālakhilyas hung in tapas and with which Garuḍa flew hither and thither fearing about the safety of the Bālakhilyas. At the spot in the sea where the branch was deposited sprang up an island like the peak of a mountain. It was this island which in after years became reputed as Laṅkā. (Kathāsaritsāgara, Kathāmukhalaṁbaka, Taraṅga 4).

11) Garuḍa, Saubhari and Kāliya. Garuḍa had always entertained great hatred against the nāgas, and now Indra's permission having been obtained by him to eat the nāgas for food, Garuḍa decided to launch a regular nāga-hunting expedition. He began eating the nāgas one by one. Alarmed at this the nāgas planned for their security in a conclave, and approached Garuḍa with the proposal that one nāga would go to him daily to serve as his food instead of his indiscriminate killing of them. Garuḍa accepted their proposal. After some time the nāgas proposed to Garuḍa that they would conduct a sarpa-bali (sacrifice of serpents) and submit the food got out of the bali to him so that his nāga-hunting might be stopped for ever. Garuḍa agreed to this also. According to the new agreement daily one nāga began going to Garuḍa with the food got out of the bali.
But Kāliya alone did not agree to the programme as he did not recognise Garuḍa to be superior to him in power. And, Garuḍa, who wanted to teach the haughty Kāliya a lesson challenged him to fight, and the fight took place in river Kālindī, Kāliya's abode. During the fight the lashing of Garuḍa's wings raised the water in Kālindī up in the sky and it drenched the sage Saubhari all over, who was performing tapas on the banks of Kālindī. Saubhari cursed that the body of Garuḍa be shattered into a thousand pieces if ever he entered that area in future, and thenceforth the place became a prohibited area for Garuḍa. During after years Kāliya was put up at this place.
A kadamba tree alone outlived the effect of the poison of Kāliya. The tree could outlive the deadly poison because Garuḍa had rested on it on his way back from Devaloka with amṛta. (Bhāgavata daśama Skandha).
12) Relationship of Garuḍa with the kings of the solar dynasty. King Sagara of the solar dynasty was married to Sumati, the elder sister of Garuḍa, and there is a story behind the marriage.
There was once a king called Subāhu in the solar dynasty. He married one Yādavī, but for many years they had no issues. Yādavī had become old by the time she conceived a child as the result of many yajñas etc. But, Subāhu's other wives, viz. co-wives of Yādavī, did not like the prospects of Yādavī becoming a mother. They administered poison to her with the result that Yādavī did not deliver in time, but continued as a pregnant woman for seven years. The sad couple, for their mental relief went into the forest and lived as disciples of a sage called Aurva. But Subāhu died rather soon and Yādavī prepared herself to follow him in the funeral pyre. But, the sage Aurva prevented her from self-immolation speaking to her thus : "You shall not act rashly. The child in your womb will become a famous emperor and rule over the whole world."
Yādavī yielded to the sage's advice and did not court death, and soon afterwards she delivered a son, and he was named Sagara, which meant "he who was affected by poison even while he was in the mother's womb. It was this child who, in later years, became reputed as emperor Sagara.
Sagara married the elder sister of Garuḍa when he was living as a boy in Aurva's āśrama, and there is a story behind the marriage, a story which related to the time when Garuḍa was not born.
Vinatā, mother of Garuḍa, while she was working as the slave of Kadrū, one day went into the woods to collect firewood for her mistress. In the terrible rain and storm that ensued, Vinatā lost her track and wandered in the forest for many days before she could take shelter in the āśrama of a Sannyāsin. The pious man felt sorry for poor Vinatā and blessed her that a son, who would be able to win freedom for her would be born to her. Garuḍa was the son thus born to her.
Before the birth of Garuḍa when Kaśyapa and Vinatā were living together with their daughter Sumati the boy sage Upamanyu, son of Sutapas, went to them and told Kaśyapa thus: "While touring round the earth I worshipped the pitṛs at Gayā and I have been told that they (Pitṛs) would get redemption only in case I married and became a father. I, therefore, request you to please give your daughter Sumati to me as wife. Vinatā did not relish this proposal. Upamanyu got angry at the rejection of his offer and cursed Vinatā saying that if Sumati was given in marriage to any other brahmin boy she (Vinatā) would die with her head broken into pieces.
It was during this period when Vinatā was in a fix about the marriage of Sumati that Garuḍa was born to her. He also thought over the problem and argued like this: the curse is only against a brahmin boy marrying my sister Sumati; why not Sumati be given in marriage to a Kṣatriya; but where to find an eligible Kṣatriya boy? At this stage Vinatā asked him to go and meet the Sannyāsin, who had promised her an illustrious son, in the forest and this Sannyāsin directed Garuḍa to Aurva, for advice and guidance. When Garuḍa met Aurva and sought his advice about the marriage of his sister, the sage thought that the context offered a very good bride to Sagara. And, according to Aurva's advice Sumati was married to Sagara, and thus Garuḍa became related to the Kings of the Solar dynasty. (Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa, Chapters 16, 17 and 18). The Sixty thousand sons born to Sagara by Sumati were reduced to ashes in the fire which emanated from the eyes of Kapila. (See Kapila). When Aṁśumān, the grandson of Sagara was going around the world to find out these 60,000 sons he met Garuḍa on the way, and it was he who advised that the waters of Gaṅgā should be brought down on earth so that the dead sons of Sagara might get spiritual redemption. (Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa, Bālakāṇḍa, Chapter 41).
13) Garuḍa's conceit laid low. A very beautiful daughter, Guṇakeśī, was born to Mātali, the charioteer of Indra. In the course of his search for a suitable husband for Guṇakeśī he came to Pātālaloka in the company of Nārada, and there Mātali selected a noble nāga called Sumukha as his prospective son-in-law. But a month before Garuḍa had eaten Sumukha's father Cikara, and he had also given notice to Sumukha that within a month's time he too would be eaten.
Nārada and Mātali met Sumukha at the abode of his grandfather Āryaka, who was very glad to marry his grandson to Mātali's daughter. But, the threat of Garuḍa that he would eat Sumukha before the month was over stared them all cruelly in their face. So, they appealed to Indra for a solution to the problem, in the presence of Mahāviṣṇu. Indra gave an extension of life to Sumukha and he wedded Guṇakeśī. The marriage enraged Garuḍa so much that he went to Indra's assembly and insulted both Indra and Viṣṇu at which Viṣṇu extended his right hand to Garuḍa asking him whether he could hold the hand. And, when Garuḍa placed Viṣṇu's hand on his head he felt as if the whole weight of the three worlds was put on the head. Garuḍa admitted his defeat. Mahāviṣṇu thus laid low the conceit of Garuḍa. (Udyoga Parva, Chapter 105).

14) Garuḍa helped Gālava. Gālava was a disciple of Viśvāmitra. Once Dharmadeva, to test Viśvāmitra, went to his āśrama disguised as Vasiṣṭha and asked for food. As there was no ready-made food at the āśrama just then, Viśvāmitra naturally took some time to cook new food, and he went with it, steaming hot, in a plate to the guest. Saying that he would return within minutes and receive the food, the guest (Dharmadeva) left the place, and Viśvāmitra stood there with the plate in hand awaiting the return of the guest. He had to remain standing thus for one hundred years, and during this whole period it was Gālava who stood there looking after his guru. When hundred years were completed Dharmadeva returned to Viśvāmitra and accepted his hospitality, and then only could the latter take some rest.

Viśvāmitra blessed Gālava, and now it was time for him to leave the āśrama. Though Viśvāmitra told that no gurudakṣiṇā (tuition fee) was required Gālava persisted in asking him what fee or present he wanted. Viśvāmitra lost his temper and told Gālava that if he was so very particular about gurudakṣiṇā, eight hundred horses all having the colour of moon, and one ear black in colour might be given as dakṣiṇā. Gālava stood there aghast at the above pronouncement of his preceptor, when Garuḍa happened to go over there and hear from Gālava about his sad plight. Money was required to purchase horses, but Gālava was penniless. At any rate Garuḍa with Gālava on his back flew eastwards and reached Ṛṣabhaparvata and they rested on a peak of it. There the Brahmā woman, Śāṇḍilī was engaged in tapas and she served them with food. After food Garuḍa spoke disparagingly about Śāṇḍilī. Garuḍa and Gālava slept that night on the floor, but when they woke up in the morning lo! Garuḍa was completely shed of his feathers. Garuḍa stood before Śāṇḍilī, his head bent in anguish. Śāṇḍilī blessed Garuḍa, who then got back his old feathers.

Continuing their journey Garuḍa and Gālava reached the palace of the very rich King, Yayāti. Garuḍa introduced Gālava to Yayāti, who found it difficult to get 800 horses for Gālava. But, Yayāti gave his daughter Mādhavī to Gālava saying that he might give her to any King and get money enough to purchase 800 horses. After thus showing the means to get money to Gālava, Garuḍa returned home.

Gālava gave Mādhavī first to King Haryaśva of Ayodhyā, then to King Divodāsa of Kāśī and next to King Uśīnara of Bhoja and got from them two hundred horses each, and he submitted the horses and also Mādhavī in lieu of the balance of two hundred horses to Viśvāmitra as dakṣiṇā. A son called Aṣṭaka was born to Viśvāmitra by Mādhavī, who had been granted a boon that she would not lose her youth and beauty even though she lived with any number of people. (Udyoga Parva Chapter 108).

15) Fight between Garuḍa and Airāvata. Śrī Kṛṣṇa once went to Devaloka and plucked the Pārijāta flower from the garden Nandana, and this led to a fight between Indra and Kṛṣṇa in which Garuḍa also joined. Garuḍa directed his main attention on Airāvata which, at his blows, fainted and fell down. (Harivaṁśa, Chapter 73).

16) Defeated by Vāsuki. To churn the Milk-Ocean the Devas and Asuras decided to use Mount Mandara as the shaft and Vāsuki as the rope to rotate the shaft. The attempts of the Devas, the Asuras and the Bhūtagaṇas of Śiva failed to uproot and bring with them the mountain, when Garuḍa, at the instance of Viṣṇu brought the mountain as easily as a kite carries a frog. Again, when others failed to bring Vāsuki from nāgaloka Garuḍa went and asked the nāga chief to follow him to the ocean of Milk. Vāsuki replied that if his presence was so indispensable he must be carried over there. Then Garuḍa caught the middle part of Vāsuki in his beak and rose in the air. But, even though Garuḍa rose beyond the horizon, when he looked down half of Vāsuki still remained on the ground. Garuḍa then tried to fold Vāsuki into two and carry it, but, again to no purpose. Disappointed and humiliated Garuḍa returned without Vāsuki. Afterwards Vāsuki was brought to the ocean of Milk by Śiva's hand stretched down into Pātāla. (Kamba Rāmāyaṇa, Yuddha Kāṇḍa).

17) Bhīma went in search of the Saugandhika flower on account of Garuḍa. While, in the course of their exile in the forest, the Pāṇḍavas were put up at the āśrama of maharṣi Ārṣṭiṣeṇa, Garuḍa picked up from the depths of the sea one day a nāga called Ṛddhimān, and due to the vibration caused by the lashing of Garuḍa's wings Kalhāra flowers from the garden of Kubera were flown to the feet of Pāñcālī. She wore the fragrant flowers in her hair saying that if she were to have good flowers, wind had to bring them. Since there was a mild and veiled insinuation in that statement that Bhīma was inferior to the wind the former did not appreciate that comment by Pāñcālī. And so he rushed to Mount Gandhamādana to collect Kalhāra flowers. (Vana Parva, Chapter 106).

18) Garuḍa saved Uparicaravasu. Once a controversy started between the Devas and the brahmins, the former advocating the use of goat's flesh in performing yajñas while the brahmins contended that grains were sufficient for the purpose. Uparicaravasu, who arbitrated in the debate spoke in favour of the Devas, which the brahmins did not like, and they cursed Vasu to fall from the sky into the pits of the earth. This curse was countered by the Devas blessing him that as long as Uparicaravasu remained on earth he would not feel hungry and that he would regain his old form due to the blessings of Mahāviṣṇu. Vasu prayed to Viṣṇu, who sent Garuḍa to the former, and Garuḍa carried Vasu to the sky on his wings. Thus Vasu became again Uparicaravasu. (Śānti Parva, Chapter 338).

19) Other information about Garuḍa. (1) A dānava once stole away the crown of Śrī Kṛṣṇa who was on a visit to Mount Gomanta. Garuḍa retrieved it from the dānava and returned it to Kṛṣṇa. (Bhāgavata, Daśama Skandha).

(2) The monkeys who searched for Sītā visited the house of Garuḍa also. (Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa, Kiṣkindhā Kāṇḍa, Canto 40, Verse 39).

(3) Garuḍa had married the four daughters of Dakṣaprajāpati. (Bhāgavata, 6th Skandha).
(4) He had a son named Kapota. (Udyoga Parva, Chapter 101),
(5) During the Rāma-Rāvaṇa war Lakṣmaṇa, Sugrīva and all the monkeys swooned hit by the nāgāstra of Indrajit. Śrī Rāma then thought of Garuḍa, who at once came down on earth and bit away the nāgapāśa. (Kamba Rāmāyaṇa Yuddhakāṇḍa).
(6) Garuḍa was present at the birth-day celebrations of Arjuna. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 122, Verse 50).
(7) At the birth of Subrahmaṇya Garuḍa submitted his own son, Mayūra, as a present. (Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 86, Verse 21).
20) Synonyms for Garuḍa.
Garutmān Garuḍas Tārkṣyo Vainateyaḥ Khageśvaraḥ /
Nāgāntako Viṣṇurathaḥ Suparṇaḥ Pannagāśanaḥ. // (Garutmān, Garuḍa, Tārkṣya, Vainateya, Khageśvara, Nāgāntaka, Viṣṇuratha, Suparṇa, Pannagāśana. (Amarakośa).
21) Names used in the Mahābhārata to represent Garuḍa. Aruṇānuja, Bhujagāri, Garutmān, Kāśyapeya, Khagarāṭ, Pakṣirāja, Patagapati, Patageśvara, Suparṇa, Tārkṣya, Vainateya, Vinatānandavardhana, Vinatāsūnu, Vinatāsuta, Vinatātmaja. (For story regarding how Garuḍa stopped eating nāgas see under Jīmūtavāhana).

GARUḌAPURĀṆA. One of the eighteen Mahāpurāṇas. This is believed to be a narration to Garuḍa by Mahāviṣṇu. There are eight thousand ślokas in it. There is an opinion that only the Tārkṣyakalpa is of Viṣṇu. The theme of the Purāṇa is the birth of Garuḍa from Brahmāṇḍa. If this Purāṇa is given as a gift it should be given along with the image of a swan in gold. (Chapter 272, Agni Purāṇa).

GARUḌAVYŪHA. A system of arranging soldiers on the battlefield in the shape of Garuḍa.

GATITĀLI. A warrior of Skandadeva. (Śalya Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 67).

GĀTRA. A maharṣi, the son of Vasiṣṭha, who had by Ūrjjā seven Ṛṣis called Rajas, Gātra, Ūrdhvabāhu, Savana, Alaghu, Śukra and Sutapas. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 20).

GAURA (M). A mountain in the Kuśa island. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 12, Verse 4).

GAURAMUKHA. A son of sage Śamīka. It was Śamīka's son Śṛṅgī, who cursed Parīkṣit to death by snake-bite. (See Parīkṣit). Śṛṅgī cursed that Parīkṣit, who had thrown a dead snake on the neck of his father while in meditation, would be bitten to death by snake within seven days. Śṛṅgī sent word about the curse through his disciple Gauramukha to Parīkṣit. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 42, Verses 14-22).

GAURAPRABHA. Son born to Śuka (Vyāsa's son) by his wife Pīvarī. Śuka had four sons called Kṛṣṇa, Gauraprabha, Bhūri and Devaśruta and a daughter Kīrti. (Devībhāgavata, Prathama Skandha).

GAURAPṚṢṬHA. A royal sage who worships Yama at his sabhā (assembly). (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 8, Verse 21).

GAURAŚIRAS. A sage of ancient days, who worshipped Indra in his assembly. (Sabhā Parva; Chapter 7, Verse 11).

GAURAVĀHANA. A King, who was present at the rājasūya sacrifice of Yudhiṣṭhira. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 34, Verse 12).

GAURĪ I. See Pārvatī.

GAURĪ II. A female attendant (Devī) of Pārvatī. (Vana Parva, Chapter 231, Verse 48).

GAURĪ III. Wife of Varuṇa. (Udyoga Parva, Chapter 117, Verse 9).

GAURĪ IV. An Indian river. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 9, Verse 25).

GAURĪŚA. A royal sage and a member of Yama's assembly. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 8, Verse 18).

GAURĪŚIKHARA (M). A sacred place on the Himālayas. A bath in Sthānakuṇḍa here brings the same benefits as are derived from the performance of Vājapeya and Aśvamedha sacrifices. (Vana Parva, Chapter 84, Verse 151).

GAUTAMA I

1) General Information. The Purāṇas record about a sage called Gautama though nothing is known about his genealogy. Yet the genealogy of his wife Ahalyā is available. See under 'Ahalyā'.

2) Sons of Gautama. The eldest son of Gautama was Śatānanda. (Śloka 2, Sarga, 51, Bāla Kāṇḍa, Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa). Gautama had two sons. Śaradvān and Cirakārī. Śaradvān was born with arrows in his hand. (Śloka 2, Chapter 130, Ādi Parva). Cirakārī used to ponder over everything before he acted and so all his actions were delayed. He got his name Cirakārī. (Chapter 266, Sabhā Parva). Śaradvān was known as Gautama also. That was why Kṛpa and Kṛpī, children of Śaradvān were known as Gautama and Gautamī. (Śloka 2, Chapter 129, Ādi Parva).. Besides these, Gautama had a daughter of unknown name. There is a reference to this girl in śloka 11 of Chapter 56 of Aśvamedha Parva. It is reported that this daughter wept when Utaṅga a disciple of Gautama came to the āśrama with a huge load of firewood on his head. In Chapter 4, of Vāmana Purāṇa there is a reference to a few other daughters of Gautama, namely, Jayā, Jayantī and Aparājī.

3) An attempt to kill Ahalyā. Once when Gautama was away from the āśrama Indra came there as a guest. Considering it as her duty to treat a guest of her husband properly during his absence Ahalyā received him well and gave him fruit to ease his tiredness. Indra went back. Gautama on knowing this on his return suspected the chastity of his wife and calling his son Cirakārī to his side asked him to cut off her head. After giving the order Gautama went to the forests.

Cirakārī had a peculiar nature. He will ponder over things deeply before taking any action. He knew he must obey the orders of his father but killing one's own mother was a greater sin than disobeying a father. Weighing the merits and demerits of the act Cirakārī sat thinking without doing anything.

Gautama when he reached the forest thought again about Ahalyā and her crime. After all what has she done ? A guest came to the āśrama and as duty-bound she welcomed him. It was indeed a great sin to have killed her by her own son. Immersed in thoughts of this kind, sad and repentant, Gautama returned to the āśrama to find Cirakārī sitting silently deeply engrossed in thoughts. On seeing his father Cirakārī was perplexed and he explained to his father about the good and bad effects of his order. Gautama was pleased at this and he blessed him with long life.

4) How the disciple Utaṅga was tested. Utaṅga was the best of the disciples of Gautama. So even when all the other disciples were sent away Gautama asked Utaṅga to continue as a disciple which Utaṅga did most willingly. The disciple became old with grey hairs. Then taking pity on him Gautama received gurudakṣiṇā from Utaṅga and sent him away with blessings. (For details see under 'Utaṅga').

5) Curse of Ahalyā. Indra became a lover of Ahalyā and slept with her. Gautama coming to know of that cursed both Indra and Ahalyā. (For details see under Ahalyā).

6) Other details regarding Gautama.

(i) Kalmāṣapāda, King of Ayodhyā. lived for twelve years as a demon following a curse of Vasiṣṭha. At last he took refuge in Gautama and following his advice went to Gokarṇa and doing penance there to propitiate Śiva attained mokṣa. (Śivarātri Māhātmya).

(ii) It was sage Nodhas, alias Gautama, who composed Sūkta 58, Maṇḍala one of Ṛgveda.

(iii) Lakṣmaṇa, brother of Śrī Rāma, constructed a palace called Vaijayanta near the āśrama of Gautama. (Uttara Rāmāyaṇa).

(iv) Gautama is one of the seven sages (saptarṣis (Śloka 50, Chapter 133, Anuśāsana Parva).

(v) Gautama sat in the court of Brahmā and worshipped Brahmā. (M.B. Sabhā Parva).

(vi) Gautama once blessed Dyumatsena, father of Satyavān, and said that he would regain his eyesight. (Śloka 11. Chapter 298, Vana Parva).

(vii) When the war between the Pāṇḍavas and Kauravas broke out Gautama went to the Kurukṣetra battlefield and advised Droṇa to stop the battle. (Śloka 36, Chapter 190, Droṇa Parva).

(viii) Gautama was also one of the many sages who visited Bhīṣma while he was lying on his bed of arrows.

(ix) Once Gautama built a hermitage on the top of the mountain Pāriyātra and did penance there for sixtythousand years. Kāla, the God of time, then appeared before him and Gautama received him well and sent him away. (Śloka 10, Chapter 47, Śānti Parva).

x) Once Gautama turned the moustache of Indra green by a curse for showing disrespect to him. (Śloka 23, Chapter 352, Śānti Parva).

(xi) When Gautama was born, there was such brilliance that the surrounding darkness was removed and so the boy was named Gautama (Gau = light rays, Tamas = darkness) to mean the remover of darkness. (Śloka 94, Chapter 93, Anuśāsana Parva).

(xii) Once Gautama instructed the King Vṛṣādarbhi on the evil of accepting rewards for good deeds. (Śloka 42, Chapter 93, Anuśāsana Parva).

(xiii) Gautama was also one among the ṛṣis who swore that they were not involved in the theft of the lotuses of the sage Agastya. (Śloka 19, Chapter 94, Anuśāsana Parva, M.B.).

GAUTAMA II. A brahmin who was a member of the court of Yudhiṣṭhira. He was a member of Indrasabhā also. This Gautama while he was living in Girivraja had sexual relations with a Śūdra woman from the country of Uśīnara and a son was born to them named Kakṣivān. (Ślokas 17, 18 and 3 of Chapters 4, 7 and 21 respectively of Sabhā Parva, M.B.).

GAUTAMA III. An ascetic of great erudition. He had three sons named Ekata, Dvita and Trita. (See under 'Ekata'). (Śloka 79, Chapter 36, Śalya Parva).

GAUTAMA IV. Another ascetic of great virtue. Once when this Gautama was going through the forest he saw an elephant babe lying wearied. He took it to his āśrama and brought it up. When it became a full grown elephant Indra disguised as the emperor Dhṛtarāṣṭra came to take it away secretly. Gautama found it out and then he was offered thousand cows and much wealth in lieu of the elephant. But Gautama refused to part with the elephant. Pleased with his extreme affection for his dependant, Indra took both Gautama and the elephant to heaven. (Chapter 102, Anuśāsana Parva).

GAUTAMA. V. An ungrateful brahmin. He was born in Madhyadeśa. He left his parents and after travelling in many lands he came to a country of foresters. The foresters received him with respect and he lived in a hut of the foresters and married a lady from among them.

Gautama abandoned his brahminhood and accepted the duties of foresters. He was living like this when another brahmin boy came to that village. He searched in vain for a brahmin house to stay for the night and then knowing that a man born a brahmin but made a forester by his duties was living there he went to his house. Gautama also came there carrying the animals and birds he had hunted down that day. His body was bathed in blood. The brahmin guest felt compassion for Gautama and advised him to leave his trade and go to his house in his country.

In the morning the brahmin guest went away without taking any food. The advice of his guest kept him thinking. He decided to abandon his life as a hunter and so leaving everything behind he went to the seashore. He met some merchants on the way and while they were travelling together a wild elephant attacked them. Many were killed and Gautama escaping ran swiftly and came to the base of a big banyan tree. He was tired and slept there for a while.

A big vulture named Nāḍījaṁgha lived on the top of that banyan tree. He used to go out to worship Brahmā at dusk and when he returned to his abode that day he saw a man lying wearied down below. Gautama attempted to catch the vulture and eat it but the vulture playing a benign host placed before Gautama food for him and made enquiries about him and asked him the purpose of his travels. Gautama told him that he was very poor and that he wanted to acquire some wealth somehow.

Nāḍījaṁgha then said that he would get for him enough wealth from the demon-King Virūpākṣa who was an intimate friend of his. Gautama was pleased. The vulture fanned him and sent him to sleep. Next morning Nāḍījaṁgha sent Gautama to Virūpākṣa and the demon gave Gautama as much gold as he could carry on his shoulders.

Gautama took the gold as a head load and came back to the base of the banyan tree. Nāḍījaṁgha came to him and they talked to each other for some time. Gautama who had become a gluttonous flesh-eater looked with greed at the fat body of the vulture and in an instant killed it and packed the flesh along with the load of gold and went his way.

Virūpākṣa did not see Nāḍījaṁgha for two days and he was worried. He, therefore, sent his son to the banyan tree to look for Nāḍījaṁgha. When he reached the base of the tree he found to his grief only the bones and feathers of his father's friend. He knew what had happened and he immediately followed the ungrateful brahmin and capturing him brought him to his father bound hand and foot. Virūpākṣa without any mercy cut him into pieces and threw them for the crows to eat. But even the crows would not eat the flesh of such an ungrateful man.

Virūpākṣa burnt the remains of Nāḍījaṁgha in a funeral pyre. Devas assembled in the skies to watch the funeral. Then Surabhi sprinkled milk on the funeral pyre and brought back Nāḍījaṁgha to life. The reborn vulture felt sorry for Gautama and requested Surabhi to restore to life the wretched Gautama also. Gautama also was brought back to life and he embraced Nāḍījaṁgha. Gautama then went away with his load of gold.

Gautama returned to Śabarālaya and there married a Śūdra lady and begot evil sons. The devas were offended at this and cursing him condemned him to hell. (Chapters 168 to 173, Śānti Parva).

GAUTAMĪ I. Another name of Kṛpi, wife of Droṇa. (See under Kṛpī).

GAUTAMĪ II. The woman called Jaṭilā belonging to the family of Gautama is known as Gautamī also. (See under Jaṭilā).

GAUTAMĪ III. A brāhmaṇī whose son succumbed to snake-bite. (See Arjuna).

GAUTAMĪ IV. A river referred to in verse 71, Chapter 165 of Anuśāsana Parva.

GAVĀKṢA I. A monkey king. A terrific warrior, he helped Śrī Rāma with 60,000 monkeys. (Vana Parva, Chapter 283, Verse 4).

GAVĀKṢA II. Younger brother of Śakuni, the son of Subala. In the great war he broke into the military set up of the Pāṇḍavas. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 90). He was killed by Irāvān, son of Arjuna. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 90).

GAVALGAṆA. Father of Sañjaya of Mahābhārata fame. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 63, Verse 97).

GAVAYA. A very powerful monkey King. As captain of a regiment he fought on the side of Śrī Rāma in the Rāma-Rāvaṇa war. (Vana Parva, Chapter 2ు3, Verse 3).

GAVĀYANA. (GAVĀMAYANAM). A yajña. (Vana Parva, Chapter 84, Verse 102).

GAVIJĀTA. (ŚṚṄGĪ). The son of a sage named Nāgabhūṣaṇa, Gavijāta cursed that King Parīkṣit should die of snake-bite. The curse was made under the following circumstances.

King Parīkṣit went hunting one day in the forest and he who had chased a deer in hot haste for some distance felt naturally very weak and tired, and requested a sage he saw there in the forest for some water. Immersed in meditation the sage did not hear the King, and mistaking him to be a haughty fellow, the King, with his stick, lifted a dead snake and placed it round the neck of the sage. Yet he did not stir. The King returned to his palace.

Gavijāta, son of the sage and a devotee of Devī heard of the insult heaped on his father's head while he was merry-making in the forest with his companions. The companions derided him by saying that though his father was Nāgabhūṣana (having snakes as ornament) the nāga was lifeless. Enraged at this and not waiting to study details about the incident he pronounced the following curse. "Whoever might be the person who threw a dead snake about my father's neck, he will be bitten to death by Takṣaka within seven days from today." Only after the curse was pronounced did he understand that it was King Parīkṣit who had become the object of the curse. And, he despatched his disciple immediately to Parīkṣit to inform him about the curse. The King's reaction was, "when the time for death comes let me die." (Devī Bhāgavata, Dvitīya Skandha).

GAVIṢṬHA. A famous asura. It was he who descended on earth as king Drumasena. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 67).

GAYĀ. A particular locality in North India (Nepal). Here there is Gaya mountain and a holy centre also. There is legend to the effect that Buddha did tapas here. People of this locality gave many presents to Yudhiṣṭhira. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 52, Verse 16).

GAYA I. See Gayātīrtha.

1) General. A King of ancient India Gaya was a Rājarṣi and son of Amūrtarayas. The Rājarṣi had conducted many yajñas. A very well-known yajña of his is described in verse 18, Chapter 75 of Vana Parva.

2) Particular Information. (1) Gaya was a member in Yamarāja's assembly. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 8, Verse 18).

(2) He had earned reputation and wealth by visiting the sacred temples in India. (Vana Parva, Chapter 94, Verse 18).

(3) The Rājarṣi had come in his vimāna (aeroplane) to witness the fighting between Arjuna and Kṛpācārya in the war, which broke out as a result of the Kauravas lifting the cows of the Virāṭa King. (Virāṭa Parva, Chapter 56, Verse 9).

(4) Śrī Kṛṣṇa met Gaya on his (Kṛṣṇa's) way to Hastināpura from Dvārakā. (Udyoga Parva, Chapter 83, Verse 27).

(5) Once King Māndhātā subjugated Gaya. (Droṇa Parva, Chapter 62, Verse 10).

(6) Sarasvatī devī once attended a yajña conducted by Gaya, assuming for herself the name Viśālā.

(7) He once gifted away land to Brahmins. (Śānti Parva, Chapter 234, Verse 25).

(8) Gaya did not eat flesh. (Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 115, Verse 59).

GAYA II. A king born to Āyus, the son of King Purūravas by his (Āyus's) wife Svarbhānu (Svarbhānavī). This Gaya was the brother of Nahuṣa. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 65, Verse 25).

GAYA III. An asura. (See Gayātīrtha).

GAYA IV. A King born in the dynasty of the famous emperor Pṛthu. Pṛthu had two sons called Antardhāna and Vādī. A son called Havirdhāna was born to Antardhāna by Śikhaṇḍī; he (Havirdhāna) married Dhiṣaṇā born in the family of Agni and they had six sons called Prācīnabarhis, Śukra, Gaya, Kṛṣṇa, Vraja and Ajina. (Harivaṁśa, Chapter 2, Verse 31).

GAYA V. A King, a descendant of Dhruva. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 18).

GĀYAKA. A warrior of Subrahmaṇya. (Śloka 67, Chapter 85, Śalya Parva).

GAYAPARVATAM. A sacred mountain. Yamarāja honoured it on a particular occasion. Brahmasaras encircled by the Devas is on this mountain. To perform the Śrāddha rites of the dead at Brahmasaras is considered to be excellent. (See Gayātīrtha).

GAYAŚIRAS. A peak of Gaya Mountain; it is also known as Gayaśīrṣa. (Vana Parva, Chapter 87).

GAYAŚĪRṢA. See Gayaśiras.

GAYĀTĪRTHA. The following story is told in the Agni Purāṇa about the origin of this very reputed sacred place at Gayā.

An asura called Gaya was once performing tapas here. As the intensity of his tapas went on increasing, the Devas got nervous and they approached Viṣṇu with the request that he should save them from Gayāsura. Viṣṇu agreed to oblige them. Meantime the intensity of Gaya's tapas increased daily. Ultimately Viṣṇu appeared to Gaya and as requested by him granted him the boon to the effect that he would become more holy and sanctified than all the tīrthas in the world.

Brahmā and other Devas became afraid of Gaya's power and prowess and they complained about him to Viṣṇu, who advised Brahmā to request Gaya for his body in order to perform a yajña. Brahmā did so and Gaya lay down on earth so that the Yajña might be performed on his body. Brahmā began the yajña on his head, and made an offering when the body of Gaya was not stationary or quiet. When told about this fact Viṣṇu called up Dharmadeva (See Marīci, Para 3) and told him thus : "You please hold devaśilā (a divine stone) on the body of Gaya, and let all the Devas sit upon it, and I shall be seated on the stone along with the Devas, holding the gadā (club) in my hands."

Dharmadeva did as he was bidden by Viṣṇu. The body of Gaya stopped shaking as soon as Viṣṇu sat upon the stone, and Brahmā made the full offerings. Thenceforth the place became a holy tirtha under the name Gayā. After the yajña was over Brahmā gave the Gaya temple 20, 000 yards (5 Krośa) in extent with 55 villages attached to it as dakṣiṇā (fee) to the masters of the ceremony. Brahmā presented the villages to them after creating therein hills purely of gold, rivers flowing with milk and honey, houses built of Gold and silver etc. But the brahmins who got these gifts stayed on there, their avarice only on the increase perhaps. Angry at this Brahmā cursed the people of Gayā, and according to it the brahmins became illiterate and evil-minded; rivers flowed with water instead of milk and honey. The brahmins lamenting over their evil fate submitted their grievances before Brahmā, who consoled them thus : Well, brahmins of Gayā, as long as there exist the sun and the moon you will continue to be dependent upon the Gayā tīrtha for your sustenance. Whoever comes to Gayā and gives offerings to you and performs the due rites for the souls of the departed, the souls of hundred generations of his ancestors will be transfered from hell to heaven where they will attain final beatitude."

Thus did Gayātīrtha become famous. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 144).

GĀYATRĪ I. One of the seven horses of Sūrya. The other horses are Bṛhatī, Uṣṇik, Jagatī, Triṣṭubh, Anuṣṭubh, and Paṅkti. (Chapter 8, Aṁśam 2, Viṣṇu Purāṇa).

GĀYATRĪ II.

1) General information. A glorious Vedic mantra. This mantra has twentyfour letters. There are nineteen categories of movable and immovable things in this world and to this if the five elements are added the number twentyfour is obtained. That is why the Gāyatrī has got twentyfour letters. (Chapter 4, Bhīṣma Parva). At the time of Tripura dahana Śiva hung this Gāyatrī mantra as a string on the top of his chariot (Chapter 34, Karṇa Parva).

2) The glory of Gāyatrī. If one recites Gāyatrī once one will be freed from all sins done at that time; if one recites it ten times all the sins done on one day will be washed away. Thus, if one recites it a hundred times the sins of one month; thousand times, the sins of a year; one lakh times, the sins of his life time; ten lakh times, the sins of his previous birth; hundred lakh times, the sins of all his births, will be washed away, If a man recites it ten crore times he becomes a realised soul and attains mokṣa. (Navama Skandha, Devī Bhāgavata).

3) How to recite Gāyatrī. It should be recited sitting still with your head slightly drawn downwards with your right palm open upwards, with the fingers raised and bent to give the shape of the hood of a snake. Starting from the centre of the ring-finger and counting down and going up through the centre of the small finger and touching the top lines on the ring, middle and forefingers, count down to the base of the forefinger, you get number ten. This is how the number of recitations is counted. This method is called the Karamālā (hand rosary) method. This is not the only method that could be used. You can use a rosary made of lotus seeds or glass beads. If you are using lotus seeds you should select white seeds for the rosary. (Navama Skandha, Devī Bhāgavata).

GĀYATRĪSTHĀNA. A sacred place of northern Bhārata. If one spends one night here one will get the benefit of giving away as gifts a thousand cows. (Śloka 28, Chapter 85, Vana Parva).

GERU. A mineral obtained from mountains. (Śloka 95, Chapter 158, Vana Parva).

GH (घ्). This letter has two meanings: (1) Bell (2) a blow or assault; striking or killing. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 348).

GHANAPĀṬHA. A particular system of Vedic studies. There are four such systems. The system of separating each word from conjunctions and combinations and combining with the word just before and after it is called Jaṭāpāṭha. Jaṭāpāṭha means joined or combined Pāṭha. Ghanapāṭha is there to avoid errors in Jaṭāpāṭha Ghanapāṭha consists of padapāṭha and Kramapāṭha. In Padapāṭha the split words are once more combined and Prātiśākhya lays down the rules to combine words. It is because of this scientific system of reciting that the Ṛgveda remains to this day pure in text without different readings.

GHAṆṬA. I. A brahmin born in Vasiṣṭha's family. He spent hundred years worshipping Śiva. Once Ghaṇṭa asked sage Devala to give his daughter in marriage to him. But Ghaṇṭa's ugliness stood in the way. So he abducted the daughter of the sage and married her. Enraged at this Devala cursed and turned him into an owl. He was also given redemption from the curse that he would regain his form the day he helped Indradyumna. (Skanda Purāṇa).

GHAṆṬA II. See under Ghaṇṭākarṇa.

GHAṆṬĀKARṆA I.

1) General. Ghaṇṭa and Karṇa were two Rākṣasa brothers who attained salvation by worshipping Viṣṇu. (Bhāgavata, daśama Skandha). But the elder brother, Ghaṇṭa alone is sometimes called by the name Ghaṇṭākarṇa in the Purāṇas.

2) Birth. There is a reference in Dārukavadha (killing of Dārukāsura) about the birth of Ghaṇṭākarṇa. Dāruka, after having secured a boon from Brahmā, used to harass the world too much and when his depredation became unbearable Śiva created Bhadrakālī from his third eye and she killed the asura. Mandodarī wife of Dāruka and daughter of Maya was sunk in grief at the death of her husband. She began to do tapas. Śiva appeared and gave her a few drops of sweat from his body saying that the person on whom she sprinkled the sweat drops would suffer from small-pox and that such patients would worship her (Mandodarī) and supply her necessary food. From that day onwards Mandodarī became the presiding deity over small-pox. On her way back to the earth with the sweat-drops Mandodarī met Bhadrakālī at whom she threw the sweat-drops to take revenge for her husband's death. Immediately Bhadrakālī fell down with an attack of small-pox. Hearing about the mishap Śiva created a terrible Rākṣasa called Ghaṇṭākarṇa. According to Śiva's directions Ghaṇṭākarṇa licked off the small-pox from Bhadrakālī's body. But, when he tried to lick it off from her face she prevented him saying that she and Ghaṇṭākarṇa were sister and brother and that it was improper for the brother to lick the face of the sister. And, even to this day the small-pox on Bhadrakālī's face remains as an ornament to her.

3) The name Ghaṇṭākarṇa. This Rākṣasa, at first, was an enemy of Viṣṇu, and did not tolerate even the mention of Viṣṇu's name. Therefore, he went about always wearing a bell so that the tinkling of it warded off the name of Viṣṇu from entering his ears. Because he wore a ghaṇṭā (bell) in his Karṇas (ears) he came to be known as Ghaṇṭākarṇa. (M.B. Bhaviṣya Parva, Chapter 80).

4) Turned out to be a devotee of Viṣṇu. Ghaṇṭākarṇa became a servant of Kubera. Once he did tapas for salvation. Śiva appeared and asked him to do tapas to please Viṣṇu as Viṣṇu was greater than himself (Śiva). From that day onwards he removed the bells from his ears and became a devotee of Viṣṇu. (Bhaviṣya Parva, Chapter 80).

5) Attained salvation. Handing over charge of government to Sātyaki Śrī Kṛṣṇa once went to Kailāsa mounted on Garuḍa to see Śiva. On his way he dismounted at the Badaryāśrama, and while sitting deep in meditation there he heard the thundering voice of Piśācas (souls of dead people roaming about without attaining salvation). He also heard the barking of dogs, and thus he understood that Piśācas were hunting animals. The hunters came to Kṛṣṇa's presence. They were led by Ghaṇṭākarṇa who was reciting the name of Viṣṇu. Śrī Kṛṣṇa felt pity for him. Ghaṇṭākarṇa told Kṛṣṇa that his aim and ambition were to see Viṣṇu and that Śiva had blessed that he would realise his ambition at Badaryāśrama. Pleased at all this, Śrī Kṛṣṇa revealed his Viśvarūpa (representing in his person the whole universe), and at once Ghaṇṭākarṇa brought half of the corpse of a brahmin and submitted it as a present before the Lord. He explained to Kṛṣṇa that according to the custom of the Rākṣasas that was the best present which could be made. Without accepting the present Kṛṣṇa patted Ghaṇṭākarṇa on his back with the result that he cast off his body and rose up to Vaikuṇṭha. (Bhaviṣya Purāṇa, Chapters 80-82 and also Bhāgavata, Daśama Skandha).

6) Ghaṇṭākarṇa Pratiṣṭhā. (Installation of his idol in temples). Though Ghaṇṭākarṇa was a Rākṣasa, as he attained Vaikuṇṭha due to the blessings of God Almighty his idol is still installed in temples and worshipped. The installation ceremony is described in Chapter 59 of the Agni Purāṇa thus: "Ghaṇṭākarṇa should have 18 hands. He cures diseases born as a result of sins. He holds in his right hand Vajra, sword, Cakra, arrow etc. And in his left hand broom, sword, cord bell, pickaxe etc. He also holds the triśūla (trident). Ghaṇṭākarṇa who turned out to be a Deva is believed to cure small-pox.

GHAṆṬĀKARṆA II. One of the four attendants presented by Brahmā to Subrahmaṇya. Nandisena, Lohitākṣa, Ghaṇṭākarṇa and Kumudamālī are the four attendants. (Śalya Parva, Chapter 45, Verses 23-24).

GHAṆṬODARA. An asura, who was a member of Varuṇa's assembly. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 9, Verse 134).

GHARMA. A King of the Aṅga royal dynasty.

GHAṬA. An urban area in ancient India. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 9, Verse 63).

GHAṬA. A notorious thief. He had a friend called Karpara. They were jointly known as Ghāṭakarparas. Once both the friends went to commit theft. Leaving Ghaṭa at the door-steps Karpara entered the chamber of the princess who, after enjoying sexual pleasures with him gave him some money asking him to repeat such visits in future. Karpara told Ghaṭa all that had happened and handed over to him the money which the princess had given him. Karpara went again to the princess. But, owing to the weariness caused by the night's enjoyment both the princess and he slept till late in the morning. Meantime the palace guards found out the secret and took the lovers into custody. Karpara was sentenced to death and led out to be hanged. Ghaṭa was present on the spot and Karpara asked him secretly to save the princess. Accordingly Ghaṭa, without anybody knowing about it, took the princess over to his house.

The King ordered enquiries about the absence of the princess. Under the natural presumption that some relation or other of Karpara alone might have carried away his daughter the King ordered the guards of Karpara's corpse to arrest anybody who approached the corpse and expressed grief. Ghaṭa came to know of this secret order of the King. Next day evening Ghaṭa posing himself as a drunkard and with a servant disguised as a woman walking in front and with another servant carrying rice mixed with dhatūrā (a poisonous fruit) following him came to the guards keeping watch over Karpara's body. Ghaṭa gave the poisoned rice to the guards who after eating it swooned under the effect. Ghaṭa used the opportunity to burn the corpse of Karpara there itself. After that Ghaṭa disappeared.

1. According to certain Purāṇas Ghaṇṭākarṇas are two individuals, Ghaṇṭa and Karṇa. The term Ghaṇṭākarṇa—singular number—is used because the brothers were inseparable from each other.

The King then deputed new guards to watch over the funeral pyre of Karpara as he anticipated some one to come to pick his charred bones from the pyre. But, Ghaṭa put the guards into a swoon by a mantra he had learned from a sannyāsin and went away with the bones of his friend.

Realising now that further stay there was not safe Ghaṭa left the place with the princess and the sannyāsin. But, the princess, who had already fallen in love with the sannyāsin poisoned Ghaṭa to death.

GHAṬAJĀNUKA. A sage who was a prominent member in Yudhiṣṭhira's assembly. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 4). Once, Śrī Kṛṣṇa, on his way to Hastināpura met this sage. (Udyoga Parva, Chapter 38).

GHAṬAKARPARA. One of the nine great poets in Sanskrit reputed as the nine gems in Vikramāditya's court.

"Dhanvantari—Kṣapaṇak Āmarasiṁha—Śaṅku—Vetālabhaṭṭa—Ghaṭakarpara—Kālidāsāḥ". A poem of twenty-two verses in Sanskrit called Ghaṭakarpara kāvya is attributed to him. The theme of the poem is a message despatched by the hero to his wife who has only recently been married. All the stanzas are in yamaka (repeating a word or set of words to convey different meanings at the end of each line). By composing a poem called 'Nalodaya', Kālidāsa answered the challenge posed by Ghaṭakarpara in the use of Yamaka. Ghaṭakarpara answered Kālidāsa in the following stanza.

Eko hi doṣo guṇasannipāte nimajjatīndoriti yo babhāṣe / nūnam na dṛṣṭaṁ kavināpi tena dāridryadoṣo guṇarāśināśī. //

(Kālidāsa, in verse 3, Canto 1 of Kumārasaṁbhava had written 'Eko hi doṣo guṇasannipāte nimajjatīndoḥ kiraṇeṣvivāṅkaḥ". In the above verse by Ghaṭakarpara the usage 'Kavināpi tena' may be interpreted in two ways, viz. Kavinā+api+tena and Kavi+nāpitena. By the second combination Ghaṭakarpara converted Kālidāsa into a barber (nāpita).

GHAṬIKĀ. A measure of time equal to 24 minutes. Sixty vināḍikās make one Ghaṭikā. (See Kālamāna).

GHAṬOTKACA.

1) General. Ghaṭotkaca, son of Bhīmasena played a very important part in the story of Mahābhārata. He was, from his very birth, a staunch friend and ally of the Pāṇḍavas. He courted a hero's death in the great war.

2) Birth. On the burning of the 'lac Palace' the Pāṇḍavas escaped through a tunnel and reached a forest. While they were sleeping on the ground, Hiḍiṁba the Rākṣasa chief in the forest saw the Pāṇḍavas from the top of a tree, and he deputed his sister Hiḍimbī to bring over the Pāṇḍavas to him for food.

Hiḍiṁbī approached the Pāṇḍavas in the guise of a beautiful woman. She was attracted towards Bhīma and she prayed for the return of his love, which Bhīma refused. Impatient at the delay Hiḍiṁba rushed towards the Pāṇḍavas, and in the duel that ensued between him and Bhīma, he was killed by Bhīma.

Then Hiḍiṁbī approached Kuntī and requested her to ask Bhīma to marry her. The Pāṇḍavas agreed to the proposal on condition that Bhīma and Hiḍiṁbī should enjoy their honeymoon in the forest and on mountains, but Bhīma should return to them at dusk everyday. Ghaṭotkaca was the son born to Bhīma and Hiḍimbī, (Ādi Parva, Chapter 155).

Indra bestowed on Ghaṭotkaca prowess enough to be a suitable opponent to Karṇa. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 155, Verse 47).

Ghaṭotkaca grew up to become a good friend of the Pāṇḍavas. When Hiḍiṁbī and Ghaṭotkaca took leave of them Kuntī said to Ghaṭotkaca : "You are the eldest son to the Pāṇḍavas. You should be ever a support to them." To this Ghaṭotkaca answered that he would return to them whenever any need arose for it.

3) Carried the Pāṇḍavas on shoulders. During their exile in the forest the Pāṇḍavas became too tired to walk any further when Bhīma remembered Ghaṭotkaca, who promptly appeared before the Pāṇḍavas, and at the instance of Bhīma got down a number of Rākṣasas also. Ghaṭotkaca carrying Pāñcālī on his shoulders, and the Rākṣasas carrying the Pāṇḍava brothers on their shoulders went by air to Badarikāśrama where Naranārāyaṇas were doing tapas, landed them there, and then they (Ghaṭotkaca and his companions) took leave of the Pāṇḍavas. (Vana Parva, Chapter 145).

4) Ghaṭotkaca in the great war. (1) In the first day's fighting he fought against Alambuṣa, Duryodhana and Bhagadatta. Frightened at the terrible course of the fight the Kauravas purposely postponed that day's fighting. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapters, 45, 57, 58).

(2) He defeated the King of Vaṅga and killed his elephant. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 92, Verse 36).

(3) Defeated Vikarṇa. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 29, Verse 36).

(4) On receiving blows from the great Kaurava heroes, Ghaṭotkaca rose up to the sky. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 93, Verse 6).

(5) Ghaṭotkaca made the Kaurava army take to their heels by the exercise of his magic powers. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 94, Verses 41-47).

(6) Fought a duel with Durmukha. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 110, Verse 13).

(7) Dhṛtarāṣṭra praised the prowess of Ghaṭotkaca. (Droṇa Parva, Chapter 10, Verse 62).

(8) He fought with Alāyudha. (Droṇa Parva, Chapter 96, Verse 27).

(9) Killed Alambuṣa. (Droṇa Parva, Chapter 109, Verse 28).

(10) Aśvatthāmā, son of Droṇa killed Añjana Parvā, son of Ghaṭotkaca, (Droṇa Parva, Chapter 156, Verse 56).

(11) Ghaṭotkaca fought with Karṇa. (Droṇa Parva, Chapter 175).

(12) He fought with Jaṭāsura. (Droṇa Parva, Chapter 174).

(13) He killed Alāyudha. (Droṇa Parva, Chapter 178, Verse 31).

(14) Karṇa clashed with Ghaṭotkaca and failing to kill him by any means he (Karṇa) used Vaijayantī Śakti as the last resort. This Śakti had been given to him by Indra in exchange for his head-gear and ear-rings, and Karṇa had been keeping the Śakti in reserve to kill Arjuna. At any rate Karṇa used it against Ghaṭotkaca and he was killed. After killing Ghaṭotkaca the Śakti entered the sphere of the stars. (Droṇa Parva, Chapter 180).

5) Other information. (1) Ghaṭotkaca hated the brahmins and their yajñas. (Droṇa Parva, Chapter 181, Verse 27).

(2) When the souls of the heroes killed in the great war were called upon the banks of Gaṅgā by Vyāsa, Ghaṭotkaca's soul too had appeared. (Āśramavāsika Parva, Chapter 32, Verse 8).

(3) After death he lived with Yakṣadevas. (Svargārohaṇa Parva, Chapter 5, Verse 37).

6) Synonyms of Ghaṭotkaca used in Mahābhārata. Bhaimaseni, Bhaimi, Bhīmasenasuta, Bhīmasenātmaja, Bhīmasūnu, Bhīmasuta, Haiḍimba, Haiḍimbi, Rākṣasa, Rākṣasādhipa, Rākṣasapuṅgava, Rākṣaseśvara and Rākṣasendra.

GHAṬOTKACAVADHAPARVA. A sub Parva of Droṇa Parva, (Droṇa Parva, Chapters 153-186).

GHORA. A son of sage Aṅgiras. (Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 85, Verse 131).

GHORAKA (M). Name of an urban region in the southwest of ancient India. The people of this region supplied money to Yudhiṣṭhira. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 52, Verse 14).

GHOṢĀ. A tapasvinī famed in Ṛgveda. She was the grand-daughter of Dṛgata maharṣi and daughter of sage Kakṣīvān. As she contracted leprosy in her very childhood nobody came forward to marry her. Ultimately she composed a mantra in praise of Aśvinīdevas. They cured Ghoṣā of leprosy and she got married. (Ṛgveda, Maṇḍala 1, Anuvāka 17, Sūkta 117).

GHOṢAVATĪ. The famous Vīṇā of emperor Udayana. (Kathāsaritsāgara.)

GHOṢAYĀTRĀPARVA. A sub-Parva, Chapters 236-251 of the Vana Parva. The procession made by Duryodhana and others to the Pāṇḍavas who lived in the forest forms the theme of this sub-Parva.

GHRĀṆAŚRAVAS. An attendant of Skanda. Always immersed in yoga he worked for the welfare of brahmins. (Śalya Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 57).

GHṚTA. A King of the Aṅga dynasty. He was the son of Gharman and father of Viduṣa. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 277).

GHṚTĀCĪ.

1) General. She was an exceptionally beautiful apsarā woman, and she revelled in disturbing the peace of the sages and becoming mother of children by them. Ghṛtācī, who succeeded in breaking the penance of the sages like Kuśanābha, Vyāsa and Bharadvāja occupied a very prominent position among apsarā women.

2) Śuka, the son of Vyāsa. Vyāsa longed very much to have a son. Ultimately, after receiving instruction and advice from Nārada, he reached the peaks of Mahāmeru and worshipped Mahādeva and Mahādevī for one year with the one-syllabled mantra OM which is the very seed of word. By now the great tejas (effulgence) of Vyāsa lighted up the whole world. and Indra got nervous and upset. The great Lord Śiva appeared on the scene and blessed Vyāsa that he will have a son who would become a very wise man, very much interested in helping others, and very famous also. Vyāsa returned gratified to his āśrama. One day, while in the process of preparing the sticks for producing fire, thoughts about a son passed through his mind. Fire is produced by the rubbing of two sticks. But, he thought, how could he who had no wife, become the father of a son ? While immersed in such thoughts he saw Ghṛtācī standing near him, herself having come along the sky. Vyāsa did not like the presence of Ghṛtācī. Fearing the curse of Vyāsa she assumed the form of a parrot and flew away.

The beauty of Ghṛtācī as also the flight of the parrot kindled erotic feelings in Vyāsa and seminal emission occurred. The semen fell on the stick used for producing fire, and without knowing the fact he went on using the sticks for producing fire. And, then did appear from it a son of divine lustre. That son became reputed in later years as sage Śuka. (Devī Bhāgavata, Prathama Skandha).

3) Two children by Bharadvāja. Once sage Bharadvāja was taking his bath in the Gaṅgā, Ghṛtācī also came to bathe. On the banks of the river her clothes caught something and were removed from their position. The sight of it caused seminal emission to the Sage. The semen thus emitted was kept in a Droṇa, (bamboo cup) and when it was due the Droṇa broke and out of it came a child. It was this child which, in later years, became so very famous as the great Droṇācārya. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 149). On another occasion also, the sight of Ghṛtācī caused emission in Bharadvāja, and Śrutāvatī or Śruvāvatī was the noble daughter born out of it. (Śalya Parva, Chapter 48, Verse 63).

Hundred daughters of Kuśanābha. Kuśanābha, son of Kuśa was a saintly king. Once Kuśanābha fell in love with Ghṛtācī and a hundred daughters were born to him of her. Once Wind-God felt enamoured of the hundred girls, but they refused to satisfy his desire. So he cursed them to become crooked or bent down in body. Later on, Brahmadatta, son of the sage Cūli, straightened their bodies and married them. (Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa, Bāla Kāṇḍa, Canto 32).

5) Birth of Ruru. On another occasion Ghṛtācī attracted and subjugated a King called Pramati. Ruru was the son born to Pramati by Ghṛtācī.

6) Other information. (1) Once Ghṛtācī pleased Sage Aṣṭāvakra, who introduced her into Kubera's assembly. (Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 19, Verse 44).

(2) Ghṛtācī danced at the birthday celebrations of Arjuna. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 122, Verse 65).

(3) A daughter called Citrāṅgadā was born to Viśvakarman by Ghṛtācī. (See under Viśvakarmā).

(4) A daughter called Devavatī was born to Ghṛtācī. (See under Devavatī).

GHṚTAPAS A great sage who lived on ghee. A disciple of Brahmā he was an instructor of Sanātana Dharma. (Śānti Parva, Chapter 166, Verse 24).

GHṚTAPṚṢṬHA. A son of Priyavrata, brother of Uttānapāda. Svāyambhuvamanu had two famous sons called Priyavrata and Uttānapāda. Priyavrata, the elder son, married two daughters of Viśvakarmaprajāpati called Surūpā and Barhiṣmatī, and of Surūpā were born ten sons called Agnīdhra, Idhmajihva, Yajñabāhu, Mahāvīra, Rukmaśukra, Ghṛtapṛṣṭha, Savana, Medhātithi and Vītihotra, and also one daughter called Ūrjasvatī. (Devībhāgavata, 8th Skandha).

GHṚTAVATĪ. An important river in India. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 9, Verse 23).

GHṚTEYU. A King born in the Aṅga dynasty. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 277).

GHŪRṆIKĀ. Foster mother of Devayānī, daughter of Śukrācārya. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 78, Verse 25).

GILGAMĪṢ. It is the most ancient book of the Babylonians. It is as old as Ṛgveda. Another book so old as these is the "Book of the Dead" of the Egyptians. (See under Jalapralaya).

GIRIGAHVARA. A place of habitation on the north-eastern side of Bhārata. (Śloka 42, Chapter 9, Bhīṣma Parva).

GIRIKĀ. Wife of Uparicaravasu. This gem of a lady was the daughter of the river Śuktimatī. There is a story behind her marrying Uparicara.

Śuktimatī was a river flowing through the capital city of the kingdom of Uparicara. Once the mountain Kolāhala driven by amorous desires subdued Śuktimatī. The next morning on finding no river in its place the people were surprised. The news reached the ears of the King. He became furious and rushing to the mountain gave it a hard kick. It created a hole in the mountain and the river flowed through it. But by that time Kolāhala had got a son and a daughter of Śuktimatī. Greatly pleased at the King for setting her free from Kolāhala, Śuktimatī gave her children to the King. The King brought up the son and made him the chief of his army. The girl was brought up and named Girikā and when she was of marriagable age the King married her.

When once Girikā was having her monthly period the King was forced to go to the forests for hunting. While in the forests he saw the animals having sexual acts and as he thought of Girikā at home he had emission. He never wanted to waste the seminal fluid. He wrapped it in a leaf and sent it to his wife through a kite. Another kite thinking it to be something to eat attacked the packet and it fell into a river down below. A fish swallowed it and later when a fisherman caught it and opened its belly a boy and a girl came out of it. The girl was Satyavatī mother of Vyāsa. (10th Skandha, Devī Bhāgavata).

GIRINĀTHADĪKṢITA. See under Guṇanidhi.

GIRIPRASTHA. A mountain of the country of Niṣadha. Indra once hid himself on this mountain. (Śloka 13, Chapter 315, Vana Parva).

GIRIVRAJA. A city which has gained great importance in all the Purāṇas of India.

1) Origin. There was once a King named Kuśa in the Pūru dynasty. (For genealogy see under 'Gādhi'). This Kuśa begot of his wife, Vaidarbhī, four sons named Kuśāmba, Kuśanābha, Asūrtarajasa and Vasu. Each of them built a city of his own and started his rule there. Girivraja is the magnificent city built by Vasu. (Sarga 32, Bāla Kāṇḍa, Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa).

2) Jarāsandha's rule. Vasu had a son named Bṛhadratha and Jarāsandha was the son of Bṛhadratha. During the rule of Jarāsandha Girivraja became glorious like Nandanodyāna. This city lying in the midst of five mountains was the seat of prosperity then. (Chapter 21, Sabhā Parva). Jarāsandha kept many mighty kings of his time, as prisoners in this city. Unable to control his wrath against Kṛṣṇa once he hurled his mace a hundred times and threw it from Girivraja to Mathurā. Śrī Kṛṣṇa, Bhīmasena and Arjuna entered Girivraja in disguise and engaging Jarāsandha in a duel killed him and crowned his son as King. (Chapter 24, Sabhā Parva). Once King Duṁdhumāra abandoning the gifts offered by the devas came and slept in Girivraja. (Śloka 39, Chapter 6, Anuśāsana Parva).

GĪTĀ. See under Bhagavad Gītā.

GĪTAPRIYĀ. A follower of Skandadeva. (Śloka 7, Chapter 46, Śalya Parva).

GĪTAVIDYĀDHARA. A great musician among the gandharvas. When he found that sage Pulastya had no liking for music he teased the sage by making the sounds of a boar. The enraged sage cursed him and turned him into a boar. He got relief from the curse when Ikṣvāku killed him and Gītavidyādhara became his old self again. (Chapter 46, Sṛṣṭi Khaṇḍa, Padma Purāṇa).

GĪTHA. A King of the Bharata dynasty. (5th Skandha, Bhāgavata).

GO. (GAU). A wife of sage Pulastya. Vaiśravaṇa was born of her. The son left his father and went to Brahmā. (Śloka 12, Chapter 274, Vana Parva).

GOBHĀNU. A King who was the grandson of Turvasu of the Pūru dynasty and son of King Varga. Gobhānu had a son named Traiśāni. (Chapter 277, Agni Purāṇa).

GODĀ. A follower of Skandadeva. (Śloka 28, Chapter 46, Śalya Parva).

GODĀNA. In ancient India it was believed to be a very great deed of moral merit to give cows as gifts. If one buys cows with the hereditary wealth and gives them as gifts one would reach an ever prosperous world and even one who buys cows with the money received by gambling and gives them as gifts would live for several years enjoying prosperity. (Chapter 73, Anuśāsana Parva).

GODĀVARĪ. A river of South India. This river has been glorified much in the Purāṇas.

(1) Godāvarī is a member of the court of Varuṇa. (Śloka 20, Chapter 9, Sabhā Parva).

(2) This river originates from Brahmagiri, situated near Tryambakajyotirliṅga of Nasik district in South India. The river is very deep and is a giver of prosperity to those who worship her. Many sages worshipped this river. (Śloka 2, Chapter 88, Vana Parva).

(3) If one bathes in this river one will get the benefit of conducting a Gomedha yajña. Not only that, after his death he will go to the land of Vāsuki. (Śloka 33, Chapter 85, Vana Parva).

(4) The origin of Agni is from Godāvarī. (Śloka, 24, Chapter 222, Vana Parva).

(5) Śrī Rāma, Lakṣmaṇa and Sītā stayed for a long time during their exile in Pañcavaṭī on the shores of this river Godāvarī. (Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa, Araṇya Kāṇḍa, Sarga 16).

(6) Godāvarī is one of the most important rivers of India. (Śloka 14, Chapter 9, Bhīṣma Parva).

(7) He who bathes in Godāvarī will be prosperous. (Śloka 29, Chapter 25, Anuśāsana Parva).

GODHA. A village in the north-east part of ancient India. (Śloka 42, Chapter 9, Bhīṣma Parva).

GODILA I. A Sāmavedamūrti. By his curse Utatthya became a dunce and later became famous as Satyatapas. (For details see under Satyatapas).

GODILA II. A servant of Vaiśravaṇa. Once when Godila was travelling by air he saw Padmāvatī, wife of Ugrasena, King of Vidarbha, bathing in a pond along with her companions. The very sight of the enchanting Padmāvatī roused carnal passions in him and the Yakṣa took the form of Ugrasena and started singing from the top of a hillock nearby. Padmāvatī went to him because she mistook him for her husband. Embracing her passionately the Yakṣa outraged her modesty. Subtle differences in the act created doubts in Padmāvatī and, on being questioned, the Yakṣa told the truth and left the place. (Chapter 49, Padma Purāṇa).

GOHARAṆAPARVA. A sub-divisional Parva of Mahābhārata. See under 'Mahābhārata'.

GOHATYĀ. In ancient India killing of cows was considered to be a great sin. It is interesting to note the punishment prescribed for this crime in the Agni Purāṇa. For one month he should drink barley water only. He should live in a cow-shed wearing the hide of the cow he has killed. He can have some supper and that too without salt. He must bathe for two months in cow's urine. During day time he should follow the cows looking after their comfort. He should drink the menstrual discharge with his face lifted upwards. Fasting, he should give away as charity ten cows and a bull. If not, he should give as charity all his wealth to god-fearing brahmins. If a man only stops the cow for others to kill he should bear a fourth of the punishment; if he stops and ties it for killing he should bear half of the punishment and if he stops it, ties it and gives the weapon for killing he should bear three-fourths of the punishment. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 159), GOKHALI. One of the disciples in the tradition of Vyāsa. He was the direct disciple of Śākalya. Śākalya divided the branch of Veda he received into six and gave one to each of the following six disciples: Vālgāyana, Maudgalya, Śāli, Ādiśiśira, Gokhali, and Yātukarṇa. (Skandha 12, Bhāgavata).

GOKARṆA I. See under Gokarṇa.

GOKARṆA II. An incarnation of Śiva. In the seventh Varāhakalpa Śiva was born as Gokarṇa and he then got four sons named, Kaśyapa, Uśanas, Cyavana and Bṛhaspati. (Śatarudrasaṁhitā, Śiva Purāṇa).

GOKARṆĀ. In the great battle Karṇa sent a serpent-missile against Arjuna. The serpent named Aśvasena was the power behind the missile and Gokarṇā was the mother of that serpent. (Śloka 42, Chapter 90, Karṇa Parva).

GOKARṆA. A sacred place of Purāṇic importance situated on the extreme north of Kerala.

(1) Origin. There was once on the banks of the river, Tuṅgabhadrā, a village made sacred and prosperous by the brahmins who lived there. In that village lived a noble brahmin named Ātmadeva. His wife was a quarrelsome woman named Dhundhulī. Even after many years of married life they got no children and Ātmadeva, greatly grief-stricken, left his home and went to the forests. He was sitting on the shore of a lake after quenching his thirst from it when a Sannyāsin came that way. Ātmadeva told him about his domestic life and pleaded that he should suggest a way to get a son for him. The sannyāsin sat in meditation for some time and contemplated on the horoscope of Ātmadeva and regretfully informed him that according to his horoscope he was to have no children for seven successive births. He, therefore, advised Ātmadeva to abandon all his worldly pleasures and accept sannyāsa for the rest of his life. But Ātmadeva was not to be discouraged by this prophecy and he urged the sannyāsin to help him somehow to get a child. The sanyāsin then gave him a fruit and asked him to give it to his wife and ask her to observe a life of fasting for a period of one year.

Greatly pleased with this boon Ātmadeva returned to his house and told his wife all that had happened and gave her the fruit. She liked to eat the fruit but a year's fasting seemed troublesome to her. She was thinking of how to get over this difficulty when her younger sister came to her and suggested a plan. She said "Sister, I am pregnant. I shall give you the child I deliver. You can declare it as your child and make your husband believe so. You can announce in public that you have eaten the fruit and have consequently become pregnant. We can, to test its merit, give the fruit to a cow." Dhundhulī liked the plan very much and so did everything like that.

The news that Dhundhulī was pregnant spread in the city. Very soon her sister gave birth to a child and that child was proclaimed as the child of Dhundhulī. On the pretext that Dhundhulī was short of breast-milk her sister started doing the breast-feeding. The child was named Dhundhukāri.

After three months the cow that ate the fruit delivered a child. The ear of the child was like that of a cow and so he was called Gokarṇa. Dhundhukāri and Gokarṇa grew together. Dhundhukāri became a very evil-natured boy while Gokarṇa grew into a scholarly one. Dhundhukāri who was the very seat of everything bad made the life of their parents wretched and the disappointed Ātmadeva renounced all and went to the forests and did penance and attained mokṣa. Unable to bear the torture by her son, Dhundhulī committed suicide by jumping into a well. Gokarṇa started on a pilgrimage.

Dhundhukāri lived in his own house surrounded by prostitutes. Thieving was his only means of livelihood. Knowing this the servants of the king started to capture Dhundhukāri and the prostitutes who lived with him, for their safety, bound Dhundhukāri with ropes and put him into fire and killed him. The soul of Dhundhukāri became a great phantom. Hearing the news of the death of his brother, Gokarṇa returned home. He conducted a śrāddha at Gayā to give peace to the soul of his departed brother. But the phantom of Dhundhukāri was not pacified. This phantom troubled him always. Gokarṇa was not afraid of it and asked him what he wanted and the phantom pleaded that in some way Gokarṇa should get him absolved of all his sins. Gokarṇa then consulted Pandits to know what method should be adopted to save a soul which could not be saved even by a Gayā-Śrāddha. The Pandits advised him to do penance to propitiate the Sun. The Sun who appeared before Gokarṇa as a result of his penance declared that if he did read the entire Bhāgavata in seven days Dhundhukāri would get mokṣa. So Gokarṇa performed a Saptāha and among those who assembled to hear it was the phantom of Dhundhukāri also. The phantom finding no place to sit crept into a seven-layered bamboo and sat there listening to Gokarṇa. When the first day was over the first layer broke and it went on like that every day and on the seventh day the seventh layer broke and when Gokarṇa finished the twelfth Skandha the phantom rose from the bamboo to heaven. When it was going to heaven it looked at Gokarṇa and told him that his mokṣa was due to the result of his hearing the saptāha reading. When Gokarṇa asked him why none of the others who heard it got it he said that it was because none had heard it with such rapt attention as he had done.

Gokarṇa then conducted another reading of Saptāha and the people present heard the same with rapt attention. When the reading was over, a chariot of Viṣṇu from Vaikuṇṭha descended and carried away all those who heard the reading. The place where Gokarṇa sat and read the Saptāha became known later as the famous Gokarṇa. (Chapters 1 to 3, Bhāgavata Māhātmya).

2) Mitrasaha and Gokarṇa. A King of Ayodhyā named Mitrasaha who became famous by the name of Kalmāṣapāda, became a demon by a curse of Vasiṣṭha. He attained mokṣa by living and worshipping God in the temple at Gokarṇa. (See under Śivarātri for details).

3) Gokarṇa and the origin of Kerala. Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa gives a story associating Gokarṇa with the origin of Kerala.

By the request of Bhagīratha the river Gaṅgā fell on earth and flowing as different brooks emptied its waters in the ocean. The level of the water in the ocean went up and the temple of Gokarṇa and the land of Kerala were submerged in waters. The sages who were in the temple somehow escaped and took refuge on the mountain Sahya. Paraśurāma was doing penance there then and the sages went to him and told him of their plight. Paraśurāma went and stood in Gokarṇa and threw an axe to the south. All the land from Gokarṇa up to the place where the axe fell rose up from the ocean to form a piece of land which was named Kerala. (Chapter 97 of Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa).

4) Other Purāṇic details regarding Gokarṇa. (i) Bhagīratha did penance to bring Gaṅgādevī to Earth at Gokarṇa. (Sarga 12, Chapter 42, Bāla Kāṇḍa, Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa).

ii) The serpent named Śeṣa spent much time living here. (Chapter 36, Śloka 3, Ādi Parva).

iii) Arjuna visited Gokarṇa while he was on his pilgrimage. (Śloka 34, Chapter 26, Ādi Parva).

iv) Gokarṇa was one of the abodes of Śiva. Brahmā, Maharṣis, Bhūtas and Yakṣas used to stay at Gokarṇa to worship Śiva. (Śloka 24, Chapter 85, Vana Parva).

v) The holy place of Gokarṇa is renowned in all the three worlds (Śloka 15, Chapter 88, Vana Parva).

vi) Gokarṇa is a tapovana also. (Śloka 51, Chapter 6, Bhīṣma Parva).

vii) Śrī Kṛṣṇa, Arjuna and Pradyumna together killed Nikumbha, who had kidnapped Bhānumatī, at Gokarṇa. (Chapter 90, Viṣṇu Purāṇa).

GOKARṆI. A follower of Skandadeva. (M.B. Śalya Parva, Chapter 90; Śloka 42).

GOLAKĪ. The mother of an Asura named Madhupa. This woman was born from the face of Brahmā in Kṛtayuga. (Uttara Rāmāyaṇa).

GOLOKA. A divine world. Mostly cows live in this world which is above all the other worlds. Surabhi, daughter of Dakṣa, acquired great powers by doing rigorous penance in this world. Paṇḍits say that Goloka is the upper lip, Brahmaloka, the lower lip of Mahāviṣṇu. (M.B. Śānti Parva, Chapter 347, Śloka 52).

GOMANTA I. A famous mountain near Dvārakā. This mountain is known as Goma and Raivataka also. Once Śrī Kṛṣṇa went to see Gomanta and on the way met Paraśurāma. (Skandha 10, Bhāgavata). Paraśurāma and Śrī Kṛṣṇa went together and saw this beautiful mountain. Vyāsa has devoted Chapter 40 of Viṣṇu Parva entirely for the description of this mountain of Gomanta. Once Balabhadrarāma caught hold of Jarāsandha on this mountain but let him off.

GOMANTA II. A place of habitation lying to the north-east of ancient India. (Śloka 43, Chapter 9, Bhīṣma Parva).

GOMANTA III. A mountain of the island of Kuśa. (Śloka 8, Chapter 12, Bhīṣma Parva).

GOMATĪ. (KAUŚIKĪ). A celebrated river of Purāṇic fame. This is worshipped as a goddess.

1) The curse. Kampa Rāmāyaṇa states that this river was Kauśikī, sister of Viśvāmitra. She became a river by a curse.

Kauśikī was married to a sage called Ṛcīka. Once Ṛcīka went to devaloka to see Brahmā. Kauśikī unable to bear the separation followed her husband by her power of chastity. On the way Ṛcīka saw her and cursed her and made her into a river. From that day onwards she started running as a river named Kauśikī. See under Kauśikī. (Bāla Kāṇḍa, Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa).

2) Other details from the Purāṇas regarding Gomatī.

i) Śrī Rāma conducted the Aśvamedha yāga at Naimiśāraṇya on the banks of this river. (Uttara Rāmāyaṇa).

ii) The sins of those who drink the water of this river are washed away. (Śloka 20, Chapter 169, Ādi Parva).

iii) The devī of Gomatī river lives in the court of Varuṇa worshipping him. (Śloka 23, Chapter 9, Sabhā Parva).

iv) Dharmaputra came to this river during his pilgrimage. (Śloka 2, Chapter 95, Vana Parva).

v) Gomatī is the wife of Agnideva called Viśvabhuk. (Śloka 19, Chapter 219, Vana Parva).

vi) This is one of the most important rivers of Bhāratavarṣa. (Śloka 18, Chapter 9, Bhīṣma Parva).

vii) The land of Divodāsa, King of Ayodhyā, extended from the shores of Gaṅgā to the base of Gomatī. (Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa, Chapter 2).

GOMATĪMANTRA. A mantra for obtaining blessings from cows. If one recites this mantra standing in the midst of cows one would get many children and great wealth and if it is recited by a woman she would get the affection and love of her husband. (Śloka 42, Chapter 81, Anuśāsana Parva, M.B.).

GOMEDAKA. See under Navaratna.

GOMUKHA I. A notorious King. He was born of the family of Krodhavaśā. (Śloka 63, Chapter 67, Ādi Parva).

GOMUKHA II. An asura who was a follower of an asura called Śūrapadma. (Asura Kāṇḍa, Skanda Purāṇa).

GOMUKHA III. Son of Mātali, charioteer of Indra. (Śloka 8, Chapter 100, Udyoga Parva).

GONANDA. A soldier of Skandadeva. Śloka 65, Chapter 43, Śalya Parva).

GOPĀLAKA. A son born to Caṇḍamahāsena of his wife Aṅgāravatī. Besides Gopālaka he had another son named Pālaka. (Kathāsaritsāgara, Kathāmukhalaṁbaka, Taraṅga 3).

GOPĀLĪ. I. A nymph. Once when Arjuna went to devaloka this celestial maiden gave a performance in dancing in his honour. (Chapter 43, Vana Parva).

GOPĀLĪ II. A follower of Skandadeva. (Śloka 4, Chapter 46, Śalya Parva).

GOPARĀṢṬRA. A place of habitation in the north-east part of ancient India. (Śloka 44, Chapter 9, Bhīṣma Parva).

GOPATI I. A demon. He was a co-worker of another demon named Kālaketu. Śrī Kṛṣṇa killed Gopati on the banks of the river Irāvatī on the mountain Mahendra. (Chapter 38, Sabhā Parva).

GOPATI II. A deva gandharva. He was born to Kaśyapa of his wife Muni. (Śloka 42, Chapter 65, Vana Parva). This gandharva participated in the birthday celebrations of Arjuna. (Śloka 55, Chapter 122, Ādi Parva).

GOPATI III. A son of the celebrated emperor, Śibi. When Paraśurāma killed and made extinct all Kṣatriya kings it was a herd of cows that brought up this child. (Śloka 78, Chapter 49, Śānti Parva).

GOPATI IV. A synonym of Śiva used in Śloka 151, Chapter 17 of Anuśāsana Parva

GOPATI V. A synonym of Viṣṇu used in Śloka 66, Chapter 149, of Anuśāsana Parva.

GOPĀYANA. The army of Gopas. (Śloka 13, Chapter 71, Bhīṣma Parva).

GOPIKKURI. See under Ūrddhvapuṇḍra.

GOPTATĀRA. A place on the northern bank of the river, Sarayū. Śrī Rāma with his two armies and vehicles ascended to heaven from this place. (Śloka 10, Chapter 83 Mahābhārata).

GORATHA. The palace of Magadha. This palace was situated on a mountain near Girivraja. (Śloka 30, Chapter 20, Sabhā Parva).

GOSAVA. A mahāyajña. (Śloka 17, Chapter 30, Vana Parva).

GOŚṚṄGA. An important mountain of South India. Sahadeva captured this mountain. (Śloka 5, Chapter 31, Sabhā Parva).

GOSTANĪ. A follower of Skandadeva. (Śloka 3, Chapter 46, Śalya Parva).

GOTAMA. A sage named Gotama, son of Rahūgaṇa, is found everywhere in Ṛgveda. The seventyfourth sūkta in the thirteenth anuvāka of the first maṇḍala of Ṛgveda is composed by this sage. There are many other sūktas also in his name. This sage is not the Gautama, husband of Ahalyā, who made Sūkta 58, Anuvaka 11, Maṇḍala 1 of Ṛgveda.

Once this Gotama tired of thirst asked the Maruts for some water. The Maruts took a huge well to his side and poured water into a big pot. (Sūktas 86, 87, Anuvāka 14, Maṇḍala 1, Ṛgveda).

It was Aśvinīdevas who took the well to Gotama. (Sūkta 116, Anuvaka 17, Maṇḍala 1, Ṛgveda).

GOTĪRTHA. A holy place. The Pāṇḍavas visited this place during their pilgrimage. (Śloka 3, Chapter 95, Vana Parva).

GOTRA. A son of Vasiṣṭha. Vasiṣṭha had of his wife Ūrjjā seven sons named Rajas, Gotra, Ūrddhvabāhu, Savana, Anagha, Sutapas and Śukra. These holy men were saptarṣis in the third Manvantara. (Chapter 1, Viṣṇu Purāṇa).

GOVARDHANA. A mountain of Ambāḍi (Gokula). This is believed to be a form of Kṛṣṇa. This is called Girirāja also. The residents of Ambāḍi from time immemorial used to worship Indra for getting rains. But after the advent of Kṛṣṇa there came a change in that belief. Kṛṣṇa told them that rains depended on Govardhana and it was enough if they worshipped that mountain and so the residents of Ambāḍi started worshipping the mountain. Indra got enraged at this and sent heavy rains to Ambāḍī intending to submerge it in water. But Śrī Kṛṣṇa lifted the mountain over Ambāḍi like an umbrella and saved the city from the wrath of Indra. See under 'Kṛṣṇa' for more details. (Daśama Skandha, Bhāgavata)

GOVĀSANA. A King of the country called Śivi. The daughter of this King, Devikā, married Yudhiṣṭhira in a svayaṁvara. Once Govāsana met in a duel the son of Abhibhū, King of Kāśī. (Śloka 38, Chapter 95, Droṇa Parva).

GOVĀSANA (M). A country of ancient India. The people of this place presented Yudhiṣṭhira with much wealth. (Śloka 5, Chapter 51, Sabhā Parva).

GOVIKARTĀ. The man who puts nose-bands on bullocks. (Śloka 9, Chapter 2, Virāṭa Parva).

GOVINDA. A synonym of Śrī Kṛṣṇa (Mahāviṣṇu). He got this name because he saved the people and cows of Ambāḍi by lifting the Govardhana mountain and using it as an umbrella. (Dākṣiṇātya pāṭha Chapter 38, Sabhā Parva).

GOVINDADATTA. A brahmin of great fame who resided in Bahusuvarṇaka, a city on the banks of the river Gaṅgā. His wife was a very pious woman. They had five children. Once when both the parents were away from the house a sage called Vaiśvānara came there but the children did not receive him and treat him properly. Knowing this Govindadatta abandoned all his children. (Kathāsaritsāgara, Kathāpīṭhalaṁbaka).

GOVINDAGIRI. A mountain of Krauñcadvīpa. (Śloka 19, Chapter 12, Bhīṣma Parva).

GOVINDAŚARMAN. A brahmin who lived in olden times in the city of Kāśī. (See under Siṁhadhvaja).

GOVITATA. A peculiar kind of horse sacrifice. Sage Kaṇva once made his grandson, Bharata, conduct a sacrifice of this kind. (Śloka 130, Chapter 74, Ādi Parva).

GOVRAJA. A soldier of Skandadeva. (Śloka 66, Chapter 45, Śalya Parva).

GRAHAS (PLANETS). Indians from very ancient days have maintained certain definite ideas and inferences about the planets. Though those ideas differ somewhat from the results of modern researches, the influence of the ancient ideas is discernible in all the Purāṇic texts in India. The main ideas are summarised below.

Sūrya (Sun), Candra (Moon), Śukra (Venus), Budha (Mercury), Kuja (Mars), Bṛhaspati (Jupiter), Śani (Saturn), Rāhu and Ketu are the navagrahas (the nine planets).

Sūryaścandro maṅgalaśca
Budhaścāpi bṛhaspatiḥ /
Śukraḥ śanaiścaro rāhuḥ
Ketuśceti navagrahāḥ //

Besides the above nine planets, Indian astronomers take into account a starry sphere in the sky called Saptarṣis and the star called Dhruva.

1) Sūrya. The sun gives light to all the other planets. It has an area of 50 crore yojanas and its distance from the earth is 22 crore yojanas. Śūrya exists within the universe, and is called also Mārtaṇḍa as it originated from dead (mṛta) egg (aṇḍa). Sūrya divides the sky, heaven, hell, the earth, east, west, north, south etc. from one another. According to the course of Sūrya three periods of time or 'seasons' like uttarāyaṇa, dakṣiṇāyana and viṣuvat are caused. Five months from May is the uttarāyaṇa period, five months from November the dakṣiṇāyana period, and the months of April and October are the Viṣuvats. Since during the uttarāyaṇa the sun rises up comparatively slowly (mandagati) during this period the day is longer than night. As in dakṣiṇāyana the course of the sun is quicker in pace (Śīghragati) night is longer than day, and during viṣuvat, (samagati) day and night are of equal duration.

The other planets have three positions called Jaradgava, Airāvata and Vaiśvānara, the first being the central position, the second the northern position and the third the southern position. Nine stars, Aśvinī, Bharaṇī, Kṛttikā, Rohiṇī, Mṛgaśiras, Ārdrā, Punarvasu and Puṣya occupy the Airāvata vīthī (northern position or segment). Another nine stars, Maghā, Pūrva Phalgunī, Uttara Phalgunī, Hasta, Citrā, Svātī, Viśakhā, Anurādhā and Jyeṣṭhā occupy the central position, and the last nine stars, Mūla, Purvāṣāḍha, Uttarāṣāḍha, Śravaṇa, Śraviṣṭhā, Śatabhiṣak, Pūrvaproṣṭhapada, Uttaraproṣṭhapada and Revatī occupy the southern position.

To the east, south, west and north of Mount Mahāmeru exist Devadhānikā (Indrapurī) Saṁyamanī (Yamapurī) Nimlocanī (Varuṇapurī) and Vibhāvarī (Kuberapurī) respectively. When Sūrya appears in Devadhānikā it will be dawn, when he has travelled to Saṁyamanī it will be noon, when he is in Nimlocanī it will be sunset and when he is in Vibhāvarī it will be mid-night. This is how Śurya circles the Mahāmeru. Within 15 nāḍikās (6 hours) the sun travels 2½ crores plus 2½ lakhs of yojanas. Sūrya's chariot has one wheel and twelve spokes. The wheel represents a year and the twelve spokes stand for the twelve months of the year. The chariot has also three nābhis representing the three cāturmāsyas, and six bands representing the six seasons. The height of the chariot is 36 lakhs yojanas and it has a width of 8 yojanas inside. Arūṇadeva is the charioteer, and the seven chandas are the horses. The seven chandas are, Gāyatrī, Bṛhatī, Uṣṇik, Jagatī, Triṣṭubh, Anuṣṭubh and Paṅkti).

Night is called Uṣā and day Vyuṣṭi and the time in between is Sandhyā. When Sandhyā begins the terrible Rākṣasas called Mandehas attempt to consume Sūrya. They have been granted the boon that everyday they will be dying though they may not be losing their bodies. So, everyday there rages a fierce fight between them and Sūrya. When the fight is on, noble brahmins throw up water sanctified by Gāyatrī mantra with 'Om'. The water turns into Vajrāyudha and burns the Rākṣasas to ashes. The first offering in Agnihotra is made with the recitation of the mantra beginning 'Sūryo Jyoti' because of which the sun is able to shine with thousands of rays with the result that the Rākṣasas are burned to death. The Bālakhilyas who number more than 60,000 form Sūryā's body-guard. (See under Sūrya for Purāṇic stories about him).

2) Candra. (The Moon). Candra exists at one lakh yojanas away from Sūrya, and it revolves round the earth. A cāndra month of twentyseven days is divided into twelve rāśis (houses) viz. Siṁha (Leo), Kanyā (Virgo) Tulā (Libra) Vṛścika (Scorpio) Dhanus (Sagittarius) Makara (Capricorn) Kuṁbha (Aquarius) Mīna (Pisces) Meṣa (Aries) Vṛṣabha (Taurus) Mithuna (Gemini) and Karkaṭaka (Cancer). Every month Candra stays in each of the above houses only for 2¼ days.

The full moon makes Pitṛs happy, divides the month into two halves, Kṛṣṇa Pakṣa (the dark fortnight) and Śukla Pakṣa (the bright fortnight) and functions as the very life of all living beings. The twentyseven stars from Aśvinī to Revatī are the wives of Candra. There is another view that Candra has twentyeight wives including another star called Abhijit. Candra has another name, Sarvamaya. Candra with his pleasing rays, as sweet as Amṛta (Nectar) bestows happiness on devas, Pitṛs and all other living beings. So he is called Sarvamaya.

Candra's chariot has three wheels. Ten beautiful horses white as Jasmine flowers draw the chariot. These horses also like those of Sūrya live for a Kalpa era. Because the Devas drink its digits Candra wanes into one digit (Kalā). Then Sūrya makes him wax again with one single ray of his called Suṣumnā. When only two Kalās of his remain Candra enters the orbit of Sūrya and stays there in the ray called 'amā', and that day, therefore is called amāvāsyā. And on that day Candra enters waters for the first time, and after that dwells in trees, creepers etc. While Candra is thus in trees etc. those who cut them will be committing the sin of brahmahatyā. (slaughter of a brahmin). When only a little of the 15th kalā remains on new moon day hordes of Pitṛs gather round the enfeebled Candra to drink him, and they drink the amṛta kalā, one of the two kalās still remaining with him. Thus the three classes of Pitṛs, Barhiṣadas, Saumyas and Agniṣvāttas get absolutely satisfied for one month. Thus Candra nurtures Devas in the Śukla Pakṣa and pitṛs in Kṛṣṇa Pakṣa, and grows trees, creepers etc. with life-giving water. (For details see under Candra).

3) Śukra (Venus). Śukra is an auspicious Deva very much interested in doing good to the world and making people happy. His course is also, like that of Śūrya, of three types, intense (quick), slow and of equal pace. Two-and-a-half yojanas above Sūrya, Śukra follows a course alternating in front of and behind Sūrya. Śukra never goes very far away from Śūrya, and he possesses a big chariot drawn by horses from earth. (For details see under Śukra).

4) Budha (Mercury). Though inherently auspicious Budha, in contact with inauspicious planets takes their character and becomes weak. Budha also has the three paces, quick, slow and medium. Budha moves close to Sūrya and if he moves from Sūrya storms, failure of rain etc. will be the result. He is considered to be the son of Candra. His chariot is made of wind and fire, golden in colour and is drawn by eight horses having the speed of wind. (See under Budha for more details).

5) Kuja (Mars). Kuja is two lakhs of yojanas above Budha, and remains in every rāśi (house) more or less for 45 days. When the position is affected it causes inauspicious experiences to living beings. The chariot of Kuja is made of gold, glittering and of huge size. Eight horses born from Agni draw the chariot.

6) Bṛhaspati (Jupiter). Jupiter travels 2 lakhs of yojanas away from Kuja's sphere. Though it is an auspicious planet its reverse course is productive of evil results. Jupiter travels for twelve months in every rāśi (house). His golden chariot is drawn by eight white horses. (See Bṛhaspati).

7) Śani (Saturn). Śani is 2 lakhs of yojanas away from Jupiter's sphere, and it stays in every house for twenty months. As it moves only slowly it is called Śanaiścara also. Śani is considered to be the son of Sūrya. It is an inauspicious planet. His chariot is drawn by multi-coloured horses born in the sky.

8) Rāhu. His ash-coloured chariot is drawn by eight horses as dark as beetles. Once the horses are harness-ed to the chariot it will always be running. On full moon days Rāhu starts from Sūrya and reaches Candra and returns to Sūrya on new moon days. It is an inaus-picious planet. (For details see under Rāhu).

9) Ketu. His chariot is drawn by eight horses, which have the speed of wind. It is also an inauspicious planet.

10) Saptarṣis. Thirteen crores of yojanas away from the zone of Śani exists the Saptarṣi zone. Seven maharṣis are incessantly on the move in that sphere, wishing all that is well for the whole world. (See Saptarṣis).

11) Dhruva. Thirteen crores of yojanas away from the saptarṣimaṇḍala there is a place called Viṣṇupada. Dhruva, son of Uttānapāda lives there in the company of Indra, Agni, Kaśyapa, Dharma and others. The Dhruvamaṇḍala remains there stationary like the supporting pillar of all the planets ever on the move. (See Dhruva; Devībhāgavata 8th Skandha; Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Part II).

Astrologers aver that living beings pass through the periods and positions of the following planets, viz. Ketu, Śukra (Venus) Āditya (Sun), Candra (Moon), Kuja (Mars), Rāhu, Bṛhaspati (Jupiter), Śani (Saturn) and Budha (Mercury). The following table shows how people born under different stars pass through the different daśās. The order of succession of the daśās and the period of each daśā can also be seen from this table.

Stars (Day of birth)[1]			Daśā	Years
Aśvinī (Aśvayuk)	Maghā	Mūla	Ketu	7
Bharaṇī	Pūrvā Phalgunī	Pūrvāṣāḍha	Śukra	20
Kṛttikā	Uttaraphal-gunī	Uttarāṣāḍha	Āditya	6
Rohiṇī	Hastam	Śravaṇa	Candra	10
Mṛgaśiras	Citrā	Śraviṣṭhā	Kuja	7
Ārdrā	Svātī	Śatabhiṣaj	Rāhu	18
Punarvasū	Viśākhā	Pūrvapro-ṣṭhapada	Bṛhaspati	18
Puṣya	Anurādhā	Uttarapro-ṣṭhapada	Śani	19
Āśleṣā	Jyeṣṭhā	Revatī	Budha	17

GRAHAPĪḌĀ. (Adverse planetary effects on children) Astrologers hold the view that planets affect or exercise some influence on the lives of people. According to that given hereunder is a brief description of planets, which affect a child from its very birth as also of remedial measures to keep the child free from such adverse planetary effects.

On the very day of the birth of the child a female planet called Pāpinī affects it as a result of which it will refuse all food and be lying turning its head this way and that. Pāpinī will tap the health not only of the child but of the mother also. Bali (sacrificial offering with flesh, fish and liquor as also waving with flowers and fragrant materials and lighted lamp, and smearing the child's body with sandal paste, mancetti powder, tātiri flower, bark of pachotti, are remedies against the attack of Pāpinī. Burning of buffalo dung also is useful.

On the second night after the birth of the child another female planet called Bhīṣaṇī attacks it. Symptoms of the attack are coughing, deep breath and shrinking of bodily organs. The remedies for the attack are: smearing of the body with paste made in sheep's urine of tippalī (long pepper), rāmacca, root of "Kaṭalāṭi" and sandal-wood. The child should also be exposed to the fumes got by burning the horn tooth and hairs of the cow. And, with the above-mentioned things bali should be offered to the planet.

On the third night the female planet called Ghaṇṭālī affects the child. Frequent crying, yawning, shivering and loss of appetite are the main symptoms of the attack. Smearing the body with a paste of lotus styles, añjana stone and tooth of cow and elephant mixed with goat's skin is a good remedy for the illness. The child should be treated with the fumes got by burning the leaves of nāguṇa (a tree) and bilva and bali as aforesaid should also be offered.

The child should also be subjected to the fume of tamarind and margosa leaves.

Haṁsādhikā (female planet) affects the child on the fifth night. Yawning, breathing out alone and closing of fingers are the main symptoms of the attack. Bali with

1. To find out your daśā at the time of birth, please see the above table. Any one born under any of the stars is considered born in the daśā shown in the right hand side against that star ; e. g. People born under (Aśvayuk) Aśvinī, Mṛgaśīrṣa and Mūla are born into the Ketu daśā. So with the other stars also as shown in the above table. To calculate how long the daśā into which a particular person is born will last requires some astrological skill ; also the exact time of birth should be known. A star remains dominant for about 24 hours. If a man is born under a star when half this period of dominance is over, then that man will get only half the period of the corres-ponding daśā. The portion of the daśā that the man will get is proportionate to the period of dominance of the star. For example, a man is born under the star Aśvainī (Aśvyuk) when the star is in the last quarter of the Ketu daśā. The total period of this daśā is 7 years. But the man will get only the last quarter of it, namely about $1\frac{3}{4}$ years. After that he will pass on to the next daśā—Śukra-daśā.

fish etc. should be offered to this planet, and the child smeared with a paste of goat-horn, roots of the vātyala plant, bark of pāchotti (Tilva) manayola and haritāla.

Phalkārī (female planet) attacks the child on the sixth night. Startling, fainting, waking frequently from sleep and crying much, loss of appetite and turning the body round and round are the chief symptoms of the attack. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 299).

GRĀMADEVATĀ. India is predominantly a rural country with a number of villages, and the rural folk depend mainly upon agriculture for living. Agricultural land, rain and epidemics which affect them as well as their cattle—these are the main concern of the villagers. Indians, from very ancient days, used to believe that each of the above has its own presiding devatās. Such devatās are the grāmadevatās.

Devī is the chief grāmadevatā of South India. Devī is called Durgā and Kālī also. But, Devī is worshipped in sixtyfour different forms or aspects. The gentle Devī, viz. in her gentle aspect or attitude has three forms, Kanyā, Kāmākṣī, and Mūkāmbikā. In Kerala Devī is called Bhagavatī also. Valiyaṅgāḍi Bhagavatī of Calicut is Lakṣmīdevī. Kālī temples in Karṇāṭaka are called 'Koṭṭāpuraṁ Lakṣmī Kṣetras'. There are such temples in Andhra also. Most of them are Jokulāmbikā temples. In Tamil Nadu there are grāmadevatās called Mariyamma, Kālīyamma, and Draupadīyamma. Not the Draupadī mentioned in the Mahābhārata; but the Kaṇṇakī of Cilappadikāra is the Devī worshipped in Tamil Nadu.

There are two kinds of Devīs called Saptamātṛs and Saptakanyās. Saptamātṛs have puruṣas (husbands) and saptakanyās have seven brothers for help and support. Devī pūjā is very much prevalent in South India. The custom is supposed to be as old as 5000 B.C. Idols of Devī have been unearthed from Mohanjo-daro and Harappa. Even the Buddhists worship the Devīs called Yakṣī and Hārītī. When in after years Hinduism was revitalised these grāmadevatās got promoted as the great Devatās of the epics and the Purāṇas. The Rāmāyaṇa mentions the incident of the Devī called Laṅkālakṣmī driving away Hanūmān. There are famous Kālī temples in Ujjayinī and Calcutta. It is believed that in the temple at Cidambaram also Kālī occupied a prominent place. But, according to legends, Śiva defeated Kālī in a dance competition and ousted her to her present temple at the outskirts of the city. Cāmuṇḍī is worshipped as the ancestral guardian deity in Mysore. The Kāmākṣī temple of Kāñcī, Mīnākṣī temple of Madura and Mūkāmbikā temple of North Karṇāṭaka may be cited as examples for the worship of the gentle form of Devī. Alarmel Maṅkattāyār temple at Tiruccānūr is a very important Devī temple. The 'Aditi' in the Vedas and Koṭṭravai of Tamil Saṅgha texts point to the very long past of the Devī in India. Kālidāsa and Kālamegha (a Tamil poet of the fifteenth century have worshipped Kālī. Śrī Rāmakṛṣṇa Paramahaṁsa and the great modern Tamil poet Bhāratī were devotees of Kālī.

There are also grāmadevas worshipped like the grāmadevatās. Munīśvara and Karuppan are two prominent grāmadevas. In certain villages Bhairava, Vīra, Irula, Kāṭṭeri and Noṅgi are worshipped as grāmadevas. In South Karṇāṭaka a set of Devas called Bhūtas are worshipped, Pañcuruli being one of them. Śāstā or Ayyappa is another grāmadeva. Śāstā is most popular in Kerala and in Tamil Nāḍu. Buddha also is called Śāstā. In certain places idols of Śāstā with two wives, called Pūrṇā and Puṣkalā are also found. Śabarimala Śāstā is yogamūrti (in yogic pose).

In most of the grāmadeva temples idols of the Devas are not found. A pīṭha (stool-like seat) is supoosed as the seat of the Deva and it represents the Deva also. But, in some temples weapons like the sword, the club etc. are found. Offerings to the deity in grāmakṣetras and annual festivals are common in such temples. (Nām vaṇamguṁ daivaṁgal-Tamil).

GRĀMAṆĪ. A bhūtagaṇa (set of attendants) of Śiva. Sins of those who worship this gaṇa will be removed. (Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 150, Verse 25).

GRĀMAṆĪYA. One born in the family of the Kṣatriya, who is the governor of village. Nakula defeated the grāmaṇīyas during the conquest of lands in connection with the aśvamedha of Dharmaputra. (Sabhā Parva; Chapter 32, Verse 9).

GRANTHIKA. Name assumed by Nakula during his life incognito at the Virāṭa palace. (Virāṭa Parva, Chapter 3, Verse 4).

GṚDDHRAKŪṬA. A mountain of northern India. The Lamśūras gave protection to Bṛhadratha at this mountain. (Śloka 82, Chapter 49, Śānti Parva).

GṚDDHRAPATRA. A soldier of Skandadeva, (Śloka 74, Chapter 45, Śalya Parva).

GṚDDHRAVAṬA. A mount of the Himālayas. This mount is the abode of Mahādeva. Those brahmins who visit this place would get mokṣa and those of other castes would be absolved of all sins. (Śloka 91, Chapter 84, Vana Parva).

GṚDDHRIKĀ. A bird. Kaśyapa begot of his wife Tāmrā, the six birds namely Kākī, Śyenī, Bhāsī, Gṛddhrikā, Śuci and Grīvā. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 19).

GREEK LITERATURE. Greek is one of the most important Indo-European languages. As an independent branch of the original Indo-European language Greek established itself by about 2000 B.C. Even during its earliest period Greek had four local dialects as a result of the arrival of the Greek-speaking people at different periods of time. Iolic, Ionic-Attic, Arcado Cyprean and western Greek are the four dialects. Iolese was prevalent in the Lesbos region, and this is the dialect mainly used in the poetry of Homer. The Ionic and Attic dialects were prevalent in Ionia and Attica respectively. After Homer, the major portion of Greek literature was written in this dialect. The Arcado-Cyprean dialect was used in Arcadio and Cyprus. The fourth dialect was also called Doric.

Naval traditions, commerce and political power contributed to the growth and development of Greek language and literature. In each dialect, even from the very beginning, literary efforts were made. Each of the four spoken languages very soon developed into a written language. But, in the very initial periods each of the spoken dialects continued its existence in the form of ballads and songs transferred from one man to another. It was Homer who gave those popular ballads an epic form and status and sowed the seeds of the great literature of Greece.

The golden period of Greek literature was when the city of Athens enjoyed supreme political power. Literature during the period set the model for future generations. It was during this period that Greek achieved the best in different literary forms like tragedy, comedy, lyric, elegy, history, philosophy, oratory etc. Pindar, Aeschylus, Herodotus, Sophocles-Euripides, Aristophanes, Thucydides, Plato and Demosthenes—these are distinguished names who were responsible for the great development of the literary forms referred to above.

Greek literature passed the Alexandrian, Roman and Byzantian periods before it arrived at the modern period. It was Solomos and Valoritus and others who gave impetus and inspiration to modern Greek literature.

GṚHADEVĪ. Another name of the demoness Jarā. (See under Jarā).

GṚHAPATI. A sage. There is a story in Śiva Purāṇa about this sage.

Viśvānara father of Gṛhapati was living with his wife Śuciṣmatī in a hermitage on the banks of the river Narmadā. They had no children and Śuciṣmatī, was grieved much on this account. She requested her husband find out ways and means to get a child. Viśvānara, went to Kāśī and did penance to propitiate Viśveśvara and the God appeared before him and blessed him and said: "You will soon get a son". Very soon the wife of Viśvānara delivered a child and the son was named Gṛhapati. When the child was nine years old Nārada came there once and warned them against fire. Viśvānara immediately went and did penance to propitiate Śiva and obtained from him for his son the qualities of fire also so that fire would be unable to act on him. It was on account of this that Gṛhapati when he installed an idol of Śiva at Kāśī gave it the name of Agnīśvara.

GṚHASTHA. In ancient India the life of a male person was divided into four stages, namely, Brahmacarya Gārhasthya, Vānaprastha and Sannyāsa. He who is in the second stage of life is called a Gṛhastha.

When a person marries, he becomes a Gṛhastha. The bride should have certain qualities to be an ideal wife. The girl should be only a third of the age of the male. She should not have hair either too much or too little. She should not be black or of a piṅgala hue. She should not have any of her organs extra at the time of birth. The following types of girls are to be avoided for marriage. (1) Girls bred up by low-caste people (2) girls with hair over the body (3) not born of a good family (4) sick ones (5) ill-natured ones (6) girls who use abusive language (7) with hereditary diseases (8) with śmaśru (hair on the face) (9) girls with masculine features (10) with the sound of males (11) lean ones (12) with the voice of a crow (13) with thick eyelashes (14) round eyes. Again avoid girls having hair on their legs, raised heels and those with small depressions on their cheeks when they laugh. Girls whose bodies are too bright, with white nails, red eyes and fat hands and legs are not good for marriage. Girls too tall or too short, with eyelashes touching each other, with broad and raised teeth are to be avoided. A true Gṛhastha is one who marries a girl who is separated from him by five generations on the maternal side and seven generations on the paternal side.

A true Gṛhastha should daily worship devas, cows, brahmins, scholars, old men and preceptors. He should worship sandhyā (dawn and dusk) daily and also fire. He should wear on his body leaves of Viṣṇukrānti, Karuka (couch grass), Tulasī (holy basil plant). He should appear neat and smart wearing good dress, with white flowers on his well combed head. He should never steal, speak unpleasant words to anybody nor speak an untruth even if it be pleasant. He should not openly speak about the sins of others. He should not covet another man's wife. He should not travel in a damaged vehicle nor should he sit under the shade of a tree on the banks of a river. A Gṛhastha should not mingle with such persons as (1) men hated by the people (2) outcastes from society (3) insane men (4) those having a great number of enemies (5) those who torment others (6) prostitutes (7) husbands of prostitutes (8) those who use abusive language (9) those who tell lies (10) spendthrifts (11) scandalmongers and (12) rogues. Never travel alone. He should not bathe against the flow in a river. Never enter a house on fire nor climb to the extreme top of trees. He should not grind his teeth, squeeze out his nose, yawn without covering the mouth. breathe or spit, with the face covered, laugh noisily, breathe out with a sound, bite the teeth, pinch grasses or write or draw on the ground (Aṁśa 3, Viṣṇu Purāṇa).

GRĪVĀ. A daughter in bird form born to Kaśyapaprajāpati by his wife Tāmrā. Grīvā had the following sisters, Kākī, Śyenī, Bhāsī, Gṛddhrikā and Śuci, all birds. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 1).

GṚTSAMADA I. A celebrated sage. He was the son of a sage called Vītahavya. Gṛtsamada was equal to Bṛhaspati and a great friend of Indra. Once this sage lectured to Yudhiṣṭhira on the glory of Śiva. Many have mistaken Gṛtsamada for Indra. Once the asuras bound him by ropes mistaking him for Indra. He had a son named Kucetā. (For more details see under Variṣṭhā) (Chapters 18 and 30, Anuśāsana Parva).

GṚTSAMADA II. A King of the Bhārgava dynasty. He was the son of King Suhotra. Gṛtsamada had two brothers. Kāśya and Kuśa, and a son, Śunaka. (9th Skandha, Bhāgavata).

GṚTSAMADA III. The son born to Indra of Mukundā. There is the following story about him in Gaṇeśa Purāṇa.

Once when Rukmāṅgada was out from the palace, Indra, in the guise of Rukmāṅgada, went to Mukundā, wife of Rukmāṅgada, and slept with her who was at that time sexually hungry. She delivered a child in due course. This boy was Gṛtsamada. He grew into a great scholar. Nobody was able to defeat him in any verbal duel. Once Gṛtsamada went to the palace of the king of Magadha to attend a Śrāddha (an offering to the manes) along with Vasiṣṭha and others. Atri Maharṣi who was present there then spoke slightingly of Gṛtsamada's parentage and Gṛtsamada coming home questioned his mother. The mother then told him what had happened and Gṛtsamada getting angry at the immoral act committed by his mother cursed her and said "May you be a Kaṇṭaka tree". Mukundā also did not leave her son free. She cursed him thus "You will have a demon as your son". But Gṛtsamada went and did penance to propitiate Gaṇapati and got Brāhmaṇya.

GṚTSAPATI. He was the son of Kapila, a King of the Pūru dynasty. He had a brother called Kauśika. Gṛtsapati had sons in all the four castes, namely, Brāhmaṇa, Kṣatriya, Vaiśya and Śūdra. (Chapter 277, Agni Purāṇa).

GUḌĀKEŚA. Another name of Arjuna. He got the name because he conquered sleep. (Śloka 8, Chapter 138, Ādi Parva).

GŪḌHASENA. A King of the country of Puṣkarāvatī.

GUHA. King of the country of Niṣādas alias Śṛṅgiverapura, on the banks of the river Gaṅgā. Śrī Rāma when he went on exile to the forests went to the residence of Guha accompanied by Lakṣmaṇa and Sītā. Guha, a devotee of Rāma, received them with respect offering them many kinds of fruits and roots to eat. But Śrī Rāma said that it was not proper to accept fruits and roots and so he drank only pure water from him. But Guha was asked to feed his horse. At night when Lakṣmaṇa stood watch over Rāma and Sītā, Guha volunteered to stand guard but Lakṣmaṇa refused to accept the offer. So Guha kept company with Lakṣmaṇa and both of them spent the night talking to each other. In the morning as per Rāma's request Guha brought a canoe and Guha himself took Rāma, Lakṣmaṇa and Sītā to the other side of the river. (Sarga 50, Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa, Ayodhyā Kāṇḍa).

Guha is seen next when Bharata comes to the forest in search of Rāma. When Bharata returned from Kekaya he went in search of Śrī Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa and came to Guha in Śṛṅgiverapura. Guha then gave Bharata all available information regarding Śrī Rāma. Guha then sent the Dāśa army along with Bharata. (Sarga 84, Ayodhyā Kāṇḍa, Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa).

Guha, chief of Śṛṅgiverapura, spent the night with Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa under an Oka tree. (Chaper 6, Agni Purāṇa).

GUHA (S). A tribe of people of ancient India. Āndhras, Pulindas, Cucukas, Guhas, Śabaras and Bhadras are some of the tribes of the south. (Śloka 42, Chapter 207, Śānti Parva).

GUHASENA. See under Devasmitā.

GUHYAKA. A Yakṣa. (A division of Yakṣas who were prominent members of the court of Kubera). They were present at the marriage of Draupadī. (Śloka 7, Chapter 186, Ādi Parva).

Other details.

(i) The palace of Kubera in the sky is borne by Guhyakas. (Śloka 3, Chapter 10, Sabhā Parva).

(ii) Bhīmasena slew many Guhyakas on the mountain of Gandhamādana. (Śloka 55, Chapter 11, Śalya Parva).

(iii) Some of the soldiers who died in the Mahābhārata battle went to the world of the Guhyakas. (Śloka 23, Chapter 4, Svargārohaṇa Parva).

GULIKA. A hunter who was given mokṣa by the sage Uttaṅga. This hunter once made an attempt to steal the gold plates on the roof of the Viṣṇu temple at the palace of Sauvīra. Uttaṅga was present at the temple then and, Gulika tried to kill the sage. The sage cursed him and killed him. Taking pity on him later Uttaṅga sprinkled some water from the river Gaṅgā, on him and the hunter attained Vaikuṇṭha. (Nāradīya Purāna).

GUṆA. See under Pattu (Ten).

GUṆĀḌHYA. He is the author of the celebrated Bṛhatkathā which is a precious mine of Sanskrit Literature. Guṇāḍhya had written this in satanic (paiśācika) language difficult for ordinary people to read or understand. This was translated into Sanskrit by the poet Kṣemendra in a book called Bṛhatkathāmañjarī. This was the first translation and it was in an abridged form. Somadeva made a more elaborate translation and it is this translation that is now known as the Kathāsaritsāgara.

Guṇāḍhya is believed to be an incarnation of the Śivapārṣada, Mālyavān. There is a story behind Mālyavān being cursed and made to be born as man by Pārvatī. Once Pārvatī worried Śiva to tell her a story original and interesting and not heard of by anybody before. Placing Nandikeśa at the door and instructing him not to allow anybody inside Śiva started narrating the story of the Vidyādharas to Pārvatī. At that time Puṣpadanta, chief of the genie-guards of Śiva who was at liberty to go to the presence of Śiva at any time, came there and heedless of the protests of Nandikeśa entered the room. There he found Śiva telling a story to Pārvatī and she was hearing the same with rapt attention. The story was so interesting that Puṣpadanta also heard it standing concealed in a place in the room. After having heard the whole story Puṣpadanta went back unnoticed and told the story to his wife, Jayā. Jayā on another occasion told the story to Pārvatī and the latter was taken aback and she went to Śiva and complained: "Your Lordship told me that the story was unique, not heard of before by anybody. But even Jayā knows it." And she wept with disappointment. Then Śiva stood in meditation for sometime, and knew how Puṣpadanta had entered the room unnoticed and how he had told the story he had heard to Jayā. Śiva explained this to Pārvatī and she immediately sent word for Puṣpadanta who came trembling and confessed everything. Pārvatī then cursed Puṣpadanta and also Mālyavān who came to speak on behalf of Puṣpadanta and made them men. They begged for relief from the curse and then she said, "Long ago Vaiśravaṇa cursed a Yakṣa named Supratīka and converted him into a devil named Kāṇabhūti. This devil is now living in the deep forests on the Vindhya mountains. When you talk with him you will become your old selves again. Puṣpadanta should first tell the story he has heard from Śiva to Kāṇabhūti and then he will be relieved from the curse. Kāṇabhūti will then tell Mālyavān many stories. Then Kāṇabhūti will get release from the curse. Mālyavān should make public all the stories he had heard from Kāṇabhūti and then he will also get release from the curse." Accordingly Puṣpadanta was born as Vararuci in the city of Kauśāṁbī and Mālyavān as Guṇāḍhya in the city of Supratiṣṭhita. (For details see under Vararuci).

The story of how Supratīka became Kāṇabhūti is this: The Yakṣa, Supratīka, got friendly with a demon named Śūlaśiras and they moved about freely as chums. Vaiśravaṇa did not like this and he cursed Supratīka and converted him into a satan. At once, Dīrghajaṅgha, elder brother of Supratīka, came and begged for relief. Vaiśravaṇa then said: "Puṣpadanta will be born on the earth by a curse as man and he will one day come and tell Supratīka many great stories. After hearing them he should narrate them to Mālyavān who will then be born on the earth as man. Supratīka will then get release from the curse and become his old self again". Supratīka was born in the forests of Vindhya as Kāṇabhūti.

This is the story of the birth of Guṇāḍhya. There is a city called Supratiṣṭhita in the country of Pratiṣṭhāna and there lived a brahmin named Somaśarmā. He had two sons, Vatsa and Gulmaka and a daughter named Śrutārthā. Before long the parents died and Śrutārthā grew up under the protection of her brothers. Kīrtisena, brother of Vāsuki, married her by gāndharva rites and Guṇāḍhya was the child born to them.

Even while he was a boy he went to the south for his education and there from a brahmin he studied all arts and sciences. When he completed his studies he started on a tour and at that time became the minister of a king called Sātavāhana. He married from there. One day his (Sātavāhana's) wife rebuked the king when the latter made some linguistic errors and Sātavāhana became dejected and moody from that day onwards. Then there came to the court of the King a brahmin named Śarvavarman who promised to make the King proficient in languages within six months. But Guṇāḍhya said that it was not possible to do so within six months. They made a bet. Guṇāḍhya swore that if Śarvavarman would teach the King the Śabdaśāstra (science of language-sounds) within six months he (Guṇāḍhya) would abandon his knowledge of Sanskrit, Prakrit and local language. On the other hand if Śarvavarmā failed to accomplish the feat the latter should wear on his head for twelve years the chappals of Guṇāḍhya. Śarvavarman agreed and went to do penance to please Subrahmaṇya. Subrahmaṇya granted him a boon by the power of which Śarvavarman made Sātavāhana a scholar in Sanskrit. Defeated, Guṇāḍhya abandoned his knowledge of all languages and bidding adieu to the King by gestures left for the Vindhyan forests.

When Guṇāḍhya went to the forests Kāṇabhūti, King of the Satans was not in his place. He heard the satans speaking in their peculiar language and intelligent that he was he picked up the language. and when Kāṇabhūti came he spoke to him in his own language. Kāṇabhūti told in the satanic language the great stories of seven Vidyādharas. Guṇāḍhya took seven years to write the stories in the satanic language and compile them into seven lakhs of granthas to form a Mahākāvya. There were no writing materials available for him and Guṇāḍhya wrote them all on leaves using blood and twigs. When he started reading his book all the devas assembled in the sky to hear it. On hearing it Kāṇabhūti got release from the curse. It is this book containing seven lakhs of granthas that is called the Bṛhatkathā.

Guṇāḍhya then thought of how to keep alive such an interesting and gigantic book and then two of his companions Guṇadeva and Nandideva suggested to him to dedicate the book to the King, Sātavāhana. Guṇāḍhya agreed to that and the two disciples took the book to the King. The King read the whole story. But did not like it. It was very elaborate. The language was satanic. It was written with blood. The King looked at the book with contempt.

When the disciples found that the King was not in favour of the work, they took it back to Guṇādhya. Guṇāḍhya felt a great dejection. He went to a hillock nearby with his disciples and made a big fire-pit. He set aside the story of the Vidyādhara named Naravāhanadatta composed of a lakh of granthas for the use of his disciples and then started putting into the fire-pit the rest, reading aloud each leaf before he put it into the fire. The sad disciples watched it weeping. Even the wild animals of the forest flocked to the place and stood there listening to Guṇāḍhya. At that time Sātavāhana became a sick man. The physicians of the palace said that the illness was caused by the dry flesh he was taking. The cook was called in and he accused the hunters who supplied them with flesh daily. The hunters were questioned and they informed the King that only such flesh was available since all the beasts and birds were standing without food listening to a man who was reading something from a leaf and then burning it in a fire-pit before him. Sātavāhana immediately went to the place guided by the hunters. There to his astonishment he found Guṇāḍhya sitting before a fire-pit surrounded by weeping beasts and birds and throwing leaves of his book one by one into the fire after reading each before it was put into the fire. Sātavāhana ran to him and prostrated before him. Guṇāḍhya then told Sātavāhana his story in satanic language beginning from the curse on Puṣpadanta down to his destroying his own work in the fire.

His disciples translated his talk to the King. The King was awe-stricken and he asked for the granthas. But by that time he had already burnt six lakhs of granthas containing six stories. He gave to the King the remaining one lakh of granthas. After that, bidding farewell to the King, Guṇāḍhya jumped into the fire and abandoned his life on earth and went to the presence of Śiva.

King Sātavāhana accompanied by the disciples of Guṅāḍhya came to his palace carrying the 'Bṛhatkathā' containing the story of Naravāhanadatta. He gave presents to Guṇadeva and Nandideva who explained to him the book in Sanskrit. King Sātavāhana added a preface to the book to explain to the public how the book came to be written in satanic language. The book very soon got world fame. (Pīṭhānulaṁbaka Kathāsarit sāgara).

GUṆAKEŚĪ. Daughter of Mātali, charioteer of Indra. She was more beautiful and well-behaved than many other girls. Mātali went about in search of a suitable husband for her in all the three worlds. At last he met Nārada going to the presence of Kubera. He told Nārada about this and Nārada took Mātali to Pātālaloka to search for a suitable bridegroom. Then they found out a serpent boy named Sumukha (good looking) worthy of his name who was the grandson of Āryaka and son of Cikura born of the family of Airāvata. But Sumukha was in danger at that time. Garuḍa had taken a vow that he would eat Sumukha the next month. Āryaka told Nārada about this. Nārada took Sumukha to the court of Indra. Mahāviṣṇu was also present there. When Nārada told the story there Indra blessed Sumukha and granted him long life. This made Garuḍa angry and he went to the court of Indra and rebuked Indra. Mahāviṣṇu who was present there then did not like this act of Garuḍa and he called the latter to his side and asked him whether he could bear the weight of one of his arms. With arrogance Garuḍa said 'yes' and Viṣṇu then placed one of his arms on the shoulder of Garuḍa But Garuḍa found the weight unbearable and begged pardon of Viṣṇu, bereft of all his arrogance. The marriage of Sumukha with Guṇakeśī was then conducted. (Chapters 97 to 105. Udyoga Parva.)

GUṆAMUKHYĀ. A celestial maiden who took part in the birthday celebrations of Arjuna. She gave a dance there then. (Śloka 61, Chapter 122, Ādi Parva).

GUṆANIDHI. A Purāṇic character who lived a sinful life and yet attained Svarga. In the country of Kosala there was once a noble brahmin named Girinātha who was rich, erudite and well-versed in the Vedas. Considering his greatness people called him Girināthadīkṣita. Guṇanidhi was his son.

When Guṇanidhi grew up he started his education under a preceptor called Sudhiṣṇa. Sudhiṣṇa had a wife named Muktāvalī. After some time Guṇanidhi started having clandestine relations with Muktāvalī. This developed so much that Guṇanidhi gave poison to his guru and killed him. His parents came to know of this and they came and reprimanded him. Evil-natured Guṇanidhi thought that the presence of his parents would be an annoyance to him in future. So Guṇanidhi and Muktāvalī planned together to kill his parents and one day they poisoned them.

After some time Guṇanidhi and his wife lost all they had and gradually Guṇanidhi turned himself into a thief and drunkard. Nobody in the village liked the couple and all the villagers combined together and sent the couple away from the place. Guṇanidhi and Muktāvalī went to the forests and there they started a life of looting the travellers. After some years of a sinful life Guṇanidhi one day died lying beneath a Rudrākṣa tree. Servants of both Yama and Śiva came to claim the soul of Guṇanidhi. The servants of Yama said that the right place of Guṇanidhi the sinner, was in hell but the servants of Śiva said that even if he was a great sinner his place was in heaven because he died lying beneath a Rudrākṣa tree. In the end the Śivadūtas won and took Guṇanidhi to heaven.

This story was once told by Śiva himself to demonstrate the glory of Rudrākṣa. (Skandha 11, Devī Bhāgavata)

GUṆAŚARMAN. A character of the Purāṇas well versed in all arts and sciences. He was the son of the brahmin Ādityaśarman of Ujjayinī. The birth of Guṇaśarman bears a story. Once Ādityaśarman went to the forests and by his spiritual powers made Sulocanā, a celestial nymph, to merge with him. A son was born to them and he was named Guṇaśarman. Ādityaśarman became a deva. Even from boyhood he became very erudite. Once Indra came to see Ādityaśarman. Ādityaśarman who was in deep thoughts did not see Indra and so did not rise up when Indra came. Indra felt insulted and cursed him to be born again on Earth. Ādityaśarman prostrated before Indra and asked for pardon. Indra then said that it would be enough if his son was born on Earth in his stead. So Guṇaśarman was born on Earth to bear the curse of his father.

At that time Ujjayinī was being ruled over by a King called Mahāsena. He had a very beautiful wife named Aśokavatī. Guṇaśarman became gradually an intimate friend of the King. Knowing that Guṇaśarman was well versed in all arts the King and queen asked him to give them a performance in dancing. The dance was so excellent that the King engaged Guṇaśarman to teach dancing to Aśokavatī.

Once a royal attendant tried to give poisoned food to the King and Guṇaśarman finding it out saved the King. From that day onwards the King loved him more. When once Mahāsena was imprisoned by his enemies Guṇaśarman by his magic powers released him. In return for this help the King gave Guṇaśarman a thousand villages.

Then to the misfortune of all Aśokavatī fell in love with Guṇaśarman. Guṇaśarman bluntly refused her love. Embittered at this Aśokavatī started talking ill of Guṇaśarman and the King at last sent Guṇaśarman out from the palace. The servants of the King tried to capture him and put him into prison but Guṇaśarman escaped from the royal servants by his magic powers.

He then went and stayed in the house of a brahmin named Agnidattā and married his daughter, Sundari. Then on the advice of the brahmin Guṇaśraman did penance to propitiate Subrahmaṇya and got many more powers from him. Guṇaśarman equipped with these additional powers conquered Mahāsena and his country and became King there. He then sent Mahāsena and his wife Aśokavatī, out from the country. (Sūryaprabhālaṁbaka, Taraṅga 6, Kathāsaritsāgara).

GUṆAVARĀ. A heroine, devoted to her husband, in the ancient literature of India. There is a story in Kathāsaritsāgara describing the depth of her devotion to her husband.

Guṇavarā was the queen of Vīrabhuja, King of the country of Vardhamāna. He had besides Guṇavarā ninetynine other wives. But none had any children. So, the King asked the chief physician of the state to suggest a way to remedy this. The physician asked for a white and horned goat to be brought and he then made with its flesh a preparation. Then sprinkling over it a special medicinal dust, he gave it to the wives to eat. But Guṇavarā who never left her husband for a moment came late to take the preparation and by the time she came the others had already consumed the whole lot. Then by an order of the King the horns of the goat were made into a similar preparation and Guṇavarā took it with the dust sprinkled over it. All the wives got a child each. Guṇavarā's son was named Śṛṅgabhuja.

All the other wives of Vīrabhuja became jealous of Guṇavarā. They told the King that Guṇavarā was in love with a servant of the palace. The King did not believe it. But he thought he would test her. The King called the servant in question and accusing him of having committed the murder of a brahmin sent him away from the state on a pilgrimage. Sorrow-stricken the servant set out for the pilgrimage. The King then approached Guṇavarā and said that a sannyāsin had declared that he, the King, would lose his crown if one of his wives was not put in a cell underground. Guṇavarā who adored her husband readily agreed to live underground.

The other wives were satisfied and yet they wanted to send away her son, Śṛṅgabhuja also from the palace. One day when all the children were playing in the court-yard a stork came and sat perched on the top of the palace. The princes attempted to catch hold of it. A sannyāsin who came there then informed the children that the stork was none other than Agniśikha, a demon, who had come there to capture and take away the children. All the children then tried to drop it down by arrows. But none succeeded. Then Śṛṅgabhuja took a golden arrow from the palace and sent it against the bird. The arrow struck the demon but the bird flew away carrying the golden arrow.

The other princes found it as an opportunity to rebuke Śṛṅgabhuja and they, led by Nirvāsabhuja, reproached him for losing the golden arrow. Unable to bear their insult Śṛṅgabhuja went after the stork following the path of the blood drops which fell on the ground from the wound. At last he reached Dhūmapura, the land of Agniśikha. There he fell in love with Rūpaśikhā, the daughter of Agniśikha. They were soon married and yet Agniśikha gave Śṛṅgabhuja great trouble. At last Śṛṅgabhuja and Rūpaśikhā took the golden arrow and eloped from the place one night and reached the city of Vardhamāna. Agniśikha followed them but the magic powers of Rūpaśikhā made him turn back. When King Vīrabhuja saw his son Śṛṅgabhuja he was extremely happy. The King then released Guṇavarā from the dungeon and praised her for her devotion to her husband. He loved her more and treated her with greater affection than before. At that time the servant who had been sent away also returned. (Taraṅga 5, Ratnaprabhālaṁbaka, Kathāsaritsāgara).

GUṆĀVARĀ. A celestial lady. This lady was present at the birthday celebration of Arjuna and gave there then a performance in dancing. (Śloka 61, Chapter 122, Ādi Parva).

GUṆAVARMAN. Ādityasena, King of Ujjayinī, had a wife named Tejasvatī. Guṇavarman was the father of Tejasvatī. (Taraṅga 4, Lāvāṇakalaṁbaka, Kathāsaritsāgara).

GUṆAVATĪ I. Mother of Mandodarī (See under Mandodarī).

GUṆAVATĪ II. Daughter born to Sunābha, younger brother of Vajranābha. She had an elder sister named Candramatī. Prabhāvatī, daughter of Vajranābha, was married to Pradyumna, son of Śrī Kṛṣṇa. One day when Prabhāvatī and Pradyumna were engaged in amorous conversation Guṇavatī and Candramatī came to them and they expressed a desire to get husbands for themselves from among the Yādavas. Prabhāvatī advised Candramatī to marry Gada, brother of Kṛṣṇa and Guṇavatī to marry Sāṁba, son of Kṛṣṇa. (Chapter 94. Harivaṁśa).

GUṆĀVATĪ. A river. Once Paraśurāma slew some Kṣatriyas on the northern banks of this river. (Śloka 8, Chapter 70, Droṇa Parva).

GUPTA. A caste appellation. In ancient India appellations to the names were put to distinguish one caste from another. So 'Śarmā' was added to a brahmin name, 'Varmā' to a Kṣatriya name 'Gupta' to a Vaiṣya name and 'Dāsa' to a Śūdra name. Such appellations were considered to be a mark of nobility in those olden days. (Chapter 153, Agni Purāṇa).

GUPTAKA. A prince of the country of Sauvīra. He was a friend of the famous Jayadratha. In the great battle he was killed by Arjuna. (Śloka 27, Chapter 271, Vana Parva).

GŪRṆIKĀ. A companion of Devayānī. (Chapter 78, Ādi Parva).

GURU. The following five persons are to be considered as gurus: Father, mother, Preceptor, Agni (Fire) and Ātman (soul), (Śloka 27, Chapter 214, Vana Parva).

GURUDĀRA. A son of Garuḍa. (Śloka 13, Chapter 101, Udyoga Parva).

GURUPARAMPARĀ. The origin of the Vedas and the lineage of Gurus is given below:

1) Origin of the Vedas. At the time of creation the Veda was born from the face of God. It contained a lakh of granthas with four pādas like Ṛk. From the Veda were born the ten yajñas. The Veda was originally one. It was Vyāsa who divided it into four divisions resulting in the four Vedas.

Vyāsa divided the Vedas thus: When Brahmā commanded Vyāsa to divide the Vedas into divisions he first selected four disciples who could see the end of the Vedas. He accepted Paila to study Ṛgveda, Vaiśaṁpāyana to study Yajurveda, Jaimini to study Sāmaveda and Sumantu to study Atharvaveda. Besides these he selected the highly intelligent Romaharṣaṇa alias Sūta to study the Itihāsas and Purāṇas.

At first, the Veda was one. Vyāsa divided it into four. He based the division on the cāturhotra, performance of four hotṛs. He arranged the performance of Adhvaryu as Yajus, that of hotṛ as Ṛks, that of Udgātṛ as Sāmans and that of Brahmā as Atharvans. Then he separated the Ṛks to form Ṛgveda, Yajus to form Yajurveda and Sāmans to form Sāmaveda. He devoted Atharvaveda to specify the rites and duties of Kings and the deeds of Brahmā. Vedavyāsa thus split the single Veda tree into four and from there arose later a forest of Veda trees.

2) The saints of Ṛgveda. Paila divided Ṛgveda into two saṁhitās and gave one each to Indrapramati and Bāṣkala. Sage Bāṣkala divided his Saṁhitā again into four and taught it to four of his disciples, Bodhi, Ādimādhava, Yājñavalkya and Parāśara. Indrapramati without splitting his saṁhitā taught it to his renowned son, Māṇḍūkeya. The branch of Indrapramati thus went down into circulation through the disciples of Māṇḍūkeya and the disciples of the disciples and so on. Vedamitra of Śakalya gotra, one sage in the line of the disciples of Māṇḍūkeya, split the saṁhitā into five, and taught it to Mudgala, Gomukha, Vātsya, Śālīya and Śarīra. Śākapūrṇa a colleague of Vedamitra divided it into three and added a division to it by composing a Nirukta of his own. He taught them to Vaitālika, Balāka and Krauñca. This was how the Indrapramati Saṁhitā produced branches and sub-branches. Bāṣkala divided his saṁhitā into another set of three and taught it to Kālāyani, Gārgya, and Kathājava. The sages mentioned above are the ones who spread Ṛgveda in the world.

3) Saints of Yajurveda. Vaiśampāyana, disciple of Veda Vyāsa, made twentyseven divisions of Yajurveda and taught them to his disciples. Among those disciples was Yājñavalkya, son of Brahmarāta. The branch Taittirīya originated from Yājñavalkya.

4) The Taittirīya branch. Once all the sages learned in the Vedas made a decision. He who does not attend the Brahmasamāja meeting held at the mountain of Mahāmeru will be tainted with the sin of Brahmahatyā (murder of a brahmin). At one time Vaiśampāyana was not able to attend and so was charged with the sin of Brahmahatyā. He called his disciples to his side and told them that they should observe a Vrata to absolve Vaiśampāyana of his sin. Then one of his disciples, Yājñavalkya, stood up and said that he would observe the vrata alone and that there was no need of anybody else in that matter. When asked why he said so he replied that none of the colleagues of his was so brilliant and majestic as he was. Vaiśampāyana did not like this arrogance of Yājñavalkya and so angrily commanded Yājñavalkya to give back all that had been taught to him by Vaiśampāyana. Obeying orders Yājñavalkya vomited all the yajus and went away from the place. The other sages taking the form of the bird, Tittiri, accepted the vomited yajus. Therefore that branch of the Veda got the name of Taittirīya and those sages were known as the Taittirīyas.

5) Ayātayāma(s). On his leaving Vaiśampāyana Yājñavalkya put into operation a new set of Yajus called Ayātayāma unknown even to Vaiśampāyana. This was how it happened. Yājñavalkya after leaving the Brahmasamāja went and did penance to propitiate the Sun-god. The Sun appeared before him in the form of a horse. Yājñavalkya then requested him to grant him new yajus unknown even to Vaiśampāyana. The Sun then remaining in the shape of the horse (Vāji) itself imparted to him instructions on a new set of Yajus called Ayātayāma which were not known to anybody else, even to Vaiśampāyana. Those who studied it were called Vājis. There are fifteen branches of the Vājis, Kānnu being one of them. All were put into operation by Yājñavalkya.

6) The Sannyāsins of Sāmaveda. Vedavyāsa taught Sāmaveda to Jaimini. Jaimini had a son, Sumantu, and he in turn had a son named Sutva. Sumantu and Sutva were very intelligent and they studied one branch each of the Vedas. Sutva had a son, Sukarmā, and he divided Sāmavedasaṁhitā into a thousand branches. Sukarmā had two disciples: Hiraṇyanābha and Pauṣpiñji, and both of them studied all the thousand divisions of the Sāmaveda. The five hundred disciples of Hiraṇyanābha who came from the north and studied Sāmaveda were called Udīcya Sāmagas (those come from the north). Another five hundred came from the east and studied Sāmavedasaṁhitā from Hiraṇyanābha and they were called Prācya sāmagas. (Hiraṇyanābha is known as Kauśalya also.) Pauṣpiñji had four disciples : Logākṣi, Kauthumi, Kakṣīvān and Lāṅgali. These four and their disciples split their saṁhitās and increased them. Kṛti, one of the disciples of Hiraṇyanābha, taught his disciples twentyfour saṁhitās. They also split them into many more and made the Sāmaveda bigger.

7) The saints of Atharvaveda. Vyāsa taught Atharvaveda to Sumantu. Sage Sumantu taught it to his disciple Kabandha first. Kabandha split it into two and gave one each to his disciples: Devādarśa and Pathya. Deva had four disciples: Medhā Brahmabali, Śāntakāyani and Pippalāda. Pathya had three: Jābāli, Kumuda and Śaunaka. All these made saṁhitās. Śaunaka split his saṁhitā into two and taught one to Badru and another to Saindhava. Muñjikeśa learnt it from Saindhava. He split it into two first and then again into three. The five saṁhitās of Muñjikeśa namely, Nakṣatrakalpa, Vedakalpa, Saṁhitākalpa, Āṅgirasakalpa and Śāntikalpa are the most important divisions of the Atharvaveda. The Nakṣatrakalpa contains methods of worshipping Nakṣatras; the Vedakalpa contains the rites of the Ṛtvik Brahmā, and the Saṁhitākalpa contains the science of the care of horses and elephants.

8) Purāṇas. Vyāsa compiled a Purāṇa saṁhitā using speeches, appendices, poems and Kalpanirṇayas and taught it to Romaharṣaṇa alias Sūta. Sūta had six disciples named Sumati, Agnivarcas, Mitrāyus, Śāṁśapāyana, Akṛtavraṇa, and Sāvarṇi. Akṛtavraṇa, Sāvarṇi and Śāṁśapāyana born of Kaśyapagotra have themselves made Purāṇasaṁhitās. There is another saṁhitā composed by Romaharṣaṇa based on the saṁhitās made by the above three.

Viṣṇu Purāṇa is based on the latter four saṁhitās. There are eighteen Purāṇas, namely, Āgneya, Brāhma, Brahmāṇḍa, Brahmavaivarta, Bhāgavata, Bhaviṣya, Garuḍa, Kūrma, Liṅga, Mārkaṇḍeya, Matsya, Nāradīya, Padma, Śiva, Skanda, Vāmana, Varāha and Viṣṇu. There are eighteen sub Purāṇas also. In all these are described the creation, the deluge, the dynasties of the devas, history of kingly dynasties, changes of generations etc. (Aṁśa 3, Viṣṇu Purāṇa; 12th Skandha, Bhāgavata).

GULMA. See under Akṣauhiṇī.

GULMAKA. The uncle of Guṇāḍhya. Guṇāḍhya is the author of the famous book 'Bṛhatkathā'. In the city of Supratiṣṭhita there was a brahmin named Somaśarmā who had three children, namely, Vatsa, Gulmaka and Śrutārtha. Guṇāḍhya was the son of Śrutārtha (Taraṅga 6, Kathāpīṭhalambaka, Kathāsaritsāgara).

H

H (ह). This letter has two meanings : (1) Understanding (2) Rudra. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 348).

HĀHĀ. A Gandharva, the son of Kaśyapaprajāpati by his wife Pradhā. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 122, Verse 59).

Other Information. (1) Hāhā was present at the birthday celebrations of Arjuna. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 122, Verse 59).

(2) He lives in Kubera's assembly. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 10, Verse 25).

(3) Hāhā welcomed Arjuna in the Devaloka when once he visited the place. (Vana Parva, Chapter 43. Verse 14).

HAIHAYA. A King, the son of Vatsa, born in the dynasty of Śaryāti. He was the founder of the Haihaya dynasty. He became a brahmin by choosing Sage Bhṛgu as his Preceptor. He was also known as Vītahavya. (Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 30, Verses 54-57).

HAIMAVATA. A region north of the Himālayas made famous in the Purāṇas. Śukabrahmarṣi on his way from Mahāmeru to Mithilāpurī crossed this region. (Śānti Parva, Chapter 325, Verse 14).

HAIMAVATĪ I. A synonym of river Śatadru, (See under Śatadru).

HAIMAVATĪ II. A wife of Viśvāmitra. (Udyoga Parva, Chapter 117, Verse 13).

HAIMAVATĪ III. A wife of Śrī Kṛṣṇa. When Kṛṣṇa was cremated Haimavatī also ended her life in the funeral pyre. (Mausala Parva, Chapter 7, Verse 73).

HAIRAṆYAVATĪ. A river which flowed along Hiraṇmaya, a Purāṇic region. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 8, Verse 5).

HALADHARA. A synonym of Balarāma. (See under Balabhadrarāma).

HĀLĀHALA(S) A sect of asuras, who were the first creation of the Trimūrtis, when they also possessed the power of creation. The Hālāhalas, who became very powerful within a short period of time earned from Brahmā all the boons they wanted, and they then conquered the three worlds. At last they barricaded Kailāsa and Vaikuṇṭha also, and Hariharas (Viṣṇu and Śiva) defeated them after a fierce fight lasting for a thousand years. The Hariharas returned to their abodes and spoke about their achievements. Their wives laughed at the bravado of their husbands. At this Mahāviṣṇu got angry with Lakṣmī and Śiva with Pārvatī, and in protest the Devīs left their husbands. From that day onwards Viṣṇu and Śiva began losing their power. Brahmā, who divined the reason for the growing weakness of Viṣṇu and Śiva persuaded Lakṣmī and Pārvatī to return to their husbands so that they might regain their former power. Yet, Brahmā told them that in future he alone would handle the work of creation. Thus was Viṣṇu and Śiva divested of their right to creation. (Devī Bhāgavata, 7th Skandha).

HALĀYUDHA. A Sanskrit poet who lived in the 10th century A.D. A mahākāvya called Kavirahasya is his most important work. The hero in the great poem is Kṛṣṇa III. A King of the Rāṣṭrakūṭa dynasty, and poet Halāyudha was a courtier of his.

HALIKA. A prominent nāga born in the Kaśyapa dynasty. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 15).

HALIMĀ. One of the Saptamātṛs (seven mothers). (Vana Parva, Chapter 22, Verse 10).

HALĪMAKA. A nāga born in the family of Vāsuki. He was burnt to death in the serpent yajña of Janamejaya. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 57, Verse 5).

HAMSA I. An incarnation of Mahā Viṣṇu in Kṛtayuga. He instructed great sages like Sanaka on yoga in the presence of Brahmā. He is also called yajña. (Bhāgavata 11th Skandha). Haṁsa, who was a prajāpati as well advised the Sādhyadevas about the means to attain salvation and the advice is known as Haṁsagītā. (Śānti Parva, Chapter 288).

HAMSA II. A son born to Kaśyapa of his wife, Ariṣṭā. He was a Gandharva and it is believed that Dhṛtarāṣṭra was an aṁśāvatāra of this Gandharva. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 6, See also under Aṁśāvatāra).

HAMSA III.

1) General. A minister of Jarāsandha. Haṁsa and Ḍiṁbhaka were the sons of Brahmadatta, the chief of Sālva, and they were adepts in archery. Paraśurāma was their preceptor. (Harivaṁśa 3, 103). The Mahābhārata calls Haṁsa's brother Ḍibhaka.

2) Education. Vicakra and Janārdana were intimate friends of Haṁsa from their very infancy, of whom Janārdana was the son of Mitrasaha, a friend of Brahmadatta. Haṁsa, Ḍimbhaka and Janārdana had their education together and their marriages also were conducted at the same time. After some time Śiva presented them many weapons like Rudrāstra, Maheśvarāstra and Brahmaśirāstra, and also two attendants for self-protection. (Harivaṁśa 3, 105).

3) Curse of Durvāsas. Swollen-headed and haughty on account of Śiva's boon, Haṁsa and Ḍiṁbhaka turned out to be a nightmare to the world, and they once tried to give trouble to Durvāsas, who cursed them to be killed by Mahāviṣṇu. Sometime later the sage himself informed Śrī Kṛṣṇa about this curse of his.

4) Death. The Haṁsa brothers began an aśvamedha (Horse Sacrifice) and deputed Janārdana to collect the tax thereof. Śrī Kṛṣṇa alone refused to pay the tax with the result that Haṁsa clashed with Kṛṣṇa who killed Ḍimbhaka and kicked Haṁsa down to Pātāla. He died there, in Pātāla of snake-bite. (Harivaṁśa 3, 128).

5) Grief of Jarāsandha. Haṁsa's death caused much grief to Jarāsandha, and for many years after it, he shed tears over the death of his friend. Even at the time when Bhīmasena, during his triumphal tour of the east, attacked Jarāsandha he remembered the dead Haṁsa and Ḍimbhaka. (Sabhā Parva, 13, 37).

HAMSA (M). Swan. For story about the origin of haṁsa on earth see under Sṛṣṭi, Para 12.

HAMSACŪḌA. A Yakṣa, who worships Kubera in his assembly. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 10, Verse 17).

HAMSADHVAJA. A King of Campānagarī, who was a great devotee of Viṣṇu. During his reign monogamy prevailed in the country. He took the yājñic horse of Yudhiṣṭhira captive, and in the fight to release the horse Arjuna killed Sudhanvā and Suratha, sons of Haṁsadhvaja. Grieved and enraged at their death Haṁsadhvaja took the field against Arjuna, and Śrī Kṛṣṇa finding that Arjuna's life was in danger pacified them both. Also Kṛṣṇa requested Haṁsadhvaja to be a supporter of Arjuna in future. Haṁsadhvaja had five sons called Suratha, Sudhanvā, Sudarśa, Subala and Sama. (Jaimini, Aśvamedha Parva, 17, 21).

HAMSAJA. A warrior of Subrahmaṇya. (Śalya Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 68).

HAMSAKĀYA. A Kṣatriya by caste, Haṁsakāya was present at the rājasūya of Yudhiṣṭhira. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 52, Verse 14).

HAMSAKŪṬA (M). A mountain lying between Hastināpura and the Śataśṛṅga mountain. On his way to Śataśṛṅga Pāṇḍu crossed Haṁsakūṭam. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 118, Verse 50). Śrī Kṛṣṇa once tore off a peak of the mountain and established it in Dvārakā. (Bhārata, Southern text, Chapter 38).

HAMSAPATHA (M). A region famous in the Purāṇas. The armies from this place fought in the great war. They fought taking their position at the grīvāsthāna (neck position) of the Garuḍa vyūha (A particular array of soldiers) set up by Droṇa. (Droṇa Parva, Chapter 20, Verse 7).

HAMSAPRAPATANA TĪRTHA. A sacred place at Prayāga on the banks of the Gaṅgā. (Vana Parva, Chapter 85, Verse 87).

HAMSAVAKTRA. A warrior who fought on the side of Subrahmaṇya and defeated the Asuras. (Śalya Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 75).

HAMSĪ. A daughter of Bhagīratha whom sage Kautsa married. (Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 137, Verse 26).

HAMSIKĀ. A daughter of Surabhi. This cow is said to be supporting the southern region. (Udyoga Parva, Chapter 102, Verse 7).

HANŪMĀN. A monkey born of the elements and aspects of Devas. In the epics of no other country could be found a character that belongs to the animal kingdom who is as powerful, erudite and philosophic as Hanūmān.

1) Birth. Many and different are the stories about the birth of Hanūmān told in Purāṇic literature, and they are briefly noted below.

(1) The semen discharged by Śiva, whose erotic feelings were excited by the sight of Viṣṇu disguised as Mohinī was received by the Saptarṣis and deposited in the womb of Añjanā, and Hanūmān was born out of it. (Śiva Purāṇa, Śatarudrasaṁhitā).

(2) Daśaratha divided among his wives the divine pāyasa (pudding) got from the putrakāmeṣṭi yajña which was performed so that he might be blessed with children. Somehow or other a kite snatched some pudding and flew off with it. On its way the pudding fell down from the beaks of the kite on the fingers of Añjanā doing tapas in the forest. She ate that pudding and Hanūmān was born as the son of Añjanā due to the extraordinary powers of the pudding. (Ānanda Rāmāyaṇa).

(3) Śiva, once in his fierce and effulgent form (aspect) entered Kesarī, the husband of Añjanā and had coitus with her. After that Vāyu (Wind-god) also had coitus with her. Thus as a result of the sexual act by both the Devas Añjanā got pregnant. Later, Añjanā was about to throw into the valley of the mountain her new-born child as it was an ugly one when Vāyu (Wind god) intervened and saved the child. Hanūmān was the child thus born of Śiva and Vāyu. (Bhaviṣya Purāṇa, Pratisarga Parva).

(4) Hanūmān's actual father was Śiva. Gaṇapati was born to Śiva and Pārvatī as they played in the forest disguised as elephants. After that Śiva and Pārvatī played about in the forest disguised as monkeys as a result of which Pārvatī got pregnant. Since Pārvatī did not like the idea of being the mother of a monkey, Śiva, by his yogic power entrusted the child, (in embryo) that was in the womb of Pārvatī to Vāyu (Wind god), who carried it with him hither and thither till it became mature, when it was deposited in Añjanā, the monkey woman. The monkey called Kesarī was her husband. Thus Hanūmān was born as the son of Añjanā.

Añjanā also has a story of her own. Once upon a time she was the maid-servant called Puñjikasthalā of Bṛhaspati. One day she went out to gather flowers when the love-makings of other young women attracted her so much that, without gathering flowers, and her erotic sentiments being aroused much, she returned home and covered Bṛhaspati with kisses. Bṛhaspati got really angry with the misbehaviour of his maid-servant and cursed her into a female monkey. She was told that, after she had lived for sometime with a monkey-husband she would get a child from the vitality of Śiva, after which she would return to him as maid servant as of old. And, accordingly, Puñjikasthalā became a female monkey under the name Añjanā and lived at Añjanā forest with a handsome monkey called Kesarī as her husband.

It was while Añjanā was doing tapas so that she might become pregnant by Śiva that Śiva and Pārvatī played in that forest disguised as monkeys, and Pārvatī conceived and the child ultimately came out as the son of Añjanā.

Even while Añjanā was pregnant the child in her womb had much to suffer at the hands of Bāli. Hearing from Nārada that Śiva's son had been born in Añjanā's womb Bāli feared that the actual birth of such a son would jeopardise his lordship over the monkeys. To ward off the threatened contingency, Bāli, as advised by Nārada, let in the five metals (gold, copper, iron, tin and zinc) in watery form into the stomach of Añjanā. (This is a means of causing abortion). But, the attempt misfired. Instead of the five metals killing the child in Añjanā's womb, they became ear-ornaments for it, and Hanūmān was thus born with ornaments in his ears. (Kaṁba Rāmāyaṇa Pūrvakāṇḍa).

2) Naming and boons. As soon as Hanūmān was born Añjanā was released from the curse, and she wanted to return to heaven. The monkey child asked its mother what its future would be and how it was to earn its living. She assured him that he would never be destroyed and that fruits as ripe as the rising sun (she pointed the sun out to him) would form his food. And, Añjanā returned to heaven.

Thinking that the glowing and glittering Sun was food for him to be eaten, the monkey child made just one jump at it (Sun) and quite neared it. But seeing Rāhu, bigger than the Sun he jumped at it. Then it was that it saw Airāvata and it tried to eat it. And, seeing this attempt of the monkey-child, Indra used his vajrāyudha (Thunderbolt) against it. The weapon hit its chin and wounded it, and in precarious condition it fell down on earth. Vāyu (Wind god) who saw his child falling down wounded carried it off to Pātāla.

When Vāyu (air) quitted the earth everything thereon came to a dead-stop. Living things were on the verge of death due to suffocation. And, then Brahmā and others went to Pātāla, comforted Vāyu and congratulated the monkey child. On the basis of Indra's vajra having made a scar on its hanu (jaw-bone or chin) the monkey child was named Hanūmān by the Devas, who, one by one blessed him as follows :—

Brahmadeva ; May you live long, so long as Brahmā exists.

Mahāviṣṇu : May you live all your life as the greatest devotee of God.

Indra : No weapon of any kind will wound or hit your body.

Agni : Fire will never affect you.

Kāla : May not death ever court you.

All the Devas : None will ever equal you in strength and speed. Brahmā blessed Hanūmān again giving him more physical power than Garuḍa and Vāyu blessed him to have more speed than himself. (air). (Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa, Bālakāṇḍa, Canto 15; Uttararāmāyaṇa; Kambarāmāyaṇa, Pūrvakāṇḍa; Adbhutarāmāyaṇa).

3) Education. Being born of Śiva and on account of the Śivaśakti in him, Hanūmān reached boyhood immediately. To learn the four Vedas and the six śāstras he chose Sūrya mentally as his preceptor, and approached him with the request to be taught the Vedas etc. Sūrya agreed to have Hanūmān as his disciple subject to the condition that the latter would not be permitted to sit with the Bālakhilyas in his (Sūrya's) chariot and study. Hanūmān agreed to the condition to learn from Sūrya walking in front of him. With book opened in his hand and concentrating all his attention on the face of Sūrya Hanūmān traversed the sky and within a short period of sixty hours he mastered all the Vedas and the śāstras thoroughly well. Though Sūrya said that he would consider the great interest Hanūmān took in his studies as dakṣiṇā (tuition fee) Hanūmān wanted Sūrya to accept something more by way of dakṣiṇā, and Sūrya said as follows :— "If you are so very particular about offering me something more as dakṣiṇā I shall tell you. My son Sugrīva is living on earth with Bāli and he is not as strong and powerful as Bāli. You be of help to Sugrīva as his minister and constant companion."

Happy at Sūrya's words Hanūmān returned to the forest and lived as Sugrīva's minister for the rest of his life.

4) Śrī Rāma's servant. From the day he met Śrī Rāma after the abduction of Sītā by Rāvaṇa till Rāma's death his story is inextricably connected with that of Rāma. (See under Rāma).

5) His music. Once in a musical competition Hanūmān defeated Nārada. (Adbhutarāmāyaṇa; also see Para 8 under Nārada).

6) Śivaliṅga at Rāmeśvaram. There is a story in the Yuddhakāṇḍa of Rāmāyaṇa connecting Hanūmān with the Śivaliṅga installed in the temple at Rāmeśvaram. (See under Rāmeśvaram).

7) Lost his divine power. Once due to a curse of sage Tṛṇabindu Hanūmān lost his great strength and vitality. But, he would regain the lost power when one reminded him of it. During the search for Sītā Hanūmān felt it difficult to jump across the southern sea to Laṅkā due to the above curse. But, when Jāmbavān described to him about his noble origin and powers Hanūmān regained his lost power and vitality, and successfully jumped across the sea to Laṅkā. (See Tṛṇabindu II, Para 2).

8) A fort made of tail. He made a fort of his tail and saved Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa within it. (See Pātāla-Rāmāyaṇa).

9) Hanūmān and Sahasramukha Rāvaṇa. (See Sahasramukha Rāvaṇa).

10) Hanūmān and Śatrughna. Śatrughna, who conducted the horse in connection with the Aśvamedha performed by Śrī Rāma after his return from exile in the forest, fell down unconscious in his fight with King Vīramaṇi, and then Hanūmān brought a herbal medicine called 'Droṇa' from the Himālayas and with its aid brought back Śatrughna to consciousness. (Padma Purāṇa, Pātāla Khaṇḍa, Chapter 44).

11) Taken captive by Kuśa and Lava. The Yajñāśva (sacrificial horse) of the Aśvamedha yajña of Śrī Rāma led by a contingent of Rāma's army was resting in a tent put up near the hermitage of Gautama when Kuśa and Lava together captured the horse. Hanūmān, who rushed over to the spot on receiving intimation of the news was bound hand and foot with creepers by Kuśa and Lava and dragged to the hermitage. Sītā, was then in the hermitage brooding over the past, and the repetition of the word 'Rāma' by the humiliated Hanūmān awoke her from her reverie. She was taken aback to see Hanūmān there in that plight and got him released from captivity by her sons. (Kamba Rāmāyaṇa, Uttarakāṇḍa).

12) Old age. Having witnessed Rāmāvatāra (incarnation of Rāma) to its very end, Hanūmān, who had by now become quite old, spent his days guarding the Kadalī forest. Bhīma, who happened to go there to collect Saugandhika flowers got defeated in fight by Hanūmān. (See Bhīma, Para 7).

13) Arjuna's flag-Symbol (See under Arjuna 17 B).

14) Idols of Hanūmān. When an idol of Hanūmān is installed in a temple, he must be represented as holding Vajra in one hand and his feet must seem to tear the ground under them. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 51).

HANYAMĀNA. A famous place in south India mentioned in the Purāṇas. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 9, Verse 69).

HARA I. A famous Dānava, born to Kaśyapa of his wife Danū. He was reborn as King Subāhu. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 67, Verse 23).

HARA II. One of the eleven Rudras. (Śānti Parva, Chapter 208, Verse 19).

HARA III. A synonym of Śiva.

HĀRA (M). A region of Purāṇic fame. Nakula subjugated the King of Hāra by a simple command without any resort to arms, and the King attended Yudhi-ṣṭhira's Rājasūya with presents. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 51, Verse 54).

HARAKALPA. One of the sons born to Vipracitti by Siṁhī. Paraśurāma killed him. (Vāyu Purāṇa, 68, 19).

HĀRAKEYŪRAKA. See under Lavaṇa. II

HĀRAVA. An asura born from the tear drops of Brahmā. He was burnt to death in the flames emerging from Śivaliṅga. (Skanda Purāṇa, 5, 2, 48).

HĀRDIKA I. A Kṣatriya King born from an aṁśa of the asura called Aśvapati. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 67, Verse 15).

HĀRDIKA II. Kṛtavarman. He was called Hārdika because he was the son of Hṛdika of the Yadu dynasty. (See under Kṛtavarman).

HARI I. A synonym of Viṣṇu. (See under Viṣṇu .

HARI II. A warrior of Subrahmaṇya. (Śalya Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 61).

HARI III. A warrior who fought on the side of the Pāṇḍavas and was killed by Karṇa.

HARI IV. An asura, the son of Tārakākṣa, who got from Brahmā a boon enabling him to prepare Mṛtasañjīvanī. (a medicine to revive dead people). (Karṇa Parva, Chapter 33, Verse 27).

HARI V. Son of King Akaṁpana. Though he was as powerful and proficient in archery as Mahāviṣṇu, and equal in prowess to Indra in war he got into the hands of his enemies and was killed. (Droṇa Parva, Chapter 52, Verse 27).

HARI VI. A particular sect of the attendants of Rāvaṇa. They attacked the army of monkeys. (Vana Parva, Chapter 285).

HARI VII. A very powerful bird born in Garuḍa's dynasty. (Udyoga Parva, Chapter 101, Verse 13).

HARI VIII. A particular species of horses. They possess long hairs on the neck and are golden in colour. (Droṇa Parva, Chapter 23, Verse 13).

HARI IX. A daughter born to Kaśyapaprajāpati by his wife Krodhavaśā. Lions and monkeys originated from this Hari. (Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa, Araṇyakāṇḍa, Canto 14).

HARI X. A son of Dharmadeva. Dharmadeva begot four sons, Hari, Kṛṣṇa, Nara and Nārāyaṇa of the daughters of Dakṣa. (Devī Bhāgavata, 4th Skandha).

HARI XI. A sect of Devas. During the Tāmasamanvantara there were four such sects, viz. Haris, Satyas, Supāras and Sudhīs. (See Manvantara).

HARIBABHRU. A great sage, who was a member of Yudhiṣṭhira's assembly. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 4, Verse 16).

HARIBHADRĀ. Daughter of Kaśyapa by Krodhā. She was given in marriage to sage Pulaha and from them were born the monkeys, Kinnaras, Kiṁpuruṣas etc. (Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa).

HARIDĀSA. A monkey King, son of Pulaha by Śvetā. (Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa).

HARIDHĀMA. A great sage who was reborn in his next birth as Raṅgaveṇī, a gopī in Gokula (Cowherds' colony) as he had chanted the Kṛṣṇa mantra of twenty letters during his life as sage. (Padma Purāṇa, Pātāla Khaṇḍa, Chapter 72).

HARIDRAKA. A nāga born in Kaśyapa's dynasty. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 35, Verse 12).

HARIJAṬĀ. One of the Rākṣasa women who kept guard over Sītā in the Aśoka grove. (Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa, Sundara Kāṇḍa, 23, 5).

HARIMEDHAS. A saintly King of ancient days. He once conducted a yajña and a daughter called Dhvajavatī was born to him. She lived in the western regions (Udyoga Parva, Chapter 110, Verse 13).

HARIMITRA. A brahmin, who had his āśrama on the banks of the Yamunā. Owing to his association with Harimitra a sinner called Vikuṇḍala took his bath in the sacred waters of the Kālindī during two Māgha months. The first bath released him from all his sins and the second bath made him eligible to go to heaven. Thus Harimitra was responsible for the attainment of heaven by the sinner Vikuṇḍala. (Padma Purāṇa, Ādi Khaṇḍa, Chapter 31).

HARIṆA. A nāga which belonged to the Airāvata family. It was burnt to death at the Sarpasatra of Janamejaya. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 57, Verse 11).

HARIṆĀŚVA. A King in ancient India. He once got from King Raghu a sword with divine powers which he presented to King Śunaka. (Śānti Parva, Chapter 166).

HARIṆĪ. A daughter of Hiraṇyakaśipu, also called Rohiṇī. She was married to Viśvapati, an Asura. Vana Parva, 211, 18).

HARIPIṆḌĀ. A female attendant of Subrahmaṇya. (Śalya Parva, Chapter 46, Verse 24).

HARIŚCANDRA I. A King of the solar dynasty very much reputed for his unique truthfulness and integrity. He was the son of the famous Triśaṅku.

1) Genealogy. See under Triśaṅku.

2) A brief life-sketch. To keep his plighted word and for the sake of truth he gifted away the whole of his kingdom to Viśvāmitra. When that was not sufficient he cleared his debts to Viśvāmitra with the money got by selling his wife, Candramatī, his son, Lohitāśva and finally himself. And, he earned his livelihood with the wages he got for cremating corpses, himself doing duties as guard at a burning ghat and as the slave to a Cāṇḍāla. Ultimately the Trimūrtis (Brahmā, Viṣṇu and Śiva) appeared and heaped on him all the boons he desired and rewarded him with high honours. (See for details para 4 under Viśvāmitra).

HARIŚCANDRA II. An emperor of ancient times, to whom Brahmā gave as a gift a palace which automatically produced everything desired by its owner. He was lord over the seven islands. About his former birth and the plenitude of his riches the Padma Purāṇa (Uttara khaṇḍa, Chapter 32) has the following story to say:-

Hariścandra himself was surprised that he became so very rich in the matter of children and of wealth. Wondering what actions of his entitled him to so much wealth and to his position which was equal to Indra's the emperor went to Sumeru by vimāna where he questioned Sanatkumāra, a brahminical sage seated in meditation on a golden stone as to who he was in his past life and to which actions of his past life he owed all the present wealth and prosperity. The great sage replied as follows:-

"In the past birth you were a truthful and pure-hearted vaiśya; you gave up your own profession and so you were ousted from home by your own people. At that time a famine and other scarcity conditions occurred there. One day you got into a pond along with your wife, collected lotus flowers from it and went to Kāśī to sell the flowers. But, no one purchased the flowers. At last, Candramatī, daughter of Indradyumna purchased the flowers for a yajña she was performing. When you saw Viṣṇu installed along with Ādityabhagavān (Sun-God) and worshipped with flowers, feelings of devotion swept your mind and you too worshipped the idols with lotus flowers. You enjoy today the fruits of that action in the past life.

(It is not quite definite whether Hariścandra I and II are one and the same person).

HARIŚCANDRA III. A Sanskrit poet who lived in the 9th century A. D. The mahākāvya called "Dharmaśarmābhyudaya" is his main work. This mahākāvya comprises of 21 cantos. He has composed another work called "Jīvandharacampū".

HARITA I. A King who was the grandson of Hariścandra and son of Rohita. (Bhāgavata, 10th Skandha).

HARITA II. A King, who was the son of Vapuṣmān and grandson of Svāyambhuvamanu. He was King of Haritavarṣa in the island of Śālmali. (Mārkaṇḍeya Purāṇa 50, 28; Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa, 2, 3).

HARITA III. A son born to Yadu of the nāga woman called Dhūmravarṇā. He founded an independent kingdom in the Nāga island and became a prominent leader of the Madgura tribe. (Hari Vaṁśa, 2, 38; 29, 34).

HĀRĪTA I. A great sage who visited Bhīṣma in his bed of arrows (Śaraśayyā). (Śānti Parva, Chapter 47, Verse 7). Once he attended Yudhiṣṭhira's assembly and spoke on eternal truths conducive to mental peace. That talk of his became famous as Hārītagītā. (Śānti Parva, Chapter 278).

HĀRĪTA II. An author on Smṛtis (codes of conduct). He has written two texts on the subject called Laghuhārīta smṛti and Vṛddhahārītasmṛti.

HARITĀLA (M) A mineral (yellow orpiment) got from mountains, which is red like the clouds at dusk. (Vana Parva, Chapter 158, 94).

HARITĀŚVA.

1) General. A King born in the solar dynasty. In the art of music he defeated Nārada and shamed Sarasvatī (Goddess of language), pleased Brahmā and by the melody of his music sent Viṣṇu to sleep. The mounting achievements of the King in the art of music evoked jealousy in Śivaśaṅkara, the lord of music. When Śaṅkaramūrti in a competitive spirit played the rāga Śaṅkarābharaṇa (a particular tune) Haritāśva) pointed out that Śāntarasa (the calmness and poise) which was suited to that rāga had given place to raudra rasa which was a serious mistake. Enraged at this Śiva opened his eye of fire at the King who retorted boldly thus, 'even if the eye of fire was opened a mistake was a mistake'. This stand of the King pleased Śiva so much that he bestowed on the King boons and good wishes as presents for his (king's) victory over all.

2) Killed Andhaka. Andhakāsura conquered Svarga and took Indra prisoner during the period when Haritāśva was King. The combined efforts of Brahmā, Viṣṇu and Śiva could not kill Andhaka. At last at the instance of Bṛhaspati a representative of the Devas visited Haritāśva at Ayodhyā and sought his help to kill Andhaka and accordingly the King set out for war against the demon. Agastya told the King in secret that Andhaka treasured an image of Śiva and Pārvatī in his stomach, and after removing, with his arrows the idol from his stomach, Haritāśva killed him and restored the Deva-loka to Indra. (Kamba Rāmāyaṇa, Yuddha Kāṇḍa).

HARIVAṀŚA (M). An appendix to the Mahābhārata in 10,000 verses. The main object of it is to sing the praises of Mahāviṣṇu. It contains three parts called respectively Harivaṁśa Parva, Viṣṇu Parva, and Bhaviṣya Parva. Creation of the world, kings of the solar dynasty and of the lunar dynasty, Yadu dynasty and the birth of Śrī Kṛṣṇa form the theme of Harivaṁśa Parva. Viṣṇu Parva deals mainly with the pranks and games of Śrī Kṛṣṇa in his childhood. Though there occur certain hints about the future at the beginning of the Bhaviṣya Parva, the creation of the world, the incarnation of Viṣṇu as Vāmana (Dwarf) and as Narasiṁha (half man and half lion), Śiva and Viṣṇu constitute its main theme.

The following verses prove that the Harivaṁśa also was composed by Vyāsa.

Harivaṁśastataḥ parva-purāṇaṁ khilasaṁjñitam /
Viṣṇuparvaśi śoścaryā
Viṣṇoḥkaṁsavadhastathā //
Bhaviṣyam parvacāpyuktaṁ
Khileṣvevādbhutaṁ mahat /
Etat parvaśatam pūrṇam
Vyāsenoktaṁ mahātmanā //
(Ādi Parva, Chapter 2, Verses 83-84).

HARIVARṢA (M) The northern part of Mount Hemaparvata. Arjuna, during his triumphal tour of the northern regions conquered this region and took away a lot of costly gems. (Bhārata, southern text, sabhā Parva, Chapter 28).

HARIVĪRA. See Dhanaśarman.

HARṢA I. One of the three sons of Dharmadeva, the other two being Śama and Kāma. Harṣa married Nandā. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 66, Verse 32).

HARṢA II. A great poet in Sanskrit, who flourished in the 12th century A.D., his most reputed work being the Mahākāvya called Naiṣadha, one of the five Mahākāvyas (Epic Poems) in Sanskrit language. Another well-known work of his is Khaṇḍanakhaṇḍakhādya. He was a member of the literary assembly of King Jayacanda of Kanauj. Hīra was his father and Māmalladevī, his mother.

HARṢA III. King Harṣavardhana who ruled over North India between A.D, 660 and 668. He is remembered and respected more as a poet in Sanskrit than anything else. Nāgānanda, Ratnāvalī and Priyadarśikā are his more important works. The poet Bāṇa has written the biography of Harṣa.

HARYAṄKA. A King born in the royal dynasty of Aṅga. He was the son of King Campa and father of King Bṛhadratha. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 277).

HARYAŚVA I. The five thousand sons born to Dakṣa by his wife Asiknī are known as Haryaśvas. (See Asiknī II).

HARYAŚVA II. A King of the solar dynasty. The following information about him is culled from the Mahābhārata.

(1) He was king of Ayodhyā. A Powerful ruler, he had a fully equipped army. (Udyoga Parva, Chapter 115. Verse 18).

(2) He took Mādhavī, daughter of Yayāti as his wife and thus solved the problem of gurudakṣiṇā for Gālava. (See under Gālava).

(3) Never in life did he eat flesh. (Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 11, Verse 67).

HARYAŚVA III. Father of Sudeva, King of Kāśī. He was killed by the sons of Vītahavya. (Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 30, Verse 10).

HAVYAGHNA. A Rākṣasa about whom the following story is told in the Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa.

Havyaghna was born from the smoke which rose from the fire of a yajña which sage Bharadvāja along with his wife Paiṭhīnasī conducted on the banks of river Gautamī, and he began eating the havis. Questioned about it by Bharadvāja Havyaghna answered as follows :—"I am an unfortunate fellow called Kṛṣṇa cursed by Brahmā. If you would kindly sprinkle on me the Gaṅgā water, Suvarṇa, ghee and soma I will be redeemed from the curse.

Bharadvāja complied with the request of Havyaghna and he got redemption from the curse.

HAYAGRĪVA I. An Asura, the son of Kaśyapaprajāpati by his wife Danu. (Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa, Araṇyakāṇḍa, Canto 14).

As a child the Asura began tapas on the banks of river Sarasvatī, and after a thousand years Devī appeared and asked him to choose any boon he wanted, and he wanted to become invincible by Devas and Asuras, and also deathless. When Devī told him that such a boon was out of question, he wanted the boon that he (Hayagrīva) should not be killed by anyone but by a Hayagrīva (one with the horse's neck). Devī granted him the boon.

Hayagrīva, who became haughty and overconfident on receiving such a boon, went about the three worlds troubling good people, and at last he clashed with the Devas. As he could be killed only by one with the head of a horse the combined attack of Mahāviṣṇu and the Devas did not succeed in defeating him and Mahāviṣṇu decided to rest for some time to recoup himself from weariness. During his rest his head was hit by the end of his own bow and the head was severed from the trunk. Mahāviṣṇu replaced the head thus lost with that of a horse and killed Hayagrīva in fight. (For details see Cital).

HAYAGRĪVA II. An asura who guarded the kingdom of Narakāsura. He was killed by Śrī Kṛṣṇa, (Udyoga Parva, Chapter 130 Verse 50).

HAYAGRĪVA III. A King born in the Videha dynasty. (Udyoga Parva, Chapter 74, Verse 15).

HAYAGRĪVA IV. A saintly king. Though he defeated his enemies, yet, as he had no backing and support, he was finally killed. The story of Hayagrīva was told by Vyāsa to teach Dharmaputra the lesson that even the greatest of heroes requires the support of others. Though killed, Hayagrīva secured a place in heaven. (Śānti Parva, Chapter 24, Verse 23).

HAYAGRĪVA V. An incarnation of Viṣṇu.

1) In Vedic literature :—In Vedic literature incarnation as Hayagrīva is attributed not to Viṣṇu, but to Yajña. But the Taittirīya āraṇyaka depicts yajña as a protoform of Viṣṇu. The inference that may be drawn from the above is that the root of the Hayagrīva story detailed in Vedic and Purāṇic literature is one and the same.

About the Hayagrīva incarnation the Pañcaviṁśabrāhmaṇa contains the following story.

Agni, Indra, Vāyu and Yajña (Viṣṇu) once began a yajña on the understanding that the havirbhāga obtained from it should be divided among all the Devas. But, in violation of the agreement, yajña left the place carrying away the whole Yajñabhāga with him, and he drove back the Devas who followed him with the help of the bow presented to him by Devī. Finally the Devas got the string of the bow bitten off by termites and the bow which got straightened up cut off yajña's head. Yajña then apologized for his offence and then the devas got the Aśvinīdevas to fix the head of a horse to the trunk of Yajña. (Pañcaviṁśabrāhmaṇa 7, 5, 6; Taittirīya āraṇyaka 5, 1; Taittirīya Saṁhitā, 4-9, 1).

2) In Purāṇic literature. The above story is told in Skanda Purāṇa with slight modifications as follows :-

Once Brahmā and other Devatās conducted a test as to which one amongst them was the greatest, and when it became evident tha tMahāviṣṇu was, in every respect, superior to all the others Brahmā cursed that Viṣṇu should lose his head. Viṣṇu, who got thus bereft of his head attended a yajña conducted by the Devas with the head of a horse attached to his trunk. After the yajña was over he went to dharmāraṇya and did tapas there and by the blessings of Śiva got back his former head instead of that of the horse.

HAYAJÑĀNA. The science of controlling horses. (Vana Parva. Chapter 77, 17).

HAYAŚIRAS. Hayagrīva. (See Hayagrīva V).

HEMAKŪṬA (M) II. A mountain on the banks of the river Nandā, known also as Ṛṣabhakūṭa. Once Yudhiṣṭhira went to this mountain and enjoyed the many beautiful scenes there. (See Ṛṣabha II).

HEMAMĀLĪ I. He used to supply flowers to Vaiśravaṇa. He had a beautiful wife called Viśālākṣī. Once when he returned with flowers from Mānasasaras he felt an onrush of love and spent time at home in love pranks with his wife. Kubera went to the temple for worshipping Śiva at noon and though he waited there till dusk time for Hemamālī to bring the flowers the latter did not come. Kubera got angry and sent for Hemamālī and he came trembling with fear. Kubera's curse turned him into a leper afflicted with eighteen varieties of leprosy, and separated from wife he fell from Alakāpurī. At last he came to Hemādri where he met sage Mārkaṇḍeya. Hemamālī told him all about his misfortune and the sage advised him to observe Āṣāḍhakṛṣṇaikādaśī. Hemamālī did so and got cured of the fell disease and returned to Devaloka. (Padma Purāṇa, Uttarakhaṇḍa, Chapter 54).

(24) The River Gaṅgā deposited Śiva's semen on a high peak of Himavān and Subrahmaṇya was born from it. (Karṇa Parva, Chapter 44, Verse 9).
(25) Himavān, the Devatā of the mountain, also was present at the installation of Subrahmaṇya as chief of the army. (Śalya Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 14).
(26) Himavān presented to Subrahmaṇya two attendants called Suvarcas and Ativarcas. (Śalya Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 46).
(27) Śrī Kṛṣṇa once performed tapas on Himavān, and as a result of it was born his son Pradyumna from Rukmiṇī. (Sauptika Parva, Chapter 12, Verse 30).
(28) Himavān presented inexhaustible wealth to emperor Pṛthu. (Śānti Parva, Chapter 59, Verse 113).
(29) The peaks of Himavān have an area of 100 yojanas; Brahmā once conducted a yajña there. (Śānti Parva, Chapter 166, Verse 32).
(30) Dakṣaprajāpati once conducted a yajña at the place called Gaṅgādvāra on the slopes of Himavān. (Śānti Parva, Chapter 284, Verse 3).
(31) In Chapter 327 of the Śānti Parva the following statement occurs about Himavān. According to the advice of King Janaka Śuka brahmarṣi mounted the Himālayas. Siddha-cāraṇas lived on the mountain. Celestial women walked all over the place. The mountain always reverberated with the noise of different varieties of living beings. The noise produced by Kinnaras, peacocks and many other birds could always be heard there. Himavān was the permanent abode of Garuḍa. The Aṣṭadikpālakas also lived there.
(32) When Śuka moved up to the world above it appeared as though the Himavān was being cut open. He saw two divine peaks of mountains on the two sides of the path; one of them was the peak of the Mahāmeru and the other that of Himavān. Both the peaks gave way to Śuka. (Śānti Parva, Chapter 333).
(33) Śiva desired to secure Umā, the daughter of Himavān as his wife. Meantime sage Bhṛgu demanded that Umā be wedded to him. When Himavān told the sage that it had already been decided to gave Umā in marriage to Śiva, the Sage cursed that there would not be, in future, gems in the Himavān. (Śānti Parva, Chapter 342, Verse 62).
(34) Viṣṇu and Śiva once fought with each other on the Himavān, and then it seemed as though the mountain was being cleft into pieces. (Śānti Parva, Chapter 342, Verse 122).
(35) Nārada had his āśrama there, on the Himavān. (Śānti Parva, Chapter 346, Verse 3).
(36) Śrī Kṛṣṇa once visited the āśrama of Upamanyu on the Himavān. (Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 14, Verse 43).
(37) King Marutta performed a yajña on the Himālayas and brahmins went away leaving a lot of wealth there. (Āśvamedhika Parva, Chapter 3, Verse 20).
(38) Sañjaya left for the Himālayas after Dhṛtarāṣṭra and Gāndhārī were burnt to death in a wild fire. (Āśramavāsika Parva, Chapter 37, Verse 33).
(39) During their mahāprasthāna (great journey) the Pāṇḍavas travelled by the Himālayas and Dharmaputra ascended to heaven from the top of the Himālayan peak. (Mahāprāsthānika Parva, Chapter 2, Verse 1).

Out of the five elements of the Indian system of medicine he accepts four, viz. Pṛthvī (earth), Ap (Water), Agni (fire) and Vāyu (air). Till the 18th century A.D. his theories were very popular.

HIRAṆMAYA (M). A particular region in Jambū island, to the south of Nīla mountain and to the north of mount Niṣadha. (Bhāgavata, 5th Skandha).

HIRAṆYA. (Hiraṇyakaśipu, Hiraṇyākṣa)

1) General. Owing to a curse Jaya and Vijaya who were gate-keepers at Vaikuṇṭha were born as two asuras, Hiraṇyākṣa (elder brother) and Hiraṇyakaśipu (younger brother). These brothers are known also as the Hiraṇyas. (See Jayavijayas).

2) Birth. Three sons called Hiraṇyākṣa, Hiraṇyakaśipu and Vajrāṅga and a daughter, Siṁhikā were born to Kaśyapaprajāpati by his wife Diti. To Hiraṇyakaśipu were born four sons called Anuhlāda, Hlāda Prahlāda and Saṁhlāda. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Part 1, Chapter 15).

There is yet another story relating to the birth of these asuras. Though the other wives of Kaśyapa became mothers Diti alone was not blessed with a child for a long time. One day at dusk while Kaśyapa was immersed in meditation Diti rushed into his room and began lamenting and complaining about her having not yet been made a mother, and urgently asked Kaśyapa to make her one. But, Kaśyapa pointed out that it was not the proper time for such things. It was dusk when Śiva with his attendants would be out sight-seeing covered with ashes from burning ghats spread all around by storms. So Kaśyapa wanted to wait for some time more. But, she was not in a mood to pay heed to his advice and Kaśyapa had to yield to her proposal. After obliging her, once again he took his bath and began meditation.

Diti became pregnant. She also got alarmed about the indiscretion committed at dusk time that day and, Kaśyapa told her : "Your mind became impure, you did not obey me, you insulted the Devas also. There are two kids of a very low type in your womb. They will oppress the three worlds and kill innocent people. Mahāviṣṇu will never tolerate such things. He will incarnate himself to kill them. But since you feel penitent now, a grand-son of yours will become liked by all good people, and he will be a great devotee of Mahāviṣṇu. (This was Prahlāda).

At any rate, one hundred years after her getting pregnant Diti delivered twin sons. The first born was named Hiraṇyākṣa and the next one Hiraṇyakaśipu. (According to certain Purāṇas Hiraṇyakaśipu was the first born).

3) Hiraṇyākṣa. The boys grew up to become a growing menace to the whole world. Hiraṇyākṣa toured all the three worlds with a club. He besieged svarga. Devas ran away in fear. Hiraṇyākṣa, shaking his club, jumped from the sky into the sea and engaged himself in the sport of thrashing the waves with his club. Years passed by like this, and at last he went to Vibhāvarī, the capital of Varuṇa and challenged him to fight. Varuṇa came out of the palace, admitted his incapacity to fight Hiraṇyākṣa, and suggested to him to challenge Mahāviṣṇu. Accordingly he set out in search of Mahāviṣṇu. It was during this period of time that the earth got engulfed in water. Svāyambhuvamanu requested his father, Brahmā to raise up the earth from water. But, nowhere could be seen the earth, everywhere it was only a vast expanse of water. Brahmā then meditated upon Mahāviṣṇu, who came out through Brahmā's nose in the form of a tiny boar. It grew up into a very big boar within no time, and jumped from the sky into the ocean, and within a few minutes it picked up from under the ocean the earth on its tusks and appeared on the surface of the water. Hiraṇyākṣa understood that the boar, which without the least fear picked up the earth from Pātāla was none other than Mahāviṣṇu and he challenged Viṣṇu to fight. After replacing the earth in its old position Viṣṇu fought with Hiraṇyākṣa and killed him.

4) Hiraṇyakaśipu. With the killing of his brother, Hiraṇyakaśipu's hatred and enmity towards Viṣṇu increased very much. He, by doing tapas for very long years, secured boons from Brahmā and conquered the three worlds and ruled them as Triloka Cakravarti (Emperor of the three worlds). He prohibited throughout the empire not only the chanting of Viṣṇu's name, but even thinking about him (Viṣṇu) by his subjects. "Hiraṇyāya namaḥ" (salutations to Hiraṇya) replaced the old custom of chanting 'Nārāyaṇāya namaḥ' (salutations to Nārāyaṇa). Meantime, a son called Prahlāda, a great devotee of Mahāviṣṇu was born to Hiraṇyakaśipu. (For the story of Hiraṇyakaśipu's death see Prahlāda). (Kamba Rāmāyaṇa, Yuddha Kāṇḍa; Padma Purāṇa, Bhūmikhaṇḍa, Chapter 20).

5) Story about the name Hiraṇyakaśipu. Sage Kaśyapa once conducted an Aśvamedha yajña. A golden seat was put up there for the great sages who came to participate in the yajña. Diti was pregnant during the time of the yajña, and while it was duly progressing she one day came and sat on the above-mentioned golden seat, and very shortly she delivered a child. As the child was delivered on the golden seat the child came to be called Hiraṇyakaśipu. (Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa, 8, 5, 7-12; Vāyu Purāṇa 67, 69).

HIRAṆYABĀHU. A nāga born in Vāsuki's dynasty. He was burnt to death at the sarpa satra of Janamejaya. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 57, Verse 6).

HIRAṆYABINDU. A sacred place near the Himālayas. During his pilgrimage Arjuna visited this place also. A bath in this tīrtha will wash off one's sins. Hiraṇyabindu is situated on the top of Mount Kālañjara.

HIRAṆYADHANUS. A King of forest tribes. Ekalavya, the great master of archery was Hiraṇyadhanus's son (See Ekalavya).

HIRAṆYAGARBHA. A synonym of Śrī Kṛṣṇa. (Śānti Parva, Chapter 342, Verse 96).

HIRAṆYAHASTA. A son born to princess Vadhrimatī thanks to the blessing of the Aśvinīdevas. She was married by a eunuch. Sorrow-stricken at such a marriage the princess requested the Aśvinīdevas for children and they gave her a son, (Ṛgveda, Maṇḍala 1, Anuvāka 17, Sūkta 116) who was called Hiraṇyahasta. He became a sage and married the beautiful daughter of King Madirāśva. (Śānti Parva, Chapter 234, Verse 35).

HIRAṆYAKAŚIPU I. (See Hiraṇya).

HIRAṆYAKAŚIPU II. A dānava. He once shook Mount Meru and Śiva granted him welfare and prosperity. (Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 14, Verse 73).

HIRAṆYĀKṢA I. A brother of Hiraṇyakaśipu. (See Hiraṇya).

HIRAṆYĀKṢA II. One of the sons of Viśvāmitra, who was a Brahmavādin. (Anuśāsana Parva. Chapter 4, Verse 57).

HIRAṆYANĀBHA I. A King born in the solar dynasty. He was the son of Vidhṛti and the father of Puṣya. (Bhāgavata, 9th Skandha).

HIRAṆYANĀBHA. II. A son of Sṛñjaya. A child named Suvarṇaṣṭhīvī was born to Sṛñjaya, but it died before long, and then it was Nārada who brought it back to life again. After its rebirth the child came to be called Hiraṇyanābha also. Hiraṇyanābha lived for 1000 years. (Śānti Parva, Chapter 149).

HIRAṆYAPURAM. A city of the Daityas. The Daitya woman, Pulomā got the city for her children by tapas. Pulomā is called Kālakā also. (Certain Purāṇas aver that Kālakā was the sister of Pulomā). The children of Pulomā are known as Kālakeyas for whose safety and security she did tapas for 1000 years. And, when Brahmā asked her to choose any boon she desired, Pulomā said as follows:- "There should arise no reason or cause for my sons to feel sorrow in their life; Devas, snakes or Rākṣasas should not kill them and they must have a beautiful city to live in. Brahmā granted her all the boons. Hiraṇyapura was built by Brahmā for the Kālakeyas to live in. It was full of gems and it could easily travel in the sky.

When life became impossible for the Devas due to the depredations of the Kālakeyas, Indra brought Arjuna to Devaloka. As the Kālakeyas were granted the boon that they would not be killed by the Devas, Arjuna's help had thus to be sought by Indra. Arjuna killed the Kālakeyas and destroyed Hiraṇyapura. (Vana Parva, Chapter 173). On one occasion Nārada gave a correct description of Hiraṇyapura to Mātali, the charioteer of Indra. (Udyoga Parva, Chapter 100).

HIRAṆYARETAS. One of the sons of Priyavrata, Hiraṇyaretas was king of the Kuśa island and had seven sons called Vasu, Vasudāna, Dṛḍharuci, Nābhigupta, Satyavrata, Vivikta and Vāmadeva. (Bhāgavata 5th Skandha).

HIRAṆYAROMAN. A king of Vidarbha who exercised suzerainty over the southern regions. He was also known as Bhīṣmaka. (See Bhīṣmaka).

HIRAṆYASARAS. An ancient tīrtha of the western regions. Candra washed off his sins by bathing here. (Śānti Parva, Chapter 342, Verse 57).

HIRAṆYAŚṚṄGAM. An extensive mountain to the north of Mount Maināka, which is to the north of Mount Kailāsa. This mountain is said to be a mine of gems. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 3, Verse 10; Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 6, Verse 42).

HIRAṆYASTŪPA. A great sage, the son of Aṅgiras. (Ṛgveda, Maṇḍala 1, Anuvāka 7, Sūkta 31).

HIRAṆYAVARMAN. A king of Daśārṇa, His daughter was married by Śikhaṇḍī.)See Aṁbā).

HITOPADEŚA. A book written in Sanskrit on the basis of the Pañcatantra. It is a collection of forty-three stories, and twentyfive of the stories are found in the Pañcatantra. There is also not much difference in the stories, about the origin of the two books. The author of Hitopadeśa is considered to be one Nārāyaṇa Paṇḍita, a dependant of King Dhavalacandra. Of the manuscripts available of the book, the oldest one is dated 1373 A.D. It has been surmised that the book was written somewhere between the 10th and 12th centuries A.D.

There are four parts to the book called Mitralābha (gaining friends), Suhṛdbheda (creating dissensions between friends) Vigraha (separation) and Sandhi (union).

HLĀDA (HRĀDA). A synonym for Hrāda, son of Hiraṇyakaśipu. (See Hrāda).

HLĀDINĪ. A tributary of the Gaṅgā. Gaṅgā brought down by Bhagīratha to the earth first fell on Śiva's head and thence on Bindusaras, and therefrom flowed in seven tributaries. Three tributaries, Hlādinī, Pāvanī and Nalinī flowed eastwards, Sucakṣus, Sītā and Sindhu westwards, and the seventh tributary followed Bhagīratha. The mortal remains of the sons of Sagara were flooded with its waters, and their souls attained heaven.

HOMA. A king belonging to the dynasty of Bharata. He was the son of Kṛśadratha and father of Sutapas. (Bhāgavata, 9th Skandha).

HOMADHENU. The cow, which offers milk needed for yajña.

HOMAKUṆḌA(M). The pit for making offerings during yajñas. Rules about making the pit are described in chapter 24 of the Agni Purāṇa as follows:—

First, demarcate a piece of ground one yard square with thread and dig it one yard deep. After leaving two aṁgulas (inches) space on all the four sides of the pit make three divisions in it. The three divisions should be 12" × 8" and 4" deep; the inner division 12" deep, the middle one 8" and the one outside of it 4" deep. All the three divisions should be four feet in width. The above three divisions are called Satvamekhalā, Rajomekhala and Tāmasamekhalā, and this is the pit, viz. Homakuṇḍa. On the western side of it a yoni (receptacle) 10 × 15 aṁgulas should be made. Its depth should gradually decrease in the descending order 6, 4, 2 aṁgulas. In shape the yoni will be of the shape of the peepal leaf. (Yoni is that of Śakti; the Kuṇḍa is her stomach. The conception about Śakti is that of a woman lying on her back, head towards the east.). The priest performs the rites, himself seated to the west of the yoni and his head turned to the east.

HOTRAVĀHANA. A saintly king, who was the grandfather of Aṁbā. (see under Aṁbā).

HRĀDA I. Also called Hlāda, a son of Hiraṇyakaśipu. (See under Anuhlāda).

HRĀDA II. A nāga. Hrāda was also present in the company of nāgas, which carried the soul of Balabhadrarāma to Pātāla. (Mausala Parva, Chapter 4, Verse 16).

HRADODARA. A Rākṣasa, who was killed by Subrahmaṇya in the war between the Devas and the Asuras. (Śalya Parva, Chapter 46, 75).

HṚDĪKA. A Yādava. He was the father of Kṛtavarman. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 63, Verse 105).

HṚDYA. A great sage. He lives in the assembly of Indra. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 7, 13).

HRĪ.

1) Birth. One of the 16 daughters born to Svāyambhuvamanu by his wife called Śatarūpā. (Bhāgavata, 4th Skandha).

2) Other information. (1) Hrīdevī worships Brahmā in his assembly.

(2) When Arjuna started for Indraloka Draupadī meditated upon Hrī so that no dangers might overtake him. (Vana Parva, Chapters 37, 38).

(3) Hrī too was present at the installation ceremony of Subrahmaṇya. (Śalya Parva, Chapter 45, 13).

HRĪMĀN. A Sanātanaviśvadeva. (eternal Deva of the universe). (Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 91, 31).

HRĪNIṢEVA. A saintly king born in the Asura dynasty. He was one of the ancient kings whom fate had made to relinquish their kingdoms. (Śānti Parva, Chapter 227, 31).

HŪHŪ. A Gandharva, son of Kaśyapaprajāpati by Pradhā.

(1) He was present at the birthday celebrations of Arjuna. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 122, Verse 59).

(2) Hūhū was among the Gandharvas who welcomed Arjuna in Devaloka. (Vana Parva, Chapter 48, Verse 14).

(3) Hūhū lives in Indrasabhā.

(4) Once he was turned into an alligator on account of the curse of Devala. (See under Indradyumna).

HŪṆA. A tribe. There are a number of references in the Purāṇas to the Hūṇas, who were created from the froth in the mouth of Nandinī, the cow which was in Vasiṣṭha's āśrama. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 174, Verse 18). Nakula conquered the Hūṇas in the western regions. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 32). The Hūṇa kings took part in the Rājasūya of Yudhiṣṭhira and made costly presents. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 51, Verse 24).

HUṆḌA. An asura, the son of Vipracitti. (He abducted Aśokasundarī, sister of Subrahmaṇya. (Padma Purāṇa). (See under Aśokasundarī).

HUṆḌA(M). An urban region in ancient India. The people of this area were known as Huṇḍas. In the great war they fought on the side of the Pāṇḍavas. They took their positions in the Krauñcāruṇa vyūha formed by Nakula and Sahadeva. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 50, Verse 51).

HUTA(M). One of the five great yajñas. (See Prahutam).

HUTAHAVYAVĀHA. One of the two sons of Dhara, the Vasu, the other son being Draviṇa. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 66, Verse 21).

I

I. (इ). This letter means Kāmadeva. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 348).

Ī. (ई). This letter means 'Rati' and Lakṣmī. Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 348).

IḌĀ I. Daughter of Vāyu (wind-god). Iḍā had a son Utkala by Dhruva.

IḌĀ II. Daughter of Manu. In Taittirīya Brāhmaṇa, we find the following reference to this Iḍā :—

Once Manu came to know that Devas and Asuras had performed an Agnyādhāna (consecration of the fire). To ascertain whether it was deposited at the proper time, Manu sent Iḍā to them. Iḍā found that both parties had followed the wrong method, She said to Manu :—"Your yajña (Agnyādhāna) should not be as ineffectual as that of the Devas and Asuras. Therefore I myself shall deposit the Trividhāgnis (the three Agnis which are to be set in the proper place) at the proper place." Manu agreed and began his yāga. As a result of it the Devas attained plenty and prosperity.

Once when Iḍā was in the presence of Manu. the Devas invited her openly and the Asuras invited her covertly. Since Iḍā accepted the invitation of the Devas, all creatures abandoned the Asuras and joined the party of Devas. (Taittirīya Saṁhitā).

IDHMAJIHVA. Svāyambhuva Manu had two famous sons—Priyavrata and Uttānapāda. Of them. Priyavrata married Surūpā and Barhiṣmatī, the two daughters of Viśvakarmā Prajāpati. Idhmajihva was born to him by his first wife. Idhmajihva had nine brothers Viz, Agnīdhra, Yajñabāhu, Mahāvīra, Rukmaśukra, Ghṛtapṛṣṭha, Savana, Medhātithi, Vītihotra and Kavi. Ūrjjasvatī was their youngest sister. (Mahā Devī Bhāgavata, 8th Skandha), IDHMAVĀHA. Son of Agastya and his wife Lopāmudrā. The actual name of Idhmavāha was Tridasyu. There is a story in the Mahābhārata about the birth of this boy. When Lopāmudrā was pregnant, Agastya asked her :— "1000 sons of average ability; or 100 sons, each of them having the worth of 10 sons; or 10 sons, each having the worth of 100 sons; or a single son having the nobility and greatness of more than a thousand sons; which would you prefer ?" Lopāmudrā chose a single son with the greatness of a thousand sons. Tridasyu or Idhmavāha was the son born according to her wish. The child was in the womb for seven years before he was born. He began to recite Vedas even from the moment of his birth. As the boy grew up, he used to bring small pieces of firewoods and twigs to feed the fire for his father's homa. That was why he got the name Idhmavāha. (One who brings the necessary things for homa). (Idhma = fuel; vāha = one who carries).

IKṢULĀ. An important river. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 9, Verse 17).

IKṢUMATĪ. A river. It flows near Kurukṣetra. The nāgas, Takṣaka and Aśvasena lived in this river. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 3, Verse 138).

Kuśadhvaja, brother of the King of Mithilā used to live in the Ikṣumatī river valley, (Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa, Bāla Kāṇḍa. 7th Sarga, Verse 2).

There is a reference to this river in Kathāsaritsāgara, Madanamañcukālaṁbaka, 2nd taraṅga also.

IKṢVĀKU.[1] A son of Vaivasvata Manu.

1) Genealogy. From Viṣṇu were descended in the following order—Brahmā—Marīci—Kaśyapa—Vivasvān —Vaivasvata Manu—Ikṣvāku.

Śraddhā, Vaivasvata Manu's wife bore him ten sons— Ikṣvāku, Nṛga, Śaryāti, Diṣṭa, Dhṛṣṭa, Karūṣa, Nariṣyanta, Nābhāga, Pṛṣadhra and Kavi. Vaivasvata Manu had six more sons by another wife, Chāyā. They were Manu, Yama, Yamī, Aśvinīkumāra, Revanta, Sudyumna. The Ikṣvāku family takes its source from Ikṣvāku. The Kings of the solar dynasty were all born in the Ikṣvāku family. This dynasty is named "Solar Dynasty" because Ikṣvāku was born to Vivasvān (Sun) the son of Kaśyapa. In Devī Bhāgavata, 7th Skandha we see that Ikṣvāku was born from Manu's spittle. The descendants of Ikṣvāku up to Śrī Rāmā's sons Lava and Kuśa are given below :—

Ikṣvāku had three sons—Daṇḍa, Vikukṣi, and Nimi. From Vikukṣi was born Śaśāda ; from Śaśāda, Purañjaya; from Purañjaya, Kakutstha; from Kakutstha, Anenas; from Anenas, Pṛthulāśva; from Pṛthulāśva, Prasenajit; from Prasenajit, Yuvanāśva; and from Yuvanāśva was born Māndhātā. Ambarīṣa, Mucukunda and Purukutsa were the sons of Māndhātā. Besides them he had fifty daughters also. The sage Saubhari married them. The family-tree continues again from Purukutsa, one of the sons of Māndhātā.

From Purukutsa, Trasadasyu was born; from Trasadasyu, Anaraṇya; from Anaraṇya, Aryaśva; from Aryaśva, Vasumanas; from Vasumanas, Sutanvā; from Sutanvā, Trairyyāruṇa; from Traiyyāruṇa, Satyavrata or

1. Mahābhārata Aśvamedha Parva (Chapter 4) says that Mahābāhu was the son of Vaivasvata Manu, Prasandhi was the son of Mahābāhu, Kṣupa was the son of Prasandhi and Ikṣvāku was the son of Kṣupa.

Triśaṅku; from him Hariścandra; from Hariścandra, Rohitāśva; from Rohitāśvā, Harita; from Harita, Cuñcu; from Cuñcu, Sudeva; from Sudeva, Bharuka and from Bharuka Sagara was born. Sagara had two wives—Sumati and Keśinī. Sumati gave birth to 60,000 children, while Keśinī had a single son, Asamañjasa. Aṁśumān was the son of Asamañjasa; Bhagīratha was the son of Aṁśumān; Śrutanābha was the son of Bhagīratha; Sindhudvīpa was the son of Śrutanābha; Ayutāyus was the son of Sindhudvīpa; Ṛtuvarṇa was the son of Ayutāyus; Sarvakāma was the son of Ṛtuvarṇa; Sudās was the son of Sarvakāma; Mitrasaha, the son of Sudās; Kalmāṣapāda was the son of Mitrasaha; Aśmaka was the son of Kalmāṣapāda; Mūlaka was the son of Aśmaka; Khaṭvāṅga was the son of Mūlaka; Dīrghabāhu (Dilīpa) was the son of Khaṭvāṅga; Raghu was the son of Dīrghabāhu; Aja was the son of Raghu; Daśaratha was the son of Aja. Daśaratha had three wives. Kausalyā, Kaikeyī and Sumitrā. Śrī Rāma was born to Kausalyā, Bharata, was the son of Kaikeyī and Sumitrā had two sons, Lakṣmaṇa and Śatrughna. Lava and Kuśa were Śrī Rāma's sons by Sītā. (See the word Kālabrāhmaṇa)[1]

ILA The name taken by Sudyumna when, after becoming woman, he became man again. (See under ILĀ I).

ILĀ I. Daughter of Vaivasvata Manu.

1) Genealogy. Descended from Viṣṇu in this order :—Brahmā—Marīci—Kaśyapa—Vaivasvata Manu—Ilā. Vaivasvata Manu was the son of Kaśyapa by his wife Aditi, and Ilā the daughter of Vaivasvata Manu by his wife, Śraddhā. Ikṣvāku, the ancestral father of the solar dynasty of Kings was brother of Ilā.

2) Vaivasvata Manu and Śraddhā had, for a long time no children. Manu got performed once by Agastya a yajña to propitiate the Mitrāvaruṇas so that a son might be born to him (Manu). Soon a daughter was born to him and she was called Ilā. Then Manu asked Vasiṣṭha why a daughter was born to him instead of a son for whom the yajña was performed by Agastya. At once, Vasiṣṭha by his will-power turned the girl Ilā into a boy, and the boy was named Sudyumna. (Bhāgavata).

3) Sudyumna again turned into woman. Once Śunaka and some other sages went to the great forest Kumāra Vana near Kailāsa to salute Sri Parameśvara ignorant of the fact that just then Pārvatī and Parmeśvara were enjoying themselves. The sudden appearance of Śunaka and others was not relished by the divine couple, who were then naked. They therefore, pronounced the curse that anybody who entered the forest in future would be turned into a woman. (Bhāgavata).

Sudyumna, now a young man, went for hunting one day. Sudyumna who was ignorant of this curse entered this forest with his friends while hunting. At once all of them were transformed into women. Grief-stricken, they stayed in the forest for some days, and then started for the palace. Sudyumna bearing the name Ilā walked at the head of the party as a beautiful woman. On the way Budha met Ilā, they fell in love with each other and got married. A son, Purūravas was born to Budha by Ilā. (Bhāgavata).

4) Transformation again ; Ilā expressed to Vasiṣṭha, her grief at having been turned into a woman, the sage requested Śrī Parameśvara to restore her to her former form as a man. Śiva said that Ilā would be a man and a woman every alternate month, throughout life. During the month when she was a man he would engage himself in matters of Government, and the next month, when a woman, she would stay in the inner apartments in the palace. Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa, Chapter 32 says that Ikṣvāku, brother of Purūravas ruled the state till the latter became a major. As soon as Purūravas attained majority Sudyumna handed over to him the reins of Government and retired to the forest for tapas, and during this period he was taught the Navākṣara mantra by sage Nārada. Sudyumna adored Devī with this Mantra. She appeared to him and blessed him with the state of salvation. (Bhāgavata).

Purūravas married Urvaśī, and ruled the country. (Bhāgavata, 9th Skandha; Devī Bhāgavata, First Skandha; M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 75 and Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 147, Verse 26).

ILĀ II. A river. At the birth of Subrahmaṇya this river paid homage to him with fruits and roots. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 86, Verse 24). Dharmaputra along with the brahmins bathed in this river. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 156, Verse 8).

ILĀSPADA. An ancient holy bathing ghat. A dip in the holy waters wards off ill-fate and confers the benefits of the Vājapeya yajña. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 83, Verses 77, 78).

ILĀVARTA (ILĀVṚTA). A King in the line of Priyavrata, son of Svāyambhuva Manu, (See Genealogy).

ILĀVṚTA (ILAVṚTTA). A locality. (See Bhūguṇita).

ILĀVṚTA VARṢA. That part of the country in the centre of Jambūdvīpa. (M.B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 28).

ILAVU. See Vāyu, Para 6.

ILIBILĀ. The wife of Viśravas and mother of Kubera. Viśravas was born as the son of Pulastya, one of the Prajāpatis by Māninī. Viśravas had two wives, Kaikasī and Ilibilā alias Devavarṇinī and Vaiśravaṇa (Kubera) was born of Ilibilā. Hence Kubera is called Ailibili also; To Viśravas was born by Kaikasī, Rāvaṇa, Vibhīṣaṇa, Kumbhakarṇa and Śūrpaṇakhā.

ILILA. A King of Pūruvaṁśa; father of King Duṣyanta. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 71). Rathantarī was Ilila's wife. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 74). Some Purāṇas call Ilila by the name Īlina and Rathantarī as Rathaṁdarī also.

Matināra, the most righteous of Kings had four sons endowed with great prowess named Taṁsu, Mahān, Atiratha and Druhyu. Taṁsu was responsible for the growth of the Pūru dynasty. He conquered the whole of earth and won fame. Īlina was Taṁsu's son. He also conquered the whole world, and he had five sons. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 94, Verses 14-18).

ĪLINA. Son of king Taṁsu of the Pūru dynasty. His wife was Rathantarī. Īlina had five sons by her. They were: Duṣyanta, Śūra, Bhīma, Pravasu and Vasu. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapters 16-18. See also under the word Ilila).

1. There are certain variations in the genealogy according to some Purāṇas. The genealogy given above is based on Bhāgavata and Agni Purāṇa.

ILLAKA. A person who led a very ideal family life. Son of a Vaiśya in the city of Mathurā, Illaka had a very beautiful wife. Illaka had one day to go to another place and his wife wanted to accompany him. But, Illaka did not allow that and went alone. Then she waited at the gates looking towards the husband moving fast away. And, when he completely disappeared from sight she, who could not bear the separation, fell down on the spot and expired. Illaka heard about the death and without delay, he hurried back home. He placed the dead body of his wife on his lap and wept. Weeping thus he also expired. (Kathāsaritsāgara, Lāvāṇakalaṁbaka, Taraṅga 1).

ILVALA. An Asura, who lived in the Maṇimatī city. Ilvala and his brother Vātāpi ate up a number of brahmins and Agastya cursed them to death. (See Agastya).

INDIA. 'South Śarakh', a newspaper published from the United Arab Republic with the assistance of the Indian Embassy gives the following account of how the land originally known as 'Bhārata' came to be called India. The name 'India' was given to "Bhārata" by the Arabs. Even from very early times, Arabs used to give the name 'Hind' to their girls. In ancient Arabic love poems, this name could be seen very frequently. There were commercial and cultural contacts between Bhārata and Arab lands, from very old times. The words 'Kharan Fūl' (spices) 'Pulfūl' (Pepper) etc. may be seen in Arabic poems of the pre-Islamic period. These contacts became more intimate in later years and the Arabs began to take very great interest in the products and the people of this country. They began to call 'Bhārata' by the pet name 'Hind' which they used for their little children. They began to use the term 'Al Hind' when referring to Bhārata in their poems, records and trade agreements. In course of time this was shortened to 'Hind' and finally became 'INDIA'.

INDĪVARĀKṢA. A Gandharva. He was the son of Nalanābha, the chief of the Vidyādharas. There is a story about this Gandharva in Mārkaṇḍeya Purāṇa, Chapter 60 :—

Indīvarākṣa went to the sage Brahmamitra to learn Āyurveda. For some unknown reason, the sage did not teach him. Indīvarākṣa decided to learn by overhearing what the guru taught the other pupils from a hiding place. In six months' time he learnt Āyurveda. Overjoyed at the thought that he was able to acquire as much learning in this science as the other pupils, within such a short time, and oblivious of his surroundings, he laughed loudly. The guru who understood the secret, uttered a curse that he would become a Rākṣasa within seven days. The repentant Indīvarākṣa begged for his pardon. Then the sage told him that he would be restored to his own form and give up the Rākṣasa shape when he was shot with arrows by his own children.

Once when he approached his daughter Manoramā to devour her, his son-in law, Svarocis who had learnt the science of archery from that girl, defeated him. In this way, Indīvarākṣa got his own former form. After that he taught Svarocis, the sciences of archery which he had learnt from his own daughter and also from Brahmamitra.

INDĪVARASENA. Son of Parityāgasena a King who ruled the city of Irāvatī. Parityāgasena had two queens—Adhikasaṁgamā and Kāvyālaṅkāra. As they had no children, the distressed King with his queens worshipped the goddess Durgā. Durgā gave the King two fruits. She blessed that the queens would bear children when they ate the fruits. Adhikasaṁgamā ate both the fruits without showing them to the other wife. Two sons were born to her. Indīvarasena was the elder son. (Kathāsaritsāgara, Ratnaprabhā laṁbaka, 8th Taraṅga).

INDRA.

1) Genealogy. Viṣṇu—Brahmā—Marīci—Kaśyapa—Indra.

2) Birth. Kaśyapa was born to Marīci, the eldest of the spiritual sons of Brahmā. Indra was the son of Kaśyapa and Aditi, the eldest daughter of Dakṣa. The twelve sons who were born to Kaśyapa and Aditi are called Ādityas. The twelve Ādityas are—Dhātā, Aryamā, Mitra, Rudra, Varuṇa, Sūrya, Bhaga, Vivasvān, Pūṣā, Savitā, Tvaṣṭā, and Viṣṇu. In addition to them, Aditi had twentyone sons more. Indra is the eldest of the 33 sons. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 65, Verses 9-15). Indra became the ruler of the Devas. Airāvata is Indra's elephant, Uccaiśśravas, his horse, and Vajra his weapon. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 51, M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 18).

3) Indra and Garuḍa. Kaśyapa had two sons, Garuḍa and Aruṇa by Vinatā and a large number of Nāgas by his other wife, Kadrū. Kadrū and her children kept Vinatā and her son Garuḍa as their servants. Kadrū agreed to set them free if they brought Amṛta from Devaloka.

Once Kadrū and her children asked Garuḍa to carry them to the beautiful Nāgālaya in the middle of the ocean. Garuḍa carried them on his shoulders and flew very high near the sky. The excessive heat of the sun made the Nāgas unconscious. Kadrū, in her distress, prayed to Indra. Indra showered rain and cooled the atmosphere. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 25, Verses 7-17). They reached the lovely island in the middle of the ocean.

Garuḍa decided to earn his freedom by bringing Amṛta from Devaloka. With determination, he flew up into heaven and secured Amṛta. The enraged Indra attacked him with his weapon, Vajra. But Garuḍa spread his feathers in such a way that he was not wounded. Indra was struck with wonder, and pleased with the beautiful feathers (Parṇa) of Garuḍa, named him 'Suparṇa'. At last Indra was pleased and allowed Garuḍa to take Amṛta with him. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 32, Verses 18-25).

4) How Indra came to have 1000 eyes. (See Tilottamā, 2nd Para).

5) Indra and Arjuna. (1) Kuntī, Pāṇḍu's wife had received five mantras from Durvāsas for begetting sons. One of those Mantras was chanted meditating on the sun even before she was married and Karṇa was born. After marriage she used three more of the Mantras and three sons were born to her from Yama, Vāyu and Indra respectively. The fifth Mantra was presented to Mādrī the other wife of Pāṇḍu. Thus Arjuna was the son of Kuntī by Indra. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 123).

(2) There is a story of a rivalry between Indra and Arjuna in the Mahābhārata. (See under 'Khāṇḍavadāha').

(3) During their life in the forest, once Arjuna started to Kailāsa to worship Śiva. On the way Indra appeared before him and showered his blessings on him. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 41, Verses 15, 16).

(4) During his life in the forest, Indra presented to Arjuna who visited him in Indra's residence, a Gandharva named Citrasena as his companion. Citrasena taught him music, dance, etc. (M.B. Araṇya Parva, Chapter 44, Verse 9).

(5) At the palace of Indra, as secretly instructed by Indra, Urvaśī approached Arjuna with advances of love. Arjuna who refused to yield to her temptations was turned into a eunuch by her curse. But Indra lifted the curse by saying that this curse would be an advantage to him during the incognito life of the Pāṇḍavas. It was Citrasena who was used as a tool by Indra to test Arjuna's self control. (M.B. Araṇya Parva, Chapters 44, 45).

(6) In order to ensure Arjuna's victory in battle, Indra, disguised as a Brahmin, obtained by begging Karṇa's ear-rings. (M.B. Araṇya Parva, Chapter 310).

6) Indra and Vṛtrāsura. A famous exploit of Indra was the killing of Vṛtrāsura. Under the leadership of Vṛtrāsura, the Kālakeyas and many other Rākṣasas besieged the Devas. The battle raged furiously. Indra fell down unconscious owing to the shower of arrows from Vṛtra. At once Vasiṣṭha with his divine power restored Indra to consciousness. Finding it impossible to kill Vṛtra, the nonplussed Devas under the leadership of Indra approached Mahāviṣṇu. Viṣṇu told them that Vṛtra could be killed only with the bone of the sage Dadhīca. So all of them approached Dadhīca. Realising the situation, Dadhīca let Indra have his bone for the purpose. Indra made his weapon Vajra with that bone and receiving a fatal stroke from it, Vṛtra fell down dead. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 101, Verses 14, 15; Śānti Parva, Chapter 281, Verses 13-21).

By killing Vṛtra Indra incurred the sin of Brahmahatyā. To expiate for that sin the Devas and Ṛṣis took Indra to Sarayū river and performed his holy bath there. (Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa, Bāla Kāṇḍa, 24th Sarga).

(For further details about Vṛtrāsura see under Vṛtrāsura).

7) Indra and Cyavana. Indra did not allow the Aśvinīdevas to drink soma juice. The sad Aśvinīdevas left Indraloka and while passing through a forest, they met Sukanyā, wife of the sage Cyavana. She was extremely beautiful. The Aśvinīdevas advised her to become their wife instead of being the wife of the blind Cyavana. But Sukanyā rejected their advice. Pleased by her conjugal fidelity, they restored Cyavana's eyesight and made him a youth with beautiful eyes. In his gratitude, Cyavana promised to get permission for them to drink soma juice. He performed a yāga. Indra, Aśvinī devas and other gods attended it. Indra insisted that the Aśvinīs should not be allowed to drink Soma juice. Cyavana disputed with him and in the dispute Indra was defeated. From that time the Aśvinīs were allowed Soma drinking. See also 'Cyavana'. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 124, Verse 14; Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 156, Verses 16-31).

8) Indra and Triśiras. Indra's brother Tvaṣṭṛ did not like some of Indra's activities. With the object of rebuking Indra, Tvaṣṭṛ begot a son named Viśvarūpa, Viśvarūpa had three faces and so he was also called Triśiras. With one face he used to recite Vedas, with the second he drank alcohol and he used the third face for observing the world. He performed a rigorous tapas. Indra, who was alarmed at it, sent goddesses to allure him, but in vain. At last Indra himself went to the forest riding on his elephant Airāvata and killed Triśiras with his Vajrāyudha. In his violent fury he had the three heads of Triśiras cut by a carpenter. From that day, it was ordained that the head of the cow sacrificed at yāgas should be given to a carpenter. Tvaṣṭṛ who was enraged by Indra's killing of his son Triśiras, begot another son Vṛtrāsura. (Devī Bhāgavata, 6th Skandha).

9) Indra and Nahuṣa. See the word Agastya.

10) Indra and Bali. When Indra defeated and drove away the Asuras, Mahābali, the Asura emperor assumed the form of an ass and hid himself in an empty house. Brahmā informed Indra of this. Indra found him out there, but set him free without killing at the behest of Brahmā. (M.B. Śānti Parva, Chapter 223).

11) Indra and Yayāti. Yayāti was the son of Nahuṣa. In his old age, he handed over the kingly duties to his younger son Pūru and went to the forest for performing penance. After performing penance, he reached Indraloka in the end. Indra did not like Yayāti's boast that there was none who had greater power of tapas than himself. Indra pushed him down to the world. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 88).

12) Indra and Śaradvān. Śaradvān was born as the son of Sage Gautama. Śaradvān started a penance for acquiring divine arrows. Devendra who was alarmed, sent the Apsarā woman Jānapatī to obstruct his tapas. Deeply affected by her irresistible charm and fascinated by her temptations, he had an involuntary emission of semen, which fell on the Śarastamba and split itself into two parts. Two children a boy and a girl, were born from it. The King's servants brought them to Hastināpura. The boy was named Kṛpa and the girl was named Kṛpī. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 130).

13) Indra and King Kuru. The King named Kuru was once ploughing the field at the place known as Kurukṣetra. (This was long before Kurukṣetra became famous as the battlefield of Bhārata Yuddha). Indra who happened to come that way at the time, seeing the King tilling the land, asked him why he was doing so. The King replied that he was performing a yāga to enable the men who fell dead there, to attain Heaven. Indra returned to Heaven, smiling. Other devas came to know of this from Indra. They said that if all men came to Devaloka, the share of yajña which was to be received by the gods, would be diminished and so they advised Indra to go and give some boon to King Kuru. Indra returned to earth and gave his blessing to Kuru as follows :

The following classes of people will attain heaven if they die there (at Kurukṣetra).

(1) Those who die of starvation.

(2) Those who die fighting heroically.

(3) Those who were men in their previous life, but who have been born as animals.

From that time Kurukṣetra became an important place. (M.B. Śalya Parva, Chapter 53).

14) Indra and Takṣaka. Indra's friend, a Nāga named Takṣaka lived in Khāṇḍava forest. When Agni burned Khāṇḍava forest, Indra caused the rain to fall in order to save Takṣaka. See under 'Khāṇḍavadāha'. (M.B. Araṇya Parva, Chapter 235).

For the story of how Indra saved Takṣaka from the Sarpasatra see under 'Āstika'.

15) Indra and Khāṇḍavadāha. At the time of Khāṇḍavadāha, Śrī Kṛṣṇa and Arjuna fought against Devendra.

16) Indra Sabhā. Maya undertook to build a sabhā (assembly hall) for the Pāṇḍavas at Indraprastha. When it was being discussed, the sage Nārada described to them Indra's sabhā as given below :—
Indra has a Sabhā which dazzles with divine effulgence. It is 150 yojanas in length and 100 yojanas in breadth. It has a height of five yojanas. Beautiful storeyed buildings and divine trees add to the grandeur of the sabhā. Indra is seated within the holy light in it. Śacīdevī takes her seat near him. Indra is very handsome. He wears a crown, he is dressed in spotlessly pure clothes, and wears a garland round his neck. Maruts, Siddhas, Devas, Ṛṣis and a host of others stand around attending on him. They are all bright with the halo of fire. Parāśara, Parvata, Sāvarṇi, Gālava, Śaṃkha, Likhita, Gauraśiras, Durvāsas, Akrodhana, Śyena, Dīrghatamas, Pavitrapāṇi, Bhāluvi, Yājñavalkya, Uddālaka, Śvetaketu, Pāṇḍya and other famous sages are members of Indra's assembly. In this way, Indra's Sabhā is the most magnificent. (M.B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 7).

17) Indra and Kāmadhenu. Once Indra saw Surabhi, the Kāmadhenu, crying in the Indraloka. He asked her why she was crying. Surabhi answerd: "My Lord, the cattle, who are my children are groaning in the world under the yoke of the farmer. I was overwhelmed with grief at the sight of their sufferings" Indra's heart meltted due to Kāmadhenu's tears. He caused very heavy showers in the world when ploughing the fields became impossible. In this way as a result of Surabhi's tears Indra caused heavy rainfall which gave rest to the cattle in the world. (M.B. Araṇya Parva, Chapter 9).

18) Indra and Nala. Nala proceeded to Vidarbha to attend Damayantī's Svayaṁvara. On the way, the four gods, Indra, Agni, Varuṇa and Yama met him. (For further details see the word 'Nala'). Nala married Damayantī with the blessings of these gods. When the devas returned, they met Kali and Dvāpara. to whom they described Nala's marriage. Kali and Dvāpara who wished to marry Damayantī, naturally felt disappointed and angry. Kali was about to pronounce a curse on Nala. But on the advice of Devendra he did not do so. Still he decided to gain secret entrance into Nala's body and to bring about the loss of his Kingdom. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 58).

19) Indra and Māndhātā. A King named Yuvanāśva was born in the Ikṣvāku dynasty. He earned great reputation by performing many Aśvamedha yāgas. But he was very much distressed because he had no children. So he entrusted his kingly duties to his ministers and proceeded to the forest. One day during his wandering he arrived at the āśrama of the sage Bhṛgu. He was tired and thirsty. Bhṛgu had filled a pot with water by reciting a mantra and placing it on a low stool, he had gone to sleep. Not knowing that it was a pot of water intended to cause pregnancy, and in his intense thirst, Yuvanāśva drank water from it. He became pregnant and in due course Yuvanāśva brought forth a son. Indra, accompanied by other gods came to see the child. When the Devas asked how the child was going to drink milk, Indra put his index finger into the child's mouth and the child began to suck it. Indra said 'The child will drink me". The Sanskrit words "Māṁ dhātā" mean "one who drinks me". Thus the child was named "Māndhātā" by Indra and the other gods. (M.B. Araṇya Parva Chapter 126).

20) Indra and Śibi. Once Indra and Agni tested the strength of Emperor Śibi's 'dharma'. Indra took the form of an eagle and Agni that of a dove. The dove flew down into the lap of Śibi. The eagle pursued it. The dove entreated Śibi to save it from the eagle. Śibi promised to do so. The eagle argued that the dove was its prey and should be returned to it. But Śibi offered to give the eagle his own flesh, equal in weight to that of the dove. Accordingly, the dove was placed in one pan, but even when all the flesh from his body was cut and placed in the other pan, it did not weigh equal to the dove. At this stage, Indra and Agni appeared to Śibi in their own forms and blessed him to be more happy and prosperous than before. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 131).

21) Indra and Yavakrīta. Long ago there was a sage named Yavakrīta. He started a tapas with the ambition of acquiring all knowledge by himself, without the help of a Guru. Indra was alarmed at the sternness and rigour of the tapas. He induced Yavakrīta to stop tapas, but it was in vain. At last Indra disguised himself as an old Brahmin and went to the bank of the Gaṅgā where Yavakrīta was performing tapas. He began to build a dam across the river with sand. Seeing this Yavakrīta ridiculed him. The old Brahmin retorted that Yavakrīta's tapas was also equally ridiculous. But Yavakrīta was not shaken even by his taunt. He resumed his tapas with renewed strength. At last finding no other alternative, Indra appeared to Yavakrīta and granted his wish. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 135).

22) Loss of Indra's umbrella. Once Narakāsura went to heaven, fought with the gods and robbed Indra of his umbrella and the earrings of Aditi, Indra's mother. Grief-stricken Indra complained to Śrī Kṛṣṇa. Accompanied by Satyabhāmā and riding on the back of Garuḍa, Śrī Kṛṣṇa went to the city of Prāgjyotiṣa, the residence of Narakāsura and razed it to the ground. He recovered the umbrella and ear-rings and returned to heaven with Satyabhāmā. Indra and Aditi were overjoyed on getting back the lost articles. On their return journey, Śrī Kṛṣṇa at the request of Satyabhāmā cut for her a twig of the Pārijāta tree. This made Indra angry and he fought against Śrī Kṛṣṇa. After defeating Indra and other gods, Śrī Kṛṣṇa accompanied by Satyabhāmā returned to Dvārakā with the Pārijāta. (Bhāgavata, 10th Skandha).

23) Indra and Narakāsura. The Asura called Naraka once performed a very severe penance on the Gandhamādana mountain with the object of usurping Indra's place. Indra was alarmed and rushed to Mahāviṣṇu for help. Viṣṇu went to Gandhamādana mountain and killed Narakāsura. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 142).

24) Indra and the sage Baka. After the war between Devas and Asuras, Indra, in a peaceful state of mind, was going around the world, riding on his elephant, Airāvata. When he reached an Āśrama on the eastern coast of the sea, he met the great sage Baka. A conversation about the happiness of longevity took place between Indra and sage Baka who was hundred thousand years old. After that Indra returned to Devaloka. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 193).

25) Indra and Keśī. Long ago a terrible war took place between Devas and Asuras. At that time an Asura called Keśī attempted to abduct Devasenā, daughter of a Prajāpati. Hearing her shrieks, Indra rushed to the spot. In the clash between Keśī and Indra, Keśī's club was broken into two with Indra's weapon Vajra. Suddenly Keśī lifted a mountain and threw it at Indra. Indra broke that mountain also into two. One part of it fell on Keśī himself, who fled frightened. After that, Indra asked Devasenā how she happened to fall in Keśī's hands. Devasenā answered thus :—"I am the daughter of Prajāpati. My name is Devasenā. Keśī had abducted my elder sister, Daityasenā. My sister and I used to come to take our bath in this Mānasa lake. Keśī had expressed his wish to abduct both of us. My father has given me his blessing that a person who is worshipped by gods and asuras will become my husband. Having heard these facts, Indra held consultations with Brahmā and arranged the marriage between Subrahmaṇya and Devasenā. See also the word "Subrahmaṇya". (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 223).

26) Indra and Aṅgiras. After killing Vṛtrāsura, Indra hid himself in a lotus flower in the Mānasa lake, to expiate for the sin of Brahmahatyā (killing a Brahmin). It was at that time that Nahuṣa became Indra. After Nahuṣa had been forced to go back to the earth as a serpent by the curse of Agastya, the Devas brought back Indra. At that time, Aṅgiras praised Indra with mantras from Atharvaveda. From that day Aṅgiras got the name of 'Atharvāṅgiras'. Indra was pleased and blessed Aṅgiras that his name would become famous throughout the world. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 18).

27) Indra and the Bow called Vijaya. Karṇa had a bow called Vijaya. It was made by Viśvakarmā according to Indra's liking. (M.B. Karṇa Parva, Chapter 31. Verse 42).

28) Indra and the Tripuras. The Tripurāsuras performed penance and received boons from Brahmā. After that they clashed with Indra. Indra was not able to kill them. The vanquished Indra had the Tripuras killed by Śiva. See the word "Tripura". (M.B. Karṇa Parva, Chapter 33).

29) Indra and Sūrya (the sun-god). When Karṇa and Arjuna came into conflict at the Bhārata battle, a controversy raged in heaven between Indra and Sūrya. Indra argued that Arjuna would win, while Sūrya asserted that Karṇa would gain victory. The Devas joined the side of Arjuna and Asuras joined Karṇa's side. In the end, Arjuna came out victorious and thus Sūrya was defeated by Indra. (M.B. Karṇa Parva, Chapter 87).

30) Indra and Namuci. The Rākṣasa Namuci once evaded capture by Indra by remaining hidden in the rays of the Sun. Indra went to him and pretending friendship, promised not to kill him either with wet thing or dry things or at night or in day time. Trusting his words, Namuci came out. Then Indra cut off Namuci's head with the froth scraped from the waves of the sea at the time of dusk. The head pursued him shouting, "You murderer of a friend, by breaking your promise!" Indra sought refuge under Brahmā. Brahmā advised him to bathe in Śoṇapuṇya tīrtha to expiate for the sin. Accordingly Indra bathed in the river Sarasvatī and washed off his sin.

River Sarasvatī. There is a story about how Sarasvatī river became Śoṇapuṇya tīrtha. There were frequent quarrels between Vasiṣṭha and Viśvāmitra. Once Viśvāmitra got angry when he came to know that Vasiṣṭha was performing a penance on the banks of the river Sarasvatī. He summoned Sarasvatī and ordered her to produce Vasiṣṭha before him immediately. Sarasvatī was in a dilemma. If she brought Vasiṣṭha to Viśvāmitra, Vasiṣṭha would curse her; if on the other hand, she did not bring him Viśvāmitra would curse her. At last she decided to produce Vasiṣṭha before Viśvāmitra. By eroding the earth on her bank little by little near the place where Vasiṣṭha was performing his penance, Sarasvatī managed to bring him down into her own current. Then she carried him floating down to the place where Viśvāmitra was waiting. When Vasiṣṭha reached his presence, Viśvāmitra was pleased. But without allowing Viśvāmitra to capture Vasiṣṭha she took him away in her current, eastwards. Enraged at this, Viśvāmitra pronounced a curse that blood should flow through the river Sarasvatī. Thus the water in the river became blood-red. The great sages who came there afterwards sympathised with Sarasvatī in her ill-luck and as a result of their prayers Śiva made her Śoṇapuṇyatīrtha.

It was in this river that Indra took his bath and washed off his sin. (M.B. Śalya Parva, Chapter 43).

31) Indra and Śrutāvatī. Bharadvāja's daughter Śrutāvatī (Śruvāvatī) performed a very severe penance to get Indra as her husband. To test her character, Indra assumed the shape of Vasiṣṭha and went to Śrutāvatī. She received the guest with due reverence. Pleased with her treatment, the guest handed her five raw fruits and asked her to cook them for him. Śrutāvatī gladly undertook that service. She proceeded to cook the fruits but even after burning all the fuel she had, the fruits were not properly cooked. So she began to use her limbs one by one as fuel and burned them up. Indra was deeply impressed by her self-sacrifice and appearing to her in his own form married Śrutāvatī, (M.B. Śalya Parva, Chapter 48).

32) Indra became Śatakratu. Indra performed one hundred sacrifices at the place called Indratīrtha. Thus he became Śatakratu. It was there that he gave much wealth to Bṛhaspati. (M.B. Śalya Parva, Chapter 49, Verse 2).

33) Indra became a bird. Once Indra took the form of a bird and went to the forest and preached moral and spiritual duties to the sages who had gathered there. (M.B. Śānti Parva, Chapter 11).

34) Indra and Dantideva. Once Dantideva received a boon from Indra that he should have plenty of food and enough travellers to eat it. (M.B. Śānti Parva, Chapter 29, Verses 120, 121).

35) Indra and Bṛhaspati. Once Bṛhaspati told Indra that everything in the world could be achieved with soothing speech. (M.B. Śalya Parva, Chapter 84, Verse 2).

Bṛhaspati's wife Tārā once fell in love with Candra (the Moon god). She deserted Bṛhaspati and went to live in Candra's residence. Bṛhaspati complained about it to Indra. Indra promised to bring her back and to restore her to Bṛhaspati by whatever means possible. Accordingly he sent a messenger to Candra. Compromise talks with Candra ended in failure. So preparations were started for a dreadful war between Indra and Candra. Śukra, the preceptor of Asuras also joined the side of Indra. Brahmā who came to know of all this, came riding on his swan and reconciled Indra and Candra. As directed by Brahmā, Candra agreed to restore Tārā to her lawful husband, Bṛhaspati, (Devī Bhāgavata, First Skandha).

36) Indra and Prahlāda. The great King Prahlāda once conquered Heaven. Indra, who lost his kingdom and glory, accepted Bṛhaspati's advice and went to meet Śukrācārya. Śukra told Indra that Prahlāda was the noblest person and that he had earned that nobility by his good qualities. Indra decided to acquire those good qualities from Prahlāda.

Indra disguised himself as a Brahmin boy and approached Prahlāda with a request for moral and spiritual advice. Prahlāda accepted him as his pupil and gave him moral and spiritual advice. Pleased with the pupil's devotion, Prahlāda agreed to give him whatever boon he wanted. The pupil said that he wanted only the good qualities of the Guru. Prahlāda agreed to it. Then a shadow-like figure appeared to emerge from Prahlāda's body. Prahlāda who was puzzled asked the figure :—"Who are you" "The figure answered :— "I am your virtuous character. Now I am leaving you and entering this boy's body." Saying thus it left Prahlāda's body and entered Indra's body. Following it, all the good qualities of Prahlāda, like charity, truth, glory etc. entered Indra's body one after another. It was only in the end that Prahlāda came to know that the cunning pupil was Indra. Thus from that day, Prahlāda began to decline in his good qualities and Indra began to prosper. (M.B. Śānti Parva, Chapter 124).

37) Indra and Gautama. There is a story in the Mahābhārata, of how Indra restored life to a dead Brahmin. Gautama was a Brahmin who had left his own home and settled down to live in the village of Dasyus (an aboriginal tribe). He married from a low caste and followed the customs of Dasyus. At that time another Brahmin happened to come there. He ridiculed Gautama who had lost his caste. Next morning Gautama left his residence and went to another place. Tired after his long journey, he fell asleep under a banyan tree. A King of birds named Nāḍijaṁgha lived on that tree. Nāḍījaṁgha who was the son of Kaśyapa, became very friendly with Gautama. He brought fish from the river Gaṅgā to feed Gautama and fanned him with his wings. Gautama told the bird that he was a poor Brahmin and that he was anxious to get some wealth. There was a wealthy Rākṣasa King named Virūpākṣa in that country, who was a close friend of Nāḍījaṁgha. Nāḍījaṁgha sent Gautama to Virūpākṣa with a request to give Gautama some wealth. Virūpākṣa gave plenty of gold to Gautama. He returned to the foot of the banyan tree carrying the gold on his head. Gautama who was quite tired after his long walk, was hospitably received by Nāḍījaṁgha. That kingly bird lay asleep close by Gautama. An evil desire to eat the flesh of Nāḍījaṁgha dawned upon the mind of Gautama. He killed that King of birds in his sleep. Virūpākṣa who came to know of this, killed Gautama and gave his flesh as food for Dasyus. Virūpākṣa, with tears in his eyes, made a funeral pyre and cremated Nāḍījaṁgha's body. At that time, as directed by Brahmā, Surabhi caused milk to flow from heaven and revived Nāḍījaṁgha. Virūpākṣa told the whole story to Indra who came there at that time. Indra said that Nāḍījaṁgha died as the result of Brahmā's curse. He had offended Brahmā on a former occasion by refusing to attend Brahmā's assembly, although he was invited. Nāḍījaṁgha who was restored to life, was noble enough to request Indra to bring back Gautama also to life. Accordingly Indra revived Gautama. Nāḍījaṁgha returned the gold to Gautama and sent him away with his good wishes. Indra returned to heaven. (M.B. Śānti Parva, Chapter 173).

38) Indra and Ahalyā. Indra, once fell in love with Ahalyā, the wife of Gautama. Sage Gautama who came to know of it, cursed Indra. For further details, see under Ahalyā.
